Chapter 18

Ver. 1. Always to pray and not to faint] Gr. εκκακειν, not shrink back, as sluggards in work or cowards in war. Prayer should be redoubled and reinforced, as those arrows of deliverance, #2Ki 13:19. The woman of Canaan prays on when denied; and Jacob holds with his hands when his thigh is lamed. He wrestled with slight and might, he raised dust, as the word signifies, and would not away without a blessing. {a} James, surnamed the Just (Christ's kinsman), had his knees made as hard as camel's knees with much praying, as Eusebius writes. Father Latimer, during his imprisonment, was so constant and instant in prayer, that often times he was not able to rise off his knees without help. Yea, Paulus Aemilius, being to fight with Perses, king of Macedonia, would not give up sacrificing to his god Hercules, till he saw certain arguments of a victory. As loathing of meat (saith a divine) and painfulness of speaking are two symptoms of a sick body, so irksomeness of praying and carelessness of hearing, of a sick soul.

{a} Etiam post naufragium tentantur maria.

Ver. 2. Which feared not God, nor regarded man] These two, fear of God and shame of the world, God hath given to men as curbs to restrain them from outrage. But sin hath loaded such an impudency in some men's faces that they dare do anything.

Ver. 3. Avenge me of mine adversary] A downright request, without either logic or rhetoric to set it forth or enforce it; to teach us that though our prayers be but blunt or broken language, if importunate, they shall prevail nevertheless.

Ver. 4. And he would not for awhile] There is a passive injustice. Non faciendo nocens, sed patiendo fuit, saith Ausonius of Claudius: Not to do justice is injustice.

Ver. 5. She weary me] Gr. υπωπιαζη, she buffet me, or club me down. God must be pressed in prayer till we put him (as you would say) to the blush, or leave a blot in his face, unless we may be masters of our requests. Vota fundimus, coelos tangimus, Deum tangimus, misericordiam extorquemus. (Tertul. Apol.)

Ver. 6. Hear what the unjust judge saith] Hic paria non inter se conferuntur, sed minus cum maiore, saith Beza.

Ver. 7. Though he bear long with them] When they are at the utmost under. When their enemies are above fear, and they below hope; when there is not faith in earth to believe, then are there bowels in heaven to relieve and restore them.

Ver. 8. Shall he find faith upon earth?] God often stays so long till the saints have done looking for him, when they have forgotten their prayers, and he comes, as it were, out of an engine.

Ver. 9. That they were righteous, and despised others.] Pray to be preserved from this perilous pinnacle of self-exaltation.

Ver. 10. The one a Pharisee] A Doeg may set his foot as far and farther within the sanctuary as a David. The Pharisee and publican went both of them up to private prayer.

Ver. 11. God, I thank thee] Non vulnera, sed munera ostendit, he shows not his want, but his worth, and stands not only upon his comparisons, but upon his disparisons,—I am not as this publican. No, for thou art worse; yea, for this, because thou thinkest thee better. But of Pharisees it might be said, as Arnobius did of the Gentiles, Apud vos optimi censentur, quos comparatio pessimorum sic facit. They are very good that are not very bad. Αντιπροσωπος βλεπων τω θεω διελεγετο. (Basil.) Velut dignus qui cum Deo colloqueretur. (Erasm.)

I am not as other men are] Pride wears a triple crown with this motto, Transcendo, Non obedio, Perturbo. This Pharisee held himself the whole piece, and all others a remnant only, as Basil of Seleucia hath it; he takes his poor counter and sets it down for a thousand pounds; he priceth himself above the market.

Ver. 12. I fast twice a week] Cardinal Bellarmine did more, for he fasted thrice a week, saith he that writes his life. John, Archbishop of Constantinople, he who first affected the style of Universal Bishop, was surnamed NESTEUTES, from his frequent fasting. Monday and Thursday were the Pharisees' fasting days, because Moses went up to the mount on a Thursday, and came down on a Monday, saith Drusius. The Manichees fasted on the sabbath, from whence the whole week here taketh its denomination in the original.

I give tithes] He braggingly made a gift of that which he was bound to pay.

Ver. 13. Smote upon his breast] In token of indignation, and that he would have smitten his sin so hard if he could have come at it.

God be merciful, &c.] Here was much in few. The Publican prayed much though he spake little. As a body without a soul, much wood without fire, a bullet in a gun without powder, so are words in prayer without spirit. Oratio brevis penetrat coelum. Short prayer penetrates heaven. The hottest springs send forth their waters by ebullitions. Prayer is called a charm, #Isa 26:16. Now, in a charm or enchantment, in three or four words there is much efficacy.

To me, a sinner] This prayer was often in Mr Bradford's mouth, and likewise in Mr Samuel Crook's. See his Life, page 32.

Ver. 14. Justified rather than the other] The Pharisee was not at all justified; neither is there more or less in justification. But our Saviour here useth a popular kind of expression.

Ver. 15. {See Trapp on "Mt 19:13"}

Ver. 16. {See Trapp on "Mt 19:14"}

Ver. 17. {See Trapp on "Mt 19:14"}

Ver. 18. And a certain ruler] St Mark, #Mr 10:17, saith that this ruler came running, which argues his earnestness, and in a man of quality was unusual, for such walk softly for most part, and in state, Gressu grallatorio.

Ver. 19. See #Mt 19:16,17.

Ver. 20. See #Mt 19:17-19.

Ver. 21. See #Mt 19:20.

Ver. 22. Yet lackest thou one thing] Yea, all things. But our Saviour speaketh thus by a holy irony.

Ver. 23. See #Mt 19:22.

Ver. 24. See #Mt 19:23.

Ver. 25. It is easier for a camel] Caveant ergo divites (saith an interpreter) et solcite; mane, vesperi, interdiu, noctu, secum de periculosa vitae suae ratione commententur. Let rich men therefore weigh their danger, and beware.

Ver. 26. See #Mt 19:26.

Ver. 27. See #Mt 19:26.

Ver. 28. See #Mt 19:27.

Ver. 29. See #Mt 19:28.

Ver. 30. See #Mt 19:30.

Ver. 31. See #Mt 20:17 Mr 10:32.

Ver. 32. See #Mt 20:17 Mr 10:32.

Ver. 33. See #Mt 20:17 Mr 10:32.

Ver. 34. And they understood none, &c.] Prejudicate opinions of Christ's earthly kingdom hung as so many bullets at their eyelids, that they could not perceive so plain a truth.

Ver. 35. See #Mt 20:29 Mr 10:46.

Ver. 36. See #Mt 20:29 Mr 10:46.

Chapter 19

Ver. 1. And passed through Jericho] "An accursed city," #Joh 6:26 1Ki 16:34; and yet Christ hath here a plentiful harvest, poor blind men, rich Zacchaeus; to show the truth of what he had affirmed in the former chapter, that a rich man also might possibly enter into the kingdom of heaven.

Ver. 2. And behold] This "behold" one compareth to a hand in the margin of a book, pointing to some notable matter. Another, to me sounding of a trumpet before some proclamation.

There was a man named Zacchaeus] He should by his name have been a puritan (in the best sense), but, he was an arch-publican, a public sinner, not simple, but subtle, a griping extortioner, a rich but wretched sycophant. {a}

{a} An informer, tale-bearer, malicious accuser; a calumniator, traducer, slanderer. Obs. ŒD

Ver. 3. Because he was little of stature] τῶρος ἀνῆρ: Homer. St Paul was but a little man (say some, and thence had his name) but of a notable spirit. Deus maximus est in minimis, saith one, et saepe compensat defectus corporis ingenii dotibus. God is much seen in small things; and he many times recompenseth defects in the body with gifts of the mind. Hence that of the poet,

Ver. 4. And he ran before] Forgetful of his rank and quality. Rich men and rulers use not to run, much less to climb trees, as boys do for birds' nests. But his earnest desire to see his Saviour, and especially a gracious impulse of the Holy Spirit, made him thus seemingly immodest, and unmindful of keeping a decorum.

Ver. 5. Zacchaeus, make haste] Christ is that good shepherd that knoweth all his sheep, and calleth them by name.

Make haste, and come down] Heaven is a matter of greatest haste: we must not adjourn, as he did once, In crastinum seria, more weighty businesses till tomorrow.

Today I must abide at thy house] Christ not only invites but even obtrudes himself as it were upon Zacchaeus: it is happy having such guests. He doth the same to us, when he sends unto us his poor servants to press upon our charity. Unworthy we are surely to give an alms to poor Christ, &c.

Ver. 6. And he made haste and came down] Gilbert Foliot, Bishop of London, A. D. 1161, misliking much Archbishop Becket's pride and obstinace, would often exhort him to humility in these words, Ad Zacchaeum non divertisset Dominus, nisi de sycomoro iam descendisset, i.e. Christ had never dined with Zacchaeus, had he not first yielded to come down from the sycamore tree.

Ver. 7. They all murmured] So corrupt was their judgment concerning the offices and condition of the Messiah; so ill set were their affections, that themselves neglecting the grace of God that was offered, they take it ill that any other should partake of it.

By false accusation] After the manner of sycophants, εσυκοφαντησα. It seems it was his practice, that if any had spoken aught against him; he accused them as wrongers of the law, and that he did nothing to them but what he had law for.

Ver. 8. The half of my goods] See the like in Tyre converted, #Isa 23:17,18.

I restore him fourfold] Which was the law for things stolen. Fraud is no better than theft. Restitution is necessary to remission of sin. God hates holocaustum ex rapina, burnt offerings from stolen goods, as Sultan Selymus could tell his counsellor Pyrrhus, who persuaded him to bestow the great wealth he had taken from the Persian merchants, upon some notable hospital for relief of the poor. The dying Turk commanded it rather to be restored to the right owners, which was done accordingly; to the great shame of many Christians, who mind nothing less than restitution, &c. When Henry III of England had sent the friar Minors a load of frieze {a} to clothe them, they returned the same with this message, that he ought not to give alms of what he had rent from the poor, neither would they accept of that abominable gift. Master Latimer saith, "If ye make no restitution of goods detained, ye shall cough in hell, and the devils will laugh at you." Henry VII in his last will and testament, after the disposition of his soul and body, he devised and willed restitution should be made of all such monies as had unjustly been levied by his officers. Queen Mary restored again all ecclesiastical livings assumed to the Crown, saying, that she set more by the salvation of her own soul than she did by 10 kingdoms. A bull came also from the pope at the same time, that all others should do the like, but none did. Latimer tells us that the first day that he preached about restitution, one came and gave him 20 lib. to restore. The next day another brought him 30 lib. Another time another gave him 200 lib. Mr Bradford hearing Latimer on that subject was struck in the heart for one dash of a pen which he had made without the knowledge of his master, and could never be quiet till, by the advice of Mr Latimer, restitution was made, for which he did willingly forego all the private and certain patrimony which he had on earth. I myself (saith Mr Burroughs) knew one man that had wronged another but of five shillings, and fifty years after could not be quiet till he had restored it.

{a} A kind of coarse woollen cloth, with a nap, usually on one side only; now esp. of Irish manufacture. ÆD

Ver. 9. He also is a son of Abraham] That is, freely elected, #Ro 9:1, a follower of Abraham's faith, #Ro 4:12, and a doer of his works, #Joh 8:39. Who then can say but he is his son, and shall rest in his bosom?

Ver. 10. See #Mt 18:11.

Ver. 11. That the kingdom of God] A temporal earthly kingdom, such as they expected by the Messiah. And it should seem that hearing our Saviour say he came "to seek and to save that which was lost," they mistook him so far as to think that he meant the Jewish kingdom, the public liberty, &c. This misconceit he confuteth in the following parable.

Ver. 14. Sent a message] Instead of sending a lamb to this ruler of the earth, #Isa 16:1, of the covering his altar with the calves of their lips, #Ho 14:3. Such masterless monsters are rife everywhere, such dust heaps are found in every corner.

Ver. 15. And when he was returned] He went at his ascension, and returns at the general resurrection. At what time he will first reckon with his servants, and then with his enemies. Judgment shall then also begin at God's own house.

Ver. 16. Thy pound hath gained] Not my pains, but thy pound hath done it. "By the grace of God I am that I am," saith Paul, that constantissimus gratiae praedicator; as Austin calleth him.

Ver. 17. See #Mt 25:21,22, &c.

Ver. 18. See #Mt 25:21,22, &c.

Ver. 19. See #Mt 25:21,22, &c.

Ver. 20. See #Mt 25:21,22, &c.

Ver. 21. See #Mt 25:21,22, &c.

Ver. 22. See #Mt 25:21,22, &c.

Ver. 23. Into the bank] Gr. Unto the table, er (according to some copies) "unto the usurers," τοις τραπεζιταις, whom Beza here rightly calleth humani certe generis perniciosissimas pestes, the most pernicious pests of mankind.

Ver. 27. Slay them before me] Howbeit "the beast and the false prophet," that is, the pope and his escorts, shall not have the favour to be slain as the common sort of Christ's enemies are, but shall be "cast alive into the burning lake," tormented more exquisitely, #Re 19:20,21.

Ver. 28. He went before] To meet death in the face. This was true magnanimity. Herein he showed himself the Captain of our salvation, though perfected by sufferings.

Ver. 29. Bethphage and Bethany] Bethphage was one mile out of Jerusalem, Bethany two.

Ver. 30. Go ye into the village] Into Bethphage, that was in their view as they went from Bethany.

Ver. 31. {See Trapp on "Mt 21:1"} {See Trapp on "Mt 21:2"} {See Trapp on "Mt 21:3"}

Ver. 32. {See Trapp on "Mt 21:1"} {See Trapp on "Mt 21:2"} {See Trapp on "Mt 21:3"}

Ver. 41. He beheld the city] That common slaughter house of the prophets. Our Lord is said to have been slain at Rome, #Re 11:8, because crucified at Jerusalem by the Roman authority.

And wept over it] Shall not we weep over the ruins of so many fair and flourishing churches, that now lie in the dirt? Christ wept in this day of his solemn inauguration. It shall be in our last triumph only that all tears shall be wiped from our eyes; till then our passions must be mixed, according to the occasions.

Ver. 42. Oh, if thou hadst known] They had cognitionem historicam non mysticam, speculativam non affectivam, apprehensionis non approbationis, discursivam non experimentalem.

At least in this thy day] The time of grace is fitly called a day in regard of, 1. Revelation. 2. Adornation; 3. Consolation; 4. Distinction; 5. Speedy pretrition. Amend before the drawbridge be taken up. No man can say he shall have 12 hours to his day.

But now they are hid from thine eyes] Yet they lived under the ministry long after, and no outward change to be discerned. As Plutarch writes of Hannibal, that when he could have taken Rome, he would not; when he would, he could not: so the procrastinators.

Ver. 43. For the days shall come] God hath his days for vengeance, as man hath his day for repentance. There is a prime of every man's life and of every man's ministry. The Levite lingered so long that he lost his concubine, she came short home; so doth many a man's soul for like reason.

Shall cast a trench about thee] Because, like the wild ass, thou wouldest not otherwise be tamed and kept within compass of God's commandments.

Ver. 44. One stone] See #Mt 24:2 Mr 13:2.

Because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation] Though thou be called the valley of vision, and the notation of thy name be the vision of peace, yet thou neither knowest the things of thy peace nor the time of thy visitation, as being blinded with malice and obstinance.

Ver. 45. See #Mt 21:12,13, &c.; {See Trapp on "Joh 2:14"}

Ver. 46. See #Mt 21:12,13, &c.; {See Trapp on "Joh 2:14"}

Ver. 47. He taught daily] The nearer he drew to his end the more intent he was upon the work, that he might say, as afterwards he did in that heavenly prayer of his, "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do," #Joh 17:4.

But the chief priests] Wild beasts cannot endure fire; no more can wicked men away with zeal. Tigers are enraged with sweet odours; beat up a drum to them and they will tear themselves for anger.

Ver. 48. Were very attentive to hear him] Gr. ἐξεκρεματο, hanged on him, as the bee doth on the flower, the babe on the breast, or the little bird on the bill of her dam. Christ drew the people after him, as it were, by the golden chain of his heavenly eloquence.

Chapter 20

Ver. 1. The chief priests and scribes came] Gr. ἐπεστησαν, "came suddenly upon him." As an unexpected storm; the devil drove them.

Ver. 2. {See Trapp on "Mt 21:23"} See #Mr 11:27.

Ver. 3. {See Trapp on "Mt 21:23"} See #Mr 11:27.

Ver. 4. The baptism of John, &c.] q.d. If John were sent by God to testify, as he did, there is no colour of cause why ye should question mine authority.

Ver. 8. Neither tell I you, &c.] God's servants should be ready with their answer upon sudden assaults, and not to seek such arguments as may stop the mouth of an adversary. When a nimble Jesuit asked,

Where was your religion before Luther? answer was presently returned, In the Bible, where your religion never was.

Ver. 9. See #Mt 21:33 Mr 12:1.

Ver. 16. God forbid] viz. that they should ever kill the Son of God sent unto them. We cannot get men to believe that their hearts are half so bad or their ways so dangerous as the preacher makes of them.

Ver. 17. What is this then that is written, &c.] q.d. If it be not so as I say, that you shall kill the Messiah, how is it that the Scripture saith as much? Press men with Scripture testimonies; that is the readiest way of sound conviction. It was a good speech of Augustine to Manichaeus, contesting with him for audience: Hear me, hear me, said the heretic. Nay, saith Augustine, Nec ego te, nec tu me, sed ambo audiamus apostolum dicentem, peccatum non cognovi, &c. It is not what I say, or what thou sayest, but what the Scripture saith, that we must stand to.

Ver. 19. They perceived] Conscience, their domestic chaplain, told them so much. God hath a witness to his truth in every man's bosom.

Ver. 20. They sent forth spies] Gr. εγκαθετους, fishers, that with net and bait catch the silly fish and feed on them; such were these emissaries, these catchpoles. {a}

Which should feign themselves just men] Hypocrites only act religion, play devotion; as stage players they act a sultan, when they are but so many shoemakers; as ferrymen, they look one way and row another; they have holiness written upon their outsides, as Vorstius' book had De Deo in the front and blasphemy in the text. They cry out Templum Domini, the temple of the Lord, but care not for the Lord of the temple. But religion, as it is the best armour, so it is the worst cloak; and will serve hypocrites as the disguise Ahab put on and perished, or as Absalom's mule served her master, &c.

{a} A petty officer of justice; a sheriff's officer or sergeant, esp. a warrant officer who arrests for debt, a bum-bailiff. CED

Ver. 21. See #Mt 22:16 Mr 12:14.

Ver. 27. See #Mt 22:23, &c.; #Mr 12:18.

Ver. 28. See #Mt 22:23, &c.; #Mr 12:18.

Ver. 35. Nor are given in marriage] Hence some collect, that the difference of sexes shall continue after the resurrection: wherefore else should our Saviour say, that they shall then neither marry nor be given in marriage? Sed hic επεχω. Haymo is over confident, I suppose, in that gloss he gives here, Quod viri in suo sexu resurgent, feminae in sexu muliebri. Erunt habentes membra genitalia, non autem voluntatem coeundi.

Ver. 36. Die any more] That there should be any further use of matrimony, for the propagation of mankind.

Ver. 38. For all live to him] Even in their bodies also, which he now by rotting refineth; and shall as certainly raise, as if they were already raised, since all things are present with him.

Ver. 39. Thou hast well said] Because he had set down the Sadducees, who were their counterfactionists.

Ver. 41. See #Mt 22:42 Mr 12:35.

Ver. 45. See #Mt 23:1-5 Mr 12:38 Lu 11:43.

Ver. 47. Greater damnation] Shall be double damned, because dissembled sanctity is double iniquity.

Ver. 1. {See Trapp on "Mr 12:41"}

Ver. 2. Casting in thither two mites] That is, two eighth parts of a half-penny, saith the Syriac. {See Trapp on "Mr 12:41"} {See Trapp on "Mr 12:42"}

Ver. 9. See #Mt 24:6, &c.

Ver. 12. See #Mt 24:9 Mr 13:9.

Ver. 13. And it shall turn to you, &c.] While the valour of the martyrs and the savageness of the persecutors strove together, till both, exceeding nature and belief, bred wonder and astonishment in beholders and hearers.

Ver. 14. See #Mt 10:19 Mr 13:11; {See Trapp on "Mt 10:19"} {See Trapp on "Mr 13:11"}

Ver. 18. See #Mt 10:30; {See Trapp on "Mt 10:30"} See also for explication, #1Sa 14:45 2Sa 14:11 Ac 27:34.

Ver. 19. In your patience possess] That is, enjoy yourselves, however the world goes with you. He that cannot have patience had need made up his pack and get out of the world, for here is no being for him. Burleigh, lord treasurer, was wont to say that he overcame envy more by patience than pertinace.

Ver. 20. Jerusalem compassed with armies] By Cestius Gallus, a little before that fatal siege by Titus. So God gave his people this sign, to take best course for their own safety.

Ver. 21. See #Mt 24:16 Mr 13:14.

Ver. 22. See #Mt 24:15-17.

Ver. 23. See #Mt 24:15-17.

Ver. 24. Until the times of the Gentiles] The Gentiles then shall not always tread down Jerusalem. Those kings of the East, the Jews, may, likely, have their way prepared to it, through Euphrates, #Re 16:12, and Jerusalem be again inhabited by them, even in Jerusalem, #Zec 12:6. But this will be not long before the last day, #Lu 21:25.

Ver. 25. See #Mt 24:29 Mr 13:24 2Pe 3:10.

Ver. 26. Men's hearts failing them] What marvel though wicked men be dispirited, and even ring their bells backwards, when they shall see all on a light fire? Moses himself may tremble at the terror of the mount, and Abraham show some trepidation in such a fright.

Ver. 27. Coming in a cloud] As on a chariot. See #Re 1:7.

Ver. 28. Look up] You that shall then be found alive shall soon be caught up, #1Th 4:14-18, and fully freed from all evils and enemies.

Ver. 29. See #Mt 24:32 Mr 13:28

Ver. 33. See #Mt 5:18.

Ver. 34. Take heed that your hearts] The disciples themselves had in them the common poison of nature, and so were obnoxious even to the most reproachful evils. That, πανσπερμια, if watered with the temptation of Satan, what sin may it not produce in the best, unless God prevent? Let the best take heed that they be not irregulares gulares, making the corpse a cloak bag, the gut a gulf, &c. A full belly makes a foul heart: the rankest weeds grow out of the fattest soil.

Ver. 35. As a snare] See #Ec 9:12. {See Trapp on "Ec 9:12"}

Ver. 36. That ye may be accounted worthy] Great is the emphasis of this word, καταξιωθητε (saith learned Beza), for it gives us to understand that we owe all to the free election of God, who loved us first, and so accepted us for worthy, #Re 3:4.

Ver. 37. And in the day] So he divided his time between preaching and praying; as did also his apostles, #Ac 6:4. {See Trapp on "Ac 6:4"}

Ver. 38. Came early in the morning] Mancabat, saith the Vulgate, imitating the Greek, ωρθριζε. Let our people look upon their forwardliness, and be ashamed of their long lying, tardy coming to hear the word.

Chapter 22

Ver. 1. Now the feast of unleavened bread, &c.] It is good to bring Bibles to church. Socrates relates of one Sabbatius, a Novatian bishop, that, reading this text, added such things of his own as carried away many simple people from the faith.

Ver. 2. How they might kill him] Not put him to death as judges, but kill him as cutthroats, ανελωσι. So #Ac 2:23.

Ver. 3. Then entered Satan] He stood but at the door till now, that the business was concluded on.

Ver. 4. And communed with the chief priests] Suopte ingenio, ut reprobi angeli, saith an interpreter.

Ver. 5. And covenanted] Judas sold his salvation, and they bought their damnation, saith one. He made a match with mischief, and soon had enough of it.

Ver. 6. And he promised] εξωμολογησε, by mutual stipulation (saith Beza), wherein the one asketh, Dost thou promise to do such a thing the other answereth, I do promise. Like as of old it was, Credis? Credo. Abrenuncias? Abrenuncio. Believest thou? I do believe. Forsakest thou? I do forsake.

Ver. 7. The day of unleavened bread, when, &c.] It must be our care to cast out all filthiness of flesh and spirit (that old leaven) before we communicate, #1Co 5:7. First throw the baggage into the brook Kidron (the town ditch), and then "kill the Passover," #2Ch 30:14.

Ver. 8. See #Mt 26:17,18, &c.; #Mr 14:12.

Ver. 9. See #Mt 26:17,18, &c.; #Mr 14:12.

Ver. 10. See #Mt 26:17,18, &c.; #Mr 14:12.

Ver. 15. With desire have I desired] How much more should we come with strong affections and lusty appetites to this holy supper! It is a virtue here to be a holy glutton, and to drink hearty draughts; that we may go from the table, as Christ from Jordan, full of the Holy Ghost. For this end consider what is before thee, as #Pr 23:1, not to restrain appetite, but to provoke it. And the rather because Christ thus earnestly thirsted after our salvation, though he knew it should cost him so dear. See #Lu 12:50.

Ver. 16. Until it be fulfilled] Until the old passover he abolished, and the new brought in place by my death and resurrection.

Ver. 17. And he took the cup] The cup of the common supper, #Joh 13:2,3.

Ver. 18. See #Mt 26:29 Mr 14:25.

Ver. 19. See #Mt 26:26 Mr 14:22.

Ver. 23. And they began to inquire] Therefore the Lord had not perfectly pointed out the traitor to them; or if he did, they either heard not, or heeded not.

Ver. 24. There was also a strife] This was so much the worse in them, because immediately after the sacrament, and before the passion, which our Saviour had told them should fall out within two days after. Neither was this the first time that they had thus faulted, and were reprov'd for it.

Ver. 25. The kings of the Gentiles, &c.] In striving for precedence, the disciples showed themselves but Gentiles, who stand upon their birth and privileges.

Exercise lordship over them] As he did with a witness (of whom Melancthon writeth) that wrung money from his miserable subjects, by knocking out their teeth, one by one, till he had what he would. (Joh. Maulii, loc. com.)

Are called benefactors] Nedibim, bountiful princes, #Ps 47:9 83:12. Such a one was Titus, son of Vespasian, who never sent away any suitor sorrowful; and was the author of this brave speech, Hodie non regnavimus, quia neminem affecimus beneficio: We seem not to have reigned this day, because we have done no man a good turn today.

Ver. 26. See #Mt 20:25 Mr 10:42.

Ver. 27. I am among you as he that serveth] i.e. Not as a master, but rather as your fellow disciple. The prophets had their scholars to wait upon them, and to minister to them. God's Levite had one man to ride with him, #Jud 19:11; Balaam had two, #Nu 22:22.

Ver. 28. Ye are they which have continued, &c.] Agrippa having suffered imprisonment for wishing Gaius emperor, the first thing Gaius did after he came to the empire, was to prefer Agrippa to a kingdom. He gave him also a chain of gold as heavy as the chain of iron that was upon him in prison. And shall not Christ richly reward all those his suffering servants?

Ver. 29. And I appoint] Gr. διατιθεμαι, I bequeath as by my last will and testament. See #Heb 9:17.

Ver. 30. That ye may eat and drink, &c.] As Mephibosheth and Chimham at David's table which was a high favour.

Ver. 31. Simon, Simon] q.d. Mi charissimo Simon. Piscat.

Satan hath desired, &c.] As a challenger desireth to have one of the other side to combat with, as Goliath did. He cannot harm us without leave. So he desired to have Job, and had him.

That he may sift you] Cribratione Satanae non perditur, sed purgatur frumentum, saith Zanchy {See Trapp on "Mt 3:12"}

Ver. 32. But I have prayed] So the plaster is ready made before the wound be given; for else the patient might perish, as those do that are stung with scorpions, if not presently anointed with oil of scorpions.

That thy faith fail not] It is our faith that Satan chiefly assaulteth: he knows that nihil retinct qui fidem perdidit. (Seneca.)

Strengthen thy brethren] So he doth notably, in both his Epistles, dooming apostates most severely, #2Pe 2.

Ver. 33. Lord, I am ready] Thus Peter overweened his own abilities; being melius semper animatus quam armatus, better affected than appointed.

Ver. 34. See #Mt 26:34 Mr 14:30 Joh 13:38.

Ver. 35. See #Mt 10:9 Lu 10:4.

Ver. 36. But now he that hath, &c.] Here the Captain of our salvation cries, Arm, arm; and under the name and notion of corporal weapons he intends all manner of spiritual preparations.

Ver. 37. For the things concerning me] i.e. Concerning my state of humiliation.

Ver. 38. It is enough] q.d. You speak absurdly: I mean not such kind of swords; let me hear no more of them.

Ver. 39.] See #Mt 26:36 Mr 14:32 Joh 14:4.

Ver. 40. See #Mt 26:41 Mr 14:38.

Ver. 41. And he was withdrawn] For privacy' sake to pray, though loth to leave their company, through extreme perplexity, which made him return so often to them, calling upon them to watch with him.

Ver. 42. If thou be willing] He was so astonished with the greatness of his present pressures, that he seems for a time to suffer some kind of forgetfulness of his office.

Ver. 43. And there appeared] To show that he had made himself lower than the angels, #Heb 2:7, he received comfort from an angel that was his servant. So in his agony he was glad of his apostles' company, and the help of their poor prayers.

Ver. 44. And being in an agony] Μη δια τουτο ατιμος, οτι δια σε ταπεινονος, saith a Greek father. Alphonsus is honoured in histories for this, that he abased himself so far as to help one of his subjects out of a ditch. Shall not Christ much more be honoured that helped all his out of the ditch of damnation.

He prayed more earnestly] εκτενεστερον, he bent, as it were, all his nerves, he intended the utmost activity of his spirit and of his speech; to make atonement for our dull and drowsy devotions.

Great drops of blood] Clotty blood (θρομβους αιματος) issuing through flesh and skin in great abundance. Oecolampadius tells of a certain poor man, who being kept hanging in the truss of the cord (which is a certain hanging by the hands behind, having a weighty stone fastened at their feet) the space of six hours, the sweat that dropped from his body for very pain and anguish, was almost blood. But here was no "almost" in our Saviour's bloody sweat: while without any external violence, merely by the force of his own saddest thoughts working upon him, sanguinem congelatum quasi extruserit. (Bucholcer.) So great was Scanderbeg's ardour in battle, that the blood burst out of his lips. But from our Champion's, not lips only, but whole body burst out a bloody sweat. Not his eyes only were fountains of tears, or his head waters, as Jeremiah wished, #Jer 9:1, but his whole body was turned, as it were, into rivers of blood: a sweet comfort to such as are cast down for that, that their sorrow for sin is not so deep and soaking as they could desire.

Falling down to the ground] Through clothes and all, in a cold night; so great was the pressure of his passion here begun. He wept with his members; a strange kind of watering of a garden, as one saith.

Ver. 45. He found them sleeping] Who should have waked, and wiped off his sweat (as the angel did Theodorus the martyr's), but they rather added to it by their security. (Socrates, Theodoret.)

Ver. 46. See #Mt 26:47 Mr 14:43 Joh 18:3.

Ver. 47. See #Mt 26:47 Mr 14:43 Joh 18:3.

Ver. 48. Judas, betrayest thou, &c.] Sic Iudaei, sub praetextu pietatis maxime delinquebant; et Deo osculum sine amore praebebant. (Bucholcer.) Julian the Apostate was no friend to Basil, though he wrote to him, φίλος φίλω και αδελφος αδελωω. Nor was Libanius the more to be believed for saying (in Epist. ad Basilium), βασιλειου με επαινησαντος κατα παντων εχω τα νικητηρια. If Basil commend me, I despise other men's worse censures.

Ver. 49. Lord, shall we smite?] But before he could answer, Peter smote, which might easily have cost him his life. Quod dubites, ne feceris, is a safe rule.

Ver. 50. See #Mt 26:51 Mr 14:47 Joh 18:10.

Ver. 51. And he touched his ear, &c.] After he had laid them flat on the ground. So he tried them both ways; but nothing would do.

Ver. 52. Captain of the temple] {See Trapp on "Ac 4:1"}

Ver. 53. And the power of darkness] The "dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty," #Ps 74:20. Creatures kept in the dark are fierce and furious. Had they known, they would never have crucified the Lord of glory, #1Co 2:8 "I did it ignorantly," saith Paul concerning his persecuting the saints, #1Ti 1:13.

Ver. 54. See #Mt 26:57.

Ver. 55. See #Mt 26:69 Joh 18:25.

Ver. 56. Vide ibidem eum notis.

Ver. 57. Vide ibidem eum notis.

Ver. 58. Vide ibidem eum notis.

Ver. 59. Vide ibidem eum notis.

Ver. 60. Vide ibidem eum notis.

Ver. 61. And looked upon Peter] A stroke from guilt broke Judas' heart into despair: but a look from Christ broke Peter's heart into tears.

Ver. 62. See #Mt 26:75. Titubatio Petri, omnium petra.

Ver. 63. See #Mt 26:27 Mr 14:65 Joh 18:22 Isa 50:6. They scoffed him, not so much with their tongues as hands; plucking his beard, and pulling away hair and skin too, as the word δερειν importeth.

Ver. 65. And many other things] Shooting their sharpest arrows at him, even bearded arrows, which being once got into the flesh, cannot easily be pulled out but by tearing the flesh round about: and far worse than those shot by the Turks at the crucifix, when they sacked Constantinople, railing also, and spitting at it, and calling it the God of the Christians.

Ver. 66. See #Mt 27:1.

Ver. 67. Here the president of the council examineth him, as #Lu 22:70 the assessors.

Ver. 68. Christ's answer is partly reprehensory, partly concessory and comminatory; for it is a confession of the truth mixed with menaces of condign punishment.

Ver. 69. Christ's answer is partly reprehensory, partly concessory and comminatory; for it is a confession of the truth mixed with menaces of condign punishment.

Ver. 70. Ye say that I am] Or, as Mark hath it more plainly, "I am," #Mr 14:62. Christ here useth a common kind of speech, to consent to what another saith.

Ver. 71. See #Mt 26:65.

Ver. 1. See #Mt 27:2 Joh 18:28.

Ver. 2. Perverting the people] Gr. διαστρεφοντα, turning them upside down, wreathing them from their right minds. So #Lu 23:5 "He stirreth up the people," Gr. ανασειει, he maketh an earthquake in them; rectum tollit de cardine mentem, he throws them off the hinges.

Ver. 3. See #Mt 27:11 Mr 15:2 Joh 18:33.

Ver. 4. See #Joh 18:38.

Ver. 5. He stirreth up the people] In the present tense, q.d. He doth nothing else; he maketh it his whole trade and constant practice, Mendacium putidum. decietful and rotten.

Ver. 6. He asked] As desirous to rid his hands of him.

Ver. 7. He sent him] So seeking to ingratiate with Herod.

Ver. 8. He was exceeding glad] As if he had gotten some magician or enchanter, that would show him some pleasant sight.

Ver. 9. But he answered him nothing] Princes use to correct the indecencies of ambassadors by denying them audience, as if silence were the way royal to revenge a wrong. Christ spoke not a word to Herod (saith one), because Herod had taken away his voice by beheading the Baptist, who was vox clamantis a shouting voice.

Ver. 10. Vehemently accused him] Gr. εὑρονως, with great intention of spirit, and contention of speech. Clamant, ut Stentora vincant.

Ver. 11. Set him at nought] Gr. ἐξουθενησας, made nobody of him.

Arrayed him in a gorgeous robe] Or a white robe, as the old interpreter hath it, λαμπραν. Pilate's soldiers clad our Saviour in purple (a colour more affected by the Romans), Herod in white, as more affected by the Jewish nobility.

Mocked him] Gr. εμπαιξας, handled him like a boy, or made a baby of him, made sport with him.

Ver. 12. Pilate and Herod were made friends] Two dogs that are fighting can easily agree to pursue the hare that passeth by them. Martial brings in the hare thus complaining:

“ In me omnis terraeque, aviumque, marisque rapina est:
Forsitan et coeli, si canis astra tenet.”

In littore Siculo cum lepus canum venaticorum vim evasisset, a cane marino captus dicitur: est enim voracissima maris bellua, saith Bodin. The wicked can easily unite against the saints.

Ver. 13. See #Mt 27:23 Joh 18:38.

Ver. 14. See #Mt 27:23 Joh 18:38.

Ver. 15. No, nor yet Herod] Nor any man alive, though he had the devil to help him. The poets bring in Momus finding fault with the creaking of Venus' slipper. But Christ was αμνος αμωμος, as St Peter calleth him, #1Pe 1:19, the spotless Lamb of God, in whom Momus himself could find nothing amiss, after long seeking. See #Joh 14:30.

Ver. 16. I will therefore chastise him] And so he did, purposely to move pity, #Joh 19:1, but all in vain: yea, though he afterwards presented him a pitiful spectacle, with "Behold the man."

Ver. 17. For of necessity] Tyrannus ille trium literarum Mos, would needs have it so. See #Joh 18:29 Mt 27:15.

Ver. 18. Release unto us] What marvel though murderers desire a murderer? Similis similem sibi quaerit.

Ver. 19. See #Joh 18:40. {See Trapp on "Joh 18:40"}

Ver. 20. Pilate therefore willing, &c.] I read of one that did verily think that Pilate was an honest man, because he was so unwilling to crucify Christ. But this arose only from the restraint of natural conscience against so foul a fact.

Ver. 21. Crucify him, crucify him] As if they should say, Do it twice over, rather than fail. The modern Jews, as mad as their forefathers, say that rather than we Gentiles should have benefit by their expected Messiah, they would crucify him a hundred times over.

Ver. 22. The third time] It is well observed here, that Peter for fear denied Christ three times, and yet repented; Pilate three times justified Christ, and yet for popular favour condemned him. It may teach us neither to despair if we repent, nor presume because we have begun well.

Ver. 23. And they were instant with loud voices] It is said of Nestorius the heretic, that he was homo superbus, et indoctus, sed audax, et magnae loquentiae; qua unica fretus, nihil non audebat; et quidem saepenumero faeliciter, quod volebat, obtinebat; a proud dunce, but bold and loud spoken, whereby he had what he would many times. (Zanchius.)

Ver. 24. See #Mt 27:26 Mr 15:15.

Ver. 25. Him that for sedition] The Jews, before they were banished out of this kingdom, threw bags of poison into the wells and fountains that the people were to drink of; and so endeavoured to poison them all. So deal those that sow sedition; these are the pests, the botches of human society.

Ver. 26. See #Mt 27:32 Mr 15:21.

Ver. 27. Which also bewailed] This was all they could do, and it was much they dared do it in so evil a time. In the reign of Tiberius, one Vitia was punished with death for that she had lamented Geminus her son, executed as friend to Sejanus. And because they could not accuse women for attempting against the State, their tears were criminal, saith Tacitus.

Ver. 28. Weep not for me] We are not so much to lament Christ's dolorous sufferings (as Papists use to do in their stage playing descriptions of his passion) as to lay to heart and lament our sins, the cause of all. When a Papist came to Master Hooper at the stake, and said, "Sir, I am sorry to see you thus," "Be sorry for thyself, man," said hearty Hooper, "and lament thine own wickedness, for I am well, I thank God, and death to me for Christ's sake is welcome." (Acts and Mon.)

Ver. 29. Blessed are the barren] Better be so than bring forth children to the murderer. Hence Hosea prays for barrenness as a blessing on his people, #Ho 9:14.

Ver. 30. See #Re 6:16. {See Trapp on "Re 6:16"}

Ver. 31. What shall be done in the dry?] Lo, little sucklings also are here called dry trees, dry wood, such as God's wrath will soon kindle upon.

Ver. 32. See #Mt 27:38.

Ver. 33. Which is called Calvary] As sad a sight to our Saviour, as the bodies of his slain wife and children were to Mauricius the emperor, who was soon after to be slain also by the command of the traitor Phocas. Let us learn to consider the tyranny and deformity of sin as often as we pass through churchyards and charnelhouses. Historians tell us that the way whereby Christ went bearing his cross to Calvary is to this day called The Dolorous Way.

There they crucified him] Christ's cross, with his naked and bloody body, being lift up on high, was let fall with violence into a mortise, that his joints were dissolved, said Origen to Alexander Severus the emperor.

Ver. 34. Father, forgive them] See the sweet mercy of Christ, mindful and careful of his enemies when the pains of hell had taken hold of him, and they, like so many breathing devils, were tormenting him. Pendebat et tamen petebat, saith Augustine. He was slain by them, and yet he begged for them.

Ver. 35. Derided him] Gr. ἐξέμυκτηρίζον, blew their noses at him.

Ver. 36. Offered him vinegar] Instead of wine, which kings drink much of.

Ver. 37. See #Mt 27:42.

Ver. 38. Greek, Latin, and Hebrew] This venerable eulogy and epitaph, set upon our Saviour's cross, proclaimed him King of all religion, having reference to the Hebrews; of all wisdom, to the Greeks; of all power, to the Latins.

Ver. 39. Which were hanged, railed, &c.] Sic plectimur a Deo, nec flectimur tamen (saith Salvian), corripimur, sed non corrigimur. There are many, quos multo facilius fregeris, quam flexeris, saith Buchanan. Monoceros interimi potest, capi non potest. The wicked are the worse for that they suffer, and will sooner break than bend.

Ver. 40. But the other answering] Silent he was for a while, and therefore seemed to consent; till hearing Christ's prayers and the enemies' outrages, he brake out into this brave confession, worthy to be written in letters of gold.

Ver. 41. See #Mt 27:38. This good thief, like the olive tree, bore fruit late, but great store of that which was excellent.

Ver. 42. Lord, remember me] By this penitent prayer he made his cross a Jacob's ladder, whereby the angels descended to fetch up his soul. So did Leonard Caesar, burnt at Rappa in Bavaria, whose last words were these, "Lord Jesus, suffer with me, support me, give me strength: I am thine, save me," &c. (Scultet. Annal.) {See Trapp on "Mt 27:38"}

Ver. 43. Verily I say unto thee] See the infinite love of Christ to penitent sinners, in that when he hung upon the tree, and was paying dear for man's sin, he rejected not this malefactor's petition. Shall he not hear us now that all is paid and finished?

Today shalt thou be with me] This is not every man's happiness. A pardon is sometimes given to one upon the gallows; but whoso trusts to that, the rope may be his hire. It is not good to put it upon the psalm of Miserere Sorrow and the neck verse (saith one), for sometimes he proves no clerk. Most deal with repentance as country people do with physicians,—love not to have to do with them till they fear they are gasping the last breath. The mole begins not to see till he be at point of death: Oculos incipit aperire moriendo, quos clausos habuit vivendo, saith Pliny. The serpent stretcheth not himself out straight till he hath received his death's wound. But what if God should say to such lingerers, as the crab in the fable did to the dying serpent, At oportuit sic vixisse, "It is too late now, you should have lived so?"

Ver. 44. See #Mt 27:25 Mr 15:33.

Ver. 45. See #Mt 27:51 Mr 15:38.

Ver. 46. See #Mt 27:50.

Ver. 47. Certainly this was a righteous man] Bennet the martyr, in King Henry VIII's days, being brought to execution, the most part of the people (he exhorted them with such gravity and sobriety), as also the scribe who wrote the sentence of condemnation against him, did pronounce and confess that he was God's servant, and a good man. So when Wiseheart and March the martyrs went toward the stake, they were justified by the beholders, as innocent and godly persons. (Acts and Mon.)

Ver. 48. See #Mt 27:54.

Ver. 49. See #Mt 27:55.

Ver. 50. See #Mt 27:57 Mr 15:43 Joh 19:38.

Ver. 51. The same had not consented] This proved him to be a good man and a just, as #Ps 1:1. Sir John Cheek was drawn in for fear of death to be present at the condemnation of some of the martyrs. The remorse whereof so mightily wrought upon his heart, that not long after he left this mortal life; whose fall, though it was full of infirmity, yet his rising again by repentance was great, and his end comfortable, saith Master Fox. So by the malice and subtilty of Stephen Gardiner, Cromwell was commanded by King Henry VIII to read the sentence of condemnation against Mr Lambert the martyr, for the which Cromwell afterwards asked him forgiveness.

Waited for the kingdom of God] Gr. προσεδεχετο, entertained and embraced it.

Ver. 52. See #Mt 27:58-60.

Ver. 53. See #Mt 27:58-60.

Ver. 55. See #Mt 27:61.

Ver. 56. And rested the seventh day] From all servile work, yea, that (otherwise most honourable) work of embalming Christ's dead body.

Chapter 24

Ver. 1. Very early in the morning] About which time, probably, our Saviour rose.

Ver. 2. See #Mt 27:60,66.

Ver. 3. Found not the body] But the grave clothes only, #Joh 20:6. As Samson, shut up in Gaza, took the gates on his shoulders, and went his way in despite of his enemies; so did Christ here. These women came first, by a wonderful providence, before the apostles, to confute that impudent lie made by the priests, that the disciples had stolen away the body.

Ver. 4. Two men stood] Two angels in the guise of men.

Ver. 5. See #Mt 28:5,6.

Ver. 6. See #Mt 28:5,6.

Ver. 7. See #Mt 17:23 Mr 9:31 Lu 9:22.

Ver. 8. And they remembered his words] Which at first hearing they understood not, heeded not. So the new birth of some is like the birth of the elephant, fourteen years after the seed injected into the womb.

Ver. 9. And told all these things] Per os mulieris mors ante processerat, per os mulieris vita reparatur, saith Ambrose. So, #Lu 1:28-37, an angel of light communeth with a woman about man's salvation, as an angel of darkness had done {#Ge 3:1-7} about his fall and destruction.

And told all these things] For it was a day of good tidings, as those lepers said in another case, #2Ki 7:9, the sum of all the good news in the world.

Ver. 10. And other women] Who were to be Apostolorum Apostolae, apostles of the mesage, as the ancients speak.

Ver. 11. As idle tales] Set on with great earnestness, ληρος α λα, particula intensiva, et ερω, valde dico.

Ver. 12. And stooping down] Obstipo capite et propenso collo. We need not doubt therefore about the certainty of this history of Christ's resurrection.

Ver. 13. About threescore furlongs] About six miles.

Ver. 14. And they talked together] So did Elias and Elisha, when the heavenly chariot came to sunder them. Christ is still with two or three met for such a holy purpose.

Ver. 15. Jesus himself] He made the third among them, as Dionysius, the king of Sicily, wished that he might be admitted into fellowship of friendship with those two fast friends, Damon and Pythias. (Cic. de Offic.) Christ still delights to be one among those that meet to confer about the things of his kingdom.

Ver. 16. But their eyes were held] Ut ulcus suum discipuli detegerent, ac pharmacum susciperent, saith Theophylact. That they may tell their own disease and receive healing.

Ver. 17. That ye have one to another] Gr. that ye toss one to another, as a ball is tossed between two or more. ἀντιβαλλετε, tu cum duo pila lusitaut.

And are sad] Christ loves not to see his saints sad; he questions them as Joseph did his prisoners, "Wherefore look ye so sadly today?" #Ge 40:7, and as the king did Nehemiah, #Lu 2:2.

Ver. 18. And one of them, whose name was Cleophas] They that hold the other of these two to have been St Luke, are refuted by the preface he hath set before the Acts, saith Beza.

Art thou only a stranger, &c.] Tragedies have no prologues, as comedies have, because it is supposed that all men take knowledge of public calamities. (Natal. Comes.)

Ver. 19. Which was a prophet] Yea, and more than a prophet. But the disciples were wondrously ignorant, till the Spirit came down upon them, #Ac 2:1-4.

Ver. 20. Delivered him] viz. to the Roman governor. Hence he is said to have been crucified at Rome, #Re 11:8.

Ver. 21. But we trusted] q.d. Indeed now we cannot tell what to say to it. Here their hope hangs the wing extremely, their buckler is much battered, and needs beating out again. Ferendum et sperandum, speaking and hoping, said the philosopher. (οἰστεον καὶ ἐλπῖστεον. Epictet.) And good men find it more easy to bear evil than to wait for good, #Heb 10:36.

Ver. 22. Made us astonished] When they should rather have believed without sciscitation; but that their hearts were yet still stupefied.

Ver. 23. Saying that they had seen a vision] But you (wisely) thought that they had dreamed a dream rather, that they had doted and dreamed waking, #Lu 24:11.

Ver. 24. Certain of them] viz. Peter and John. See #Joh 20:6, {See Trapp on "Joh 20:6"}

Ver. 25. O fools., &c.] Those in a lethargy must have double the quantity of medicine that others have. Some slow bellies must be sharply rebuked, that they may be sound in the faith #Tit 1:12,13.

Ver. 26. Ought not Christ] Ne Iesum quidem audias gloriosum, nisi videris crucifixum, saith Luther in an epistle to Melancthon. Agentem fortiter oportet aliquid pati, It is proper that acting bravely and to suffer somewhat, said a Theban soldier, out of Pindarus, to Alexander, when he had received a wound in battle. For the which sentence he liberally rewarded him. τον δρωντα δεινα και παθειν δει..

Ver. 27. The things concerning himself] Christ is author, object, matter, and mark of Old and New Testament: the babe of Bethlehem is bound up (as I may so say) in these swathing bands. Turn we the eyes of our minds to him, as the cherubims did their faces toward the mercy seat. The angels do, #1Pe 1:12.

Ver. 28. And he made as though he would, &c.] So did the angels to Lot, #Ge 19:2. See the like, #Jos 8:5,6 1Ki 3:24. If Solomon might make as though he would do an act that was unlawful, we may surely do the like in things indifferent. Yet this was never done, as is well observed, but, 1. By those that had authority over others; 2. For some singular good to them with whom they thus dealt.

Ver. 29. But they constrained him] Though they had been sharply rebuked by him, whom they knew to be no other than a mere stranger to them.

For it is toward evening] Cry we, now if ever, ere it be too late, “ Vespera iam venit, nobiscum Christe maneto.

Extingui lucem nec patiare tuam.”

Ver. 30. And blessed it] It is thought they knew him by his ordinary form of giving thanks before meat.

Ver. 31. Their eyes were opened] The free and entire use of their inward and outward senses was restored unto them.

Ver. 32. Did not our hearts burn] By that spirit of burning {#Isa 4:4} that kindleth the fire of God {#So 8:6} on the hearth of his people's hearts, while the mystery of Christ is laid open unto them. Ego vero illius oratione sic incendebam, saith Senarclaeus, concerning Darius the martyr, ut cum eum disserentem audirem, Spiritus Sancti verba me audire existimarem. Methought when I heard him, I heard the Holy Ghost himself speaking to me.

While he opened] Preaching then is the key of the Scripture.

Ver. 33. The same hour] Late though it were, and they weary, yet they return the same night, not sparing themselves to do good to others.

Ver. 34. Appeared to Simon] #1Co 15:5. To Peter Christ appeared individually; because as he offended more heinously than the rest of the disciples, so he was more grievously troubled.

Ver. 35. {See Trapp on "Lu 24:30"} Ex benedictionis forma solemniori ipse Christo antequam panem frangeret, saith Calvin here.

Ver. 36. See #Mr 16:14 Joh 20:19.

Ver. 37. But they were terrified and affrighted] Tam metulosa est incredulitas. Ut etiam tutissima et maxime tranquilla timeat, saith Brentius here.

Ver. 38. Why do thoughts arise] How easily can the Lord trouble us, by turning our own thoughts loose upon us.

Ver. 39. Behold my hands, &c.] With those stamps of dishonour that the Jews did me with wicked hands. These he retained even after his resurrection, as for the confirmation of his apostles, so for our instruction, not to think much to suffer loss of honour for our brethren's good and comfort.

Ver. 40. He showed them his hands, &c.] For their better assurance and settlement; that they might both remember his resurrection, {#2Ti 2:8} and with greater power give witness to it, #Ac 4:33.

Ver. 41. Believed not for joy] This was partly the joy of faith; and yet through mixture of the flesh, it became some hindrance to their faith. So Abraham laughed, and yet said in his heart, "Shall a child be born to him that is a hundred years old?" &c., #Ge 17:17. Strong affections, though from good principles, may possibly miscarry us. Watch therefore.

Ver. 42. Broiled fish] Left of last night's supper, prandium quasi perendum.

Ver. 43. And did eat] Not out of any natural necessity or desire after meat, as once before his passion; but for confirmation of their faith.

Ver. 44. And in the Psalms] When a book is set forth, verses of commendation are often set before it. Christ by this one sentence hath more honoured and authorized the Book of Psalms, than all men could have done by their prefaces and eulogies prefixed thereunto. The Turks disclaim both Testaments, yet swear as solemnly by the Psalms of David as by the Koran of Mahomet.

Ver. 45. Then opened he their understanding] He enlightened both organ and object, as #Ac 16:14.

Ver. 46. Thus it is written, &c.] All things done and suffered by our Saviour were punctually and exactly foretold and foreshown by

Moses and the prophets; and especially by Isaiah, who writes more like an evangelist than a prophet; and is therefore called the Evangelical Prophet. (Jerome.)

Ver. 47. And that repentance, &c.] Blessed be God, saith one, that after our shipwreck by Adam, there is such a plank as repentance for a poor sinner to swim to heaven upon. It is a mourning for sin, as it is offensivum Dei, et aversivum a Deo. It is commissa plangere, et plangenda non committere, as Ambrose hath it; to bewail what is done amiss, and to do so no more.

Ver. 48. And ye are witnesses] Therefore prepare to preach the Gospel to every creature. And take it for a singular seal of my love, that notwithstanding your late shameful defection and deserting of me, I shall yet employ you as my witnesses, and make use of your ministry.

Ver. 49. Until ye be endued] Gr. ενδυσθησθε, clothed. Carnal men are naked men; when the saints are arrayed with that fine white linen and shining, #Re 19:8.

Ver. 50. As far as to Bethany] Where his three dear friends dwelt, Lazarus, Martha, and Mary. From hence he went to his cross, and from hence he would go to his crown.

He lift up his hands] As a good householder; or rather as the high priest of the New Testament: benedixit, id est, valedixit, he blessed them, and so bade them farewell.

Ver. 51. And it came to pass] See #Mr 16:19 Ac 1:9.

Ver. 52. With great joy] Yet could they not hear of his ascending to the Father without great sorrow, John 14 and 16. We grieve for that sometimes which we have great cause to take comfort in; such is our weakness and waywardness.

Ver. 53. Praising and blessing God] Inter laudam devotiones, promissum Spiritus Sancti adventure, promptis per omnia paratisque cordibus expectant. (Beda.) So putting themselves into fit posture to receive the comfort that Christ had promised them.

John

Ver. 1. In the beginning] Here this heavenly eagle, John the Divine, soars at first out of sight (ο θεολογος κατ εξοχην). Here doth God detonate ab alto, thunder from on high, saith Calvin. St Austin stands amazed at the mystical divinity here delivered. This barbarian (said the philosopher, concerning our evangelist) hath comprised more stupendous stuff in three lines than we have done in all our voluminous discourses. {a} Happy had it been for him if he had been made, by this first chapter, of an atheist, a true Christian, as learned Junius was. {b} But he only admired it, and so left it where he found it; as too many do the Word at this day.

Was the Word] Personal, and enunciative. Isaiah, #Isa 6:1, saw him on the throne, and heard him speaking; Daniel, #Da 8:13, calleth him Palmoni hammedabber, "that excellent speaker," and asketh him of the vision; the Syriac interpreter here calleth him Meltha, "the Word uttered"; and the Chaldee, Pithgam Adonai, "the Lord, the Word."

And the Word was with God] Which sweetly sets forth his co-eternity and co-existency with the Father (το συναιδιον και ενυποστατον), saith Chrysostom. Moscopulus renders it, secundum Deum according to God, as being the express image of the Father. Others, ad Deum; to God, as importing a deliberation and conference of the Father and the Son.

And the Word was God] θεος, without an article: hence the Arians cavil that the Son is not God co-equal, but a secondary God, inferior to the Father. See #Ga 1:3. The Father is also called θεος, without an article: therefore this follows not. This whole Gospel is a continue demonstration of Christ's Deity, which began to be denied, while this evangelist lived, by Ebion, Cerinthus, and other odious antichrists.

{a} Amel. Platonic. ap. Clem. Alex.

Ver. 2. The same was in the beginning] In the instant of creation, as #Ge 1:1, therefore also before the creation, therefore from eternity, #Eph 1:4 1Pe 1:10 Pr 8:22,23. {a} "The Lord possessed me" (saith Christ, the essential Wisdom of God there) "in the beginning of his way." Arius corrupted the Greek text, reading it thus, {b} "The Lord created me in the beginning," &c.; and therehence blasphemously inferred that Christ was no more than a creature. But he was "set up from everlasting from the beginning, or ever the earth was," #Pr 8:23 Ps 45:6. {c} Hence he is called the "Ancient of days," #Da 7:9. And Thales, one of the seven Sages of Greece, styleth him, "The most ancient of anything that hath being," πρεσβυτατον των οντων.

With God] Being alius another from his Father, not aliud; a distinct person, yet co-essential and co-eternal; for he was with him in the beginning of "the creature which God created," as himself speaketh, #Mr 13:19.

{a} Hinc Iohannes augustum illud et magnificum Evangelis sui initium assumpsit. Mercer in loc.

{b} For εκτησε in place of εκτισε.

Ver. 3. All things were made by him] So he was not idle with the Father (though he were his darling, sporting always before him, #Pr 8:30), but by him, as by a principal efficient and co-agent with the Father and the Holy Ghost, all things were made; as some shadow and obscure representation of his wisdom, power, goodness, &c., seen in the creature, as the sun is seen in water, or as letters refracted in a pair of spectacles are beheld by a dim eye. We can see but God's back parts, and live; we need see no more, that we may live, #Ex 33:23.

And without him was nothing made] This is added for the more certainty: it being usual with the Hebrews, thus by negation to confirm what they have before affirmed, where they would assure that the thing is so indeed; as #Ps 92:15 Joh 7:18.

Ver. 4. In him was life] As he created, so he quickeneth and conserveth all, being the Prince and principle of life, #Ac 3:15; both of natural life, #Ac 17:28 (the heathen could say as much), {a} and of spiritual, #1Jo 5:12. Hence his members are called "heirs of the grace of life," #1Pe 3:7, and all others are said to be "dead in trespasses and sins," #Eph 2:1, living carcasses, walking sepulchres of themselves. In most families (as in Egypt, #Ex 12:40) there is not one, but many dead corpses, as being "alienated from the life of God, through the ignorance that is in them," #Eph 4:18.

{a} Est Deus in nobis, agitante calescimus illo. This is a God in us, we are warmed by that stirring.

Ver. 5. And the light shineth] The light both of nature and of Scripture. The former is but a dim half-light, a rush candle, that will light a man but into utter darkness. The latter is a clear thorough light: the commandment is a lamp, et lex, lux, and the law is light, #Pr 6:23. As for the gospel, it is set up as a beacon on a hill, #Tit 2:11, επεφανη, or as the sun in the firmament, #Lu 1:78,79, bringing "life and immortality to light," #2Ti 1:10; where God by his Holy Spirit enlighteneth organ and object, #Ac 26:18, and shineth on the heart, in the face of Jesus Christ, #2Co 4:6.

And the darkness comprehendeth it not] Nor will be comprehended by it, #Php 3:12, but repels it, rebels against it, #Job 24:13; imprisons it, as those wizards did, #Ro 1:18; spurns at it (as Balaam the devil's spelman did, #Nu 24:1,2, when he set his face toward the wilderness, and resolved to curse howsoever); execrates it, as the Ethiopians do the rising sun. (Herodot.) The morning is to such as the shadow of death, #Job 24:17; for being born in hell, they seek no other heaven.

Ver. 6. There was a man sent from God] As he ran not, till sent, #Jer 23:32. St Paul holds it not only for incredible, but for impossible, that men should preach that are not sent, #Ro 10:15. So he declined not his ambassage, as did Jonah, απειτουμενος την αποστολην; who was therefore met with by another messenger of God, and sent into the whale's belly to make his sermon for Nineveh; and in his prayer before, to acknowledge out of sad experience that they that hunt "after lying vanities" (as he had done) "forsake their own mercies," #Jon 2:8.

Ver. 7. The same came for a witness] This he performed with a witness, verbis non solum disertis, sed et exertis. He witnessed plainly and plentifully, with a clear and punctual pronunciation, profession, indigitation, #Joh 1:26,29,32,36.

That all men through him might believe] Our Saviour expected that men should have come as far to hear his forerunner and him as the Queen of Sheba came to hear Solomon, #Mt 12:42. But the one thing necessary lies, alas, neglected. Men will run to hell as fast as they can: and if God cannot catch them (saith Mr Shephard) they care not, they will not come to Christ that they might live, #Joh 5:40.

Ver. 8. He was not that light] As some sinisterly conceited, which therefore occasioned that most necessary digression, #Joh 1:6-10, and drew afterwards, from the Baptist himself, that most vehement profession, #Joh 1:20 "He confessed and denied not, but confessed," &c. He knew well the danger of detracting in the least degree from God's glory. To look upon it only, and lust after it, is to commit spiritual fornication with it in our hearts; for it is God's beloved spouse, and he being jealous, cannot bear a co-rival. Look upon it therefore but with a single eye, #Mt 6:22, and in all addresses to God, give the honour to him; take humility to thyself, as Austin well adviseth, <sup>{a}</sup> Let that be thy motto that was his, Propter te, Domine, propter re. Study God's ends, and we may have anything of him, as Moses, #Ex 32:30-35.

Ver. 9. Which lighteth every man, &c.] Or, that coming into the world, lighteth every man; all, with the light of reason, #Job 35:11; his own, with a supernal and supernatural light (to know heavenly things is to ascend into heaven, #Pr 30:3,4), an affecting, transforming light, #2Co 3:18, such as maketh a man to be a child of light, #Eph 5:8 "partaker of the inheritance of the saints in light," #Col 1:12. Any created understanding at most is but (as Aeschylus saith of fire stolen by Prometheus) παντεχνου πυρος σελας, a beam of that light essential.

Ver. 10. He was in the world] Here the evangelist goes on where he left: resumes, and proceeds in his former argument, #Joh 1:5.

And the world was made by him] This is the second time here set forth, and reinforced, that we may the better observe and improve it. See the like, #Re 4:11 "For thou hast created all things, and by thee they are and were created," without help, tool, or tiresomeness, #Isa

60:18. That one word of his, fiat, made all: shall we not admire his architecture?

And the world knew him not] Man is here called "the world," and #Mr 16:15, he is called "every creature." This little world knew not Christ, for God had hid him under the carpenter's son; his glory was inward, his kingdom came not by observation. And because the world knew not him, therefore it knoweth not us, #1Jo 3:1. Princes the saints are in all lands, #Ps 45:16, but they he obscured, as did Melchizedek. The moon (say astronomers) hath at all times as much light as in the full; but often a great part of the bright side is turned to heaven, and a lesser part to the earth. So it is with the Church.

Ver. 11. He came unto his own] His peculiar picked people; as "touching the election, beloved for the Father's sake," #Ro 11:28 (ownness makes love), though the more he loved the less he was beloved. This may be the best man's case, #2Co 12:15. Learn we to deserve well of the most undeserving. God shines upon the unthankful also, #Lu 6:35. Christ came to the "stiffnecked and uncircumcised in heart and ears," #Ac 7:51. His comfort was (and may be ours), "Though Israel be not gathered, yet I shall be glorious," &c., #Isa 49:5.

And his own received him not] Nay, they peremptorily and pertinaciously "denied the holy One and the just; and desired a murderer to be given unto them," #Ac 3:14. For the which their inexpressible guilt, they are, as it were, cast out of the world by a common consent of nations, being a dejected and despised people. Howbeit, we long and look daily for their conversion, their resurrection, as St Paul calleth it, #Ro 11:15. And Augustine argueth out of the words, Abba, Father, that there shall one day be a consent of Jews and Gentiles in the worship of the one true God. There are those who say out of #Da 12:11, that this will occur A.D. 1650. Fiat, fiat. Do it, do it.

Ver. 12. To them he gave power] Or, privilege preferment, prerogative royal, heavenly honour, ουρανιαν τιμην, as Nonnus here rendereth it, and fitly. For if sons, then heirs, #Ro 8:17. Hence that Ecce admirantis, #1Jo 3:1, and that "Who am I?" #2Sa 7:18 14:13-15. Kings can make their firstborn only heirs, as Jehoshaphat, #2Ch 21:3; but here all are heirs of God and co-heirs with Christ.

Even to them that believe in his name] Though with never so weak a faith, such as may seem to be rather unbelief than faith, #Mr 9:24. The least bud draws sap from the root, as well as the greatest branch. The weakest hand may receive a ring. Credo languida fide, sed tamen fide, I believe by faint faith but yet by faith, said Dr Cruciger on his death bed. A weak faith is a joint possessor though no faith can be a joint purchaser of this precious privilege here specified. (Selnecker. paedag. Christ.)

Ver. 13. But of God] Whose sons therefore they are, and so "higher than the kings of the earth," #Ps 89:27, as those that prolong the days of Christ upon earth, being begotten by the travail of his soul, #Isa 53:10,11. Hence faith is said to adopt us, #Joh 1:12, in like sort as it justifies us, viz. by virtue of its object, Christ. <sup>{a}</sup> Hence, #Ps 72:17, there is said to be a succession of Christ's name; it is begotten, as one generation is begotten of another. This is true nobility, where God is the top of the kin, religion the root. Beatus Ludovicus would be called Ludovicus de Pissiaco, rather than take greater titles, because there he became a Christian. He thought no birth equal to a new birth in Christ, no parentage to that of God to his Father.

Ver. 14. And the Word was made flesh] Put himself into a lousy, leprosy suit of ours, to expiate our pride and robbery, in reaching after the Deity, and to heal us of our spiritual leprosy; for ακαταληπτου αθεραπευτου, if he had not assumed our flesh he had not saved us. (Nazianzen.) Induit ergo sordes nostras, saith one. He therefore condescended to our rags; and so

Dwelt among us] Dwelt as in a tent or booth, εσκηνωσεν. He alludes to soldiers pitching their tents; or rather to the feast of tabernacles, in or near the time of which celebrated, by consent of many authors of best note, our Saviour was born.

Ver. 15. John cried, saying] He entered upon his calling in the year of Jubilee, which was wont to be published by the voice of a crier, with the sound of a trumpet. And hitherto allude the prophets and evangelists, that say he cried, and call him, "the voice of a crier."

Ver. 16. Of his fulness] Which is both repletive and diffusive; not only of plenty, but of bounty; not a fulness of abundance only, but of redundance too. In Christians is plenitudo vasis; abundance of vessels, but in Christ, fontis: is the fount, these differ (say the schoolmen) ut ignis, et ignita, as fire and that which holds the fire. Take a drop from the ocean, and it is so much the less; but the fulness of the fire is such, that light a thousand torches at it, it is not diminished.

And grace for grace] That is (say some) the grace of the New Testament for the grace of the Old. And so in the next verse, "grace" shall answer to the moral law, "truth" to the ceremonial. Or (as others) "grace for grace"; that is, a latitude answerable to all the commands, a perfection answerable to Christ's own perfection. As the father gives his child limb for limb, part for part, &c., so doth this "Father of Eternity," #Isa 9:6. There are those who render it "grace against grace," as in a glass is face against face. See #2Co 3:18. Or "grace upon grace," that is, one grace after another, a daily increase of graces. Gratiam nova gratia cumulatam. Pasor.

Ver. 17. For the law, &c.] Lex iubet, gratia iuvat. Petamus ut det, quod ut habeamus iubet, The law command, grace assists. Let us ask that he may give, that we have what he commands, saith Augustine. We have his promise ever going along with his precept. The covenant of grace turns precepts into promises, and the Spirit of grace turns both into prayers.

Ver. 18. The only begotten Son] In the year of grace 1520, Michael Servetus, a Spaniard, taught that there is no real generation or distinction in God, and was therefore worthily burnt at Geneva, in the year 1555. He would not recant; and yet feeling the fire, could not with patience endure it, but kept a hideous roaring till his life was exhausted, crying out to the beholders to dispatch him with a sword. (Bellarm. i.; de Christo, i.; Calvin Opusc.)

He hath, declared him] ἐξήγησατο. In a divine and extraordinary manner, as the word here used imports.

Ver. 19. Jews sent priests] Whose proper office it was to inquire into new doctrines, and by preserving, to present knowledge to the people, who were to "seek the law at the priest's mouth," #Mal 2:7. Cicero complains of his Roman priests, that they were good honest men, but not very skilful. Bonos illos quidem viros, sed certe non pereruditos. (Cic. xx. de. Fin.) And Varro upbraids them with their ignorance of much about their own gods and religions. (Aug. Civ. Dei. iv. 1.)

Ver. 20. He confessed and denied not, but confessed] Sincerely and studiously; he put away that honour with both hands earnestly, as knowing the danger of wronging the jealous God in his glory, that is as his wife. All the fat was to be sacrificed to God. It is well observed, that nineteen times doth John use this kind of double affirmation. First, to strengthen our belief. Secondly, to show how sparing he was of an oath. Thirdly, for the greater certainty of the thing.

Ver. 21. Art thou Elias? And he saith, I am not] sc. That Elias that you imagine, Elias the Tishbite, by a transanimation (μετεμψυχωσις Pythagorica). As neither was he an angel, as some in Chrysostom's time would gather out of #Mal 3:1. They that wrest the Scriptures are blinded, as Papists, and other brain sick heretics.

Ver. 22. Who art thou? that we may give answer] They would not be soon said or satisfied. How much more should God's messengers go through stich with their errand and ambassage; binding men's sins upon their consciences if they be stubborn or stupid; and having in a "readiness to revenge all disobedience?" #2Co 10:6. When the Aequi and Volsci (a certain people in Italy) bade the Roman ambassador in scorn ad quercum dicere, se interim alia acturos, tell their tale to the oak that stood by, they had somewhat else to do than to hear him. He presently replied, Et haec sacrata quercus audiat, foedus a vobis esse violatum: Let this consecrated oak hear and bear witness that you have broke your covenant, and shall dearly answer it. (Livy.)

Ver. 23. I am the voice of one crying] Christ spake not a word to Herod, saith one; because Herod had taken away this voice of his in beheading the Baptist. {See Trapp on "Mr 1:3"} The Reverend Sam. Crook was wont to say to his friends rejoicing with him, and blessing God for him, "I am nothing but a voice."

In the wilderness] Not in the temple; to show that the legal shadows were now to vanish. Chrysologus calls John Baptist, fibulam legis et gratiae.

Ver. 24. Were of the Pharisees] Men of renown in the congregation, for more authority' sake: and such as by their office were to inquire into new doctrines and their authors.

Ver. 25. Why baptizest thou then?] Why dost thou innovate anything in the rites of religion? A change they looked for under the Messiah, and had learned it out of #Jer 31:31-34. But this testimony brought by John Baptist out of Isaiah, to prove his own calling, either they did not or would not understand; nor yet do they seek to be better informed by him.

Ver. 26. I baptize with water] The Baptist here meaneth the same that St Paul doth, #1Co 3:6,7. {See Trapp on "Mt 3:11"} Christ rains down righteousness upon all his baptized; to whom it is not only a sign, but also a seal, as circumcision is called, not only by St Paul, #Ro 4:11, but also by a Jewish doctor, more ancient than their Talmud. Of Wilfride, first Bishop of Chichester, A.D. 700, it is reported that he converted to the faith many pagans in those parts. And a day being appointed for their baptism, they had no sooner received the same, but immediately it rained plentifully, the want whereof had caused a dearth for three years before; so that many died daily for hunger, and several joining hand-in-hand (forty or fifty in a company) threw themselves headlong into the sea.

Ver. 27. I am not worthy] Yet Christ held him worthy to lay his hand upon his head in baptism. And there is one that tells us (but who told him?) that for his humility on earth, he is preferred to that place in heaven from which proud Lucifer fell.

Ver. 28. In Bethabara] That is, by interpretation, the place of passage, or traiectum, where Israel passed over Jordan. So the acts of Joshua and Jesus begin both at a place. Baptism also is first administered where it was of old foreshadowed. Christ is the true Bethabara, #Eph 2:18; we sail to heaven on his bottom.

Ver. 29. Taketh away] Or, that is taking away, ο αφρων, by a perpetual act, as the sun doth shine, as the spring doth run, #Zec 13:1. This should be as a perpetual picture in our hearts. As we multiply sins, he multiplieth pardons, #Isa 55:7.

Ver. 30. Preferred before me, for he was before me] Much ado the Baptist had to persuade this, the common did so admire him for his strict and holy life; for John did no miracle, #Joh 10:41. Holiness hath reverence. Of God himself it is said, "Holy and" therefore "reverend is his name."

Ver. 31. And I knew him not] By face not at all; lest the people should think that this was done and said by consent or compact beforehand between them. Nor did John ever know Christ so fully till now: his former knowledge was but ignorance, in comparison; none are too good to learn. The very angels know not so much of Christ, but they would know more, #Eph 3:10, and therefore look intently into the mystery of Christ, as the cherubims did into the ark, #1Pe 1:12.

But that he should be manifested] Ministers must hold up the tapestry, as it were, and show men Christ. They are the mouth of the Holy Ghost, whose office it is to take Christ's excellencies, and hold them out to the world, #Joh 16:14.

Ver. 32. {See Trapp on "Mt 3:16"} {See Trapp on "Mr 1:10"}

Ver. 33. And I knew him not] i.e. Not so perfectly till I heard that testimony from heaven. Christ is not known all at once: but as by steps and stairs men went up to Solomon's temple; and as the trumpet in the mount sounded lower at first, and then louder and louder, till at last it was heard all the camp over; so is it here. "The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day," #Pr 4:18.

Ver. 34. Aud I saw and bare record] They that would persuade others, must be strongly persuaded themselves ("We believed, therefore have we spoken," #2Co 4:13; and "knowing therefore the terror of the Lord, we persuade men," #2Co 5:11); or at least they must seem so to be, as those odious apostates, Judas, Demas, Ecebolus, Speiser, Pendleton, Harding (Bishop Jewel's adversary), who was one while a thundering preacher, wishing he could cry out against Popery as loud as the bells of Osney; and exhorting the people after this sort (as Mr Fox testifieth) a little before King Edward VI died,—that if trouble come, they should never shrink from the true doctrine of the gospel which they had received; but take it rather for a trial sent by God, to prove them, whether they would abide by it or no. All which to be true (saith mine author) they can testify that heard him, and be yet alive; who also foreseeing the plague to come, were then much confirmed by his words. (Acts and Mon.)

Ver. 35. John stood] Ready pressed to preach Christ, as Paul did at Athens in the market, to every one that met with him, #Ac 17:17.

Christ must be preached in season, out of season, volentibus, nolentibus. If the Cynics thought it their duty to admonish all they met, and if men would not listen they counted it an easy loss to cast away a few words upon them; how should Christians (and especially ministers) much more do so.

Ver. 36. Behold the Lamb of God] Eximius ille agnus et singularis, that notable Lamb, typed out by the paschal lamb, and by that lamb that was the daily morning and evening sacrifice in the temple; that Lamb without blemish of original corruption, and without spot of actual transgression, #1Pe 1:19. A lamb in his passion, but a lion in his resurrection, #Re 5:5, to whom every man is bound to send a lamb (in token of homage) as unto "the Ruler of the whole earth," #Isa 16:1.

Ver. 37. And they followed Jesus] So powerful is a word or two (many times) touching Christ and his cross to change the heart. Paul showeth that the very report of his bonds did a great deal of good in Caesar's court, #Php 1:13. Bilney's confession converted Latimer. Galeacius Caracciolus (that Italian marquis) was wrought upon by a similitude used by Peter Martyr, reading on the 1st Epist. to the Corinthians. So were Earl Martinengus and Hieronymus Zanchius (both of them Canonici Lateranenses) by some seasonable truth falling from the same mouth. Luther having heard Staupicius say that it is kind repentance which begins from the love of God, ever after that time the practice of repentance was sweeter to him. Also this speech of his took well with Luther, "The doctrine of predestination begins at the wounds of Christ." (Melch. Adam. in Vita Luther.)

Ver. 38. What seek ye] He saith still in effect as much as all this to all his suitors; and infinitely scorns that it should be said that any one seeketh him in vain, #Isa 45:19. He is found of them that sought him not, and saith, "Behold me" to every passenger, #Isa 65:1. Here he offers himself to these two disciples, and speaks first. He of his own accord (without any monitor) is wont to aid us. "His eyes are upon the righteous, as well as his ears are open to their prayers," #Ps 34:15. Should he not see as well as hear, and prevent as well as follow us with his favours, we should want many things, and it would go full ill with us.

Ver. 39. Come and see] A most gracious invitation. That self-seeking scribe, #Mt 8:19, met with far other entertainment. Let men bring to Jesus Christ but lawful petitions and honest aims, and they may have what they will of him.

Ver. 40. One of the two] See here how mean and slender the Catholic Church was at first. Two poor men only follow Christ, who yet had the promise of the "heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession," #Ps 2:8 "Despise not therefore the day of small things," #Zec 4:10. The cloud of a hand breadth may shortly muffle the whole heaven: the little stone cut out without hands may bring down the huge image, and break it to pieces, #Da 2:45: the dry root of Jesse prove a tree so tall, that, like that of Nebuchadnezzar, the height thereof shall reach unto heaven, and the sight thereof to the end of all the earth, #Da 4:11. Nec minor ab excordio nec maior incrementis ulla, said he of Rome, say we of the Church. (Eutrop. Hist. lib. 1.)

Ver. 41. He first findeth] Yet afterwards Peter outstripped Andrew in faith and forwardness for Christ; as likewise Luther did Staupicius, &c. So the first become last, and the last first. But charity is no churl; Andrew calleth Simon, and Philip, Nathanael, &c.; as a loadstone draws to itself one iron ring, and that another, and a third, so, &c.

We have found the Messiah] Little it was that he could say of Christ's person, office, value, virtue, &c., but brings him to Christ. So let us do ours to the public ordinances. Do the office of the sermon bell at least, we know not what God may there do for them. Bring them as they did, the palsy man upon his bed, and lay them before the Lord for healing.

Ver. 42. Cephas, which is by interpretation a stone] Not a head, as some Popish buzzards would needs have it (not knowing a difference between Cephas and κεφαλη), and all to prove Peter head of the Church. Some of them have said that the damnation of us Protestants is so plainly set down in our own Bibles, that there needs no more for convincing us thereof, but that we have our eyes in our heads (when we open the book) and be able to read it. But he that first interpreted Cephas, a head (against this clear text calling it a stone) either had not his eyes in his head, or else must needs be as perfect a stranger to the Bible as that Bishop of Dunkelden, in Scotland, that thanked God he knew neither the Old Testament nor the New. Or as that other Dutch bishop, Albertus Vindelicorum

Episcopus, of whom Luther writeth, that lighting upon a Bible, and being asked (after that he had read awhile in it) what book it was; "I know not," said he, "what book it is; but this I know, that there is nothing in it that I can find to make for our religion."

Ver. 43. Follow me] Together with Christ's word there went out a power. His words are operative and efficacious. This Porphyry the atheist, and Julian the Apostate, understood not; and therefore lighting upon this and the like places of the Gospel, they blasphemously affirmed that either the evangelists were liars or the apostles fools, that with one word only of our Saviour would be drawn to follow him. So the Papists blaspheme assurance, which they have not, as if it bred security and looseness. They may as well say the sea burns or fire cools.

Ver. 44. Now Philip was of Bethsaida] So was Andrew and Peter, who would not be wanting to preach to this town, and pray for it. But all in vain; whence that, "Woe unto thee, Bethsaida," #Mt 11:21. Christ would not suffer so much as the blind man he had cured to go thither, #Mr 9:27.

Thou art the Son of God] For else thou couldst never have known me so thoroughly at so great a distance. The Samaritess, #Joh 4:29,30,39-42, believed on the same ground ("Come see a man that told me all that ever I did"), but not so soon; Diserimen est a Deo, non natura. God and not nature made the difference. That message that God had accepted a ransom, had a present effect upon that distressed man, #Job 33:24, in reviving his spirit. Not so upon David, though it were delivered to him by the mouth of Nathan, #2Sa 12:13 cf. Ps 51:8. God is a free agent, and gives grace and peace at his own pleasure.

Ver. 45. Philip findeth Nathanael] Whom some make to be the same with Bartholomew. I affirm nothing.

We have found] The Greek word imports the sudden and unexpected finding of such a community as he looked not for. See #Isa 65:1. εὐρηκαμεν. εὐρημα, lucrum insperatum, et repente oblatum.

Ver. 46. Can there any good, &c.] When men take a toy in their heads against a place or person, they are ready to reason in this manner. Good Nathanael was in the common error, as was likewise

Philip, in the former verse, with his Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph. Four words only, and scarcely ever a true one. Epidemic diseases are soon caught.

Ver. 47. Behold an Israelite, &c.] Here Christ wondereth at his own work of renovation, as wonderful, doubtless, as that of creation. Or the upright person hath here an ecce behold, for imitation, as the hypocrite for detestation, #Ps 52:7.

Ver. 48. Before that Philip, &c.] Christ thinks of us when we little think of him. See #Ro 5:10.

Ver. 50. Thou shalt see greater things] Strange sights, marvellous light, matchless mysteries, multifarious wisdom, even the wisdom of God in a mystery: heaven opened, and angels of God ascending and descending, #Joh 1:51, and curiously prying {#1Pe 1:12} into that great mystery of godliness, God manifested in the flesh, &c.

Ver. 52. Upon the Son of man] The Jacob's ladder, the bridge that joineth heaven and earth together, γεφυρωσας, as Gregory hath it.

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. There was a marriage] Whether St John's marriage, I have not to say. Some will have it so.

Ver. 2. Jesus was called] That was the way to have all sanctified, #1Ti 4:3, and disorders prevented. Cave, spectat Cato, Beware, Cato is wating, was the old watchword.

Ver. 3. And when they wanted wine] Wine then may be wanting, though Christ be at the wedding; yea, bread, though Christ be at the board. But the hidden manna is ever ready; and anon in our Father's house will be bread enough, and wine, God's plenty. {a} What though we beg our bread here, heaven will make up all; and it is but winking, and we are there presently, said that martyr.

The mother of Jesus saith unto him] To show her authority belike over him. Howsoever, she was too hasty with him, and is taken up for halting. It is not for us to set the sun by our dial.

Luther.

Ver. 4. What have I to do with thee? &c.] Is it fit to prescribe to the only wise God? to send for the king by a post? The Chinese whip their gods if they come not at a call.

Ver. 5. His mother saith to the servants] Not a word to her Son, though he had publicly reproved her. "Once I have spoken, but I will not answer," saith Job, #Job 40:5. Jonah, reprehended by God, shuts up his prophecy in silence, in token of his true repentance. David was dumb because it was God's doing, #Ps 39:9. Bring God into the heart, and all will be hushed.

Ver. 6. After the manner of the purifying, &c.] But who required these things at their hands? Men are apt to over do in externals. The devil strove to bring this superstition into the Christian Church by the heretic Ebion, and hath done it by the pseudo-Catholics, with their lustral water and sprinkling of sepulchres, for the rise whereof Baronius refers us, not to the Jews, but to Juvenal's sixth satire.

Containing two or three firkius] For ostentation's sake. Superstition is pompous and ambitious.

Ver. 7. Up to the brim] God permits his people an honest affluence. Christ supplies them here with great store of wine, to the quantity of a thousand and eight hundred pounds, as Beza computes, {a} No small gifts fall from so great a hand, #Jas 1:5.

Ver. 8. The governor of the feast] The Jews had a sort of officers at their feasts, called praecepti morum, οἰνοπται, οφθαλμοι, the eyes and overseers of the feast, that took care that none should drink too much. The Latins called them dictators; the Greeks, symposiarchs. Howbeit, among the Greeks, those officers' power extended no further than to see that at feasts or banquets men drank small draughts only at first, which by degrees they increased till they came to their height of intemperance; at which point, when they were arrived, they kept no rule nor order: whereas, before, to drink out of one's turn, or beyond his allowance, was counted incivility. {a}

{a} Hinc pergraecari: and as merry as a Greek.

Ver. 9. The water that was made wine] Doth not Christ daily turn water into wine, when of water falling upon the vine, and concocted by the heat of the sun, he produceth the grape, whence wine is expressed? His love (that is better than wine, #So 1:2) turned brown bread and water into manchet and wine, to the martyrs in prison.

Ver. 10. Every man at the beginning] Ingenium hominum adumbrat, natura fallax et sophisticum. Sic Satan nos ad se allicere solet, Pantheris in morem: Christus contra. His work is worst at first; the best is behind; the sweetest of honey lies in the bottom.

Ver. 11. This beginning, &c.] For as for his miraculous disputation with the doctors, and fasting forty days, these were rather miracles wrought upon Christ than by him. He works his first miracle for confirmation of God the Father's first ordinance.

His disciples believed on him] So they did before, but now more. So #1Jo 5:13. The apostle writes to "them that believed on the name of the Son of God, that they might believe on the name of the Son of God," i.e. that they might be confirmed, continued, and increased in it. Faith is not like Jonah's gourd that grew up in a night; or like a bullet in a mould, that is made in a moment. But as the sound of the trumpet grew louder and louder; and as they went up to Solomon's throne by steps and stairs; so men proceed from faith to faith, till they come to full assurance.

Ver. 12. To Capernaum] Where he had hired him a house; for the foxes had holes, &c., but the Son of man had not a house of his own to put his head in, #Mt 8:20.

Ver. 13. And Jesus went up to Jerusalem] In obedience to the law, and to preach the gospel in the great congregation.

Ver. 14. And found in the temple] The Talmudists tell us that it was grown to a custom to set up tables in the temple, and money changers at them, that those who ought to offer half a shekel might have those at hand who might change their bigger money, or take to pledge what else they brought. Here also they might buy oxen, sheep, doves, for sacrifice, which the covetous priests often received, and then sold them again to others.

Sitting] The Jews of this day being great usurers, and through much sitting and not stirring about, are thought to stink, so as they are said to do: sedentary lives are subject to diseases. Plerique omnes mensarii sunt, faeneratoriam exercentes, ideo foetent. (Beza, Armor.)

Ver. 15. And when he had made a scourge] Here he put forth a beam of his Deity; while, as another Samson, he lays heaps upon heaps (yet without bloodshed) with the jaw bone of an ass. Zeal is attended by revenge, #2Co 7:11.

The changers' money] Gr. small money, Κερμα παρα το κειρειν, in minuta frusta concidere.

Ver. 16. And said to the dove sellers] These (belike, as more tractable, and not so gross offenders) he deals more gently with, but bids them be packing. I expect not (saith Rev. Rolloc) a plenary and perfect reformation of the Church, after so horrible an apostasy under antichrist, till Christ come again to judgment. {a} And yet that Church of Scotland is said to have this rare privilege above many others; that since the Reformation there wrought, they have, without heresy, or so much as a schism, retained unity, with purity of doctrine. {b}

An house of merchandise] So he calls it, for all their goodly pretexts of good intentions. So the churchwarden of Ipswich was much trounced and troubled in the High Commission, for writing over the place where the spiritual court was kept, "My house shall be called a house of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves," Nov. 6, 1635.

{b} Est Ecclesiae Scoticanae privilegium rarum, prae multis, quod sine schismate, nedum haeresi, unitatem cum puritate doctrinae retinuerit. Sic in Elog. praefator, de Confess. in princip. Syntag. Confess. p. 6, edit. Geneva.

Ver. 17. The zeal of thine house] Apostates, on the other side, eat up their zeal of God's house. But as in falling forward is nothing so much danger as backward; so the zealot, though not so discreet, is better than the apostate: howbeit, zeal should eat us up (saith Mr Vines), but not eat up our wisdom, nor should pride eat up our zeal. Mr Greenham had this saying of David often in his mouth, and well he might. He also usually prayed that he might keep up his young zeal with his old discretion.

Ver. 18. What sign] They might have seen sign enough, in his so powerful ejecting of those money merchants. But Church reformations are commonly thus diversely entertained. The disciples call it zeal, the Jews rashness.

Ver. 19. Destroy this temple] This was the same in effect with that sign of the prophet Jonah, #Mt 12:39,40. His resurrection was a plain demonstration of his Deity, Superas evadere ad auras, hic labor; hoc opus est, befitting a God, #Ro 1:4.

Ver. 20. Forty and six years] All, save what lacks; for it was six years' work only, but they reckon the interim of interruption, #Ezr 3:1-7:28, to aggravate the matter. So they are not only blinded, but hardened.

Ver. 21. The temple of his body] Wherein the "Godhead dwelt bodily," #Col 2:9, that is, personally, as he dwelt in the material temple sacramentally, and doth dwell in the hearts of his people spiritually. This tabernacle of Christ's body was not made with hands, nor built by the power of nature, #Heb 9:2.

Ver. 22. His disciples remembered] In the mean time they murmured not, much less opposed. "We can do nothing against the truth," when at worst, "but for the truth," #2Co 13:8. They laid up what they understood not; and as the water casts up her dead, so did their memories that which seemed dead therein, by the help of the Holy Ghost.

Ver. 23. Many believed] Fides fair minime fida, quippe historica, ex miraculis nata. These thought they had laid hold on Christ, but they did but as children that think they catch the shadow on the wall. There is a great deal of this false faith abroad. The sorcerers seemed to do as much as Moses.

Ver. 24. Did not commit himself unto them] Who yet would needs obtrude upon him. None are so impudent as hypocrites; they deceive themselves, they would do others; God, too. I read not (saith one) in Scripture of a hypocrite's conversion; and what wonder? for whereas, after sin, conversion is left as a means to cure all other sinners; what means to recover him, who hath converted conversion itself into sin?

Ver. 25. For he knew what was in man] Artificers know the nature and properties of their works, and shall not Christ of the heart? He searcheth men's hearts, and trieth the reins, which of all their inwards are the most inward; <sup>{a}</sup> besides that they are the seats and springs of all our thoughts and lusts. Deus intimior nobis intimo nostro, saith one, God is nearer to us than we are to ourselves, and knows our thoughts long before, as a gardener knows what flowers he shall have at spring, because he knows the roots.

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. A ruler of the Jews] Either a chieftain of the Pharisees, as he was, #Lu 14:1; or one of the Sanhedrim, one of the 70 seniors, whose learning hung in their light, #1Co 2:8. Yet was neither learned Nathanael, nor Nicodemus, a master of Israel, excluded from Christ's discipline (saith Joan. de Turrecremata), lest if he had admitted simple men only, it might have been thought they were deceived through their simplicity. {a}

{a} Ne si solos simplices vocasset, credi possit quod fuissent ex simplicitate decepti.

Ver. 2. We know] But will not know. Hence they became sinners against the Holy Ghost, #Mt 12:23, &c. The devil that commits this sin every day, is full of objective knowledge, and thence hath his name. {a}

No man can do these miracles] Those magicians of Egypt, Jannes and Jambres, did but cast a mist, and beguile the sight of Pharaoh and his followers. How Tyndale hindered the magician of Antwerp, that he could not do his feats, see Acts and Monuments, fol. 985.

Ver. 3. Except a man be born again] E supernis, Out of heaven, Erasm. Except a man be first unmade (as St Peter expounds our Saviour) and newly made up again, ταις αμαρτιας απογενομενοι, #1Pe 2:24; except the whole frame of the old conversation be dissolved, and a better erected, there is no heaven to be had. Heaven is too hot to hold unregenerate persons; no such dirty dog ever trampled on that golden pavement, it is an undefiled inheritance, #2Pe 1:3.

Ver. 4. How can a man, &c.] He understands no more of the doctrine of regeneration (though he could not but have often read of it in Ezekiel, and elsewhere) than a common cow herd doth the darkest precepts of astronomy, #1Co 2:14. All this is gibberish to him. Water ariseth no higher than the spring whence it came; so the natural man can ascend no higher than nature.

Ver. 5. Be born of water, and the Holy Ghost] That is, of the Holy Ghost working like water, cooling, cleansing, &c. In allusion, belike, to that first washing of a newly born babe from his blood, #Eze 16:4. Or else to those Levitical washings, and not without some reference to Nicodemus and his fellow Pharisees, who placed a great part of their piety in external washings, as do also the Mahometans at this day. Every time they ease nature (saith one that had been among them) they wash those parts, little regarding who stands by. If a dog chance to touch their hands, they wash presently; before prayer they wash both face and hands, sometimes the head and privates, &c.

Ver. 6. That which is born of the flesh, &c.] Whole man is in evil, and whole evil in man. Quintilian saw not this, and therefore said, that it is more marvel that one man sinneth than that all men should live honestly; sin is so much against man's nature. Many also of the most dangerous opinions of Popery (as justification by works, state of perfection, merit, supererogation, &c.) spring from hence; that they have slight conceits of concupiscence, as a condition of nature. Yet some of them (as Michael Bains, professor at Lovain, &c.) are sound in this point.

Ver. 7. Marrel not, &c.] viz. Through unbelief, for otherwise it is a just wonder, far beyond that of a natural birth, which, but that it is so ordinary, would surely seem a miracle; Miracula assiduitate vilescunt.

Ver. 8. The wind bloweth, &c.] Libero et vago impetu. Watch, therefore, the gales of grace; we cannot purchase this wind (as sailors in Norway are said to do) for any money. This hawk, when flown, will not easily be brought to hand again.

Ver. 9. How can these things be?] Christ had told him that the manner of the Spirit's working is incomprehensible, and yet he is at it, How can these things be? Sed scribo haec frustra (saith Luther in a certain letter of his to Melancthon) quia tu secundum philosophiam vestram, has res ratione regere, hoc est, ut ille ait, cum ratione insanire pergis.

Ver. 10. Art thou a master, &c.] The Pharisees and philosophers, for their learning, are called "princes of this world," #1Co 2:8. And yet, had they known, they would never have crucified the Lord of glory. Indocti rapiunt coelum, &c. The poor are gospelized, {εὐαγγελίζονται, #Mt 11:5} not only receive it, but are changed by it. But

Bellarmino cannot find in all the Bible where remission of sin is promised to such as confess their sins to God; Promissio de remittendis peccatis eis qui confitentur Deo non videtur ulla extare in divinis literis. (Bell. de Justif. i. 21.)

And knowest not these things] Carolostadius was eight years doctor when he began to read the Scriptures, whereof he had very little understanding; and yet at the taking of his degree he had been pronounced sufficientissimus.

Ver. 11. Ye receive not our witness] Our Saviour joins himself with the prophets (whose writings Nicodemus had read so negligently), and takes it for a dishonour that he should have written for men the great things of his law, and they continue strangers thereto, #Ho 8:12.

Ver. 12. If I have told you earthly things] That is, spiritual things under earthly gross similitudes, of wind, water, &c. In the mystery of Christ, the best of us are acute obtusi. But for the natural man, that cannot tell the nature of the wind, or enter into the depth of the flower or the grass, &c., how should he possibly have the wit to enter into the deep things of God, especially if darkly delivered?

Ver. 13. And no man hath ascended, &c.] Objection. Therefore all but Christ are shut out of heaven. Solution. The Church and Jesus make but one Christ, caput et corpus unus Christus, #1Co 12:12. He counts not himself full without his members, who are called the "fulness of him that filleth all," #Eph 1:23.

Ver. 14. And as Moses lifted up the serpent] There it was, Vide et vive; See and live, here, Crede et vive. Believe and live, And as there, he that beheld the serpent, though but with a weak squint eye, yea, but with half an eye, was cured. So here, if we look upon Christ with the eye, though but of a weak faith, we shall be saved. Doctor Cruciger, when he lay a dying, cried out, Credo languida fide, sed tamen fide, I believe with a weak faith, but with a faith, such as it is. (Selnecker. in paedag. Christ. p. 321.)

Ver. 15. That whosoever believeth] Faith is the soul's hand (fidei mendica manus, saith Luther); foot, whereby we come to Christ; mouth (hic credere est edere, saith Austin); wing, whereby we soar up and fetch Christ into the heart, #Joh 6:35,36.

Ver. 16. God so loved the world] This is a sic so without a sicut, just as, there being nothing in nature wherewith to parallel it. The world, that is, all mankind fallen in Adam. This the apostle fitly calleth God's philanthropy, #Tit 3:4, it being a sweet favour to the whole kind of us that any are saved by Christ.

Ver. 17. Not to condemn the world] Unless it be by accident, because they will not be saved; they will not have heaven upon Christ's terms, they will not part with their fat and sweet (with the vine in Jotham's parable, #Jud 9:13), no, not for a kingdom; they will not be constrained to live happily, reign eternally. {a}

Ver. 18. Is condemned already] The sentence is passed, the halter about his neck; there wants no more than to turn him off the ladder of life, and he is gone for ever. In the meanwhile he hangs but by one rotten twined thread over hell fire.

Because he hath not believed] He saith not, because he hath committed adultery, murder. There is no righteousness now but of faith; no sin (saith one) but from unbelief; for thy sins against the law are not imputed unto thee, if thou do but believe the gospel. It is unbelief that shuts a man up close prisoner in the law's dark dungeon, whence faith only can fetch us out, συγκεκλεισμενοι, #Ga 3:23.

Ver. 19. This is the condemnation] This is hell above ground and aforehand. Affected ignorance is the leprosy in the head, which makes a man undoubtedly unclean and utterly to be excluded, #Le 13:44.

Ver. 20. For every one that doeth evil] As the Ethiopians are said to curse the sun for its bright and hot shining. (Herodot.) Christ came a light into the world; his gospel hath appeared as a beacon on a hill, or as the sun in heaven, {επεφανη, #Tit 2:12}; his saints shine as lamps, &c. Now when men hate these, as thieves do a torch in the night, and fly against the lights as bats do, this is condemnation.

Ver. 21. But he that doeth truth] Tenebriones Papistae male sibi conscii, aeternum atri, et tetri sunt, et habent; qui non tam cute, quam corde Aethiopici, solem quo magis luceat, eo magis execrentur. But our hearts (as our climate) have mere light than heat. Sir Philip Sydney used to say of Chaucer, that he wondered how in those misty times he could see so clearly; and how we in these clearer times go on so stumblingly. "If any be ignorant, let him be ignorant," saith Paul, #1Co 14:38. And so much any one knows, as he does of God's will, as the apostle intimates, when he tells us that "Christ knew no sin," that is, he did none, #2Co 5:21.

Wrought in God] Right. 1. Quoad fontem, a pure heart. 2. Quoad finem, the glory of God. Else they are but splendida peccata, sins in a silken suit. (Aug.)

Ver. 22. And baptized] Wherever we are we must be doing. If Moses may not do justice in Egypt, he will do it in Midian, #Ex 2:14-17. I had rather be sick, said Seneca, than out of employment, Malim mihi male esse quam molliter.

Ver. 23. And John also was baptizing] Here ministers may learn not to be wanting to their duties, though God stir up others about them of greater parts and better success to obscure them. Verbi minister es, hoc age, was Mr Perkins' motto. Summum culmen affectantes, satis honeste vel in secundo fastigio conspiciemur; saith Columella. And, prima sequentem, honestum est in secundis, tertiusve consistere, saith Cicero. Every man cannot excel, nor is it expected.

Ver. 24. Cast into prison] The primitive bishops were found more frequently in prisons than palaces. Bocardo became a college of Quondams, {a} as the Marian martyrs merrily called it. If Petronius could tell Caesar that he had rather be with Cato in the prison house than with him in the senate house; why should it grieve any to suffer bonds with and for Christ? Chrysostom had rather be Paul a prisoner of Jesus Christ than Paul rapped up into the third heaven. (Homil. in #Eph 3:1) Μετα Κατωνος εν οικηματι, μαλλον η μετα σου ενταυθα ειναι βουλομαι. (Dio Cass.)

{a} The former holder of some office or position; one who has been deposed or ejected; ED

Ver. 25. And the Jews] Who joined themselves to John's disciples, craftily and maliciously, that they might both set against Christ; like as the Jesuits at this day will cunningly comply with the Lutherans, and seem to side with them, that they may both set against the Calvinists.

About purifying] That is, baptism, called elsewhere the laver of regeneration, #Tit 3:5, and by a Father, 'Αλεξιτηριον καθαρτικον, a purging preservative. "Not the putting away of the filth of the flesh," saith Peter, but a better thing, #1Pe 3:21.

Ver. 26. Rabbi, he that was with thee] They envied for John's sake, as Joshua did for Moses, and with as little thank. John would have been glad they had gone after Christ, as Andrew did. Howsoever, it was good news to John that Jesus was so frequented and busied.

Ver. 27. A man can receive nothing] There is much in this word "man," as Beza thinks, to set forth the most miserable indigence of all mankind by nature. {a} The Greeks, when they set forth one miserable indeed, they call him τρισανθρωπον, thrice a man.

{a} Videtur hominis appellatio magnum habere momentum.

Ver. 28. Ye yourselves bear me witness] I should rather choose the just commendation of one good man (saith Rolloc upon this text) than the foolish admiration of a whole multitude, Equidem pluris fecerim iustam commendationem, &c. Demetrius hath good report of the truth itself, that is enough for him, #3Jo 12.

Ver. 29. The friend of the bridegroom] Such is every faithful minister, #2Co 11:2, whose office is to woo for Christ, and not (as some) to speak one word for him and two for himself. This is foul play.

Ver. 30. He must increase, but, &c.] And this was John's great joy. That man hath true light that can be content to be outshined by others; and nothing will more try a man's grace than questions of emulation. Ezekiel can commend Daniel his contemporary, matching him with Noah and Job for his power in prayer, #Eze 14:14. And Peter highly praiseth Paul's epistles, though he had been publicly reprov'd by him at Antioch, #2Pe 3:15 Ga 2:11. Yes., Plato called Aristotle αναγνωστην and νοον, the intelligent reader. And Aristotle is said to have set up an altar in honour of Plato, with this inscription,—

“ Nulla ferent talem secla futura virum.”

But Luther showed himself so much discontented at the reformation wrought at Wittenberg in his absence, by Carolostadius, because it was done without him, that he doubted not to approve those things, that till then he had disapproved, and to disapprove what before he had approved of. So hard it is for a man willingly and gladly to see his equals lifted over his head in worth and opinion. Self-love makes men unreasonable, and ever teacheth them to turn the glass to see themselves bigger, others lesser, than they are.

Ver. 31. He that cometh, &c.] Hitherto Christ hath been compared with John. In the rest of the chapter he stands compared, first, with all men; secondly, with the faithful, and infinitely preferred before them all. "He is the chief of ten thousand," #So 5:10; or the standard-bearer, which ever are the goodliest.

Is earthy] Terra est, so Augustine renders it, in the same sense as "he is flesh," #Joh 3:6. God will smite this "earth with the rod of his mouth," #Isa 11:4.

Speaketh of the earth] As ducklings have always their bills in the mud, as swine are ever rooting in the mire; like that fish in the Gospel, either dumb, or nothing but gold in their mouths.

Ver. 32. No man receiveth] i.e. None to speak of; comparatively none. Rari quippe boni, Few obviously are good, saith Juvenal. Rari sunt qui philosophantur, There are few who are philosophers, saith Ulpian the lawyer. Perraro grati reperiuntur, Very rare are pleasing men discovered, said Cicero the orator. All men have not faith, saith the apostle, #2Th 3:2; no, not of those that profess the faith. Though a gun be discharged at a whole flight of birds, there are but a few killed. Though the net be spread over the whole pond, but a few fishes are taken; many thrust their heads into the mud and the net passeth over them; so most hearers do busy their heads with their own sensual or worldly thoughts, and so escape the power of the word.

Ver. 33. Hath set to his seal, &c.] Hath given God a testimonial, such as is that, #De 32:4. After which, God also sets his seal ( quasi in red-hostimentum) to the believer, #Eph 1:13.

Ver. 34. Speaketh the words of God] This the true believer is convinced of; and therefore sets to his seal, as to an undoubted truth. He is fully persuaded, as St Luke was, #Lu 1:1.

Ver. 35. The Father loveth the Son] Therefore faith may have firm footing. God hath laid help upon one that is mighty, #Ps 89:19, that our faith and hope may be in God, #1Pe 1:21.

Ver. 36. Hath eternal life] 1. In promisso. In promise. 2. In pretio. In reward, 3. In primitiis. In beginnings. He stands already on the battlements of heaven, he hath one foot in the porch of paradise.

He that believeth not] There is a two-fold unbelief, one in the understanding, and is opposed to faith, απιστια; the other in the will and lives, and is opposed to obedience, απειθεια, #Heb 8:10. For cure of both, God hath promised to write his laws both in the minds of his people and in their hearts too.

The wrath of God abides upon him] μενει, as in its mansion-place, as upon its basis, tanquam trabali clave fixa, saith one; there it nestles, settles, and never will away. The unbeliever can neither avoid it nor abide it.

Chapter 4

Ver. 1. Baptized more disciples] Baptizing was used by the Jews before John or Christ took it up, from which custom, though brought in without commandment, our Saviour authorizeth a seal of entering into his rest; using the Jews' weakness as an allurements thither.

Ver. 2. Jesus himself baptized not] A sweet comfort, that Christ is said not to baptize those whom the disciples baptized. The sacraments administered by ministers are no less effectual than if we had received the same from Christ's own hands.

Ver. 3. He left Judea] God must be trusted, not tempted.

Ver. 4. He must needs go] Happy for them that they lay in our Saviour's way, to be looked upon; his feet drop fatness. Luther had rather be with Christ in hell than in heaven without him, Malim praesente Christo esse in inferno, quam absente eo in coelo. Luther in Gen. 30.

Ver. 5. Jacob gave to his son Joseph] Having first won it with "his sword and his bow," #Ge 48:22; that is, with his prayer and supplication (saith the Chaldee paraphrast); which, as Saul's sword and Jonathan's bow, never return empty, #2Sa 1:22.

Ver. 6. Jesus therefore, being wearied] And in that he himself had suffered, he was the more able and apt to help this poor Samaritess. So the apostle bids us pity those in adversity, as being ourselves in the body, i.e. in the body of flesh and frailty, subject to like misery. {a} He that hath had the toothache, will pity those that have it. Non ignara mali, &c. Do not ignore evil. We are orphans all (said Queen Elizabeth, in her speech to the children of Christ's Hospital), let me enjoy your prayers, and ye shall be sure of mine assistance.

Ver. 7. A woman of Samaria] A poor cupbearer, such as Festus calls Canalicolas, quod circa canalem fori consistenter, lazy people because they were much about the conduits of the forum. (Becman. de Originib.)

Ver. 8. To buy meat] For our Saviour lived not upon alms; but although he became poor to make us rich, #2Co 8:9, yet had he a bag, and that so big as that it required a bearer, #Joh 12:6, his friends and followers supplying him with money for his necessary uses and for relief of the poor.

Ver. 9. Askest drink of me?] The Samaritans knew that they were slighted by the Jews, and took it ill, Gens haec (saith Giraldus Cambrensis, of the Irish) sicut et natio quaevis barbara, quanquam honorem neseiant, honorari tamen supra medam affectant. No man would be slighted, how mean soever.

For the Jews have no dealings, &c.] Josephus writeth, that at Samaria was a sanctuary opened by Sanballat for all renegade Jews, &c. The Jews therefore hated the presence, the fire, the fashion, the books of a Samaritan. Neither was there any hatred lost on the Samaritan's part; for if he had but touched a Jew, he would have thrown himself into the next water, clothes and all; both of them equally sick of a noli me tangere. Do not touch me. (Epiphanius.)

Ver. 10. The gift of God] That is, Christ himself, called by St Paul the benefit, εφεργεσια, #1Ti 6:2. Let him not be to us as Jether's sword to him, which he drew not, used not; but as Goliath's sword to David, none to that. None but Christ, none but Christ, said that martyr.

Ver. 11. Sir, thou hast no bucket] See how witty we are naturally, with our armed dilemmas, to reject grace offered, and with both hands as it were, to thrust away from us eternal life, απωθεισθε, #Ac 13:46.

Ver. 12. Our father Jacob] Josephus tells us that these Samaritans, while the Jews prospered, would needs be their dear cousins; but when they were in adversity (as under Antiochus) they would utterly disown and disavow them. They wrote to Antiochus, because he tormented the Jews, to excuse themselves as none such; and they styled Antiochus, the mighty God. Oh, baseness!

Ver. 13. Shall thirst again] So shall all they, quibus avaritiae aut ambitionis salsugo bibulam animare possidet. He that seeks to satisfy his lusts goes about an endless business. Give, give, is the horse's leech language. The worldling hath enough to sink him, not to satisfy him.

Ver. 14. Shall never thirst] His lips water not after homely provision, that hath lately tasted of delicate sustenance.

*“ Clitorio quicumque sitim de fonte levarit,
Vina fugit, gaudetque meris abstemius undis.”*
(Ovid, Metam. xv.)

Ver. 15. Sir, give me this water] We would all have immortality, but here on earth. Some think she jeers our Saviour here; who therefore in the next words arouseth her conscience.

Ver. 16. Go, call thy husband] It was a great favour in Christ to receive that sinful woman that washed his feet with her tears and wiped them with her hair, and not to kick her out of his presence, as the Pharisees expected. How much greater is this, to fetch in an idolatrous harlotry that fled from him, to entertain her that had rejected him? &c. Well might St Paul say, that the "grace of our Lord is exceeding abundant," or doth abound to flowing over, as the sea easily overfloweth mole hills, υπερεπλεονασε, #1Ti 1:14.

Ver. 17. I have no husband] Lucretius ait, quasdam mulieres effugere unius viri torum, ut omnium fiant torus. (Sphinx Philos.)

“ Iesuitae etiam sunt

Connubisanctifugae, clammeretricitegae.”

Ver. 18. He whom thou now hast, &c.] Here he comes home to her conscience; so must all that will do good on it, striving not so much to please as to profit. Bees are killed with honey but quickened with vinegar. The eagle, though she love her young ones dearly, yet she pricketh and beateth them out of the nest: so must preachers drive men out of the nest of pleasure. John Speiser, preacher at Augsburg in Germany, did his work so well at first, that the common strumpets left the brothel houses (then tolerated) and betook themselves to a better course, A.D. 1523. Yet afterwards he revolted to the Papists and miserably perished. (Sculler. Annal. 118.)

Ver. 19. Sir, I perceive that thou art a prophet] To the "hidden man of the heart," #1Pe 3:4, the plain song ever makes the best music. The Corinthian idiot, convinced of all, and having the secrets of his heart ripped up by the two-edged sword, "falls down upon his face worshipping God," and reporteth that "God is in the ministers of a truth," #1Co 14:24,25.

Ver. 20. Our fathers, &c.] No sooner doth she acknowledge him a prophet, but she seeks to be satisfied in a case of conscience. Proh stuporem nostrum! Woe to our dulness!

Ver. 21. Ye shall neither in this mountain, &c.] Herod's temple at Jerusalem was so set on fire by Titus's soldiers, that it could not be quenched by the industry of man. And at the same time Apollo's temple at Delphi was utterly overthrown by earthquakes and thunderbolts, and neither of them could ever since be repaired. The concurrence of which two miracles (saith mine author) evidently showeth that the time was then come when God would put an end both to Jewish ceremonies and heathenish idolatry, that the kingdom of his Son might be the better established. (Godw. Antiq. Heb.)

Ver. 22. We know what we worship] Christ also, as man, worshippeth, being less than himself as God. Christ is worshipped by angels as God, being greater than himself as man.

Ye worship ye know not what] And yet these Samaritans thought themselves the only right worshippers. As Turks hold themselves the only Moslems, that is, true believers; as Hermotimus, the Stoic in Lucian, thought his sect the best of all other, as being ignorant of any other himself.

Ver. 23. The Father seeketh such] Oh, how should this fire up our hearts to spiritual worship! that God seeks for such, with, "Let me see thy face, hear thy voice," #So 2:14. He soliciteth suitors.

Ver. 24. God is a Spirit] Omnes nominis Iehovae literae sunt spirituales ut denotetur Deum esse spiritum. (Alsted.) Though, to speak properly, God is not a spirit. For, first, spirit signifies breath, which indeed is a body, but because it is the finest body, the most subtle and most invisible, therefore immaterial substances, which we are not able to conceive, are represented unto us under this name. Secondly, God is above all notion, all name. Afri dicunt Deum ignotum Anon, i.e. Heus tu, quis es? One being asked what God is, answered, Si scirem, Deus essem, { a } That which Augustine saith concerning time (the measure of all our motions) may much more be said concerning God, in whose hands are all our times and motions; Si nemo ex me quaerat, scio: si quaerenti explicare velim, nescio. When I am not asked, methinks I know somewhat of him; but let me go about to say what he is, and I find I know nothing at all. Confess. xi. 14.

In spirit and truth] As opposed to formality and hypocrisy.

{ a } Plut. lib. de Isid. et Osiride.

Ver. 25. I know that Messias, &c.] As who should say, we are not altogether so ignorant as you would make us, #Joh 4:23. A dead woman must have four men to carry her out, as the proverb is: we are apt to think our penny good silver.

Ver. 26. I that speak unto thee, &c.] No sooner do we think of Christ with any the least true desire after him, but he is presently with us. He invited himself to Zaccheus's table, &c. Tantum velis, et Deus tibi praeoccurret, said a Father.

Ver. 27. That he talked with the woman] Solum cum sola. (Beza.) He might do that we must beware of, lest concupiscence kindle. Abraham may see Sodom burning, Lot may not.

Yet no man said] All ill thoughts and sinister surmises, of superiors especially, are to be presently suppressed and strangled in the birth.

Ver. 28. Left her waterpot] She had now greater things in hand, better things to look after. As Alexander, hearing of the riches of the Indies, divided his kingdom among his captains.

Ver. 29. Come, see a man, &c.] Weak means may, by God's blessing, work great matters. He can make the words of Naaman's servant greater in operation than the words of great Elisha, and by a poor captive girl bring him to the prophet.

Ver. 30. Then they went out] More to see the news than else; as Moses' curiosity led him nearer the bush, wherehence he was called. It is good to come to the ordinances, though but for novelty; absence is without hope. What a deal lost Thomas by being out of the way but once.

Ver. 31. Master, eat] Animantis cuiusque vita in fuga est, and must be repaired by nutrition, in a natural course. Only we must eat to live, and not live to eat only, as belly gods.

Ver. 32. I have meat to eat, &c.] Abraham's servant would not eat till he had despatched, his errand, #Ge 24:33. When we are to woo for Christ, we should forget our own interests and occasions. Quaerite primum, &c. Seek first the kingdom of God.

Ver. 33. Hath any man brought, &c.] "Are not these yet carnal, and talk as men?" #1Co 3:3. How dull and thick brained are the best till God rend the veil, and enlighten both organ and object!

Ver. 34. My meat is to do the will] Job, #Job 23:12, preferred it before his necessary food, that should keep him alive. So did Christ, when disappointed of a breakfast at the barren fig tree, and coming hungry into the city, he went not into an eating house, but into the temple, where he taught the people most part of that day, #Mt 21:17,23.

Ver. 35. Say not ye, There are yet four months] As who should say, ye so long for the time, that ye count how many months, weeks, days it is to harvest; should ye not be much more solicitous of such a heavenly harvest? These Samaritans do but hang for mowing, &c.

Ver. 36. That he that soweth, &c.] That is, that both the prophets that sowed and the apostles that reaped, &c., for the people were prepared by the writings of the prophets to be wrought upon by the apostles. The Samaritans also had the Bible, agreeing, for the most part, with that we have from the Jews. The copy of this Samaritan Bible was first brought from Damascus into Christendom by one Petrus de Valle, A. D. 1626.

Ver. 37. That saying true, &c.] Camerdrius recites the Senary at large.

Ἄλλοι μὲν σπειροῦς, ἄλλοι δ' ἀναμῆσονται.

Ver. 38. Other men have laboured] Laboured even to lassitude, as the word κεκοπιακασι signifies (κοπιαω, κοπτω). The ministry is not then an easy trade, an idle man's occupation. Luther was wont to say, Sudor aeconomicus est magnus, Politicus maior, Ecclesiasticus maximus, The householder hath somewhat to do, the magistrate more, but the minister most of all.

Ver. 39. For the saying of the woman] An unlikely means to effect so great a matter. But what is that to the Almighty? So Junius professeth, that the very first thing that turned him from atheism was conference with a countryman of his, not far from Florence. The next was, the majesty of the Scriptures, which he observed in #Joh 1:1-15. So for our forefathers in times of Popery, Mr Fox observeth, that by the reading of Chaucer's books some were brought to the knowledge of the truth. And in that rarity of books and want of teachers, this one thing I greatly marvel at (saith he), to note in the registers, and consider how the word of God did multiply so exceedingly as it did among them. For I find that one neighbour resorting to and conferring with another, again, with a few words of their first or second talk, did win and turn their minds to that wherein they desire to persuade them touching the truth of God's word and sacraments.

Ver. 40. Were come unto him] We no sooner believe, but we would fain see, and be brought a spe ad speciem, from hope to sight.

Ver. 41. Because of his own word] This is it alone that is the foundation of faith, and converts the soul, #Ps 19:7. That of good wives winning their husbands, #1Pe 3:1, is meant by way of preparation only in general. And that of winning a soul by private admonition, #Jas 5:20, is meant of persuading them to some good duty, or to receive some truth, or to forsake some one evil or error.

Ver. 42. Not because of thy saying] Properly, because of thy prittle prattle, Δια την σην λαλιαν, propter loquacitatem tuam. So perhaps it seemed to some of them at first, who believed indeed when they heard him. Plato gives a good rule, Consider not so much τις as τι, who saith, as what is said. Prejudicate opinion bars up the understanding; muddy water in a vessel causeth the best liquor to run over. Intus existens prohibet alienum.

Ver. 43. After two days he departed] Though never so much made of, we must away when there is something elsewhere to be done for God.

Ver. 44. Jesus himself testified] Had testified, when he was cast out at Nazareth; therefore he came no more there. A minister that can do no good once in the place where he lives, is bound to leave, though the fault be not in him, but the people, saith an interpreter here; otherwise (if for self-respects he there abide) it is to be feared that he will lose his gifts, and either fall into errors and heresies, or prove but a dull and dry doctor. Metuendum est ne donum quod acceperis, omittas vel degeneres in errores, vel haereses, vel si retineas puritatem doctrinae, evadas tamen frigidus et aridus doctor. (Rolloc in loc.)

Ver. 45. The Galileans received him] Though those of Nazareth would not, others did. He that is sent and gifted by God shall have one where or other to exercise his gifts, as the English exiles at Geneva, Zurich, &c.; as Zanchius, when he could not rest at Argentina, was received at Clavenna.

Having seen all the things he did, &c.] Christ's miracles were as the sermon bell, that called them together. These the men of Nazareth also had seen, but with prejudice, and therefore to no profit.

Ver. 46. A certain nobleman] One that belonged to the king, Βασιλικος, a royalist; for so the common people flatteringly styled Herod the tetrarch. Few noblemen came to Christ; this, not till he was driven to him by his son's sickness. "Not many noble are called," #1Co 1:26; if any, they are as black swans, and thinly scattered in the firmament of a state, even like stars of the first magnitude.

Ver. 47. Besought him that he would, &c.] Even Darius, king of Persia, can give order for prayers to be made at Jerusalem for the "king's life and his sons," #Ezr 6:10, when he had seen various of his children die before him, as Ctesias relateth.

Ver. 48. Except ye see signs, &c.] Our Saviour first chides him, and upon his well bearing of that, accommodates him. He saw the courtiers' unbelief more dangerous to his soul than the disease could be to his son's body.

Ver. 49. Sir, come down] He fumes not at reproof (as many great ones would have done, Tange montes, et fumigabunt), but "suffers the word of exhortation," #Heb 13:22, being subdued thereunto by affliction.

Ver. 50. Thy son liveth] Is in very good health; for non est vivere, sed valere, vita It is not to live but to live in good health, (Martial). So God is better to us oftentimes than our prayers, than our hopes.

Ver. 51. Thy son liveth] So the son was restored by his father's faith. It is a benefit to be born of good parents. Personal goodness is profitable to posterity.

Ver. 52. Then inquired he, &c.] By a sweet providence, that God might be the more glorified and the man's faith confirmed. "All things cooperate," &c., #Ro 8:28. So at the same time wherein the states of Germany (after long debate) concluded for the truth of the gospel, Luther came leaping out of his closet where he had been praying (though many miles distant) with vicimus, vicimus we conquer, we conquer, in his mouth. So Musselborough field was won by the English the selfsame day and hour wherein those Balaam's blocks (idolatrous images) were burnt at London by order of Parliament.

Ver. 53. And he himself believed] With a justifying faith, introduced at first by a common faith.

Ver. 54. This is again the second miracle] God keeps count of what he doth for us, and will call us to a reckoning. Should not we keep a register? write up the noble acts of the Lord? make a catalogue of them, such a one as was that #Jud 10:11,12. "Did not I deliver you from the Egyptians, and from the Amorites, and from the children of Ammon, and from the Philistines? The Zidonians also, and the Amalekites, and the Maonites did oppress you, and ye cried unto me, and I delivered you out of their hand." According to this form, and many the like in sacred Scripture, we should polish and garnish, embroider and embellish, the magnalia Dei, great works of God; for else we undervalue them, which he will not bear with.

Ver. 1. A feast of the Jews] This was the feast of Pentecost. Others say the Passover, which came but once a year. The true Christians (for whom the true Passover was sacrificed, #1Co 5:7) keep a continual feast or holy day, εορταζωμεν, with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth, #1Co 5:8. Diogenes could say, that a good man keeps holy days and hath gaudies delights all the year about. {a} "Let my people go, that they may hold a feast unto me," #Ex 5:1. In other messages it is, "that they may serve me."

{a} πασαν ημεραν εορτην ηγειται. Laert.

Ver. 2. Having five porches] Built, belike, by some well-affected persons, at the motion of God's ministers, for the use of such impotent folk as here lay looking and languishing at Hope's Hospital. Like as King Edward VI was moved by a sermon of Bishop Riding's, touching works of charity, to grant his two houses in London, Bridewell and the Savoy, for such like good uses; together with lands and monies for their maintenance.

Ver. 3. Of impotent folk] That had tried all other ways, and could not otherwise be cured, Omnipotentī medico, nullus insanabilis occurrit morbus. (Isidore.)

Ver. 4. For an angel went down] The miracle of this pool was granted to the Jews, partly to strengthen them in the true worship of God under the persecution of Antiochus, in the cessation of prophecy; partly to retain them in their religious course of sacrificing to the true God, against the scoffs of the Romans (that were now their lords). Such a virtue being given to that water, wherein their sacrifices were wont to be washed. See a more sovereign bath than this, #Zec 13:1; an ever-flowing and overflowing fountain, not for one at once, as here, but for all that come, they may wash and be clean, wash and be whole.

At a certain season] Once a year only, Semel quotannis, saith Tertullian. Others (more probably) at all their great feasts, when the people met out of all parts at Jerusalem, taking κατα distributively, as #Mt 27:15.

Troubled the water] Not in a visible shape, likely; but as it appeared by a visible troubling of the waters and a miraculous healing of the diseased. But that troubled waters should do cures was the greater wonder: since holy wells (as they call them) and waters that heal are commonly most calm and clear. It was a witty allusion hereunto of him that said, Angels trouble the clear stream of justice at certain times.

Ver. 5. Thirty and eight years] A long while to be in misery: but what is this to eternity of extremity! We need have something to mind us of God, to bring us to Christ. King Alured prayed God always to send him some sickness, whereby his body might be tamed, and he the better disposed and affectioned to Godward.

Ver. 6. And knew that he had been, &c.] Christ's eye affected his heart, #La 3:51, he could not but sympathize, and succour this poor cripple, out of his mere philanthropy, which moveth him still, μετριοπαθειν, to show mercy according to the measure of our misery, whereof he bears a part, #Heb 5:2.

Ver. 7. I have no man, &c.] He looked that Christ should have done him that good office; and could not think of any other way of cure. How easy is it with us to measure God by our model, to cast him into our mould, to think he must needs go our way to work!

Ver. 8. Rise, take up thy bed, &c.] A servile work upon the sabbath day. This our Saviour here commends not as a servile work, but for confirmation of the truth of a miracle greatly tending to God's glory; like as, another time, he bade them give meat to the damsel he had raised, not for any necessity, but to insure the cure.

Ver. 9. And immediately the man] Christ's words are operative (together with his commands there goes forth a power, as #Lu 5:17). So they were in the creation, #Ge 1:3. So they are still in regeneration, #Isa 59:21. Dei dicere, est efficere. For God to say is to do.

Ver. 10. It is the sabbath, it is not lawful, &c.] Vere, sed non sincere. Truly but not sincerely. It more troubled them that Christ had healed him than that the sabbath had been broken by him. The poorer Swedes always break the sabbath, saying that it is only for gentlemen to keep that day.

Ver. 11. He that made me whole, &c.] So, it seems, Christ had healed him, in part, on the inside also; and given him a ready heart to obey, though it were contra gentes, against nature, as they say.

Ver. 12. What man is he] Not that made thee whole, but that bade thee take up thy bed, &c. They dissembled the former, and insisted only upon the latter, which shows the naughtiness of their hearts.

Ver. 13. Had conveyed himself away] Lest by his presence that work should be hindered. True goodness is public spirited, though to private disadvantage, and works for most part unobserved, as the engine that doth all in great businesses is often inward, hidden, not taken notice of.

Ver. 14. Findeth him in the temple] Praising God, likely, for his unexpected recovery. So Hezekiah, the first work he did when off his sick bed, #Isa 38:22.

Behold, thou art made whole, &c.] Here is, 1. Commemoratio beneficii. Remember kindnesses. 2. Commonitio officii. Admonish duties. 3. Comminatio supplicii. Ingentia beneficia, ingentia flagitia, ingentia supplicia. <sup>{a}</sup> Threaten punishment. Unnatural kindnesses, unnatural shame, unnatural punishment.

{a} Magdeburgens praef, ad cent. 5.

Ver. 15. Told the Jews] Of a good intent, surely, to honour Christ, however it were taken by the spiteful Jews, Probi ex sua natura caeteros fingunt. The disciples could not imagine so ill of Judas as it proved. Mary Magdalene thought the gardener (whoever he were) should have known as much and loved Jesus as well as she did.

Ver. 16. Therefore did the Jews persecute Jesus] This he foreknew would follow, and yet he forbore not. In the discharge of our consciences (tightly informed and regulated) we must not stand to cast perils; but do our duties zealously, whatever come of it. This courage in Christians, heathens counted obstinacy, but they knew not the power of the Spirit, nor the privy armour of proof that saints have about their hearts.

Ver. 17. My Father worketh] Yet without labour or lassitude, in conserving the whole creature. This he doth every day, and yet breaketh not the sabbath; Ergo nec ego, Therefore, neith do I.

Ver. 18. The Jews sought the more] Persecution is (as Calvin wrote to the French king) Evangelii genus, the birth of the gospel, the bad genius, the devil that dogs the gospel. Ecclesia haeres crucis The church clings to the cross, (saith Luther). Truth breeds hatred, saith the heathen, as the fair nymphs did the ill-favoured fauns and satyrs. Veritas odium parit. Ter.

Ver. 19. The Son can do nothing, &c.] He denies not himself to be the Son though they quarrelled him: but sweetly sets forth the doctrine of his Deity, which they so much stomached and stumbled at.

Ver. 20. For the Father loveth the Son] This noteth that eternal power of doing miracles that is in Christ. As that which follows, "He will show him greater works," &c., is to be referred to the declaration of that his power.

That ye may wonder] Though ye believe not; for such was the hardness of their hearts grown; as neither ministry, misery, miracle, nor mercy could possibly mollify. "Behold, ye despisers, and wonder, and perish," #Ac 13:41.

Ver. 21. Raiseth up the dead] Bringing them from the jaws of death to the joys of life; which none can do but God alone.

Ver. 22. The Father judgeth no man] viz. The Father alone, but by the Son, to whom all judicatory power is committed.

Ver. 23. He that honoureth not the Son] As Jews and Turks do not. Nor Papists, that (upon the matter) despoil him of his threefold office, and so deny the Lord that bought them.

Ver. 24. He that heareth my word] As death came into the world by the door of the ear, so doth life eternal, #Isa 55:3. God was in the still voice, and the oracle bade, "Hear ye him," #Mt 17:5.

Ver. 25. The dead shall hear the voice] The dead in sins shall believe the promises, and shall live the life of grace here and of glory in heaven.

Ver. 26. So hath he given to the Son] What wonder, then, if faith, apprehending the infinite fountain of life, derive thence some rivulet of life, and apply the same to us for spiritual quickening?

Ver. 27. Because he is the Son of man] Or, as he is the Son of man. {a} By virtue of the hypostatical union, his manhood came as near to God as could be. He had the best natural parts both of mind, #Isa 11:2,3, and body, #Ps 45:2; and the best supernatural, whereby he found favour also with God, #Lu 2:52, for he had more near familiarity with the Godhead than ever had any creature, together with a partner-agency with his Godhead, in the works of mediation, #1Ti 2:5. In the state of exaltation, the manhood hath, 1. Excess of glory. 2. The grace of adoration together with the Godhead. 3. Judiciary power, as here and #Ac 17:31.

Ver. 28. Marvel not at this] And yet who can but marvel at this great mystery of godliness, whereat angels stand amazed? yea, whereat he himself wonders; and therefore calls, his own name Wonderful, #Isa 9:6. It is truly affirmed of Christ, that he is created and uncreated, without beginning, and yet began in time, a Jew according to the flesh, and yet God blessed for ever, &c. The manner hereof is to be believed, not discussed; admired, not pried into, &c. Mirari decet non rimari.

His voice] Put forth by the ministry of mighty angels, and called by the apostle κελυσμα, #1Th 4:16; a metaphor from watermen, who call upon one another, and strike oars together, as it were with one consent.

Ver. 29. They that have done good] In die iudicii plus valebit conscientia pura quam marsupia plena. Bern., #Da 12:1,2. Though other things be darkly delivered, yet when the Jews were to lose land and life, the resurrection is plainly described. So #Heb 11:35.

Unto the resurrection of damnation] As Pharaoh's baker came forth to be hanged when the butler was exalted. Good therefore is the counsel given us by the heathen orator, Ita vivamus ut rationem nobis reddendam arbitremur. The wicked shall come forth of their graves like filthy toads, against that terrible storm, #Ps 9:17. The elements shall melt like scalding lead upon them, &c., #2Pe 3:10

Ver. 30. I can of mine own self do nothing] But by the power communicated unto me, in that eternal generation.

As I hear] So #Joh 5:19 "as I see," which Beza understandeth to be spoken in respect of his human nature, as it is hypostatically united to the Divine.

Ver. 31. My witness is not true] That is, fit, firm, valid, foro humano, Concessio rhetorica. Beza.

Ver. 32. There is another that beareth witness] God the Father, by this miracle wrought upon the impotent man. Give we real testimony to our profession by our practice. Mallem obedire quam miracula facere, I prefer to obey than to do miracles, said Luther. Profligate professors put religion to an open shame. {a}

{a} Virtutis stragulam pudefacis, You make ashamed the covering of character, said Diogenes to Antipater; who, being vicious, wore a white cloak.

Ver. 33. Ye sent unto John] As unto an oracle: but when his answer pleased you not, you rejected it, of mere obstinace and malice to my person and office. There is an odious unthankfulness in unbelief: for it rebelleth against the light, rejecteth the medicine, refuseth to be reformed, hateth to be healed. Wine is a strong remedy against hemlock; yet mingled with it, doubleth the force of the poison. So it is with the Word of life when mingled with unbelief.

Ver. 34. That ye might be saved] This was that which he sought in all his oracles and miracles. Salvation properly notes the privative part of our happiness; because it is easier to tell from what we are saved than to what.

Ver. 35. He was a burning, &c.] Burning in himself, and shining to others; or as it was said of Basil, thundering in his doctrine and lightning in his life. (Nazianzen.) And of Rogers and Bradford, that it was hard to say whether there were more force of eloquence and utterance in preaching, or more holiness of life and conversation, to be found in them. Like Aaron, they had pomegranates for savour, as well as bells for sound.

For a season to rejoice] <sup>{a}</sup> But he soon grew stale to them; so that they made no more reckoning of him than of "a reed shaken with the wind," #Mt 11:7. Principes favebant Luthero, sed iam iterum videtis ingratitude mundi erga ministros, &c., said good Melancthon, in the year of grace 1559.

Ver. 36. The works which the Father hath given me] Lo, Christ accounts his work a gift. So #Joh 17:4.

The works that I do, bear witness] Let our works likewise speak for us, #Mt 5:16, as they did for the primitive Christians; of whom Athenagoras (their ambassador to the emperor) boldly saith, Ουδεις χριστιανος πονηρος ει μη υποκρινηται τον λογον. No Christian is evil mannered unless it be such as dissemble themselves to be Christians. And Justin Martyr confesseth of himself, that beholding the piety of Christians' life and constancy in death, he gathered that it was the true religion that they professed. Non aliunde noscibiles quam de emendatione vitiorum, saith Tertullian of the Christians of his time. And Chrysostom speaketh of some in his days, whose lives were angelic, they so walked up to their principles.

Ver. 37. Hath borne witness of me] By the voice from heaven, and the descending of the Holy Ghost in the shape of a dove, #Mt 3:16; yet ye have neither heard his voice, nor seen his shape. Who so blind as he that will not see? #Isa 42:19.

Ver. 38. And you have not his word abiding in you] As an "engrafted word," #Jas 1:21: ye have heard it, but with your bodily ears only, with those gristles that grow upon your heads: ye have not drawn up the ears of your minds to the ears of your bodies, that one sound piercing both, ye might believe; ye have not mixed the word with faith in your hearts, as in a vessel, &c.

Ver. 39. Search the Scriptures] Audite saeculares, comparate vobis Biblia, animae pharmaca, Listen to the world, compare with your Bibles, the medicine of our souls, saith Chrysostom. But Bibles lie (like old almanacs) moulding in corners, while play books (the devil's catechisms) are even worn out with overly diligent perusal. It is a sad complaint which Reverend Moulin makes of his countrymen, the French Protestants; While they burned us, saith he, for reading the Scriptures, we burnt with zeal to be reading from them. Now with our liberty is bred also negligence and disesteem of God's word. Is it not so also with us?

They are they which testify of me] The babe of Bethlehem is bound up in these swathing bands. He is both author and matter of the Scriptures, and is therefore called the Word. The dignity of the Scriptures (saith one) and the majesty of Christ mutually look on one another: as the sun doth on the stars, and the stars on the sun. For as the excellency of the sun appears by the glory of the stars, to whom it giveth light; so the majesty of Christ is manifest by the Scriptures, to whom he giveth credit. On the other side, as the glory of the star is magnified, because it is the light of the sun; so the credit of the Scriptures is exalted, because they concern the Son of God.

Ver. 40. Ye will not come to me] Though clearly convinced by the Scriptures. See their obstinace and malice. Amos, #Am 6:12, compareth such untamable, untractable, masterless monsters, to horses running upon a rock, where first they break their hoofs and then their necks.

Ver. 41. I receive not honour from men] q.d. I need you not, though I complain you come not to me. It is for your sakes that I seek to you. Christ could be happy, though all men should miscarry: as the sun would shine, though all the world were blind. He seeks not ours, but us.

Ver. 42. Ye have not the love of God] Though ye pretend zeal for his glory, to your opposing of me, yet there is aliud in titulo, aliud in pyxide. Hypocrites are like Egyptian temples, beautiful without but within, some cat or such like thing to be worshipped.

Ver. 43. Him will ye receive] As they did Barchochab; and that Pseudo-Moses (the devil he was) that deceived so many of them in Crete, A.D. 434, persuading them to cast themselves after him into the sea, which should part, and make them way into their own country again, whereby many of them perished.

Ver. 44. Which receive honour one of another] Faith empties a man of himself, purgeth upon ambition, and is an act of the will; else the seeking of praise with men could be no impediment to the act of believing. Surely, as Pharaoh said of the Israelites, "they are entangled in the land, the wilderness hath shut them in"; so may we say of many, they are entangled in the creature, the world hath shut them in, they cannot come to Christ. They are shut up in the cave of the world, as those five kings in a cave, #Jos 10:18; have hardness of heart, as a great stone rolled to the mouth, and honours, riches, and pleasures, are so many keepers, &c.

Ver. 45. Do not think that I] That is, that I only.

Even Moses] So your faithful ministers (whom men pretend to love and reverence, but obey not their doctrine), these shall judge you.

Ver. 46. For he wrote of me] Both clearly and mystically, in the many sacrifices and ceremonies of the law. Whence Theodoret calleth Moses, τον της θεολογιας ωκεανον, εξ ουπερ παντες ποταμοι και πασα θαλαττα, ocean of divinity, out of whom all the prophets and apostles have watered their several gardens. And Pareus closeth up his commentary upon Genesis, with these words, Quicquid Scripturarum sacrarum dehinc sequitur, huius est Commentarius. Whatever was written next to the scriptures, of this it is commentary.

Ver. 47. But if ye believe not his writings] He that will not take God's word in one place will take it in no place.

Chapter 6

Ver. 1. After these things] i.e. A good while after; Herod having beheaded the Baptist, and being perplexed at the fame of Jesus, whom therefore he desired to see, but for an evil purpose, #Lu 9:8,9.

Ver. 2. And a great multitude followed him] Though he went privately into a desert place belonging to Bethsaida, #Lu 9:10. The Sun of righteousness could not be hidden, for he had "healing in his wings," #Mal 4:2.

Ver. 3. And Jesus went up into a mount] {See Trapp on "Mt 5:1"} He would have been private till the passover and refreshed himself with his disciples; but seeing God had now put a new opportunity into his hands of benefiting many, he would not neglect it.

Ver. 4. And the passover] The third passover (likely) after his baptism. And this might occasion him to speak of the spiritual eating of himself, the true Paschal Lamb: for even "Christ our passover was sacrificed for us," #1Co 5:7.

Ver. 5. He saith unto Philip] The people took no thought for food. Christ doth it for them. And surely if he so far provided for those, that out of a sudden motion, and no great good intention, came out after him, can we think he will be wanting to those that seek him constantly, and with full purpose of heart adhere unto him?

Ver. 6. And this he said to prove him] To discover him to himself: for what a man is in truth is what he is in a temptation. {See Trapp on "Mt 14:17"}

Ver. 7. Two hundred penny-worth] And where will you have half the money? send them away therefore, rid your hands honestly of them, and let us rest and refresh ourselves, as we resolved to do when we first retired hither. Thus he.

Ver. 8. One of his disciples] He uttered the sense of all the twelve, #Mr 6:37, being no whit wiser than the rest, though the eldest disciple of them all, #Joh 1:41.

Ver. 9. Five barley loaves and two small fishes] Was not Tyrabosco hardly driven, when from these five loaves and two fishes, he concluded seven sacraments? So in the second Council of Nice under Irene, John (one of the envoys of the Eastern churches) proved the making of images lawful, because God had said, "Let us make man after our own image." A sound argument to overthrow one of God's commandments! and yet it prevailed.

Ver. 10. Make the men sit down] And they did so, though they saw no sense for it. This kind of blind obedience is very acceptable: Clausis oculis Deum sequi debemus duces. We must wink and put ourselves into God's hand to be led whither he pleaseth.

Ver. 11. He distributed to the disciples] These five loaves (by a strange kind of arithmetic) were multiplied by division, and augmented by subtraction. The Macedonians found, that not getting, but giving, is the way to thrive, #2Co 9:8. Ex fame quaestum captabat Iosephus; et benignitate sua emit Egyptum: Nos etiam coelum. So in spiritual alms and good offices: God's gifts grow in the hands of them that employ them, to feed many. Salienti aquarum fonti undas si tollas, nec exhauritur, nec extenuatur, sed dulcescit. Scientia, docendi officio, dulcedinem sentiat, non minutias.

Ver. 12. When they were filled] {See Trapp on "Mt 14:20"}

Ver. 13. Filled twelve baskets] See #1Ki 17:15,16 Mt 14:20, {See Trapp on "Mt 14:20"}

Ver. 14. This is of a truth that prophet] Yet anon they are at it, "What sign showest thou?" that you may know them to be the Pharisees' disciples. Of whose sour leaven also that in the next verse savours; where they would needs take him by force to make him a king, #Joh 6:15. They could not imagine a Messiah that had not an earthly kingdom.

Ver. 15. Take him by force] Superstition will needs obtrude upon Christ will worship, whether he will or no, and despite him with seeming honours, as the Lycaonians would needs have stolen a sacrifice upon Paul and Barnabas; and the savages of Nova Albion upon Sir Francis Drake and his company, at their parting with them. They had set it on fire ere we were aware, saith he; we laboured by all means to withhold or withdraw them, but could not prevail, till at length we fell to prayers and singing of psalms, whereby they were allured immediately to forget their folly, and leave their sacrifice unconsumed, suffering the fire to go out; and imitating us in all their actions, they fell a lifting up their hands and eyes to heaven as they saw us to do.

Ver. 16. His disciples went down to the sea] By Christ's own command, #Mt 14:22 Mr 6:45, yet they met with a sore storm. So may the best with trouble, in their most lawful employments, #Ps 34:18. But these make them look to their tackling, patience; to their anchor, hope; to their helm, faith; to their ace card, the Word; to their Captain, Christ, who is ever at hand.

Ver. 17. Jesus was not come to them] This was worse to them than the storm. It was woeful with Saul when the Philistines were upon him, and God would not come at him, nor answer him, #1Sa 28:15. So when danger or death is upon a man, and God is far from him. That doom, "I will not show you favour," #Jer 16:13, was worse than their captivity.

Ver. 18. {See Trapp on "Mt 14:24"}

Ver. 19. They were afraid] See #Mt 14:26,27.

Ver. 20. They were afraid] See #Mt 14:26,27.

Ver. 21. Immediately the ship was at land] A dying saint hath no sooner taken death into his bosom, but he is immediately landed at the quay (harbour) of Canaan, at the kingdom of heaven. Fugiendum est ad clarissimam patriam: ibi pater, ibi omnia, said Plotinus the Platonist. (Aug. Civ. Dei. ix. 17.)

Ver. 22. On the other side of the sea] The lake of Gennesareth: over the which those were said to pass, that passed some creeks or bays to go the nearer way.

Ver. 23. After that the Lord had given thanks] {See Trapp on "Mt 14:19"}

Ver. 24. Seeking for Jesus] But not for Jesus' sake. See #Joh 6:26.

Ver. 25. Rabbi, when camest thou hither?] This question they moved, not so much to learn what they knew not, as to make show of what they knew before. But two things make a man truly virtuous,—good actions and good aims. Finibus non officiis a vitiis discernuntur virtutes, saith Augustine: The end maketh or marreth the act. Christus opera nostra non tam actibus quam finibus pensat, saith another. The glory of God should consume all sinister ends, as the sunlight puts out the fire, or as Moses' serpent swallowed up the sorcerers' serpents.

Ver. 26. Because ye did eat of the loaves] More than for love, Vix diligitur Iesus propter Iesum. Scarcely esteeming Jesus for Jesus' sake. (Aug.) But as the mixed multitude came out of Egypt with Israel for a better fortune, and as he, #Mt 20:13 "agreed for a penny"; as the harlot looks to the love tokens more than to the donor; so was it here. Worldlings, Ubi non vident quaestum, rident Christum: Ubi datur ut edant, adduci possunt, ut credant: they serve not the Lord Jesus Christ, but their own bellies.

Virtutem pretium qui putet esse sui.”

Ver. 27. Labour not for the meat, &c.] When Basil was tempted with money and preferment, he answers, Pecuniam da quae permaneat, ac continuo duret, gloriam quae semper floreat. The fashion of this world passeth away, as the water of a river that runs by a city, or as a fair picture drawn upon the ice that melts away with it. Men come to the world's felicities, as to a lottery, with heads full of hopes, but return with hearts full of blanks.

Labour for the meat that endureth] We may not dream of a delicacy in God's ways, or think that good things will drop out of the clouds to us, as towns were said to come into Timothy's toils while he slept. We must be at pains for heaven. Laborandum Working was one of the emperor's mottoes, and may be every Christian's. Strive they must even to an agony, {Αγωνίζεσθε, #Lu 13:24} ere they can get into the strait gate; together with our stooping, there must be a certain stripping of ourselves.

Ver. 28. That we might work] We would still be working, weaving a web of righteousness of our own, spinning a thread of our own to climb up to heaven by, that we might say with the spider, Nulli debeo; and with that Popish merit monger, Coelum gratis non accipiam, I will not have heaven of free cost. Men would have heaven as a purchase. I would swim through a sea of brimstone, said one, that I might come to heaven at last. But those that cry haec ego feci, I do this, Luther wittily calls the devil's faeces; dregs, as those that seek to be saved by their good works, he fitly calls the devil's martyrs; because they suffer much and take much pains to go to hell. Let us all take heed of this piece of natural Popery; and learn to be in duty in respect of performance, and yet out of duty in respect of dependance. We are all apt to do otherwise; and like broken chapmen (merchant) we would still be chaffering, if but for small matters; and think to be saved for a company of poor beggarly businesses.

Ver. 29. This is the work of God] The τὸ ἐργον. It is an easy matter to believe (thinks the worldling), but he that goes about it shall find it as hard a work to believe the gospel, as to keep the law. {a} For God must enable to both. Non minus difficile est nobis velle credere It is no less difficult for us to wish to believe than for a corpse to wish to. (saith Beza) quam cadaver; volare. We believe with much conflict, saith another. {b} The combat was not so great between Michael and Satan about Moses' dead body, as between Satan and the believer concerning Christ's living body. Faith is fain to tug and wrestle for it, till it sweat again.

{b} Dike of the Deceitful Heart.

Ver. 30. What sign showest thou?] sc. From heaven; such as manna was {See Trapp on "Mt 12:38"} for otherwise, they lacked no signs. But Christ's doctrine discontented them: and hence these peevish questions, or cavils rather, all to slip collar. In the kingdom of Congo, in Africa, the Portuguese, at their first arrival, finding the people to be heathens and without God, did induce them to a profession of Christ, and to be baptized in great abundance, allowing for the principles of religion; until such time as the priests pressed them to lead their lives according to their profession; which the most part of them in no case enduring, they returned back again to their gentilism, forgetting also soon after the very names they received when they were baptized.

Ver. 31. Our fathers did eat manna in the desert] Here they bewray themselves, and confirm what our Saviour had said of them, #Joh 6:26, viz. that they followed him only for provender. Sic sorex suo perit indicio. So the fish sepia {a} is discovered and taken by the black colour that it casteth up purposely to conceal itself.

Ver. 32. I am the true bread] Whereof manna was but a type. Manna is said to have all sorts of good tastes in it: Christ hath so to his. Manna descended in the dew; so doth Christ in his word preached. See #Ex 16:14-21 Nu 11:7-9. {See Trapp on "Nu 11:7"} {See Trapp on "Nu 11:8"} {See Trapp on "Nu 11:9"}

Ver. 33. Which came down from heaven] From the highest heaven (not out of the middle region of the air only, as manna), and is the true ambrosia.

Ver. 34. Lord, evermore give us this bread] This they speak jeeringly, as the woman of Samaria did in like case, #Joh 4:15.

Ver. 35. I am that bread of life] Christ, passing by that bitter scoff of theirs, proceeds to teach them. The servant of the Lord must "not strive, but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient in meekness, instructing those that oppose themselves," &c., #2Ti 2:24.

Shall never hunger] That is, shall never be painfully or despairingly hungry, utterly destitute of grace and glory; but shall continually feed at the feast of a good conscience, and at length sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven.

Ver. 36. Ye have seen me] But not savingly. Your understandings have been gilded over with a common kind of supernatural light, #Heb 6:4, but not to a transmutation. You have seen me as a traveller seeth the pomp and splendour of a foreign court, or as men see far countries in maps, with an intuitive insight, &c.

Ver. 37. All that the Father giveth me] Gr. παντα, all things, that is, the whole community of Christians, all the elect, of which number you plainly show yourselves to be none by your want of the faith of God's elect, that distinctive character. Wisdom is justified of all her children.

I will in no wise cast out] Gr. ου μη εκβαλω εξω, I will not not, cast out out. A powerful speech, and a most comfortable consideration. Who would not come to Jesus Christ upon such sweetest encouragement? Surely as all that were in debt and distress came to David, and he became their captain; so should all afflicted spirits come to the Son of David, the Captain of our salvation. Non autem pedibus itur ad Christum, sed affectibus, &c., Moreover he should not come to Christ but with affection, where this life giving carcass is, thither let the eagles resort.

Ver. 38. Not to do mine own will] As man, he did his Father's will; as God, he hath the same will with the Father.

Ver. 39. I should raise it up again] By virtue of the union, a substance is preserved, and shall be raised up again to glory; yea, "the dead in Christ shall rise first," #1Th 4:16, by virtue derived from Christ's resurrection, and by the mighty influence thereof. For he was raised to be a root and fountain of all supernatural life, both of our souls and bodies.

Ver. 40. Which seeth the Son and believeth] This these Jews did not, #Joh 6:36. Some slight knowledge of Christ they had; but it amounted not to a saving faith. {See Trapp on "Joh 6:36"} Meteors hang awhile in the air, but are not of strength enough to ascend to the upper region hence they soon vanish.

And I will raise him up] This is four different times repeated, that we may rest secure of it, and be comforted. Fiducia Christianorum resurrectio mortuorum, the faith of the Christians is by the resurrection of the dead, saith Tertullian.

Ver. 41. The Jews therefore murmured] They were as good at this as ever their fathers had been in the wilderness, and afterwards, #Zec 7:12 Ac 7:51.

Ver. 42. The son of Joseph] Who was Christi pater putativus, politicus, secundum dici, non secundum esse.

How is it then] Wretched men dare reprehend what they do not comprehend.

Ver. 43. Murmur not among yourselves] q.d. I give you no just cause so to do. You carry your galls in your ears, as some creatures are said to do, hence you are so embittered; your mouths are out of taste, and hence you so disrelish my doctrine.

Ver. 44. No man can come to me, except, &c.] Down then goes the Dagon of free will, with all that vitreum acumen glass point of all the patrons thereof; whether Pagans or Papagans, Pelagians or Semi-pelagians. Let them say never so much Ignavis opus est auxilio divino; Quod vivimus Deorum munus est; quod bene sancteque vivimus, nostrum. Lazy work is with the help of God; we live because the service is of the gods; we live because it is well consecrated of us. (Sen.) A wiser than the wisest of them tells us here another tale; and elsewhere, #Joh 15:5 "Without me ye can do nothing." Where Austin observes that our Saviour saith not perficere, to finish, but facere; to do; nor doth he say, Without me ye can do no hard thing, but nothing. And the same church father notes that sub laudibus naturae latent inimiei gratiae. The friends of free will are enemies to free grace.

God the Father draw him] By a merciful violence, ex nolentibus volentes facit. {See Trapp on "So 1:4"} The Father draweth, and the man cometh; that notes the efficacy of grace, and this the sweetness of grace. Grace works strongly, and therefore God is said to draw; and it works sweetly too, and therefore man is said to come.

Ver. 45. And they shall be all taught of God] i.e. All the children of the Church, #Jer 31:34, and why not the infants of believing parents also? since they are disciples, #Ac 15:10, taught of God from the least to the greatest, #Isa 54:13; dedicated in their baptism to the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost by their parents' promise, purpose, and prayer, and so put under God's teaching; whereof they are capable, as also of the operation of the Holy Ghost, even from their mother's womb, #Lu 1:15. God also hath promised to pour his Spirit upon them, #Joe 2:28 Isa 59:21. And after our Saviour had here said "They shall be all taught of God," he presently subjoineth, "Every one that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me." Where note, that he saith not, Whosoever hath heard and learned of the preacher, but of the Father, cometh unto me. Now, infants can come unto Christ, and none must forbid them. They have also the full sight of God's face in heaven; they may therefore have a glimpse of it here; they being his children, #Eze 16:20,21, his servants, #Le 25:41,42, in covenant with him, #De 26:10-12.

Ver. 46. He hath seen the Father] And hath it in commission to manifest him to all his, by working faith (either actual, or, at least, virtual, as in infants) in their hearts, whereby they see him that is invisible, being well seen in Moses' optics.

Ver. 47. Hath life eternal] sc. In Christ's purchase, in God's promise, in the firstfruits of the Spirit, who resteth upon the elect as a Spirit of glory and of God, #1Pe 4:14.

Ver. 48. I am that bread of life] That not only uphold and maintain spiritual life, but do also begin and beget it. And this our Saviour often inculcateth here, as most needful to be known and most comfortable to be considered.

Ver. 49. Did eat manna] They fed upon sacraments, and yet many of them perished eternally. A man may go to hell with font water on his face, and be haled from the table to the tormentor, as he, #Mt 22:13.

Your fathers did eat, &c.] They sought only the satisfying of their bodily hunger, and they had it, but yet are dead. Manna could not immortalize them, as the poets feign their ambrosia did their dunghill deities. "Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats, but God will destroy both it and them." These mentioned in the text fed upon sacraments, and yet they died in God's displeasure, #1Co 10:3,5. The carcase of the sacrament cannot give life, but the soul of it, which is Christ; neither do the sacraments work as a medicine, whether men sleep or wake, by virtue inherent in them, ex opere operate, sed ex opere operantis, i.e. according to the disposition and qualification of the party that partaketh.

Ver. 50. This is the bread] Δεικτικῶς, pointing to himself. So David, "this poor man" (meaning himself) "cried, and the Lord heard him," &c., #Ps 34:6. So Hic, sat lucis, let there be light here, said Oecolampadius on his death bed, laying his hand on his breast. Ver. 51. If any man eat, &c.] Hic edere est credere, Here to eat is to believe, saith Augustine; faith being the soul's hand, mouth, stomach, &c. The Fathers commonly expounded this part of our Saviour's sermon as spoken of the sacrament of the Lord's supper; and so fell into that error, that none but communicants could be saved; wherefore also they gave the sacrament to infants, and put it into the mouths of dead men, &c. We are not to think that either our Saviour spake here properly, and ex professo, from the declaration of the sacramental eating of his flesh and drinking of his blood; or that this discourse pertains nothing at all thereunto. The Papists have expunged a great part of Origen's commentary upon this chapter, as directly making against their monster of transubstantiation. And Cardinal Campeius affirmed against Luther, that faith is not necessary to him that receiveth the sacrament. As for Bellarmine, although we believe, saith he, that all virtues are found in the Church, yet that any man may be absolutely said to be a member of the true Church, we do not think that any inward virtue is required, but only an external profession of the faith, and such communion of the sacraments, as is received by the outward man. <sup>{a}</sup> This mark very well agrees to the Church of Rome, wherein if any be truly virtuous, it is by mere accident, as Cicero wittily said of the epicures, that if any one of them were good, he was merely overcome by the goodness of his nature; for they taught a licentious looseness, Si quando viri boni sint, vinci bonitate naturae.

Ver. 52. Strove among themselves] They tumultuously contradicted, murmured, mutinied, which was a sign of their obstinance and contempt. For otherwise it is not only lawful, but needful, modestly to make inquiry how we may eat Christ spiritually.

Ver. 53. Except ye eat the flesh, &c.] Fulbert, Bishop of Chartres (who lived in the eleventh century), speaking upon the eucharist, hath these words, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man," &c. Facinus vel flagitium videtur iubere. Figura ergo est, praecipiens passioni Domini esse communicandum tantum, et suaviter et utiliter recondendum in memoria, quod pro nobis caro eius crucifixa et vulnerata est. Now in the year of Christ 1608, there was set out an edition of him in Paris, where we have interserted, after Figura ergo est, these words, Dicit Haereticus, to make what Fulbert spoke assertive from Augustine, to speak recitative of the heretic, as if the heretic should say, This is a figure, &c., which if admitted, then there is no transubstantiation. The words produced by Fulbert are indeed St Augustine's. {a} And the publisher of Fulbert being told hereof, that the words were Augustine's, that he had branded with heresy, he put afterwards his Dicit Haereticus among his errata, as ye may read in Bishop Ussher's answer to the Jesuit's challenge, page 15.

Except ye eat the flesh] That is, except ye spiritually apprehend Christ by faith, Crede et manducasti, saith Austin, Believe and thou hast eaten. By the actuation of our faith we even lean on Christ's bosom as that beloved disciple did; Cruci haeremus, sanguinem fugimus, et intra ipsa Redemptoris nostri vulnera fugimus linguam, saith Cyprian.

{a} De Doct. Christ. ii. 16.

Ver. 54. Whoso eateth my flesh] Because this was a hard point to believe, therefore it is so often repeated and inculcated. Verba toties inculcata viva sunt, vera sunt, sana sunt, plana sunt.

Ver. 55. For my flesh is meat indeed] That that will do the deed. It is neither painted meat nor enchanted, but real and substantial; yet not corporal but spiritual. Our Richard II was starved at Pomfret Castle by being tantalized; for his diet being served in, and set before him in the wonted princely manner, he was not allowed either to taste or touch thereof. (Speed.) The great Caliph of Babylon was used in like manner by Haalen brother to Mango, great Khan of Tartary; saving that he had not meat set before him, but gold, silver, precious stones, whereof he was, by way of derision, willed to eat, and make no spare, &c. True believers meet with meat indeed, and by a Crapula Sacra, holy intoxication as Luther calleth it, feeding hard thereupon, they are nourished infallibly to eternal life.

Ver. 56. He that eateth my flesh, &c.] That is, that partaketh of my person, merits, passions, privileges; he that receiveth me in all mine offices and efficacies.

Ver. 57. So he that eateth me, liveth by me] All out of Christ then, though they seem to have the only life of it (as Nabal, #1Sa 30:6 "Thus shall ye say to him that liveth"), yet in true account they are no better than living carcasses, walking sepulchres, of themselves. Christ is the only principle and Prince of life; and his people only are heirs together of the grace of life, #1Pe 3:7.

Ver. 58. This is that bread] Here our Saviour returns to that comparison he had made before between manna and his flesh; and so concludes as he began. A pattern for preachers.

Ver. 59. These things said he in the synagogue] In a set sermon, and yet to little purpose; for many made defection. Vultures unguento fugantur, et scarabei rosa, Vultures are put to flight by perfumes and the rose beetle, say Pliny and Aelian. {Aelian, On Animals, l. 3. c. 7. 1:165} When we have spent all our wind on our people, their hearts will be still apt to be carried away with every wind of contrary doctrine or satanical suggestion.

Ver. 60. This is an hard saying] The hardness was in themselves, not in the word; but that must bear the blame howsoever; as she in Seneca that was stricken with sudden blindness, and then cried out of the light. A hypocrite is not discovered, till upon some critical point. If it come to a matter of cost, he cries, "What needs this waste?" if of pains, "This is an hard saying."

Ver. 61. When Jesus knew in himself] For they had not yet discovered what pinched them; but only muttered it among themselves, aversantium more, in a discontented manner. They had done much better if they had opened their minds to Christ and sought satisfaction. But men will sooner talk against a preacher by "the walls and in the doors of their houses," #Eze 33:30 (taking everything with the left hand, and by the left handle), than either candidly interpret, or let him be his own interpreter.

Ver. 62. What and if ye shall see the Son of man ascend] Then you shall not be scandalized (so some sense it); or then you shall much more be scandalized, so Maldonat, who saith he could like the other sense well enough, but that it is the Calvinists'. So George, Duke of Saxony, said, he could have thought well of a reformation, if Luther had not wrought it. (Grinaeus in Hagg. praefat.)

Ver. 63. It is the Spirit that quickeneth] Had those carnal Capernaïtes but stayed out our Saviour's sermon, they might have been satisfied for the sense of his words, that they so stumbled at, and had not patience to hear him here expounding himself. Quoniam Christiani (Pontificii) manducant Deum, quem adorant, sit anima mea cum philosoplis, said Averroes; who, had he consulted with sound divines, might have known more.

It is the Spirit that quickeneth] i.e. The Godhead united to the hmnan nature conveyeth life to the believer. That being the fountain, this the conduit; and union being the ground of communion. Wicked men want the spirit and life of Christ, who though he took every man's flesh, yet that of itself profiteth them nothing. A communione naturae ad communicationem gratiae non valet argumentum.

Ver. 64. But there are some of you that believe not] And hence it is that you so grossly mistake me, and that you find no more benefit by me and my words. Unbelief rejects the remedy, frustrates the means, holds a man in universal pollution, #Heb 3:12, and leaves him under a double condemnation; one from the law wherein Christ found him, and another from the gospel for refusing the remedy, that blessed bath of Christ's blood, #Zec 13:1, whereunto even the princes of Sodom are invited, #Isa 1:10, and for despising it, doomed, #Eze 24:13, as a malefactor dead in law, and yet rejecteth the offer of a pardon. In Ket's sedition, when King Edward VI's pardon was offered the rebels by a herald, a lewd boy turned toward him his naked posteriors, and used words suitable to that gesture. One standing by discharged a harquebus {a} upon the boy, and struck him dead in the place. {b} How shall those escape that neglect so great salvation, which at first began to be spoken by the Lord? #Heb 2:3.

{a} The early type of portable gun, varying in size from a small cannon to a musket, which on account of its weight was, when used in the field, supported upon a tripod, trestle, or other 'carriage', and afterwards upon a forked 'rest'. The name in German and Flemish meant literally 'hook-gun', from the hook cast along with the piece, by which it was fastened to the 'carriage'; but the name became generic for portable fire-arms generally in the 16th century, so that the type with the hook was subsequently distinguished as arquebuse à croc. According to Wendelin Boeheim, Handbuch der Waffenkunde (Leipzig 1890) 447, 455, the hook of the original hakenbüchse was intended to hold on to a wall or other fixed object, partly to support the weight of the barrel and partly to diminish the recoil. Maximilian I (early 16th cent.) introduced the portable tripod which could be put together in the field. The forked rest came in about 1520, with the Spanish musket. (ED)

{b} Life of Edward VI, by Sir John Heywood.

Ver. 65. Therefore said I unto you] Here some may object, if faith be not in man's power, why doth he yet complain? and why are any destroyed for lack of faith? Hereunto I might answer with the apostle, "Nay, but, O man, who art thou that replies, (or chattest) against God?" But for further satisfaction, know, 1. That faith was once in man's power. 2. That no unbeliever doth what he might do to believe. 3. That unbelief is in a man's power, who wittingly and willingly, and by his own election, forsaketh his own mercies, #Joh 2:8 Mt 23:37; there. is an uncounsellable obstinacy in it.

Unless it be given him] That divine traction, then, #Joh 6:44, is a free gift: there is no meritum ex congruo. Our effectual conversion is gratuita et inopinata, #Eph 1:11. We cannot, concur or contribute toward it. Nothing can prepare for grace but grace. Neither can we bring forth good things any otherwise than as Sarah's dead womb brought forth a child; it was not a child of nature, but of the mere promise.

Ver. 66. Many of his disciples] They stumbled at the word and fell backward. This is reckoned by St Peter a note of a reprobate, #1Pe 2:8. And indeed few sins are more dangerous than that of picking quarrels at God's word, taking up weapons against it, and snuffing at it, #Mal 1:13; replying against it, #Ro 9:19,20; casting reproaches upon it, #Jer 20:8,9; enviously swelling at it, #Ac 13:45; gathering odious consequences from it, #Ro 3:8: such are in the ready road to apostasy, and so to perdition, #Heb 10:39.

Ver. 67. Will ye also go away?] q.d. This general defection of those temporaries may possibly tempt you to it. Evil men endanger good men, as weeds the corn, as bad humours the blood, or an infected house the neighbourhood. Nemo errat sibi ipsi, sed demonentiam spargit in proximos. (Seneca.) No man falls single, but draws company along with him, as the dragon with his tail drew down the stars of heaven; as tall cedars bear down with them the shrubs that grow under them. As when Hymenaeus and Philetus (two such eminent professors) fell away, the apostle, for the better settling of such as were shaken thereby, was fain to caution, "Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure," &c. And "in a great house" (such as God's is) "there are vessels of all sorts, some to honour, and some to dishonour," #2Ti 2:19,20.

Ver. 68. Thou hast the words of eternal life.] In going from thee, therefore, we shall go out of God's blessing. Nay, we shall go upon our own death, upon hell's mouth. The Roman law was, Transfugas, ubicunque inventi fuerint, quasi hostes interficere licet.

Renegades are sure to die for it; when those that live by those lively oracles of the gospel shall live for ever.

Ver. 69. We believe and have known] In matters of divinity we must first believe, and then know; not know, and then believe. In human sciences it is otherwise. Men are brought to assent and believe by experience, knowledge, and sense; as to believe that fire is hot, &c. But here, belief and assent go before experimental knowledge, sense, and use.

Ver. 70. Have not I chosen you twelve, &c.] q.d. If ye believe and will abide by it, look well to your footing; it will shortly be tried what stability is in you, when such an angel as Judas shall show himself to be a devil. Stand fast; for you are like to be shaken, as he in the history said, when he whipped the pillars and public statues before the earthquake, which he had, by a prophetic spirit, foretold. (Simeon Monach.)

Ver. 71. He spake of Judas Iscariot] Which some derive of the Syriac word signifying strangling, as if he were so named by an anticipation; like as our roaring boys will needs be so called now, by a woeful prolepsis, here for hereafter. But what a hard heart had Judas, and how fearfully was he satanized and transformed into a breathing devil, that could hear all this, and not be affected therewith! Hypocritis nihil stupidius, Nothing is more stupid or more stubborn than a hypocrite. David fitly compareth him to the deaf adder; which although by spitting out his poison he might renew his age, yet he stoppeth both his ears, lest he should hear the voice of the charmer.

Ver. 1. For he would not walk in Jewry] The Roman rule in battle was, Nec fugere, nec sequi, Neither to flee dangers nor to follow them. The Christian's motto is, Nec temere, nec timide, Neither timorous, nor temerarious (reckless). As we must not basely desert the cause of Christ when called out to defend it, but  $\eta\ \tau\alpha\nu\ \eta\ \epsilon\pi\iota\ \tau\alpha\nu$ , as she said to her son (Plutarch), Either vanquish or die, as the Black Prince's father said to him, Either live with the gospel or die for it; so we may not rashly run ourselves upon unnecessary dangers, but decline them where we can with a good conscience. He that flees may fight another time, said Demosthenes,  $\rho\upsilon\psi\alpha\sigma\pi\iota\varsigma$ . Christians also are permitted to flee, when they are sought for to the slaughter, so it be with the wings of a dove and not with the pinions of a dragon. It was a masculine resolution of that good woman celebrated by Jerome, Non ideo negare vole, ne peream: sed ideo mentiri nolo, ne peccem. I will rather die than lie.

Ver. 2. The feast of tabernacles] The Jews at this feast dwelt without doors, in booths and bowers, in remembrance of their wandering of old through the wilderness. This gave occasion to Plutarch, and other profane heathens, to devise and broach so many base lies of the Jews, as if they were worshippers of Bacchus. Florus calls the temple of Jerusalem, impiae gentis arcanum. Another tells us that the Jews were forced to rest every seventh day, for an evil disease they had cleaving unto them.

Ver. 3. Depart hence] Saucily enough, and sarcastically too; pricked on by ambition, likely, which ever rideth without reins, and cares not whose ruins it buildeth upon.

Ver. 4. For there is no man, &c.] Here they proceed to charge Christ with folly; and presume to lesson him with their

“ Vile latens vlr̄tus: quid enim submersa latebris

*Proderit? Obscuro veluti sine remige puppis:
Vel lyra quae reticet, vel qui non tenditur arcus.*”
Claudian.

Ver. 5. For neither did his brethren believe] This the Jews of this day read with much wonderment; and take occasion from this text to slander our Saviour’s miracles, as nothing so manifest as we conceive them, since his own kindred believed not in him.

Ver. 6. My time is not yet come] sc. My time of journeying to Jerusalem; I must take my best opportunity, when I may go up with most safety. You may take your own time: you can hardly take amiss, since the world loveth his own, #Joh 15:19; and huggeth them to death, as the ape doth her young.

Ver. 7. But me it hateth, because I testify] Obsequium amicos, veritas odium parit, Truth breeds hatred, as the fair nymphs are feigned to bring forth the ill-favoured fauns and satyrs. An expectes ut Quintilianus ametur? said he; Canst thou expect that I with my plain dealing should be favoured? Quintilian saith of Vespasian the emperor, that he was patientissimus viri, a man most patient, one that could well endure to be told his own. And of Gerson (that great Chancellor of Paris) it is recorded that he rejoiced in nothing so much as in a round reprehension by some faithful friend. But few such to be found today. Praedieare iam nihil aliud est, quam totius orbis furorem in se derivare, said Luther out of his own daily experience. They "hate him that reproveth in the gate." Preachers are called lights, which sore eyes cannot look upon without offence. Salt also they are called, which cast upon wounds, maketh them smart grievously. Hence the world's hatred, as #Zec 1:11; all the earth was at rest, and desired not to be disquieted by the sound of a trumpet.

Ver. 8. I go not up yet] q.d. I will ere long: lest haply they should think that he disliked the public services, and would not come at them, because of the manifold corruptions that were then crept into them. All which notwithstanding, Christ never separated, nor commanded others so to do, but the contrary: "Go show thyself to the priest," #Mt 8:4 "The scribes and Pharisees sit in Moses' chair; hear them," #Mt 23:2. It is noted as a great fault in Eli's time, that men "abhorred the offering of the Lord," though the sin of the priests was very great before the Lord, and all was out of order; yet in abhorring the sacrifice, they "transgressed, even to a cry," #1Sa 2:17.

Ver. 9. He abode still in Galilee] Which he needed not to have done, could he but have complied with the world, as his kinsmen did. But that man purchaseth his peace at too dear a rate that payeth his honesty to get it.

Ver. 10. Not openly, but as it were in secret] To kindle the desire of seeing and hearing him so much the more; or to discover whether there were any numbers disposed by his first preaching to receive him, to the end he might not show himself in vain. He had lost most of his hearers, who thenceforth walked no more with him, #Joh 6:66; yet might haply afterwards have a better mind to him.

Ver. 11. Where is he?] Not, "where is Jesus?" They could not find in their hearts to call him by his name, they were so full of malice against him. So Joseph's brethren called him not Joseph, but the Dreamer: Saul asked not for David, but the son of Jesse. After Stephen Brune the martyr was put to death, his adversaries commanded it to be cried, That none should make any more mention of him, under pain of heresy. And ubicunque invenitur nomen Calvini, deleatur; wherever, the name of Calvin is found, let it be removed, saith the Index expurgatorius. But what saith our Saviour, "Blessed are ye, when men shall hate you, and cast out your name as evil, for the Son of man's sake," #Lu 6:22. The wise historian observed, that the statues of Brutus and Cassias, Eo praeifulgebant, quod non visebantur. They shine forth there because they were not visited. (Tacit. Annal.) And Cato said, he had rather men should question why he had no statue or monument erected to him than why he had.

Ver. 12. For some said] All men were not of a mind concerning Christ. Sooner shall the fingers of their hands be all of a length, than men will be all of a judgment in matters of religion. Nullum bellum citius exardescit, nullum deflagrat tardius quam theologicum, ut sacramentarium. (Bucholcer.)

Ver. 13. For fear of the Jews] Who had made an order (it seems) somewhat like that of the Jesuits' edict at Dola in the country of Burgundy, that for prevention of heresy, no man should speak of God, either in good sort or bad. This the Jews did, 1. To save themselves a labour of confuting our Saviour's doctrine. 2. To persuade the people that it was such horrible blasphemy as was not fit to be named. So the Papists debar the people all sound of the religion, in prohibiting the books of the reformed writers, and hiding their own treatises, wherein the tenet of the Protestants is recited only to be confuted: so that you shall seldom in all Italy meet with Bellarmine's works or any of the like nature to be sold.

Ver. 14. About the midst of the feast] That he might have the better audience.

Went up into the temple and taught] Sacerdotum tunc fere muta officia, populi caeca obsequia, ut iam apud Pontificios.

Ver. 15. And the Jews marvelled] As well they might; but this marvel of theirs came to nothing. Look how a swine, finding a precious jewel, grunts only, and goes his way: so here.

Ver. 16. My doctrine is not mine] As if he had said, this should not be scandalum, sed scala; not a stumblingblock, but a ladder to lift you up to see the Divine handiwork, and to make you say, as #Eze 3:12 "Blessed be the glory of the Lord from his place": since I have my learning from above, and am (as Nicodemus acknowledged) "a teacher sent from God."

Ver. 17. If any man will do his will] Let knowledge and practice run parallel, and mutually transfuse vigour and vivacity, the one into the other. Keep open the passage between your heads and hearts, that every truth may go to the quick.

Ver. 18. Seeketh his own glory] All seducers are self-seekers, and drive on their own interests, how to set up themselves in the hearts of the people: they study their own share more than God's, and yet they would seem to do otherwise; as those proud boasters that cried out, "Let the Lord be glorified," #Isa 66:5; and the Swenckfeldians (stenck-feldians Luther calleth them, from the ill-savour of their opinions) entitled themselves with that glorious name, "The confessors of the glory of Christ." Schlusserib.

Ver. 19. Did not Moses give you the law] q.d. You bear me still an old grudge, an aching tooth, for healing an impotent man upon the sabbath day, #Joh 5:9. But Quis tulerit Gracchos, &c. (Juv.) Yourselves are greater sabbath breakers a fair deal. Publius Clodius (the most irreligious of all the Romans), religionem in Ciceronis domo neglectam questus est, complained of Cicero's family, for neglect of religion. {a} Who so forward to cry, Treason, treason, as Athaliah the arch-traitor alive? and who cry out so much, Persecution, persecution, as Papists and other fierce persecutors?

Ver. 20. Thou hast a devil] This he passeth by as a frontless slander, not worth refuting, but proceeds to maintain the lawfulness of what he had done on the sabbath day. Sincerity throws off slanders, as Paul did the viper; yea, in a holy scorn, it laughs at them, as the wild ass does at the horse and his rider. Wicellius and Cochleus say that we betrayed the Rhodes (saith Melancthon), and some other such foul businesses they lay to our charge. These are such gross lies, that we need not disprove them; let them tell as many such lies of us as they will, dicant ipsi talia quoad velint, our names are oiled, they will not stick.

Ver. 21. And ye all marvel] i.e. ye all murmur: but he speaks the best of them, as not willing to enrage them.

Ver. 22. Moses therefore] Tam severus sabbati exactor, As strict as he was for the observation of the sabbath, yet he was not against circumcision, and the healing again of the child's wound, upon that day. And if any object that circumcision was a sacrament, and so a sabbath day's work, it may be answered, 1. That this cure also was much to the glory of God. 2. That the man was cured on both sides, and received both sanitatem in corpore, et sanctitatem in corde, health in the body and purity of the heart.

Ye on the sabbath day circumcise] q.d. If you may wound a man on the sabbath day, may not I heal one? If you may heal on the sabbath one member of the circumcised, may not I make a man whole every whit? If you be at pains to cure such a one with your hand, may not I without pains cure a man with my word only? What if circumcision be a sacrament? so was this that I have done a special means of bringing much glory to God.

Ver. 23. That the law of Moses should not be broken] Gr. loosened, shattered. The law is one entire copulative; so that he that offendeth in any point is guilty of all, #Jas 2:10. Hence when the sabbath was broken, the Lord said to Moses, "How long refuse ye to keep my commandments and my laws?" #Ex 16:28.

Ver. 24. Judge not according to the appearance] Nothing is more ordinary with many than to precipitate a censure, to exercise their critics, and to reprehend that which they do not comprehend. Arbitror saith Augustine (de Trim i. 3), nonnullos opinaturos me sensisse quod non sensi, aut non sensisse quod sensi, I suppose that several in reading some places in my books will think that I thought that which never came into my mind to think, and the contrary. This was his fear, and this befell him, as Baronius witnesseth. Compertum est, saith Erasmus. It is well known that many points are condemned as heretical in Luther's books, which in Augustine's and Bernard's books are read and received for good and orthodox. {a} Hill, in his Quartern of Reasons, saith, the Catholics follow the Bible, but the Protestants force the Bible to follow them. And the author of the Gag for the New Gospel assures his Catholics, that our condemnation is so expressly set down in our own Bibles, and is so clear to all the world, that nothing more needs hereto than that they know to read, and to have their eyes in their heads, at the opening of our Bible. This is their judgment of us. But what among themselves! He that tastes an egg, saith Erasmus, at an undue time, is cast into prison, and made to answer for his heresy; but he that spends all the Lord's day in drinking, drabbing, dicing, is called a good fellow, and passeth unpunished. Qui totam diem Dominicam vacat temulentiae scortis et aleae audit bellus homo, &c.

Ver. 25. Then said some of them of Jerusalem] That knew more of the ruler's mind than the common people, who believed not that there was any such deadly designs, #Joh 7:26. Howbeit these wits of Jerusalem take no notice at all of God's hand in Christ's deliverance, and his present boldness in so extreme a danger.

Ver. 26. But lo, he speaketh boldly, and they say nothing to him] God restrained them, putting his bit in their jaws, his hook in their nostrils. In the year 1159, lived John, bishop of Salisbury, qui et praesens praesentem Pontificem redarguit, et Polycraticon conscripsit, in quo clerum libere flagellat, who reproved the pope to his face, and wrote his Polycraticon, wherein he freely scourgeth the clergy. (Jacob. Revius.) After this, Robert Grossthead, bishop of Lincoln, called the pope in a letter, Antichrist sitting in the chair of Pestilence, and next to Lucifer himself. As in battle they that stand it out do usually speed best; so here, many times.

Ver. 27. No man knoweth whence he is] This error might arise out of some texts of Scripture misunderstood, as #Isa 53:8 Ps 110:4. We should, whenever we open the Bible, pray, "Lord, open mine eyes, that I may see the wondrous things of thy law," #Ps 119:18.

Ver. 28. Ye both know me] Either this is an irony, or else a heavy aggravation of their sin; a proof that they sinned that sin unto death, #1Jo 5:16, for which there remains no more sacrifice, #Heb 10:26. Two sorts of men in our times are in danger of this sin: 1. Hypocritical professors. 2. Those they call the wits of the world, your most knowing men.

Ver. 29. But I know him] And am known of him. I will not therefore be baffled or beaten out of my confident boasting by any your frontless affronts or basest buffooneries.

Ver. 30. Because his hour was not yet come] i.e. God would not suffer them. Those that bandy and bend their forces against the Lord and his Anointed are bounded by him, in whose hands alone are the issues of death, with the manner and time.

Ver. 31. Many of the people believed on him] Some fruit followed his doctrine; these lesser fishes began to bite. They are said to believe that were not altogether averse, but began to be better affected. The very first stirrings in the womb of grace are accepted of God, #Eph 2:1; he blesseth our buds, #Isa 44:5.

Ver. 32. The Pharisees heard] They had their scouts, and lay perdu to listen, and to keep down Christ. Like unto these are the Jesuits of this day, who give out that the devil stirred up Luther to trouble the Church; and God hath sent them forth to withstand and hinder him.

Ver. 33. Yet a little while am I with you] Christ is but a while with men in the opportunities of grace. There is a prime of man's life, yea, a prime of every man's ministry. Christ stands (not sits at the door) and knocks. Now, while one is standing, he is going.

Ver. 34. Ye shall seek me, &c.] Because ye shall die in your sins, which is worse than to die in a ditch.

Ver. 35. Teach the Gentiles] Which the Jews could not endure to think on. They profess to this day, that rather than the heathen bastards should have benefit by their Messiah, they would crucify him over and over, #Lu 4:25-29. The rustics of Nazareth understood our Saviour of preaching to the Gentiles, which put them into an anger, and him into a danger.

Ver. 36. What manner of saying is this?] He would not tell the Jews what he meant by this dark saying. His disciples he told afterwards, in #Joh 13:1-14:31. "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him," #Ps 25:14: when the wicked shall be neither of his court nor council.

Ver. 37. In the last day] In this eighth day (which the Jews called Hosanna Rabbah) they read the last section of the law, and likewise began the first; lest they might otherwise seem more joyful in ending their sections than willing to begin them. (Tremel. ex Talmud.) Upon this day also, by the institution (say they) of Haggai and Zechariah (but more likely by their own superstition), they did, with great solemnity and joy, bring great store of water from the river Shiloh to the temple; where it being delivered unto the priests, it was poured upon the altar, together with wine; and all the people sang that of the prophet, #Isa 12:3 "With joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation." Hereunto our Saviour is thought to allude, #Joh 7:38 "Out of his belly shall flow rivers of water"; provided that he believe in me, so as the Scripture saith he should. For so (after Chrysostom) Heinsius, De Dieu, and others expound it.

He that believeth on me, as the Scripture hath said] sc. That men should believe on me, to such I make a promise, that out of his belly, that is (by a catachresis), <sub>{a}</sub> out of the bosom and bottom of his soul

"shall flow rivers," &c.: he shall not only have sufficient for himself, but wherewith to refresh others.

{a} Improper use of words; application of a term to a thing which it does not properly denote; abuse or perversion of a trope or metaphor. (ED)

Ver. 38. {See Trapp on "Joh 7:37"}

Ver. 39. But this spake he of the Spirit] Which is many times compared (as to fire, so) to water for its properties of cooling, cleansing, quenching thirst, fructifying, &c.

Should receive] Princes at their inauguration use to receive great gifts from their subjects. Christ also received gifts, not of his subjects, but of his Father, #Ps 68:18; and it was for men, and on men he bestowed them, #Eph 4:8, as holding it a "more blessed thing to give than to receive," #Ac 20:35.

Because that Jesus was not yet glorified] As the sun, the nearer it runs to the earth, the weaker (as in winter); but the higher in heaven, the hotter and more effectual; so this Sun of righteousness.

Ver. 40. Of a truth this is the prophet] This was somewhat, but not enough; this was well, but not all. The buzzard's wings serve him to get up a little from the earth, but not to bear him up far toward heaven.

Ver. 41. Shall Christ come out of Galilee?] Satan (that subtle sophister), though he confessed Christ to be the Holy One of God, #Mr 1:24, yet he calleth him Jesus of Nazareth, to nourish the error of the multitude, that thought he was born there, and so not the Messiah. Neither did his cunning deceive him, as here appeareth. Satan etsi semel videatur verax, millies est mendax, et semper fallax, saith Bucholcerus. Diabolus capite blanditur, ventre oblectat, et cauda ligat, saith Rupertus.

Others said, This is the Christ] Why, this was somewhat like; and if they held them to this, no man can say with the fiducial assent of his heart, "that Jesus is the Christ, but by the Holy Ghost," #1Co 12:3. He was Christ before he was Jesus, #Joh 6:27. Jesus is nothing else but Christus protensus et effusus, #So 1:5. Christ shows him to be a sealed Saviour, anointed and appointed by the Father to that blessed office.

Shall Christ come out of Galilee?] Galilee of the Gentiles, whose manners likely they had learned by so near neighbourhood. Some countries have an ill name. Can any good come out of Nazareth? Hesiod complains of Ascre where he was born, that it was good for nothing (Ασκη χειμα κακη, θερος αργαλη, &c.) In mea patria, saith Jerome, Deus est venter, et in diem venit, et sanctor est ille qui ditior. In my country they are neither temperate, nor provident, nor godly given. And Buchanan cries out that he was born, nec caelo, nec solo per saeculo erudite, where learning was not in fashion. But as little Hippo was better known by great Austin, who was bishop of it, than he by Hippo; so was Galilee by Christ, than he by Galilee. And as hardly as it was thought of, he is not ashamed to call himself Jesus of Nazareth, #Ac 22:8, which yet was commonly cast as a reproach upon him.

Ver. 42. Hath not the Scripture said?] {See Trapp on "Mt 2:5"}

Ver. 43. So there was a division] And yet these were the visible Church and favourers of Christ. That is no just cause of offence then that some take at our dissensions. Rare enim abit sine aliquibus dissensionibus etiam inter bonos et sanctos haec vita (Bucholcer), still Satan is thus busy, and Christians are thus improvident, that as if they lacked enemies, they deal blows among themselves, and fly in one another's faces. It was never well since the Church was "all of one heart and one soul, neither was there any controversy at all among them," as one ancient Greek copy hath added to that text, #Ac 4:32.

Ver. 44. Some of them would have taken him] Semper crudelis est superstitio. There can be no greater argument of an ill cause than a bloody persecution: whereas truth holds herself by mildness, and is promoted by patience.

Ver. 45. Why have you not brought him?] Out of the pride of their power they wonder what should hinder. But the Lord knoweth how to deliver his, #2Pe 2:9; and wherein the enemies deal proudly, he is above them, #Ex 18:11.

Ver. 46. Never man spake like this man] It is good to come to the world, though with ill intent; they that come to see fashions only, as Moses came to the bush, may be called as he was. They that come but to sleep, may be taken napping, as Father Latimer saith. They that come to catch, may be caught, as these in the text. The serpent that comes forth to sting, may be charmed ere he go back. When Henry Zutphen was preacher at Breme, the holy Catholics could not be idle, but sent their chaplains to every sermon, to trap him in his words. But God (whose footpaths are in the midst of the flood) would have his marvellous power to be seen in them, for he converted many of them; insomuch, that the greater number of them that were sent to hearken, did openly witness his doctrine to be God's truth, against which no man can contend, and such as in all their life before they had not heard, persuading them likewise that they, forsaking all impiety, should follow the word of God, and believe the same, if they would be saved. But the chief priests, canons, and monks were so indurate and hardened, with Pharaoh, that they became the worse for these admonitions.

Never man spake] For he spake with grace, #Ps 45:2, and with gravity, #Mt 7:29. E cuius ore nil temere excidit, saith Scaliger, of Virgil, may we much more of Christ; they were all oracles that he uttered, honey drops that fell from him. Of Christ it might better be said than ever it was of Marcus Crassus, the Roman orator, Caeteros a Crasso semper omnes, illo autem die etiam ipsum a sese superatum. Cic. de Orat. lib. i.

Ver. 47. Are ye also deceived?] As the rude rabble are? we looked that you should have stuck to us. How ill taken was England's defection from the pope's devotion! England was the first that took upon it the pope's yoke, and the first that shook it off again. What wondering was there at Luther, Vergerius, Caracciolus, and other stiff Papists, when they made escape out of Babylon! Apostates they were called for so doing, and Luther confesseth the action; but withal addeth, that they were holy apostates, and had made defection only from the devil, who therefore set up his bristles at them, and pursued them with so much spite. Prorsus Satan est Lutherus, Satan is entirely Lutheran, saith he in a certain epistle, sed Christus vivit et regnat, Amen, but Christ lives and reigns, Amen. (Ep. ad Spalat.)

Ver. 48. Have any of the rulers, &c.] Argumentum stultum, saith Theophylact. Sapientes sapienter in infernum descendunt, saith one. And Potentes potenter torquebuntur, saith another. None so deep in hell as knowing men; they are too wise to be saved by the foolishness of preaching. But Paul, the babbler, must be heard, ere heaven can be had.

Ver. 49. But this people, &c.] He howled and wept (said Dr Story concerning Philpot) in the convocation house, and made such ado as never man did, even as all the heretics do when they lack learning to answer. When as yet Mr Philpot disputing in the convocation house against the sacrament of the altar, made this offer: If I shall not be able to maintain by God's word that I have said, and confound any six of you, let me be burned with as many fagots as be in London, before the court gate: and this he uttered with great vehemency of spirit, which the cankered doctor haply called howling and weeping.

Ver. 50. Nicodemus saith unto them] Good blood will not belie itself; love, as fire, will not long be hidden. Croesus's dumb son could not but speak to see his father ready to be slain, <sup>{a}</sup> Nicodemus, though hitherto a night bird, now shows himself for Christ in a council. How far had Judas outstripped Nicodemus till it came to the upshot! Nicodemus was only a night professor, Judas in the sight of all. Nicodemus a slow scholar, Judas a forward preacher. Yet at last, when Judas betrayed Christ in the night, Nicodemus faithfully professed him in the day, &c.

Ver. 51. Doth our law condemn any man] This was no great matter to say, and yet it did the deed; so God would have it. Now, he is ever like himself; and whensoever he pleaseth, he both can and will dissipate all our enemies' endeavours, and that in the very nick of time. This we have had plain and plentiful experience of in this land lately, when we were at such an under, that our enemies seemed to be above fear, and we below hope: when there was not faith in earth to believe, then were there bowels in heaven to turn our captivity like streams in the south.

Before it hear him, and know what he doth?] Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester, was condemned before heard; and murdered by the Popish bishop. So was the Lord Cromwell, whose enemies dared not bring him to his answer, nor try him by his peers, but procured an act of attainder, and so put him to death unheard.

Ver. 52. Art thou also of Galilee?] They thought to mock him out of his religion, as the devil doth many at this day. But Nicodemus was well resolved; and if we can bear reproach for Christ, it is an argument we mean to stick to him; as the servant in the law, that was brought to be bored in the ear. And Cajetan gives the reason, Ut si non horreret servitutum, horreret saltem ignominiam publicam, ut multos habeat inspectores et testes.

Ver. 53. And every man went, &c.] Nicodemus, with one word seasonably put in, dissolves the council; and keeps them, for this time, from attempting against Christ. See what one man may do against a mischievous multitude otherwise. Ille regit dictis animos, et pectora mulcet. (Virgil.) What a stickler was Nehemiah at Jerusalem, Paphnutius at the Nicene Council, Wycliffe, Huss, Luther, in their generations. It is good to be doing, though there be few or none to second us; and though we be asked, as that good Bishop Liberius was by the Arian emperor Constantius, Quota pars es tu orbis terrarum? (Theodoret, ii. 16.) It is said of Luther, Quod unus homo solus totius orbis impetum sustinuerit.

Chapter 8

Ver. 1. Jesus went unto the mount of Olives] His usual oratory. There he prayed by night, and then early in the morning he came again into the temple to preach. Thus he divided his time between praying and preaching. So did the ministers of the Old Testament, #De 33:10, and of the New, #Ac 6:2. So must all who will do good of it; since Paul may plant, Apollos water, but God only gives increase, #1Co 3:6.

Ver. 2. And taught them] {See Trapp on "Joh 8:1"}

Ver. 3. And the scribes, &c.] Deest haec historia apud quamplurimos interpretes. (Beza.)

Ver. 4. In the very act] Gr. in the very theft; perhaps to intimate the great theft that is in adultery, whiles the child of a stranger carries away the goods or lands of the family; which therefore the adulteress is bound in conscience to confess, εἴ ψυτοφωρῶ. St Paul gives charge, that no man go beyond and defraud his brother in the matter; that is, in the matter of the marriage bed; but that every one possess his vessel, that is, his wife, the weaker vessel in sanctification and honour, as some interpret it. {a}

Ver. 5. Such should be stoned] Adultery was to be punished with death. Society and the purity of posterity could not otherwise continue among men; which is well observed by divines to be the reason why adultery is named, under it all uncleanness being forbidden, when yet other violations are more heinous, as sodomy and bestiality; nevertheless, other sins do not so directly fight against society, which the law mainly respects. (Huet of Cons.)

Ver. 6. And with his finger wrote on the ground] That he wrote downward (as the Syrians then did, and as the Chinese now do, and so their lines at the top do begin again) is very probable. {a} But what he wrote (whether those words, #Jer 22:29, or those #Mt 7:3) nothing certain can be determined; the Scripture is silent; and where the Scripture hath not a tongue, we need not have ears; write he did (like himself we may be sure, as Quintilian saith of Julius Caesar, illum eodem animo scripsisse, quo bellavit, that he wrote with the same spirit he sought,) and perhaps he thus wrote on the ground to show that sin, which is written before God, #Isa 65:6, and graven as it were with a pen of iron, and with the point of a diamond, #Jer 17:1, is pardoned and blotted out by Christ as easily as a writing slightly made in the dust.

Ver. 7. He that is without sin among you] Not that is impeccable, and not subject to sin (as the Greek, αμαρτητος, may here seem to sound), but that allows not himself, wallows not in some gross sin, yea, perhaps in this very sin Clodius aecusat moechum. (Juvenal.) Thus our Saviour wrings those supercilious and censorious hypocrites, who hated virum, non vitium; as it is said of Crassus the Roman, that he was very severe against covetousness in others, when there was not a more covetous person than himself. Carere debet omni vitio qui in alterum paratus eat dicere, said a heathen. {a} He had need be unblamable that blameth another. And therefore the apostle, after that he had said, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but reprove them rather"; he soon after addeth, "walk circumspectly, not as fools," &c., #Eph 5:11,15.

Ver. 8. And again he stooped down] In sign of slighting, or that he might give them the more confidence of going out, see #Joh 8:6. Our Saviour dealt by this adulteress somewhat like as the Areopagites dealt by the dame of Smyrna, whom they appointed to appear some hundred years after, to show that they would neither condemn nor acquit her. (Rous, Arch. Att.)

Ver. 9. Convicted by their own conscience] Which is God's spy and man's overseer, index, iudex, vindex: a sign, a judge a defender, so that sinners are self-condemned αυτοκατακριτοι, and often betrayed by their own blushing and heart beating, when yet the offence is secret. Yea, a man feels an inward shame in his own heart, disgracing and abusing him, though he make no outward show of it. For albeit an innocent person, upon the foulness of an aspersion, may conceive shame, as did David, #Ps 44:15, yet it is usually the effect of an ill conscience.

Ver. 10. Where are those thine accusers?] She might have answered as Tertullian in another case not unlike, Facti sunt a corde suo fugitivi, they are fled before their own consciences, which convicted them, as it were, by argument, #Joh 8:9, ελεγχόμενοι.

Ver. 11. Neither do I condemn thee] Hence an Anabaptist will argue that adultery is not to be punished (as they did from that text, "whoremongers and adulterers God will judge," therefore men ought not to meddle with them). But they may as well say that inheritances are not to be divided between brethren, because our Saviour refused to divide them, #Lu 12:14, it being without the lists of his calling, no proper employment of his.

Ver. 12. I am the light of the world] Αυτοφως, ut Plato loquitur, quia Αυταυτος, ut Scaliger.

The light of life] Light in good and bad men differs as the light of the sun (wherein is the influence of an enlivening power) and the light of torches.

Ver. 13. Thy record is not true] i.e. it is not sure and sufficient. There is the same Hebrew word for veritas and firmitas, truth and certainty.

Ver. 14. Yet my record is true] i.e. For I am "Amen, the faithful and true witness," #Re 3:14, yea, the God of Amen, #Isa 65:16, and so the only sufficient witness concerning myself.

Ver. 15. I judge no man] viz. after the flesh, as ye do. Christians are diametrically opposite to the world; yea, they have their feet there where other men's heads are; they go not only another, but an upper way to work, #Pr 15:24. Like eagles, they delight in high flying.

Ver. 16. For I am not alone] But all one with the Father.

Ver. 17. It is also written in your law] He calleth it their law, because he was above law; and needed not (but for their weaknass) to have confirmed thus his doctrine by Scripture; as being to be believed upon his bare word, αυτοπιστος.

Ver. 18. I am one that bear witness, &c.] Christ is alius from his Father, not aliud; another person, not another thing. As in the person of Christ there is aliud et aliud another and another (against Eutyches), not alius et alius different and different (against Nestorius). In this text, the Divinity of Christ is plainly distinguished from his humanity; how else should he and the Father be two witnesses to himself?

Ver. 19. If ye had known me, &c.] For milk is not so like milk as Christ is like his Father.

Ver. 20. For his hour was not yet come] And they could neither hasten it nor prevent it. No man hath power over the life of another. "My times are in thine hand," saith David. {See Trapp on "Joh 7:44"}

Ver. 21. Ye shall die in your sins] A heavy doom, the very door to damnation. It is a sad thing to die in prison, to die in a ditch, but far worse to die in your sins. This is to be slain with death, according to that, #Re 2:21 "I will kill her children with death." All men die, but wicked men only are killed with death. As a godly man said, that he did aegrotare vitaliter, so do all the righteous, mori vitaliter, because they have hope in their death; which to them is as the valley of Achor, a door of hope to give entrance into Paradise. Whereas to the wicked it is as a trap door to let them into hell; so that it is a just wonder, that foreseeing their danger they go not roaring and raving out of the world. Nothing should be done (we say) to trouble a dying person, no shrieking or crying out. Oh, take heed and prevent the shriekings of conscience at that hour, &c. Take heed ye die not in your sin, in that your sin of unbelief, εν τη αμαρτια, in hoc peccato in this sin, (as Beza here rendereth it), for unbelief shuts a man up close, prisoner in the law's dark dungeon, till death come with a writ of Habeas corpus, let you have the body, and hell with a writ of Habeas animam, &c. let you have the soul.

Ver. 22. Will be kill himself] q.d. Then indeed we cannot, because we will not bear him company in so vile an act. A scurrilous jeer; so little did the heart piercing sermons of our Saviour work upon them.

Ver. 23. Ye are from beneath] Vos infernales estis, Ego Supernus. (Beza.) So the wicked are called the inhabitants of the earth and of the sea, #Re 12:12, in opposition to the Church, which is said to be in heaven, and called "Jerusalem which is above," #Ga 4:26.

Ver. 24. For if ye believe not, &c.] And yet Venator the Arminian saith, Nego hanc propositionem, Nemo potest salvus fieri, qui Christo per veram fidem non est insitus. Is not this to contradict Christ to his face; what an os durum hard speech is this!

Ver. 25. Even the same that I said, &c.] To wit, "the way, the truth, and the life." Some render it thus: Prorsus id quod loquor vobiscum, I am the very same Word that I speak with you.

Ver. 26. I have many things to say] But I see I do but lose my sweet words upon you. I shall therefore turn you over to my Father with a non convertentur, not turn over that he may take an order with you, and make you hear the rod, since you would not the word, #Mic 6:9. Those that tremble not in hearing shall be ground to pieces in feeling, said blessed Bradford.

Ver. 27. They understood not] Though he cited them to God's dreadful tribunal, and threatened them with his judgment. The devil had strangely stupefied them; like the smith's dog, whom neither the hammer above him nor the sparks of fire falling round about him can awake; like birds in a belfry or fishes in the sea, not frightened at any ringing or roaring made there.

Ver. 28. When ye have lifted up the Son, &c.] 1. Upon the cross, as the brazen serpent was upon a pole. And, 2. By the cross to the crown, though they intended no such thing. If there be any way to heaven on horseback (said Bradford) it is by the cross.

Ver. 29. And he that sent me is with me] So that I shall not labour altogether in vain, but accomplish the work that he hath given me to do. So shall all God's faithful ministers (though they may think all their labour lost, and be ready to cry out, Eheu quam pingui macer est mihi taurus in arvo). Yet, if they strive to do always those things that please him, he will both protect and prosper them.

Ver. 30. Many believed on him] {See Trapp on "Joh 7:31"}

Abideth not in the house] Is not heir of the promises; though it be ordinary with such praesumendo sperare, et sperando perire (as one saith), to presume and perish.

Ver. 31. If ye continue in my word] Non quaeruntur in Christianis initia, sed finis, said Jerome. And that which is but almost done is not done, saith Basil. {a} It is the evening that crowns the day, and the last act that commends the whole scene. Temporary flashings are but like conduits running with wine at the coronation, that will not hold; or like a land flood, that seems to be a great sea, but comes to nothing.

{a} το παρ ολιγον γεγονος, ου γεγονεν.

Ver. 32. The truth shall make you free] From the tyranny of sin and terror of hell. Paul's freedom saved him from whipping, #Ac 22:29, this, from perishing.

Ver. 33. Were never in bondage] When yet they were scarcely ever out of bondage to one enemy or another. At this time they were vassals to the Romans. But brag is a good dog. Pride will bud, #Eze 7:10. Spaniards are said to be impudent braggers and extremely proud, in the lowest ebb of fortune. There is not a more vain glorious people this day under heaven than the Jews (saith Alsted). Antiquum obtinent, old stubborn men, they are no changelings, they fill up the measure of their fathers' sins.

Ver. 34. Is the servant of sin] Hath as many lords as lusts: {a} that as Augustine said of Rome in her pride, she conquered countries, but was vanquished by vices; {b} and as the Persian kings commanded the whole world, but were commanded by their wives and concubines; so is it with sin's slaves. This slavery they may easily shake off, saith Seneca; wherein the wise man was utterly out, heavenly wide, as Sir Philip Sidney translath toto errat caelo.

Ver. 35. But the Son abideth ever] This is a part of that spiritual birthright, #Joh 1:12. God hath charged Christ to see to the safekeeping of the body and soul of every true believer, #Joh 6:39,40.

Ver. 36. Free indeed] Not seemingly so, or in conceit only, as those lost libertines, #2Pe 2:1,19. Ahaz thought himself helped or hurt by the gods of Syria; but he only thought so, #2Ch 28:23, and all such fond thoughts perish, #Ps 146:4.

Ver. 37. I know that ye are Abraham's seed] But that will not bear you out; nay, you will fare the worse for it, #Ro 2:9; the Jew is first in punishment, because first in privilege. It was cold comfort to Dives, in flames, that Abraham called him son; to Judas, that Christ called him friend; or to the rebellious Jews, that God calleth them his people; since they were the people of his wrath, and the people of his curse, and should speed no better than the children of the Ethiopians, #Am 9:7.

Because my word hath no place] This was worse than the former, because the root of it; even an evil heart of unbelief, which holds a man in a universal pollution, and maketh him a kill Christ.

Ver. 38. And ye do] Or, do ye that which ye have seen with your father, and so show yourselves the devil's imps, brats of fathomless perdition: do so.

Ver. 39. Abraham is our father] But it ill appeareth by your practice. Degenerate plants ye are, and such as shame your father, as much as Augustus' three children did him, whom he usually called his tres vomicas, tria carcinomata, three botches and carbuncles.

Ver. 40. A man that hath told you the truth] Yea, but you tell them not toothless truth, but such as breeds hatred. He that prizeth (preacheth) truth, shall never prosper by the possession or profession thereof, saith Sir Walter Raleigh. And, truth is a good mistress, saith another; but he that followeth her too close at heels, may hap have his teeth struck out. The hearing of truth galls, as they write of some creatures, that they have fel in aure. Praedicare, nihil aliud est, quam derivare in se furorem mundi, said Luther, who had the experience of it.

Ver. 41. We have one Father, even God] Yet God is not in their heads, #Ps 10:4, nor heart, #Ps 14:1, nor words, #Ps 12:4, nor ways, #Tit 1:16. In such a posture of distance, nay, defiance, stand wicked men. And yet none so forward to call God Father, #Jer 3:4,5.

Ver. 42. If God were your Father] So that there is no true piety nor fear of God where Christ is rejected. Frustra utitur, qui Christo non innititur; He enjoys in vain who does not lean on Christ. saith Bernard. If the historian would say, Ut quisque Seiano intimus, ita ad Caesaris amicitiam validus: contra, quibus inoffensus esset, metu et sordibus conflictabantur. (Tacitus.) No man could be inward with the emperor but by the favour of Sejanus; and to be out with him, was to be utterly unhappy. How much more may we say the same of Christ, who is all in all with the Father? If any will be Christless, they must be comfortless.

Ver. 43. Why do ye not understand my speech?] Any more than if I spake to you in a strange language. So many of our hearers.

Ver. 44. Ye are of your father the devil] Who hath set his limbs in you, so that ye are as like him as if spit out of his mouth. Satan is called the god of this world, because as God at first did but speak the word, and it was done; so if the devil do but hold up his finger, give the least hint, they obey him.

The lusts of your father ye will do] If the fruits of the flesh (said Bradford) grow out of the trees of your hearts, surely, surely, the devil is at inn with you. You are his birds, whom when he hath well fed, he will broach you and eat you, chew you and champ you, world without end, in eternal woe and misery, &c.

And abode not in the truth] Si Satan in conspectu Dei tantas res ausus est, quid apud nos non audebit? (Bucholcer.)

When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own] And so when we do evil, we work de nostro, et secundum hominem, #1Co 3:3. It is as impossible for us naturally to do good as for a toad to spit cordials.

For he is a liar, and the father of it] The devil did only equivocate to our first parents, and yet is here called a liar, and #2Co 11:3, a deceiver. A lie hath been always held hateful; but equivocation is now set forth of a later impression. The Jesuits have called back this pest from hell, lately, for the comfort of afflicted Catholics, as arch-priest Blackwell and provincial Garnet shamed not to profess. Est autem Satanae pectus semper faecundissimum mendaciis, saith Luther. He began his kingdom by a lie, and by lies he upholds it, as were easy to instance. {See Trapp on "Ge 3:1"} &c.

Ver. 45. And because I tell you the truth] {See Trapp on "Joh 8:40"}

Ver. 46. Which of you convinceth me of sin] q.d. Have you anything against my life, that ye thus stiffly refuse to receive my doctrine? Do not (as every minister should do) vivere concionibus, concionari moribus, live sermons, as well as preach them? Paul knew nothing by himself, #1Co 4:4. And Chrysostom saith that the souls and lives of ministers should be purer than the sunbeams.

Ver. 47. He that is of God heareth God's word] With attention of body, intention of mind, and retention of memory. And this is God's earmark.

Ye therefore hear not] But either refuse or rage at what you hear, as tigers do at the sound of a drum. And this is a sore sign of a reprobate goat.

Ver. 48. That thou art a Samaritan] And why a Samaritan, think, but that they thought the worst word in their bellies good enough for him? Malice cares not what it saith, so it may kill or gall; and these dead dogs (as he calleth Shimei, #2Sa 16:9) will be barking. The primitive persecutors used to put Christians into bears' and dogs' skins, or other ugly creatures, and then bait them; so do the wicked put the saints into ugly conceits, and then speak against them.

Ver. 49. I have not a devil] This crime touched his doctrine (as the other his person only), therefore he makes answer to it; but no otherwise than by a simple denial, which in some cases is sufficient. Didicit ille maledicere, et ego contemnere, That one determine to slander and I disdain him, in Tacitus. If a wise man speak evil of thee, endure him; if a fool, pardon him, saith another. If Genebrard rail upon Calvin, if Bolsecus or Baldwin call him twenty devils, he can slight or pity them. As, if Luther call me a devil, saith he, yet I will honour him as a servant of God. A reviler, as he affirmeth without reason, so he may be dismissed without refutation.

Ver. 50. There is one that seeketh and judgeth] The less a man strives for himself, the more is God his champion; those that honour him he will honour. Those that drown all self-respects in his glory, and study his share more than their own, shall he found to "praise, and honour, and glory," in that great amphitheatre at the last day, #1Pe 1:7.

Ver. 51. Verily I say unto you] This he speaketh for the comfort of the better sort among those refractory Jews whom he had so sharply handled. So Zuinglius, when in his sermons he had thundered out God's judgments against the wicked, he would commonly conclude with these words, Probe vir, hoc nihil ad te: this is not spoken to thee, thou good soul.

He shall never see death] That is, shall never taste of death, as the Jews interpret it, #Joh 8:52. Chrysostom distinguisheth between seeing and tasting death. Sed hallucinatur; eodem enim recidunt, saith Drusius. But Chrysostom is out here, for they are the same. And our Saviour meaneth that such a one shall die not eternally; he shall mori vitaliter, as one saith, live though he die. (See Mr Dugard's Death and the Grave.)

Ver. 52. Now we know thou hast a devil] Thus, whether Christ pipe or weep to these froward children, he prevails nothing. Neither promises nor menaces affect reprobates, neque duci ad Christum, neque trahi possunt, as Calvin here noteth, they will neither be led unto Christ nor drawn to him.

Ver. 53. Art thou greater than our father Abraham which is dead?] They rise no higher than to a natural life. "Our life is hid with Christ in God," #Col 3:3, as the pearl is hid in the shell, as Christ was hidden under the carpenter's son, so as that the buzzards of this world could see no beauty in him.

Ver. 54. It is my Father that honoureth me] According to that, "Them that honour me, I will honour," #1Sa 2:30; this is a bargain of God's own making. Fame follows virtue, as the shadow the body; or if not, yet she is proprio contenta theatro, content with her own applause.

Ver. 55. Yet ye have not known him] There is a twofold knowledge of God. 1. Apprehensive; 2. Affective, or cognoscitiva, standing in speculation, and directiva vitae.

Ver. 56. Your father Abraham rejoiced to see] He saw it afar off, and saluted it, ασπασαμενοι, #Heb 11:13. His good old heart danced levaltos within him, as children use to dance about a bonfire (so the word ηγαλλιασατο signifies), with an exuberance of joy, that joy of faith. The Fathers say that he saw Christ's birth at the valley of Mamre, #Ge 18:1-16, and his passion in the mount Moriah, #Ge 22:3-14

Ver. 57. Thou art not yet fifty] No, nor much past thirty; and yet he had so spent himself in winning souls and weeping over the hardness of men's hearts, that he seemed to the Jews to be much older than he was, as some conceive. Sure it is that Mr John Fox, the martyrologue, by the infinite pains that he took in compiling that elaborate work (which he finished in eleven years without the help of any other man), grew so lean and withered that his friends knew him not.

Ver. 58. Before Abraham was, I am] "I am that I am," in regard of mine eternal generation. And as mediator, "I am Jesus Christ, yesterday, today, and for ever," #Heb 13:8.

Ver. 59. Then took they up stones] This is merces mundi, the world's wages. Let us look up with Stephen, and see heaven, as he did, through a shower of stones.

Chapter 9

Ver. 1. He saw a man which was blind] This was enough to move Christ to mercy, the sight of a fit object. When God sets us up an altar be we ready with our sacrifice.

Ver. 2. Who did sin, this man?] How could he sin before he was born? But the disciples dreamed of a Pythagorical transanimation; hence this foolish question. Imbuti erant Iudaei dogmate μετεμψυχωσεως. Beza.

Ver. 3. But that the works of God, &c.] Hinc Alexander Ales, Poena, inquit, duplicem habet ordinationem, Unam ad culpam, quae praecedit; alteram ad gloriam, quam praecedit. God sometimes afflicts for his own glory, but sin is ever at the bottom. And though God does not always afflict his for sin, as Job, yet Job shall do well to consider that God "exacteth of him less than his iniquity deserveth," as Zophar telleth him, #Job 11:6.

Ver. 4. While it is day] As other men do, #Ps 104:22. None can say he shall have twelve hours to his day. And night (death) is a time of receiving wages, not of doing work. On this moment depends eternity; on the weakest wire hangs the greatest weight.

Ver. 5. I am the light of the world] See #Joh 12:46. He is light essential, the Father of lights, the Sun of righteousness; who at his nativity was as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber, in his life rejoiced as a strong man to run his race, #Ps 19:5; in his passion he was clouded, brake forth in his resurrection, darts out his beams of grace since his ascension, and shall finish all at his return to judgment.

Ver. 6. Made clay] As he did at first in making man (the poets tell us some such thing of their Prometheus), to show that this cure was done by that Almighty power that he put forth in the Creation.

Ver. 7. He went his way and washed] He obeyed Christ blindly, he looked not upon Siloam with Syrian eyes, as Naaman did upon Jordan; but, passing by the unlikelihood of a cure by such means, he believeth, and doth as he was bidden, without questioning.

Ver. 8. Is not this he that sat and begged?] As once blind Belisarius did with Da obolum Belisarulo. Give a coin to Belisarius.

Ver. 9. I am he] Thus their doubting (by divine disposition) made much for the manifestation of Christ's power in the before mentioned miracle.

Ver. 10. How were thine eyes opened?] It is good to ask Christ's illuminates such savoury questions, how they were called out of darkness into marvellous light? what discoveries of himself Christ had made unto them? &c. Austin (Confess. vi. 2) confesseth that before his conversion he was of this opinion, that it was impossible for him to find such comfort as now he did in a Christian life. Cyprian saith as much of himself to his friend Donatus, beginning his epistle thus, Accipe quod sentitur, antequam dicitur.

Ver. 11. I went and washed, and received sight] His blind obedience made him see. Let God be obeyed readily without reasoning or wrangling, and success shall not be lacking. God calleth for Curristas non Quaeristas. Luther.

Ver. 12. I know not] For Christ disappeared, as #Joh 5:13. {See Trapp on "Joh 5:13"}

Ver. 13. They bring him to the Pharisees] Who should have been moved with the miracle to think the better of him that wrought it; and have better informed those that brought the man to them, with what mind soever. But they had conceived such an incurable prejudice, such a deadly hatred against Christ, that what he did they presently condemn, as George Duke of Saxony did Luther's reformation, as the monks of Mentz did the reformation begun there by Hermanus their archbishop, professing that they would rather receive Mahometanism than submit to that new religion, as they called it; as Philip king of Spain would choose rather to have no subjects than Lutheran subjects; and out of a blind and bloody zeal, suffered his eldest son Charles to be murdered by the cruel Inquisition, because he seemed to favour the truth.

Ver. 14. It was the sabbath day] And our Saviour knew it would be as ill resented as that other miracle on the sabbath day done, #Joh 5:9, for which they sought to kill him. Men be they pleased or displeased, duty must be discharged. Tenenda regula, caecos ac duces caecorum negligendos esse.

Ver. 15. How he had received his sight] Gr. how he had recovered his sight. It may be that (to lessen the miracle) they would have had it, that the man had not been born blind, but only recovered that sight that once he had enjoyed. αναβλεπειν proprie est eorum qui videndi facultatem aliquando habuerunt. Malevolence ever strives to deteriorate and deprave that good which it cannot for shame absolutely deny. "An ungodly man diggeth up evil," #Pr 16:27, and a froward fellow forgeth strife, #Pr 16:28; he digs, and then sows the seed of sedition in every furrow where he can find footing.

Ver. 16. This man is not of God] True, if he had indeed made no conscience of keeping the sabbath. Sanctifying the Lord's day in the primitive times was a badge of Christianity. When the question was propounded, Servasti Dominicum? Protect the Sabbath? Hast thou kept the sabbath? the answer was returned, I am a Christian, and may not do otherwise. Christianus sum, intermittere non possum. The enemies and hinderers of sanctifying the sabbath are called unbelievers, vagabonds, and wicked fellows, #Ac 17:2,5. That late great Antisabbatarian prelate (Bp White), so much cast off by the rest after he had served their turns, might well have cried out with Cardinal Wolsey, Surely, if I had been as careful to serve God as I was to please men, I had not been at this pass. Semetipsum detestatus est, quod Regi potius quam Deo studuisset placere. (Sculdet.)

How can a man that is a sinner] Yes, that he may, by divine permission, or at least he may do something like a miracle; as the false prophets and Antichrist. Suetonius tells us that Vespasian cured a blind man by spitting upon his eyes. And Dio testifieth that he healed another that had a weak and withered hand, by treading upon it. And yet Vespasian lived and died a pagan. This therefore was no convincing argument that the Jews here used.

Ver. 17. He is a prophet] The more the Pharisees opposed the truth, the more it appeared. Veritas abscondi erubeseit, saith Tertullian. The Reformation was much furthered in Germany by the Papists' opposition. Among many others two kings wrote against Luther, viz. Henry VIII of England and Ludovicus of Hungary. This kingly title being entered into the controversy, made men more curious. And as it happeneth in combats that the onlookers are ready to favour the weaker and to extol his actions, though they be but mean; so here it stirred up a general inclination toward Luther, saith the author of the Hist. of the Council of Trent. Luther also in an epistle to the Elector of Saxony, triumpheth and derideth the foolish wisdom of the Papists in causing him and the other Protestant princes to rehearse the confession of their faith in a public assembly of the States of Germany, and in sending copies thereof to all the courts of Christendom for advice; whereby the Gospel was more propagated, and the cause of Christ more advanced, than if many preachers had been sent out and licensed.

Ver. 18. But the Jews did not believe] The Pharisees, who held themselves the only Jews, that is, true confessors; like as the Swenckfeldians entitled themselves the "confessors of the glory of Christ"; the Anabaptists style themselves the "meek of the earth"; the Antinomians will needs be called the "hearers of the gospel and of free grace," &c.

Ver. 19. Is this your son?] Here they try another trick to obscure the miracle; but it would not be. "God taketh the wise in their own craftiness." Again, "The Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wise, that they are vain," #1Co 3:19,20.

Ver. 20. We know that this is our son] They answer obliquely and over warily; but Christ had better deserved of them. Squirrels ever set their holes to the sunny side. Political professors, neuter passive Christians, will be sure to keep on the warmer side of the hedge; neither will they launch farther into the sea than they may be sure to return safe to the shore. Cyprian calleth such double minded men, palpatores temporum, in lenitate tantum constantes, giddy brains.

Ver. 21. He is of age] ηλικίαν έχει. Faelix ab ηλικίᾳ ηλικία, say the etymologists, ut faelix sit homo floridae et vegetae aetatis, corpore et animo valens. (Becman.)

Ver. 22. Put out of the synagogue] This was that kind of excommunication they called Niddui, or separation; and such were by the Greeks called Αποδεδοκιμασμενοι and Αμνημονευτοι. There were two other more heavy kind of excommunications in use among the Jews, Cherem and Samatha or Maranatha, which they derive as low as from Enoch, #Jude 14. The heathens also had their public execrations, not rashly to be used against any; Est enim execratio res tristis, et mali ominis, saith Plutarch; who therefore highly commends that Athenian priest, that being commanded by the people to curse Alcibiades, refused to do it. That archflamen of Rome, the pope, is like a wasp; no sooner angry but out comes a sting (an excommunication), which, being once out, is like a fool's dagger, rattling and snapping without an edge. Cum Pontifex Rom. diras in Ludovic 12, Gall. Regem evomeret; Atqui (ait rex) Precandi ille, non imprecandi causa pontifex constitutus est. (Firron. lib. 2. de Gestu. Gallor.) It was grown to a proverb among our forefathers, In nomine Domini incipit omne malum. In the name of God, begins all evil. John Cornford (one of the six last that were burnt in England for the true religion), when he heard himself and his fellows excommunicated, stirred with a vehement zeal of God, and proceeding in a more true excommunication against the Papists, in the name of them all, pronounced sentence against them in these words, In the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by the power of his Holy Spirit and the authority of his holy Catholic and Apostolic Church, we do give here into the hands of Satan to be destroyed, the bodies of all those blasphemers and heretics that do maintain any error against his most holy word, or do condemn his most holy truth for heresy, to the maintaining of any false Church or feigned religion; so that by this thy just judgment, most mighty God, against thine adversaries, thy true religion may be known, to thy glory, and our comforts, and to the edifying of all our nation. Good Lord, so be it.

Ver. 23. He is of age] See #Joh 9:21,22.

Ver. 24. Give God the glory] It appears, #Jos 7:19 1Sa 6:5, that this was some solemn form, in use among that people when they required an oath of delinquents. This the hypocrites made use of, as when the devils adjured Christ by the living God not to cast them out. So their forefathers would persecute godly men, and molest them with Church censures, and then say, "Let the Lord be glorified," #Isa 66:5. With like honesty, as the conspirators in King Richard II's time here in England indorsed all their letters, with "Glory be to God on high, on earth peace, good will towards men." This poor man might have answered as Robert Smith the martyr did, when Bonner began the sentence of death against him, In Dei nomine, In the name of God, Ye begin in a wrong name, said he.

Ver. 25. Whether he be a sinner or no, &c.] That is, a notorious impious man, as you affirm him. And this is an ironic speech; as if he should say, You may make of him what you will, and call him at your pleasure; he is as he is. And this one thing I know, and will testify, that whereas I was blind, now I see; yea, and I see day at a little hole too. If this man were not of God, he could do nothing, #Joh 9:33.

Ver. 26. What did he to thee? how opened he thine eyes?] How fain would envy here have fastened her fangs, and have found somewhat to say, whereby to cast a slur on the miracle. They are even question sick, as those #1Ti 6:4. Et si non aliqua nocuissent, &c. They feed upon their own hearts, because they cannot come at Christ's.

Ver. 27. Will ye also be his disciples?] A bold speech of so mean a man, so little enlightened, to the chief priests and Pharisees. Such was that of Dirick Carver, martyr, to Bonner, Your doctrine is poison and sorcery. If Christ were here, you would put him to a worse death than he was put to before. You say you can make God; you can make a pudding as soon, &c. And that of Henry Lawrence, who being to subscribe the bill of his examination, wrote, Ye are all antichrist, and him ye follow, &c. And that of Anthony Parsons: Thou callest us thieves, said the bishop of Salisbury. I say, quoth Anthony, ye are not only thieves, but murderers, ye are rather bitesheeps than true bishops. (Acts and Mon.)

Ver. 28. Then they reviled him] As an apostate from the law, a noveller, a Nazarite, a disciple of Christ, Thou art his disciple, say they, and therefore a dolt, a dunce; as at this day in Italy and at Rome, the most honourable name of Christian is usually abused to signify. (D. Fulke.) The primitive persecutors painted Christ with an ass's head and a book in his hand (as Tertullian saith), to signify that all his disciples, though they pretended learning, yet they were silly and ignorant people. Est enim Satanae pectus mendaciis faecundissimum, saith Luther. The basest can revile (as the objects did David, #Ps 35:15), and every black mouth cast dirt upon Christ's disciples as the offscouring of all things, #1Co 4:13.

Ver. 29. We know not whence he is] i.e. Whence he had his mission and commission to act the part of a prophet. His parents they knew, but doubted about his authority, as Papists and officials do of ours. To whom we answer, that we received our ministry immediately from Jesus Christ, whose ambassadors we are: and that his inward call is the main, whether it be that of approbation, as of godly ministers, or the other of Providence as of evil, such as were Judas, Demas, Nicolas, those that preached Christ of envy, #Php 1:15, &c.

Ver. 30. And yet he hath opened mine eyes] Which was a foretold sign of the Messiah, #Isa 35:4,5, and an office whereto Paul was sent of God, #Ac 26:18. And surely if God set such a seal to a man's ministry, as to make him instrumental to the conversion of others, it is a sweet and singular confirmation, #Jer 23:22 1Co 9:2,3.

Ver. 31. We know that God heareth not sinners] Their incense smells of the hand that offers it: the leper's lips should be covered, according to the law: the wicked "compass God with lies," #Ho 11:12, when they cry, "My Father, my Father," &c. This is one of those natural notions that the devil could never blot out of man's mind, that God heareth not sinners; he will never accept a good motion from a bad mouth, as that state in story would not. Hinc Achilles Homericus, ος κε Θεοις επιπειθηται μαλα τ εκλυον αυτου. He silenced the devil acknowledging him: and of witches' good prayers one saith, Si magicae, Deus non vult tales: si piae, non per tales.

Ver. 32. Since the world began was it not heard] Those historians then that have ascribed such a power to Vespasian, as to cure men that were born blind, are in no wise to be believed. (Dio in Vespas.) Vopiscus (who himself was one of them) ingenuously confesseth (in Vita Aureliani), neminem historicorum non aliquid esse mentitum, that they are all liars more or less, especially in setting forth the lives and acts of their emperors.

Ver. 33. If this man were not of God, he could do nothing] i.e. Nothing of this nature, he could not work a true miracle. The devil's miracles, ut plurimum, sunt praestigiae, imposturae, phantasmata, ludibria. (Bucholcer.)

Ver. 24. Thou wast altogether born in sins] Because born blind: so they upbraid him with his misery, as if therefore a notorious offender. This is harsh and rash judgment.

And dost thou teach us?] Oh, take heed of that. But a mortified man will yield to learn of anybody: "a little child shall lead him," #Isa 11:6. Learned Apollos was better instructed by a couple of poor tentmakers, #Ac 18:26.

Ver. 35. And when he had found him] So when the pope had excommunicated Luther, and the emperor proscribed him, Christ Jesus was with him, and carried on the work. Longe maiora parturit mihi iam calamus, saith he: Nescio unde veniunt istiae

meditationes. And in his book of the Babylonish Captivity he professeth, Se quotidie, velit, nolit, doctiorem fieri. (Luth. Epist.)

Ver. 36. Who is he, that I might believe on him?] A man of God, he held Christ, #Joh 9:33. The Son of God he yet knew him not to be; but was willing to be further informed, as appeareth by this question. They that hold fast what they have already received till Christ come, shall have more light, #Re 2:25; and a little strength well improved, may have "a great door, and effectual, opened," #Re 3:8.

Ver. 37. Thou hast both seen him] This seems to have been but some part of the discourse that passed between them, to make the man believe. Or if it were all, then we see as in a mirror the mighty power of Christ's word. Well might he say, #Joh 6:63 "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." Well might Mr Fox say in his Acts and Monuments, speaking of the people of God here in England in the reign of Henry VIII, when they began to lift up their heads out of the puddle of Popery, "This one thing I greatly marvel and muse at, to note in the registers, and consider how the word of God did multiply so exceedingly as it did among them. For I find that one neighbour resorting and conferring with another, again with a few words of their first or second talk did win and turn their minds to that wherein they desired to persuade them, touching the truth of God's word and sacraments."

Ver. 38. And he worshipped him] sc. as the Son of God, with divine adoration. This our Saviour would not have suffered had he not been of God. And being so, and to us so good a God, we must not only adorare Christum, sed et adulari, as Tertullian hath it, do him all the honour we can devise.

Ver. 39. For judgment I am come] To judge, much otherwise than those unjust judges have done, that have cast out this poor servant of mine for a blasphemer. Bishop Bonner having a blind harper before him, said, that such blind abjects, that follow a sort of heretical preachers, when they come to the feeling of the fire, will be the first that will flee from it. To whom the blind man said, that if every joint of him were burnt, yet he trusted in the Lord not to flee. A blind boy, that had suffered imprisonment at Gloucester not long before, was brought to Bishop Hooper the day before his death. Mr Hooper, after he had examined him on his faith, and the cause of his imprisonment, beheld him stedfastly, and the water appearing in his eyes, said unto him: "A poor boy, God hath taken from thee thy outward sight, for what consideration he best knoweth, but hath given thee another sight much more precious: for he hath endued thy soul with the eye of knowledge, and faith," &c. It is a worthy speech of Mr Beza upon this text, Prodeant omnes Pharisaeorum nostri temporis Academia. Let all our University Pharisees come forth together: that blind and heretical Church (as they call it) hath, by the blessing of God, children of seven years old that can before all the world confute and confound their erroneous doctrines, Habet ecclesia illa caeca et heretica septennes pueros, qui teste universo mundo, &c.: witness the children of Merindal and Chabriers, John Ferry's child of eight years old, that told Bonner's chaplain (who said Fetty was a heretic,) My father is no heretic, but you are a heretic, for you have Balaam's mark. This child they whipped to death. Alice Driver, martyr, nonplussed all the doctors that examined her: and then said, God be honoured; you be not able to resist the Spirit of God in me a poor woman. I was never brought up in the University as ye have been: but I have driven the plough many a time before my father, and yet I will set my foot against the feet of any of you all, &c.

Ver. 40. Are we blind also?] Yes, none more: for who so blind as he that will not see? "Who is blind as he that is perfect, and blind as the Lord's servant?" #Isa 42:19 "Thou blind Pharisee," saith our Saviour, #Mt 23:26; and again, "Ye blind guides," #Mt 23:24; and "Ye fools and blind," often in that chapter. And yet these passed in those days for the only wise men were (#1Co 1:20 "Where is the wise? where is the scribe?"), and had as good a conceit of themselves (a sure argument of their spiritual blindness) as the Chinese have to this day, when they usually say that all other nations of the world see but with one eye, they only with two. St Paul (who knew them, intus et in cute, as well as one man could know another) speaks out their conceits. "Thou art confident," saith he, "that thou thyself art a guide of the blind, a light to them that are in darkness, an instructor of the foolish," &c., #Ro 2:19. And hence their swelth, their ruth, and their ruin. For as swelling is an ill symptom to the body, so is pride in the soul: and as the body may die of an inward bleeding, so may the soul of spiritual pride. And as none more often miscarry in the waters than your most skilful swimmers, so neither do any sooner fall into the condemnation of hell, or lie deeper therein, than the most knowing men, and those of greatest parts, which they usually overween, and are too well conceited of. Raram facit scientia cum modestia mixturam. Learning with modesty, as it is rare, so it is καλον καλωσ (saith one), most amiable and attractive. It is like the coupling of a muse and a grace,

—“ aut ubi flavo

Argentum, Pariusve lapis circumdatur auro.”

Virgil

Ver. 41. But now ye say, We see] If, after conviction, men run away with the bit in their mouths, the sin is the greater; but their case is deplorable, qui quod verum sit neque sciunt, neque sustinent dicere, as Basil complains of the Western Church in his time.

Chapter 10

Ver. 1. Verily, verily, I say unto you] Amen is in Holy Scripture either prefixed to a discourse, and then it is a particle of certain and earnest asseveration, when it is doubled especially, as here: or else affixed; and then it is either of assent or assurance, or both, as in the end of the Lord's prayer.

Ver. 2. But he that entereth in by the door] That is, called by Christ to the office of his undershepherd. In physicis aer non faeit seipsum ignem, sed fit a superiori, saith Aquinas.

Is the shepherd of the sheep] To the which is required, that he be both learned and loving. This note ariseth out of the notation of the word here used. (Ποιμην quasi ομηην, of οις, a sheep, and μαω, to desire earnestly.)

Ver. 3. To him the porter openeth] That is, God approveth such, and usually seals to their ministry, #Jer 23:22, giving them a testimonial, #2Co 3:2.

Ver. 4. He goeth before them] According to the custom of shepherds in that country, not to drive their sheep, but to lead them, as David shows in his divine Bucolicon, #Ps 23:2.

Ver. 5. A stranger will they not follow] For they have senses exercised to discern good and evil, #Heb 5:14 "yea, they have a spirit of discerning," #1Co 12:10 "the mind of Christ," #1Co 2:16; and though simple to evil, yet are wise in that which is good. They are sheep, but rational; their service a reasonable service, #Ro 12:1; their obedience the obedience of faith, #Ro 16:26; they try before they trust, they look before they leap, and so grow to such a certainty in that truth they hold, such a plerophory of knowledge, #Col 2:3; that it is impossible for them to be fully or finally deceived, #Mt 24:24. False and heterodox doctrines they hate, #Ps 119:104; and all such impostors as seek to buzz doubts into their heads, #Ro 16:17.

Ver. 6. But they understood not] So thick brained and incapable we are, till that veil be rent, #Isa 25:7. Those that have a blemish in their eye, the more wishly they look into anything the less they see of it, as Vives hath it. So it is here. Lusciosi, si quando oculorum aciem intendunt, minus vident. (Vives in Aug. Civ. Dei. lxxxii. 6.)

Ver. 7. I am the door] Heaven door, so Christ is pleased to call himself, because "through him we have an access by one Spirit unto the Father," #Eph 2:18; and, "in him we have boldness and access with confidence by the faith of him," #Eph 3:12. Why our Saviour compares himself to these ordinary and obvious objects of our senses. {See Trapp on "Joh 15:1"}

Ver. 8. All that ever came before me, &c.] Manes (that mad heretic) made an argument from this text against Moses and the prophets, as going before Christ. But Austin answereth, Moses and the prophets came not before Christ, but with Christ. Intruders, whether before or since our Saviour's days, are these thieves and robbers. Ah, whoreson {a} thieves, rob God of his glory! said Dr Taylor, martyr, in a dream, of the scribes and Pharisees of his time.

{a} The son of a whore, a bastard son; but commonly used as a coarse term of reprobation, abuse, dislike, or contempt; sometimes even of jocular familiarity. (ED)

Ver. 9. And shall go in and out, &c.] That is, shall live securely, and be fed daily and daintily, as David shows, #Ps 23, where he sweetly strikes upon the whole string through the whole hymn.

Ver. 10. The thief cometh not but for to steal] However so sly heretics seek to insinuate with their pithanology and feigned humility, whereby they circumvent and beguile the simple, it is deadly dealing with them. Shun their society as a serpent in your way, as poison in your food. Spondanus (the same that epitomized Baronius) gives his reader Popish poison to drink so slyly, saith one, as if he were doing somewhat else, and meant no such matter.

Perniciosissimum Hildebrandinae doctrinae venenum lectoribus ebibendum, quasi aliud agens, propinat. And learned Billius observes the like of Socrates, the ecclesiastical historian, a cunning Novatian. Swenckfeldius, who held many dangerous heresies, did yet deceive many by his pressing men to a holy life, praying frequently and fervently, &c., by his stately expressions, ever in his mouth, as of illumination, revelation, deification, the inward and spiritual man. (Scultet. Annal.) Some are so cunning in their cogging the dice, as St Paul phraseth it, εν τη κυβεια, #Eph 4:14; in the conveyance of their collusion, that, like serpents, they can sting without hissing; like cur dogs, suck your blood only with licking; and in the end kill you and cut your throats without biting. Muzzle them therefore, saith St Paul, and give them no audience. επιστομιζε, #Tit 1:11 3:10. Placilla the empress, when Theodosius, senior, desired to confer with Eunomius the heretic, dissuaded her husband very earnestly; lest, being perverted by his speeches, he might fall into heresy. Anastasius II, Bishop of Rome, in the year 497, while he sought to reduce Acacius the heretic, was seduced by him. (Soremen, vii. 1.) A little leaven soon soureth the whole lump. One spoonful of vinegar will quickly tart a great deal of sweet milk, but a great deal of milk will not so soon sweeten one spoonful of vinegar. Error (saith a noble writer) is like the Jerusalem artichoke; plant it where you will, it overruns the ground and chokes the heart.

Ver. 11. I am the good shepherd] So he is by an excellency, for he left his glory to seek out to himself a flock in the wilderness. "He feeds them among the lilies," #So 2:16; gives them golden fleeces, and shepherds to keep them, after his own heart; watcheth over them night and day in his Migdal Eder, or tower of the flock, #Ge 35:21; seeks them up when lost, bears them in his bosom, and gently leads those that are with young, #Isa 40:11; pulls them out of the power of the lion and the bear, punisheth such as either push with the horn or foul with the feet, #Eze 34:19; washeth them in his own blood, and so maketh them kings and priests to God, #Re 1:5, &c., so that they need not fear the spiritual Assyrian, #Mic 5:5.

Ver. 12. The wolf scattereth] To non-residents and other unconscionable ministers, Christ will say as once Eliab did to David, "With whom hast thou left those poor few sheep in the wilderness?" Vare, redde legiones, said Augustus, sighing. The like will this good shepherd say, judging; Pan curet oves, oviumque magistros, say many of our pluralists and idol shepherds. About Hildebrand's time, so great was the negligence and wickedness of the clergy, that some set forth letters, as dated from the devils of hell to them; wherein they give them many thanks for the souls they had sent to hell, in such abundance as never was known before.

Ver. 13. The hireling fleeth] Yet is not every one that fleeth to be judged a hireling presently. There is a lawful flight, as when the quarrel is personal, &c. Christ fled often when persecuted; so may we. God hath made us not as butts to be perpetually shot at; but as the marks of rovers, movable, as the wind and sun may best serve. Fuge, fuge, Brenti, cite, citius, citissime: Flee, flee, flee, Brentius, quickly, more quickly, very quickly, so friendly did a senator of Hala advise Brentius. He embraced the advice, and saved his life by it. (Melch. Adam. in Vit. Brentii.)

Ver. 14. And know my sheep] With a knowledge of approbation and delight. Verba notitiae apud Hebraeos secum trahunt affectum, #Ps 1:6.

Ver. 15. I lay down my life] Yet as man he was ζωον φιλοζωον. (Aesop, Fab.) Quis vitam non vult? Who does not want life? saith Augustine; and Quis enim vult mori? prorsus nemo, Indeed who wishes to die, absolutely no one, saith another. And, "skin after skin," or skin upon skin, "and all that a man hath will he give for his life," saith that old deceiver, truly, #Job 2:4. Yet our Saviour held not his life dear for his sheep's safety. Because he saw we should fall sore (said that angel, John Bradford) therefore he would suffer sore. Yea, if his once suffering had not been enough, he would yet once more come again. God the Father, I am sure, saith he, if the death of his Son incarnate would not serve, would himself and the Holy Ghost also become incarnate, and die for us.

Ver. 16. And other sheep I have] viz. The elect Gentiles, whose conversion to Christ was, among other types, not obscurely foreshadowed, #Le 19:23-25, as some divines think. The first three years in Canaan the Israelites were to cast away the fruits of the trees, as uncircumcised. So our Saviour planted the gospel in that land for the first three years of his public ministry. But the uncircumcisions are cast away; that is, to the uncircumcised Gentiles the doctrine of Christ is not declared by general and public preaching. The fruit of the fourth year was consecrated to God: that is, Christ in the fourth year from his baptism laid down his life for his sheep, rose again, ascended, and sent his Holy Spirit; whereby his apostles and others were consecrated as the firstfruits of the promised land. But in the fifth year, the fruit of the gospel planted by Christ began to be common, when the same doctrine was not shut up in the strait bounds of Judaea, or walls of the temple, but was made known (and shall be more and more) to all nations, for the obedience of faith, #Ro 16:26.

There shall be one fold] Of Jews and Gentiles. The full and final restoration of the Jews will happen in the year 1650, as some have calculated out of #Da 12:11. I wait and wish it.

Ver. 17. Therefore doth my Father love me, because] This "because" is nota consecutionis, non causae, know from its consequences not from its cause, saith Beza.

I lay down my life] I do it even now; for he suffered many a little death all his life long, and at length the cursed death of the cross.

That I might take it again] For Christ's being life essential, swallows up death in victory, as the fire swallows up the fuel, as Moses' serpent swallowed up the sorcerers' serpents, &c.

Ver. 18. I lay it down of myself] A necessity there was of our Saviour's death, but it was a necessity of immutability (because God had decreed it, #Ac 2:23), not of coercion. He died willingly. Therefore, when he gave up the ghost, he cried with a loud voice, which shows that his life was not then spent; he might have retained it longer if he would; and thereupon the centurion concludes him to be the Son of God.

Ver. 19. There was a division therefore, &c.] This our Saviour foresaw, and yet forbears not. God's truth must be spoken, however it be taken. Men, be they pleased or displeased, God must be obeyed, and his whole will declared. If men refuse to receive it, we must turn them over to God, with a non convertentur; obstinate sinner, and then let him alone with them.

Ver. 20. He hath a devil, and is mad] It was a wonder if the heavens did not sweat, the earth melt, and hell gape at the hearing of these horrid blasphemies. Tigers rage at the fragrance of sweet spices; so did these monsters at our Saviour's sweet sermons.

Ver. 21. These are not the words, &c.] Wisdom is ever justified of her children. They fitly argue from his oracles and miracles, both which this evangelist doth more largely relate, purposely to prove our Saviour's Divinity, and is therefore styled "John the Divine."

Ver. 22. The feast of the dedication] viz. Of the temple newly purged from the pollutions of Antiochus, that little antichrist. Εγκαινια, initialia, sive renovalia. So when the Christian temple, the Church, was purged from the Popish abominations (called the trappings of the Gentiles, #Re 11:2), by those two witnesses, that is, by Luther and other heroical reformers, there was great joy among God's people. And in the year 1617, as the pope proclaimed a jubilee for the peace of Italy and Austria, &c., so the reformed Churches in Germany did the same, for God's mercy in restoring to them the gospel, just a hundred years before: for in the year 1517, Luther began to decry the pope's indulgences. (Bucholcer.) In like sort, at the same time, when the Greeks were busy in their Olympic games, the prophet Isaiah saw that glorious vision of God in his majesty, #Isa 6:1,2 (as the divine chronologer observes it), singing with seraphims, that sweetest trisagion, "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of hosts." The new Jerusalem, which signifies the state of the Church in this world (saith Rev. Dr Sibbs), when it shall be refined to the utmost, is all of fine gold and precious stones, &c., to show the excellence of reformation; which golden times are yet to come, and will prove very festival.

Ver. 23. And Jesus walked in the temple] Taking the opportunity of that public meeting to do good, as the bee is abroad as soon as the sun ariseth. The Greeks were great walkers, as the Stoics in their porch, &c. But the Turks wonder to see a man walk to and fro, and usually ask him whether he be out of his way, or out of his wits? (Biddulph.) Pliny said to his nephew, when he saw him walk out some hours without studying, Poteris has horas non perdere.

In Solomon's porch] So the Jews called that porch (for honour's sake) which they built again after the Captivity; and which, together with the whole temple, was beautified by Herod the Great, to curry favour with the people, which yet would not be, for they hated him extremely. Partim ambitione ductus, partita Iudaeorum benevolentiam captans. (Bez. Annot. in #Joh 1:20)

Ver. 24. How long dost thou make us to doubt?] They lay the blame upon him as if (Heraclitus-like) he were a dark doctor; when themselves were blind, and did shut the windows lest the light should come in unto them. God's ministers must look for the like measure. Howbeit God darkens their doctrine sometimes (as he dealt by Ezekiel) for the sins of the people.

Ver. 25. I told you, and ye believed not] q.d. Your malice lies in the way, that neither mine oracles nor miracles can work upon your hearts. Therefore also Christ enlargeth them with a double unbelief: Ye believe not, saith he; and again, Ye believe not: this is the damning sin against the gospel; yea, this some will have to be that sin against the Holy Ghost, for which there is no pardon.

Ver. 26. Ye believe not, because ye are not, &c.] Reprobates cannot believe, yea, they cannot but resist the external offers of God's grace. The word, sacraments, and all God's common temporal favours, are, in respect of external participation, communicated to them by way of concomitancy only, because they are intermixed with the elect.

Ver. 27. My sheep hear my voice] Buxtorf in his "Tiberius" noteth, that the #Jer 21:7 consisteth of 42 words and of a 160 letters. I am not at leisure to count the words and letters of this and the following verses; but it is easy to observe in them those five links of that golden chain of God's grace in our salvation: "my sheep," there is election; "hear my voice," there is vocation; "and I know them," there is justification; "and they follow me," there is sanctification; "and I give unto them eternal life," there is glorification.

Ver. 28. They shall never perish] This is the good Shepherd's promise: is he now as good as his word, if he suffer his sheep to wander and perish, whom by promise he was tied so to keep, as that they should not wander, as they are naturally apt to do, to their destruction? Pastor oves spondet se absolute servaturum, nunquid liberabit fidem? Prideaux.

Ver. 29. No man is able to pluck them] Impostors seek to thrust us from God, #De 13:5, and to drag disciples after them, with such violence, as if they would pluck them limb meal (as the word αποσπαι signifies, #Ac 20:30), so to deceive, if it were possible, the very elect, #Mt 24:24. A thing is said to be possible, vel respectu Dei, vel respectu rei, either to honour God or to honour a thing. True grace, in itself considered, is easily separable from him that hath it, who, left to himself also, would soon lose it. But with respect to God, by whose power the saints are kept (as in a strong guard or garrison, φρουρουμενοι, #1Pe 1:5), through faith unto salvation, it is impossible that any of his should finally miscarry.

Ver. 30. I and my Father are one] Both for nature or essence, and for one consent, both in willing and working. Out of the harbour of Goodwin's Sands the pilot cannot make forth, they say, without sinking in those sands, unless he so steer his ship, that he bring two steeples, which stand off, so even in his sight, that they may seem to be but one. So is it here.

Ver. 31. Then the Jews took up stones] This is the world's wages to faithful ministers. Many conceit discharge of their duty without persecution; they would pull a rose without pricks. Non decet, ut sub capite spinis coronato vivant membra in deliciis. (Zanchius.)

Ver. 32. From my Father] i.e. Eius autoritate fretus. (Beza.) All our works must be done in God, and for God; then they are of the right stamp, and carry heaven in them, #Heb 6:9. Besides that, they are unanswerable syllogisms, invincible demonstrations, to confute and convert even pagans, saith Chrysostom.

Ver. 33. But for blasphemy] These were holy persecutors, in pretence at least. So Maximinian thought the blood of Christians would be an acceptable sacrifice to his gods. Christianum sanguinem Diis victimam esse gravissimam. (Tertul.) So Francis II of France and Philip II of Spain held the same opinion of the Lutherans in their dominions. Zeal without knowledge is like mettle in a blind horse.

Ver. 34. In your law] So he calls it, to show that there was no necessity on his part to prove what he delivered by any Scripture, since he was to be believed on his bare word, αυτοπιστος; but for their sakes only he did it.

Ver. 35. Unto whom the word of God came] That have their authority from God, whose substitutes and viceregents princes are, and of whom they have their patent. With what face then can the schoolmen defend Thomas Aquinas in that paradox, Dominium et praelatio introducta sunt ex iure humane? God and the bringing in for preference are from man's law?

Ver. 36. Hath sanctified and sent] Sanctified, that is, anointed, and that in both his natures, as whole Christ. For his anointing imported, 1. His consecration or ordination to the office of a Mediator, and so the Godhead also was anointed. 2. Qualification or effusion of fulness of graces; as the holy oil was compounded of divers spices, so the manhood, and that without measure, as far as a finite nature was capable of.

Ver. 37. If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not] Thus said Christ, but so saith not Christ's vicar, as the pope will needlessly be called, His placita pleasing must be obeyed, not examined; and though by his evil example he draw thousands to hell, none must mute, or say so much as, What doest thou?

Ver. 38. But if I do, though ye, &c.] q.d. Stumble not at the meanness of my person, condition, followers, &c. When it was sometimes disputed among the Romans in the council, using to deify great men, whether Christ, having done many wonderful works, should be received into the number of the gods? it was at length concluded (saith the historian) quod non deberet recipi inter Deos, pro eo quod non haberet cultores, propter hoc quod paupertatem praedicaret et eligeret, quam mundus contemnit.

Ver. 39. Therefore they sought again to take him] They could not answer his arguments, they turn them therefore to a course of violence, wherein they doubted not but to be too hard for him. Thus they dealt with Ridley and Latimer at Oxford; thus with other martyrs, who yet overcame them by the blood of the Lamb, yea, were more than conquerors, #Ro 8:37. A fagot will make you recant, saith the Bishop to Mr Hawks, martyr. No, no, said he, a point for your fagot; you shall do no more, and your master to help you, than God permits you. In the year 1166, the synod at Oxford burned in the foreheads, and afterwards banished out of the realm, thirty Dutch doctors that taught here the right use of wedlock and the sacraments. (Alsted. Chronol.)

Ver. 40. And went again beyond Jordan] The farther from Jerusalem the safer. Jerusalem was then as Rome is now, the saints' slaughterhouse. Roma radix omnium malorum. Rome is the root of all evils.

Into the place where John first baptized] As well for his own comfort (for there he had heard at first from heaven, "This is my beloved Son," &c.) as for the people's conversion and confirmation, who there called to mind John's testimony of Jesus, and believed.

Ver. 41. John did no miracle] Lest he should be mistaken for the Messiah. But how got he then so much credit? By his mortified conversation especially. "Holy and reverend is God's name," saith the Psalmist; therefore reverend, because holy. Holiness hath honour in the consciences of the very worst.

But all things that John spake] The word works not sometimes, till many years after it hath been preached, as here; and as they say of the elephant, that she goes with young thirteen years after she hath conceived.

Ver. 42. And many believed on him there] Place is no prejudice to the powerful operation of the word, when by the Spirit it is made prolific and generative.

Chapter 11

Ver. 1. Bethany, the town of Mary, &c.] Not the tower (castellum) of Mary and Martha, as some monks have doted; digni sane qui ad grammatices elementa remittantur; truly worth are those who relax the laws of grammar, from the saith an interpreter. Bethany was a small town or village nigh to Jerusalem, where dwelt these three, Lazarus and his two sisters, all in one house (though fratrum concordia rata establishing brotherly peace), to whom our Saviour joins himself a fourth in their friendship. "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." Surely there the Lord "commands the blessing, even life for evermore," #Ps 133:1,3.

Ver. 2. It was that Mary which anointed] This makes her name "as an ointment poured forth," #So 1:3. And she spared for no cost, being of her mind, it seems, that said, Ego si bonam famam servasso, sat ero dives, I if I shall be of a good reputation, let it be a costly basket. (Plaut.)

Ver. 3. Behold, he whom thou lovest is sick] This was enough to say to a loving Saviour. We need not be careful in anything, more than to make our wants known to God, #Php 4:6, and let him alone to help us, how and when he pleaseth. So, to mind and move Christ for the labouring Church, it shall suffice to say, She whom thou lovest is sick, is in ill case, &c. But St Augustine asketh, Si amatur, quomodo infirmatur? If it is love, how is it weak? Oh, well enough: afflictions are Christ's love tokens. "As many as I love," saith he, "I rebuke and chasten." God may give the dearly beloved of his soul into the hand of her enemies, #Jer 12:7.

Ver. 4. But for the glory of God] Happy Lazarus, though sick and dead, to be an instrument of glory, to be given to God. St Paul stood on tip toes (αποκαραδοκία), as it were, to see which way Christ might be most magnified in his body, whether by life or by death, #Php 1:20.

Ver. 5. Jesus loved Martha] The saints are all round about his throne, #Re 4:4, because he is alike near to them for solace and tuition. Howbeit, as man; living among men, he was affected to some more than some, as to these three, and the beloved disciple. These were his Jedediahs, his singularly affected, and this was a high prerogative. Plato commendeth his country of Athens for antiquity of the people, &c., but chiefly for this, that they were beloved of the gods, το πρωτον και μεγαιστον εστι οιτ τογχανει ουν θεοφιλης. (Plato.)

Ver. 6. He abode two days] Waiting to be gracious, but as a God of judgment, he knows best when to deal forth his favours, #Isa 30:18. To prescribe to him is to set the sun by our dial. This Caesar terms sauciness in his soldiers.

Ver. 7. Then after that saith he, &c.] When help is seasonable his fingers itch, as the mother's breast aches when it is time the child had suck.

Ver. 8. And goest thou thither again?] Yea, with the hazard of his life, to the help of his friend. The ancients painted friendship, a fair young man bareheaded, in a poor garment, at the bottom whereof was written, Death and Life, in the upper part, Summer and Winter; his bosom was open, so that his heart might be seen, whereupon was written, Longe, prope, a friend at hand and afar off. (Wilkins' Com. in Muter. orat. 1. de laud. lit.)

Ver. 9. Are there not twelve hours?] q.d. Is there not an appointed time to man upon earth? #Job 7:1. Shall I not live out my stint? The Turks shun not the company of those that have the plague; but, pointing upon their foreheads, say, It was written there at their birth when they should die. (Blount's Voyage into Levant.) A priest, indeed, might enter without danger into a leprous house, because he had a calling from God so to do. A man may follow God dryshod through the Red Sea. This our Saviour calls here "to walk in the day," by an excellent and elegant similitude. But he that keeps not within God's precincts may not look for his protection. I commend the charity, but I question the discretion, of Mr Stafford, public professor of divinity in Cambridge, who, hearing that a certain priest, called Sir Henry Conjuror (in King Henry VIII's days), lay sore sick of the plague, was so moved with pity to the poor priest's soul, that he came to him, exhorted, and so laboured him, that he would not leave him before he had converted him, and saw his conjuring books burnt before his face. Which being done, Mr Stafford went home, and immediately sickened, and shortly after most Christianly deceased. He might have, I confess, an extraordinary call to his work. But Zanchius somewhere maketh mention of a colleague of his in the ministry, that by the like means took his death, and much bewailed upon his death bed that he had not yielded to Zanchius advising him to the contrary.

Ver. 10. But if any man walk in the night] As good Josiah did, in that rash expedition against PharaohNecho; either hoping to ingratiate with the Assyrian, or fearing to have an overly strong neighbour of the Egyptian: he went up to battle, not so much as asking leave of the Lord, though he had Jeremiah at hand, and Zephaniah, and a whole college of seers besides. The best are sometimes miscarried by their passions to their cost.

Ver. 11. Lazarus sleepeth] The saints are said to die in Christ, to sleep in Jesus, #Re 14:13 1Th 4:14. The Greeks call their churchyards dormitories, sleeping places (κοιμητηρια). The Germans call them God's Acre, because their bodies are sown there to be raised again. The Hebrews Bethchajim, the house of the living.

Ver. 12. If he sleep, he shall do well] Sleep (saith one) is the nurse of nature, the sweet parenthesis of all thy griefs and cares.

Ver. 13. Jesus spake of his death] Which profane writers also do call a sleep, but only because the functions of the faculties are extinct by death; therefore they call it an iron sleep, an eternal sleep, &c. Christians call death a sleep, because it is to them a sweet rest in their beds, warmed and perfumed for them by Christ's body laid in the grave; with whom also they look to rise to life eternal. Ut somnus morris, sic lectus imago sepulchri. "Thy dead men shall live, with my dead body shall they arise," #Isa 26:19.

Ver. 14. Then said Jesus unto them plainly] Because they understood him not. Ministers must be "gentle to all men, apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing the ignorant," yea, the insolent, #2Ti 2:24,25. Augustine confesseth he was glad to use some words, sometimes, to his hearers that were not Latin, to the end that they might understand him.

Ver. 15. I am glad for your sakes] If the confirmation and increase of faith in his be so great a joy to Christ, how acceptable must it needs be unto him, that we believe at first on his name! we cannot do him a greater honour, a more pleasing service. None greater in the father's house than the prodigal returned. And what a high price did our Saviour set on the centurion's faith.

Ver. 16. Let us also go that we may die with him] A blunt speech, and (as some think) overly bold. He would die with Christ, and so would Peter; yet none so shamefully forsook him, when it came to the proof, as these two. Thomas was to seek, when he should have seen Christ risen: he had not yet recovered his fright at our Saviour's apprehension.

Ver. 17. That he had lain in the grave four days] So that he might seem now to come too late. The faith of the two sisters must needs be much shaken, to see their brother dead, though Christ had sent them word he should not die. Hold out, faith and patience, God will be seen in the mount; he usually reserves his hand for a dead lift, when our faith begins to flag and hang the wing, when our strength is gone, and we have given up all for lost. "Now will I arise, saith the Lord; now will I be exalted; now will I lift up myself," #Isa 33:10.

Ver. 18. About fifteen furlongs] Not fully two miles: a short walk, and hence so great a resort to the place; not without a special providence of God, who ordereth all to his own glory. The Jews came only to comfort the sisters, and to condole with them (it is a mercy in misery to find such friends, qui maeroris et funeris pondera luctuosa participabunt, as Cyprian hath it, that will set to their shoulders, and bear a part), but God had a further end in that meeting, ne obscura esset Lazari resurrectio, that there might be many witnesses of Lazarus' resurrection; who might also thereby be made partakers of the first resurrection, #Re 20:6.

Ver. 19. To comfort them] A pious office, and yet never thought of by the superstitious Papists, amidst all those vain fopperies they prescribe to be done about the dead. Only, what the ancients used for the comfort of the living is perverted by them to the pretended service and help of the dead.

Ver. 20. But Mary sat still in, the house] So, while faith sits at the centre, love walks the round. Dicit Fides, Parata sunt mihi omnia: Dicit Spes, Mihi ista servantur: Dicit Charitas, Ego curro ad illa, Faith says, everything is prepared for me: Hope says, such affairs preserve me: Love says, I run for these matters; saith Bernard.

Ver. 21. Lord, if thou hadst been here, &c.] Was she sure of that? but why was he dead, if Christ would not, though he were not there? We are all too much fastened to his bodily presence: howbeit, we never come to believe indeed till we are well persuaded of his omnipotence. But how fitly may many a poor soul say to the bloody non-resident, Sir, if thou hadst been here, my brother, child, husband, had not been dead in his sins?

Ver. 22. Whatsoever thou wilt ask] This is our comfort, that our Advocate is all in all with his Father, and may have what he will of him. What need we any other "master of requests" than Christ? If David will hear Joab for Absalom; and Herod, Blastus for the Tyrians, #Ac 12:20; what may not we hope?

Ver. 23. Thy brother shall rise again] Let this consideration comfort us in the decease of our dearest friends, they are not lost, but laid up with Christ, who will bring them back with him at his coming, #1Th 4:14. As the same divine hand that buried Moses, that locked up this treasure and kept the key of it, brought it forth afterwards glorious in the transfiguration. The body that was hidden in the valley of Moab appeared again in the hill of Tabor.

Ver. 24. In the resurrection] The Syriac hath it Benuchama, in the consolation. So the resurrection was ever to the disconsolate believers of both Testaments, #Da 12:2 Heb 11:35. In the primitive Church, when they repeated that article of the creed, "I believe the resurrection of the flesh," they would point to their bodies, and say, etiam huius carnis, even of this very flesh.

Ver. 25. He that believeth in me, though, &c.] Oh the wonderful force of faith! Questionless (saith a reverend man, Mr S. Ward) justifying faith is not beneath miraculous in the sphere of its own activity, and where it hath warrant of God's word, &c.

Ver. 26. Believest thou this?] He saith not, Understandest thou this? For the mysteries of the Christian religion, saith Rupertus, are much better understood by believing than believed by understanding.

Ver. 27. I believe that thou art the Christ] What could Peter say more? #Mt 16:16. Damaris may be as dear to God as Dionysius, a woman (of no note otherwise) as an Areopagite, #Ac 17:34.

Ver. 28. Called Mary her sister secretly] By Christ's command: and secretly, belike, she did it, lest any should tell the Pharisees, and Christ thereby be brought into danger. "Be wise as serpents."

Ver. 29. She arose quickly] Love is winged, and a ready heart makes riddance of God's work. His people are volunteers, #Ps 110:3. Where the carcass is, there will these eagles be; they scour to his presence, as the doves to the dove cots; they fly as the clouds, &c., #Isa 60:8.

Ver. 30. Was not yet come into the town] To eat and refresh himself after his long journey; he would do his work first, as Abraham's servant, #Ge 24:33.

Ver. 31. She goeth unto the grave] That, Niobe-like, she might weep herself into a tombstone. Ex eorum more qui luctus sui irritamenta quaerunt. Of the character of them who seek comfort from their sorrow. Calvin. Such a heathenish custom it seems they had among them, and many other funeral rites, forbidden by the law. But what should dropsy men do eating salted meats?

Ver. 32. She fell down at his feet] Giving him divine honour, before all the Jews that were present. So did not Martha, that we read of. Mary had been more diligent in hearing and meditation of the word; hence her greater love and respect to Christ.

Ver. 33. When Jesus saw her weeping] Tears are most effectual orators to Christ; when he was going to the cross, he could find time to look back and comfort the weeping woman.

And was troubled] So as for the present he could not utter himself. Yet these passions in Christ were, as clear water in a crystal glass, without sin.

Ver. 34. Where have ye laid him?] He could tell well enough; but yet would be told by them. So, he knows our wants before we open them, and sometimes is pleased to prevent us with a supply; but usually he will hear from us. Come he will to our relief and help, but he will have his people's prayers lead him. "I came for thy words," saith the angel, #Da 10:12 9:21. While he was speaking in prayer, Gabriel came with "weariness of flight," and touched him "about the evening oblation," which was the hour of prayer.

Ver. 35. Jesus wept] He wept with those that weep. And the same tenderness he retains still toward his afflicted. As Aaron, though he might not lament his two sons slain by God's hand in the sanctuary, #Le 10:3, yet he had still the heart of a father within him; so hath Christ now, in the heavenly sanctuary; he hath lost nothing by heaven.

Ver. 36. Behold how he loved him] What! for shedding some few tears for him? Oh, how then did he love us for whom he shed the dearest and warmest blood in all his heart! Ama amorem illius, &c., saith Bernard.

Ver. 37. And some of them said] Thus our Saviour is diversely interpreted and censured; and so it is still with his ministers. When we see our auditors before us, little do we know with what hearts they are there, nor what use they will make of their pretended devotion. Doeg may set his foot as far within the tabernacle as David. If some come to serve God, others come to observe their teachers and pick quarrels; yea, if conscience might be judge, many a hearer would be found to have a Herod's heart toward his minister.

Ver. 38. Groaning in himself] To consider, belike, the woeful effects of sin that brought death into the world, even on the best; and makes them a ghastly and loathsome spectacle, so that Abraham desires to bury his beloved Sarah out of his sight. Believe me who have made trial of it, saith Augustine, open a grave, and in the head of the dead man ye shall find toads leaping that are begotten of his brain; serpents crawling on his loins, that are bred out of his kidneys; worms creeping in his belly, that grow out of his bowels. Mihi experto credite, quod apertis sepulchris in capitibus inveniatis bufones saltantes generatos ex cerebro. (Serm. 48.) Ecce quid sumus, et quid iam erimus: Ecce in quod resolvimur: En peccati originem et foeditatem! saith that father.

Ver. 39. By this time he stinketh] Ay, the better for that; Christ's power will be the more manifested. As St Austin said of one that hit him in the teeth with the sins of his youth: The more desperate was the disease, the greater honour redounded to the physician that cured me. Beza's answer to one that did the like to him, was, Hic homo invidet mihi gratiam Christi. This man envies Christ's grace for me.

Ver. 40. Said I not unto thee, &c.] A foul fault in her to be so incredulous; and enough, without the greater mercy of Christ, to have marred all. For unbelief is so vile and venomous an evil, as that it transfuseth a kind of dead palsy into the hands of omnipotence, #Mr 6:5. Christ, that can do all things by his absolute power, can do little or nothing by his actual power, for unbelievers. He cannot, because he will not.

Ver. 41. Father, I thank thee that, &c.] Beginning to pray, he brings his thanks in his hand, as sure to speed. So must we, #Php 4:6. And therefore in the law, whatever request they had to God, they must be sure to come with their peace offerings, in token of thankfulness: that they might sing with the Psalmist, "Praise waiteth for thee, O God, in Sion," #Ps 65:1. It is said of Tiberius the emperor, that he never denied his favourite Sejanus anything, and oftentimes anticipated his request, so that he needed only to ask and give thanks. (Tacitus.) All God's people are his favourites, and may have anything that heart can wish or need require.

Ver. 42. And I knew that thou hearest me always] And he always liveth to make intercession for his; who therefore may boldly believe, that they shall want nothing that is good for them, since he is "All in all" with the Father, and may have what he will. In any strait go but to God, and cry as he did, Conqueror tibi lachrymis Iesus Christi, I lament to you by the tear of Jesus Christ, and doubt not of a gracious return of thy prayer.

Ver. 43. Lazarus, come forth] If this voice of Christ had been directed to all the dead, they had presently risen; as sure as they shall rise when the Lord himself shall descend with a shout, with the voice of an archangel, crying, Surgite mortui, venite in iudicium. Arise oh dead, come to the judgment. Pliny reports of the lioness, that she brings forth her whelps dead, and so they remain for the space of three days, until the lion coating near to the place where they lie, lifts up his voice and roars so fiercely, that presently they are raised from death to life. The prophet Jeremiah tells us the like of this Lion of the tribe of Judah, #Jer 25:30,31. See the place.

Ver. 44. And he that was dead] But where was his soul therewithal? In manu Dei, In the hand of God, not in purgatory, as Papists say, for that is against their own principles. They send none to purgatory but men of a middle make, between just and unjust. Now Lazarus was surely a very good man, else had he not been so dear to Christ. But that purgatory is the pope's invention, as Tyndale hath it: hear St Augustine, Nemo se decipiat, fratres: duo enim loca sunt, et tertius non est visus. Qui cum Christo regnare non meruit, cum diabolo, absque dubitatione, peribit.

Ver. 45. Believed on him] And so God had his honour and Christ his end in this, according to #Joh 11:4.

Ver. 46. But some of them, &c.] Lo, reprobates will not believe, though one rose from the dead to them.

Ver. 47. Then gathered the chief priests] Like unto this was the Council of Trent gathered on purpose to suppress Christ in his true worshippers, and carried by antichrist with such infinite guile and craft, without any sincerity, upright dealing and truth, as that themselves will even smile in the triumphs of their own wits (when they hear it but mentioned), as at a master stratagem.

Ver. 48. The Romans shall come, &c.] And so they did; the thing that they feared came upon them, for their inexpressible guilt in killing the Lord Jesus. Demades, when the emperor sent to his countrymen of Athens to give him divine honour, and they were loth to yield unto it, but consulted about it: Take heed, says he, you be not so busy about heavenly matters as to lose your earthly possessions. These refractory Jews lost both.

Ver. 49. Ye know nothing at all] Why no: you know all, Caiaphas, all the assessors are but asses to you. Hoc est superbire, quasi super alios ire. This fellow would have made a fine duke of Russia, by whom it is cautioned that there be no schools, lest there should be any scholars but himself. So the Gnostics bragged that they were the only knowing men. (Irenaeus.) And the Jesuits at this day tell us that the empire of learning is confined to their territories. Penes nos est imperium literature. (Eudaem.)

Ver. 50. That one man should die for the people] A brutish and bloody sentence; as if evil might be done that good may come thereof. So, when Farellus, that worthy reformer, came first to Geneva, and was convented there by the bishop, as a disturber of the public peace, one of the Popish assessors cried out, Away with this pestilent Lutheran; better he perish than the town be disquieted. To whom Farellus answered, Noli Caiaphae voces, sed Dei verba proferre, Speak not in the language of Caiaphas, but in the word of God. (Scultet. Annal.)

Ver. 51. This he spake, not of himself] God spake through him, as through a trunk, or as the angel spake in Balaam's ass. Wholesome sugar may be found in a poisoned cane, a precious stone in a toad's head, a flaming torch in a blind man's hand.

Ver. 52. Gather together in one] In one spiritual body, though in place never so distant one from another, #Eph 4:4 "My dove is but one, the daughters saw her and blessed her," #So 6:9. No such oneness, entireness, anywhere else. Other societies may cleave together as the toes of clay in Nebuchadnezzar's image, but not incorporate.

Ver. 53. Then from that day forth] So baneful is evil counsel, from the mouth of a man of mark especially, to set men eager for mischief.

Ver. 54. Into a city called Ephraim] Not elsewhere mentioned; built, perhaps, in honour of their father Ephraim, by the posterity of those rash sons of his, that had brought grief to his heart, and to make amends for their miscarriage. See #1Ch 7:21,22.

Ver. 55. Before the Passover, to purify themselves] They had their Parasceve and Proparasceve, their preparation and fore preparation. We must also purify ourselves before the sacrament from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, #1Co 11:27-31, cast all the baggage into the brook Kidron (that is, the town ditch), and then kill the Passover, #2Ch 30:14. The very heathens had their coenam puram before their sacrifices.

Ver. 56. Then sought they for Jesus] Whether these were his friends or enemies, the doctors are divided.

Ver. 57. Had given a commandment] So dilligent were they, and earnest to execute that cruel decree of the council. This is check to our indolence in the best things. What a shame is it, that they should outwork the children of light in a thorough despatch of their deeds of darkness, and be at more pains to go to hell than we will be to go to heaven.

Chapter 12

Ver. 1. Came to Bethany] To convert some, confirm others, and to refresh himself with his fast friends, ere he fell into the hands of his bloody enemies. So Cromwell, Earl of Essex, going to his death, first called for his breakfast, and cheerfully eating the same, and after that meeting the Lord Hungerford going likewise to his execution, and perceiving him to be all heavy and doleful, with cheerful countenance and comfortable words asking him why he was so heavy, he willed him to pluck up his heart, and to be of good comfort: For, said he, there is no cause for you to fear, for if you repent and be heartily sorry for what you have done, there is for you mercy with the Lord, who for Christ's sake will forgive you; therefore be not dismayed. And though the breakfast we are going to be sharp, yet, trusting to the mercy of the Lord, we shall have a joyful dinner. And so went they together to the place of execution, and took their death cheerfully.

Ver. 2. That sat at table] Being invited by Simon the leper at whose house this feast was kept, as some will have it.

Ver. 3. Of spikenard, very costly] Herodotus reckons an alabaster box of ointment (μυρου αλαβαστρον) among the precious gifts that Cambyses sent for a present to the king of Ethiopia. Mary thinks nothing too good for him, whom her soul loved. She will honour him with the best of her substance; she knew there was nothing lost; but though it took from the heap, yet it increased the heap; as it is said of tithes and offerings, #Mal 3:10. This made David so free and frolic, that he would not serve God of that which cost him nothing; and that he made such plentiful preparation for the temple-work. It is both love and good husbandry to make our service to God costly: his retributions are bountiful. This ointment in the text was a costly confection, like that of the Church, "Spikenard and saffron, calamus and cinnamon," &c., #So 4:14. Now Galen writes that in his time cinnamon was very rare, and hard to be found, except in the storehouses of princes. And Pliny reports that a pound of cinnamon was worth a thousand denarii, that is, 150 crowns of our money. This good woman held, as Tertullian afterwards did, that Pietatis nomine sumptum facere, est lucrum facere, to spend upon pious uses was the way to greatest gain.

Ver. 4. Then said one of his disciples] St Matthew tells us, that all the disciples said thus. Judas was of so great esteem and authority among them, that what he did they are all said to do. So cunningly he had carried his conspiracy, that they all suspected themselves rather than Judas; every one said, Is it I?

Ver. 5. Sold for three hundred pence] He, the thief, had quickly computed and cast it up. Pliny tells us that a pound of ordinary ointment might be had for ten pence; but the best was worth three hundred and ten pence. So that Judas was much about the good, as they say. And Mary spared for no cost; as neither did Justinian in his rich communion table, offered up by him in the temple of Sophia in Constantinople, that had in it, saith the author, all the riches of land and sea. Cedren. Hist.

Ver. 6. He was a thief] It is the conceit of Tertullian, that even Judas carried himself honestly and right, usque ad loculorum officium, till he bare the bag. When once he came to be master of the money he grew into such a devilish humour of covetousness, that rather than he would be out of taking, he would sell his very Saviour. And a fair match he made: for, as Austin saith, Judas sold his salvation, and the Pharisees bought their damnation.

And had the bag, and bare] Our Saviour then had a bag for store, and so big that it had need to have one specially deputed to bear it; this was Judas, who could be well content to bear the cross on his back, so he might bear the bag in his hand; which he thought (as all covetous men do) to be the best tongue a man can use for himself, as the Greek word γλωσσοκομον here used importeth. But what an odious piece of hypocrisy is that in the Capuchin friars, that none of them may take or touch silver! at the offer thereof they start back, as Moses from the serpent; yet have they ever a boy with a bag in their company, that takes and carries it, and never complains of either metal or measure.

Ver. 7. Let her alone] Christ crossed the traitor in his covetous desire of fingering such a sum. Hence his discontent put him upon that desperate design of contracting with the chief priests. He is resolved to have it, however he come by it; Rem, rem, quocunque modo rem. Horat. Take heed of discontent. It was the devil's sin that threw him out of heaven. Ever since which this restless spirit loves to fish in troubled waters, to dwell in a darkened soul: as in Saul, envious at David: and as some heretics, missing preferment, have invented their heresies, ut se consolarentur, as Epiphanius observed.

Against the day] Being at a feast he speaketh of his funeral.

Ver. 8. The poor ye have always with you] To give to when you please; and in gratifying whom, ye may glorify God and secure your substance; for Manus pauperum gazophylacium Christi, the hand of the poor is the treasury of Christ, saith an ancient.

But me have ye not always] And yet we have, in his poor members, the family of faith. Hence Salvian sticks not to say, that Christ is maximus mendicorum, the greatest of beggars; and addeth, Non eget miseria sed eget misericordia: non eget delatate pro se, sed eget pietate pro suis. (Salv. ad Eccles. Cathol. iv.)

Ver. 9. And they came, &c.] Do the Pharisees what they could to the contrary. Truth may be oppressed, not suppressed, Impii sunt piorum ἐργοδιωκται. This people (like those branches of palm-trees borne by them, #Joh 12:13) spread and sprang up the more they were held under by the high priests. (Βαλα, παρα το Βαινειν, a scandendo.)

But that they might see Lazarus] And fish somewhat out of him concerning the future estate of the dead. But here they lost their labour.

Ver. 10. That they might put Lazarus also to death] In malice is steeped the venom of all vices. What a giant like madness was this, to take up arms against heaven itself! to seek to kill a man, only because God had made him alive! was it not because they were even acted and agitated by the devil? Si videris aliquando persecutorem tuum nimis saevientem, scito quia ab accensore sue daemone perurgetur; saith Bernard. These Pharisees had sinned that sin to death; which made another, in the same case, wish that his wife and children and all the world might be damned together with him. (Mr Burr, Moses' Choice.) Hacket at the gallows cried out, O heavenly God, show some miracle out of the cloud to convert these infidels and deliver me from mine enemies. But if not, I will set the heaven on fire, and with these hands pluck thee out of thy throne: and other speeches he used, more unspeakable. Camden's Elizabeth.

Ver. 11. Because that by reason of him] This was it that embittered the Pharisees, as it doth now their successors the Papists. Bellarmine bewrays his grief, and tells us that ever since we proclaimed the pope to be that Antichrist, his kingdom hath not only not increased, but daily more and more decreased. Ab eo tempore quo per vos Papa Antichristus esse coepit, non modo non crevit eius imperium, &c. (De Papa #Ro 3:21) And Erasmus being asked by the Elector of Saxony, why Luther was so hated by the Popish clergy? For two great faults that he had committed, said he, for meddling with the pope's triple crown and the monks' fat paunches. (Sculdet. Annul.)

Ver. 12. On the next day much people] The envious Pharisees feeding the while upon their own hearts. Israel never increased so fast as when Pharaoh most oppressed them. Plures efficimur quoties metimur; saith Tertullian.

Ver. 13. Took branches of palm trees] Plutarch writeth that the Babylonians make 360 benefits of the palm tree, and therefore do highly honour it. Pintus upon Daniel telleth us, that the palm tree will not grow in a rich ground, but in a light and sandy; and if the soil be rich and fertile, they must cast salt and ashes at the root, to diminish the strength of the ground. Sure it is, that if prosperity be not seasoned with the salt of grace it will be unfruitful and unprofitable.

Hosanna, Blessed is the King, &c.] This shows they were well seen in David's psalms, which are, saith Chrysostom, a rich storehouse of all good doctrines: παντων αγαθων διδαγματων ταμειον. And they are so penned, saith Athanasius, that every man may think they speak de se, in re sua, of himself, and for his particular purpose; which of other parts of Scripture cannot be affirmed.

Ver. 14. When he had found a young ass] To make religion dance attendance upon policy (saith one) is to set the ass upon Christ, and not Christ upon the ass. These three things, saith Luther, will be the ruin of religion, unthankfulness, security, and carnal policy. Sapientia mundi, quae vult omnia, redigere in ordinem. (Melch. Adam.)

Ver. 15. Sitting upon an ass] Not upon a stately palfrey, as an earthly potentate; but upon a silly ass, without pomp, to comfort the poorest, and to teach us humility, tolerance, patience. An ass is a beast profitable (whence he hath his name in the original), but born to bear burdens. {a} Oneramus asinum, saith Bernard, et non curat, quia asinus est. But what notorious asses are those superstitious Papists, that show the ass's tail in Genoa in Italy, whereon our Saviour rode, for a relic, and give it divine worship. Are not these given up to the very efficacy of error?

Ver. 16. These things understood not, &c.] They only beheld it as a pretty pageant. They had read it often, in the prophet, and now saw it acted; yet were never the wiser, for the present. Read, or hear, though thou understandest not; God may drop in divine light when thou least lookest for it.

Ver. 17. When he called Lazarus, &c.] This notable miracle, the evangelist, as he had punctually described it, #Joh 11:41-44, so he cannot but again and again recite it. We should set forth God's noble acts, and not be sated. David never tires talking of what God had done for his soul. Those in heaven have no rest (and yet no unrest either) crying, "Holy, holy, holy," &c., #Re 4:8.

Ver. 18. For this cause also the people met him] To the Pharisees' extreme grief and regret; to show that there is neither "wisdom, nor understanding, nor counsel against the Lord," #Pr 21:30.

Ver. 19. Perceive ye how ye prevail nothing?] Thus they stir up one another to more madness, as if hitherto they had been overly mild, and used too much gentleness. So Stephen Gardiner, being charged of cruelty by Bradford, answered, I for my part have been challenged for being too gentle oftentimes. Which thing Bonner confirmed, and so did almost all the audience, that he had been ever too mild and moderate. So Bonner in open court to the Lord Mayor: They report me (said he) to seek blood, and call me bloody Bonner, whereas, God knows, I never sought any man's blood in all my life. But a certain unknown good woman, in a letter to Bonnor, told him his own in these words: Indeed you are called the common cut-throat and general slaughter-slave to all the bishops of England. And therefore it is wisdom for me and all other simple sheep of the Lord to keep us out of your butcherly stall, as long as we can, especially since you have such store already, that you are not able to drink all their blood, lest you should break your belly: and therefore ye let them lie still and die for hunger, &c. Thus she to Bonner. As for Dr Story, who was hanged, drawn, and quartered, for his treason in Queen Elizabeth's reign; I see (said he in open Parliament) nothing to be ashamed of (though he had been a furious persecutor under Queen Mary), so less I see to be sorry for, but rather because I have done no more; wherein he said there was no default in him, but in them, whom he often and earnestly had exhorted to the same; being not a little grieved, therefore, with them, for that they laboured only about the young and little sprigs and twigs, while they should have stricken at the root (the Lady Elizabeth he meant) and clean rooted it out. The Lord Paget in a certain consultation said, that King Philip should never have any quiet commonwealth in England unless the Lady Elizabeth's head were stricken from her shoulders. Whereunto the Spaniards answered, God forbid that their king and master should have such a mind, to consent to such a mischief. A writ came down, while she was in the Tower, subscribed with certain hands of the council, for her execution, Stephen Gardiner being the engineer. Mr Bridges, Lieutenant of the Tower, mistrusting false play, presently made haste to the queen, who renounced and reversed it. And yet of her, that was true that Josephus writeth of Alexandra, Ipsa solum nomen regium ferebat, caeterum omnem regni potestatem Pharisaei possidebant. She herself bore only the name of power, the Pharisees seized all the remaining authority of the kingdom,

Ver. 20. Greeks] That is, proselytes or transmarine Jews, that read the Greek version, and were called Hellenists.

Ver. 21. Sir, we would see Jesus] That is, we would have private conference with him; for they had seen him, likely, as he came riding into the city. Our Saviour seems not to have yet admitted them, because the time appointed for their calling was not yet come. "Everything is beautiful in its time," #Ec 3:11; but as fish and flesh, so other things too, are naught out of season.

Ver. 22. Andrew and Philip tell Jesus] Therefore we may desire the saints departed to mediate for us to Christ, say the Papists. A pitiful poor argument. Illi sic garrant, nos aliter credamus. (Augustine.)

Ver. 23. That the Son of man should be glorified] That is, crucified, but he looked through death, and saw heaven beyond it: so must we; then shall we say, "Surely the bitterness of death is past," #1Sa 15:32. This made Simeon sing out his soul, Egrederere, o anima mea; Leave oh my soul. Hilarion chode it out; Taylor fetched a frisk, when he was come near the place where he was burned; Bradford put off his cap, and thanked God, when the keeper's wife brought him word he was to be burned on the morrow; Roper stood in the fire with his arms stretched out like a rood; Hawks clapped his hands over his head three times, when they were all on a light fire. (Acts and Mon.)

Ver. 24. Except a corn of wheat, &c.] The apostles thought Christ should have been presently glorified. He lets them here know that he must first suffer, before he enter into his glory; bear the cross, before he wear the crown; pass the stroke of death's flaming sword, before he come into paradise. Ne Iesum quidem audias gloriosum, nisi

videris prius crucifixum. You may not hear even Jesus glory unless you have seen first the crucifixion. (Luth. epist, ad Melanct.)

Ver. 25. He that loveth his life] As Christ loved not his life to the death for us, so neither must we for him. If every hair of my head were a man, I would suffer death in the opinion and faith that I am now in, said John Ardley, martyr, to Bonner. God be praised, said Dr Taylor, since my condemnation, I was never afraid to die. God's will be done; if I shrink from God's truth, I am sure of another manner of death than had Judge Hales.

Ver. 26. If any man serve me, let, &c.] Art thou not glad to fare as Phocion? said he to one that was to die with him; οὐκ αγαπας μετα Φοκιονος απathanouμενος. (Plut.) How much more to die with and for Christ!

Ver. 27. Now is my soul troubled] Christi perturbatio nos tranquillat, et infirmitas firmat, saith Augustine.

Father, save me from this hour] As man, he naturally feared and deprecated death; such a dreadful death especially as he was to suffer. Δι αγνωστων σου παθηματων, saith the Greek litany; by thine unknown sufferings, good Lord, deliver us. Howbeit, this was but with his sensitive will; for his rational will was ever the same with that of his Father.

Ver. 28. Then came there a voice from heaven] God sometimes gives a sensible answer to the prayers of his people, as they are praying, or immediately after, as #Da 9:21 Ac 4:31. And Luther, praying for the good success of God's cause in Germany, came leaping out of his study, with Vicimus, vicimus, we conquer, we conquer, in his mouth.

Ver. 29. That it thundered; others said, An angel, &c.] But the apostles and some few others understood that it was neither thunder nor an angel, but God that spake. Fuerunt praeter Apostolos etiam aliqui minus sinistri interpretes. (Calvin.) In like sort today God speaks by his word, but few hear him in it. The word of God (saith Forbes on #Re 14) hath three degrees of operation in the hearts of men. First, it falleth to men's ears, as the sound of many waters; a confused sound, which commonly bringeth neither terror nor joy, but yet a wondering and acknowledgment of a strange force, and more than human power, #Mr 1:22,27 Ac 13:41. The second effect is, the voice of thunder; which brings not only wonder, but fear:

these two may be in the reprobate, as Felix, and the multitude in our text. The third effect, proper to the elect, is the sound of harping; while the word not only ravisheth with admiration, and striketh the conscience with terror, but also filleth it with sweet peace and joy.

Ver. 30. But for your sakes] That ye might believe; which if ye do not, how shall ye escape that neglect so great salvation, such a heavenly preacher? See then that ye refuse not, that ye shift not off, him that speaks from heaven; see that ye turn not from him, whose voice once shook the earth, but now heaven too, παραιτηθησθε, #Heb 12:25,26.

Ver. 31. The prince of this world] Gratian saith, the devil is called the prince of this world, as a king at chess, or as the cardinal of Ravenna, only by derision. The power he hath is merely usurped, and because the world will have it so, which even lieth down in that wicked one, as St John hath it, that is, under the power and vassalage of the devil, #1Jo 5:10. It is wholly set upon wickedness, as Aaron saith of the people, #Ex 32:22.

Ver. 32. And if I be lifted up, &c.] Pope Urban VI said that these words, "Give unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's," were abolished when Christ was lifted up from the earth, and drew all things to him; that is (as he expounds it), when Christ ascended, he drew to the pope's empire all kings and their kingdoms, making him King of kings and Lord of lords. (Jacob. Rev. de vit. Pen.) Is not this a sweet interpreter?

I will draw all men unto me] As the wind called Caecias, being a north-east wind, contrary to the nature of the north wind, drives not away clouds, but draws them to him.

Ver. 33. Signifying what death, &c.] Be lifted up between heaven and earth, as Absalom was, Absolon Marte furens pensilis arbore obit, who therein, saith Gretser the Jesuit, became a lively figure of Christ crucified. Sed o mirum et delirum figurativae crucis fabrum!

Ver. 34. We have heard out of the law] But had they never heard out of the law that Christ must first suffer, and then enter into his glory? #Isa 53:2 Da 9:26. There is none of us Jews, saith Josephus, but being asked of any point of the law, can answer to it more readily than tell his own name. Quilibet nostrum de lege interrogators, facilius quam nomini suo respondet. Is it then ignorance or malice that they thus cavil and quarrel our Saviour?

Ver. 35. Yet a little while is the light, &c.] The day of grace, which is very clear and bright, is usually a short one. Therefore break off your sins by repentance; be abrupt in the work, for life is short, opportunities headlong, and once past, irrecoverable. He is the wise man that prefers opportunity before time, in laying hold upon eternal life; but fools are semper victuri, saith Seneca, they will, and they will, &c.; so they trifle, and by futuring, fool away their own salvation. Amend before the draw bridge be taken up. Charles, king of Sicily and Jerusalem, was called Cunctator the Delayer: not in the sense as Fabius Maximus, because he stayed till opportunity came, but because he stayed till opportunity was past. Too many such. Manna must be gathered in the morning, or not at all; and not kept till the morrow, lest it stink.

Ver. 36. Whiles ye have the light] God is but a while with men in the opportunities of grace; and this will be a bodkin one day at the hearts of unbelievers, that they "loved darkness rather than light"; viz. when they are cast into outer darkness.

Ver. 37. But though he had done, &c.] The evangelist being now by course of the history to pass on to the description of Christ's death and passion, thinks good first to remove this dead Amasa (the Jews' unbelief) out of the way (that none might stop or step aside for it), by assigning the true cause thereof, their own unmalleable obstinance.

Ver. 38. That the saying of the prophet] These unbelievers were not such, because the prophet had so foretold it; but the prophet therefore foretold it, because they should be such. Like as Joseph's foretelling the famine was no cause of it, but an antecedent only.

Ver. 39. Therefore they could not believe, &c.] They could not, because they would not, saith Theophylact out of Chrysostom, who yet extolleth man's free will more than is meet. Pelagianis nondum litigantibus, patres securius loquebantur, saith Augustine, contra Julian. i. 2.

Ver. 40. He hath hardened their hearts] With a judiciary hardness. This is in some respect worse than hell: since (besides that God inflicts it as a punishment of former obstinance) it is one of the greatest sins, and so far greater an evil than any of the greatest punishments. Hence it was the saying of a reverend man, "If I must be put to my choice, I had rather be in hell with a sensible heart, than live on earth with a reprobate mind."

Ver. 41. When he saw his glory] His train only in the temple, #Isa 6:1, where the seraphims are said to hide their faces with two wings, as with a double scarf, before God's glorious brightness, that would put out their eyes else; they clap their wings on their faces, as men do their hands when the lightning flasheth in their eyes.

Ver. 42. Lest they should be put out, &c.] Which would redound to their disgrace, and this these ambitionists could not away with. But what saith a reverend divine? "Bravely contemn all contumelies and contempts for thy conscience, taking them as crowns, and confirmations of thy conformity to Christ."

Ver. 43. They loved the praise of men] Which what is it else but a little stinking breath? These have their reward, Mercedem suam, non Dei, you have your reward not of God, saith Jerome. How much better Luther! Haud velim, Erasmi, gloria aut nomine vehi: Maior est mihi timor in laudibus, gaudium veto in maledictis et blasphemiiis. Let me not wish by any means, Erasmus, to bear the fame or the reputation: To me, greater is the fear in praises, I do not have joy in insults or slanders. (Epist. ad Nic. Hansm.)

Ver. 44. Jesus cried, &c.] As being now to cry his last to them, and is therefore so earnest in his contestation. This was the Conclamatum est proclaimed to this perverse people, his farewell sermon, &c.

Ver. 45. Seeth him that sent me] For God was in Christ reconciling the world to himself, and in him the Godhead dwelt bodily, #Col 2:9. So that in all our addresses we must fix the eye of faith on the human nature of Christ, and there speak as to our God. Like as where I see the body of a man, there I know his soul is, and therefore I speak to his understanding when and where I see his body, because they are not severed; so, viewing by faith Christ's manhood now glorified, I there see and speak to the great God, because I know he is there personally united.

Ver. 46. I am come a light into the world] Not by participation only (as the apostles were the lights of the world, #Mt 5:14) but by nature. How prodigiously blasphemous then was that bishop in the Council of Trent, that (in his oration there made) applied this text to the pope, who at that time was Paul the Third, an odious hypocrite. (Cornel. Episcop. Bipontin.)

Ver. 47. I judge him not] viz. While I am here on earth. I sustain another person now, that men may come apace to me without fear. Some ancient heretics held, that God in the time of the law was a severe judge; and now, in the days of the gospel, he was all made of mercy and mildness. But the apostle saith somewhat otherwise, #Heb 2:1-3. God is more peremptory in his judgments now than ever of old. And, #Joh 12:29, he telleth us that even our God also, as well as the God of the Jews, "is a consuming fire."

Ver. 48. The word that I have spoken] If the word shall judge us, then ought it much more to be a judge of our doings now, said Mr Philpot, martyr. Therefore let it be president in all assemblies and judgments, saith Beza: as in the Nicene Council, Constantine caused the Bible to be set on a desk, as judge of all controversies.

Ver. 49. For I have not spoken of myself] The divine authority of gospel doctrine is here, in the close of this last sermon ad populum, most gravely asserted by our Saviour; as that which is undoubtedly authentic, because it comes from the Father, e cuius ore nil temere excidit. out of his mouth he destroys nothing rashly, David (saith one) sets the 119th Psalm as a poem of commendation before the book of God. The Son of David (say I) sets this text as his Imprimatur, his authoritative licence, at the end of the gospel. And as a friend once wrote to Aegidius, Abbot of Nuremberg, concerning the 119th Psalm, that they were, verba vivenda, non legenda, words not to be read, but lived; the same may I affirm of our Saviour's sermons, and I know that his commandment is life everlasting.

Ver. 1. That he should depart, &c.] This definition of death, saith Calvin, pertains to the whole body of the Church. It is to the saints no more than a passage to the Father, an inlet to eternal life. Whether a Christian's death be a burnt offering (of martyrdom), or a peace offering (of a natural death), whether it be by a sudden change, as Elijah's, or a lingering sickness, as Elisha's, it is a sweet sacrifice ascending to God, as Manoah's angel ascending in the smoke. This made Basil, when the emperor's lieutenant threatened to kill him, cry out, εἶθε γένοιτο μοι, I would he would; for so should he soon send me to my heavenly Father, to whom I now live, and to whom I desire to hasten, πρὸς ὃν ἐπιγιγώμαι πορρωθεν. (Basil.) This made Veleurio, a Dutch divine, when he lay upon his death bed, break out into these sweet words (Joh. Manli. loc. com.), Pater est Amator; Filius Redemptor; Spiritus Sanctus Consolator; quomodo itaque tristitia affici possim? The Father loves me, the Son redeemed me, the Holy Ghost comforts me; how then can I be cast down at the approach of death? And the like triumphant words were uttered to me by my late reverend good friend and father, Mr John Jackson, pastor of Binton, in Warwickshire, when he lay dying, and laid his last charge upon me, to preach Christ, who had swallowed up death in victory.

To the end he loved them] Such fast friends are hard to find. φίλος εὐμεταβλητον ζῶον, A friend is a very changeable creature, saith Plato; as soon on and as soon off again; as soon in and as soon out, as Joab's dagger was; clear at the top and muddy at the bottom, as ponds are; white at the waxing of the moon, and black at the waning of it, as the fish scolopidus in the river Araxis is said to be. Andronicus, the Greek emperor, whom but yesterday he had used most kindly, and enrolled among his best friends, upon them today he frowned and tyrannized most cruelly; so that you might have seen, saith the historian, the same man the same day (as is reported of Xerxes's admiral) to be crowned and beheaded, to be graced and disgraced. So of Tiberius and Mahomet, the first emperor of the Turks, it is said, that in their love there was no assurance; but their least displeasure was death. Christ, whom he loves once he loves ever, and though we break often with him, yet he abides faithful, #2Ti 2:13, and his foundation standeth steady, having this seal, "The Lord knoweth them that are his," #2Ti 2:19.

Ver. 2. The devil having now put] He is likely at one end of every temptation to sin; as the hand of Joab was in the tale of the woman of Tekoah. He rubs the firebrand of evil concupiscence, and makes it send out sparkles.

Ver. 3. Jesus knowing, &c.] This is prefaced to the washing of his disciples' feet, to show that he did it not rashly, or out of baseness of spirit, as forgetting the dignity of his person and place, as Ahaz did, #2Ki 16:7, and those, #Isa 57:9, and David also in the court of Achish. There is a το πρεπον, a comeliness to be kept in every condition.

Ver. 4. He riseth from supper] So the rite of the Paschal supper required; as Beza showeth in his annotations upon #Mt 26:20.

Ver. 5. After that he poureth water, &c.] So doth the pope once a year in an apish imitation of our Saviour. As likewise, when he is new elected, in his solemn Lateran procession, he takes copper out of his chamberlain's lap, and scatters it among the people, and (lie and all) saith, "Silver and gold have I none." (Dr Hall on #Mt 5:20)

Ver. 6. Then cometh he to Peter] He came first to him (for the former verse sets forth his intent rather than his act of washing). And yet St Chrysostom tells of some that would needs have it, that he began with Judas. Like as the Papists say that our Saviour appeared first, after his resurrection, to the Virgin Mary; though the text be plain that he first showed himself to Mary Magdalene. These are like him in Aristotle, that thought that everywhere he saw his own shape and picture going before him.

Ver. 7. But thou shalt know hereafter] Different degrees of knowledge are bestowed at several times. Our hearts are like narrow mouthed vessels; but then shall we know if we follow on to know the Lord, #Ho 6:3, and take heed that we leak not, #Heb 2:1.

Ver. 8. Thou shalt never wash my feet] This was an immoderate modesty, a proud humility; so is it in them that refuse gospel comforts, because they are unworthy, Domine, non sum dignus, at sum indigens, said Pomeran. Tibi adest ninia humilitas, Thou hast too much humility, said Luther to Staupicius. So the Baptist was as much to blame in refusing to baptize Christ {#Mt 3:14} as Peter here to be washed by him. Luther said of Melancthon's self-denying humility, Soli Deo omnia deberi tam obstinate asserit, ut mihi plane videatur in hoc saltem errare, quod Christum ipse fingat longius abesse cordi sue quam sit revera: Certe nimis nullus in hoc est Philippus. Philip is worse conceited of himself than is fit.

Ver. 9. Lord, not my feet only] Here he seems to be as far out on the other side. How hard is it to hold a mean. Medio tutissimus ibis. (Ovid.) Virtue is placed between two extremes, as the planet Jupiter between cold Saturn and fiery Mars.

Ver. 10. Needeth not, save to wash his feet] For though bathed in that blessed fountain, #Zec 13:1, and fully justified, yea, and freed from the stain and reign of sin, yet not from the relics, to keep us humble; that when we look upon our feet, we may withal look upon the feet still defiled, and so be still cleansing ourselves "from all filthiness of flesh and spirit," #2Co 7:1. The inwards and the feet in a sacrifice were to be washed above the rest; because the entrails contain the excrements; and the legs, because they tread in the dirt. Answerable whereunto, we are called upon to wash our hearts, #Jer 4:14, and our feet, here. The comparison seems to be taken from those that are washed in baths; for though their whole bodies besides are washed; yet going forth, they touch the earth with their feet, and so are fain to wash again.

Ver. 11. He knew who should betray him] And yet he vouchsafed to wash his feet. This was stupenda dignatio, a wonderful condescension, an unparalleled patience.

Ver. 12. Know ye what I have done to you?] This was our Saviour's usual order, to catechise his disciples after he had said or done anything for their instruction. So did the apostles, #Ga 6:6, 1Co 14:19, and the primitive pastors; they had their Credis? credo: Abrenuncias? abrenuncio, as it were by an echo, as the word importeth. (Κατηχεω, Sicut in echo una vox his audiri debet, tam ex catechumeno, quam ex ipso catechista, Pasor.)

Ver. 13. Ye call me Master and Lord] A little before our Saviour came in the flesh, the Jewish doctors had taken up divers titles in this order; Rabbi, Rabban, Rub, Rabba, Gaon, Moreh, Morenu, and Morehtsedek. These they did arrogantly appropriate to themselves; but Christ was the true owner of them all.

Ver. 14. Ye ought also to wash one another's feet] What so great matter is it then to salute others, to seek reconciliation with them, &c. Angels think not themselves too good to serve the saints; kings and queens shall bow down to them with their faces toward the earth, and lick up the dust of their feet, #Isa 49:23.

Ver. 15. For I have given you an example] υποδειγμα. This St Peter calls υπογραμμον, a copy for us to write after, #1Pe 2:21. And in the same chapter saith that we should preach forth Christ's virtues, εξαγγελητε, #Joh 13:9; our lives should be as so many sermons upon Christ's life, while we strive to express him to the world in all his imitable graces. This is to walk in Christ, #Col 2:6, to walk as Christ walked, #1Jo 2:6. The meditation of Christ's meekness converted the eunuch, #Ac 8:32,33, &c. And we read of an earl, called Eleazarus, that being given to immoderate anger, was cured of that disordered affection by studying of Christ, and of his patience. This meditation he never suffered to pass from him, before he found his heart transformed into the similitude of Jesus Christ. Crux pendentis, cathedra docentis. (In Vita eius apud Surentius). The cross of hanging, the seat of learning.

Ver. 16. The servant is not greater, &c.] This answers all our exceptions against brotherly offices: I am his elder, better, greater than he, &c. But which of us can say, I am a god? Christ washed his disciples' feet, though he knew that the Father had given all things into his hands, &c., as is expressly and for this very purpose noted here by the evangelist, #Joh 13:3.

Ver. 17. If ye know these things, &c.] Knowledge without practice is but as rain in the middle region; or as a horn in the unicorn's head, which if it were in a wise man's head, would be very useful and medicinable, but as now is hurtful.

Ver. 18. I know whom I have chosen] Judas he had not chosen, but to the apostleship only. All this Judas hears, and is not moved at it; such a stupefying sin is hypocrisy. The Germans have a proverb, Quem Deus excaecaturus est, huic primum oculos claudit. (Bucholcer.) Whom God intends to destroy, of these he first blinds their eyes. And the Latins say, Deus quem destruit, dementat, God besots the man whom he means to destroy.

Ver. 19. Ye may believe that I am he] And that ye may not stumble or stagger, though ye see Judas play the traitor, #2Ti 2:18,19. The apostasy of Hymenaeus and Philetus, a pair of eminent professors, was like to have shaken many; insomuch as the apostle was fain to make apology: "Nevertheless the foundation of God remaineth sure," &c.

Ver. 20. Verily, verily I say, &c.] Here our Saviour seems to go on where he left, #Joh 13:17, that between being a digression. Digressions, saith one, are not always and absolutely unlawful. (Bifield on the Colos.) God's Spirit sometimes draws aside the doctrine to satisfy some soul, which the preacher knows not; and sparingly used, it quickeneth the attention. But God may force it, yet man may not frame it; and it is a most happy ability to speak punctually, directly to the point.

Ver. 21. He was troubled in spirit] The Stoics then were out, in holding that passions befall not a wise man; and Jesuited Gonzaga was not so much to be magnified, who would not permit any man to love him; {a} and when his father died, all the grief he took was no more than this; Now, said he, there is nothing hindereth me to say, "Our Father, which art in heaven." Christ was thoroughly troubled here, that any one so highly advanced by him (as in the former verse, "he that receiveth whomsoever I send, receiveth me," &c.) should be so ill-minded towards him as to betray him. Ideo deteriores sumus, quia meliores esse debemus, saith Salvian. We are therefore the worse, because we should be better. It was no small aggravation to Solomon's sin that he forsook that God that had appeared unto him twice, #1Ki 11:9. Our offences are increased by our obligations.

Ver. 22. Looked one upon another doubting, &c.] Our Saviour sifted them; and hereby put them upon the duty of self-examination; ever seasonable, but especially before the sacrament, as here, Let a man examine himself (and do it exactly, as the word signifies, δοκιμαζτω, #2Co 11:28), though the heart hang off never so much. Men are as loth to review their actions and read the blurred writing of their hearts, as schoolboys are to parse their lessons and false Latins they have made. But this must be done, or they are undone for ever. And sparing a little pains at first, doubles it in the end; as he who will not cast up his books, his books will cast him up at length.

Ver. 23. Now there was leaning on Jesus' bosom] So must we do at the sacrament, by the actuation of our faith, ascending up into heaven, and fetching down Christ into the heart, that we may have intimate and entire communion with him. {a} By the force of our faith at the Lord's table, cruci haeremus, sanguinem fugimus, et intra ipsa redemptoris nostri vulnera figimus linguam, saith St Cyprian (de Coena Dom.). We adhere to the cross, we flee to the blood.

Ver. 24. Simon Peter therefore beckoned] Peter, that heretofore could not think his heart so unsound as to deny his Master, now feareth the ugly monster of fearless betraying. In man's heart, as in the sea, there is that Leviathan, therefore also creeping things innumerable, #Ps 104:26.

Ver. 25. He then lying on Jesus' breast] Ad pectus allapsus, as laying his ear to our Saviour's mouth, that he might whisper him who it was; {a} for things were as yet secretly carried, and the traitor not discovered, save to John only, who knew Christ's soul secrets, and afterward received his revelation.

Ver. 26. He it is to whom I shall, &c.] Here our Saviour not only feeds his hungry enemy, but shows him like courtesy as we do to one we drink to at table; yea, though he knew the traitor would make an ill use of it. Thus should a Christian punish his persecutors. No vengeance but this is heroic, and fit for Christ's followers. Thus Bradford saved Bourn, that helped to burn him. Saunders, sent to prison by Stephen Gardiner, gave God thanks that had given him at last a place of rest and quietness where he might pray for the bishop's conversion. It was grown to a proverb concerning Cranmer, Do my Lord of Canterbury a shrewd turn, and then you may be sure to have him your friend while he liveth. Henry VII, emperor of Germany, feeling himself poisoned in the sacramental bread by a monk, called him, and said unto him, Domine, recedatis, &c., Begone, sir, for if my followers find you, you will die for it. {a}

Ver. 27. Satan entered into him] Had gotten more full possession of him. Let them that depart the public assemblies ere all be done, as Judas did, take heed they meet not the devil at the door. The fourth Council of Carthage excommunicated such, and so delivered them up to Satan, which is a grievous punishment; for then they lie open to all wickedness, as Ananias, whose heart Satan had filled from corner to corner. Luther when he had read certain letters sent to him from Vitus Theodorus, fetched a deep sigh, and said, Heu quam furit Satan, et impellit securos homines ad horrenda flagitia, quae corpus et animum perdunt! Oh how the devil rageth and driveth on secure persons to horrible and damnable wickedness! That which moved Luther to say so, was a sad relation made in that letter, of a certain widow, who being with child by a young scholar, could not have her child baptized unless she would tell the priest who was the child's father; whereat she being grievously vexed, first killed her child and then hanged herself. Which when the scholar heard of, he likewise stabbed himself to death. The priest understanding what tragedies had followed upon his refusing to baptize the child, hanged himself also. Now, who can doubt but all this was done by the instigation of the devil? Men usually defy him and spit at his name; but they spit not low enough, they spit him out of their mouths, but not out of their hearts; there he plays Rex, and so long cares no more for their cursing of him than he doth for holy water.

That thou doest, do quickly] This is no command, but a prediction by way of detestation; like as when God said to Balaam, Go, for I know thou wilt go after the wages of wickedness. Some note here that, even to Judas, Christ saith, "That thou doest, do quickly," so odious is dulness unto him. (Ward's Serm.)

Ver. 28. Now no man at the table knew, &c.] For John had not told Peter the secret committed to him by Christ, though he were very desirous to have known it;

A friend that can both keep counsel and give counsel, is worth his weight in gold. When one desired to see Alexander's treasure, he bade one of his servants show him, not his talents of silver, but his trusty friends, οὐκ ἀργυρίου ταλαντα, ἀλλὰ τοὺς φίλους.

Ver. 29. For some of them thought] An example of Christian simplicity. As bad men muse as they use, so good men measure others by themselves and so are often deceived, as here. "Charity thinketh no evil," #1Co 13:5.

Or that he should give something to the poor] Christ had not much, yet had somewhat for the poor; so must the poor day labourer, #Eph 4:28, the necessitous widow, #Mr 12:42.

Ver. 30. He then having received the sop] So many having received the Supper of the Lord, eat their bane and drink their poison; what they eat is sauced, and what they drink is spiced, with the bitter wrath of God, their hearts are woefully hardened, and their dispositions to sin seven times more inflamed than ever before.

Ver. 31. Therefore when he was gone out] The room being rid of the traitor, Christ deals more freely and familiarly with the rest, and arming them against the scandal of the cross, he calls his death his glory, esteems his crown of thorns more precious than Solomon's diadem; looks upon his welts as spangles, his blows on the face as ingots, his wounds as gems, his spittings on as sweet ointment, his cross as his throne. This is a paradox to flesh and blood; Jews and Gentiles jeer at it; as Lucian the atheist, who rails upon Christ blasphemously, calling him the crucified impostor; ανασκολοπισμενον σοφιστην. (Luc. in Vita Peregr.) And as for Christians, they foolishly believe, saith he, that they shall enjoy immortality and live in bliss for ever; therefore they set light by life, yea, many of them offer themselves voluntarily to be slain for their superstition. Persuaserunt sibi infaelices se immortalitate fruituros. Thus he. And another heathen proconsul, Actius Antoninus, in Asia cum persequeretur Christianos (Tertul.), when he had tired himself with killing Christians, and saw no end of it, but that they came thicker upon him, crying out "We are Christians," &c., he cursed them and cried out, O miseri, si libet perire, num vobis rupes aut restes desunt? O wretches, can you find no other way to die, but I must be troubled with you?

Ver. 32. And shall straightway] Thus for the "joy that was set before him, he endured the cross, despising, the shame, as being shortly to sit down at the right hand of the throne of God," #Heb 12:2. Look we on him, and do likewise. There were in Greece certain fields called Palaestrae, where young men exercised themselves in wrestling. In these were set up statues of some valiant champions, that the young wrestlers might fix their eyes upon them, and so be encouraged. Can we choose a better champion than Christ to eye and imitate, should we be called to resist unto blood, striving against sin? He did not only sanguinem suffundere, sed effundere, to pour in the blood but poured it out. And how did he support himself under the cross, but by the forethought of the crown?

Ver. 33. Little children, yet a little while] Here our Saviour useth the self-same words to his apostles, which before he had used to the Jews, with whom he was angry; so to cut off all hope from them of his corporeal presence. The fiction of the ubiquity began about the time of Berengarius; was fostered and furthered by Gerson, Chancellor of Paris, who first taught the real communication of properties, by means whereof the human nature of Christ received this prerogative, said he, that at his supper (and then only) it might be in many places at once, wheresoever the supper was celebrated. But in the year of Christ 1524 Jacobus Faber Staupulensis taught at Paris, that by the same reason Christ might be as well corporally present in all places at once, as he was at the supper. For which doctrine of the ubiquity he was opposed the year following by one Natalis Beda, and by the Sorbonists banished out of France. This is the nativity of that famous ubiquity, which being cast out of France, Luther brought back into the Churches of Germany; Brentius furbished it over, and Smidelinus obtruded it upon many places and persons, whether they would or not; whence he is surnamed, Ubiquitatis Apostolus, Omnipresent Apostle. How much better that good woman in the Book of Martyrs, that being asked by the bishops, "Dost thou believe that the body of Christ is in the sacrament really and substantially?" "I believe," said she, "that that is a real lie, and a substantial lie." Domitius Calderinus, the Italian, who flourished in the year 1442, when he was called by his friends to go to mass, was wont to say (as Vives tells us), Eamus ad communem errorem, Let us go to the common error.

Ver. 34. A new commandment, &c.] New, ratione claritatis et facilitatis; for now there is abundance of spirit given by Christ, who writes this affection in our hearts, as of old the law was written in stone. Besides that, he is become a new pattern and example of the rule; and so it is become a new commandment, not in respect of the matter of the duty, but of the form of observing it. For the old rule was, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." But now that form ("as I have loved you") hath something in it that is more expressed; and, for the incomparable sufficiency of the precedent, is matchless, and more full of incitation to fire affection; there being far more incentives and motives to love, since Christ came and gave himself for us. And this is appointed here, for the disciples' and our solace in the want of Christ's bodily presence, as loving fellow members to strive by all means to delight in the loving society one of another.

Ver. 35. By this shall all men know] Other men's disciples are known by their titles, habits, ceremonies, &c., as the pope's shavelings (which yet is grown so bald a business, that now they begin to be ashamed of it); but love is Christ's cognizance, acknowledged by very heathens, who could say that no people in the world did love one another so as Christians did. Vide ut invicem se ament Christiani! dixerunt Pagani, referente. (Tertulliano in Apologet.) As the curtains of the tabernacle were joined by loops, so are true Christians by love. Philadelphia is blamed for nothing, #Re 3:18.

Ver. 36. Whither goest thou?] That deep conceit he had drunk in of an earthly kingdom, so hung in his light, that he could not see whither Christ was ascending. A little saucer held close to the eyes hinders the sight of a huge hill.

But thou shalt follow me] Perhaps in the same kind of death; but to heaven, most certainly.

Ver. 37. I will lay down, &c.] Peter was melius semper animatus quam armatus, better affected than appointed. His heart deceived him, as did David's, #Ps 39:1,2. He said he would look to his ways, bridle his tongue, &c. But soon after he broke his word, "My heart was hot within me." Petrus se Christo opposuit, se caeteris praeoposuit, sibi totum imposuit. Chrysost.

Ver. 38. The cock shall not crow] Christ mentioneth the cock, quia tam strenuum pugnatorem decebat tale praeconium. So, #Re 6:13, pastors revolt, as green figs fall off, with no ado. In the Palatinate they fell to Popery as fast as leaves fall in autumn.

Chapter 14

Ver. 1. Let not your heart, &c.] Our Saviour sweetly proceeds in his swan-like song. Aelian tells us that he once heard a dying swan sing most heavenly and harmoniously, εὐφρονότατον καὶ ᾠδικώτατον. (Hist. Var. lib. i.) The poet shows the manner of it, when he saith

—“ *longa canoros
Dat per colla modos*”—

Of the Syrens (on the contrary) it is reported, that how sweetly soever they sang before, yet at death they make a horrid noise and unpleasant roaring. Morris articulo instante, et sanguine male affecto valde horride mugiunt Sirenes. Likewise, good men utter their best usually at last, the wine of the spirit being then strongest and liveliest in them. Whereas wicked men are then usually at worst, and go out with a stench, as the devil is said to do. And as Melancthon said of Eccius's last wicked work, written of priests' marriage, Non full cygnea cantio, sed ultimus crepitus: et sicut felis fugiens pedit, sic ille moriens hunc crepitura cecinit. (Melch. Adam. in Vit. Calv.) So of Baldwin the apostate, one saith that vivere simul et maledicere desiit, he died cursing, as that wretch did swearing, who desperately also desired the bystanders to help him with oaths and to swear for him.

Ver. 2. I would have told you] And not have fed you with false hopes of a Utopian happiness, as the devil deals by his, whom he brings into a fool's paradise; as Mahomet by his, to whom he promises in paradise delicious fare, pleasant gardens, and other sensual delights eternally to be enjoyed, &c. Christ is no such impostor.

Ver. 3. I will come again, &c.] Oh, look up and long for this "consolation of Israel"; say as Sisera's mother, "Why are his chariots" (those clouds) "so long in coming?"

Fax! Vesper! prope Nox! o mora! Christe veni. ”

There may ye be also] Christ counts not himself full till he have all his members about him: hence the Church is called "the fulness of him that filleth all things," #Eph 1:23.

Ver. 4. And whither I go ye know] Some little knowledge they had, such as Thomas in the next verse denies to be any at all; yet Christ acknowledgeth it. The tenor of the new covenant requires no set measures of grace. The first springings in the womb of grace are precious before God, #Eph 2:1; he blesseth our buds, #Isa 61:11, and in our dunghill of ignorance can find out his own part of knowledge, as here.

Ver. 5. Lord, we know not whither thou goest, &c.] No, Thomas? what, are ye also ignorant? They knew, but knew not that they knew: their knowledge was yet but confused and indistinct; they saw men, but as it were walking like trees, till their eyes were better anointed with the eye-salve of the Spirit. A man (saith Gataker) may have grace, and yet not know it (as the embryo hath life, and yet knoweth it not), yea, he may think he hath it not, as we seek for keys that are in our pockets; or think we have lost a jewel, that we locked up in our chest: yea, as the butcher looketh for the candle that sticketh in his hat, by the light of what he seeketh.

Ver. 6. I am the way, and the truth, &c.] As if he should say, Thou hast no whither to go but to me, nor which way to go but by me, that thou mayest attain eternal life. Which made Bernard say, Sequemur, Domine, te, per te, ad te: Te quia Veritas, per te quia Via, ad te quia Vita. God, we will follow you, through you, to you: because you are the truth, through you because you are the way, to you because you are the life. And this was one of those sweet sayings that old Beza had much in his mouth a little before his death. (Melch. Adam. in Vitis exter.)

No man cometh unto the Father, but by me] Christ hath paved us a new and living way to God, with his own meritorious blood: and his flesh stands as a screen between us and those everlasting burnings, #Isa 33:14. Let Papists say of their saints, Per hunc itur ad Deum, sed magis per hunc. Through him is the way to God, but greater through him. Let us say of all their he and she saints, as that heathen, Contemno minutos istos Deos, modo Iovem (Iesum) propitium habeam. I despise such petty gods, but let us have the propitious Jesus.

Ver. 7. And from henceforth ye know him] Or else the more shame for you, having had me (his express image) so long among you. Christians have a privilege above the Church of the Old Testament. The sea about the altar was brazen, #1Ki 7:23, and what eyes could pierce through it? Now, our sea about the throne is glassy, #Re 4:6, like the crystal, clearly conveying the light and sight of God in Christ to our eyes.

Ver. 8. Lord, show us the Father] They would have seen the Father face to face with their bodily eyes, as they saw the Son. But that no man can do and live, #Ex 33:20. We cannot see the sun in rota, in its orbit, as the schools speak, in the circle wherein it runs, but only in the beams. So neither can we see God in his essence; in his Son we may, who is the resplendence of his Father's glory, απαύλασμα, #Heb 1:3.

Ver. 9. Have I been so long, &c.] May not Christ justly shame and shent us all for knowing no more of him all this while? Ignorance under means of knowledge is a blushful sin, #1Co 15:34.

Ver. 10. The words that I speak] Our Saviour allegeth for himself the Divinity both of his word and works. He was mighty, saith Peter, both in word and deed. Ministers also must, in their measure, be able to argue and approve themselves to be men of God, by sound doctrine and good life. And not be, as our Saviour saith the Pharisees were, and as Epictetus saith many philosophers were such, ανευ του πραττειν, μεχρι του λεγειν, that is, as far as a few words would go.

Ver. 11. Believe me that I am, &c.] Take my bare word without any further pawn or proof. This is an honour due to Christ only, that he is ωτοπιστος, He is Amen, "the faithful and true witness," #Re 3:14.

Ver. 12. And greater works than these] Greater in regard of the matter, as converting 3000 souls at a sermon, reducing a great part of the world to the obedience of Christ, &c. But yet less than those Christ did, for the manner. For, 1. They did not them in their own name, but in his. 2. They preached not that they were gods, as he, but they preached Christ the only Lord, and themselves the Church's servants, for Jesus' sake. They were the white horses on which Christ rode abroad the world, "conquering and to conquer," #Re 6:2. In memory whereof, as it may seem, the Saxon princes, having borne a black horse till then in their military ensigns, did, after they had received the faith and were baptized, bear a white horse, and gave it for their arms. And Tertullian could say in his time, that Britannorum inaccessa Romanis loca, Christo tamen subdita. To the Romans, Britian was an inaccessible place, yet it was subdued by Christ.

Ver. 13. That I will do] An undoubted argument of Christ's Divinity, that he hears and grants prayers. When the people, in Ahab's time, saw God answering Elijah by fire from heaven, they cried out, "The Lord he is God, the Lord he is God," #1Ki 18:39 "O thou that hearest prayers" is a description the Psalmist gives of God, #Ps 65:2.

Ver. 14. If ye shall ask anything, &c.] This is not a vain repetition. Nunquam satis dicitur, quod nunquam satis discitur. (Seneca.) When God spake but once, David heard it twice. Oh that we would once hear and believe, what Christ for our comfort hath said over so often!

Ver. 15. If ye love me, keep my commandments] No better way to seal up love than by being obedient. "How canst thou love me," said she, "when thy heart is not with me?" #Jud 16:15. Hushai, to show his love to David, set upon that difficult and dangerous service for him, of insinuating into Absalom's counsels, and defeating them.

Ver. 16. And he shall give you another Comforter] Or, pleader, deprecator, advocate, παρακλητον. Properly it signifies such a one as we send for, when we are in any danger, to advise and counsel us. The devil is called the accuser, Κατηγορος, in full opposition to this name and title given here to the Holy Spirit; whose office it is (as this attribute here imports) to make intercession in our hearts to God for us; and upon our true repentance to make our apology, #1Co 7:11; to comfort us, by discovering our graces, #1Co 2:12, and by pleading our evidences, #Ro 8:18, which they that refuse to read over and rest upon, they help Satan, the accuser, taking his part against themselves, and pleading his cause against the Spirit their Comforter.

That he may abide with you for ever] The Spirit (saith Dr Sibbs) is Christ's vicar-general, with whom he leaves us, and by whom he is with us to the end of the world.

Ver. 17. For he dwelleth with you] Next to the love of Christ in dwelling in our nature, we may wonder at the love of the Holy Ghost, that will dwell in the dark dog-hole of our defiled souls; and be there as those two golden pipes, #Zec 4:12, through which the two olive branches empty out of themselves the golden oils of all precious graces; which are, therefore, called "the fruits of the Spirit," #Ga 5:22 "yea, the Spirit," #Joh 14:17. God also in giving us his Spirit, is said to give us all good things, #Mt 7:11 cf. Lu 11:13.

Ver. 18. I will not leave you comfortless] Orphans, or darkling, ορφανους ab ορφνη, tenebrae. I your Lord am taken indeed from your head for a while, but you shall have the supply of my Spirit, #Php 1:19. And I, even I, will come again to you ere long; yea, I am now upon the way; I come to fetch you, I come to meet you, I come, I come, ερχομαι, Dedit me in viam.

Ver. 19. But ye see me] The spiritual man hath "the mind of Christ," #1Co 2:16, and those things revealed unto him that natural eye never saw, carnal ear never heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love him; neither prepared only, but imparted to his beforehand, even in this life. For he reserves not all for the life to come, but gives a grape of Canaan in this wilderness, such as the world never tasted of.

Ver. 20. That I am in my Father and you in me] Oh happy union, the ground of communion! interest! the ground of influence! Hence we have communication of Christ's secrets, #1Co 2:6; the testimony of Jesus, #1Co 1:5; consolation in all afflictions, #2Co 1:5; sanctification of all occurrences, #Php 1:21; participation of Christ's merit and Spirit, and what not?

Ver. 21. And I will love him, and manifest, &c.] Increase of the saving knowledge of Christ is promised as a singular reward of our love to him and fruit of his love to us, εμφανισω, tacite et clam indicabo. By quietness and silence I will point out. (Eras.) Imo palam et in media luce. No indeed, openly and is the midst of light, Beza. This is, saith Agur, "to ascend into heaven," #Pr 30:3,4. This is, saith our Saviour elsewhere, the great talent of all others. There is a "much" in it, #Lu 12:48. This is, saith St Paul, the Christian's riches, #1Co 1:5; and David reckons of his wealth by it, #Ps 119:32.

Ver. 22. How is it that thou wilt manifest, &c.] Many a wise question the disciples ask him in this chapter; and yet our Saviour bears with their rudeness, and gently instructs them, preaching as they were able to hear, #Mr 4:33. So did Paul, #1Co 9:22. So must all ministers, #2Ti 2:25, if they mean to do good on it.

Ver. 23. Jesus answered and said unto him] Our Saviour, passing by that frivolous question, proceedeth in his discourse. Some follies are best confuted by silence. One having made a long and idle discourse before Aristotle, concluded it thus: I doubt I have been too tedious unto you, Sir Philosopher, with my many words. In good sooth, said Aristotle, you have not been tedious to me, for I gave no heed to anything you said. (Plutarch, de Garrulitate.)

Ver. 24. But the Father's] Therefore to be obeyed, because of divine authority. God's impress makes authentic, and binds every good heart to obedience. Veniat, veniat verbum Domini, et submittemus ei, sexcenta si nobis essent colta, said Baldassar, a godly Dutch divine (in Epist. ad Oecolamp.).

Ver. 25. These things have I spoken unto you] And truly I may seem to have spoken to small purpose ( verba quid incassum non proficientia perdo?) by anything that you have yet profited. But cast not away your confidence that hath so great recompence of reward. For the Comforter shall be your remembrancer, and cause your memories (as the sea doth) to cast up your dead notions, &c., as #Joh 14:26.

Ver. 26. But the Comforter, &c.] The Spirit teacheth only things consonant to Scripture, and is thereby discerned from a spirit of delusion. He is not novarum revelationum architectus, author of new revelations, as Papists, Mahometans, Anabaptists, and Libertines would make him. The Jews also had many traditions and unwritten verities (as they called them) wherewith they believed their scribes and doctors were inspired, for the people's better direction in observing the law. These they called Mashlamnuthoth, Completiones, Perfectiones, because they thought that the written law was perfected and completed by them. (Buxtorff.) These were those our Saviour cried down, #Mt 15:5. And the prophet tells us, that in vain shall we look to hear the voice behind us, where our "eyes see not our teachers," #Isa 30:20,21.

Ver. 27. Peace I leave with you] As a farewell or legacy; Sacrosancta eirēnē nobis committitur, non ερουνις, aut ερις: Christ is the Prince of Peace, yea, he is our peace, saith the apostle, and brings true peace, which is a piece of his kingdom, #Ro 14:17. Of him it may be more truly said than it was of our Henry VII, that he came in, Ut cum pacem exultantem exul, extorremque extorris concomitatus esset, reducem quoque redux apportaret. (Twinnus Comment. de rebus Britann.)

Not as the world, &c.] They cry peace when there is no peace, and make fair weather when such a storm of God's wrath is ready to burst out as shall never be blown over. They complement, and wish peace, when war is in their hearts: as the pope sent away Henry III, emperor, in peace, but it was, saith the historian, Qualem scilicet pacem Iudas simulavit, non qualem Christus reliquit, i.e. such as Judas, counterfeit, not such as Jesus left his people. (Auth. Apolog. de unit. Eccles.)

Ver. 28. My Father is greater than I] To wit, as I have voluntarily submitted myself to the office of a mediator. Lo, here this Sun of righteousness is gone back ten degrees in the dial below his Father. "Thou hast made him little less than the angels," #Ps 8:5; there (as man) he is gone back ten degrees below the angels. "I am a worm and no man," #Ps 22:6; there he is gone back ten degrees below men. "A living dog is better than a dead lion," #Ec 9:4; there he is gone back ten degrees below worms. For he was not so much as a living worm, but was laid in the grave as a dead lion, there to have been meat for worms, but that it was impossible for God's Holy One to see corruption. See how he emptied and humbled himself, εκενωσεν, that he might exalt and fill us with his fulness, ικανωσεν.

Ver. 29. And now I have told you before] Which none beside God himself could do, but by divine revelation. The knowledge of future contingents is of God only, and of such as to whom he is pleased to communicate it; as he did to the prophets, who when they foretold things only as in their causes, they might happen or not, as #Isa 38:1 Jon 3:4 1Ki 21:20; but when they foretold things ut futura in seipsis, then they occurred infallibly. The devil also may come acquainted with such things, and be able to foretell them, if God reveal them to him, as he did Ahab's death; and as Trithemius the abbot and Cusanus the cardinal foretold a change of religion to happen in the year 1517, which was the year wherein Luther began to stickle for Christ against the pope. {a}

Ver. 30. Hereafter I will not, &c.] Make we the best of our Christian friends while we have them; as we would do of a borrowed book or tool, that we know not how soon they may be sent for by the right owner.

The prince of this world cometh] In his limbs and instruments, those breathing devils that put Christ to death. Persecutors are set to work by Satan; "the devil shall cast some of you into prison," #Re 2:10. Why? Is he become a justice of peace, to send men to prison? Yes, by his agents. But why would Christ be so used by him and his? Hear the next words.

Ver. 31. But that the world may know] Not you only, but all must take notice of my ready obedience to the will of my heavenly Father, even to the suffering of death. Christ's passion must shine as a perpetual picture in our hearts; therefore it is so accurately described by all the four evangelists, whereas his birth is recorded but by two of them only.

Ver. 1. I am the true vine, &c.] Our Saviour's way lying (as it is thought) by the vineyards, he takes that occasion of comparing himself to a vine, as he doth elsewhere to many other creatures, everywhere obvious; that therein, as in so many optic glasses, we may see him, and be put in mind of him. Tam Christi meminisse opus est, quam respirare, saith a Father. A bee can suck honey out of a flower that a fly cannot. Fire will be aspiring; so will true grace.

Ver. 2. Every branch in me] That thinks himself to be in me, and is so thought to be by others, but proves not to be so. These are said to "deny the Lord that bought them, to trample on the blood of the covenant, wherewith they were sanctified, to wallow in the mire from which they had been washed," #2Pe 2:1,22 Heb 10:20. So here, to be branches in Christ, and yet unfruitful. Not that they ever were in Christ, but seemed to be so; as a pole fixed in the earth, but not rooted; as a rotten leg cleaves to the body, but is no part of it; or, as warts and ulcers, which are taken away without loss to it.

He purgeth it] Αρει, καθαρει, Amputat, putat. Of all possessions, saith Cato, none requires more pains about it than that of vineyards. Grain comes up and grows without the husbandman's care, #Mr 4:27, he knows not how. But vines must be dressed, supported, sheltered, pruned every day almost; lopped they must be ever and anon, lest the juice be spent in leaves. And if it be painful to bleed, it is worse to wither. Better be pruned to grow than cut up to burn.

Ver. 3. Through the word, &c.] Which is the pruning knife, to lop off our luxuriances, rotten boughs, raw grapes, to pare off our gum of pride, moss of formality, Vinitoris cultellus ad sordes purgandas. (Col.) The word hid in the heart keeps from sin, as an amulet, #Ps 119:11, and keeps youth from uncleanness, #Joh 15:9; mixed with faith, it purgeth upon corruption, #Ac 15:9, and will not suffer men to rest in sin.

Ver. 4. As the branch cannot bear fruit, &c.] All our sap and safety is from Christ. The bud of a good desire, the blossom of a good resolution, and the fruit of a good action, all come from him, Gratia praevenit nos ut velimus, et subsequitur ne frustra velimus. (Augustine.)

Ver. 5. The same bringeth forth much fruit] Christ is a generous vine, a plant of renown; and all his are "filled with the fruits of righteousness," #Php 1:11, have hearts full of goodness, as those #Ro 15:14, and lives full of good works, as Tabitha, #Ac 9:33. In Bucholcero vivida omnia fuerunt; vivida vox, vividi oculi, vividae manus, gestus omnes vividi. (Melch. Ad. in Vita.) Nehemiah never rested doing good for his people; he was good all over. Like the Egyptian fig tree, that bears fruit seven times a year; or the lemon tree, which ever and anon sendeth forth new lemons, as soon as the former are fallen off; or the plain of Campania, now called Terra de lavoro, region of labour, which is extolled for the most fruitful plot of earth that is in the universe.

For without me ye can do nothing] This is point blank against the doctrine of freewill. Sub laudibus naturae latent inimici gratiae, Those who hide under the praise of works are enemies of free grace, saith Augustine. These will needs hammer out their own happiness, like the spider, climbing by a thread of her own weaving, with motto accordingly, Mihi soli debeo. I owe only to me. Whereas the apostle demandeth, Who made thee to differ? Grevinchovius the Arminian boldly answers, Ego meipsum discerno, I make myself to differ. This he had learned from heathens belike: What we live, is from God; but that we live well, is from ourselves, saith Seneca. And this is the judgment of all men, saith Cicero, that prosperity is to be sought of God, but wisdom is to be taken up from ourselves. St Augustine was of another judgment, and saith, Ciceronem, ut faceret homines liberos, fecisse sacrilegos. Quod vivamus deorum munus est; quod bone vivamus, nostrum. Iudicium hoc omnium mortalium est, &c. (Cic. de Nat. Deor.; Aug. Civ. Dei. l. 5.)

Ver. 6. Cast them into the fire, and they are burned] So they must needs be, may some say; but his meaning is, that temporaries, of all others, make the fiercest, hottest fire, because they are trees most seared and fuel fully dry. Nahum tells us that such are but as stubble laid out in the sun to dry, that it may burn the better, #Joh 1:10; or like grapes, let to hang in the sunshine till they be ripe, for the winepress of God's wrath, #Re 19:15.

Ver. 7. Ask what ye will, and it, &c.] Either in money or money's worth. If ye ask and miss it is because ye ask amiss. One was wont to say of Luther that he could have from God what he would; Vir iste potuit quod voluit. And being one time very earnest with God for the recovery of a godly useful man, he cried out, Fiat voluntas mea, Let thy will be done; and then he falls off sweetly, My will, Lord, because thy will; Mea voluntas, Domine, quia tua.

Ver. 8. Herein is my Father glorified, &c.] There is not (saith one) so much of the glory of God in all his works of creation and providence as in one gracious action that a Christian performs; how much more in a life full of good fruits! This makes others say, Surely God is in them. Vere magnus est Deus Christianorum, said one Calocenius a heathen. God also accounts that he receives a new being, as it were, by those inward conceptions of his glory, and by those outward honours that we do to him, especially when we study God's ends more than our own, and drown all self-respects in his glory. Surely, they that do thus may have what they will (saith one), and God even think himself beholden to them.

Ver. 9. Continue ye in my love] In the love wherewith I do dearly love you. As who should say, Suffer yourselves to be loved by me. Lo, the Lord Christ even makes love to the good soul, and woos entertainment.

Ver. 10. Even as I have kept my Father's] Christ's obedience must be our pattern of imitation. All his actions were either moral or mediatory. In both we are to imitate him. In the former by doing as he did, #Mt 11:29 1Pe 2:23. In the latter, by similitude, translating that to our spiritual life which he did as mediator; as to die to sin, to rise to righteousness.

Ver. 11. These things have I spoken, that, &c.] Sound joy is wrought in the heart by the hearing of the word; "Make me to hear joy and gladness, that the bones which thou hast broken" (with the sense of sin and fear of wrath) "may rejoice," #Ps 51:8. And God creates the fruit of the lips to be peace, #Isa 57:19.

That my joy may remain in you] The temporary's joy, as it is groundless, like weeds that grow on the top of the water, so it is but frothy and flashy, such as may wet the mouth, but not warm the heart, smooth the brow, but not fill the breast: like a slight dash of rain, or a handful of brushwood, &c., #Ec 7:6. The true Christian's joy is full and firm, solid and substantial, Gaudium in re, gaudium in spe, gaudium de possessione, gaudium de promissione. Joy in the matter, joy in hope, joy in the possession, joy in the promise. He hath still enough to make him everlastingly merry under whatsoever misery. He can turn into his counting house, and find there sufficient to sustain him, as David did, #1Sa 30:6.

Ver. 12. This is my commandment] Love is the complement of the law and the supplement of the gospel.

Ver. 13. Greater love than this, &c.] Of any such love, but in Christ, we shall hardly read. David in a passion may wish, "Would God I had died for thee"; but in cold blood I doubt whether he would have done it. A certain citizen of Toledo, being condemned to die, his son ceased not by prayers and tears to entreat that he might die for his father; which accordingly he did. (B. Fulg. i.) But this is rare, for life is sweet, and love is cold in this case. Every man is his own next neighbour.

Ver. 14. If ye do whatsoever, &c.] In desire and endeavour lifting at the latch, though ye cannot open the door, and looking to both the magnalia great matters and minutia small matters of the law Boni Catholici sunt (saith Augustine) qui et fidem integram sequuntur, et bonos mores. Good Christians are those who follow a sound faith and good habits. And they are written in the book of life (saith Bernard) that do what they can, though they cannot do what they should. Qui quod possunt, faciunt, etsi quod debent, non possunt.

Ver. 15. I call you not servants] And yet it was the top of David's titles, to be the servant of the Lord; and the height of his ambition, to be a doorkeeper in his house. All his servants are sons, and all his sons heirs.

But I have called you friends] It was a high honour of old to be the king's friend. Such honour have all his saints: Christ doth freely unbosom himself unto them.

Ver. 16. And ordained you, that you should go, &c.] Not that ye should lord it over your brethren (as the pope ordained his caterpillars), and get up the best of the land for your private use and pleasure. The pope, when he maketh his cardinals, useth these words, Estote confratres nostri, et principes mundi. You shall be our brothers and leaders in the world. The archbishopric of Toledo is said to be worth a hundred thousand pounds a year: a greater revenue than some kings have.

That whatsoever ye shall ask, &c.] Bernard in his Meditations giveth various rules of strictness, of purging the heart, of being faithful and fruitful, et cum talis fueris (saith he) memento mei, intimating, that then they might have what they would of God, for themselves or others, that were so qualified.

Ver. 17. That ye love one another] That ye hold together, because the world will hate you. A spirit of perversities made way for the ruin of Egypt, #Isa 19:14,16,17. Si collidimur frangimur; if we clash we break. Of the ancient Britons, Tacitus tells us that nothing was so destructive to them as their dissensions, Dum singuli pugnant universi vincuntur. And of the Thracians, Herodotus saith, that if they had been all of one mind they had been invincible. Keep therefore the staff of binders unbroken, #Zec 11:7,14 "Keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace," #Eph 4:3. In the cause of religion every subdivision is a strong weapon in the hand of the enemy; as in the disagreement of Luther and Zuinglius. The Jesuits have a practice of running over to the Lutherans, pretending to be converts; but it is only to keep up that bitter contention that is between the Calvinists and Lutherans; the virulence whereof is much fomented by these renegade Jesuits.

Ver. 18. If the world hate you, &c.] As it will because it is condemned by your contrary practice, and is carried on by a contrary principle. Moab was irked because of Israel, or, did fret and vex at them, #Nu 22:3,4. Bats fly against the light. Some barbarous nations curse the sun when it shines hot upon them, and shoot up their arrows against it.

Ye know that it hated me first] Shall we think to speed better than our betters? Elias is not better than his fathers. Luther was angry with those that set forth his sufferings, since they were nothing to the sufferings of Christ. All our troubles are but as the slivers and chips of his cross.

Ver. 19. If ye were of the world, &c.] They jangle among themselves, and intertear one another as dogs fighting. For though there be not a disagreement in hell (being but the place of retribution, not of action), yet on earth there is no sound peace among the wicked. Howbeit let Ephraim be against Manasseh, and Manasseh against Ephraim, they will be soon against Judah; as if a hare ran by dogs that are fighting, they will agree to pursue the hare.

Therefore the world hateth you] As inhospitable savages do those that land on their coasts; as the Cyprians, for an old grudge, slay all Jews they meet with, though but cast upon their coasts by contrary winds. Odio humani generis, et per flagitia inveni, saith Tacitus of Christians. (xv.) Tanti non est bonum, quanti est odium Christianorum. Of such it is not good, how much is the hatred of Christians. David's adversaries sought not only his life, but his soul, his damnation too; as that monster of Milan, mentioned by Bodinus. Now we commit thy soul to the devil, said the persecutors to John Huss. And Jerome of Prague could hardly obtain a confessor, being, it seems, conscientious that way.

Ver. 20. Remember the word, &c.] Else all is lost, #1Co 15:2. Naturally the word runs through us, as water through a riven vessel: Pleni rimarum sumus, huc atque illuc diffuimus. Our memories are as sieves, that retain the chaff, let go the good grain; or as nets, that keep the pelf, let go the clean water; or as hour glasses, that are no sooner full, but running out again. Beseech we God to put his finger upon the hole, and to make his word an engrafted word unto us, to settle it upon our souls, μηποτε παραρωμεν, #Heb 2:1.

If they have kept my saying, &c.] But they will do neither. Holy Melancthon, being himself newly converted, thought it impossible for his hearers to withstand the evidence of the gospel; but after he had been a preacher awhile, it is said he complained that old Adam was too hard for young Melancthon.

Ver. 21. Because they know not him, &c.] For had they known, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory. St Paul thanks his ignorance for all his cruelties to Christians. Ignorance is a breeder, and great bellied. Aristotle makes it the mother of all misrule and mischief. (Ethic. iii.)

Ver. 22. If I had not come, &c.] Here our Saviour shows that their ignorance was affected, as theirs is with us. Qui ut liberius peccent, libenter ignorant, they shut the windows lest the light should come in. (Bernard.) Sic fit, ubi homines maiorem vitae partem in tenebris agunt, ut novissime solem quasi supervacuum fastidiant. (Seneca, Epist.) This is the ignorance to which mercy is denied, #Isa 27:11.

Ver. 23. He that hateth me] It is wonder how any should, yet we read of God-haters, #Ro 1:30, and all sin is a kind of God-slaughter, Omne peccatum est Deicidium. All sin is a God slayer. The wicked wish there were no God, when David cries out, Vivat Deus, Let God live. #Ps 18:46.

Ver. 24. Works which none other man did] More stupendous, because by my own power, and all to the people's profit. These were of use in the Church's infancy, and Papists boast of them still; but those are the devil's lying wonders, #2Th 2:9. As for our religion, Pudet diabolium Lutheri doctrinam miraculis confirmare, It is shameful that the devil confirms the traching of Luther, saith Gretser the Jesuit. But we answer with Augustine, He that now looks for a miracle is himself a great miracle: Qui adhuc prodigia quaerit magnum est ipse prodigium. Christ was the only Thaumaturgus or wonder worker. This is attested by Josephus the Jew, and confessed by Mahomet.

Ver. 25. They hated me without a cause] So they dealt by David, so by Christ, and so still by his members. There is but the same pageant acted over again as of old. In moribus compositi, et modesti sunt, was the worst the persecutors could say of the Waldenses, those ancient Protestants. They are good in their lives, true in their speeches, hearty in their affections. (Bp. Ussher.) Sed fides eorum est incorrigibilis et pessima, But the faith of those is reformed and corrupt, saith the Dominican Inquisitor, concerning the Hussites. So the Bishop of Aliff, in the Trent Council, said that as the faith of the Catholics was better, so the heretics exceeded them in good life. Hominis vita magno omnium consensu probatur, said Erasmus of Luther, Tanta est morum integritas, ut nec hostes reperiant quod calumnientur. Such is the integrity of of their conduct that neither their enemies may discover what they condemn them of. And yet a friar of Antwerp wished that Luther were there that he might bite out his throat with his teeth, as the same Erasmus testifieth.

Ver. 26. Whom I will send unto you from, &c] Christ hath satisfied the wrath of the Father; and now the Father, and Christ both, as reconciled, send the Spirit, as the fruit of both their loves, and as an earnest, which is part of the whole sum.

Ver. 27. And ye also shall bear witness] Thus Word and Spirit go together, according to the promise, #Isa 59:21. The manna of the Spirit comes down from heaven in the dews of the ministry of the gospel, #Nu 11:2 1Pe 1:22.

Chapter 16

Ver. 1. That ye should not be offended] As with a thing unexpected and intolerable. Darts foreseen are dintless. Crosses coming on the sudden find weak minds secure, make them miserable, leave them desperate.

Ver. 2. Whosoerer killeth you, &c.] Maximinian, the persecutor, thought that the blood of Christians would be a well pleasing sacrifice to his gods: Christianorum sanguinem Diis gratissimam esse victimam. (Tertul.) Budaeus thinks that the apostle, #1Co 4:13, alludes to those heathenish expiations, wherein certain condemned persons were brought forth yearly with garlands upon their heads, and offered up as sacrifices to their gods, in time of any contagious infection especially; and these they termed καθαρμοα and περιψηματα. At Colon certain divines preached, that the death of certain heretics (as they called them) should pacify the wrath of God which then plagued Germany grievously with a strange kind of sweating sickness. (Budaeus in Pandect.) In the sixth Council of Toledo, it was enacted that the king of Spain should suffer none to live in his dominions that professed not the Roman Catholic religion. King Philip, accordingly, having hardly escaped shipwreck, as he returned from the Low Countries, said he was delivered by the singular providence of God to root out Lutheranism, which he presently began to do, professing that he had rather have no subjects than such. Another Catholic king said that if he thought his shirt were infected with that heresy, he would tear it from his own back, and rather go woolward; nay, if any member of his body had caught the contagion, he would cut it off, that it might creep no further. O sancta simplicitas! Oh holy candour, said John Huss, when at the stake he observed a plain country fellow busier than the rest in fetching fagots.

Ver. 3. Because they have not known] Through blind zeal. "The dark corners of the earth are full of cruelty," saith the Psalmist. And "they shall not destroy in all mine holy mountain"; "for knowledge shall cover the earth, as the waters do the sea," #Ps 74:20 Isa 11:9.

Ver. 4. Ye may remember, &c.] And act, what I have foretold and taught you. The difference between divinity and other sciences is, that it is not enough to know, but you must do it; as lessons of music must be practised, and a copy not read only, but written after. Non est haec umbratilis philosophia, sed quae ad usum et praxin aptanda. (Calvin.)

Ver. 5. None of you asketh me, &c.] This they had asked him, but not as well paid of his going; this he would have of them, and of us, when we part with friends that die in the Lord, say as he, Tulisti liberos quos ipse dederas; non contristor, quod recepisti; ago gratias, quod dedisti. (Jerome ad Julian.)

Ver. 6. Sorrow hath filled your hearts] So that you are, for the time, not more uncomfortable than uncounsellable. Thus also it fared with those Israelites in Egypt; their ears were so full of gall, that meek Moses even lost his sweet words upon them, #Ex 6:9. Passions are headstrong, and can hear no counsel:

Ver. 7. I will send him unto you] This our Saviour often repeats, that they might once take notice of it, as an inestimable favour, that God should pour forth his Spirit upon all flesh, #Joe 2:28. What so precious as spirit? what so vile as flesh? It is received among the Turks, that when Christ said that though he departed, he would send them a Comforter, it was added in the text, And that shall be Mahomet; but that the Christians in malice toward them have razed out those words. Is not this the efficacy of error

Ver. 8. And when he is come, &c.] This text had been easy, had not commentators made it so knotty.

He will reprove] Or undeceive the world, by refuting those odd conceits and erroneous opinions, that men had before drunk in, and were possessed of, ἐλεγξει. Ita ut nihil habeat, quod praetexat. He shall clearly convince them of the hatefulness of sin, of the necessity of getting righteousness, both imputed and imparted; both that of justification, inherent in Christ, imputed to us, and that of sanctification also, imparted by Christ, inherent in us; this latter is here called judgment, as it is likewise #Mt 12:20. Till he bring forth (ἐκβαλη) judgment to victory; that is, weak grace (called before a broken reed, smoking wick) to perfect conquest over corruption. Cum vi quadam, frustra obsistente Satana. Compare with this text that of the apostle, #1Co 6:11; Such were some of you ( scilicet, mundus immundus), but ye are (in general) washed from your sins, of the hatefulness whereof ye are now clearly convinced; and (in particular) ye are sanctified by the Spirit of our God, and ye are justified in the name, that is, by the merit, of the Lord Jesus the righteous, who is the propitiation for our sins.

Ver. 9. Of sin, because they believe not in me] Our Saviour points out the greatest of sins, unbelief; which was the first sin, and is still the root of all the rest, #Heb 3:12. It is a sin against the gospel, and rejects the remedy, that bath of Christ's blood, to the which even the princes of Sodom are invited, #Isa 1:10. It gives God the lie, and subjects a man to the rigour, coercion, and curse of the law.

Ver. 10. Of righteousness, because, &c.] What strength is there in that reason? This: Christ took upon him to be our surety, and he must acquit us of all our sins ere he can go to his Father.

Ver. 11. Of judgment, because the prince, &c.] Satan is, by the mighty work of the Holy Ghost, cast out of his trenches, forts, cages, castles, heaven of men's hearts, οχυρωματα, #2Co 10:4 corruption is dejected, though not utterly ejected, #Lu 10:18 "The Spirit lusteth against the flesh." So that as we cannot do what good we would, because of the flesh; so neither what evil we would, because of the Spirit.

Ver. 12. But ye cannot bear them now] Because your spirits are dulled with worldly sorrow. But the Spirit shall be unto you a powerful removens, prohibens.

Ver. 13. He will guide you into all truth] Many are the benefits that we receive by the Spirit. "The fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness, and righteousness, and truth," #Eph 5:9. This our Saviour delivers to his disciples at several times, and by degrees, as they could bear it. Here he represents him as a guide to godliness. Simeon was brought into the temple by the instinct of the Spirit. Paul would have gone to a certain place, but the Spirit would not suffer him. Lo such is the working of the Holy Ghost still in men's hearts, "The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord, and he delighteth in his way," #Ps 37:23. Kings suffer their children to ride with them, but yet set tutors and governors to overrule them. So here. And because Delicata res est Spiritus Dei, therefore we must observe and obey his motions, which are the sound of his goings, the footsteps of his anointed, #Ps 89:51. We should lay ourselves (as instruments) open to the Spirit's touch, submit to his discipline, as Paul did, #Ga 2:20. And this requires a great deal of self-denial.

Ver. 14. He shall glorify me, &c.] And if the Holy Ghost could not use any better means to glorify Christ, than to take his excellencies, and hold them out to the world, what should ministers, the mouth of the Holy Ghost, do rather?

Ver. 15. All things that the Father hath, &c.] So that if we can but marry the heir, we have all. The Father saith unto him, as he did to his eldest son, #Lu 15:31 "Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine"; therefore we may go boldly to him for all things needful for life and godliness. When Joseph sent to Jacob, that Pharaoh had put all into his hands, he was not a little comforted that one so near to him in nature was so able to accommodate him. Let us also come boldly to the throne of grace, since our flesh and blood hath all power to do us good. Christ, as mediator, is able to make all grace abound toward us, that we "always, having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work," #2Co 8:8. Well might Ignatius say, Ignis, crux, et diaboli tormenta in me verdant, tantummodo ut Iesum nanciscar. The fire, the troubles and the torments of the devil change me, only merely so I may find Jesus.

Ver. 16. A little while, and ye shall not see me] This "little" seemed a long while to them, so that they began to doubt (though it were but the third day after his death) whether or not it were he that should redeem Israel, #Lu 24:21. ( Dubito, a duo et ito, Becman. Sic Διαστασις.) God's help seems long, because we are short. A short walk is a long journey to feeble knees. It is but for a moment in his anger that God hides his face from his, though it should be during life; he hath an eternity of time to reveal his kindness in. And to say that God hath cast you off, because he hath hid his face from you, #Isa 54:7,8, is (saith Mr T. Goodwin) a fallacy fetched out of the devil's topics. When the sun is eclipsed, foolish people think it will never recover light, but wise men know it will; and at such a time, though the earth lack the light of the sun, yet not the influence thereof; so neither are the saints at any time without the power, heat, and vigorous influence of God's grace, when the light and comfort of it is confined.

Ver. 18. We cannot tell what he saith] We know here but in part; the greatest part of our knowledge is the least part of our ignorance, saith one. Man's heart, saith another, may be compared to a vessel, the means to a pipe; the Spirit of God to the wheel that beats the water into the pipe; the minister is the servant that opens the cock.

(August.) And then the reason why we know but in part is, either the cock always runs not, or not always in the same measure; and sometimes our vessels are filled with other things (as the apostles here were with worldly grief and the conceit of an earthly kingdom), and so they run over; and usually our vessels run over, and lose what we received by the means.

Ver. 19. Now Jesus knew that they were, &c.] He graciously prevents their requests, so he doth ours often; and usually in Scripture the answer is given, the question concealed. God thereby providing for men's infirmity, who are ready to ask such odd questions, as the disciples here do, to the discovery of their own dullness.

Ver. 20. Ye shall weep and lament] So long as ye abide in this valley of tears, as the Septuagint render that, #Ps 86:6; εις την κοιλαδα του κλαυθμωνος. In hoc exilio, in hoc ergastulo, in hac peregrinatione, in hac valle lachrymarum, In this banishment, in this prison, in this sojourn, this valley of tears, as Bernard hath it. "My tears have been my meat," saith David, #Ps 42:3, alluding to the hart, which, being pursued, sheds tears. These, instead of gems, were the ornaments of David's bed, saith Chrysostom. The Church's eyes are as the pools of Heshbon, ever glazed with the tears of compunction or compassion, #So 7:5. Tertullian speaketh of himself, that he was born to nothing else but sorrow and mourning. Athanasius, by his tears, as by the bleeding of a chafed vine, cured the leprosy of that tainted age. Jerome, writing of his own life, saith that there were furrows in his face and icicles from his lips with continual weeping.

But the world shall rejoice] The merry Greeks of the world laugh themselves fat, and are so afraid of sorrow that they can never find time to be serious; counting it no sport unless they may have the devil their playfellow; no mirth but madness; no venison sweet but that which is stolen. These are forbidden to rejoice in anything, #Ho 10:1. Etiam si laeta tibi obveniant omnia, non est tamen quod laeteris. Even if your gladness exceed in all respects, it is not yet true gladness. (Ribera.) But if they do, there is a snare or cord in the sin of the wicked, to strangle their joy with; "but the righteous sing and rejoice," #Pr 29:6. Woe be to mirth mongers, that fleeer <sup>{a}</sup> when they should fear, #Lu 6:25.

But your sorrow shall be turned into joy] God shall soon give you beauty for ashes, the oil of gladness for the spirit of heaviness, &c.; he shall turn all your sighing into singing, all your laments into laughter, your sackcloth into silks, your ashes into ointments, your fasts into feasts, your wringing of hands into applauses, &c.

Ver. 21. A woman when she is in travail] The sorrow of a saint is often compared to that of a travailing woman, #Isa 26:17 Jer 6:24, &c. 1. In bitterness and sharpness; which made Medea say, that she had rather a thousand times be slain in battle than once bring forth a child: Millies in belle perire malle, quam semel parere. 2. In utility; it tends to a birth. 3. In hope and expectation, not only of an end, but also of fruit. 4. In that there is a certain set time for both. And Finis edulcat media. The end sweetens the means. (Keckermann.)

Ver. 22. And ye now therefore have sorrow] No sorrow like to that, when we see not Christ in his favour. He hides his love often, as Joseph did, out of increasement of love; and then we cannot see him for crying; as Mary Magdalene could not, she was so bleared. But when he seemeth farthest from us, his heart is with us; and he must needs look through the chinks, as in the Canticles, to see how we do, as that martyr expresseth it. (Saunders, in a letter to his wife and friends.) There is a presence of Christ that is secret, when he seems to draw us one way, and to drive us another, #So 5:6.

Ver. 23. And in that day ye shall, &c.] q.d. Ye shall be so exact and so expert, that you shall not need to ask such childish questions as hitherto ye have done. This is like that of the prophet, "They shall not each man teach his neighbour, saying, Know the Lord! for they shall all know me, from the least to the greatest," #Jer 31:34 "They shall be all taught of God." Cathedrum in caelo habet qui corda docet, saith Augustine. And Quando Christus docet, quam cito discitur quo docetur? So St Ambrose, Nescit tarda molimina spiritus sancti gratia. When the Spirit undertakes to teach a man, he shall not be long in learning. Now all God's people have "the unction that teacheth them all things," #1Jo 2:20. And as in pipes, though of different sounds, yet there is the same breath in them; so is there the same spirit in Christians of all sizes.

Ver. 24. Hitherto ye have asked nothing] To what ye should have asked, and might have obtained. Prayer, as those arrows of deliverance, should be multiplied, #1Ki 13:19; the more often we come to God the better welcome; neither can we anger him worse than to be soon said or sated. It was more troublesome to Severus the emperor to be asked nothing than to give much: Molestius erat ei nihil peti, quam dare. When any of his courtiers had not made bold with him he would call him, and say, Quid est cur nihil petis &c., What meanest thou to ask me nothing? So Christ here.

Ask, that your joy may be full] Pray, that ye may joy. Draw water with joy out of this well of salvation. David was excellent at this. His, heart was often more out of tune than his harp. He prays, and then cries, "Return to thy rest, O my soul." In many of his Psalms the beginnings, are full of trouble, as Psalms 6, 22, and 51 but by that time he prayed a while, the ends are full of joy and assurance, so that one would imagine saith Peter Moulin, that those Psalms had been composed by two men of a contrary humour Hudson the martyr, deserted at the stake, went from under the chain; and having prayed earnestly, was comforted immediately, and suffered valiantly.

Ver. 25. These things have I spoken, &c.] He spake plain enough, but they were so slow of hear and dull of hearing, that they thought he spake to them in riddles and parables. Legum obscuritate non assignemus culpaе scribentium, sed inscitiae non assequentium. (Sex. Cecil. apud Gell.) So though the prophet dealt with the people as with little ones newly weaned, mincing and masticating their meat for them, laying before them "precept upon precept, line upon line," &c., yet was he to them (through their singular stupidity) as one that lisped half words, or spake in a strange tongue, #Isa 28:10-12. Ac si btaeais esset labiis.

Ver. 26. At that day ye shall ask, &c.] Christ had promised them further light, but yet expects they should pray for it. Prayer is a putting the promises in suit; we must pray them over ere we get the performance, #Eze 36:37. Christ himself was to ask of his Father the world for his inheritance, &c., #Ps 2:8

Ver. 27. For the Father himself loveth you] We say majesty and love cannot dwell together. Non bene conveniunt, nec in una sede morantur maiestas et amor: because love is the abasing of the soul to all services. But it is otherwise in God; majesty and love meet in his heart; so that of his own free accord he will give us anything we ask, and as it were prevent a mediator, crowning his own graces in us.

Ver. 28. Again, I leave the world, &c.] So Plotinus the philosopher, when he died, said, το εν εμοι θειον αναγω επι το πρωτογονον θειον. (Sponte etiam non rogante me. Ut apud Hom. σπειδοντα και αυτον στρυνειν.) Nay, Julian the apostate (if Marcellinus may be credited) went out of the world with these words in his mouth, Vitam repositenti naturae, tanquam debitor bonae fidei, redditurus exulto.

Ver. 29. His disciples said unto him] How apt are we to overween our little nothing of knowledge or holiness, to swell with big conceits of our own sufficiency! and, when we see never so little, to say presently, with her in the poet, Consilii satis est in me mihi? (Araehne ap. Ovid;) to think we understand (as St Paul hath it) "all mysteries, and all knowledge!" #1Co 13:1. How truly may it now be said of many, as Quintilian saith of some in his time, that they might have proven excellent scholars, if they had not been so persuaded of themselves already "Conceitedness cuts off all hope of proficiency," η οησις εστι της προκοπης εγκοπη.

Ver. 30. Now we are sure, &c.] What! not till now? Nicodemus was before you then, #Joh 3:2. But better late than never: Nunquam sero, si sero.

Ver. 31. Do ye now believe?] I know, ere trouble comes, you are jolly fellows. But it is easy to swim in a warm bath: and every bird can sing in a sunshine day. We shall see shortly what you can do. "If ye faint in the day of adversity, your strength is small," #Pr 24:10. Hard weather tries what health; hot service, what courage.

Ver. 32. Behold, the hour cometh, &c.] So bladder-like is the soul, that filled with earthly vanities, though but wind, it grows great and swells in pride; but if pricked with the least pin of piercing grief, it shriveleth to nothing.

Ver. 33. These things have I spoken] This sermon of our Saviour then would be read in time of trouble. It hath virtutem pacativam, if mixed with faith.

That in me ye might have peace] Though surcharged with outward troubles. Josiah died in peace, according to the promise, though slain in war. True grace, like true gold, comforts the heart; alchemy gold doth not.

In the world ye shall have tribulation] There is no avoiding it; it is not a paradise, but a purgatory to the saints. It may be compared to the Straits of Magellan, which is said to be a place of that nature, that which way soever a man set his course, he shall be sure to have the wind against him. (Heyl. Geog.)

I have overcome the world] Therefore we are more than conquerors, because sure to overcome beforehand, #Ro 8:37. We are triumphers, #2Co 2:14. We need do no more, then, as those in Joshua, but set our feet on the necks of our enemies, already subdued unto us by our Jesus.

Chapter 17

Ver. 1. And lift up his eyes to heaven] This and the like outward gestures in prayer, as they issue from the fervency of the good heart, so they reflect upon the soul, whose invisible affections by these visible actions, in the saints, are the more inflamed. Howbeit, hypocrites, though they have their hands elbow deep in the earth, will seem to pierce heaven with their eyes lift up in prayer. Videntur torvo aspectu caelum ad se attrahere, saith Calvin somewhere; they so fix their eyes in public prayer, as if they would leave them on the roof of the church; when all is but histrionical, theatrical, counterfeit, προς το θεα θηναί, to be seen of men, #Mt 6:1. The eagle, when she soareth highest, have ever an eye to the prey below; so hath the hypocrite to profit, credit.

The hour is come] q.d. I ask not before the time is come, I am ripe and ready for thy kingdom. Some would be in heaven ere they have done their work upon earth. But what said that ancient? Domino, si tibi sim necessarius, non recuso vivere: Lord, if thou hast any further service for me to do, I am willing to live longer. When we come to heaven, the reward will be so large, that we shall repent us (if it were possible there to repent for anything) that we have done no more work. It is not lawful, saith Capel, to wish for death simply, neither to be set free from the troubles, fears, and cares of sin, nor that we would not conflict, nor wrestle any longer (for this were to serve ourselves, and seek our own ease and ends), but in hatred to sin, as it is sin.

Ver. 2. That he should give eternal life] And what more free than gift? Note this against our merit mongers, who not only cry, with Novatus, Non habeo, Domine, quod mihi ignoscas, I have done nothing that thou shouldest forgive me; but with Vega, Vitam aeternam gratis non accipiam, I will not have heaven for nothing. How much better St Augustine, Homo agnoscat, saith he, ut Deus ignoscat. Man knows that God may forgive. And William Wickam, founder of New College, who though he did many good works, yet he professed that he trusted to Jesus Christ alone for salvation.

Ver. 3. That they may know thee] To know God in the face of Christ is heaven beforehand; Qui non habet Christum in horoscopo, non habet Deum in medio caeli. (Bucholcer.) "By his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many," saith God concerning Christ, #Isa 53:11, that is, by faith; which enfolds assent of the judgment, consent of the will, and affiance or assurance of the heart. Papists place faith in the will only, and exclude knowledge. Nay, Bellarmine affirmeth that faith may be better defined by ignorance (that mother of devotion) than by knowledge. They dig out men's eyes (as they dealt by Samson) and then make sport with them; they confine faith to the will, that they may do what they will with the understanding and the heart; as the friars send men on pilgrimage, that they may lie with their wives the while.

Ver. 4. That thou gavest me to do] Our Saviour counts his work a gift; so should we take it for a favour, that he employs us, that we may have any office about him, that we may magnify him with our bodies, "whether by life or death," #Php 1:19. As a heretic I am condemned, said Mr Bradford, and shall be burned, whereof I ask God heartily mercy that I do no more rejoice than I do, having so great cause as to be an instrument, wherein it may please my dear Lord God and Saviour to suffer. And the greatest promotion, said Latimer, that God giveth in this world, is, to be such Philipians to whom it is given, not only to believe, but also to suffer. Ignatius professed he would rather be a martyr than a monarch. John Noyes took up a fagot at the fire, and kissed it, saying, Blessed be the time that ever I was born to come to this. The apostles rejoiced that they were graced so as to be disgraced for Christ, #Ac 5:41.

Ver. 5. With the glory which I had, &c.] Our Saviour then is no upstart God, and of a later standing, as the Arians and Mahometans would make of him. Mahomet speaks very honourably of Christ, except only in two things. First, he denied that he was crucified, but that some other was crucified for him. Secondly, he took up the opinion of the Arians, to deny his Divinity. Arius at Constantinople, sitting upon the close stool, purged out his guts. Mahometism is now there in that place, as it were the excrements of Arius.

Ver. 6. I have manifested thy name] The Jews seek to detract from the glory of our Saviour's miracles, by giving out, that he did them by I know not what superstitious or magical use of the name of Jehovah. (Bernard.) But that name of God that he is here said to manifest, is that nomen maiestativum, that holy and reverend name of God, set down #Ex 34:6,7, a name that would fill our hearts with heaven, and answer all our doubts, had we but skill to spell out all the letters in it.

Ver. 7. Now they have known, &c.] That the gospel is a plot of God's own contriving, and no device of man, as that Evangelium regni Gospel of power, was, set out by the family of love; and those fanatics mentioned by Irenaeus, that were besotted with an opinion of themselves, that they accounted their own writings to be gospels. In the year 1220, certain monks at Paris set out a gospel full of all filthiness and blasphemy, naming it Evangelium aeternum, the eternal Gospel. And in the book called Conformitates S. Francisci, made in the year 1389, it is written, that the same book is better than the gospel, and St Francis set in Lucifer's chair above angels. The Council of Constance comes in with a non obstante against Christ's institution, withholding the cup from the laity. And when the pope sets forth any bulls, commonly he concludes thus; Non obstantibus constitutionibus et ordinationibus Apostolicis, caeterisque contrariis quibuscunque, and the pope's interpretation of Scripture, be it what it will, seem it never so contrary to the Scripture, is ipsissimum Dei verbum, the very word of God, saith Hosius.

Ver. 8. For I have given unto them] A sweet and precious gift. It was the Jews' primary privilege that unto them were committed the oracles of God. There is a "chiefly" set upon it, #Ro 3:2, πρωτον, Primarium quiddam et res magni momenti.

Ver. 9. I pray for them] Christ hath left us this prayer here recorded, as a pattern of that intercession he incessantly maketh for us at the right hand of his heavenly Father. Joab was heard for Absalom: shall not Christ for us? Solomon denied his mother's request, #1Ki 2:22; God will not deny Christ's. The prodigal came without a mediator to his father, and was embraced; much more shall we, presented by Christ.

Ver. 10. And I am glorified in them] It will be a singular prop to our prayers, if we so carry ourselves, that Christ in his daily intercession may give this testimony of us to the Father. He undertakes for us, as it were, and gives his word, that we, being mindful of our reconciliation by him, shall shun sin by his grace, and not provoke him as before. This should cause us to live so as Christ may have credit by us, and we may have courage to come to God by Christ.

Ver. 11. Keep through thine own name] "The name of the Lord is a strong tower," #Pr 18:10 "A munition of rocks," #Isa 33:16. Hither the saints run for the securing of their comforts and safe guarding of their persons, as conies do to their burrows, all creatures to their refuges, as the Shechemites fled to their tower, when their city was beaten down to the ground, #Jud 9:51. The lame and blind, the most shiftless creatures, when they had gotten the stronghold of Sion over their heads, thought then they might securely scorn David and his host, and yet their hold failed them, #2Sa 5:6,7. So doth not God those that fly to his name. Pray to be kept by it.

Ver. 12. But the son of perdition] This exception shows that Judas was never of Christ's body, for can he be a Saviour of a son of perdition? But why is he then excepted? First, by reason of his office he seemed to be of his body. Secondly, our Saviour speaketh here in particular of the twelve; and to be an apostle was in itself but an outward calling.

Ver. 13. And these things I speak in the world] Not for his own or his Father's sake, but for the comfort of his disciples; to cure them of their anxiety and anguish, when they heard him praying and providing such things for them. For this also it was, that he prayed thus in their presence (when at other times he went apart), for their consolation doubtless and instruction. Mr Bradford, martyr, when he shifted himself in a clean shirt made for his burning, he made such a prayer of the wedding garment, that some of those that were present were in such great admiration, that their eyes were as truly occupied in looking on him as their ears gave place to hear his prayer.

Ver. 14. I have given them thy word, &c.] I have put my word into their mouth, therefore the world hateth them; Persecution being the black angel (as Calvin said) that dogs the gospel. When our Saviour preached at Nazareth, so long as he was opening his text, they admired him; but when he came to apply it close to their consciences, they pulled him out of the pulpit, and would have broken his neck down the hill, #Lu 4:29. The book that the angel gave John to eat "was sweet in his mouth, but bitter in his belly," #Re 10:9; to note that the knowledge of divine truths is pleasant, but the publishing of them, whereby the fruit thereof might come to the rest of the members (like the concoction and distribution of meat digested in the stomach), is full of trouble.

Ver. 15. That thou take them out of the world] Many godly men, weary of the world's ill usages, are found often sitting under Elijah's juniper, and wishing to die; for what are they better than their fathers? "Oh that I might have my request!" saith Job, "and that God would grant me the thing that I long for." And what was that, think you! "Even that it would please God to destroy me; that he would let loose his hand, and cut me off," #Job 6:8,9. But was that well prayed, Job? Or was that wisely done, Jonah? to fret one while at God's goodness to the Ninevites? to faint another while at the loss of the gourd? and both times to wish to die, saying, "It is better for me to die than to live?" #Jon 4:3,8. Were it not better to serve out your time, with David, #Ac 13:36; to finish your course, with Paul, #2Ti 4:7; to wait till your change shall come, #Job 14:14; well assured that that "wicked one shall not touch you," as St John hath it, #1Jo 5:18; that is, tactu qualitativo (as Cajetan senseth it), with a deadly touch?

Ver. 16. They are not of the world, &c.] Here indeed they have their commoration, but their conversation is in heaven, πολιτευμα, #Php 2:21: they are clothed with the Sun of righteousness, and have the moon (all earthly things) under their feet, #Re 12:1. Pearls, though they grow in the sea, yet they have affinity with the heaven, the beauty and brightness whereof they resemble: so here. It is Chrysostom's comparison.

Ver. 17. Sanctify them by thy truth] Affect their hearts therewith, that they may the better affect others; speaking a corde ad cor, from the heart to the heart, which is the life of preaching. Quod iussit et gessit, What he orders and does, saith Bernard of one; και εδειξε, και εδιδαξε, saith Basil of another. A minister had need to pray, as Elisha did, for a doubled and trebled spirit, that he may out of the good treasure of his heart bring forth good things, new and old, for the people's use.

Ver. 18. Even so have I sent them, &c.] Therefore they have need that there be put upon them of my Spirit, that they may be fit for the work. This boon none are to expect, but they that are sent of Christ, and such are sure to be gifted.

Ver. 19. And for their sakes do I sanctify] As both priest, altar, and sacrifice; and this Christ did from the womb to the tomb; at his death especially, when this Paschal Lamb was roasted in the fire of his Father's wrath, that his people might be made partakers of his holiness, #Heb 10:10. Here also it is worth the noting, that these petitions in our Saviour's prayer do so sweetly depend one upon another, that if you take away one, you deface the other. Phavorinus in Gellius, comparing between the style of Lysias and Plato, observes this difference; Quod si ex Platonis oratione aliquid demas mutesque de elegantia tantum detraxeris; si ex Lysiae, de sententia.

Ver. 20. Neither pray I for these alone] Lo here a sure and sweet haven for all believers to have recourse to, where they may sit and sing away care of miscarrying; for here Christ doth as much as if he should solemnly swear to secure and set them safe from danger, since the Father denies him nothing, #Joh 11:42.

Ver. 21. That they all may be one] Though not by the same kind of union whereby the Father and the Son are one, yet by a union every way as real and indissoluble; such as whereby the world may be convinced that Christ is the very Messiah, and the faithful the true Church. So it was acknowledged in the primitive times, #Ac 4:32. But what a sad thing was it, that a heathen should soon after have cause to say, Nullae infestae hominibus bestiae, ut sunt sibi ferales plerique Christiani; No beasts are so mischievous to men, as Christians are one to another. (Am. Marcellinus, ii. 2.) Tristissima illa persecutio sub Diocletiano, potissime orta est a petulantia, superbia et rixis sacerdotum. (Euseb.) They had not so learned Christ. Love and humility are his cognizances. Why then should the Turk have occasion to say, that he should sooner see his fingers all of a length, than Christian princes all of a mind? Why should the Jew stumble at our dissensions, which is one of the main scandals they take from Protestants?

Ver. 22. And the glory which thou, &c.] That is, the grace, which is glory begun, as glory is grace perfected; we are here "transformed into the same image from glory to glory," #2Co 3:18 "and set together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus," #Eph 2:6 "Such honour have all his saints." Such things are found in them as do accompany or comprehend salvation, #Heb 6:9, εχομενα, τουτ εστι κατεχομενα. Scholiast.

Ver. 23. I in them, and thou in me] Christ was the only fit mediator; as being God for the business with God; and man for the business with man. He is the bridge that joineth heaven and earth together, saith Gregory. He is that ladder of ascension to God; faith first lays hold upon Christ as man, and by it, as by a mean, makes way to God; and in it embraceth the Godhead, which is of itself fire consuming. We may safely sail through Christ's blood into the bosom of the Father.

Ver. 24. Father, I will, &c.] Every word is full of life and joy. I would not (saith Mr Baxter) for all the world that one verse had been left out of the Bible. And again the same author elsewhere saith, there is more worth in those four chapters, John 14-17, than in all the books in the world besides. (Saint's Everlasting Rest.)

Be with me, where I am] It is part of Christ's joy that we shall be in the place where he is. He will not therefore be long without us. David is sent by God to Hebron to be crowned: he will not go up alone, but takes with him all his men, with all their households. They shall take such part as himself, notwithstanding their recent rebellion at Ziklag. So dealeth the Lord Christ with all his, and this should digest all their sorrows. Christ will not be happy alone; as a tender father, he can enjoy nothing if his children may not have part with him.

Ver. 25. O righteous Father] God's righteousness is either, 1. Of equity, to punish offences. Or, 2. Of fidelity, to make good his promises. In which respect it is no arrogance nor presumption (said Master Glover, martyr) to burden God, as it were, with his promises; and of duty to claim his aid, help, and assistance.

Ver. 26. That the love, &c.] Claritas in intellecta parit ardorem in affectu. Ignoti nulla cupido. Clarity of mind gives birth to zeal in devotion. The unlearned desire nothing.

Chapter 18

Ver. 1. Over the brook Cedron] This was the town ditch, #2Ch 30:14, and had its name from its darkness or muddiness; for it received the baggage, as a common sink. Not far from hence was the valley of Hinnom, wherein there was kept a continual fire for the burning of dead carcasses and other garbage, as Kimchi notes upon Psal. 27. Hence hell is called Gehenna.

Ver. 2. And Judas also which betrayed him] No such danger to Christ's Church by any as by apostates and false brethren, #Ga 2:4. Julian of a forward professor became a furious persecutor, and drew more from the faith by fraud and craft than all the heathen emperors before him had done by their force and cruelty. He persecuted by his persuasions, as Nazianzen witnesseth, and called back the bishops that were banished by Constantine, that, by their mutual wranglings among themselves they might embroil and overthrow the Church. Eo tantum fine ut ipsi ob mutuam inter se contentionem bello intestine oppugnarent ecclesiam. (Sozom.) About the year of grace 1240, one Robert, a Bulgarian, fell away from the Waldenses, and, turning to be a Dominican, he proved to be a sore enemy to the Church of Christ, in Flanders especially. Bishop Bonner was at first advanced by Cromwell, and seemed much to dislike Stephen Gardiner for his Popery. His words to Grafton at Paris when he was newly made bishop of London were these, Before God, the greatest fault that I ever found in Stokesly (who was his predecessor) was for vexing and troubling poor men for their religion, as Lobly the bookbinder, and others, for having the Scripture in English and (God willing) he did not so much hinder it, but I will as much further it, &c. Baldwin the renegade and Bolsecus (that was hired by the Papists to write Calvin's life) were desperate enemies to the truth they had formerly professed. Harding, that had conference with Jewell, was once a zealous Protestant, and chaplain to Lady Jane Grey. Champian of St John's college in Oxford, proctor of the University, 1568, dissembled the Protestant religion, which he afterwards opposed to his utmost. So did Parsons, who was of Baliol college, till he was for his dishonesty expelled with disgrace, and fled to the Papists. Christ's greatest enemies are usually those of his own house. He was of the society of Jesus that betrayed him.

Ver. 3. Judas having then received a band] These are the enemies' best arguments, and those they flee to when all is done. So the Jesuits, those sworn swordsmen of Satan, give out that their weapons are only preces et lachrymae, prayers and tears; and that it is unlawful for them to use any other, even then when they are about their most bloody designs. (Camd. Eliz. Epist. to Reader.) A late king of France (after his revolt to Popery) being persuaded by a great duke about him not to readmit the Jesuits, which had been justly banished the realm, he answered suddenly, "Give me then security for my life." He therefore admitted them, even into his bosom, giving them his house for a college; and in a public speech, saying, That they were Timothies in the house, Chrysostoms in the chair, Augustines in the schools, &c. But what came of it? One of the pope's slaughter slaves, by the instigation of the Jesuits, stabbed him to the heart: these Timothies proved Judases; these Chrysostoms, Catilines; these Augustines, assassins. (Vita David Patti, Operib. praefix.)

Cometh thither with lanterns, &c.] Hypocrites may be compared (saith one) to those soldiers in the Gospel which came to seek Christ with lights and lanterns, as if they meant not to miss him; yea, they brought clubs and staves, as if they would fight for him: yet, when he saith, Here I am, take you up my cross, they stumble at the cross, and fall backwards. (Essays Divine and Moral.)

Ver. 4. Went forth and said unto them] Met his enemy in the face, after he had prayed; whereas, till then, he feared. See the power of prayer. So Esther, when she had fasted and prayed, found her heart fortified against the fear of man; and putting her life in her hand, went boldly to the king. So Hudson the martyr, of whom before.

Ver. 5. Jesus of Nazareth Jesus saith, I am he] They called him Jesus of Nazareth by way of reproach. He takes it upon him, and wears it for a crown. And should not we do likewise?

And Judas also, &c.] With what face could the traitor stand there? But being full of the devil he was past grace, and could blush no more than a sackbut. Effraenis et effrons.

Ver. 6. As soon then as he had said, &c.] Here our Saviour let out a little beam of the majesty of his Deity, and 500 men fell before him. Quid autem iudicaturus faciet, qui iudicandus hae fecit? saith Augustine. "The wicked shall not stand in judgment," saith David, #Ps 1:5. Christ shall "smite the earth with the rod of his mouth," saith Isaiah; and with "the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked," #Isa 11:4. Godly men (who have but a drop of Christ's ocean, a spark of his flame) have a daunting presence. When Valens the persecuting emperor came to St Basil, while he was in holy exercises, it struck such a terror into him, that he reeled, and had fallen, had he not been upheld by those that were with him. And another time, when he should have subscribed an order for St Basil's banishment, such a sudden trembling took his right hand, that he could write never a good letter, whereupon he tore the order for anger, and there was an end of the business. When an officer was sent to apprehend a godly deacon at Miltenberg (a town in the territory of Mentz), the deacon, embracing him, said, Salve, frater, frater enim veto meus es, en adsum, transfode me, suffoca me, Here I am, brother, stab me, hang me, do what you will with me. The officer, as if changed from heaven, answered, Sir, you shall receive no hurt from me. Domine, a me quidem nihil mali expectes. (Scultet. Annal.) And when the boars ran in to kill the deacon, he delivered him, and set him safe out of danger. Judas dealt not so by Jesus, but as he fell with the rest, so rose with the rest, who desperately went on with their devilish design, nothing daunted by their recent disaster.

Ver. 7. Then asked he them again] Though struck to the earth they desist not: so the Sodomites, smitten with blindness, grope for the door. Pharaoh, in that palpable darkness, rageth against God, and menaceth Moses. Monoceros interimi potest, capi non potest: the unicorn is able to be killed bt not able to be captured; stubborn men will sooner break than bend. Man, saith Polybius, is held the wisest, but to me he seemeth the most foolish of all creatures; for they, where they have miscarried once, will not easily be driven thither again. Solus homo ab aevo ad aevum peccat fere in iisdem: only man will not be warned, though he have soundly smarted. (Solinus.) We load an ass (saith Bernard) and he cares not, because he is an ass and born to bear burdens; but if you would drive him into a ditch, or thrust him into the fire, he shuns it as well as he can, because he loves life and fears death: Caret quantum potest, quia vitam amat, et mortem timer. Yet silly man fears not his eternal bane.

Ver. 8. Let these go their way] This seems to indent with the Jews ere he yielded himself their prisoner. As a good shepherd, he interposeth between the wolf and the flock: as a heavenly eagle, he hath ever an eye to his nest, when he flieth highest from it.

Ver. 9. That the saying might be fulfilled, &c.] Christ spake it of their souls, it is here applied to their bodies. God hath a fatherly care of both, and will not lay more upon the outward man than the inward shall be enabled to undergo. Hence that of the prophet, "Behold, I have tried thee, but not as silver," #Isa 48:10. Why so? because God's weak children having far more dross in them than good ore, would never be able to abide a strict trial.

Ver. 10. The servant's name was Malchus] A busy fellow belike in surprising our Saviour. But it was a sad omen (saith a noble and renowned writer, Lord Brook) that Peter's sword should cut off the ear of Malchus, which signifies a king or kingly authority. How the pope hath lifted up himself, επι παν σεβασμα, above all that is called Augustus, or emperor, is better known than that it need be here related. And if bishops forbear (saith he) to touch the sceptre (which they strive to sway), it is but as once Mercury spared Jupiter's thunderbolts, which he dared not steal, lest they should roar too loud, or at least burn his fingers.

Ver. 11. Put up thy sword] Our Saviour checks him for his inordinate zeal; wherein to be overly carried, is easy and ordinary. The memorable story of William Gardiner, martyr in Portugal, who in the very presence of the king and his nobles could not forbear, but fell upon the cardinal, as he was acting a mass. See Acts and Monuments, fol. 1242. So William Flower, upon an Easter day at Westminster, seeing a priest ministering the sacrament of the altar to the people, struck and wounded him upon the head, and also upon his arm and hand, with a wood knife. In the which so doing, as indeed he did not well, nor evangelically; so being afterwards examined by Bishop Bonner, he did no less confess his not well doing in the same, submitting therefore himself willingly to punishment, when it should come. Howbeit, touching his belief in the sacrament and Popish ministration, he neither did nor would submit himself. But when he was tempted to turn, and also threatened, he answered, Do what ye will, I am at a point; for the heavens shall as soon fall, as I will forsake mine opinion, &c. At his execution, first his hand being held up against the stake, was stricken off. At the which, some that were present affirmed that he shrunk not, but once a little stirred his shoulders. (Acts and Mon.)

Ver. 12. Took Jesus and bound him] This was done του λογου ησυχάζοντος, as Irenaeus hath it, while the Deity rested; for he could as easily have delivered himself as he did his disciples, but this sacrifice was to be bound with cords to the altar; he was pinioned and manacled, as a malefactor. So was not Abner; "his hands were not bound, nor his feet put into the fetters," #2Sa 3:34. But Christ was bound for our transgressions, he was "bruised for our iniquities." Paul, by his privilege, was freed from whipping; but we by Christ's bondage, from those chains of darkness, #2Pe 2:4, σειραις ζοφου ταρταρωσας, from those scourges and scorpions in hell.

Ver. 13. And led him away to Annas first] Who would not go to bed (late though it were) till he had seen Christ brought bound before him, and then cried out, likely, as Hannibal did, when he saw a pit full of man's blood, O formosum spectaculum! Oh beautiful sight! So Stephen Gardiner would not sit down to dinner till the news came of the good bishops burnt at Oxford. Then he came out rejoicing, and saying to the Duke of Norfolk, Now let us go to dinner; but it was the last that ever he eat for it. "Shall they escape by iniquity?" No, "in anger cast them down, O God," #Ps 56:7.

Ver. 14. Now Caiaphas was he, &c.] So Balaam, the devil's boggyman, spake excellently of the star of Jacob. {See Trapp on "Joh 11:51"}

Ver. 15. That disciple was known to the high priest] Perhaps for that he and his father Zebedee were wont to serve the fat priests with the best and daintiest fish (for this other disciple was John, who had first fled with the rest, and now came sculking in to see what would become of his master). Of the ass-fish Aristotle affirmeth (De Nat. Animal.) that he of all other creatures hath his heart in his belly; such a thing was this priest.

Ver. 16. But Peter stood at the door] Better he had kept him further off. He that will not fall into the ditch, must not walk too near the brim. Peter might better have bestowed himself somewhere else. Longe utilius fuisset, gemere, et precari in obscuro aliquo angulo, saith Musculus. It had been better for him to have been praying in a corner than thus to put himself upon a danger, unless he had known himself the stronger. Luther comforted the men of Miltenberg by an epistle; and because they were forbidden to meet and talk together about matters of religion, upon pain of death, he adviseth those of them that were strong in the spirit to do their duty, notwithstanding the danger. But for the weaker sort he exhorteth them to rejoice secretly in the Lord and to pray to him for further strength, that they may be able to make a bold and wise profession of his truth. Qui infirmiores sunt, tacite in Domino gaudeant, Deumque rogent, ut se quoque animet ad publicam veritatis professionem.

Ver. 17. He saith, I am not] False dissimulation is true denial. A silly wench is too hard for this stout stickler, who was always Melius animatus quam armatus, as one observeth of him; Sic Elias fulminator ad Iesebelis minas trepidat, factus seipso imbecillior. "Thou also standest by faith: be not highminded, but fear," #Ro 11:20.

Ver. 18. And warmed himself] But while he warmed without, he cooled within. Evil company is a great quench coal, an ill air for zeal to breathe in, it casts a damp. "For the abundance of iniquity, the love of many waxeth cold," #Mt 24:12. Peter's evil example was a compulsion to other good people, #Ga 2:14. What marvel then if the swearing, cursing soldiers compelled him to do the like? They were the trunks through which the devil delivered himself, jeering at and railing upon Christ, no doubt, &c.

Ver. 19. Asked Jesus of his disciples] Questioned him in the spiritual court first, as a heretic; as afterwards in the temporal court, for a seditious person. So the Papists condemned married priests for Nicolaitanes, in the Synod of Milan, A. D. 1067. Virgilius, a German bishop, and a great mathematician, they condemned for a heretic, for affirming that there were antipodes. <sup>{a}</sup> Paulus II, pope, pronounced them heretics that did but name the name Academy, either in jest or in earnest. Innocent II condemned Arnoldus Brixius of heresy, for saying that the clergy should have their temporalities taken away, and be tied to their spirituals only. Bonner objected to Philpot the martyr, that he found written in his book, In me Ioanne Philpotto ubi abundavit peccatum, superabundavit et gratia. And when the bishop of Worcester exhorted Philpot, before he began to speak, to pray to God for grace: Nay, my lord of Worcester, said Bonner, you do not well to exhort him to make any prayer; for this is the thing these heretics have a singular pride in, that they can often make their vain prayers, in the which they glory much: for in this point they are like to certain arrant heretics, of whom Pliny makes mention, that they sing Antelucanos hymnos, &c. Was not this well aimed? Those he spoke of were the primitive Christians, whom Pliny excuseth to Trajan the persecutor. But it is easy for malice to make heresy what it pleaseth, when it is armed with power, and can make havoc at pleasure.

{a} Those who dwell directly opposite to each other on the globe, so that the soles of their feet are as it were planted against each other; esp. those who occupy this position in regard to us. (ED)

Ver. 20. I spake openly to the world] Truth is bold and barefaced; when heresy hides itself, and loathes the light, Veritas abscondi erubescit truth loaths to hide. What said John Frith, martyr, to the archbishop's men, that would have let him go and shift for himself? If you should both leave me here, and go to Croydon, declaring to the bishops that you had lost Frith, I would surely follow as fast after as I might, and bring them news that I had found and brought Frith again. Do ye think that I am afraid to declare my opinion to the bishops of England in a manifest truth?

Ver. 21. Why askest thou me?] We are to be ready always to give an answer to those that ask us a reason of our hope, so they do it to learn of us, and not to ensnare us. Thus I kept the ban-dogs {a} at staves' end (saith Nicholas Shetterden, martyr), not as thinking to escape them, but that I would see the foxes leap above ground for my blood, if they can reach it (so it be the will of God), yet we shall then gape and leap for it. Mr Hawks, martyr, asked a parson that examined him, what kin he was to the weathercock of Paul's? And told one Miles Huggard, a hosier {b} in Pudding Lane, who began to question him, that he could better skill to eat a pudding and make a hose, than in Scripture either to answer or oppose.

{a} A dog tied or chained up, either to guard a house, or on account of its ferocity; hence gen. a mastiff, bloodhound. (ED)

{b} One who makes or deals in hose (stockings and socks) and frame-knitted or woven underclothing generally. Also used more generally for a men's outfitter or haberdasher. (ED)

Ver. 22. One of the officers] Because our Saviour gave not the high priest his usual titles, but dealt freely with him, this officer, to curry favour, Veluti pontificii honoris vindex, beats our Saviour with his hand or stick, and is the better thought of. Like master, like man. So the bishop of Geneva's servant discharged his pistol at Farellus (that faithful man of God) when he was convented before his Lord; but by God's good providence missed him. Disploso sclopeto a Vicarii famulo, sed frustra impetitur. (Scultet.) Great men's vices go as seldom unattended as their persons; they shall be sure of such about them as will lick up their spittle, and load the mouse with the lion's praises. Ne leonum laudibus murem obruas.

Ver. 23. If I have spoken evil] Christ bears with the officer's insolence, but forbears not to clear his own innocence. We must, when aspersed, labour as the eclipsed moon, by keeping our motion, to wade out of the shadow and recover our former splendour.

Ver. 24. Bound to Caiaphas the high priest] Who should have done our Saviour better justice than to have suffered him, bound and uncondemned, to be injuriously beaten before his face. But the times were then lawless and licentious for the sins of the people. Tales sunt principum mores, quales subditorum humores, ut malo nodo non desit malus cuneus.

Ver. 25. He denied it, and said, I am not] Take heed by this example, Patres nos instruunt tum docentes, tum labentes, saith Augustine. Seest thou such as Peter to make shipwreck? Look well to thy tackling. They that will not profess Christ (unless they repent with Peter, which Stephen Gardiner said at his death that he could not) shall be sorted with such in participation of plagues, as through excess of pain and defect of patience, gnaw their own tongues, #Re 16:10.

Ver. 26. Whose ear Peter cut off] A great mercy it was that Peter had not then been hewed in a hundred pieces, by the ruffianly soldiers. But God had designed him to a further service. "My times are in thy hand," saith David. They were deceived, that swore to kill Paul by such an hour, #Ac 23:12.

Ver. 27. Peter then denied again] He that is fallen down one round of hell's ladder, knows not where he shall stop or stay, till he come to the bottom. Sin is of an encroaching nature, medest and maidenly at first; but yield to it once, and there is no ho with it.

The cock crew] And also Christ looked back upon him, as a piece of his suffering, with καὶ σὺ τέκνον Πιερὲ, What thou, my friend, Peter? Scipio had rather Hannibal should eat his heart with salt than Laelius give him a cross word.

Ver. 28. Lest they should be defiled] Putrid hypocrisy! they stand upon legal defilements, and care not to defile their consciences with innocent blood. What is this, but to strain at a gnat and swallow a camel? τον ανδριανταγαργαλιζειν. So Saul seemed to make a heinous matter of eating the flesh with the blood, #1Sa 14:33, when it was nothing with him to spill the blood of innocent Jonathan. Nay, he was so scrupulous, that he would not so much as name a guilty man or sinner, but, in casting of lots, instead of saying, Show the innocent or guilty, he said, Show the innocent or upright person, as Tremellius reads it; yet at the same time (as is well observed) he made no conscience of bloody oaths. So Doeg was detained before the Lord, either because it was the sabbath, or his vow was not finished, &c. But when he went thence, he became death's man to the Lord's priests.

Ver. 29. Pilate then went out unto them] It was much he would gratify them so far in their "Stand further off, for I am holier than thou"; that he would yield to their superstition, which he could not but contemn. But the very Turk, so the Christians pay him his yearly tribute (which is one fourth part of their increase, and a Sultan for every poll), permitteth them the liberty of their religion.

Ver. 30. If he were not a malefactor] Why? what evil had he done them? Might he not have said to them, as Themistocles to his Athenians, Are ye weary of receiving so many benefits by one man?

Ver. 31. It is not lawful for us] That is, upon this or any such like day, upon a holy day, or holy day eve. For otherwise they had power, or at least took it at their pleasure, as when they stoned Stephen, #Ac 7:58-60, and would have killed Paul, #Ac 23:20,21. But note, that they would seem to do all according to law by any means; so would their successors, the Catholics. Which, if it be so (saith Mr Fox), how did they then to Anne Askew, whom they first condemned to death, and then set her on the rack? By what law did they call up Master Hooper, and imprison him for the Queen's debt (when the Queen in very deed did owe him eighty pounds), and kept him a year and a half in prison, and gave him never a penny? By what law did Bishop Bonner condemn and burn Richard Mekins, a lad of fifteen years, when the first jury had acquitted him, and at the stake he revoked all heresy, and praised the said Bonner to be a good man; and also, having him in prison, would not suffer his father and mother to come to him, to comfort their own child? What law had they to put Mr Rogers, our proto-martyr, in prison, when he did neither preach nor read lectures after the time of the Queen's inhibition? And when they had kept him in his own house half a year, being not deprived of any living, yet would not let him have one half-penny of his own means to relieve him, his wife and eleven children? By what law was Thomas Tompkins' hand burned, and after his body consumed to ashes? What good law or honesty was there to burn the three poor women at Guernsey, with the infant child falling out of the mother's womb, whereas they all before recanted their words and opinions, and were never abjured before. So, what right or order of law did Stephen Gardiner follow, in troubling and imprisoning Judge Hales, when he had done nothing either against God's law or man's, proceeding in order of law against certain presumptuous persons, which, both before the law and against the law then in force, took upon them to say their mass?

Ver. 32. Signifying what death he should die] This shows that the Jews had power to put to death, but by a providence he was brought to Pilate, that according to the manner of the Romans he might be crucified; that kind of death being not, otherwise, in use among the Jews. Hence our Lord is said to have been crucified at Rome, #Re 11:8.

Ver. 33. Entered into the judgment hall again] For without, among the people, there was nothing but clamour and confusion; much like to that regnum Cyclopum, ubi ουδεις ουδεν ουδενοσ ακουει. Pilate therefore retires himself into the palace, that he might more sedately set himself to sift the business.

Ver. 34. Sayest thou this of thyself] As who should say, If thou dost this of thyself, what reason is it that thou shouldest be both judge and witness? if others have done it, why are not mine accusers brought face to face? If to be accused be enough to make a man guilty, none shall be innocent. Judges are to proceed secundum allegata et probata. according to the charges and what can be proven.

Ver. 35. Am I a Jew?] This he asketh in scorn of that nation; hateful among the heathens for their difference from them in religion. Gaius the emperor cast them out with their orator Philo, who came to make apology for them against Appion of Alexandria, their adversary and accuser. Strabo, for mere spite, saith that Judea is a dry and barren country, when the Scripture calleth it a land flowing with milk and honey, plenty and dainty; and Tacitus cannot but grant as much. (Aug. Civ. Dei.) Florus calleth the temple at Jerusalem, impiae gentis arcanum, a sanctuary for rogues, as the Papists say of Geneva. Seneca jeers them for casting away the seventh part of their time upon a weekly sabbath. Juvenal plays upon their circumcision. Plutarch tells a long story of their feast of tabernacles, which, saith he, they keep in honour of Bacchus (σὺμπρος). Tacitus saith, they were called Asinarii, because they worshipped the golden head of an ass. (Annal. xxi.) No wonder though profane Pilate disdain to be held a Jew, when they were thus traduced!

Ver. 36. My kingdom is not of this world] Christ could not be received as a God into the Pantheon at Rome, for he lacked worshippers, preached poverty, and chose mean men for his disciples. Domitian the emperor, after he had banished John into Patmos, and Domicillia Flavia, his own sister's daughter, with many more, into Pontus, and put various to death for that they were Christians, he commanded all such Jews as he could find to be put to death, that were of the stock of David. Among whom, meeting with some Christians also, that were allied to Christ, and understanding that they were poor harmless people, he dismissed them, and by proclamation forbade any more to be martyred. {Eusebius, Ecclesiastical

Ver. 37. That I should bear witness of the truth] Our Saviour speaketh religiously to a profane person; so doth Jacob to Esau, #Ge 33:5. Each countryman is known by his language. God will turn to all his people a pure lip, #Zep 3:9. They are none of his that can shift their sails to the setting of every wind, tune their fiddles to other men's bass, and as the planet Mercury, be good in conjunction with good, and bad with bad.

Ver. 38. What is truth?] In a scornful, profane manner. As indeed profane spirits cannot hear savoury words, but they turn them off with a scorn. What is truth? Fastidientis atque iridentis vox, non interrogantis, In a scornful and mocking voice not sincerely seeking, saith Beza. Some think it is vox admirantis; voice of wonder as if Pilate wondered at Christ, that when his life was in question he should talk of truth, q.d. Your life is in danger, and talk you of truth? Politicians think religion niceness. However it was, or with what mind soever, out he goes, and stays not an answer; as Saul bade the priest bring to him the ark, but, ere that could be done, draws forth his army, #1Sa 14:18-20.

Ver. 39. But ye have a custom] An ungain, ungodly custom it was, #Pr 17:15, whatever were the ground of it. In ista consuetudine turpe et crassum fuit vitium. In such a disgraceful custom, it was gross and criminal, (Calvin) Some think it was in memory of Jonathan, rescued from his father by the people. Others, that the feast might be celebrated with the greater joy and gladness. Others, more probably, in remembrance of their deliverance from the Egyptian bondage. But why should any Barabbas escape by it? "A bloody man shall flee to the pit, and no man may stay him," #Pr 28:17.

Ver. 40. Now Barabbas was a robber] And a murderer too, #Ac 3:14, yet preferred before Christ, who was also crucified in the midst of two thieves, as the worst of the three. Thus he was peccatorum maximus, greatest of sinners, both by imputation, for he bore our sins, which were all made to meet upon him, #Isa 53:6, and by reputation, for he was "numbered with the transgressors," #Isa 53:12, and made "his grave with the wicked," #Isa 53:9.

Ver. 1. Took Jesus and scourged him] So God scourgeth every son whom he receiveth, #Heb 12:6. One Son he had that was sine corruptione et flagitio, without corruption and shame, but none that was sine corruptione et flagello, without corruption and scourging. In him therefore that rule held not, Flagitium et flagellum, sicut acus et filum, Punishment follows sin, as the thread follows the needle.

Ver. 2. And the soldiers platted a crown of thorns] Prickly and sharp as the point of a sword (so the word signifieth). Ακαθθη videtur ortum a voce ακη, cuspis, acies, mucro. (Pasor.) And our Saviour being of the finest constitution, must needs be extremely sensible. The soldiers did this (it is thought) by the command of Pilate, to give content to the Jews, and to move them thereby (if it might be) either to condemn him or commiserate him. But nothing would do but his death; these blood hounds would not otherwise be satisfied. Godfrey of Boulogne, first king of Jerusalem, refused to be crowned with a crown of gold, saying that it became not a Christian there to wear a crown of gold, where Christ for our salvation had sometime worn a crown of thorns. Some report that he would not be otherwise crowned than with a crown of thorns, as he kneeled at our Saviour's sepulchre; to testify (perhaps) that he did dedicate his head and life to Christ crucified, and despised not for his sake a crown of thorns here so he might wear a crown of glory with him in heaven.

Tradunt coronam spineam ei esse impositam flexis genibus ad sepulchrum Dominicum procumbenti. (Bucholcer.) Canutus, for like purpose, set his crown upon the crucifix. It is not fit, since the head was crowned with thorns, that the members should be crowned with rosebuds, saith Zanchius.

Ver. 3. And said, Hail, King of the Jews] They scoff at him, as a ridiculous and stage player king, whom therefore they clothed with purple, which was a colour affected by the emperors and nobility of Rome; as Herod, for like cause clothed him in white, εν εσθητι λαμπρα, a colour much worn by the nobility of the Jews, #Jas 2:2.

And they smote him with their hands] So do hypocrites still by their unchristian practice when they bend the knee to Christ with ludicrous devotion. They have the voice of Jacob, but the hands of Esau. Their words are God's, their deeds the devil's, as John Capocius told Pope Innocent III, preaching peace and sowing discord. Verba tua Dei plane sunt, facta vero diaboli videntur. Your words are clearly from God, truly your deeds seem to be of the devil.

Ver. 4. That ye may know that I find no fault] But why did he not then deliver him out of their hands? Pusillanimity (cowardliness) and popularity would not suffer him; but howsoever he shall give testimony to his innocence. So when Dr Weston was gone from Mr Bradford, martyr (with whom he previously had conference), the keeper told Bradford that the doctor spoke openly that he saw no cause why they should burn him. This Weston being prolocutor (spokesman) in the divinity schools at Oxford, when Cranmer was brought forth to dispute, thus began the disputation, Convenistis hodie, fratres, profligaturi detestandam illam haeresin de veritate corporis Christi in Sacramento, &c. You are assembled today brethren, to overthrow that destable heresy concerning the body of Christ in the sacrament. At which various learned men burst out into a great laughter, as though even in the entrance of the disputation he had betrayed himself and his religion. God will have such words fall sometimes from the mouths of persecutors, either wittingly, or by mistake, as shall one day rise up in judgment, and out of their own mouths condemn them.

Ver. 5. Pilate saith, Behold the man] q.d. If ye be men, take pity upon a man so miserably misused; and if ye be good men, let him go who is innocent. But these monsters, like those beasts at Ephesus, had put off manhood; and for good men among them, it fared with Pilate, pleading for Christ, as it did with him at Nola in the story, who when he was commanded by the Roman censor to go and call the good men of the city to appear before him, went to the churchyards, and there called at the graves of the dead, "O ye good men of Nola, come away, for the Roman censor calls for your appearance," for he knew not where to call for a good man alive.

Ver. 6. Crucify him, crucify him] So afterwards the primitive persecutors cried out, Ad bestias, ad bestias, Christianos ad leones, To the beasts, to the beasts, Christians, to the lions, imputing the cause of all public calamities to them, as Tertullian testifieth. So they cried out at Geneva against Farellus, when the bishop first convented him, In Rhodanum, in Rhodanum, Into the Rhone River, into the Rhone, as the Papists still cry out against the professors of the truth, Ad ignem, ad ignem, to the fire with them, to the fire with them. Tollantur sacrilegi, tollantur. Let the wicked be destroyed, destroyed. Indeed in the form and style of their own sentence condemnatory, they pretend a petition to the secular power, In visceribus Iesu Christi ut rigor iuris mitigetur, atque ut parcatur vita; In the body of Jesus Christ so softened the rigour of the law and so that life was spared, so they will seem outwardly to be lambs, but inwardly they are ravening wolves. Witness that chancellor of Salisbury, Dr Jeffery, who was not only contented to give sentence against certain martyrs, but also hunted after the high sheriff, not allowing him to spare them, though he would. So Harpsfield, archdeacon of Canterbury, being at London when Queen Mary lay dying, made all post-haste home to despatch those six whom he had then in his cruel custody; and those were the last that suffered for religion in Queen Mary's reign.

I find no fault in him] No wonder! For he was (as Peter saith) "A lamb without blemish" (of original sin), "and without spot" (of actual sin), #1Pe 1:18. Neither was it without a sweet providence of God that he should be so often absolved from the desert of death, that thereby we might escape the manifold deaths that we had so well deserved.

Ver. 7. The Jews answered him, &c.] When they saw that the treason they laid to his charge would not do the deed, they accused him of blasphemy another while, that by some means or other they might take away his life. Thou, and such as thou (said Bonner to Thomas Brown, martyr), report I seek your blood; to whom he answered, Yea, my lord, indeed ye be a bloodsucker; and I would I had as much blood as is water in the sea for you to suck. Another unknown good woman told this bishop in a letter, that he had such store of Christ's lambs already in his butcher's stall, that he was not able to drink all their blood, lest he should break his belly, and therefore he let them lie still and die for hunger. My lord (said Mr Saunders to Bonner), you seek my blood, and you shall have it; I pray God you may be so baptized in it, that you may hereafter loathe bloodsucking, and become a better man.

Ver. 8. He was the more afraid] Christ's innocence did before triumph in Pilate's conscience. But now, that he hears that he made himself the Son of God, he was in a mighty maze, "he was afraid," saith the text, of lifting up his hand against God. The greatest men, if not utterly debauched and satanized, cannot but quake at the apprehension of God: and as the worms, when it thunders, wriggle into the corners of the earth; Caligula (that dared his Jove to a duel with that hemistich in Homer,  $\eta \mu \alpha \nu \alpha \epsilon \rho \eta \epsilon \gamma \omega \sigma \epsilon$ , Either kill me, or I will kill thee), when it thundered, covered his eyes with his cap, running under the bed or any bench hole. (Sueton. in Calig.)

Ver. 9. Whence art thou?] He questioneth not Christ of his country, but of his condition, q.d. Art thou a man or a God? Such a dunghill deity, he meant, as the heathens worshipped. And therefore our Saviour would not once answer him. Especially since if he should have asserted his Deity, Pilate likely would have acquitted and dismissed him; whereas Christ knew that he was now and here to be condemned. There are those who think that Pilate's wife's dream was from the devil, who sought thereby to have hindered the work of our redemption, which could not be wrought but by the death of Christ.

Ver. 10. Speakest thou not unto me] No, and yet St Paul saith, he "witnessed a good confession before Pontius Pilate," #1Ti 6:13; because he had said sufficient before, and was now ready to seal up the truth with his blood. But to be delivered he would not once open his mouth to Pilate. So Mr Saunders had so wholly devoted himself to the defence of Christ's cause that he forbade his wife to sue for his delivery; and when other of his friends had by suit almost obtained it, he discouraged them, so that they did not follow their suit. I pray you let me make labour for you, said one Cresswell to Master Bradford. You may do what you will, said Bradford. But tell me what suit I shall make for you, quoth Cresswell. Forsooth, said the other, what you will do, do it not at my request; for I desire nothing at your hands. If the Queen will give me life, I will thank her; if she will banish me, I will thank her; if she will burn me, I will thank her; if she will condemn me to perpetual imprisonment, I will thank her. Life in God's displeasure is worse than death; and death in his true fear is true life.

I have power to crucify thee] To crucify an innocent man? Who gave him that power? But profane persons bear themselves overly bold upon their power, as if they were little gods within themselves. So Caesar told Metellus he could as easily destroy him as bid it to be done. So Caligula, speaking to the consuls, I laugh, said he, to think that I can kill you with a nod of my head, and that this fair throat of my wife's shall be presently cut if I but speak the word. Rideo quod uno nutu meo iugulare vos possim, et uxori tam bona cervix, simul ac iussero, demetur.

Ver. 11. Except it were given thee from above] Therefore be good in thine office, lest thou give a dear account to him that is higher than the highest, as Solomon hath it; who therefore calls the judgment seat "the holy place," #Ec 8:10. Pilate was afterwards kicked off the bench by Gaius, for his perverting of justice, and, for grief and shame, became his own death's man.

Ver. 12. But the Jews cried out, saying, &c.] They returned again to their former accusation, and enforced it. One way or other they are bent to have his blood. In King Edward VI's days, when the Duke of Somerset was cleared of the treason laid to his charge, yet he must suffer (so his potent enemies would have it) for I know not what slight suspicions of felony. At which time also, Sir Thomas Arundel was, among others, with some difficulty condemned. Unhappy man (saith the historian) who found the doing of anything, or of nothing, dangerous alike.

Ver. 13. When Pilate therefore heard that saying] That saying, and the base fear of being shent by Caesar, makes him warp and go against his conscience. But should not judges be men of courage? Should not the standard be of steel? the chief posts in the house be heart of oak? Solomon's tribunal was under propped with lions, to show what metal a magistrate should be made of. It is a mercy to have judges, modo audeant quae sentiunt, saith the orator, so they dare do their consciences. (Cic. pro Milone.)

Ver. 14. Behold your King] q.d. A likely matter that this poor man should affect the kingdom; and not rather that he is like to lose his life, by forged cavillation. Christ himself was misreported and falsely accused, saith Father Latimer, both as touching his words and meaning also. Korah and his complices object to the meekest of men with one breath, pride, ambition, usurpation of authority, Invenies apud Tacitum frequentatas accusationes maiestatis: unicum crimen eorum qui crimine vacabant. (Lips. in Tacit.)

Ver. 15. We have no king but Caesar] Why but, Is there no king in Sion? is her counsellor perished? saith the prophet, #Mic 4:9. Did not these men look for a Messiah? Or if not, will they reject the Lord from being their King? Oh, how blind is malice, how desperately set upon its ends and enterprises! But in Christ's kingdom this is wonderful, saith Zanchius, that this King willeth and causeth that the kingdoms of the world be subject to his kingdom; and again he willeth and causeth that his kingdom be also subject to the kingdoms of the world. In regno Christi hoc mirabile est, quod iste rex vult et efficit. (Zanch. Miscel.)

Ver. 16. Then delivered he him, &c.] Overcome by their importunity, and over awed by the fear of Caesar to condemn the innocent. It was Cato's complaint, that private men's thieves are laid by the heels, and in cold irons; but these public thieves that wrong and rob the commonwealth sit in scarlet, with gold chains about their necks. Sinisterity is an enemy to sincerity. <sup>{a}</sup> All self-respects and corrupt ends must be laid aside by men in authority and justice, as Moses speaks, that is, pure justice without mud must run down, #De 16:20. Durescite, durescite, said the smith to the duke, that dared not do justice.

Ver. 17. And he, bearing his cross, &c.] This was the Roman fashion (as Plutarch relates it), that every condemned person should bear that cross that anon should bear him. <sup>{a}</sup> Hence grew that expression of our Saviour, "He that will be my disciple must take up his cross," and so "fill up that which is behind," #Col 1:24.

Into a place called the place of a skull] Where his tender heart was pierced with grief, no doubt, at the sad sight of such a slaughter of men made by sin; like as it could not but be a sore cut and corrosive to Mauritius, to see his wife and children slain before him, when himself was also to be next stewed in his own broth. St John is exact in setting down our Saviour's sufferings, and this for one.

Ver. 18. Where they crucified him] An ignominious, accursed, and dolorous death; for he was nailed to the tree in the hands and feet, which are the most sensible parts, as fullest of sinews; and therefore (in so fine a body as his especially) of most exquisite sense. Look wistly upon sin in this glass, and love it if thou canst. For our sins were the nails and ourselves the traitors that fastened him to the tree. Pilate and his soldiers, Judas and the Jews, were all set to work by us. Learn to lay the blame on thyself, and say, It was my gluttony that reached a cup of gall and vinegar to his mouth; mine incontinence that provided stripes for his back; mine arrogance that platted a crown of thorns upon his head; mine inconstance that put a reed into his hand; my treachery that nailed his hands and feet; my vanity that grieved his soul to the death; my self-love that thrust a spear into his side, &c. Adsum ego qui feci. (Virgil.)

Ver. 19. Jesus of Nazareth, &c.] To persuade the people to bow superstitiously at the name of Jesus, Papists commonly (but ridiculously) teach in their pulpits, that Christ himself on the cross bowed his head on the right side, to reverence his own name, which was written over it; as Sir Edwin Sands relates from his own experience.

Ver. 20. In Hebrew, Greek, and Latin] In Hebrew, for the Jews who gloried in the law; in Greek, for the Grecians who gloried in wisdom; in Latin, for the Romans who most gloried in dominion and power. As if Pilate should have said, This is the King of all religion, having reference to the Hebrews; of all wisdom, to the Greeks; of all power, to the Romans. The Holy Ghost would also hereby commend unto us the dignity and study of these three languages, to be retained for ever in the Church of Christ.

Ver. 21. Write not, The King of the Jews] They would needs be mending Magnificat, as they say; and this of pure spite, that the disgrace might rest only upon Christ, and not at all reflect upon their nation. Whereas, in truth, nothing so ennobleth, as any the least relation to Christ. Bethlehem, where he was born, is, though the least, yet therefore "not the least among the cities of Judah," #Mt 2:6 Mic 5:2. Among those that were marked, #Re 7:5, Judah is reckoned first, of all the tribes by Leah's side, because our Lord sprang out of Judah; and Naphtali is named first among those that came by Rachel's side, because at Capernaum (in that tribe) Christ dwelt; which therefore also is said to be lifted up to heaven, #Mt 11:23. Ut utrobique superemineat Christi praeogativa.

Ver. 22. What I have written, I have written] i.e. I am unchangeably resolved it shall stand. So God saith, I am that I am; that is, I am yesterday, and today, and the same for ever. Learn we may of Pilate to be constant to a good cause. {a} Marcellus the pope would not change his name, according to the custom, to show his immutability, that he was no changeling.

Ver. 23. Took his garments] Christ, as Elias, being now to ascend into heaven, did willingly let go his garments; and the rather that he might clothe us with his righteousness. Let us suffer with joy by the spoiling of our goods, as knowing in ourselves (not only by books or relation of others) that we have in heaven a better and more enduring substance, #Heb 10:32. But what a wise fool was Sir Thomas Moore, who being brought to the Tower, a malefactor, and one of the officers demanding his upper garment for a fee, meaning his gown, he said he should have it; and took him his cap, saying, it was the uppermost garment that he had. So, when he was to be beheaded, he said to the hangman, I pray you let me lay my beard over the block, lest you should cut it. He thought it no glory, unless he might die with a mock in his mouth. These be the world's wizards.

Now the coat was without seam] Christi tunica est unica: they that rent it by schisms, are worse than the rude soldiers. There can be no greater sin committed, saith Cyprian, than to break the unity of the Church: yea, though one should suffer martyrdom, yet cannot he expiate his thereby sin of discord. This, saith Chrysostom, is a bold, but a true speech of Cyprian. {a} And like to this, is that of Oecolampadius to the Lutherans in Switzerland; Our error may be pardoned, so that Christ by faith be apprehended, Discordiam, neque si sanguinem fundamus, expiabimus, but the blot of our discord we cannot wash off with our heart blood. (Oecol. ad fratres in Suevia.)

{a} Inexpiabilis discordiae macula martyrii sanguine ablui et passione purgari non potest. Cypr. de Unit. Eccles. Chrysost. Hom. xi. ad Ephes.

Ver. 24. That the Scripture might be fulfilled] So exactly is the Old Testament fulfilled in the New. The testimonies whereof are cited not only by way of accommodation, but because they are the proper meaning of the places. The soldiers could not cast the dice upon our Saviour's garments, but it was foretold. This shows that our redemption by Christ is no imposture, but a plot of God's own contriving. Let this settle us against all doubtings.

Ver. 25. Now there stood by the cross, &c.] The men were fled, the women stood to it. Souls have no sexes. Manoah's wife was the more manly of the two. Priscilla is sometimes set before Aquila. When St Paul came first to Philippi, he had none that would hear him, but a few women, #Ac 18:18 Ro 16:3 2Ti 4:19 Ac 16:13.

Ver. 26. When Jesus therefore saw his mother] In the midst of his miseries he thinks of his mother, and takes care for her well-doing after his decease. Doctor Taylor, the martyr, among other things he said to his son at his death, laid this charge upon him: When thy mother is waxed old, forsake her not, but provide for her to thy power, and that she lack nothing; for so will God bless thee, and give thee long life upon earth and prosperity. The Athenians punished such with death as nourished not their aged parents. And St Paul saith, that to requite parents is good and acceptable before God, #1Ti 5:4. καλον, sc. coram hominibus. (Scul.)

Ver. 27. The disciple took her, &c.] A precious depositum; trust the house was the better she abode in; yet dare we not deify her, as the Papists; as neither will we vilify her, as the author of the Female Glory basely slanders some of us, that we rudely call her Moll, God's maid. Os durum! Horsh speech! Our parents, saith the heathen, are our household gods, θεοι εφεστιοι. (Hierocles.) Honour them we must both in word and deed. That our Saviour here calls her woman, and not mother, was either because he would not add to her grief, who was now pierced to the soul with that sword Simeon spake of, #Lu 2:35; or, lest he should create her further trouble, if she had been known to be his mother; or, for that, being now in his last work, and ready way to heaven, he knew none after the flesh. Thomas Watt, martyr, spake thus at his death to his wife and six children: Wife and my good children, I must now depart from you; therefore henceforth know I you no more, &c. But whereas Christ commends the care of his mother to his beloved disciple, with, Behold thy mother, the Samians used the like speech, when to the richer of the citizens, the mothers of those who died in the wars were given to be maintained by them, Σοι ταυτην διδωμι τη μητερα.

Ver. 28. That the Scripture might be fulfilled] It is a high point of heavenly wisdom to do our ordinary business in obedience to God's command, and with an aim at his glory; to go about our earthly affairs with heavenly minds, and in serving men to serve God; to taste God in the creature, and whether we eat or drink, or whatever else we do, to set up God, #1Co 10:31. Every action is a step either to heaven or hell. The poor servant in being faithful to his master, "serves the Lord Christ," #Col 3:24, who was more careful here of fulfilling the Scripture and working out our salvation, than of satisfying his own most vehement thirst.

Ver. 29. Now there was set a vessel full of vinegar] Cold comfort: they used to give others wine to comfort them, according to #Pr 31:6, and mingled myrrh with the wine ( granum thuris in calice vini), that might attenuate their blood, and so help to despatch them; as also to cause a giddiness in them, that they might be the less sensible of their pain. But they dealt much worse with our Saviour, mingling for him, in mockery, vinegar and gall, to add to his other misery. This he drank, that we might drink of the heavenly nepenthes, that torrent of pleasure, #Ps 16:11.

Ver. 30. It is finished] Christ would not off the cross till all were done that was here to be done; that which remained being rather a play than a work to him. The consideration whereof should cast us into a real ecstasy of joy and admiration; nothing like that counterfeit ecstasy whereinto Rondeletius saw a priest at Rome to feign himseff to fall whenever he heard those words of Christ, Consummatum est, It is finished. But the physician observing this counterfeit careful in his fall to lay his head in a soft place, he suspected the dissimulation, and by the threats of a club quickly recovered him.

Ver. 31. Because it was the preparation] Their preparation to the sabbath began at three of the clock in the afternoon? <sup>{a}</sup> The best and wealthiest of them, even those that had many servants, did with their own hands further the preparation; so that sometimes the masters themselves would chop herbs, sweep the house, cleave wood, kindle the fire. Our ancestors also were wont to give over work on the Saturday, when it rang to even song. And usually as men measure to God in preparation, he re-measureth to them in blessing. King Edgar ordained that Sunday should be solemnized in this land from Saturday, nine of the clock, till Monday morning. The Jews, before their preparation, had their fore-preparation; and before their sabbath, their fore-sabbath, their sabbatum ante sabbatum. <sup>{b}</sup> Those of Tiberias began the sabbath sooner than others; those at Tsepphore continued it longer, adding De profano ad sacrum. We are now so far from this, that we trench upon the holy time, and say, "When will the sabbath be over?" yea, in too many places God's sacred sabbath is made the voider and dunghill for all refuse businesses; as by others, it is made as Bacchus' orgies, with ales, May games, <sup>{c}</sup> &c. So that it should be named according to these men's observing of it, Daemoniacus potius quam Dominicus, The devil is preferred to God, as Alsted hath it. (Encyclopaedia.)

Ver. 32. Brake the legs of the first] The good thief also had his legs broken and his life taken away; though by his repentance he made his cross a Jacob's ladder, whereby angels descended to fetch up his soul.

Ver. 33. And saw that he was dead already] He took his own time to die; and therefore, #Joh 19:30, it is said, "that he bowed his head, and gave up the ghost"; whereas other men bow not the head till they have given up the ghost. He also cried with a loud voice and died, which shows that he lacked not strength of nature to have lived longer if he had wished.

Ver. 34. But one of the soldiers with a spear] What an odd conceit is that of the Papists, that from the Greek word λογχη, have made this soldier's name Longinus! <sup>{a}</sup> and to make up the tale, they tell the people, that whereas before he had been blind, by the anointing of his eyes with the watery blood that came out of Christ's side, he received his sight, became a Christian, a martyr, a canonized saint, and that his relics were afterwards worshipped. The lance and nails that tormented Christ were graced with a holy day by Pope Innocent VI, and this eulogy, Ave ferrum triumphale, intrans pectus tu vitale caeli pandis ostia, &c. <sup>{b}</sup>

There came out blood and water] The pericardium being pierced, which nature hath filled with water to cool the heat of the heart. Hereto St John alludes, when he saith, #1Jo 5:6, that "Christ came by water and blood," to teach us, that he justifieth none by his merit but when he sanctifieth by his Spirit. Possumus etiam hinc asseverare ex latere Christi fluxisse nostra sacramenta, saith Calvin, We may safely say that our sacraments issued out of Christ's side.

Ver. 35. And he that saw it, &c.] Nothing so sure as sight. One eyewitness is more than ten ear-witnesses. <sup>{a}</sup> It is probable that the apostles that were so conversant with our Saviour had their dairies, wherein they recorded his daily oracles, and other occurrences, and out of which they compiled the Gospels.

His record is true] The gospel is called the testimony, #Isa 8:20, because it beareth witness to itself. The law is called light (lex, lux), because by itself it is seen to be of God, as the sun is seen by its own light.

Ver. 36. Not a bone of him was broken] So he appeared to be the true Paschal Lamb, that was roasted whole in the fire of his Father's wrath, to deliver us from the wrath to come. The soldiers could not break his legs, because God had otherwise ordered it. Voluntas Dei, necessitas rei.

Ver. 37. They shall look upon him] This is not a threat, but a promise, #Zec 12:10, fulfilled, #Ac 2:37, when Peter's hearers felt the nails, wherewith they had crucified Christ, sticking fast in their own hearts, and piercing them with horror, κατενυγησαν.

Ver. 38. A disciple of Jesus, but secretly for fear] A disciple he was, though a dastard. Infirmities, if disclaimed, discard us not. Uzziah ceased not to be a king, when he began to be a leper. Joshua the high priest, though ill clothed, yet stood before the angel, #Zec 3:1; Christ did not abhor his presence, nor reject his service. The Church calleth herself black, #So 1:5, but Christ calls her fair, &c. In peace offerings they might offer leavened bread, to show that God will bear with his people's infirmities.

Ver. 39. And there came also Nicodemus] Another night bird, a chieftain in the ecclesiastical state, as Joseph of Arimathea (or Ramath, Samuel's country) was in the civil. The faith of these two now breaks out, though it had long lain hidden, as the sun under a cloud, as seed under a clod: now they manifest their love to Christ, so cruelly handled, as the true mother did hers to her child, when it was to be cut in two.

Ver. 40. With the spices, as the manner of the Jews] To testify their hope of a resurrection. In an apish imitation of whom, the Gentiles also, though they had no such hope, kept a great stir, and made much ado about the decent burial of their dead. Habent et vespae favos, et simiae imitantur homines, saith Cyprian.

Ver. 41. A new sepulchre] Fit for him that was the "first-born from the dead, the firstfruits of them that sleep." Besides else it might have been said, that some other had risen, and not he (saith Theodoret), as Mahomet saith that Christ was not crucified, but another for him. ινα μη συκοφαντισθη η αναστασις, ως αλλου ανασταντος..

Ver. 4:2. Because of the Jews] That they might not do servile work on the sabbath, though it were to inter Christ's body. See #Lu 23:56.

Chapter 20

Ver. 1. The first day of the week] Now the Christian sabbath, in honour of Christ's resurrection, and therefore called "the Lord's day," #Re 1:10; as the holy supper is called "the Lord's supper,"

#1Co 11:20; as the saints are called κυριακη, kirk, church. The title of the 24th Psalm is, "A Psalm of David." To this the Greek addeth, "Of the first day of the week," meaning that this psalm was wont to be sung in the temple every first day of the week, which now is the Christian's sabbath; and of Christ, his Church and kingdom, and the entertaining of his gospel, doth this psalm intreat. Let every one of us keep sabbath, saith Ignatius, in a spiritual manner, rejoicing in the meditation of the law, not in the rest of the body. εκαστος ημων σαββατιζετω πνευματικως. (Ignat. ep. iii. ad Magnes.) And in those primitive times when the question was asked, Servasti Dominicum? Hast thou kept the Lord's day? the answer was returned, Christianus sum, intermittere non possum: I am a Christian, and may not do otherwise. The Jews gave that honour to their sabbath, that they named from it all the other days of the week, as the first, second, third day, &c., of the sabbath, which we from the heathens (a worse pattern) name Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, &c. Ex instituto Mercurii Trismegisti.

Ver. 2. Then she runneth] Amor addidit alas, love is impatient of delays. Christ cometh leaping over the "mountains of Bether," #So 2:17; all manner lets and impediments. And the Church, as impatient as he, bids him "Make haste, my beloved, and be like to a roe," #So 8:4, or to a fawn of the harts, which when it fleeth, looketh behind it, saith the Chaldee paraphrast there. She affects not only a union, but a unity with him.

Ver. 3. Peter therefore went forth] He despaired not though he had grievously fallen. The saints cannot fall so far, but that God's supporting hand is ever under them. They may be doused over head and ears in the waters of iniquity, yea, sink twice to the bottom, yet shall rise again and recover; for the Lord puts under his hand; yea, as he that stumbleth, and yet falleth not, gets ground by his stumbling, so it is here.

Ver. 4. So they ran both together] But the swifter of foot they were, the slower in faith; for "he that believeth maketh not haste," #Isa 28:16. They believed not fully the resurrection; when they heard the news of it, and from the angels too, they stirred not, but rejected it as a fable. Now that they hear (though but by a woman only) that the Lord's body was removed to another sepulchre (though that were but a rash report, and nothing so) they run amain. Oh the dullness that is found in the best!

Ver. 5. Yet went he not in] He dared not; so some fearful are afraid of every step, saying, as Caesar at Rubicon, Yet we may go back; and as the king of Navarre told Beza, that he would launch no further into the sea, than he might be sure to return safe to the haven. Petago se non ira commissurus esset quin, quando liberet, pedem referre posset.

Ver. 6. Following him and went in] John came first; Peter entered first: "soft and fair goes far": soft fire makes sweet malt: leap Christians are not much to be liked; such as quickly step out of profaneness into profession. Hot at hand seldom holds out. The stony ground immediately received the seed with joy, and started up suddenly, εὐθεως; but the good ground brings forth fruit with patience or tarriance, εν υπομονη, #Lu 8:15. Walk deliberately, and ponder the paths of thy feet, as Solomon bids, #Pr 4:26. A Christian's progress is as the sun, which shines more and more to the perfect day, #Pr 4:18; and as the trumpet in Mount Sion, #Ex 20:18, which sounded louder and louder till it was heard all the country over.

Ver. 7. And the napkin that was about his head] These grave clothes were evidences of our Saviour's resurrection, and are therefore mentioned by the evangelist. But what shift made Paleottus, Archbishop of Bonony, for matter, who wrote a great book of the shadow of Christ's dead body in the sindon or linen cloth, wherein it was wrapped! This book was also commented upon by the professor of divinity there. Had not these men little to do? Did they not, as one saith,

Tenet insanabile multos—Seribendi Cacoethes.”

Ver. 8. And he saw and believed] i.e. He believed his own eyes, that the Lord's body was not in the sepulchre; but, as Mary Magdalene had told them, so they misbelieved, that it was taken away to some other place, further from Calvary, for honour's sake, that he might not lie buried with the wicked. Hence it is that in the next verse it is added, that "as yet they knew not the Scripture."

Ver. 9. For as yet they knew not the Scripture] Which yet was clear enough in this point, #Ps 16:10 110:1 Isa 53:10,11. The resurrection of our Saviour was not obscurely shadowed out in Adam waking out of sleep, Isaac received after a sort from the dead,

Joseph drawn out of prison to be Lord of Egypt, Samson bearing away the gates of Gaza, David advanced to the kingdom, where there was but a step between him and death; Jonah preserved in the whale's belly, &c.

Ver. 10. Went again to their own home] Waiting till God should further enlighten both organ and object, as Mary also did, #Lu 2:19,51.

Ver. 11. Mary stood at the sepulchre, weeping] Some think it was because she conceived that the Jews had gotten away our Saviour's dead body to dishonour it; as the Popish persecutors digged up Bucer's and many other good men's bones to burn them. She wept where she had no such cause; so do too many, women especially, who should do well to keep their tears for better uses, and not wash foul rooms with sweet waters. Needless tears must be unwept again.

Ver. 12. And seeth two angels] Sent for her sake, and the rest, to certify them of the resurrection. It is their office (and they are glad of it) to comfort and counsel the saints still, as it were by speaking and doing after a spiritual manner, though we see them not, as she here did. The philosopher told his friends when they came into his little and low cottage, "The gods are here with me," εντευθεν ουκ απεισι θεοι: sure it is that God and his angels are ever with his people, when they are weeping especially.

Ver. 13. Woman, why weepest thou?] Angels pity human frailty still, and secretly suggest comfort. But Mary had no such cause to cry, if she had known all, but to rejoice rather; so hath a Christian, in what condition soever, all things reckoned. Had Elizabeth known she should have been queen, she would not have wished herself a milkmaid. Saints are "heirs of the kingdom," saith James, #Jas 2:5, heads destined to the diadem, saith Tertullian; what mean they then to be at any time in their dumps?

Ver. 14. She turned herself back] As not able to abide the brightness of those glorious angels any longer. To the gardener therefore she addresseth herself for further direction. See what a happiness it is to be taught by the ministry of men, like ourselves, and to have angels about us, but invisible.

Ver. 15. Woman, why weepest thou? whom seekest thou?] Where the angels left, the Lord begins. God hath for our sakes taken the preaching of the gospel from the angels, and given it to ministers, who have thenceforth also changed names; for ministers are called angels, #Re 2:1, and angels ministers, #Heb 1:14.

Ver. 16. Jesus saith unto her, Mary] Christ is nearest to such as, with Mary, cannot see him for their tears, if with her in humility they seek after him. He calls her but by her name, and she acknowledgeth him. The ear, we say, is first up in a morning; and nothing so soon awakes us as to be called by our names. How easily can Christ call up our drowsy hearts, when he pleaseth; and (when we are even turned away from him, as Mary here was) make us reciprocate and cry Rabboni? Mary! saith Christ; Master! saith Mary; and presently she clasps about his feet having her heart as near to his heart, as her hands were to his feet. What a meeting of love (saith a divine hereupon) will there be between the new glorified saint and the glorious Redeemer?

Ver. 17. Touch me not, &c.] She had caught him by the feet (as the Shunammite did Elisha, as the Shulamite did her spouse), and there she would have held him longer, out of inconsiderate zeal, #Mt 28:9 So 3:4; but that he takes her off this corporal conceit, that she may learn to live by faith, and not by sense; to be drawn after him to heaven, whither he was now ascending, and to go tell his brethren what she had seen and heard, Ne morere, sed ad perturbatos discipulos accurre et quod vidisti renuncia. (Pet. Martyr.)

Ver. 18. Mary Magdalene came and told] She had told them and troubled them before with a conceit that they had (but to what end, or whither, she knew not) removed the Lord's body; fitly therefore is she sent to assure them of the resurrection. And though loth to depart, yet she bridles her affections, though never so impetuous, and brings them to be wholly at Christ's beck and check.

Ver. 19. When the doors, &c., for fear of the Jews] The sheep had been scattered, but now were by the great Shepherd recollected (according to the promise, #Zec 13:7 "I will turn my hand upon the little ones"); yet, sensible of their late fright, they show some trepidation. Afterwards, when the Spirit came down upon them, they not only set open the doors, but preached Christ boldly in the temple without dread of danger. So did Basil; when the emperor threatened him with bonds, banishment, &c., he wished him to frighten babies with such bugbears; his life might be taken away, but not his faith; his head, but not his crown, <sup>{a}</sup> So Luther, at first so fearful and faint hearted, that in the year 1518, he wrote thus to the Pope Leo X:

Vivifica, occide, voca, revoca, approba, reproba, vocem tuam vocem Christi in te praesidentis et loquentis agnoscam: I lay myself prostrate at your holiness' feet, together with all that I am and have; quicken me, kill me, call me, recall me, approve me, reprove me, I shall acknowledge your voice to be the very voice of Christ, ruling and speaking in you. Yet afterwards he took more courage; witness among many other things, that brave answer of his to one that told him that both the pope and the emperor had threatened his ruin, Contemptus est a me Romanus et favor et furor. I hold in contempt both Roman goodwill and wrath. And when Spalatinus had sent unto him to inquire whether he would go to Worms, and appear in the gospel's cause, if Caesar summoned him? Go, said he, I am resolved to go, though I were sure to encounter so many devils there as are tiles upon the houses. Omnia de me praesumas praeter fugam et palinodiam. Fugere nolo, multo minus recantare. (Luth. Epist.)

Ver. 20. He showed unto them his hands, &c.] For their further confirmation; so he doth unto us every time we come to his table. But, oh, how should our hearts long to look for ever upon the human nature of Christ, clothed with an exuberance of glory, at the right hand of his heavenly Father! and to consider that every vein in that blessed body bled, to bring us to heaven! Augustine was wont to wish that he might have the happiness to see these three things, Romam in flore, Paulum in ore, et Christum in corpore. Rome in its glory, Paul speaking and Christ in the body. But I should take venerable Bede's part rather, and say with him, Anima mea desiderat Christum regem meum videre in decore suo: Let me see my King Christ in his heavenly beauty.

Ver. 21. Then said Jesus to them again, Peace] The common salutation among the Jews (the Turks at this day salute in like sort, Salaum aleek; the reply is, Aleek salaum, that is, Peace be unto you). This our Saviour purposely redoubleth, to persuade them of pardon for their late shameful defection from him, and their backwardness to believe his resurrection. Sin is soon committed, but not so easily remitted; or, if in heaven, yet not in our own consciences, till which there is little comfort. Christ, to confirm them, is pleased again to employ them, and to count them faithful, putting them again into the ministry, #1Ti 1:13. A calling not more honourable than comfortable; the very trust that God commits to a man therein, seals up love and favour to him.

Ver. 22. He breathed on them, and saith, &c.] Otherwise, who had been sufficient for these things? The ministry is a burden to be trembled at by the angels themselves, saith Chrysostom. {a} Father Latimer, when at the coming in of the six articles, he, to keep a good conscience, resigned up his bishopric, putting off his rochet, he suddenly, gave a skip in the floor for joy, feeling his shoulders so light, and being discharged, as he said, of such a heavy burden. Now the Spirit where he is bestowed by Christ, heaves at one end (as St Paul's word imports) and takes off the brunt of the business from us. He oils our wheels, and makes us drive merrily. He helps our infirmities, (#Ro 8:26; αντιλαμβανεσθαι, Est manus proprium, So said Galenus) edgeth our spirits, steeleth our laces, filleth us with matter, furnisheth us with words, doth all our work for us. When I first came into this city (said Calvin, upon his death bed, in his speech to his fellow ministers) I found all out of frame, and met with many malicious opposites. But our Lord Christ so settled and strengthened me, who by nature (to speak truth) am easily daunted, ut nullis illorum conatibus cesserim, that I stoutly withstood them.

Ver. 23. Whose soever sins ye remit, &c.] Remission of sin is the chief benefit of the gospel: and for the creed (which is the sum of the gospel) all the former articles are perfected in that of "remission of sins"; and all the following articles are effects of it. Now none can remit sins, but God; to speak properly. Papists tell us of one that could remove mountains, but to remit sins is peculiar to God alone. Man may remit the trespass, but God only the transgression. Howbeit ministers may, and in some cases must, "declare unto man his righteousness," #Job 33:23; pronounce, in Christ's name, the truly penitent righteous in God's sight, by Christ's righteousness freely imputed and given unto them. They must also retain, by the same authority, and bind upon impenitent sinners (so continuing) their sins to destruction, "Having in a readiness to revenge all disobedience," #2Co 10:6. This we may do, as ministers, and more we claim not.

Ver. 24. But Thomas, one of the twelve] A man cannot be wilfully absent from the public assemblies but once, without great danger and damage. Thomas was absent perhaps about some weighty cause. It may be he lurked and lay close for fear of the Jews; or it may be he was providing, and settling his own private affairs, now his Master was slain; but whatever the cause was, the effect was grievous; he was woefully hardened.

Ver. 25. I will not believe] Ah, wilful Thomas (quoth Mr Bradford, martyr); I will not, saith he: so adding to his incredulity, obstinace. But yet Christ appeared unto him, and would not lose him, &c.

Ver. 26. The doors being shut] Although it be said, that when Christ came to his disciples the doors were shut, yet have I as much to prove that the doors opened at his coming, as ye to prove that he came through the door, said Robert Smith, martyr, to the doctor that disputed with him.

Ver. 27. Then saith he to Thomas] Who was not excommunicated by the rest, but gently borne with, till Christ should cure him. Neither did he forsake their meetings, though he believed not their relation. It is good to stand in Christ's way, to be found at the foddering place, #So 1:8. But some, like spiritual vagabonds, as Cain, excammunicate themselves from God's presence, in the use of the means; we may write, Lord, have mercy upon such, as utterly deplored.

Ver. 28. My Lord and my God] This is true faith indeed, that individuates God, and appropriates him to itself. {a} Were it not for this possessive "mine," the devil might say the creed to as good purpose as we. He believes there is a God and a Christ; but that which torments him is, he can say "my" to never an article of the faith.

Ver. 29. Blessed are they that have not seen] We see Christ in the flesh by the eyes of the apostles; like as the Israelites saw Canaan by the eyes of the spies; and this is sufficient unto faith, as the evangelist showeth in the next verses.

Ver. 30. And many other signs, &c.] If Cicero could say of Socrates (whose words Plato had recorded), and could request the like of his readers, concerning Lucius Crassus, that they would imagine much more good of them than they found written; how much more might St John do the same concerning Christ!

Ver. 31. These things are written] He speaks this of the writ of the other three evangelists also. Matthew wrote his Gospel eight years after Christ, Mark 10, Luke 15, and John 42, in the days of Trajan. He died in the 101st year of his own age.

Ver. 1. After these things Jesus showed himself] Some have been of the opinion that this chapter was not written by John (because he concluded his history in the end of the last chapter), but added by some other, as the last chapter of Deuteronomy was to Moses' writings. These should have observed, that in the former chapter those arguments only are set down by the evangelist that happened at Jerusalem for the manifestation of Christ's resurrection; as in this chapter, those whereby he approved the truth of his resurrection in Galilee also, according to his promise, #Mt 26:32; that they might believe and remember that Jesus Christ of the seed of David was verily raised from the dead according to the gospel, #2Ti 2:8: this being a doctrine of greatest consequence and comfort, #1Co 15:4. Peter thought himself sufficiently assured of it, and therefore said, I go a fishing; but he was deceived, and needed further confirmation.

Ver. 2. There were met together Simon, &c.] When good and godly men meet, when chaste and honest people assemble together, it is not to be called a faction, but a court rather, saith Tertullian. <sup>{a}</sup> Those are a faction, that conspire against good men. The society of such is like the slime and filth that is congealed where many toads and other vermin join together. God dwells in the assembly of saints; shall we, like stoics, confine ourselves, and not daily run into their company? He that comes when ointments and sweet spices are stirring, doth carry away some of the sweet savour, though he think not of it: so here. See #Pr 13:10.

Ver. 3. I go a fishing, &c.] Being not yet employed in the public ministry, he would not be idle, and that he might not be chargeable to the Church. This life is in Isaiah called, "The life of our hands," because it is to be maintained by the labour of our hands. We are to earn ere we eat, #2Th 3:8. Res age tutus eris. Undertake wil will be safe to do. Ovid.

And that night they caught nothing] Labour we never so hard, unless God bless it, and stop that hole in the bottom of the bag, #Hag 1:6, those secret issues and drains of expense, at which men's estates run out, we shall be forced to say with Severus the emperor, Omnia feci et nihil profuit. Everything I have done and nothing profited. (Spartian.)

Ver. 4. But when the morning] Mourning lasteth but till morning, #Ps 30:5. Flebile principium melior fortuna sequetur, Poor beginnings come before better fortune, said Queen Elizabeth, when she was to be sent to the Tower.

Ver. 5. Children, have ye any meat?] This he saith as seeming to be some housekeeper, who passing by fishermen, calls to them, as willing to buy their fish for the use of his family. Galeacius Caracciolus, that noble marquis of Vico (that left all for Christ, preferring the blessing of God before the world's warm sun), would go into the market at Geneva and cater for his household; grieving for nothing more than that he had not wherewithal to keep a better house for the relief of the poor. And in that respect only he wished himself as great a man at Geneva as he was in Italy. (His Life by Crashaw.)

Ver. 6. Cast the net on the right side, &c.] This counsel he gives as a stranger, who haply might see a confluence of fish there, being on the shore, which they in the ship saw not. They obey him therefore, as content to lose one labour more, if it must be so; they knew not what another draught might produce. It is good to be doing in God's way: sooner or later success will ensue. Bind not the Lord to a day; wake not my beloved till he please; he will pay us for all our pains and patience. Consider but our, 1. distance, 2. dependence, and we will wait.

Ver. 7. Therefore that disciple, &c.] Now they see the cause why, till then, they caught nothing was, that they might the better know him to be the Lord. God will one day let us see that he in very faithfulness afflicts us; and that however it seems so for a season, it is not in vain to have sought his face. John knew not our Saviour by sight here, but by the multitude of fishes that came to hand by his direction. The Rochellers might easily see as much, when they were miraculously relieved by that shoal of shell fish cast upon their shore in a strait siege, whereby their city was miraculously preserved.

Ver. 8. And the other disciples came, &c.] They came all to Christ, but Peter sooner; he cast away all care of his fish, having the Lord to go to. It is best to be first and forwardest in a good matter; not only to make a shift to get to heaven, but to have an abundant entrance thereinto, to come bravely into the haven, by adding one grace to another, as Peter hath it, #2Pe 1:2,11. It is a low and unworthy strain in some (saith one) to labour after no more grace than will keep life and soul together, that is, soul and hell asunder. But that man for heaven, and heaven for him, that sets up for his mark, "the resurrection of the dead," #Php 3:11, that is, by a metonymy of the subject for the adjunct, that perfection of holiness that accompanieth the state of the resurrection. Paul was Insatiabilis Dei cultor, insatiable worrshipper of God, saith Chrysostom.

Ver. 9. And fish laid thereon and bread] A feast of Christ's own providing; to assure them that they should never lack necessaries; superfluties they may want without prejudice. Nature is content with a little, grace with less. Luther dined often with a herring, Junius with an egg; as knowing, that they were not to live to eat, but eat to live. Ill doth it become a servant of the Highest to be a slave to his palate. Epicurus dum palato quid sit optimum iudicat, caeli palatium non suspexit, saith Ennius.

Ver. 10. Which ye have now caught] He saith not, Which I have caused you to catch. God is pleased to say, for our encouragement, that we do such and such good works, when it is he that doth all our works, in us and for us. Certum est nos facere quod facimus, sed ille tacit ut faciamus. (Aug.) The bowls of the candlestick had no oil but that which dropped from the olive branches.

Ver. 11. Yet was not the net broke] When God will bless a man, all second causes shall cooperate and contribute their help. As when he will cross us, the strongest sinew in the arms of flesh shall crack, our likeliest projects miscarry; he will curse our blessings, blast our proceedings, as King John confessed, "ever since I was forgiven and subject to the see of Rome, I never prospered." {a} Oto, one of the pope's muscipulatores, mice catchers, as the story calls them, sent hither by Gregory IX, after three years' raking together of money by most detestable arts, at last departing hence, he left not so much money in the kingdom as he either carried with him or sent to Rome before him. Such notable fishers are Peter's pretended successors; all is fish with them that comes to net.

Ver. 12. None of the disciples durst ask him] They were ashamed to move further question in that which was to them all so evident. Neither yet may we imagine that they sat silent all dinner while in their Master's presence, as monks and Turks use to do; {a} but that, although they were abashed to ask him who he was, yet they both asked and answered many other more profitable questions. Our Saviour never came to any man's table, but he besprinkled the dishes with the salt of savoury discourse; so should we, but so (alas) we do not. Plato and Xenophon thought it fit and profitable that men's speeches at meals should be written. And if Christians should so do, what kind of books would they be?

Ver. 13. Taketh bread and giveth them] As his manner was before his death, and with his usual form of grace before eating, by the which those two that had his company to Emmaus knew him, #Lu 24:35. Those that receive not the creatures with thanksgiving are worse than heathens, #1Ti 4:4. The Greek word for a dinner comes of another word that signifieth prayers, which they usually premised to their repasts. {a} Hesiod gives this precept, Eat not of a dish that hath not first been offered in sacrifice. {b} An elegant and pious precept, saith Melancthon, drawn no doubt from the holy patriarchs. The people would not taste of their good cheer till Samuel had blessed it, #1Sa 9:13. And Moses bade them eat and drink before the Lord. Mine oxen and fatlings are prepared, saith that king, #Mt 22:4. It is in the original, are sacrificed, τεθυμενα. So was Nebuchadnezzar's good cheer, which therefore Daniel would not taste of.

Ver. 14. This is now the third time, &c.] Adam died, and we hear no more of him; not so the second Adam. "If a man die, shall he live again?" #Job 14:14. Not till the general resurrection surely. Many devices there are in the minds of some, that there shall be a first resurrection of the martyrs only, and that they shall reign on earth a thousand years. Alsted saith, this thousand years shall begin in the year 1694. But these, saith a divine, are but the mistakes of some high expressions in Scripture; which describe the judgments poured out upon God's enemies in making a way to the Jews' conversion by the pattern of the last judgment. (Cotton upon the Seven Vials.)

Ver. 15. Lovest thou me more than these?] As thou hast not spared to profess and promise (for when the rest said nothing, Peter said he would lay down his life for him), and as thou now pretendest, by casting thyself into the sea, to come first to me.

Thou knowest that I love thee] Being asked of the measure, he only answereth of the truth, q.d. for the quantity I can say little, but for the truth I dare affirm. The upright are perfect in God's account. And Peter had now turned his crowing into crying.

Feed my lambs] These were his first care. The Syriac addeth, ܠܝ li, mihi, feed them for me. And Drusius reckons this among the eastern apothegms, Quicquid agas, propter Deum agas. Whatsoever thou doest, do it for God's sake. Propter te Domino, propter te, was a godly man's motto; it should be every minister's especially.

Ver. 16. Feed my sheep] That is, Supremum is Ecclesia Dominium tibi assere. Lord it over the Church, saith Baronius. Regio more impera, reign as a king, saith Bellarmine. Christ, on the contrary, saith, The kings of nations exercise dominion over them, but ye shall not do so. And Peter himself saith to his fellow elders, Feed the flock of God, not as lording it over God's heritage, #1Pe 5:2,3. Indeed ποιμαίνω, here used, sometimes signifies to govern (usually to feed), but βοσκω, the other word twice used here in this text, always signifies to feed. But they catch at government, let go feeding. It is as rare a thing to hear a bishop preach among them, said Dr. Bassinet, as to see an ass fly. Fisco potius apud multos consulitur quam Christo; attonsiona potius gregis quam attentioni.

Ver. 17. Jesus saith unto him the third time] To confirm him doubtless against the consciousness of his three-fold denial, and to re-authorize him in his apostleship.

Lovest thou me?] A minister had need have his heart inflamed with a most ardent affection to Christ; for else he will never suffer that hardship devour those difficulties, and get over all those impediments that he is sure to be encumbered with. The ministry, believe it, is not an idle man's occupation, he must preach the word, be instant in season, out of season, &c., cry in the throat ( Clamare ut Stentora vincat), lift up his voice like a trumpet, speak till he spit forth his lungs, and yet to no more purpose many times than Beda did when he preached to a heap of stones. Now this he will never do, unless the love of Christ constrain him, #2Co 5:14 cf. 1Co 16:22.

Peter was grieved] Either in remembrance of his former false play; or else, as thinking our Saviour somewhat distrusted his fidelity; or else, surely, he was as much to blame to be grieved, as David was to be angry, when God had made a breach upon Uzzah, #2Sa 6:8.

Feed my sheep] My sheep with golden fleeces, with precious souls; every soul being more worth than a world, as our Saviour reckons it, who only went to the price of it, #Mt 16:26. Can that be wholesome meat then that is sauced with the blood of souls? Will it not be bitterness in the end?

Ver. 18. Another shall gird thee] That is, cord thee, manacle and pinion thee, carry thee prisoner whither thou wouldst not. Peter would, and he would not, suffer. Every new man is two men, hath two contrary principles in him, flesh and spirit. The spirit is willing, the flesh weak and wayward. This made the martyrs many of them chide themselves, and crave prayers of others. Bishop Ridley said to the smith, as he was knocking in the staple, Good fellow, knock it in hard, for the flesh will have its course. So Rawlins White, martyr, going to the stake, and meeting with his wife and children, the sudden sight of them so pierced his heart, that the very tears trickled down his cheeks. But he soon after, as though he had disliked this infirmity of his flesh, began to be as it were angry with himself, insomuch that in striking his breast with his hand, he used these words, Ah flesh, stayest thou me so? wouldst thou fain prevail? well, I tell thee, do what thou canst, thou shalt not, by God's grace, have the victory. So Latimer in a letter to Bishop Ridley, Pray for me, I say; pray for me, I say; for I am sometimes so fearful that I would creep into a mouse hole; sometimes God doth visit me again with his comforts; so he cometh and goeth, to teach me to feel and know my infirmity.

Ver. 19. By what death he should glorify God] Martyrdom is the lowest subjection that can be to God, but the highest honour. Vere magnus est Deus Christianorum; The God of the Christians is a great God indeed, said one Calocerius, a heathen, beholding the patient sufferings of the primitive martyrs. Justin Martyr confesseth of himself, that seeing the piety of Christians in their lives and their patience in death, he gathered that that was the truth that they so constantly professed and sealed up with their blood. And of one Adrianus it is reported, that seeing the martyrs suffer such grievous things, he asked the cause; one of them named that text, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard," &c. The naming of which words and seeing of such sufferings, so converted him, that afterwards he became a martyr. To account Christ precious as a tree of life, though we be fastened to him as to a stake to be burned at, this is the greatest honour we can do him upon earth. This is to magnify Christ as Paul did, #Php 1:20; to follow Christ close at heels, as Peter did here, who also had the manner of his death foretold him, #2Pe 1:14. As had likewise Bishop Hooper, when he had given him for his arms, a lamb in a fiery bush, and the sunbeams from heaven descending down upon the lamb, rightly purporting by what death he should glorify God.

Ver. 20. Then Peter turning about] Peter, though restored and resettled in his apostleship, is not without his infirmities. They that are cured of a frensy are not without their mad tricks sometimes. <sup>{a}</sup> No pomegranate so sound but hath one rotten kernel in it. No book so well printed but hath some errata. David saw so many in himself, that he cries out, "Who can understand the errors of his life? oh purge me," &c., #Ps 19:12. They that dream of perfections here suffer a merry madness.

Ver. 21. And what shall this man do] When Peter considered that John was dearly beloved and yet not alike forewarned of suffering death, as himself was, he began to doubt whether Christ spake this of love to him or not. Nothing is more ordinary with us than to question God's affection when we are in affliction; to conceive hard things of God and heavy things of ourselves, as if no children, because chastised. Whereas we should learn to look through the anger of God's corrections, to the sweetness of his loving countenance, as by a rainbow we see the beautiful image of the sun's light in the midst of a dark and waterish cloud. (See my "Love Tokens," Doct. 2, Use 1.)

Ver. 22. If I will that he tarry] Si eum volo manere. This the Vulgate corruptly reads, Sic eum volo manere. Ambrose, Austin, Bede, Lyra, Rupert, &c., retain this reading. Trapezuntius defends it, Bessarion opposeth it, the Greek text refutes it. Yet is the Vulgate translation so extolled and idolized by the Papists, that if the originals differ from it anywhere, they must be corrected by it, and not it by the originals. Sed Hebraei bibunt fontes, Graeci rivos, Latini paludes, saith Reuchlin.

Ver. 23. Among the brethren] So are all Christians. Sanctior est copula cordis quam corporis.

That that disciple should not die] Some to this day deny that he is dead. Beza tells us of a certain impostor in his remembrance, that gave out at Paris that he was John the Evangelist, and was afterward burnt at Toulouse. Some have fabled, that after he had commanded his grave to be made, and had laid himself down in it, the next day it was found empty, and he raptured up alive into Paradise, whence he shall come together with Enoch and Elias at the last day to confound Antichrist. O quantum est in rebus inane! It is not for us to "follow cunningly devised fables," #2Pe 1:16, but to attend to that sure word of truth, as unto a light shining, &c., #Joh 21:19, accounting every particle of it precious, since the change of one letter may breed so much error and cause so much contention.

Ver. 24. This is the disciple] Not the doctor, the master, as Magistri nostri Parisienses. So the Sorbonists will needs be styled. The schoolmen have their Doctor Angelicus, Doctor Seraphicus, Doctor resolutissimus. So Bacon the Carmelite was called, because he would endure no guessing or maybes. The Italian friars, as they increase in their supposed holiness, so they proceed in their titles, from Padre Benedicto to Padre Angelo, then Archangelo, Cherubino, and lastly, Cerephino, which is the top of perfection. Our evangelist delights not in any of these swelling titles. He doth not so much as name himself in all this work of his, takes no other style than the beloved disciple, makes no more of himself than a witness to the truth, a recorder of what he had heard and seen. The proud person speaks "great swelling words of vanity," #2Pe 2:18; he loves uppermost rooms, and to be called Rabbi, Rabbi, to be cried up and pointed at for a nonesuch, #Mt 23:6. I hear, saith Tertullian (speaking of the pope, who then began to peep out), that there is a decree published in peremptory terms, Pontifex scilicet Maximus, Episcopus episcoporum, &c. I ever hated the pride of that Roman Church, saith Basil. {a} Ambition, like the crocodile, groweth while it liveth; like the ivy, which rising at the feet, will overtop the highest wall; or, like the marigold (a flower of no good smell), which opens and shuts with the sun. Humility, on the contrary, is like the lily, saith Bernard, or violet which grows low to the ground, hangs the head downward, and hides itself with its own leaves. It prefers the Euge well done of conscience before the Hic est This is of the world: and were it not that its fragrant smell betrays it to the observation of others, would choose to live and die in its well contenting secrecy.

Ver. 25. I suppose that even the world itself, &c.] Nec Christus, nec caelum patitur hyperbolen, saith one. In speaking of Christ or his kingdom, a man can hardly hyperbolize. Much had St John said of our Saviour, yet nothing to what he might have said. All that ever he did was divine, and deserved to be chronicled. That commendation that Velleius Paterculus falsely gives to Scipio, that Nihil in vita nisi laudandum aut fecit, aut dixit, aut sensit, He never in all his life did, spoke, or thought anything but what was praise worthy, is true only of Christ. That which the Ecclesiastical History relates of Bennis, that he was never seen or heard by any to swear, lie, or be rashly angry, to speak or do anything that beseemed not God's servant, is a praise proper to Christ, even as he was man. (Sozom. vi. 28.) But, consider him as God, and then that of Gratian the emperor is true, in his Epistle to St Ambrose, Loquimur de Deo, non quantum debemus, sed quantum possumus: We speak of God, not so much as we ought, but so much as we can. Nemo sapientiam Dei immensam in omnem eternitatem exhaustiet. No one will be able to exhaust the infinite wisdom of God in all eternity. He is indeed like the pool Polycritus writes of, which in compass, at the first, scarcely seemed to exceed the breadth of a shield; but if any went in it to wash, it extended itself more and more. Tantum recedit, quantum capitur; saith Nazianzen. When therefore the apostle saith,

"That the world itself could not contain the books that should be written," Hoc non vult, saith Augustine, de mole librorum, nec de locali capacitate, sed quod Spiritus Sanctus nostri habuerit rationem, et ea selegerit conscribenda, quae in hac infirmitate credentes capere possint.

Acts

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. Of all that Jesus began, &c.] If Hen. Stephanus could say of Laertius, that he wrote the lives of the philosophers aureo libello illo in that golden book of his; and (as another hath it) opere utilissimo, et auro contra non charo; { a } how much better may the same be said of the holy evangelists setting forth the oracles and miracles of Christ and his apostles! If Julius Scaliger thought twelve verses in Lucan better than the whole German empire, what high thoughts ought we to have of these divine records! In the monastery at Ratisbon is a New Testament written all in letters of gold, saith Melancthon, who saw it. (Joh. Manl. loc. com.) Gold was not good enough for such a purpose.

{a} Vos. de Hist. Graec. ii. 13.

Ver. 2. Had given commandments] As the Church's Lawgiver, #Isa 33:22 1Co 11:23.

Ver. 3. Speaking of the things] Those that are leaving the world should leave wholesome counsel to those that survive them.

Ver. 4. Wait for the promise] And put it in suit by their daily prayers, #Lu 11:13.

Ver. 5. Shall be baptized] See #Mt 3:11.

Ver. 6. Restore again] They dreamt of a distribution of honours and offices here on earth as in the days of David and Solomon.

Ver. 7. It is not for you] This key God carries under his own girdle.

Ver. 8. After that the Holy Ghost is come upon you] Montanus the heresiarch wickedly affirmed that, next unto the apostles, this Scripture was fulfilled upon him and his courtesan Philumena. (Beza in loc.) Prodigious blasphemy! And eiusdem farinae, a loaf of the same leaven it is, that the Turks believe that when Christ said that "although he departed, he would send the Comforter," it was added in the text, "And that shall be Mahomet"; but that the Christians in malice toward them have razed it out. (Abbot's Geog.)

Ver. 9. And a cloud] Look not therefore for revelations from heaven (saith Aretius), but search the Scriptures, for those are they that testify of Christ.

Ver. 10. Looked stedfastly] Or intently, ατενίζοντες: wistly, as taken with that sweet sight. {See Trapp on "Mt 28:7"}

Ver. 11. Shall so come] De tempore ne quire, not a word of the time when, in answer to that overly curious question, #Ac 1:6. Solomon's temple was finished in the year of the world 3000; whether Christ's shall be consummated in 3000 more, I have not to say.

Ver. 12. From the mount] Near unto which he had been apprehended, viz. at Bethany, and from whence he had thus triumphantly ascended up on high, leading captivity captive, &c., #Eph 4:8, and making an open show of his conquered enemies as a public spectacle of scorn and derision, εδεγματοισεν, #Col 2:15. In which respect, how well might this mount Olivet have received that name of Nicatorium, {a} which Alexander the Great gave to a certain Mountain not far from Arbela, as a constant trophy of that famous victory that he there got over Darius, with whom he fought for the empire of the world.

Ver. 13. They went into an upper room] {a} As most remote from company, and so fittest for God's service. In Madrid it is a custom, that except some composition be made, all the upper rooms of their dwellings belong to the king. (Heyl. Geog.) Let the spirits of our minds be reserved for God.

{a} υπερωον superior pars domus Spartanorum lingua. Eustath.

Ver. 14. With the women] Who might make masculine prayers, having eyes like the pools in Heshbon, #So 7:4.

Ver. 15. The number of names] Nominum, id est, hominum, or of the chieftains that were fit to act in the election.

Ver. 16. Brethren] Not underlings, as Popish bishops, who must say Placet It is pleasing, to that which in the pope's name is proposed to them.

Ver. 18. And all his bowels gushed out] Because he had no bowels of compassion toward his Master, he burst in the midst with a huge crack (as the word ελακησε signifieth), by a singular judgment of God. So Foxford, chancellor to the bishop of London, a cruel persecutor in Henry VIII's time, died suddenly in his chair; his belly being burst and his guts falling out before him. So Arius voiding out his bowels, sent his soul as a harbinger to the devil to provide room for his body. Papias (that ancient millenary, scholar to St John) tells us ( In Traditionibus quas vocant Apostolicis), that Judas having hanged himself, the rope broke, and he lived some time after, and was crushed to death by the fall of a cart that was to pass by him; but this is a mere fiction of his, and it gives us cause to credit Eusebius, who saith that this Papias, though much revered for opinion of his holiness and learning, yet was homo ingenii pertenuis, a slender-witted man.

Ver. 19. In their proper tongue] i.e. In the Syriac tongue; for the Jews in the Babylonish captivity lost their language.

Ver. 20. In the book of Psalms] That common magazine of wholesome lessons, as Basil hath it. {a}

{a} κοινον ταμειον αγαθων διδαγματων

Ver. 21. Wherefore of these] To make up the breach again; like as the crowned saints fill up the room in heaven of the apostate angels.

Ver. 22. Must one be ordained] To answer the ancient types.

Ver. 23. Joseph called Barsabas] The centurists think that this Joseph Barsabas was the same with that Joses called Barnabas afterwards by the apostles, #Ac 4:36. This Joseph, seeing it was God's mind not to make choice of him now to succeed Judas in the apostleship, was content with a lower condition; therefore afterwards God called him to that high and honourable office of an apostle.

Ver. 24. Which knowest the hearts] Thales Milesius, qui sapientissimus inter septem fuisse creditur; interrogatus num lateret Deos iniuste agens? respondit, Ne cogitans quidem. Thales being asked whether evil deeds are hidden from God? answered, No, nor evil thoughts either.

Ver. 25. Go to his own place] A place of his own providing; and that he had purchased with that wages of wickedness, #Ac 1:18. Bellarmine tells us of a desperate advocate in the court of Rome, who being exhorted on his death bed to make his peace with God, made this speech to him; Lord, I have a word to say to thee, not for myself, but for my wife and children, Ego enim propero ad inferos, neque est ut aliquid pro me agas; for I am hasting to hell, neither is there anything that I would beg of thee in my own behalf. And this he spake, saith Bellarmine (who was by the while), as boldly and without fear, as if he had been but to take his journey only to some near neighbouring village.

Ver. 26. They gave forth their lot] Either into the bosom, #Pr 16:23, or lap, or pot, or some other vessel in use for that purpose.

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. And when the day of Pentecost] This feast was instituted in remembrance of the law delivered to Moses in the mount, fifty days after their departure out of Egypt. Answerably whereunto the Holy Ghost (and God's love thereby, #Ro 5:5) is sent out and shed abroad the 50th day after that Christ our Passover was sacrificed for us, #1Co 5:7.

Ver. 2. As of a rushing mighty wind] Nescit tarda molimina gratia Spiritus Sancti, saith Ambrose. "The Spirit of God is a spirit of power," #2Ti 1:7.

Ver. 3. Cloven tongues] Teaching them both ορθοτομειν, to divide the word aright, and also ορθοποδειν, as some will have it; their tongues being cloven, as their feet were into toes, teaching them too to foot it aright. Diodorus Siculus tells us of a certain island beyond Arabia, the inhabitants whereof have cloven tongues, so that therewith they can alter their speech at their pleasure, imitate the tunes of various birds, and (which is more strange) they can perfectly speak to two persons and to two purposes at once; to one with one part of their tongue and to another with the other part; Sed fides sit penes Authorem, believe it who will.

Ver. 4. As the Spirit gave them utterance] αποφθεγγεσθαι, to utter divine apothegms, grave and gracious sentences, or rather oracles; those Magnalia Dei, great things of God, #Ac 2:11 Mirabilia legis, Great things of the law, #Ps 119:18. {#2Pe 1:21} Cedro digna et Cerite cera. Horat.

And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost] And so gifted for their offices and employments in the Church. The heathens tell us that Hesiod, being filled with a sudden inspiration by the Muses, became of a sordid neatherd a most skilful poet. And Cicero saith, no man ever grew famous sine aliquo afflatu divino, without some inbreathing from on high.

Ver. 5. And there were dwelling, &c.] Even in Jerusalem (for their ancient idolatries and latter unthankfulness) there be not to be found at this time a hundred households of the Jews. (Breerwood's Inquiries.)

Ver. 6. Were confounded] Or troubled, transported, amazed, and amused, συνεχυθη, as #Ac 2:7.

Ver. 7. Galileans]— crassoque sub aere nati. (Martial.)

Ver. 8. Every man in our our tongue] Cleopatra was so skilful in the Eastern tongues that she could readily answer the Ethiopian, Hebrew, Arabian, Syrian, Median, Parthian ambassadors that came unto her; turning and tuning her tongue with ease (as an instrument of many strings, {a} saith Plutarch) to what dialect soever she listed.

{a} ὡσπερ ὄργανον τι πολυχόρδον

Ver. 9. Parthians and Medes, &c.] Those strangers of the dispersion, #1Pe 1:1.

Ver. 10. Proselytes] Jethro was the first proselyte to the Jewish Church that we read of in Scripture.

Ver. 12. The wonderful works] The magnificent, majestic things of God; they praised him according to his excellent greatness, #Ps 150:2.

What meaneth this?] Gr. "What will this be, or come to?" {a} And here began their conversion. Let none "despise the day of small things," #Zec 4:10: God put little thoughts into Ahasuerus's head, but for great purposes, #Es 6:1. The word falls often upon men's ears, "as the sound of many waters" at first, working wonder only. Next "as the voice of thunder," working fear also, as it did on these here, #Ac 2:37. Lastly, as the harmony of harpers, filling the heart with peace and joy through believing, as one observeth from #Re 14:1-5

{a} τι ἀν ἑλεῖται τοῦτο εἶναι

Ver. 13. Others mocking, said, These men, &c.] χλευάζοντες, contumeliously cavilling, as those epicures at Athens did, #Ac 17:32. And that mocker, Doctor Morgan, who being set to examine Mr Philpot, martyr, asked him, How know you that you have the Spirit of God? Philpot answered, By the faith of Christ which is in me. Ah, by faith, do you so? (quoth Morgan). I think it is the spirit of the buttry, which your fellows have had that have been burned before you, who were drunk before they went to their death, and I think went drunk unto it. Philpot replied: It appeareth by your communication that you are better acquainted with the spirit of buttery than with the Spirit of God. Thou hast the spirit of illusion and sophistry, which is not able to countervail the Spirit of truth. And God, I tell thee, shall rain fire and brimstone upon such scornors of his word and blasphemers of his people as thou art, &c.

Ver. 14. But Peter standing up] (σταθεις, consistens.) Buckling close to them, and not suffering them to carry it away so; Constantem et praesentem Petri animum declarat. Beza.

Ver. 15. Seeing it is but the third hour] This was then an argument more than probable. Now men are grown such husbands, as that by that time they will return their stocks, and have their brains crowing before day.

Ver. 16. But this is that] Thus the Old Testament is fulfilled in the New.

Ver. 17. In the last days] God keeps his best till last. Not so the devil.

I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh] The best thing upon the basest. Oh, wonderful goodness!

Ver. 18. And on mine handmaids] Souls have no sexes, #Ga 3:28.

Ver. 19. Wonders in heaven] See #Joe 3:15 Mt 24:29 Mr 13:24 Lu 21:25.

Ver. 20. The sun shall be turned] He seems to set forth the great troubles of the world under the gospel.

Ver. 21. Shall be saved] Therefore to be able to pray is better than to be able to prophesy, #Mt 7:22.

Ver. 22. A man] From Adam, but not by Adam.

Ver. 23. And by wicked hands, &c.] Facinus vincire civem Romanum, It is a crime to bind a Roman citizen, saith the orator. It was much (may we say) for the Son of God to be bound, more to be beaten, most of all to be slain. Quid dicam in cruce[m] tolli? Let me say what is destroyed in the cross. (Cicero in Ver.)

Ver. 24. It was not possible] For he was life essential, and therefore "swallowed up death in victory," #1Co 15:54.

Him being delivered by the determinate counsel of God] Quod dum devitatur impletur, saith Gregory. The wicked's intense rage carries on God's decree against their wills; for while they sit backward to his command, they row forward to his decree; dum sun cuique Deus fit dira libido.

Ver. 25. Be moved] Tossed as a ship by tempest.

Ver. 26. My tongue] Heb. "my glory." With the tongue bless we God, #Jas 3:9, which is the best way of ennobling it.

Ver. 27. My soul in hell] That is, my body in the grave. So #Re 20:13. Death and hell, i.e. the grave, are cast into the burning lake. To the three degrees of our Saviour's humiliation, are answerable the three degrees of his exaltation: to his death, his resurrection; to his burial, his ascension; to his abode a while in the grave, his sitting at the right hand of his heavenly Father.

Ver. 28. Thou hast made known] i.e. Thou givest me experience, or thou hast made me partaker of.

Ver. 29. His sepulchre is with us] Repaired, likely, when the city was rebuilt. See #Mt 23:29.

Ver. 30. Out of the fruit of his loins] That is, out of the Virgin Mary; the son of whose womb Christ was, being hewn without hands out of that mountain, #Da 2:45.

Ver. 31. Neither his flesh] It was a pious error in those good women that embalmed his body to preserve it from corruption.

Ver. 32. Hath God raised up] Adam died, and we hear no more of him; but the second Adam rose and reigneth for ever.

Ver. 33. Exalted] {See Trapp on "Ac 2:27"}

Ver. 34. Is not ascended] viz. Bodily, and to sit at God's right hand as King of the Church: that is Christ's royalty.

Ver. 35. Thy footstool] They that will not bend shall break; Christ will fetch in his rebels, and set his feet of fine brass on the necks of them, #Re 1:15.

Ver. 36. Lord and Christ] Messiah the Prince, #Da 9:25.

Ver. 37. They were pricked] Punctually pricked and pierced (κατενογησαν). They felt the nails wherewith they had crucified Christ sticking fast in their own hearts, as so many sharp daggers or stings of scorpions, #2Co 12:7. Sin is set forth by a word that signifieth the head of a bearded arrow sticking in the flesh (σκολοψ). After Socrates was put to death at Athens, Aristophanes rehearsed a tragedy of his concerning Palamedes, who had been executed by the Grecians long before, at the siege of Troy. In this tragedy were these verses, {a}

“Ye have slain, ye have slain of Greeks the very best,
(All me) that never any did infest.”

The people at the hearing of these lines were so moved that they presently fell upon the authors of Socrates’ death, and drew them forth to punishment. Oh, that we could be as nimble to apprehend and be avenged upon our sins, the cause of Christ’s death.

Ver. 38. Peter said unto them, Repent] μετανοησατε. Hence then they had not yet repented, for all they were pricked at heart. Nay, Peter prescribes it for a remedy, which taxeth their folly that take the disease for the remedy, and are overly forward to minister comfort or ever men have sorrowed after God, and to a transmentation. The English are not sick soon enough, saith one, and they are well again too soon. It is true of their minds, as well as of their bodies, Currat ergo poenitentia, ne praecurrat sententia; and let our fasts be according to an old canon, which defines their continuance usque dum stellae in, caelo appareant, till stars be seen in the sky. It is not for men to scarf up their wounds till they are thoroughly searched, not to get out of the furnace of mortification till their hearts melt, as Josiah’s did, and fall asunder in their bosoms, like drops of water. Penitence and pain are words of one derivation, and very near of kin. Never was any wound cured without sensible pain: never any sin healed without soaking sorrow. Let none dream of a delicacy in the ways of God; nor hope for sound comfort, till they have thoroughly repented. The Hebrews, as they express sin and punishment by the same word, so do they repentance and comfort, נחם.

Ver. 39. Even as many] The devil sweeps all (of maturity) that are not called, as out of the covenant.

Ver. 40. With many words did he testify] διεμαρτυρητο, in God’s name, for his sake, and by his authority, as Paul charged Timothy, #2Ti 2:14, and as Bradford spoke to his friend: I beseech you, I pray you, I desire you, I crave at your hands with all my very heart. I ask of you with hand, pen, tongue, and mind; in Christ, through Christ, for Christ; for his name, blood, mercy, power, and truth’s sake, that you admit no doubting of God’s final mercies toward you, howsoever you feel yourself.

Ver. 41. Were baptized] They gave up their names to Christ, and took his mark upon them.

Ver. 42. Doctrine and fellowship] So the Philippians, #Php 1:5. {See Trapp on "Php 1:5"}

Ver. 43. Fear came upon] The enemies were overawed, and dared not moot or attempt against the Church.

Ver. 44. Were together] There is a special tie to constancy in the communion of saints and community of supplies.

And had all things common] This was voluntary, not necessary. Non fuit praeceptum, sed susceptum, saith Piscator.

Ver. 45. And sold] So Tyre when once converted, #Isa 23:17,18.

Ver. 46. Breaking bread] Friendly feeding together, and (after their love feasts) celebrating the Lord's Supper every Lord's day at least: whence it was anciently called Panis Hebdomadarius. {a} That of George Tankerfield, a martyr in Queen Mary's days, was singular and extraordinary. For when the hour drew on that he should suffer, he called for a pint of Malmsey and a loaf, that he might eat and drink that in remembrance of Christ's death and passion, because he could not have it ministered unto him by others, in such manner as Christ commanded. And then he kneeled down, making his confession to the Lord, with all which were in the chamber with him. And after that he had prayed to the Lord, and had read the institution of the holy Supper by the Lord Jesus, out of the evangelists, and out of St Paul, he said: O Lord, thou knowest I do not this to derogate authority from any man, or in contempt of those which are thy ministers; but only because I cannot have it ministered according to thy word. And when he had so spoken, he received it with thanksgiving.

Ver. 47. Such as should be saved] Heirs of the kingdom, #Jas 2:5. Heads destined to the diadem, saith Tertullian.

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. At the hour of prayer] The Jews had their stata precibus tempora, set hours of prayer. See #Ps 55:17 Da 6:10 Ac 10:3,30.

Ver. 2. To ask alms] This ought not to have been suffered, #De 15:7,8 There might not be a beggar in Israel. But all was out of order, as it useth to be among a people nigh to destruction.

Ver. 3. Asked an alms] The Dutch beggars ask not, but look pitifully.

Ver. 4. Look on us] Together with this word there went forth a power, as #Lu 5:17.

Ver. 5. Expecting] God was better to him than his expectation. God presseth kindness upon his suitors, and heapeth it upon them, as Naaman upon Gehazi, #2Ki 5:22,23.

Ver. 6. Silver and gold have I none] The newelected pope, in his solemn Lateran procession, must take copper out of his chamberlain's lap, and scatter it among the people, saying, Gold and silver have I none. Whenas Petrarch writeth that when Pope John XXII died, his heirs found in his treasury 250 tons of gold. And when Pope Boniface VIII was taken and plundered by Philip the Fair, king of France, there was more store of treasure carried out of his palace than all the kings of the earth could show again, saith the historian. Every pope hath the sign of the cross on his pantofle shining gloriously with pearls and precious stones, ut plenis faucibus crucem Christi derideat, saith mine author in derision of Christ's cross. (Heidelfield.)

Ver. 7. His feet and ankle bones] "The Lord raiseth them that are crooked," but (as a further favour, and far better than that former) "he loveth the righteous," #Ps 146:8, as he did this cripple, whom he healed on the inside also.

Ver. 8. Into the temple] There to hang up his crutches, as it were.

Walking and leaping] Weak Christians are commonly most affectionate, as this cripple when first cured leaped for joy.

Ver. 9. Praising God] Not the apostles. We may pay the messenger, but return thanks chiefly to the sender.

Ver. 10. And they knew] There could be therefore no collusion.

Ver. 11. Held Peter and John] Fearing perhaps lest, if he should lose them, he should lose his limbs again. So that demoniac, #Mr 5:18.

Ver. 12. Why look ye] We are ready to pay our rent to a wrong landlord.

Ver. 13. Denied him] Crying out, We have no king but Caesar, #Joh 19:15

Ver. 14. But ye denied] This he again beats upon, and drives home to the head.

Ver. 15. And killed] Wherein they were but our workmen, #Zec 12:10.

Ver. 16. And his name] That is, Christ himself, as God's name is often put for God's self.

Ver. 17. I wot that through ignorance] Peter excuseth not their fact, but thus far forth mitigateth it, that it was not the sin against the Holy Ghost, which can never be forgiven. This must be carefully cautioned, and the weak informed that they despair not. This irremissible sin is wilful blaspheming of God, and the work of his Spirit, out of revenge, #Heb 10:29; a will to crucify Christ again.

Ver. 18. By the mouth of all his prophets] All the prophets spake but with one mouth; such a sweet consent and happy harmony there is in all their writings, as if done by one only.

Ver. 19. Repent and be converted] The first word comprehendeth contrition and confession. The second, faith and reformation. The first, repentance for sin; the second, repentance from sin. Da poenitentiam, et postea indulgentiam, said dying Fulgentius.

Ver. 20. Preached unto you] Or handed to you, or put into your hands, προκεχειρισμενον.

Ver. 21. Whom the heavens must receive until, &c.] Note this against the Ubiquitaries, whose error was first broached by Gerson, about the time of the Council of Constance. Afterwards, defended at Paris by Jacobus Faber Stapulensis, A. D. 1524, who was therefore banished the next year out of France. (Scultet. Annul.) But Luther brought it into Germany, Brentins stickled for it, and Smidelinus obtruded it upon many, even against their wills; and was therefore called the apostle of the Ubiquity. The author of the Practice of Piety thus distinguisheth: Secundum esse naturale Christus non est ubique, secundum esse personale Christus est ubique, even the body of Christ. It was objected as a heresy against Thomas Man, martyr, that he had affirmed, That the Father of heaven was the altar, and the second person the sacrament: and that upon the Ascension Day, the sacrament ascended upon the altar, and there abideth still. But what an audacious heretic is he that writes of the "mortality of the soul," to interpret this place thus, "The heavens must contain him," that is, he "must be in the sun"; for he holds that there is no heaven till the resurrection.

Until the times of restitution] This Plato hammered at in his great revolution; when, after many thousands of years, all things shall be again statu quo prius, as they were at first.

Ver. 22. Like unto me] 1. A man, as I am. 2. A prophet, and more than a prophet, the archprophet, to whom Moses must bow.

Ver. 23. Shall be destroyed] As it justly befell the refractory Jews; wrath came upon them to the uttermost, #1Th 2:16.

Ver. 24. All the prophets] The prophet Isaiah especially, who speaks more like an evangelist than a prophet, and is therefore called the "evangelical prophet" (Jerome).

Ver. 25. Ye are the children] Here he comforts them, being now cast down.

Ver. 26. To bless you] #Eph 1:3.

Chapter 4

Ver. 1. The captain of the temple] The Jews had a band of garrison soldiers deputed for the service and safety of the temple, #Mt 27:65. These forces had many officers, #Lu 22:4, and one chieftain, here called their captain, στρατηγος; as in their wars with the Romans afterwards, Eleazar the son of Ananias the high priest was in this office, a bold and proud youth, as Josephus describeth him.

Ver. 2. Being grieved] Being sick of the devil's disease, as Moab was, #Nu 22:3,4 "fretting and vexing" at God's Israel, and eating up their own hearts, because they could not tear out theirs.

Ver. 3. Put them in hold] In the sergeant's ward, τηρησις, not in the jail or dungeon. God doth by degrees inure his to suffer hardship. Pauciores (saith Cajuto in an epistle to the brethren of Basilea) vobiscum perimuntur, quod ita Domino visum est, ut stabiliantur seu lenibus pluviis, et sementis mollioribus plantulae in arbores maximas proditurae. God tempteth not his above what they are able, #1Co 10:13.

Ver. 4. And the number] A goodly increase. The lily is said to be increased by its own juice that flows from it. (Pliny.) So the Church.

Ver. 5. On the morrow] Malice is restless. Stephen Gardiner would not sit down to dinner till he had heard of the bishops burnt at Oxford.

Ver. 6. And Annas] The same old man, still no changeling, ηη παλαι γυνη, as it was said of Helena.

Ver. 7. By what power] God's, or the devil's? in God's name, or by the black art?

Ver. 8. Filled with the Holy Ghost] i.e. with wisdom and fortitude, according to Christ's promise, #Mt 10:19,20 Lu 21:15. {See Trapp on "Mt 10:19"} {See Trapp on "Mt 10:20"}

Ver. 9. If we this day be examined of the good deed] q.d. Evil times we must needs say they are, when good deeds and evil are dangerous alike; when to cure or to kill is equally criminal. "Should I not visit for these things, saith the Lord?" &c. Bede said of the ancient Britons, immediately before their destruction by the Saxons, that they were come to that height of wickedness, as to cast an odium upon pious and profitable persons, tanquam in adversarios, as if they had been public enemies, not fit to be endured.

Ver. 10. Be it known unto you all] Here was spiritual mettle, steeling the soul against whatsoever opposition. When a man's strength would fall loose, the spirit hems him about, comprehends and keeps him together, #Ac 20:22, and makes him more than a man: as it did the apostles here, and afterwards Athanasius, Luther, others, and qui totius orbis impetum sustinuerunt, who stood out against a world of adversaries. (Tertul.)

Ver. 11. You builders] Such you should be, and profess to be, sed aedificatis in Gehennam, ye build backward.

Ver. 12. For there is no other name] We have no co-saviour, we need no other master of requests in heaven, but Christ. Say we of Popish saints and mediators, as that heathen did, Contemno minutulos istos deos modo Iovem propitium habeam. William Tracy, Esq., in Henry VIII's time, made it in his will, That he would have no funeral pomp at his burial, that he passed not upon a mass, that he trusted in God only, and hoped by him to be saved, and not by any saint, &c. Hereupon his body was taken up and burnt as a heretic, A.D. 1532. Some schoolmen (saith Acosta) promise salvation without the knowledge of Christ. And Sleidan telleth us, that at the Council of Trent, the salvation of heathens, by the sole strength of nature without Christ, was much talked of. And Venator, the Arminian, saith, I deny this proposition, no man can be saved that is not set into Christ by a lively faith. The various of Collen set forth a book De Salute Aristotelis. And Erasmus {a} (whether in jest or earnest I know not) useth this litany, Vix possum me continere quin dicam Sancte Socrates ora pro nobis. But if any do seriously fancy any other way to salvation besides Christ, that proverb mentioned by Aristotle in his Meteorology, is verified of him, viz. κακα εφ εαυτον ελκει, ως το κακιας νεφος, he is a wicked and Wretched miscreant.

{a} Erasm. in Praef. ad Tusc. Cic. Quaestiones.

Ver. 13. Unlearned and ignorant men] Indoctos elegit Christus et idiotas, sed oculavit in prudentes: simulque dona dedit et ministeria. The primitive persecutors slighted the Christians for a company of hard illiterate fellows; and therefore they used to paint the God of the Christians with an ass's head, and a book in his hand, saith Tertullian, to signify, That though they pretended learning, yet they were silly and ignorant people. Bishop Jewel, in his sermon upon #Lu 11:15, cites this out of Tertullian, and applies it to his times. Do not our adversaries the like, saith he, against all that profess the gospel? Oh, say they, Who are those that favour this way? None but shoemakers, tailors, weavers, and such as never were at the University. These are the bishop's own words. Bishop White said in open court, some few years since, That the Puritans were all a company of blockheads. The Jesuits say the same of all the Protestants; and that the empire of learning is within their dominion only. {a} But have they not picked up the best of their crumbs under our tables? and have not our English fugitives exceeded all their fellow Jesuits in show of wit and learning?

Ver. 14. They could say nothing] The Arabian interpreter adds, Ut auctoritate uterentur in eos, That they might punish them. They were clearly convinced, and yet ran away with the bit between their teeth; they would hold their own, howsoever, lest they should be taxed of lightness.

Ver. 15. They conferred] Sic festucam quaerentes unde oculos sibi eruant, as Bernard hath it. They sought straws to put out their own eyes also.

Ver. 16. A notable miracle] A signal sign that all the country rang of.

Ver. 17. That they spake henceforth to none] They must cut out their tongues then, for, as new wine, they must vent or burst. When Valens the Arian emperor threatened Basil with banishment, torment, death, &c.; Let him fright babies, said he, with such bugbears, and not me. He may take away my life, but not my love to the truth.

Ver. 18. Command them not to speak at all] So in the year of grace 494, Anastasius the emperor persecuted those that would not obey an edict of his, That no man should commend or condemn the Council of Chalcedon. (Alsted. Chron.) So Heraclius commanded that none should say, That there was either one or two wills in our Saviour Christ. So the Jesuits not long since set forth an edict at Dola, that none should speak of God, either in good sort or in bad.

Ver. 19. Whether it be right, &c.] This was a principle held very fast by the heathens. Antigona in Sophocles saith, Magis obtemperandum est Diis apud quos diutius manendum erit, quam hominibus, quibuscum admodum brevi tempore vivendum est. Better obey God with whom we must ever live, than men with whom we have but a while to continue. And Euripides saith well (in Phaenissis), "Should we not obey the commands of princes?" Non, si impia, iniusta, et male imperata sint: No, if they command evil things. And in Iphigenia, Obediemus, inquit, Atridis honesta mandantibus; sin vero inhonesta mandabunt, non obediemus.

Ver. 20. For we cannot but speak] As Croesus' dumb son did for his father, {a} Strong affections if they find no vent, the heart will cleave; as the waters undermine when they cannot overflow.

Ver. 21. Finding nothing how] With what face they could do anything against them, though their fingers even itched to be doing something. Bucer so carried himself here in England, that neither his friends could sufficiently praise, nor his foes find any fault with him. And for Luther, Non leve praeiudicium est, said Erasmus, tantam esse morum integritatem, ut nec hostes reperiant quod calumnientur. His life is so unblamable that his greatest enemies cannot blemish him.

Because of the people] Those that are most terrible to others are not without their terrors. Dionysius the tyrant dared not be barbed but by his own daughters. Masinissa, king of Numidia, committed the guard of his body to dogs; which he could sooner trust than men, whom he had by his cruelty displeased and provoked.

Ver. 22. Above forty years old] An old cripple, therefore the greater miracle; so it is to convert an old sinner (that is habituated and long accustomed to evil courses) from the error of his way; since it is true of many others as well as of Flemings, that quo magis seneseunt, eo magis stultescunt, they grow crooked and aged with good opinions of themselves without cause; and can seldom or never be set straight again.

Ver. 23. And being let go] For there was no hope of altering them. The heavens shall sooner fall than I will renounce my religion, said one martyr. And if I had as many lives to lay down as I have hairs upon my head, I would lose them every one rather than change my mind, said another. This courage in Christians the persecutors counted obstinace; but they knew not the power of the Spirit, nor the aes triplex circa pectus, the privy armour of proof that the saints have about their hearts.

Ver. 24. Lord] Master, controller, Δεσποτα. Thou that madest and managest all things. Pitch upon fit attributes of God in prayer.

Ver. 25. The heathen rage] Or make a stir. The devil being cast out of heaven makes ado, so do unruly spirits led by him.

Ver. 26. Gathered together] Heb. Took counsel together. They plot and plough mischief to the Church, but all in vain, #Ps 37:12 Job 4:8.

Ver. 27. Both Herod and Pontius Pilate, &c.] So of old, #Ps 2:1-3 83:5-7. So lately against Luther, the emperor, the pope, the kings of Spain, France, England, Hungary, which two last wrote against him, as did also Eckius, Roffensis, Cajetan, Sir Thomas Moore, Johannes Faber, Cochlaeus, Catharinus, Pighins, summo conatu acerrimo desiderio, non vulgari doctrina (as Pareus saith), with all eager desire, utmost endeavour, and extraordinary learning. But what said he to all this? Agant quicquid possunt Henrici, Episcopi, atque adeo Turca, et ipse Satan; nos filii sumus regni, &c.: Let the Henries, the bishops, the Turk, and the devil himself, do what they can, we are the children of the kingdom, worshipping and waiting for that Saviour, whom they and such as they spit upon and crucify. Praeter vitam hanc misellam, Satanas et mundus eripere nobis nihil potest. At vivit et in sempiternum regnat Christus, &c.; with many like golden sentences, which a man would fetch upon his knees (saith Mr Samuel Clark) from Rome or Jerusalem.

Ver. 28. For to do whatsoever, &c.] Divinum consilium dum devitatur, impletur. Humana sapientia dum reluctatur, comprehenditur. (Greg.)

Ver. 29. Behold their threatenings] The Church fares the better for the menaces and blasphemies of their enemies. Quo magis illi furunt, eo amplius procedo, saith Luther.

Ver. 30. And that signs and wonders] Etiamsi rumpantur adversarii, et toti inferi in rabiem ebulliant, saith Calvin here; though earth and hell both burst with envy.

Ver. 31. The place was shaken] So God testifieth to his Church that he shook them, as men do young trees, to settle them, #Hag 2:7. God shaketh all nations, not to ruin, but to refine them; as by rotting he refineth our dead bodies, #Php 3:21.

Ver. 32. Were of one heart] In primitiva Ecclesia, saith Tertullian, Christiani animo animaque inter se miscebantur, et omnia praeter uxores, indiscreta habebant. Sed fraternitas omnis hodie extincta est, et unanimitas primitiva non tantum diminuta (de quo Cyprianus suis temporibus queritur) sed e medio penitus sublata esse videtur. One ancient Greek copy hath these words added to the ordinary reading, "Neither was there any controversy at all among them." (Patric. Jun. in Not. ad Clem.)

Ver. 33. Great grace was upon them all] Dropped down, as it were, upon them from heaven. God it is that fashioneth men's opinions, and maketh them think well of us. He gave Solomon honour as well as wisdom. And of him it was, that whatsoever David did, pleased the people. Paul goes to God for acceptance of his service, which yet was the bringing of alms. And such are usually very welcome.

Ver. 34. Neither was there any] This got them so much favour among all. Heathens acknowledged that there was no such love as among Christians.

Ver. 35. According as he had need] The distribution was done with discretion. See #Ps 112:5. King Edward VI, moved thereto by a sermon of Bishop Ridley's, gave Christ's Hospital, the Savoy, and Bridewell for the use of the poor, 1. by impotence; 2. by casualty; 3. by ill husbandry; with singular discretion. Doctor Taylor, martyr, took the ablest of his parishioners once a fortnight to the almshouse, and among other poor men, that had many children or were sick, to see what they lacked in food, drink, bedding, or any other necessities, and procured a supply for them.

Ver. 36. Surnamed Barnabas] {See Trapp on "Ac 1:23"} {See Trapp on "Phm 7"}

Ver. 37. At the apostles' feet] As the fittest place. Do we tread upon the minerals, and cannot we contemn them?

Chapter 5

Ver. 1. With Sapphira his wife] Her name signifieth beautiful, or spacious. She might be so on the outside, as those apples of Sodom, the Egyptian temples, or Jewish sepulchres; but her heart was rotten, and not right with God. Hypocrites are called vipers, #Mt 3:7, which are outwardly specious, inwardly poisonous. The swan is white in feathers but of a black skin; and was therefore reputed unclean, and unsuitable for sacrifice.

Ver. 2. And kept back part] Interverted, ενοσφισατο, purloined, nimmed it away. Here was a concurrence of hypocrisy, sacrilege, diffidence, and ambition; for he would be thought as good as the best, and therefore laid that he brought at the apostles' feet, &c. Hypocrites shall be uncased; no goat in a sheepskin shall steal on Christ's right hand at the last day.

Ver. 3. Why hath Satan] The first motion of selling his possession was of the Holy Ghost; but Beelzebub had soon putrified and corrupted it.

Ver. 4. Was it not thine own] Wicked men have a right to earthly things as their portion, #Ps 17:14. God gave Tyre to Nebuchadnezzar.

Ver. 5. Fell down, and gave up] So did Nightingal, parson of Crondal by Canterbury; who, on a Shrove Sunday, reading to the people the pope's bull of pardon sent into England by Cardinal Pool, fell suddenly down dead out of the pulpit, and never stirred hand nor foot: witnessed by all the country round about. Philbert Hamlin, martyr, had instructed in the truth a certain priest his host, who afterwards revolted. Hamlin prophesied to him that nevertheless he should die before him. He had no sooner spoke the word, but the priest going out of the prison was slain by two gentlemen who had a quarrel to him. Whereof when Hamlin heard, he affirmed he knew of no such thing; but only spake as God guided his tongue. Whereupon immediately he made an exhortation of the providence of God, which, by the occasion thereof, moved the hearts of many, and converted them to God. Patrick Hamilton, a Scotch martyr, being in the fire, cited and appealed the black friar called Campbell that accused him, to appear before the High God as general Judge of all men, to answer to the innocence of his death between that and a certain day of the next month, which he there named. The friar died immediately before the day came without remorse of conscience, &c. The Judge of the earth keepeth his petty sessions now, letting the law pass upon some few, reserving the rest till the great assizes, #1Ti 5:24. Some flagitious persons he punisheth here, lest his providence, but not all, lest his patience and promise of a general judgment, should be called in question. (Aug. in #Ps 30) Very remarkable was God's hand upon Mistress Hutchinson (that Jezebel of new England) and her family, all slain (some say burnt) by the Indians. One of her disciples falling into a lie, God smote him in the very act, that he sunk down into a deep swoon. And being by hot waters recovered, and coming to himself, he said, Oh God, thou mightest have struck me dead, as Ananias and Sapphira, for I have maintained a lie. {a}

And great fear came on all] God takes some malefactors, and hangs them up in gibbets as it were; that others, warned thereby, may hear, and fear, and do no more so. Alterius perditio tua sit cautio. Cavebis autem si pavebis. Seest thou another suffer shipwreck? look well to thy tackling.

{a} Mr Weld's Preface to his Story.

Ver. 6. And the young men arose] Decent burial this hypocrite had, though he deserved it not. Temporaries enjoy many outward privileges per consortium through possessions.

Ver. 7. Not knowing what was done] And thinking to find her husband in highest honour among the apostles. "But the eyes of the wicked shall fail, and their hope shall be as the giving up of the ghost," #Job 11:20.

Ver. 8. Yea, for so much] Sin had woaded an impudence in her face. How much better that brave woman in St Jerome, who being upon the rack said, Non ideo negare volo, ne peream; sed ideo mentiri nolo, ne peccem, I will rather die than lie.

Ver. 9. To tempt the Spirit] That is, to make trial of him whether he be omniscient and able to detect and punish your hypocrisy. No man is a gross hypocrite, but he is first an atheist.

Ver. 10. Then fell she down] Melancthon makes mention of a cursing woman, that had her neck writhed by the devil, as her mouth was full of cursing and bitterness, A.D. 1551.

Ver. 11. And great fear] {See Trapp on "Ac 5:5"} Laudo Venetos, apud quos unicum publicae pecuniae intervertisse denarium, non infame solum est, sed et capitale. Among the Venetians, it is death to diminish a penny of the public stock. {a}

{a} Zenecat. in Observat. Politic. i.

Ver. 12. Were many signs and wonders] Which were as so many sermon bells to bring men to the Church; and as so many wings to carry the gospel abroad the world.

Ver. 13. Durst no man join himself] None of the powerful enemies of the Church durst insinuate (for fear of the danger) as Sanballat and Tobiah would have done in Nehemiah's days; and as the Jesuits today have a practice of running over to the Lutheran Church, pretending to be converted, and to build with them; but it is only to keep up that bitter contention between the Calvinists and Lutherans.

Ver. 14. And believers were the more added] So little lost the Church by that dreadful doom that befell Ananias and Sapphira, #Isa 26:9. Hypocrites are but the warts, or rather botches, of the Church. When God's judgments are upon them, the inhabitants of the earth will learn righteousness; they will wash their feet in the blood of the wicked, #Ps 58:10. Let the Lord but kill Jezebel's children with death, and then all the Churches will take knowledge that it is He that searcheth the reins and heart, and that giveth unto every man according to his works, #Re 2:23.

Ver. 15. The shadow of Peter passing by] Upon these stupendous miracles, as upon so many eagles' (or rather angels') wings, was the gospel carried abroad the world then. And the establishing of the Reformation begun lately by Luther, &c., to be done by so weak and simple means, yea, by casual and cross means, against the force of so potent and political an adversary as the pope, is that miracle which we are in these times to look for.

Ver. 16. And they were healed every one] Christ is Jehovah the Physician, #Ex 15:26. He hath a most happy hand, and was never foiled by any disease, #Ps 103:3. Omnipotentis medico nullus insanabilis occurris morbus; to an Almighty Physician no disease can be incurable. (Isidore.)

Ver. 17. With indignation] Gr. With zeal: but it was that bitter zeal, #Jas 3:14, that grows not but in Satan's gardens.

Ver. 18. Put them in the common prison] Bocardo (when the good bishops were there in Queen Mary's days) was called a college of quondams (has beens): and almost all other prisons in England were become right Christian schools and Churches, saith Mr Fox.

Ver. 19. But the angel of the Lord] There was one Laremoth, chaplain to the Lady Anne of Cleves, a Scotchman, to whom, being in prison in Queen Mary's days, it was said, as he thought, once, twice, thrice, Arise, and go thy ways. Whereupon he arising from prayer, a piece of the prison wall fell down, and he escaped beyond sea.

Ver. 20. Stand and speak] Stand close to the work, stir not a foot, start not a hair's breadth.

Ver. 21. They entered into the temple early, &c.] True obedience is prompt and present, ready and speedy, without delays and consults, #Ps 119:60 Mr 1:18 Zec 5:9, they had wings and wind in their wings, to note, as Junius observes, their ready obedience.

Ver. 22. But when the officers came] As at a lottery, they came with heads full of hopes, but returned with hearts full of blanks.

Ver. 23. We found no man within] This might well have made them to desist. But what said the prophet long before? "Lord, when thy hand is lifted up, they will not see"; howbeit, "they shall see, and be ashamed for their envy at thy people," &c., #Isa 26:11.

Ver. 24. They doubted of them] Conturbabantur, et ad angustias inexplicabiles detrusi haesitabant, they were at their wit's end, διηπορουσιν, and could not tell what in the world to do with them. Herod was troubled in like sort, #Lu 9:7. So was Diocletian, who therefore laid down the empire, because he could not conquer the Christians, merely out of discontent; so did Charles V

Ver. 25. Behold, the men whom ye put in prison] Surely there is neither wisdom, nor understanding, nor counsel against the Lord, #Pr 21:30. God's mind is fulfilled by them that have least mind to it; human wisdom, while it strives for masteries, is shamefully foiled and out mastered.

Ver. 26. And brought them without violence] The apostles made no resistance, but showed themselves patient and peaceable, blameless amidst a perverse generation, and harmless as doves, that neither provoke the hawk nor project revenge; but when pursued, they save themselves, if they can, by flight, and not by fight.

Ver. 27. They set them before the council] Where the high priest might well have done, as the prolocutor here in the convocation held at London, A. D. 1553, did; he confessed that those dejected ministers before them had the word on their side; but the prelates in place had the possession of the sword.

Ver. 28. And intend to bring this man's blood upon us] They pretend the doctrine, but this was the thing that most troubled them; they should be counted kill-Christ. It is but just that οι πραξοντες τα μη καλα, τλησωσι τα μη φιλα: they that do things not honest, should both hear and bear things not delightful. (Eurip.) But wicked men love not to be told their own; neither accept they of the punishment of their iniquity, #De 28:43. They report me to suck blood (said Bonner in open court) and call me Bloody Bonner! whereas, God knows, I never sought any man's blood in all my life. The very same day wherein he had burned good Mr Philpot, being drunk with blood, and not well knowing what he did, he delivered Richard Woodman with four more (whom but two days before he had threatened to condemn, and the very morrow after he sought for again, yea, and that earnestly), requiring of them but to be honest men, members of the Church Catholic (which they promised), and to speak good of him; and no doubt (saith Woodman) he was worthy to be praised, because he had done the devil his master such doughty service. A certain unknown good woman in a letter to him did him right. Indeed, said she, you are called the common cutthroat, and general slaughter slave to all the bishops of England, &c.

Ver. 29. We ought to obey God rather than men] This is a principle granted and grafted in us by nature. I love and embrace you, O Athenians (said Socrates, in his Apology), but yet I will obey God rather than you. {See Trapp on "Ac 4:19"} {See Trapp on "Mt 22:21"} The article is twice repeated when our Saviour speaks of God, more than when of Caesar; to show that our special care should be to give God his due.

Ver. 30. Ye slew and hanged on a tree] Constantine the Great, in honour of our Saviour, took away by a law that custom of crucifying men, in use, till then, among the Romans: a lingering and cruel kind of death; as was likewise that of impaling, very usual, saith Illyricus, among the ancients. The malefactors had a stake or pale (σκολοψ) thrust in at their anus, and it came out again at their shoulders; so that if the stake did not pierce their hearts or vitals, as it was thrust up, they lived sometimes two or three days in exquisite pain and torment. And to this kind of cruel death, said he, St Paul seemeth to allude, #2Co 12:7.

Ver. 31. To be a Prince and a Saviour] Σωτηρα. Hoc vero quantum est? saith Cicero (In Ver.) Ita magnum, ut Latino uno verbo exprimi non possit. Is nimirum soter est qui salutem dedit. The Greek word for "Saviour" is so emphatic, that other tongues can hardly find a fit word to express it. Antigonus Σωτηρ εκριθη, Antigonus (for liberty restored to the Lacedaemonians) was counted and called a "Saviour"; so was the Roman Fabricius at Athens, Hunniades in Hungary, &c. Before them all, Joseph was called by Pharaoh Zaphnathpaaneah, that is (as Jerome interpreteth it), the "Saviour of the world." Several kings of Syria, who had the name Antiochus common to them, were distinguished by glorious epithets. One was called Antiochus ο Μεγας, the Great; another, Antiochus Επιφανης, or Illustrious; a third, Antiochus θεος, which signifies God; a fourth, Antiochus Σωτηρ, that is, Saviour; a fifth, Antiochus Ευπατωρ, a most indulgent father. Christ is all these more truly and by an excellency. A great God above all gods, an illustrious Prince and Saviour (as the apostle here styleth him), a most tender hearted Father, who could not only wish, with David, to die for his Absaloms, but did it in very deed, and all to purchase repentance, and thereby remission of sins; according to that holy petition of an ancient, First give repentance, and then pardon. (Hilar.)

Ver. 32. To them that obey him] πειθαρχουσιν. The Syriac and Arabic have it, To them that believe in him, πιστευουσιν. It comes all to one pass; for neither is faith without obedience, nor obedience without faith; and both are from the Spirit.

Ver. 33. They were cut to the heart] They were so vexed as if they had been cut with a saw, διεπριοντο; or the gnashing of their teeth sounded as the reciprocation of a saw.

Ver. 34. Named Gamaliel] Who was, say the Jews, the son of Simeon, #Lu 2:25, the son of Hillel. See #Ac 22:3.

Ver. 35. Take heed to yourselves] Anger is an evil counsellor; do nothing rashly. Alexander slew those in his heat whom afterwards he would have revived with his life blood. Ambrose, absolving Theodosius the emperor; enjoined him to stay the execution of whatsoever statute, till thirty days were over.

Ver. 36. Rose up Theudas] See Joseph. Antiq. xviii. 20; xvii. 12.

Ver. 37. Rose up Judas of Galilee] Or Judas Gaulonites. It was the blood of his followers that Pilate mingled with their sacrifices, #Lu 13:1. To his faction belonged those cut throats or murderers, #Ac 21:38, who might very well be of the sect of the Essenes, called by some Hashom, that is, rebels; because, under pretence of asserting the public liberty, they taught the Jews not to acknowledge the Roman Empire; choosing rather to endure the most exquisite torments than to call any man living Lord. (Joseph. xviii. 2.)

Ver. 38. Let them alone, for if, &c.] Perilous counsel, but profitable to the Church; God so ordering it, as he doth all, for the best to his.

Ver. 39. Ye cannot overthrow it] Neither you, nor kings and tyrants to help you; so one ancient Greek copy readeth it. Diocletian laid down the empire in great discontent, because he could not, by any persecution, suppress the true Christian religion. (Beza.) So did Charles V, a political prince, and a sore enemy to the Church. He, when he had in his hand Luther dead, and Melancthon, Pomeran, and other preachers of the gospel, alive; he not only determined not anything extremely against them, or violated their graves, but also entreating them gently, sent them away; not so much as once forbidding them to publish openly the doctrine that they professed. For it is the nature of Christ's Church, that the more that tyrants spurn against it, the more it flourisheth and increaseth.

Ver. 40. And to him they agreed] So did the enraged people to the elders, alleging the example of Micah the Morasthite, #Jer 26:18. See the use and efficacy of history, which hath its name, say some, παρα το ισταναι τον ρουυ, of stopping the stream of violence.

Ver. 41. Worthy to suffer shame] That they were graced so to be disgraced for Christ, Elegantissimum oxymorum, most elegant oxymoron saith Casaubon. So #Php 1:29 "To you it is given (as an honorary) to suffer." Which (saith Father Latimer) is the greatest promotion that God gives in this world. Martyr etiam in catena gaudet, for even a martyr in chains is happy, saith Augustine. Master Glover, martyr, wept for joy of his imprisonment. And God forgive me, said Master Bradford, my unthankfulness for this exceeding great mercy, that among so many thousands he chooseth me to be one in whom he will suffer, &c. The martyrs in Severus the emperor's days, released for a season, seemed to come e myrotheca non ergastulo, saith Eusebius (v. 2), out of a perfuming house rather than a prison house; merry they were and much cheered, that were so much honoured as to suffer for Christ.

Ver. 42. They ceased not] Crescit igitur animus cum adversis. The more outrageous the one the more courageous the other party.

Chapter 6

Ver. 1. Of the Grecians] Ελληνισταί, Graecists; such (say some) as were by birth and religion Hebrews, but dispersed among the Gentiles; those to whom James and Peter wrote their Epistles. Others think they were Greek proselytes, that were circumcised, and read the Septuagint.

Ver. 2. It is not reason] ἀρεστόν, an arrest or order, saith Erasmus; a plea, judgment, or sentence, saith Budaeus.

Serve tables] And do other such offices for the relief of the poor. Bishop Hooper is famous for his board of beggars, who till they were served every day with whole and wholesome meats, he would not himself sit down to dinner. Laudent te esurientium viscera, non ructantium opulenta convivium, said Jerome to Demetrius, "Charity is better than courtesy."

Ver. 3. Full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom] i.e. Civil wisdom to manage the public stock, and to put all to the best for the relief of the necessitous saints. "I wisdom dwell with prudence, and find out knowledge of witty inventions," #Pr 8:12.

Ver. 4. To prayer, and to the ministry] Between these two they divided their time. An argument of their integrity in the ministry. If we were to preach only, saith the apostle, we could then wait upon tables; but the one half of our time is to be taken up in prayer, the other in preaching. So the priests of old: "They shall teach Jacob thy judgments," saith Moses, "they shall also put incense before thee," #De 33:10. So Paul begins, continues, and endeth his epistles with prayer. So Luther professeth that he profited more in the knowledge of the Scriptures by prayer in a short space, than by study in a longer; as John by weeping got the sealed book opened.

Ver. 5. Prochorus, Nicanor, and Timon] Hi tres celebrantur seduli in lectitandis sacris. (Malcolm.) These three (as David's first three worthies) are famous for their unweariableness in God's work.

Ver. 6. They laid their hands] So putting the blessing upon them. A very ancient rite, borrowed from the Church of the Old Testament.

Ver. 7. A great company of the priests] Despair not therefore of the worst; God hath his time to call them. Wycliffe was a great enemy to the swarms of begging friars, with whom it was harder to make war than with the pope himself; whom he pronounced Antichrist, and made him lose in England his tenths and Peter's pence. {a} Howbeit, sundry of the frairs fell to him, and embraced his opinions; among whom, one that was the pope's chaplain, professing that he came out of his order and out of the devil's nest. (Speed.)

{a} An annual tax or tribute of a penny from each householder having land of a certain value, paid before the Reformation to the papal see at Rome; also, a similar tribute paid by several northern lands. The institution of Peter's pence has been attributed to Ine king of Wessex, 688-728, and to Offa king of Mercia, 755-94. It is mentioned as due by ancient law in a (Latin) letter of Canute in 1031. It was discontinued by statute in 1534. ED

Ver. 8. And Stephen, full of faith] He "using the office of a deacon well, did purchase to himself a good degree, and great boldness in the faith which is in Christ Jesus," #1Ti 3:13. A diligent man stays not long in a low place.

Ver. 9. Certain of the synagogue] There were colleges at Jerusalem, as now at our Universities, whither foreigners came for learning sake. These withstood Stephen; like as in the beginning of the Reformation, Eckius, Roffensis, More, Cajaton, Faber, Cochlaeus, Catharinus, Pighius, all these wrote against Luther (besides the two kings of England and Hungary), summo conatu, acerrimo desiderio, non vulgari doctrina, as one saith, {a} In like sort Rochester, Rastal, More, set at once against John Frith, martyr; whereof the one by the help of the doctors, the other by wresting the Scriptures, and the third by the help of natural philosophy, had conspired against him. But he, as another Hercules, fighting with all three at once, did so overthrow and confound them, that he converted Rastal to his part.

{a} Pareus in Medal. Hist.

Ver. 10. By which he spake] "Because he convinced them with great boldness, neither could they withstand the truth." These words are found in one very ancient copy, as Beza witnesseth.

Ver. 11. Then they suborned] This they had learned of that old manslayer, #Joh 8:44.

Ver. 12. Caught him, and brought him] Sic vi geritur res, the adversaries' best arguments. In the conclusion of the disputation at Oxford with Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer, Weston the prolocutor triumphed with Vicit veritas; he should rather have said, Vicit potestas. Not right, but might hath carried it.

Ver. 13. Blasphemous words] So was Athanasius accused.

Ver. 14. Shall destroy this place] sc. Unless they repent.

And shall change the rites] But shall change them for the better. This they cunningly concealed, and made the worst of things, therefore they are counted false witnesses; like as Doeg's tongue was a false tongue (though he spake but the truth), #Ps 120:3, and deceitful, #Ps 52:4, condemned to be broiled on coals of juniper, which burn very fiercely, and are a great while ere they go out. A report or testimony may be false, either by denying, disguising, lessening, concealing, misconstruing things of good report; or else by forging, increasing, aggravating, or uncharitably spreading things of evil report; which though they be true, yet if I know them not to be so; or knowing them to be true, if I divulge them not for any love to the truth, nor for respect to justice, nor for the bettering of the hearer or the delinquent, but only to disgrace the one and incense the other; I cannot avoid the imputation of a slanderer and false witness.

Ver. 15. As it had been the face of an angel] Such was the purity of his conscience, the goodness of his cause, and the greatness of his courage. There is a history of a Dutch martyr, who calling to the judge that had sentenced him to the fire, desired him to lay his hand upon his heart; and then asked him whose heart did most beat, his or the judge's? Many of the martyrs went with as good cheer to die as to dine. Cromwell going to his death, ate a hearty breakfast, Ridley called it his weddingday. And another, clipping the stake he was burnt at, said, "Welcome, mine own sweet wife, welcome the cross of Christ."

Ver. 1. Are these things so?] A Fire hearing Stephen should have, but his death was beforehand resolved on.

Ver. 2. The God of glory] Before whom seraphims (those heavenly salamanders) clap their two wings, as a double scarf, on their faces, as not able to bear his brightness, #Isa 6:2; or as men are wont to clap their hands on their eyes, in a sudden flash of lightning. Sol reliqua sidera occultat, quibus et lumen suum faenerat, saith Pliny, ii. 6.

Ver. 3. Get thee out, &c.] Both Abraham's great temptations began thus. {See Trapp on "Ge 12:1"} {See Trapp on "Ge 12:2"} {See Trapp on "Ge 12:3"} &c.

Ver. 5. No, not so much as] A holy proverb: #De 2:5 "Even to the treading of the sole of the foot." The first purchase that Abraham made was for a burial place.

Ver. 6. Four hundred years] Beginning at the birth of Isaac.

Ver. 7. And serve me in this place] Servati sumus ut serviamus, #Lu 1:74. The redeemed (among the Romans) was to be at the service of the redeemer all his days.

Ver. 8-18] {See Trapp on "Ge 17:11"} {See Trapp on "Ge 37:28"} {See Trapp on "Ge 41:37"} {See Trapp on "Ge 42:1"} {See Trapp on "Ge 45:4"} {See Trapp on "Ge 45:16"} {See Trapp on "Ge 46:27"}

Ver. 19. Dealt subtilly] "Let us deal wisely," saith he, #Ex 1:10 "subtilly," saith this text, κατασοφισαμενος. The world's wisdom is but subtilty, sophistry, fallacy. And God took this wizard in his own craftiness, #1Co 3:19; for your labouring men have the lustiest children.

Ver. 20. Exceeding fair] Passing pretty, a proper child, as the apostle hath it, #Heb 11:23. Justin maketh mention of his beautiful personage; and by this, as by an instrument, God moved his parents first, and then the princess, to pity and preserve him. The Greek word αστειος, here rendered fair, signifies fine, trim, elegant, so as citizens are at the time when trimmed up in their bravery upon days of festivity.

Ver. 21. {See Trapp on "Ex 2:5"}

Ver. 22. And Moses was learned] See my Common Place of Arts. Lactantius saith of Tertullian, that he was in omni genere doctrinae peritus, skilful in all kinds of learning. Jerome saith of him, that his works contained cunctam seculi doctrinam, all the learning of the world; better may this be said of Moses and his writings.

Ver. 23. See #Heb 11:24. {See Trapp on "Heb 11:24"}

It came into his heart] sc. By an impulse of the Holy Spirit; for till then it seems he had slighted them; but now he began to be sick of the affliction of Joseph, whereby he was even broken to shivers, as the Hebrew word Shevarim signifies, #Am 6:6.

Ver. 24. And avenged him] Wherein haply he was too hasty to do justice before his time; which might cost him and cause him forty years' exile in Midian.

Ver. 25. But they understood not] For by this time they through long and hard oppression (which makes even a wise man mad, #Ec 7:7) had well nigh forgotten the promise of deliverance out of Egypt; and having been born in hell (as the proverb is) they knew no other heaven.

Ver. 26. Sirs, ye are brethren] In this Egypt of the world, all unkind strifes should easily be composed, did we but remember that we are brethren.

Ver. 27. He that did the wrong] None so ready to except and exclaim, as the wrong doer; the patient replies not.

Ver. 28. Wilt thou kill me, &c.] If this Hebrew had been well pleased, Moses had not heard of his slaughter; now in choler all will out. If this man's tongue had not thus cast him in the teeth with blood, he had been surprised by Pharaoh, ere he could have known the fact was known; now he grows jealous, flees and escapes. No friend is so commodious in some cases as an adversary.

Ver. 29. Then fled Moses] And by being banished, was the better fitted to be king in Jeshurun.

Ver. 30. See #Ex 3:2.

Ver. 31. He wondered at the sight] How many come to the ordinances to see and to be seen! they may hear that, with Moses here, that may do them good for ever.

Ver. 32. See #Ex 3:6.

Ver. 33. Put off thy shoes] Thy fleshly affections, and be wholly at my disposal, in the business whereabout I shall send thee.

Ver. 34. I have seen, I have seen] To my grief and regret. God is said to suffer in the sufferings of his people. The Father, #Isa 63:9, the Son, #Ac 9:4, the Holy Ghost, #1Pe 4:14.

Ver. 35. By the hands] That is, by the authority and conduct. Hands are not here taken for service, but ruledom; and Christ is set above Moses, as #Heb 3:5.

Ver. 36. And in the wilderness] Where their garments were no whit the worse for wearing. Why then should we question the incorruptibility of our bodies at the resurrection?

Ver. 37. Like unto me] {See Trapp on "Ac 3:22"}

Ver. 38. Lively oracles] That is, life giving oracles. The law is said to be the "strength of sin," #1Co 15:56. But this is by accident through our corruption.

Ver. 39. Thrust him from them] The present government is always grievous, Αει το παρον βαρυ as Thucydides observeth. Alleva iugum, Allevo iugum, lighten the yoke, lighten the yoke, said those in Rehoboam's days, that were all for a relaxation.

Ver. 40. Make us gods] That is, an image, or representation of God. This was not to keep their promise, #Ex 19:8.

Ver. 41. And offered sacrifice to the idol] That is, to the devil, #Ps 106:37, who is ειδωλοχαρης, as Synesius calls him. Howbeit the idolaters pretended herein to worship Jehovah, #Ex 32:4,5. Their idol, if it would not make a god, would make an excellent devil; as the mayor of Doncaster told the wise men of Cockram concerning their ill-shaped crucifix.

Ver. 42. Of the prophets] The twelve small prophets were in one volume.

Ver. 43. Of your god Remphan] #Am 5:26, called Chiun. These are but various names of the same idol; the Hebrews calling it by one name, the Egyptians by another. See Selden de Diis Syris.

Ver. 44. Our fathers had the tabernacle] He had made answer to their first accusation touching blasphemous words against the law. Now for the tabernacle and temple, he takes off that too; and showeth that God's worship is not now to be tied to any one place more than another.

Ver. 45. Brought in] This argued and aggravated their levitatem plus quam desultoriam, monstrous giddiness in running after strange gods, having the true God so near them as never any people had. (Beza.) It might be said of them as it was once of Baldwin the apostate, that he had religionem Ephemeram, for each day a new religion: or as Lactantius writeth of some idolaters in his time, that they feigned what they pleased, and then feared what they feigned.

Ver. 46. Who found favour] This he made more account of than of his crown and sceptre, #Ps 4:6. Like as when he gave Ziba the lands of Mephibosheth, Ziba begged a further and better boon; "I humbly beseech thee that I may find grace in thy sight, my lord, O king," #2Sa 16:4. What is air without light? or daily bread without pardon of sin? God's favour sugars all comforts.

Ver. 47. But Solomon built him a house] A stately house indeed, one of the seven wonders of the world (how basely soever Florus writeth of it, out of his deep and desperate hatred of that nation and their religion): far beyond that Ephesian temple of Diana, built all of cedar, in an apish imitation of it; or the Turks' mosques, which yet are very magnificent; the Great Turk also never comes into them but (for reverence' sake to his God) he lays aside all his state and attendance.

Ver. 48. Howbeit, the Most High dwelleth not] This he subjoineth, because the Jews bore themselves so bold upon the temple, and made such ado about it, as if God were tied to it (as the Chinese chain their gods, that they may be sure of them), crying, "The temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord," when they little respected the Lord of the temple. The disciples also were taxed with this error, #Mt 24:1, and thought that the temple and the world must needs end together; quasi absque stationibus non staret mundus. But our Saviour undeceiveth them there.

Ver. 49. Heaven is my throne, and earth my footstool] And accordingly there are Bona throni good of the throne and bona scabelli, good of the footstools, as the schools distinguish. God and his graces are the good things of his throne: earth and outward comforts are the good things of his footstool. These we may have, but not love (God hath put all things under our feet, #Ps 8:6). Those we must covet and aspire unto. But with most men today the word and the world may seem altered and inverted; earth is their throne, and heaven is their footstool; so little they look after this, and so much that. The Duke of Alva said, he had so much to do on earth, that he had no time to look after heaven.

Ver. 50. Hath not mine hand made all these things?] Therefore I need not your handiwork, though I am pleased to accept of it; which you are to look upon as a wonderful condescension. "God humbleth himself to behold the things that are in heaven and in earth," #Ps

113:6. If he look out of himself upon the saints and angels (how much more upon us!) it is a condescension.

Ver. 51. Ye stiffnecked, &c.] Henry Lawrence, martyr, being required to put his hand in subscribing to his answers, he wrote these words under the bill of their examination, Ye are all Antichrist, and him ye follow, and here his hand was staid, and sentence read against him.

And uncircumcised in heart] Ye that to your sinews of iron have added brows of brass; to your natural hardness, that which is habitual: being more tough than timber that hath long lain soaking in the water, having brawny breasts and horny heartstrings.

Ver. 52. Of whom ye have been now the betrayers, &c.] This was to deal plainly and freely with them; this was Mordaci radere vero, to tell them the naked truth, whatever it cost him. Let those tigers tear him with their teeth which now they were whetting; he hath but a life to lose, and lose it he cannot in a better cause, &c.

Ver. 53. And have not kept it] The Jews were so far from being a law to themselves, αυτονομοι (as the Thracians are said to be), that (more like the Athenians) whereas they had excellent laws, but naughty natures, Moribus suis quam legibus uti mallent, they lived not by their laws, but by their lusts rather. (Val. Max.)

Ver. 54. They were cut to the heart] But that I believe that God and all his saints will take revengement everlasting on thee, I would surely, with these nails of mine, be thy death, said friar Brusierd in a conference with Mr Bilney, martyr. Another friar of Antwerp, preaching to the people, wished that Luther were there, that he might bite out his throat with his teeth. <sup>{a}</sup> Plutarch relateth of the tigers, that if any one do but strike up a drum in their hearing, they grow stark mad, insomuch as at length they tear their own flesh. So, many savage people are extremely disquieted at the hearing of the word, and that merely through their own corruption; like as it is not the tossing in a ship, but the stomach that causeth sickness; the choler within, and not the waves without.

Ver. 55. And Jesus standing] As ready to revenge the injuries done to his proto-martyr. Christus stat ut Vindex, sedet ut Iudex. Christ stands as a defender, and sits as a judge.

Ver. 56. Behold, I see, &c.] Christ as man could see as far into heaven as Stephen now did, who could not therefore but stand stoutly to it. Creatures of an inferior nature will be courageous in the eye of their masters. A believer by the eye of his faith, through the perspective of the promises, may also see into heaven. But what a tale is that which the monkish writers tell of Mulfin, Bishop of Salisbury, whom (because he displaced secular priests and put in monks) they make to be a very holy man; and report of him that when he lay a dying, he cried out suddenly, "I see the heavens open, and Jesus Christ standing at the right hand of God," and so died. (Speed, 335.)

Standing on the right hand] Showing by that posture how ready he is to appear for his people. And surely if it could be said of Scipio, that Rome could not fall while Scipio stood, neither would he live to see Rome fall; how much more truly may it be said of Christ, that neither shall the Church fall while Christ standeth at the right hand of his Father, neither can Christ stand there, his Church falling.

On the right hand of God] As Christ is at the right hand of the Father, so is the Church at the right hand of Christ, #Ps 45:9.

Ver. 57. Ran upon him] Being acted and agitated by the devil, who had now wholly possessed them; so that they were even satanized, and transformed into so many breathing devils.

Ver. 58. And stoned him] As a blasphemer. Our proto-martyr in Queen Mary's days was Mr Rogers; as in Germany Henry and John, two Augustine monks, were the first that were burnt for Lutheranism. (Sculdet. Annul.) They suffered at Brussels, A.D. 1523, and sang in the flames. He was a bold Israelite that first set foot into the Red Sea, saith one. These proto-martyrs shall be renowned to all posterity.

Ver. 59. And they stoned Stephen] Bembus wrote a dainty poem concerning Stephen, and therein hath this verse, much admired by Melancthon.

"Ibat ovans animis, et spe sua damna levabat."

He saw heaven through that shower of stones. Becket's friends advised him to have a mass in honour of St Stephen, to keep him from the hands of his enemies. He had so, but it profited him not.

Lord Jesus, receive, &c.] Luther's last prayer was this, "My heavenly Father, thou hast manifested unto me thy dear Son Jesus Christ. I have taught him, I have known him; I love him as my life, my health, and my redemption, whom the wicked have persecuted, maligned, and with injury affected: draw my soul to thee." After this he said, "I commend my spirit into thy hands, thou hast redeemed me, O God of truth," &c.

Lord, lay not this sin, &c.] Ne statuas. Set it not upon their score, or account. St Augustine is of opinion that this prayer of St Stephen's was of avail for St Paul's conversion. He stood when he prayed for himself, he kneeled when he prayed for his enemies; to show (saith one) the greatness of his piety, and of their impiety, not so easily forgiven. He was more sorry for their riot than for his own ruin.

Chapter 8

Ver. 1. And Saul, &c.] It is all one to hold the sack and to fill it, to do evil or to consent to it.

And Saul was consenting to his death] Gr. αναρπασει, "to his murder"; for it was no better, #Ac 12:2 5:33. Damnari, dissecari, suspendi, decollari, piis cum impiis sunt communia. Varia sunt hominum iudicia: ille faelix qui iudice Deo absolvitur, saith Erasmus concerning Berquin, the martyr, burnt in Germany. Dorotheus witnesseth, that when Stephen was stoned, there were 2000 other believers put to death the same day. Certain it is, that after Mr Rogers had broken the ice here under Queen Mary, there suffered in like sort, one archbishop, four bishops, 21 divines, eight gentlemen, 84 craftsmen, 100 farmers, servants, and labourers, 26 wives, 20 widows, nine virgins, two boys, and two infants; in all 277. Some say a great many more.

And they were all scattered] To the Church's great advantage, which, like the sea, what ground it loseth in one place, it getteth in another. So at Melda in France (10 miles from Paris), Brissonet, the bishop thereof, desirous of a reformation, put away the monks and called in the help of various godly ministers. But being persecuted by the Sorbonists, he soon fell off from the profession of the truth; and those good ministers (Faber, Farelhs, Ruffus, and others) were driven into various other places of France, where they planted various churches; the destruction of one being the edification of many. {a} Farellus, one of those afore mentioned ministers, was God's instrument of gaining the inhabitants of Geneva, Lausanne, Novocoma, &c.

Ver. 2. Carried Stephen] συνεκομισαν, On their shoulders, lamenting, with knocking their breasts, &c., as the word κοπετον imports: no whit afraid of those mad murderers. So the primitive Christians would not be kept from visiting the confessors in prison, Tamet si multis terroribus minis, et periculis interdictum erat, as Chrysostom witnesseth in his oration of the two martyrs. So certain good people took up and buried the bodies of Ursula and Mary, two noble virgins, burnt at Delden in Lower Germany, which the executioner could in no wise consume with fire, but left them lying on the ground. And the like is reported touching the hearts of Zuinglius and Cranmer.

Ver. 3. Made havoc of the church] Being (as some think) that ravening wolf of the tribe of Benjamin, prophesied of by Jacob, #Ge 49:27.

Ver. 4. {See Trapp on "Ac 8:1"} Trucidabantur et multiplicabantur; saith Austin. They were never the fewer for being slain. Plures effcimur quoties metimur; saith Tertullian. Ecclesia totum mundum sanguine et oratione convertit, saith Luther; the Church converts the whole world by her sufferings and prayers.

Ver. 5. Then Philip] Not Philip the apostle (for they all abode at Jerusalem, #Ac 8:1), but Philip the deacon. He that is faithful in a little shall be made master of more.

Ver. 6. And the people, &c.] A corrupt place, and bewitched by the sorceries of Simon Magus; yet even there God had a people. Justin Martyr was of this city.

Ver. 7. Crying with a loud voice] To show that they went out perforce, and with a very ill will.

Ver. 8. And there was great joy] So there was at Berne; for when the reformation was first received they pardoned (for joy) two condemned persons and called home all their banished. So there was at Geneva; the inhabitants whereof, upon the like occasion, stamped new money with this inscription, Post tenebras lux. After the night, daybreak. So also there was among the Helvetians, who caused the day and year when reformation began among them to be engraved in a pillar, in letters of gold, for a perpetual memory to all posterity, A. D. 1528.

Ver. 9. Which beforetime, &c.] Or, which was master of the magicians, προσηρχεν. Sed quae traduntur de modo disceptationis Petri cum Simone Mago δραματικά potius quam ιστορικά esse videntur.

Bewitched the people] Gr. ἐξίστων. Carried them out of themselves, as in an ecstasy, so that they were more his than their own.

Some great thing] Such a blab the devil had blown up there, as a small wind may blow up a bubble.

Ver. 10. This man is the great power of God] Epiphanius saith that this varlot (knave) called himself God the Father and the Son, and his harlot Helena (a horrible thing to be spoken) the Holy Ghost. Justin Martyr witnesseth, that he had near unto Rome a statue erected, with this inscription, Simoni Deo sancto, To Simon the holy God. Prodigious boldness and baseness!

Ver. 11. He had bewitched them with sorcery] It happened in the year of grace 434, that a certain seducer, who called himself Moses, persuaded the Jews in Crete that he was sent from heaven with commission to repossess them of the Promised Land. Him therefore they gladly followed (a great sort of them) with their wives and children to the seaside; where he bade them to cast themselves after him from a steep rock into the sea. This they did, and there perished many of them; and many more had done, but that (by a providence) sundry were caught up by Christian fishermen there present at that time, and carried safe to land. These, after they were recovered, carried notice to their fellows, how fearfully they had been deluded by the devil, who had impersonated Moses; and various of them, moved by their late calamity, became Christians. In the year 759, certain Persian magicians persuaded themselves and many others, that if they sold all they had and cast themselves naked from the town wall, they should fly up to heaven immediately; perierunt hac insania permulti, saith the historian. Many perished by believing this senseless lie. (Funccius in Chronol.)

Ver. 12. They were baptized both men and women] Who were admitted to baptism on this condition, that their infants also and their whole families should be consecrated to God; for so runs the covenant, #Ge 17:7. If any ask why Christ and the apostles did not set down plainly, that infants were or might be baptized it is answered that none (then) questioned the lawfulness of it, because it was generally done. Again, if when infants were brought to be baptized (as they were brought to Christ to be blessed) the apostles had rejected them, the believing Jews (and others) would have excepted, and demanded why they might not as well be baptized, as once they were circumcised? and the apostles would have given them an answer. St Peter, speaking of baptism, limiteth it thus: "Baptism sayeth, not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but," &c., #1Pe 3:21. Would not the evangelist here as well have said, men and women were baptized, only infants were not. If it be further objected, that it is in vain to give the sacrament to infants that understand not what is done to them, we answer, that the same may be said touching the sacrament of circumcision, which yet was done to infants, by God's appointment. Thus to object therefore, is to "charge God foolishly," #Job 1:22. Again, were Christ's parables uttered in vain, because not presently understood? Or was it to no purpose that he laid his hands upon infants and blessed them? is it in vain to give medicine to children, fools, or mad men, that know not what we do to them?

Ver. 13. Simon himself believed] As the devils also believe, with a historical faith, a mere flash, which therefore soon came to nothing.

And when he was baptized] Pity that that fair water was spilt upon so foul a face. But circumcision avails nothing without faith that works by love. Unregenerate Israel is to God as Ethiopia, #Am 9:7. Baptism to such is not God's mark, but the devil's brand.

Ver. 14. They sent Peter and John] Those pillars, #Ga 2:9, to confirm Philip's doctrine, and found a church by their apostolic authority.

Ver. 15. The Holy Ghost] That is, those extraordinary gifts of tongues, healing, &c.

Ver. 16. For as yet he was fallen upon none of them] sc. In those extraordinary gifts of tongues and miracles.

Ver. 17. Then laid they their hands on them] After the manner of the priests, who laid their hands on the beast that was to be sacrificed, and so consecrated them to God.

Ver. 18. He offered them money] As Simoniacs still do their corrupt patrons, so crucifying Christ afresh between two thieves. Benefices are now bestowed, saith one, non ubi optime, sed ubi quaestuosissime, not ewhere best but most profitable. As if a man should bestow so much bread on his horse, because he is to ride on him, &c.

Ver. 19. Give me also this power] Base spirits have low conceits of the high things of God. The stream riseth not above the spring. Omnia Romae venalia; all things at Rome are soluble and saleable.

Ver. 20. But Peter said unto him] Philip took him for a right honest man, and baptized him; but Peter soon smelt a fox, and drew him out of his den into the open light. Hypocrites shall be sooner or later detected; their name must rot.

Thy money perish with thee] So said that noble Italian marquis, Caracciolus, to the Jesuit that tempted him to revolt for money. <sup>{a}</sup> Let their money perish with them, said he, that esteem all the gold in the world worth one day's society with Jesus Christ and his Holy Spirit; and cursed be that religion for ever that goes that way to work.

Ver. 21. Thou hast neither part nor lot] Neque pars, neque sors, no manner of interest in this faith, much less in this sacred office of preaching, and laying hands upon others. (Dictio proverbialis.) The Jews boast, that in Portugal and Spain they have millions of their race to whom they give complete dispensation to counterfeit Christianity, even to the degree of priesthood; and that none are discovered but some hot spirits, whose zeal cannot temporize. Are not these perfect Simoniacs?

Ver. 22. Repent therefore] Repentance is post naufragium tabula, it is the fair daughter of a foul mother, i.e. sin, which (if not repented of) will soon work our ruth)distress) and ruin. {a}

If perhaps the thought] Επινοια to be cured by μετανοια. Thought is not free; but if evil, must be reversed by repentance, or will undo us for ever, #Jer 4:14.

Ver. 23. Thou art in the gall, &c.] The apostle alludeth to #De 29:18. Sin is a bitter potion, a deadly poison, which therefore we must quickly cast up again by confession, ere it get to the vitals. Simon Magus is here convinced by the very show of godliness, under which he hoped to have lurked; as the fish sepia is betrayed by the black colour which she casteth out to cover her.

Ver. 24. Pray for me] Some from these words conclude his effectual conversion. He trembleth at God's justice, and imploreth his mercy. Haec certe non minima sunt poenitentiae signa, saith judicious Calvin; these were no small signs of sound repentance.

Ver. 25. When they had testified] That is, with great gravity and liberty declared. (διαμαρτυρομενοι.)

In many villages of the Samaritans] Accounting with Luther, that vilissimus pagus est palatium eburneum in quo est pastor et credentes aliqui; the meanest village may become an ivory palace, by having in it a faithful pastor and some few believers.

Ver. 26. Which is desert] Which way is desert, that is, less frequented, because uphill and downhill. So is the way to heaven, and therefore little travelled.

Ver. 27. Candace] This, saith Pliny, was a common name to the Ethiopian queens, as Caesar was to the Roman emperors. Her country might haply be that large region of Nubia, which had from the apostles' time (as it is thought) professed the Christian faith; but hath again above a hundred years since forsaken it, and embraced instead of it, partly Mahometanism, and partly idolatry; and that by the most miserable occasion that might befall, namely, famine of the word of God through lack of ministers.

Ver. 28. Sitting in his chariot, read] Time is to be redeemed for holy uses. Pliny seeing his nephew walking for his pleasure, called to him, and said, Poteras hasce horas non perdidisse; You might have better bestowed your time than so. Nullus mihi per otium dies exit, A day passed in leisure is nothing to me, saith Seneca. And Jerome exhorted some godly women, to whom he wrote, not to lay the Bible out of their hands, until being overcome with sleep, they bowed down their heads, as it were to salute the leaves below them with a kiss.

Ver. 29. Then the Spirit said] sc. By revelation, or secret inspiration.

Ver. 30. And heard him read] He read as he rode. Pliny was always reading or writing, or doing something, quo ad vitam communem aliquem fructum ferre posset, whereby he might benefit himself or others. Mr Bradford the martyr held that hour of his life lost, wherein he had not done some good with his hand, tongue, or pen. Seneca saith, I have no time to spare or spend idly; I see men do not so much lack time as waste it. <sup>{a}</sup> This they would not do, if they considered that upon this little point of time hangs the crown of eternity. Oh, make much of time, said Thomas Aquinas, especially in that weighty matter of salvation. Oh, how much would he that now lies frying in hell rejoice, if he might have again but the least moment of time, wherein to make his peace with God!

Ver. 31. How can I, except some man] The mathematics are so called, because they cannot be learned without a teacher. No man is αυτοδιδακτος in heavenly literature. He that here is scholar to himself, hath a fool to his master.

Ver. 32. The place of the Scripture] The parcel, saith the Syriac, פאקומפ; the partition or section, say the Hebrews, הרטפה. Among us, Stephen Langton, Archbishop of Canterbury, first divided the Bible into chapters in such sort as we now account them; Robert Stephens into verses, imperitissime plerunque textum dissecans, saith Scultetus, not doing so well as he might.

Ver. 33. His judgment was taken away] That is, he was set safe from his enemies, that judged and executed him. He rose, and reigneth in despite of them.

And who shall declare his generation] Saeculum eius. (Beza.) Or can tell how long his kingdom shall last? for being raised from the dead, he dieth no more. He may as well die at the right hand of his Father as in the hearts of his children.

Ver. 34. I pray thee of whom] Incredible gain is to be gotten by conference in all arts; so here. All Christ's scholars are ζητητικοί, questionists, though, not question sick, as those triflers in Timothy, #1Ti 6:4.

Ver. 35. And preached unto him] Of preaching we may say in comparison of other ordinances, for the getting of knowledge, as David did of Goliath's sword, there is none to that.

Ver. 36. What doth hinder] He stood not upon the reproach of Christian religion, what the courtiers at home would censure of him. He would hardly suffer death for Christ that cannot suffer little breath for him.

Ver. 37. Is the Son of God] Both by eternal generation, #Pr 8:22-30, and by hypostatical union, #Mt 3:17.

Ver. 38. And he baptized him] Set Christ's mark upon him, that seal of the new covenant. The Jacobites (a kind of mongrel Christians in Asia) sign their children, many in the face, some in the arm, with the sign of the cross, imprinted with a hot burning iron, at or before baptism; but we have not so learned Christ.

Ver. 39. Went on his way rejoicing] Bernard, for a certain time after his conversion, remained, as it were, deprived of his senses, by the excessive consolations he had from God. Cyprian confesseth to Donatus, his friend, that before his conversion he thought it was impossible for him to change his manners, and to find such comfort as now he did in a Christian life. He beginneth thus, Accipe quod sentitur antequam discitur. Augustine saith the same of himself (Confess. vi. 12.)

Ver. 40. At Azotus] A city of Palestine, called anciently Ashdod, whence the Anakims could not be driven out, #Jos 11:22.

Chapter 9

Ver. 1. And Saul yet breathing] As a tired wolf, that wearied with worrying the flock, lies panting for breath. {See Trapp on "Ac 8:3"}

Ver. 2. Letters to Damascus] The high priest, it seems, then had power at Damascus, and elsewhere out of Judea, to bind and beat his Jews, for misdemeanour in point of their religion. See #Ac 18:15.

Ver. 3. And as he journeyed] So Petrus Paulus Vergerius, the pope's nuncio, dum confutationem Evangelicorum meditatur, fit

Evangelicus; moved, perhaps, by the fearful example also of Francis Spira, whereof he had been an eyewitness.

Ver. 4. Fell to the earth] Christ unhorsed him, but did not destroy him. He is not such a monarch as loves to get authority by sternness, as Rehoboam, but by gentleness. And though gone to heaven, yet hath he not changed his nature with change of honour; but together with beams of glory, there are still in him the same bowels of pity that he had here upon earth.

Why persecutest thou me?] As unskilful hunters, shooting at wild beasts, may kill a man? so those that shoot at the saints, hit Christ. Their sufferings are held his, #Col 1:24; their reproach his, #Heb 13:13. God is more provoked than Nehemiah, #Ne 4:3,5. Christ retaineth still compassion, though freed from personal passion; and, though freed from feeling, he hath still yet a fellow feeling. <sup>{a}</sup> Let such among us take heed what they do, who, while they pronounce our Church antichristian, &c., strike at the beast, but wound the Lamb.

Ver. 5. To kick against the pricks] A metaphor from oxen pushing back upon the goad, when they are pricked therewith, as Beza showeth out of Aeschilus.

Ver. 6. It shall be told thee] Christ teacheth him not immediately, but sendeth him to a preacher; so to grace his own ordinance.

Ver. 7. Hearing a voice] Not Christ's voice, but Saul's only, #Ac 22:9.

Ver. 8. He saw no man] This bodily blindness was a means to open the eyes of his mind, as Gehazi's leprosy cured his soul.

Ver. 9. And he was three days] In this three days' darkness, some gather by computation of time, that he was now rapped up into the third heaven, and heard those wordless words,  $\rho\eta\mu\alpha\tau\alpha$   $\alpha\rho\eta\eta\tau\alpha$ , #2Co 12:4, after that he had been thoroughly humbled. Luther likewise lay (after his conversion) three days in desperation, as Mr Perkins remembereth in his book of Spiritual Desertion, his temptations were so violent, ut nec calor, nec sanguis, nec sensus, nec vox superesset, as Justus Jonas reporteth of Luther, that was by and saw it. (Epist. ad Melancthon.) The like is recorded concerning Mr Bolton, by Mr Bagshaw in his Life.

Ver. 10. And there was a certain] See here the necessity and use of the ministry: "If there be a messenger with a man, an interpreter, one among a thousand, to show unto man his uprightness," &c., #Job 33:23. Unus e millibus. The Vulgate translation corruptly hath it, unus e similibus.

Ver. 11. The street called Straight] God's people are so dear to him, that their walls are ever before him, #Isa 49:16; he loveth the streets the better they dwell in, the air the better they breathe in, #Ps 87:5,6.

For behold he prayeth] He never prayed till now, though a strict Pharisee. So #Da 9:13. The captives in Babylon prayed not in those 70 years; because they fasted to themselves, and prayed more to get off their chains than their sins, #Zec 7:5,6. Prayer is the breath of the spirit, #Ro 8:26 Jude 20. And prayer without the spirit is but an empty ring, a tinkling cymbal.

Ver. 12. And hath seen in a vision] It is not certain whether these be Christ's own words, or St Luke's; neither is it much material.

Ver. 13. Then Ananias answered] The best have their unnecessary fears, and think they have reason on their side; but convinced, they soon subscribe to God. Veniat, veniat verbum Domini, said one, et submittemus ei sexcenta si nobis essent colla.

How much evil he hath done] And is therefore not lightly to be trusted. It is a rule in the Civil Law, Semel malus semper praesumitur esse malus: but God can soon alter a man's mind and manners, as he did Saul's.

Ver. 14. And here he hath authority] Therefore he was more than 20 years old (as Ambrose and Theodoret make him to be) at his first conversion. For here he hath authority committed unto him, not incident to so very a youth.

Ver. 15. A chosen vessel to bear] In matters of holiness we are rather patients than agents, that we may ascribe all to God's grace; therefore he compares us not to active instruments, as tools in the hand of a workman, but to passive instruments, such as dishes or vessels (as here) that bear and carry treasure, meat, or such-like, #2Co 4:7 Ac 13:15 "Ye men and brethren, if there be in you" (as in so many vessels of honour) "any word of exhortation, say on." But what a mouth of blasphemy opened. Quintinus the libertine, who scoffing at every apostle, Paulum vocabat vas fractum (as Calvin testifieth), {a} called Paul a broken vessel: so in the year 1519, Scioli quidam Tiguris iactabant haec tria, scilicet, &c. Quis tandem Paulus? nonne homo est? Apostolus est sed suburbanus tantum, &c. Ego tam cuivis Thomae vel Scoto credo quam Paulo. Some, no wiser than they should be, cast out slighting speeches to this purpose: What was Paul more than another man? an apostle, indeed, but of an inferior order; none of the twelve that conversed with Christ; neither made he any one of the articles of the Creed. I would as soon believe Thomas or Scotus, as Paul, &c. I tremble to relate how basely some Jesuits have spoken of St Paul, as savouring of heresy in some places; and better perhaps he had never written.

Before the Gentiles and kings, &c.] Μεγιστη του κηρυγματος σαλπαγξ ο Παυλος, saith a Greek father. Paul was God's chief herald, the gospel's loudest trumpet.

Ver. 16. How great things he must suffer] Opposition is (as Calvin wrote to the French king) Evangelii genius, the evil angel that dogs the gospel. And praedicare, said Luther, nihil aliud est quam derivare in se furorem totius mundi: To preach, is to get the evil will of the world.

Ver. 17. Putting his hands] Partly so to consecrate him to the Lord's work, and partly to obtain for him the gifts of the Holy Ghost.

Ver. 18. There fell from his eyes] God also at the same time tore the covering, rent the veil that was spread over the eyes of his understanding, #Isa 24:7. See "The Blind Eye Opened" in a discourse on #Eph 5:8, by my entire friend Mr Dugard.

Ver. 19. With the disciples] For as he desired to cleave perpetually to the head, so to join himself to his members, to incorporate with the Church.

Ver. 20. And straightway he preached] He conferred not with flesh and blood, #Ga 1:16, but fell presently to work, and followed it close, as afraid to be taken with his task undone. Chrysostom saith of Paul, that he was insatiabilis Dei cultor, an insatiable server of God.

Ver. 21. Is not this he?] It is, and it is not: it is not Ille ego qui quondam, but ego non sum ego. He is another man than he was, and this the whole Church shall soon hear of: like as a bell cannot be turned from one side to another, but it will make a sound, and report its own motion.

Ver. 22. Proving that this, &c.] Συμβιβάζων. Proving it by comparing Scripture with Scripture, by laying one place to another, as joiners fit all the parts of their work together, that each part may perfectly agree with the other, #Ne 8:8. The Levites read the law, and gave the sense, causing the people to understand the reading, debant intelligentiam per Scripturam ipsam: they gave understanding through the Scriptures themselves, so Tremellius rendereth it. Parallel texts, like glasses, set one against another, cast a mutual light. The lapidary brightens his hard diamond with the dust shaved from itself; so must we clear hard Scriptures.

Ver. 23. And after many days] <sup>{a}</sup> sc. After three years. So long he had to settle, ere God called him forth to suffer. The skilful armourer trieth not an ordinary piece with musket shot. The wise lapidary brings not his softer stones to the stithy: the good husbandman turns not the wheel upon his cummin, nor his flail upon his vetches, <sup>{b}</sup> #Isa 28:25.

Ver. 24. But their laying await] Some friend likely had advertised him, as a senator of Hala did Brentins, when some had conspired his death, Fuge, fuge, Brenti, cito, citius, citissime. Flee speedily, away for thy life. (Melch. Adam.)

Ver. 25. Let him down, &c.] It is not unlawful then to fly in some cases. Tertullian was too rigid in condemning all kinds of flight, in time of persecution; God hath not set us as standing marks, or butts, to be shot at.

Ver. 26. They were all afraid of him] Openheartedness is an argument of folly, Fide, diffide. Our Saviour would not lightly commit himself to any, #Joh 2:24. Try whom you mean to trust. Paul was somewhile a probationer ere he could be admitted.

Ver. 27. And how he had preached boldly] <sup>{See Trapp on "Ac 9:21"}</sup> <sup>{See Trapp on "Ac 9:29"}</sup>

Ver. 28. And he was with them] sc. With Peter and James, #Ga 1:18,19. For the other apostles were then absent, about their Lord's business.

Ver. 29. And he spake boldly] The soul, by the witness of the Spirit, finds increase of spiritual mettle, and is steeled against opposition.

Disputed against the Grecians] These had been St Stephen's greatest adversaries, #Ac 6:1,9, and then Saul was very forward to join with them. Now that he was turned Christian, they sought his death, having first given out (as Epiphanius testifieth) that he turned merely out of discontent, because he could not obtain to wife the high priest's daughter. Truth (saith one) hath always a scratched face. The devil was first a liar, and then a murderer. Those that kill a dog (saith the French proverb) make the world believe he was mad first. The credit of the Church must first to be taken away, and then she is wounded, #So 5:6. Before the French massacre, it was given out that the Huguenots in their nightmeetings committed most abominable uncleannesses.

Ver. 30. To Tarsus] His own country, that he might there break the bread of life where he first drew the breath of life, as Bishop Jewel desired to do. Physician, heal thyself, that is, thine own native country, said they to our Saviour, #Lu 4:23.

Ver. 31. Then had the churches rest] As when Paul was converted, the Churches rested; so, much more, when sin and Satan shall be destroyed, shall the state of the saints be most restful and blissful in heaven.

Ver. 32. As Peter passed through all quarters] Being notably active for Christ, according as it was charged upon him, #Lu 22:32 "When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren." The most that the saints can do for Christ is not the one half of that which they could beteem him.

Ver. 33. Had kept his bed eight years] A long while surely; but what was this to an eternity of extremity in hell? Oh, take heed, and be forewarned to flee from that wrath to come. And meanwhile, every man that seeth another stricken with such chronic diseases as the palsy, and himself spared, is bound to keep a passover.

Ver. 34. And Peter said] After he had prayed for him, likely. It is the prayer of faith that healeth the sick. Thus Epaphroditus was given in as an answer to St Paul's prayer, and Miconius to Luther's, after he had been almost spent with a consumption. {a}

{a} Melch. Adam in Vit. Luth.

Ver. 35. And Saron] Alias Assaron, the same perhaps with Acheron or Ekron, counted by the very heathens the devil's house; for there Beelzebub, the prince of devils, was worshipped, #2Ki 1:3. {a}

{a} Flectere si nequeo superos, Acheronta movebo. Virg.

Ver. 36. Full of good works and alms-deeds] For there are other good works besides almsdeeds, though many Papists, and some as silly, have shrunk up charity to a hand breadth, to giving of alms. Let our works be done in God, #Joh 3:21, and for God, #1Co 10:31. Let there be good actions and good aims; and then they shall be the works of God, #Joh 6:28.

Ver. 37. When they had washed] This they did to show their hope of a joyful resurrection. The heathens also, though their lives and hopes ended together, yet they washed their dead in an apish imitation of this Church custom. Faciunt et vespae faves; simlae imitantur homines.

Ver. 38. They sent unto him] As loth to lose so useful a member, so dearly missed among them. Some when they die are no more missed than the sweepings of a house or the parings of the nails. But when good people die, there is a general loss and lamentation.

Ver. 39. They brought him] Love is officious, and thinks not too much of any labour.

And showing him the coats and garments] A worthy employment for a wealthy woman. The like is reported of Queen Anne Boleyn. And I knew a very gracious matron (one mistress Alice Smith of Stratford-upon-Avon) that found herself thus usually busied; being one of those few that both lived and died with honour.

Ver. 40. Put them all forth] That he might pray with more privacy and freedom. For he knew well that the prayer of faith could not heal the sick only, as Aeneas, #Ac 9:34, but raise the dead too, #Heb 11:35.

Ver. 41. Presented her alive] To her own loss for a little while; but so God might be glorified and the Church gratified, she was well contented.

Ver. 42. And many believed] So when Lazarus was raised, #Joh 11:45. {See Trapp on "Joh 11:45"}

Ver. 43. With one Simon a tanner] Of mean rank and despicable, but religious and hospitable. Of such, and not of great ones, consisted this Church of Christ at Joppa. The poor are gospellized, ευαγγελιζονται, #Mt 11:5. The lesser fishes bite soonest. Grandior solet esse Deus in parvulis, quam in magnis. {See Trapp on "Ac 10:6"}

Chapter 10

Ver. 1. A centurion of the band] He might well have been a commander in the thundering legion, qui plus precando quam praeliando potuerunt, κεραινοβολος. Preces sunt bombardae et instrumenta bellica Christianorum, said Luther, who also spared not to tell the Elector of Saxony, his protector and patron, that he by his prayers would secure his Highness's soul, body, and estate engaged in the gospel's cause. Sive id credat Celsitudo vestra, sive non credat. Imo Iudico, saith he, C. V plus a me praesidii et tutelae habiturum esse quam mihi praestare, &c. Yea, I am of the mind that your Highness hath more safety from me than I have from you.

Ver. 2. A devout man, &c.] ευσεβης. Not of the king's religion, whatever it be, as those Melchites it, Nicephorus. And as Tertullian tells us in his Apology, that the people were bound to worship those gods only that the Senate decreed should be worshipped. Cornelius was a right worshipper.

With all his house] A man is really what he is relatively. David would show his sincerity by being good at home, #Ps 101:2.

Ver. 3. About the ninth hour] Which was the time of the evening sacrifice, when the joint prayers of the Church were ascending as incense.

Ver. 4. Thy prayers and thine alms] Dr Powel relateth this saying of Leotinus, Prince of Wales, that when he was moved by some to make war upon our Henry III, Ego, inquit, formido eius eleemosynas magis certe multo quam eius copias. And the queen-mother of Scotland was heard to say, that she more feared the fastings and prayers of John Knox and his disciples than an army of twenty thousand men.

For a memorial before God] How did the angel know this? Angels have a threefold knowledge: 1. Natural; 2. Revealed, as #Da 9:20-23, and here; 3. Experimental, #Eph 3:10.

Ver. 5. Call for one Simon] Though an angel certifies Cornelius's prayers were accepted, yet he reads not to him the doctrine of redemption, but refers him to Peter. The office of preaching the gospel is taken from the angels (who first preached it to the shepherds) and given to the ministers.

Ver. 6. With one Simon a tanner] God knoweth all his by name, and condition of life.

Ver. 7. A devout soldier] Cornelius had either found him, or made him so. Nero complained that he could never find a faithful servant; and no wonder, for those that were good, cared not to come about him; and those that were bad, he cared not to make better, as being himself desperately wicked. Qualis herus, talis servus. The master's faults go as little unattended as their persons.

Of them that waited on him] The Syriac hath it, of them whom he esteemed highly. Good servants are rare and precious.

Ver. 8. And when he had declared] He knew well the worth of a faithful messenger, #Pr 25:13. Howbeit the more to affect their hearts, and the better to effect his design, he sets God before them, and shows them the whole matter. God's commands carry a divine authority, and soon prevail with the religious. Dicto citius dicta peragunt. They say with him in the poet (Lucan), “Iussa sequi, tam velle mihi, quam posse, necesse est.”

Ver. 9. Upon the housetop to pray] He got upon the leads, as well to avoid distraction as to excite devotion by a full view of heaven above.

Ver. 10. He fell into a trance] His soul was sundered, as it were, for a season, from his body, while he talked with God. So our Saviour was transfigured as he was praying. John was in the spirit on the Lord's day, when he received his revelation; Paul was rapped up into the third heaven. Giles of Bruxelles (a Dutch martyr), in his prayers was so ardent, kneeling by himself in some secret place, while he was a prisoner, that he seemed to forget himself. Being called many times to eat, he neither heard nor saw those that stood by him, till he was lifted up by the arms, and then gently he would speak unto them, as one awakened out of a sweet sleep.

Ver. 11. And saw heaven opened] sc. The visible heaven, the air; for, as for the third heaven, it openeth not without a miracle, as some think.

Ver. 12. Were all manner of fourfooted] Gr. παντα. All, that is, some of all sorts; so, omne animal, every living creature, is said to be in Noah's ark; and in the like sense, Christ is said to die for all.

Ver. 13. Kill and eat] Peter was hereby taught not to kill and slay in battle, as many of his warlike pretended successors have done, but to kill that corruption that he found in the Gentiles, by the sword of the Spirit, &c. Julius II can turn him either way, to Peter's keys or Paul's sword. {a}

Ver. 14. Common or unclean] By commonness there is contracted an uncleanness. It is hard to deal in the world, and not be defiled with the corruption that is in the world through lust.

Ver. 15. That call not thou common] Or profane thou not, συ μη κοινοῦ. {See Trapp on "Ac 10:14"}

Ver. 16. Received up again into heaven] The Church's original is from heaven, #Re 21:10, and thither she shall be taken up again. As in the mean space, our commoration is on earth, our conversation in heaven, #Php 3:20.

Ver. 17. Stood before the gate] They pressed not in till licensed; they knew that Jews would not easily converse with them being Gentiles. This was their modesty, not often seen in soldiers.

Ver. 18. And called and asked] Whether death will use so much manners as these did, viz. to call and ask for us, or ever he seizeth us, it is uncertain. Senibus mors in ianuis, adolescentibus in insidiis, saith Bernard. The young man hath death at his back, the old man before his eyes, saith Aquinas. And that is the more dangerous enemy that pursueth thee, than that which marcheth up toward thy face. Be sober, be vigilant: of doomsday there are signs affirmative and negative, not so of death; and yet every man's death's day is his doomsday.

Ver. 19. While Peter thought on] διενθουμουμενου, Gr. thought in his mind; cogitabat quasi coagitabat. He was busily plodding, and the Spirit came in to help him. Divine meditation is a studious act of the mind, searching the knowledge of a hidden truth, by the discourse of reason. Or, it is a steadfast and earnest bending of the mind upon some heavenly matter, for the settling of our judgments and bettering of our heart and lives.

Ver. 20. Doubting nothing] Or, not arguing the case, μηδεν διακρινόμενος, but readily yielding the obedience of faith.

Ver. 21. Peter went down] He sent not for them up, much less made he them to wait three days at the gate (as that pope did Henry the emperor) before they could have a hearing.

Ver. 22. That feareth God] Not with a base fear, as those mongrels, #2Ki 17:32, that feared the Lord for his lions sent among them (like as some Indians in this day fear the devil because he beats them), but with an amicable, filial, reverential fear, which got him a good report among all the nation of the Jews; such as St Paul thus bespeaketh, "Men of Israel, and ye that fear God," #Ac 13:16. {a}

{a} Duo sunt timores, servilis et amicalis. Beda.

Ver. 23. Certain brethren from Joppa] Who were well paid for their courteous pains, when (for confirmation of their faith) they beheld the kingdom of Christ propagated and preached to the Gentiles also.

Ver. 24. Cornelius waited for them] So the people waited for Zacharias, #Lu 1:21. It is fit the people should wait for the minister, not the minister for the people, #Zec 8:21.

Ver. 25. Worshipped him] Not as God, with divine worship; yet with too much humility, which Peter correcteth. The word must be glorified, the ministers not overly admired.

Ver. 26. But Peter took him up] Longe aliter papa, the pope (Diocletian-like) holds forth his toe to be kissed, and suffers his parasites to deify him.

“ Tu vere in terris diceris esse Deus.”

“You truly on earth are said to be God.”

I myself also am a man] We must glorify the word, not the preacher, #Ac 13:48.

Ver. 27. He found many that were come together] With good and honest hearts, hungering and thirsting after righteousness, resolved to be ruled by God, and to pass into the likeness of the heavenly pattern. Lord, saith Nazianzen, I am an instrument for thee to touch. I am only thy clay and wax, said another.

Ver. 28. Not call any man unclean] Scilicet, quoad communem vitae usum; Nam alioqui omnes natura impuri; i.e. in regard of civil conversation. By nature (it is true) we are all unclean.

Ver. 29. Without gainsaying, as soon as sent for] Hoc est sanctum fide; silentium, saith Calvin, this was the holy silence of faith; this was to preach Christ the Lord; and himself the Church's servant, for Jesus' sake. A servant is not αυτοματος, one that moveth absolutely of himself; he is υπηρετης and οργανον, saith Aristotle, the master's instrument, and wholly his, ολωσ εκεινου, #1Co 4:5. Peter's pretended successor styleth himself the "servant of God's servants"; but is nothing less.

For what intent] This he desireth to know of them, that he might not shoot at rovers, run at uncertainty; but be able to conclude his discourse, as he did, Det Deus, ut sermo meus adeo commodus sit, quam sit accommodus, God grant my speech may be as profitable as it is seasonable.

Ver. 30. I was fasting until, &c.] Fulness breeds forgetfulness; but fasting maketh a man capable of heavenly visions of divine glory. The three great fasters, Christ, Moses, and Elias, met gloriously in Mount Tabor.

Ver. 31. Cornelius, thy prayer is heard] This was a singular happiness, and a sure seal of his good estate to Godward, #Ps 66:18,19 Joh 9:31. Every access to God with success, every gracious return of prayer, sealet up this comfort to the soul, that since He that hath the keys of David hath once opened unto us not only a door of utterance, but a door of entrance to the throne of grace, it shall never be shut again any more.

Ver. 32. He is lodged, &c.] God takes notice of every circumstance of his people's affairs; their very walls are ever before him, #Isa 49:16. He thinks the better of the houses they lodge in, and looks upon all that favour them with special content; "I will bless them that bless thee," #Ge 12:3. {See Trapp on "Ge 12:3"}

Ver. 33. Now therefore we are all, &c.] All of a mind to serve the Lord with one shoulder, #Zep 3:9; as Hezekiah's servants joined together in that laudable work of copying out those proverbs of Solomon for the Church's use, #Pr 25:1.

Present before God] Whom we look full in the face, ενωπιον, seeing him by faith who is invisible, and setting ourselves to receive the law at his mouth, to hear the word, not of a mortal man, but of the everliving God.

To hear all things] sc. With due reverence and diligence; not to jeer at anything that is commanded thee of God, that hath the stamp and impress of God upon it, that comes cum privilegio, and appears to be cor et anima Dei (as Gregory calleth the word), the counsel and mind of God. Lo, these were right hearers. Oh for such in this day! Ours (alas) have corpora in sacellis, animos in sacculis, as Ezekiel's had, #Eze 33:31, and as serpents have their bodies in the water, but their heads out.

Ver. 34. No respecter of persons] That is, of their outward state and condition, as country, sex, wealth, wisdom, &c. Outward things neither help nor hurt, please nor displease God, but as they are in a good or bad man; as a cipher by itself is nothing, but a figure being set before it, it increaseth the sum.

Ver. 35. He that feareth him and worketh righteousness] This is the whole duty of man, as #Ec 12:13. His duobus membris comprehenditur totius vitae integritas. (Calvin.)

Ver. 36. Preaching peace] For God speaks peace to his people; he creates the fruit of the lips to be peace; he, by his promises powerfully applied, lodgeth a blessed calm in the conscience, and saith to the distempered affections, Peace, and Be still, hushing all; for he is Lord of all.

Ver. 37. After the baptism] See how orderly Peter preacheth (like as Luke writeth, καθεξής, sigillatim), giving his hearers a distinct and punctual narrative of the life and death of Jesus Christ, of his offices and efficacies. To speak clearly and coherently, to cast his matter into a good mould and method, as it is not every man's happiness, so it is no small commendation to him that can skill of it; and must be endeavoured by all that would win upon their people's affections, and draw them to duty, as the Athenian orators, who were there hence called Δημαγωγοί, people leaders.

Ver. 38. Oppressed of the devil] The devil complained in the days of Diocletian that he could not give right oracles, because of the Christians. (Euseb. ii.) And those that conspired against Athanasius, cried out, that by his prayers he hindered their proceedings. (Ruffin. i. 33.) The soldiers that went against the Angrognians, told their captain that the ministers of that place, with their prayers, so conjured and bewitched them, that they could not fight.

Ver. 39. And we are witnesses] Eye-witnesses (which are far better than ear-witnesses) and ancient witnesses, such as of whom Aristotle saith, πιστοτατοι οι παλαιοι αδιαφοροι γαρ; the more ancient the more credible. Plus valet oculatus testis unus quam auriti decem. (Plaut.)

Ver. 40. Him God raised] Christ's death he despatcheth in a word, as a thing well known. His resurrection (because more questioned, and of greater moment to beget faith) he more largely discourseth.

Ver. 41. Eat and drink with him] In nihilam abiit cibus post resurrectionem sumptus.

Ver. 42. Ordained of God] Gr. ωρισμενος, determined, and by definitive sentence concluded.

Ver. 43. Shall receive remission of sins] Together with all the purchase of his passion. But this is instanced as a principal piece thereof, and worthily. David had a crown of pure gold upon his head, #Ps 21:3, but he blesseth God for a better crown, #Ps 103:3,4, viz. pardon of sin.

Ver. 44. While Peter spake; &c.] As manna descended in the dew, so doth the Holy Ghost in and by the preaching of the word, #Ga 3:2 Isa 30:20,21.

Ver. 45. {See Trapp on "Ac 10:23"}

Ver. 46. Spake with tongues] This diversity of tongues, laid at first on mankind as a curse, #Ge 11:1-9, God turned into a blessing to his Church, which yet some of the Christian Corinthians abused to pomp and ostentation, #1Co 14; which, as copperas, will turn milk into ink; or as leaven, which turns a very passover into pollution.

Ver. 47. Can forbid water] Plain water, without oil, salt, spittle, cream, or other popish additaments.

Ver. 48. To be baptized] The use of the sacraments is to seal up adoption in infants, and faith in those of riper years.

And he commanded them to be baptized] And so to be incorporated into Christ's body the Church: that they might be saved by the "washing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost," #Tit 3:5. It is a noble question in divinity, seeing regeneration is attributed both to the word and to baptism, how the one worketh it differently from the other? Or, if both work it, why is not one superfluous?

Chapter 11

Ver. 1. Had also received the word] Not only informed, but reformed: yea, so transformed the Churches were into the same image of the word from glory to glory, that they became at length conformed to Christ in holiness and righteousness.

Ver. 2. Contended with him] They should rather have commended him: so hard it is to part with a rooted error: so ordinary it is for faithful ministers to meet with such as will dare to reprehend what they do not comprehend, and precipitate a censure.

Ver. 3. Saying, Thou wentest in, &c.] This was now no fault, but in their conceit only. Ignorance is the mother of many mistakes, and miscarriages thereupon. How exceedingly was Job miscensured by his friends; Gideon and Jephthah by the Ephraimites, #Jud 8:1 12:1; the two tribes and half by their brethren, #Jos 22:11,12. Athanasius passed for a sacrilegious person, a profane wretch, a bloody persecutor, a blasphemer of God, &c. Cyril and Theodoret excommunicated one another for heresy, Postea comperti idem sentire, upon a mere mistake. Basil complains that he was hardly dealt with by brethren that were of the same judgment with himself, but understood him not. Augustine had suffered so long in this kind, that at length he thus resolves, Non curo illos censores qui vel non intelligendo reprehendunt, vel reprehendendo non intelligunt: I care not for those blind censurers that speak evil of what they know not, and of those they understand not. {a} Charity would teach them to take everything the best way; and not, as logicians do, sequi partem deteriolem, to pick out the worst.

Ver. 4. But Peter rehearsed] With singular modesty he seeks to satisfy them (if reason will do it), and to quench their wild fire by casting milk upon it. Zuinglius and Oecolampadius endeavoured to do the like by Luther and his disciples, but could never effect it. In the year 1533, he wrote a very bitter epistle to the Senate of Frankfort, Qua Zuinglianos Archi-diabolos appellat, e suggestu repellendos, ditione eieciendos, wherein he calleth the Zuinglians arch-devils; and judgeth that they ought to be kept out of the pulpit, driven out of the country. {a} In the year 1567, at Antwerp the Lutherans joined themselves to the Papists against the Calvinists. {b} Still Satan is thus busy, and Christians are thus malicious, that, as if they wanted enemies, they fly in one another's faces; yea, cut one another's throats: as the English and Scots do at this day, to the inconceivable grief of all the godly on both sides. Deus meliora.

{a} Scultet. Annal.

{b} Bucholcer, Chronol.

Ver. 5.-15 See the notes on that part of the former chapter whereof this is but a repetition.

Ver. 16. Then remembered I] Very seasonably; the Holy Spirit suggesting, as a remembrancer; like as the evil spirit did to those cankered kill-Christis, #Mt 27:63.

Ver. 17. What was I that I could withstand God?] Whose power is irresistible, whose will is a law, yea, Voluntas Dei, necessitas rei: and God hath put a secret instinct (as into the bee, the stork, and other creatures to do their kind, so) into all his children to submit to his will, to say Amen to God's Amen, and to put their fiat let it be done, and placet it is pleasing, to his, #Ac 21:14.

Ver. 18. They held their peace] And by their silence showed they were satisfied: as did Jonah, by shutting up his prophecy in silence, and giving God the last. It is easier to deal with 20 men's reasons than with one man's will. Convince a humble man of his error or passion, and he will yield presently; whereas a proud opinionist stands as a stake in the midst of a stream; lets all the good reason you can allege pass by him, but he stands where he was. "Nay, but we will have a king," &c. "The word that thou speakest unto us in the name of the Lord, we will not hear."

Ver. 19. Now they which were scattered abroad] {See Trapp on "Ac 8:1"}

Ver. 20. Spake unto the Grecians] Not the Grecizing Jews, {as #Ac 6:1} but the Grecians which were Gentiles, to whom the light now began to break forth, and the partition wall to be broken down.

Ver. 21. And a great number believed] God sealing his approval of what they did, by an extraordinary success. He hath a mighty hand, and can fetch in multitudes at his pleasure. We hope he is doing some such great work in New England. He can make a law to bring forth in one day, a "nation to be born at once," #Isa 66:8.

Ver. 22. And they sent forth Barnabas] A very fit man; for he was a "son of consolation," and would handle those young plants with all tenderness. Wring not men's consciences, saith Dr Sibbs, you may happen to break the wards of them if you do.

Ver. 23. That with purpose of heart] As it is recorded of Caleb, that he "fulfilled after God," #Nu 14:24. Caleb implevit post me. It stands men upon to see that their work, though it be but mean, yet it may be clean; though not fine, yet not foul, soiled and slubbered with the slur of a rotten heart. Let them consent to take whole Christ in all his offices and efficacies, and that pro termino interminabili, never to part more.

Ver. 24. For he was a good man] Few exist today.

*“ Rari quippe boni—
Iam nec Brutus erit, Bruti nec avunculus usquam.”
(Juvenal.)*

Anthony de Guevara tells a merry story of the host at Nola, who when he was commanded by the Roman censor to go and call the good men of the city to appear before him, went to the churchyard, and there called at the graves of the dead, Oh ye good men of Nola, come away, for the Roman censor calleth for your appearance: for he knew not where to call for a good man alive. The Scripture complains that there is none that doeth good, that is, none in comparison, none to the mad multitude, that, like Jeremiah's figs, are naught, stark naught. Phocion was surnamed Bonus; the Good, but the excellency of a godly man is (Barnabas-like) to be full of the Holy Ghost and of faith, to follow God fully as Caleb, #Nu 14:24; to have a heart full of goodness, as those Romans; a life full of good works, as Tabitha; shining full fair, as a right orient and illustrious star with a singularity of heavenly light, as good Noah did in his generation; and as holy Joseph whose life, saith Bucholcer, was a constellation, yea, a very heaven bespangled with brightest stars of glorious graces.

Ver. 25. Then departed Barnabas to Tarsus for to seek Saul] Not fearing to be outshined by him, who was now grown an admirable preacher, and an insatiable worshipper of Christ, <sup>{a}</sup> but seeking the setting-up of Christ's kingdom by all means possible. To rejoice in and to improve the good parts of others for a public benefit (though it eclipseth thy light), and that from the heart, this is indeed to get above others; this is more than to excel others in any excellence, if this be wanting.

Ver. 26. Called Christians] Called so by divine direction, as the word χρηματισσαι signifieth. There were, saith a learned antiquary, certain heretics who (as the Samaritans joined Jewish ceremonies with heathenish rites, so they) joined Christ and Moses, law and gospel, baptism and circumcision. (Godwin's Antiq. Heb.) Of their beginning read #Ac 15:2. These were called Nazarites; either of malice by the Jews, to bring the greater disgrace upon Christian religion, or else because at first they were true though weak Nazarites, that is, Christians misled by Peter's Judaizing at Antioch, #Ga 2:11-13. Hence it is thought that the Church at Antioch, in detestation of this newly bred heresy, fastened upon them by the name of Nazarites, forsook that name, and called themselves Christians. But what a shameful thing is it, that the most honourable name of Christian is in this day in Italy and at Rome a name of reproach, and usually abused to signify a fool or a dolt. (Fulke Not. on Rhem. Test.)

First in Antioch] Which had been the residence and bare the name of Antiochus, that bloody persecutor. Here then that prophecy was most sweetly fulfilled, #Isa 60:14 "The sons of the afflictors shall come bending to thee," &c. And so it was, somewhat over a hundred years since, at Spira in Germany, where those of the reformed religion were first called Protestants. (Parei: Medul.) Howbeit some have observed that this name is not so new, but of an ancient standing; for they fetch it from #2Ch 24:19 "Yet he sent prophets to them to bring them again unto the Lord, and they testified against them; but they would not give ear": which latter clause the Vulgate interpreter (and the Douay doctors in their English translation of the Old Testament follow him) rendereth thus: Quos Protestantibus illi audire nolebant. Dr Poyns also (a Popish writer) tells us, that it was foretold in the Old Testament that the Protestants were a malignant Church, and he allegeth for proof this place in the Chronicles, though little to his purpose. A better divine tells us Englishmen, that we were never Protestants indeed till we took the late protestation, that brought us into the band of the covenant, and is to us as circumcision once to the Israelites, a Gilgal, the rolling away of our reproach; there being nothing, as some could hit us in the teeth (but untruly and uncharitably), that made us differ from Rome but a bare proclamation.

Ver. 27. From Jerusalem unto Antioch] The Church whereof was now grown so famous by the pious labours of Paul and Barnabas, that many holy and learned men resorted thither, as to a common school or academy. {a} So did various, in our forefathers' days, to Zurich, Basil, Geneva, but especially to Wittenberg, where Luther and Melancthon laboured in the Lord's work, to the good of many:

“ Divisae his operae, sed mens fuit unica; pavit

Ore Lutherus oves, flore Melancthon apes. ”

{a} κοινον παιδευτηριον παντων ανθρωπων Sic de Athenis. Thucyd.

Ver. 28. And there stood up one] So Bishop Hooper prophesied, long before, of his own death. For, taking Mr Bullinger by the hand, at his return from Zurich, There, said he, where I take most pains you shall hear of me to be burnt to ashes. And being made bishop, he took for his arms a lamb in a fiery bush, and the sunbeams descending down upon the lamb; rightly denoting, as it seemeth, the order of his suffering, which afterward followed. So father Latimer ever affirmed of himself, that the preaching of the gospel would cost him his life; to the which he no less cheerfully prepared himself, than certainly was persuaded that Winchester was kept in the Tower (in King Edward VI's days) for the same purpose; and it proved so. In November, 1572, appeared a new star in Cassiopeia, and continued sixteen months. Theodore Beza wittily applied it to that star at Christ's birth, and to the infanticide then, and warned Charles IX, author of the French massacre, to beware, in this verse:

“ Tu vero Herodes sanguinolente time. ”

The fifth month after the vanishing of this star the said Charles, after long and grievous pains, died of exceeding bleeding. Spotswood, Archbishop of St Andrews, a deep and subtle dissembler, who had discouraged, and by degrees rooted out, most of the faithful ministers of Scotland, thought it seasonable (A. D. 1639) to repair into England, where he died a martyr, to the design of bringing in Popery and slavery. And so was the prediction of Mr Walsh, a famous Scotch minister, fulfilled upon him, who in a letter to the bishop, written 1604, told him he should die an outcast.

Great dearth throughout the world] Suetonius and Josephus make mention of this famine. It went hard when this voice was uttered in the marketplace at Rome, Pone pretium humanae carni. Let us set a price on human flesh. At Antioch in Syria, many of the Christians engaged in the holy war (as they called it) were glad, through famine, to eat the dead bodies of their recently slain enemies. This was that Antioch here mentioned in the text.

In the days of Claudius Caesar] Who was an arrant slowbelly, counted for a fool by his own mother Antonia, judged unworthy of the empire by his own sister Livilla, poisoned at length by his own wife Agrippina, and her son Nero, qui dixit boletos Θεων βρωμα ειναι, quod Claudius bolero in numerum Deorum relatus esset. The times were then so bad when he ruled the empire, ut nihil amplius virtus esse putaretur quam το γενναιως επιθανειν, saith the historian. (Dio.) What marvel, then, though God scourged the world with extreme famine; wherein the Church also was inwrapped, but graciously provided for, as ever she is in a common calamity.

Ver. 29. Every man according] For to stretch beyond the staple is to mar all. A good man showeth mercy, but yet ordereth his affairs with discretion, #Ps 112:5.

Ver. 30. Which also they did] Nos non eloquimur magna, sed vivimus, said the primitive Christians. This age aboundeth with mouth mercy (Go, and be fed, warmed, &c., #Jas 2:14-26), which is good cheap. But a little handful were better than a great many such mouthfuls.

By the hands of Barnabas and Saul] Paul prays hard that this their service might be accepted by the saints, #Ro 15:31, though one would think they should be very welcome, coming on such an errand.

Chapter 12

Ver. 1. Now about that time] That the famine lay sore upon the Church. Afflictions seldom come single. The saints usually fall into various temptations at once, #Jas 1:2. Fluctus fluctum trudit. Job's messengers tread one upon the heels of another.

Herod the king] Nephew to Herod the Great, brother to Herodias, and father to that Agrippa, #Ac 25:13.

Ver. 2. And he killed James the brother] So styled to distinguish him from the other James, called James the Less, kinsman to Christ, and bishop of Jerusalem, as the ancients style him. (Chrysost. Hom. xxxiii, in Act.) It was wonder that Herod killed no more, seeing this took so well with the people, whose favour he coveted. When Stephen the protomartyr of the Church was stoned, Dorotheus testifieth that two thousand other believers were put to death the same day; but God hath set bounds to that sea of malice that is in persecutors' hearts, which they cannot go beyond: #Ps 76:10 "The remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain."

Ver. 3. And because he saw, &c.] Seianus ferox scelerum, quia prima provenerunt, saith Tacitus. It is an old trick of tyrants to curry favour with the wicked, by shedding the blood of the godly.

Ver. 4. To bring him forth to the people] But God had otherwise determined. Sciat Cels. Vestra, saith Luther in a letter to the Elector of Saxony, et nihil dubitet longe aliter in caelo quam Norimbergae de hoc negotio conclusum esse, i.e. God in heaven hath decreed otherwise of this business than the emperor hath at Nuremberg; and the will of the Lord must be done, when all is done. "Yet have I set my King," &c., #Ps 2:6.

Ver. 5. Earnest prayer was made] Oratio sine malis, est ut avis sine alis. These good souls strained and stretched out themselves in prayer εκτενης, as men do that are running in a race, Puriores coelo afflictione facti, as Chrysostom saith of them.

Ver. 6. Peter was sleeping] As having cast himself into God's everlasting arms. So did David, #Ps 3:5. So did Mr Rogers, our protomartyr in Queen Mary's days, when he was warned suddenly to prepare for the fire, he then being found asleep, scarcely with much shogging could be awakened; at length being raised and bidden to make haste, then (said he) if it be so, I need not to tie my points.

Ver. 7. And a light shined in the prison] Gr. εν τῷ οικηματι, in the habitacle or conclave. So Solon first called the prison at Athens. So Petronius told Csesar he had rather be with Cato εν οικηματι, in the prison house, than with him in the senate house.

And he smote Peter on the side, &c.] Cuthbert Simon, a martyr in Queen Mary's days, about midnight, being in prison (whether in a slumber or awake, I cannot tell, saith Mr Fox), heard one coming in, first opening the outward door, then the second, afterward the third, and so looking in to the said Cuthbert, having no candle or torch that he could see, but giving a brightness or light most comfortable to his heart, saying Ha unto him, and departed again. Who it was he could not tell, nor I dare define. This that he saw he declared often to many; at the sight whereof he received such joyful comfort, that he also expressed no little solace in telling and declaring the same.

His chains fell from off his hands] Prisoners were bound with one or two chains to one or two soldiers, who (as keepers) were also bound with the same chains.

Ver. 8. And follow me] See here how by degrees (and not all at once) God oftentimes sendeth forth his prisoners (his afflicted ones) out of the pit wherein is no water, #Zec 9:11. He is a "God of judgment," and waits a fit time to deal forth his favours, #Isa 30:18; he crumbles his mercies, as the cloud dissolves drops rain upon the earth; we have his blessings by retail, to maintain commerce and communion between him and us. Have patience, therefore, and wait for full deliverance. We know not what we lose by making haste, and not holding up our hands, as Moses did, to the going down of the sun. If God have begun to enlarge us, he will in due time do it to the full. If we should not be in straits sometimes, God should have "no tribute from us"; as those malignants suggested against those returned captives, #Ezr 4:13.

Ver. 9. And wist not that it was true] So #Ps 126:1. God is often better to his than their hopes, and doth exceeding abundantly for them above all that they can ask or think, #Eph 3:20. He will do so much more when they come to heaven; for then, oh, the unutterable ecstasies! At first sight, surely

Lucret.

Ver. 10. When they were passed] God could have delivered him all at once; but he knew that cito data cito vilescent, Lightly come by is lightly set by. He would have us also to weigh well the several passages and circumstances of our deliverance, that he may have the honour of all. Hence those catalogues in Scripture, with an enumeration of particulars. {See Trapp on "Ac 12:8"}

Ver. 11. Now I know of a surety] Faith cannot be idle, or ungrateful for benefits received. If Peter have none else to tell it to, he will tell himself what God had done for him by his angel; and what great cause he had to be really and substantially thankful. So doth David, #Ps 103:1-4, &c. A good man can never be alone; for, in defect of other company, he can fruitfully converse with himself, and commune with his own conscience, and thereupon lift up many a humble, joyful, and thankful heart to God.

Ver. 12. Where many were gathered together praying] Great is the force of joint prayer, when Christians set upon God quasi manu facta, as in Tertullian's time, they sacked and ransacked heaven by their prayers. Preces fundimus, caelum tundimus, misericordiam extorquemus, saith he. We beseech not God only, but we besiege him too; we beg not barely, but bounce at heaven's gates.

Ver. 13. To hearken] Before she opened, lest some pursuivant or such like evil angel at that time of the night should have haunted them. Opposition is Evangelii genius, the life of the church, saith Calvin, Piety is no target against persecution.

Ver. 14. She opened not the door for gladness] For "fear and great joy," as those other good women, #Mt 28:8, who had their passions; which stoics allow not in their wiseman, nor popish padres in their wretched novices.

Ver. 15. It is his angel] Or, it is his messenger, or one come from him. See a like place, #Lu 7:24. Angels use not to stand at door and knock, and wait for an opening. Fernelius (holding that each saint hath his angel-guardian) tells us out of the rabbins, that Adam's angel was called Razel, Abraham's Zachel, Isaac's Raphael, Jacob's Peniel, and Moses' Metraton. But this may as well pass for a Jewish fable.

Ver. 16. But Peter continued knocking] He flung not away in displeasure, because not at first knock admitted. We must also continue instant in prayer. The hand of faith never knocked in vain at the gate of grace; but then, it "maketh not haste," it can willingly wait in hope of a good use and issue of all; yea, it can be content to want that particular blessing it would have; as knowing that God's people shall reap if they faint not; they shall certainly have their prayers out, either in money or money's worth.

Ver. 17. And he departed and went] Cedendum quidem interdum furori, sed ita ut nihilo negligentius fiat opus Domini, saith Beza here; who also proves that he went not now to Rome, as the Papists would have it; though Bellarmino holds it not de fide, concerning the faith, that he was ever there.

Ver. 18. There was no small stir] Huddle or hubbub, ταραχος, with fear and care how they should answer it; but this was but part of their punishment, and the least part too; there was a worse matter followed, #Ac 12:19. Lo, so it fareth with all graceless persons. They are not without their crosses here, but the worst is behind. What they feel here is but a typical hell, a foretaste of eternal torment. All their present sufferings are but as drops of wrath forerunning the great storm, a crack foregoing the ruin of the whole house. The leaves only of the tree fall upon them here; the tree itself will shortly fall upon them, and crush them to pieces.

Ver. 19. That they should be put to death] This was just in God, but unjust in Herod. He is safest that hath least to do with tyrants.

Ver. 20. Because their country, &c.] Should not God's manifold mercies move us to make peace with him? Will he not else curse our blessings, and destroy us "after that he hath done us good?" #Jos 24:20.

Ver. 21. And upon a set day] When there were solemn shows and plays acted in honour of Caesar. God picks out his time to be avenged on his enemies, then when it may be most for his glory and their utter confusion.

Herod arrayed in royal apparel] In cloth of silver, saith Josephus, which being beaten upon by the sunbeams, dazzled the people's eyes, and drew from them that blasphemous acclamation, Hunc homines decorant, quem vestimenta decorant, εματα ανηρ. The most (as it is said of the Bohemian cur) fawn upon a good suit. It was a fault of old, #Jas 2:3.

Ver. 22. It is the voice of a god] ηδιστον ακουσμα επαινος, saith Xenophon. Men naturally hear nothing with more delight than their own commendation; fair words make fools vain, put them into their paradise. How much better Charles V, who coming to Paris, and entertained with a speech by one of the king's counsellors, that tended much to his commendation; answered, Ideo sibi gratam esse orationem quod eum commune fecisset quod talis esse deberet, i.e. That the orator rather taught him what he ought to be than told him what he had been.

Ver. 23. Because he gave not glory] Joseph is trusted with all Potiphar's goods, not with his wife: Glory is God's beloved Spouse; in the enjoying whereof he is a jealous God, admitting no co-rivul, in heaven or earth, #Isa 42:8; to look upon it, and lust after it, is to commit spiritual adultery with it in our hearts.

And he was eaten of worms] σκοληκοβρωτος. Or with lice, as his grandfather Herod had been before him; as the tyrant Maximinus (who had set forth his proclamation engraven in brass, for the utter abolishing of Christ and his religion) was after him. {a} So was Philip II, king of Spain, who swore he had rather have no subjects than Lutheran subjects. And when he had very narrowly escaped drowning in a shipwreck, he said he was delivered by the singular providence of God to root out Lutheranism; which he presently began to do, &c. But God was even with him soon after. See Scriban. de Institut. Princip. xx. An evil end also befell Diagoras the atheist; who when he had made a famous oration against a deity, the people came applauding him, and said he had almost persuaded them, but only they thought that if any were God, he was for his eloquence' sake; whereupon this wretch, like Herod, was content to be thought a god; which soon wrought his ruin. Good therefore is the counsel of the apostle, "Let us not be desirous of vain glory," of popular applause; which what is it else but a blast of stinking breath, a meteor that liveth in the air, a Magnum nihil, a glorious fancy, #Ga 5:26; and if derogatory to God's honour, as here, it proves pernicious and destructive.

And gave up the ghost] His death was precationis opus potius quam morbi, as it was said of Arius the heretic, who was brought to confusion by the prayers of Alexander the good bishop of Constantinople. (Socrat. lib. i. cap. 15.) Josephus saith, Herod at his death much complained of the people's vanity in deifying him. But no man is flattered by another that hath not first flattered himself.

{a} Sic et Sulla pediculari morbo perit. Plutarch.

Ver. 24. But the word of God] The Church is invincible; and truth may be oppressed a while, but not utterly suppressed. The Israelites never increased so as when Pharaoh kept them under. Fish thrive best in salt waters. The ground that is most harrowed is most fruitful. Camomile, the more you tread it the more you spread it, and the palm tree's posy is, Nec premor nec perimor. Neither overwhelmed nor destroyed. All the power of the empire could not prevail against Luther.

Chapter 13

Ver. 1. Now there were, &c.] Bishop Ridley expounded the Acts and Paul's Epistles every morning in his family, giving to every man a New Testament, hiring them besides with money to learn by heart certain principal chapters, but especially this thirteenth chapter of the Acts.

Herod's foster brother] Puer collactaneus, συντροφος, one that had sucked of the same milk with Herod Antipas, who beheaded the Baptist. The love of foster brothers in Ireland (saith Camden) far surpasseth all the loves of all men. But Manaen hated all for Christ.

Ver. 2. As they ministered] λειτουργωντων. The Greek Scholiast hath it, κηρυττωντων, "as they preached," which is the chief office of a minister, and his highest honour. Others interpret it, "as they prayed," so the Syriac and Arabic. The Papists only, "as they sacrificed," to countenance their abominable idol of the mass.

Ver. 3. Laid their hands on them] So separating and consecrating them to the work, as they did of old the beast for sacrifice, by laying their hands thereon.

Ver. 4. Sailed to Cyprus] This island was anciently for its wealth called Macaria, that is, The Blessed. The people therein generally lived so at ease and pleasure, that thereof the island was dedicated to Venus, who was at Paphos especially worshipped, and much filthiness committed; yet thither are these apostles directed by the Holy Ghost, and a great man (with many others) converted to the faith. The Romans were invited by the wealth of the place to overrun it, Ita ut ius eius insulae avarius magis quam iustus simus assequuti, saith Sextus Rufus. But Christ (of his free grace) without any such motive, seized upon it by his gospel, and gathered a Church in it.

Ver. 5. At Salamis] A city of Cyprus, at the east side of it, over against Syria.

Ver. 6. Whose name was Barjesus] The son of Jesus; so he had called himself, as if of nearest alliance to our Saviour. The Syriac hath it Barshuma, the son of name or renown.

Ver. 7. Which was with the deputy] The greater opposites to the truth have been ever the greatest courtiers. The Arians in their age. And of them the Jesuits learned it, and of them the Arminians, as Utenbogardus in the Low Countries, and Canterbury here.

Ver. 8. But Elymas] Elymais is a part of Persia, the proper country of the magicians given to devilish arts. The devil daily commits the sin against the Holy Ghost, by opposing the known truth.

Ver. 9. Who also is called Paul] Here Saul is first called Paul, for memory (it is probable) of the first spoils he brought into the Church, not the head, but the heart of this Sergius Paulus. The popes likewise change their names at their enthronization, to show, saith the Gloss, ad permutationem nominis, factam mutationem hominis. But if they change at all, it is for the worse, as Pius Secundus, Sextus Quintus, &c. Pope Marcellus would needs retain his old name, to show his constancy, and that in his private estate he had thoughts worthy of the popedom.

Set his eyes on him] As if he would have looked through him. After which lightning followed that terrible thunder crack, #Ac 13:10. Bajazet, of his fiery looks, was surnamed Gilderun, or lightning. In Tamerlane's eyes sat such a rare majesty, as a man could hardly endure to behold them without closing his own; and many with talking with him, and often beholding them, became dumb. The like is reported of Augustus. And of St Basil it is reported that when Valens the Arian emperor came unto him, while he was in his holy exercises, it struck such a terror into the emperor that he reeled and had fallen had he not been upheld by those that were near him. {a} Godly men have a daunting presence.

Ver. 10. O full of all subtilty and all mischief] Gr. ραδιουργία, maleficiency, thou that by long dealing hast gotten a dexterity in evil doing. This was plain dealing, such as Master Philpot, martyr, used to Morgan, and other popelings that set upon him; such as Maris, the blind bishop of Bithynia, used to Julian the Apostate. For when Julian had said to him, Behold, thou art blind; thinkest thou that the Galilean thy God careth for thee? Maris replied, O tu impie Apostata! gratias ago Deo meo, qui me caecum reddidit, ne vultum tuum videam ita ad impietatem prolapsus: O thou wicked apostate! I bless my Lord Christ who hath made me blind, that I might not see thy cursed countenance. When Servetus condemned Zuinglius for his harsh handling of him, he answers, In aliis mansuetus ero; in blasphemiiis in Christum non ita: In other things I will use mildness, but not in dealing with those that blaspheme Christ. {a} Mihi sane Auxentius erit diabolus quamdiu Arianus, said Hilary, I shall think Auxentias to be no better than a devil so long as he continues an Arian.

Enemy of all righteousness] The adulterer is an enemy to chastity, the drunkard to sobriety, &c., but he that hindereth others from heaven is an enemy to all righteousness.

To pervert the right ways] To dig them up, to ditch them over (διαστρεφών), so as they are not passable. The conversion of great men is of great consequence. Hence Paul was so loth to lose the proconsul.

{a} Epist. in Servet.

Ver. 11. Not seeing the sun] A philosopher being asked whether it were not a pleasant thing to see the sun? answered, that is τυφλου το ερωτημα, a blind man's question. Life without light is a lifeless life.

Ver. 12. Being astonished, &c.] The word worketh not kindly till it be received with admiration.

Ver. 13. John departing from] Being weary of the work, he showed them a slippery trick. Many will do something for God that will suffer little or nothing for him. The king of Navarre told Beza he would launch no further into the sea than he would be sure to return safe to the haven. {a} Though he showed some countenance to religion, yet he would be sure to save himself.

Ver. 14. They sat down] Bullinger's note here is very good. Non importune nec impudenter se ingerunt Paulus et Barnabas, nec more Anabaptistarum clamitant, Audite verbum Domini, poenitentiam agile; sed silentes expectant dicendi occasionem. Paul and Barnabas do not importunately and impudently thrust themselves into the pulpit, nor do they cry out (after the manner of the Anabaptists), Hear the word of the Lord, repent of your sins, &c., but they wait in silence for a fit opportunity, and till they are called to speak.

Ver. 15. And after the reading] In the synagogues, the Scripture was first read, and then opened and applied; so it ought to be in the Christian churches.

If ye have any word of exhortation] {See Trapp on "Ac 9:15"}

Ver. 16. And ye that fear God] This is the proper character of an Israelite indeed.

Ver. 17. Chose our fathers] Separating them by a wonderful separation, as the Hebrew word signifieth, #Ex 33:16.

Ver. 18. Suffered he their manners] ετροποφορησεν, As a mother bears with her child's frowardness; or as a husband bears with his wife's crossness, which yet he liketh not, Uxoritis vitium, aut tollendum nut tolerandum, saith Varro in Agellius.

Ver. 19. And when he had destroyed seven nations] Who had "filled the land from one end to another with their uncleanness," #Ezr 9:11; so that God was forced to sweep it with the besom of destruction; like as, before that, the face of the old world was grown so foul that God was fain to wash it with a flood.

Ver. 20. About the space, &c.] It was not all out so long; therefore he saith, "about the space," ωσει; thereby teaching us in doubtful things to deliver ourselves doubtfully, and not to be overconfident. See #Joh 4:6.

Ver. 21. By the space of forty years] Taking into the account the days of Samuel's government.

Ver. 22. Fulfil all my will] Gr. θεληματα "all my wills," to note the universality and sincerity of his obedience. We should therefore strive to do all the wills of God, because we have done heretofore all the wills of the flesh, #Eph 2:2.

Ver. 23. A Saviour, Jesus] The Greek word here rendered Saviour is so emphatic, that other tongues can hardly find a fit word to express it, as Cicero noteth. Sotera inscriptum vidi Syracusis. Hoc quantum est? Ita magnum ut Latino nno verbo exprimi non possit.

Ver. 24. The baptism of repentance] {See Trapp no "Lu 3:3"}

Ver. 25. John fulfilled his course] From this word (δρομον) rendered "course," the dromedary hath his name, who is marvellously swift, and will run a hundred miles a day. But the Germans call a dull and slow man a dromedary, per antiphrasin. (Minshew.)

Ver. 26. The word of this salvation] Salvation is potentially in the word, as the harvest is in the seed.

Ver. 27. Read every sabbath] Many live in places of great knowledge, and yet remain grossly ignorant, understand no more what they read or hear than a cowherd doth the most abstruse precepts of astronomy.

Ver. 28. {See Trapp on "Mt 27:22"}

Ver. 29. And when they had fulfilled] Though no thank to them, no excuse to their wickedness. Divinum consilium dum devitatur, impletur. But whereas all is fulfilled that was foretold, that plainly proves that Jesus was the Christ, and that our redemption by Christ was a plot of God's own laying.

Ver. 30. {See Trapp on "Mt 28:6"}

Ver. 31. Who are his witnesses to the people] Of our Saviour's resurrection there were many witnesses, both living (as the angels, the women, the soldiers, the apostles, those 500 brethren at once, #1Co 15:6) and dead (such as were the earthquake, the empty grave, the stone rolled away, the clothes wrapt up together, &c.), and all little enough. But "why should it be thought a thing incredible that God should raise the dead?" #Ac 26:8. {See Trapp on "Ac 26:8"}

Ver. 32. And we declare unto you glad tidings] Even the sum of all the good news in the world, and that which should swallow up all discontents. The old Church had επαγγελιαν, the promise only; but we now have ευαγγελιαν, the joyful tidings, good news from heaven.

Ver. 33. In the second Psalm] Erasmus testifieth, that some ancient copies here have it, "in the first Psalm"; either because the first and second were of old but one Psalm, or because the first is not properly a Psalm, but a preface to the Psalms; like as the 119th Psalm is set (saith one) as a poem of commendation before the book of God, mentioning it in every verse, testimonies, laws, statutes, word, &c.

This day have I begotten thee] That is, I have this day of thy manifestation in the flesh made known that thou art my Son, as well by my testimony of thee as by thine assumption of humun nature.

Ver. 34. To return to corruption] That is, to the grave, that house of corruption; which yet the Hebrews call Beth chajim, the house of the living, because of the promise "thy dead men shall live," &c. The Germans call the place of burial God's Acre, because the dead body, though sown there in corruption, yet riseth again in incorruption.

Ver. 35. {See Trapp on "Ac 2:31"}

Ver. 36. After he had served] Martinus decumbens, Domino, dixit, si adhuc populo tuo sum necessarius, non recuso laborem. Lord, serve thyself upon me, and then let me depart in peace. (Sever. Epist. iii.)

Ver. 37. Saw no corruption] No consumption of the flesh, much less of the bones too, καταφθοραν; only he saw φθοραν, a separation of soul and body for a season, διαφθοραν; though neither soul nor body was at all by death sundered from the Deity. But as a man that draws a knife, and holds still the knife in one hand and the sheath in the other, the knife and sheath are separated the one from the other, but neither of them is sundered from him that holdeth them, so here.

Ver. 38. Be it known unto you therefore] q.d. It is a shame for any not to take knowledge of this which is so fundamental. Of other things a man may be ignorant without danger of damnation; but not of this. This is a principal piece of Quicunque vult.

Ver. 39. And by him all that believe are justified] This saying of St Paul is the more to be heeded, saith an interpreter, because it is the very basis, foundation, and state of Christian religion, whereby it is distinguished from all other religions whatsoever. Jews, Turks, Pagans, and Papists explode an imputed righteousness; as if we could not be justified by the righteousness of Christ apprehended by faith. The Papists (as Saul) forbid us to eat of this honey, this precious comfort in Christ (viz. justification by faith alone), as if hereby we should be hindered in our pursuit against sin; whereas indeed it is the only strength and help against it. Hold fast therefore the faithful word; and transmit this doctrine safe and sound to posterity. It was Luther's great fear, that when he was dead it would be lost again out of the world.

Ver. 40. Beware therefore lest] Ministers must mix law and gospel together in their discourses. Sour and sweet make the best sauce.

Ver. 41. Behold, ye despisers] These the Scripture makes to be the worst sort of men; those that jeer when they should fear, and despise what they should give greatest regard unto; hell even gapes for such, though they will not be persuaded so, till it be all too late; as Pliny saith of moles, that they begin not to see till pangs of death are upon them. He that despiseth his way shall perish, saith Solomon.

Ver. 42. The Gentiles besought] Where a powerful ministry is settled, there some souls are to be converted. A master that sets up a light hath some work to be done thereby.

Be preached to them the next sabbath] Or in the interim between the two sabbaths. A warrant for week day lectures, Intra proxime sequens sabbatum, interiectum tempus significatur; saith Beza.

Ver. 43. To continue in the grace] The end is better than the beginning, saith Solomon. Non quaeruntur in Christianis initia sed finis, saith Jerome.

Ver. 44. And the next sabbath day] The apostles had been busy with them on the foregoing week days, the better to prepare them to hear with profit on the sabbath, that queen of days, as the Hebrews call it.

Ver. 45. Contradicting and blaspheming] Intemperate tongues cause God many times to take away the word.

Ver. 46. But seeing ye put it from you] Gr. ἀπωθησθε. Ye shove and thrust it from you, as it were with sides and shoulders; noting their desperate incredulity and obstinace. And this was the very period of that day of grace spoken of by our Saviour, #Lu 19:42 "Oh, if thou hadst known, at the least in thy day," &c. Now that the offer was made so fully and clearly, how could they escape that neglected so great salvation?

Ver. 47. I have set thee] This, spoken at first to Christ, is here applied to his messengers and ministers, who are labourers together with Christ, #1Co 3:9, and are in Scripture called both lights and saviours, #Mt 5:14 Ob 21 1Ti 4:16.

Ver. 48. Glorified in the word] That is, received it into their hearts (as some copies read this text, εδεξαντο), suffering it to indwell richly in them (as becometh such a guest), #Col 3:16; yea, to rule and bear sway, yielding thereunto the obedience of faith, which is the greatest honour that can be done to the word; as the contrary is, to despise prophesying, #1Th 5:19, to cast God's word behind our backs, #Ps 50:17, to trample on it; which the very Jews and Turks are so far from, that they carefully take up any paper that lieth on the ground, lest it should be any part of the Scripture, or have the name of God written in it. (Paraeus, Proleg. in Gen.)

As many as were ordained, &c.] Election therefore is the fountain, whence faith floweth; men are not elected of faith foreseen, and because they believe, as the Arminians would have it.

Ver. 49. And the word of the Lord] It ran and was glorified, as the apostle hath it. So fitly is it compared to leaven, for its spreading property, #Mt 13:33. {See Trapp on "Mt 13:33"}

Ver. 50. The devout and honourable women] Satan per costam tanquam per scalam ad cor ascendit. (Gregory.) The devil breaketh many a man's head with his own rib. When the hen is suffered to crow, much evil ensueth. Satan makes use of women still to hinder men from heaven.

But the Jews] Stirred up by Satan, who cannot brook the dilatation of Christ's curtains.

Ver. 51. {See Trapp on "Mt 10:14"}

Ver. 52. With joy, and with the Holy Ghost] There must needs be music in the Spirit's temple, and at that continual feast: its deserts are the assurance of heaven, as Father Latimer phraseth it. #2Th 3:1 Pr 15:15.

Chapter 14

Ver. 1. And it came to pass in Iconium] {See Trapp on "Ac 8:1"}

Ver. 2. Made their minds evil affected] Envenomed (εκακωσαν) their minds with rage against the brethren, but God made peace, as the ancient copies add here, Beza from Beda. His peace that passeth all understanding guarded their hearts and minds in Christ Jesus.

Ver. 3. Which gave testimony to the word] It is usual with St Luke to oppose the good success of the gospel to the malicious actings of the mad world against it; that God's people might not be discouraged.

Ver. 4. But the multitude was divided] εσχισθη, Scinditur incertum studia in contraria vulgus. Christ came not to send peace, but a sword. Yet is not he the cause of division, but the occasion only, and that by accident. (So sin is the occasion, not the cause, that grace aboundeth.) They that quarrel at God's ordinances for this may as well quarrel at the Lord's supper; which though a sacrament of love, a communion, yet hath occasioned much dissension: witness that bellum Sacramentarium, than the which never any kindled sooner is quenched slower.

Ver. 5. And to stone them] Stephen had the maidenhead of this kind of death: as that martyr, who was threatened with whipping, wished that he might have the maidenhead of that kind of suffering (for he had not heard of any that had been so served): and as Basil, threatened by Valens with death, cried out, ειθε γενοιτο μοι, I would it might be so.

Ver. 6. Fled unto Lystra] They had their Lord's good leave to do so, #Mt 10:23. He had made them, not as butts, to be perpetually shot at; but as the marks of rovers, movable, as the wind and sun may best serve.

Ver. 7. And there they preached the gospel] Which shows that their flying proceeded from prudence, and not from inconstance, lightness, or cowardice.

Ver. 8. And there sat a certain man] This was (likely) one of those many miracles done at Lystra; a signal one, and therefore instanced.

Ver. 9. Perceiving that he had faith] Not by any skill he had in physiognomy, {a} but by special revelation; without the which, strong confidence one may have of another man's true grace, but no certainty either of sense or of science.

{a} The foretelling of destiny or future fortune from the features and lines of the face, OED

Ver. 10. And he leaped and walked] Together with Paul's word there went forth a power: so there doth in all holy ordinances; #Ps 146:8 "The Lord giveth sight to the blind, he raiseth up the crooked, he loveth the righteous." This cripple might be very well one of those righteous, whom God out of his special love restored to the use of his limbs. A favour that he granteth sometimes to the wicked, whom yet he loveth not.

Ver. 11. The gods are come down] See the force of an evil custom, and of a vain conversation, received by tradition from the fathers, #1Pe 1:18: these Lycaonians had heard out of the fables of their poets that Jupiter and Mercury came down of old to visit Lycaon their progenitor, and that for the discourtesy he offered them, they transformed him into a wolf. Hereupon they used to offer sacrifice to those dunghill deities, and now they suppose they have them in human shape among them.

Ver. 12. He was the chief speaker] Gr. ηγουμενος του λογου, a master of speech. Paul was another Pericles, who thundered and lightened in his orations; {a} another Phocion, who was επιειν δεινοτατος, saith Plutarch, a most powerful speaker; another Cyneas, who conquered more cities by his eloquence than his master Pyrrhus did by his puissance. In Rogers and Bradford, martyrs, it was hard to say whether there were more force of eloquence and utterance in preaching (saith Mr Fox) or more holiness of life and conversation. Paul was eminent in both.

Ver. 13. And would have done sacrifice] So the savages of Nova Albion, as they were very much taken with our singing of Psalms and other holy exercises (saith Sir Francis Drake) while we were among them; so when they could not prevail with us to stay longer there, they stole upon us a sacrifice, and set it on fire ere we were aware. We laboured by all means to withhold or withdraw them, but could not prevail; till at last we fell to prayers and singing of Psalms, whereby they were allured immediately to forget their folly, and leave their sacrifice unconsumed (for they supposed us to be gods indeed): suffering the fire to go out, and imitating us in all our actions, they fell a lifting up their hands and eyes to heaven, as they saw us to do.

Ver. 14. They rent off their clothes] In token of their holy indignation and utter detestation; they knew the Lord's jealousy would soon smoke against any that shall but cast a lustful look at his glory (which is as his wife, and which he will "by no means give unto another," #Isa 42:8). By this act of theirs therefore they show how they abhorred the motion or mention of any such matter.

Ver. 15. Of like passions, &c.] Passions are here put for whatsoever differenceth man from the Divine nature.

Ver. 16. Suffered all nations, &c.] That we walk not as other Gentiles, in our own ways, but know and serve the true God, is of his singular grace and favour. The ancient inhabitants of this land were as barbarous and brutish as any under heaven. Cicero (De Nat. Deorum) parallels the Britons and Scythians. Jerome ever sets them in opposition to some other nation that is most tamed and civilized. Sed Britannorum inaccessa Romanis loca Christo tamen subdita, saith Tertullian. Christ subdued those whom the Romans could never come at to conquer.

Ver. 17. He left not himself] Here they might object, that God in suffering men so to wander, showed not himself so kind and bountiful. The apostle answers, that God had sufficiently sealed up his general love and goodness, in doing good, giving rain from heaven, &c. Stars are the storehouses of God's good treasure, which he openeth to our profit, #De 28:12. By their influence they make a scatter of riches upon the earth, which good men gather, bad men scramble for. Every of the heavenly bodies is a purse of gold, out of which God throws down riches and plenty upon the earth.

And fruitful seasons] If St Paul had thought well of the Sibyl's oracles (saith learned Beza) it was wonder he had not here mentioned them. Casaubon and Obsopaeus reckon them for no better than officious lies.

Ver. 18. Scarce restrained they the people] See #Ac 14:13. Man's nature is marvellously prone to idolatry, and the devil helps after; for he is εἰδωλοχαρής, saith Synesius; for he knows that creature worship is devil worship, #Ps 106:37 Re 9:20.

Ver. 19. And there came thither] The devil, when he is driven to his last shift, stirs up his instruments to use violence, which yet prevaieth not.

And having stoned Paul] At Athens, if the comedians pleased not the people, they were overwhelmed with stones. This was hard measure; yet such as ministers many times meet with. But what a strange change was here on a sudden! was there no mean between deifying and stoning? How soon turns the wind into a contrary corner! Varium et mutabile vulgus. Neutrum mode; mas mode vulgus.

Ver. 20. He rose up] He starts up when stoned with a sic, sic oportet intrare; so heaven is gotten by pains, by patience, by violence, persecution being our inseparable companion. Sic petitur caelum.

Ver. 21. They returned again to Lystra] The love of Christ constrained them to imperil themselves for his glory; for the promoting whereof they loved not their lives unto the death, #Re 12:11. The lodestone, we know, draweth iron; yea, sendeth forth his attractive virtue to the absent needle, through the box of wood, wherein it is inclosed; and pierceth through the table to the iron under it. Let our love to Jesus Christ break through all.

Ver. 22. We must through much tribulation] Plana via ad patriam coelestem est crux, saith Malcolm. If there be any way on horseback to heaven, surely this is the way, said another martyr (Bradford.) If any think to go to heaven without tribulation, he must (as the emperor Constantine told the heretic Acesias) Erigito scalam et solus ascendito, erect a ladder, and go up alone. Some there are that take up a delicate profession; they would divide between Christ and his cross, but they are fairly mistaken. Some think to go to heaven in a whirlwind, or as the passengers at sea, be brought to the haven sleeping. But what saith Zanchy, Non decet ut sub capite spinis coronate vivant membra in deliciis. Neque frumenta in horreum reponuntur, nisi flabellis bene a paleis, aristis, et glumis repurgata. Neque lapides in temple Solomonis collocantur, nisi scalpellis et malleis bene coesi. If the head were crowned with thorns, the members must not dream of a delicacy. The stones were not set into Solomon's temple till hewn, neither is the corn brought into the garner till winnowed.

Ver. 23. Ordained them elders] Giving their votes by lifting up their hands, after the fashion of the Greeks, χειροτονησαντες; whence that of Cicero, porrexerunt manus, psephisma natum est. Or else laying on their hands, as the apostles used to do in ordaining of ministers. Stephanus saith, that this word when it governeth an accusative case (as here it doth) signifies not to "give suffrage," but to "create, ordain, elect."

Ver. 24. And after they had passed through Pisidia] At Antioch in this country they had planted a Church before. {See #Ac 13:14,15, &c.} Now being to return to the other Antioch in Syria (whence they had been sent out at first), they pass through Pamphylia, a country that lay toward the mountain Taurus.

Ver. 26. Recommended to the grace of God] This shows that they set not upon the work in their own strength, but wholly depended upon the free grace of God, qua nolentem praevenit ut velit, volentem subsequitur, ne frustra velit, saith holy Augustine, who was a great advancer of grace, and abaser of nature; as being wholly of St Paul's spirit, for which the Papists sharply censure him. (Stapleton, Sixt. Senens.)

Ver. 27. Preached the word in Perga] A city of Pamphylia, much addicted to the worship of Diana, who was therehence called Pergea. Gratea nullo modo est gratia, quae non est gratuita, saith Augustine. Note this against the doctrine of merits foreseen, and freewill.

And how he had opened the door of faith] Indeed of heaven, by the preaching of the doctrine of faith: there being no other ordinary way of attaining salvation either for Jews or Gentiles, as St Paul proves in his Epistle to the Romans; <sup>{a}</sup> as in that to the Colossians, he determineth, that the soul is spoiled by philosophy, if it be not after Christ, #Col 2:8. Those school divines, therefore, qui salutem spondet absque Christi cognitione (as Acosta hath it), who open a door to heaven without faith in Christ, were much mistaken. And so were those Collen divines too, that wrote a book of the salvation of Aristotle; whom they make to be Christ's forerunner in naturals, like as John Baptist was in supernaturals.

<sup>{a}</sup> #So 8:9 "If she be a door," i.e. if she have faithful ministers, which, as a door, open the way to Christ.

Ver. 28. There they abode] As in a receptacle of rest, a place of free profession; such as Geneva hath been for many years to the persecuted Protestants, which makes the wicked Papists give out, that it is a professed sanctuary of all manner of roguery; that the people there are blasphemers of God and all his saints, yea, that they are grown barbarous, and eat young children, &c. And this the common people are taught to believe as gospel.

Chapter 15

Ver. 1. And certain men, &c.] Cerinthus, the heretic, with his complices, saith Epiphanius. These are said to "subvert the gospel," #Ga 1:7. A little thing untowardly mingled, mars all, saith Chrysostom.

Ver. 2. No small dissension] We must earnestly contend for the faith of the gospel, accounting every parcel of truth precious, #Jude 3. How zealous was Paul in this cause, #Ga 2:5 1:7 5:12. He wisheth them not only circumcised, but served as the Turks do their eunuchs, whom they deprive of all their genitals, so that they are forced to supply the uses of nature with a silver quill. {a}

{a} Non circumcidantur modo, sed et abscondantur. Chrys.

Ver. 3. By the Church] That is, by the community of God's people, who therefore (as it may seem) sided with Paul and Barnabas, against those disturbers.

They passed through Phenice and Samaria] They took a long journey for a public good. Calvin was wont to say, that he would gladly sail over ten seas {a} to settle a general peace and good agreement in the reformed Churches. Terentius (that noble general under Valens the emperor), when he was bidden ask what he would, and it should be done, asked nothing but that the Church might be freed from Arians. And when the emperor tore his petition, he said that he would never ask anything for himself, if he might not prevail for the Church: this that he might, he would undertake any pains, undergo any peril by sea or land. (Theodoret, iv. 32.)

{a} Ne decem quidem maria, &c. Beza.

Ver. 4. They were received of the Church] i.e. By the body of the people; for the apostles and elders have a peculiar place assigned them.

Ver. 5. But there rose up] These are not Luke's words, but the apostles continuing their speech: they declared all things that God had done with them, and how they had been opposed by certain of the Pharisees' sect, &c.

Ver. 6. And the apostles and elders, &c.] This was the first Christian council. The four following general councils, {a} Gregory the Great held of equal authority almost with the four Gospels. In posterioribus conciliis (saith Luther) nunquam de fide, sed semper de opinionibus et quaestionibus fuit disputatum: ut mihi conciliorum nomen pene tam suspectum et invisum sit quam nomen liberi arbitrii. He fitly compareth the recent Popish councils to the meeting of foxes, which, going about to sweep a room with their tails, raise dust, but rid none.

Ver. 7. And when there had been much disputing] Each part striving for victory, till the apostles stood up and determined. It was no matter between Austin and Jerome, in their disputations, who gained the day; they would both win, by understanding their errors. But Basil in his latter time grew to a great dislike of councils and conferences; because men usually met in their own strength there, and strove not so much for verity as victory, for truth as for triumph.

Ver. 9. Purifying their hearts by faith] Faith (as a neat housewife) sweeps clean, and suffers never a slut's corner in the soul. It is ever purging upon corruption, and lets out the lifeblood of it; for it shows a man a better project than to lie sucking at the botches of carnal pleasures, or to be basely affixed to earthly profits. Every true believer beareth a brush at his back, as we say of a trim man. His faith consecrateth his heart, and maketh it, of the devil's thoroughfare, God's enclosure.

Ver. 10. Now, therefore, why tempt ye God] Or (as Jerome in a certain epistle to Augustine reads this text, and so it runs more smoothly), "Why attempt ye to put a yoke upon the neck of the disciples," &c. Ceremonies were abolished by Christ, and had no use after his death, but by accident; as he who buildeth a vault, letteth the centrals stand till he put in the keystone, and then pulleth them away: so here.

Ver. 11. That through the grace] We sail to heaven all upon one bottom; we climb up all by one ladder. If any conceit another way, he must erect a ladder and go up alone: he shall (as Aristotle somewhere saith) κακα εφ εαυτον ελκειν ως το κακιας νεφος, plunge himself into remediless misery.

Ver. 12. Then all the multitude kept silence] See here the picture of a lawful council, guided by the word and Spirit of God. It was not a Cyclopic assembly, ubi ουδεις ουδεν ουδενος ακουει, nor as in Alcibiades' army, where all would be leaders, no learners, &c. Or, as the Jews of this day in their Jeshiboth, or academies, meet to dispute, but talk all together confusedly: the rabbis with their scholars, &c.

Ver. 13. James answered] Who seemed to be a pillar, #Ga 2:9, and was so, both of the college of apostles and of the Church at Jerusalem.

Ver. 14. Simeon hath declared, &c.] q.d. He hath done it very well, only he hath not alleged any text of Scripture for confirmation; which therefore I will add. In Popish councils the Holy Scripture is in a manner set aside; and the decrees of fathers, schoolmen, and former councils brought in place thereof. At the Council of Basil, when the Hussites refused to admit of any doctrine that could not be proved by Scripture, Cardinal Cusan made answer, that the Scriptures pertained not to the being of the Church, but to the well-being only, and that they were to be expounded according to the current rite of the Church, qua mutante sententiam, mutetur et Dei iudicium. (Jac. Rev. de Vit. Pont.)

Ver. 15. And to this agree, &c.] The Scriptures must overrule; as Cyril saith in a synod at Ephesus, upon a high throne in the temple there lay sanctum Evangelium, the holy gospel.

Ver. 16. Which is fallen down] Christ came when all seemed to be lost and laid on heaps. He still reserveth his holy hand for a dead lift, and delighteth to help those that are forsaken of their hopes. This Branch grew out of the roots of Jesse; when that goodly family was sunk so low, as from David the king to Joseph the carpenter, #Isa 11:1.

Ver. 17. May seek the Lord] All saints are seekers in this sense, #Ps 24:6. They seek not his omnipresence, but his gracious presence, #Ps 105:4.

Ver. 18. Known unto God, &c.] And consequently the calling of the Gentiles is foreknown and foreappointed by him, as a thing to be done in due time, though they be never circumcised.

Ver. 19. That we trouble not] Gr. παρενοχλειν. Trouble them more than needs; they will meet with trouble enough otherwise in the way to heaven. "I would they were even cut off" that thus trouble their consciences, #Ga 5:12.

Ver. 20. And from fornication] Which is here reckoned among things indifferent, κατα δοξαν, ου κατα θεσιν, because the Gentiles esteemed it (falsely) a thing indifferent. Non est flagitium (mihi credo) adolescentulum scortari, potare, fores effringere, said he in Terence. So in the Turk's Koran, the angel being demanded concerning venery, {a} is brought in answering, that God did not give men such appetites to have them frustrate, but enjoyed, as made for the satisfying of man, not for his torment, wherein his Creator delights not. But what saith the Scripture? "Whoremongers and adulterers God will judge."

{a} The practice or pursuit of sexual pleasure; indulgence of sexual desire. CED

Ver. 21. For Moses of old time, &c.] This is alleged as a reason why they should as yet abstain from those indifferents, because the Jews, having been accustomed to Moses's writings, could not quickly be drawn to let go the legal ceremonies, which were now to have an honourable burial, by degrees to be abolished. The ceremonies before Christ's passion were neither deadly nor dead; after his passion they were not deadly for a time (whiles the temple stood), though dead after a sort. But from that time forward they were both dead and deadly, saith Aquinas.

Ver. 22. Chief men among the brethren] For authority's sake; and that the false apostles might not say that those letters were counterfeit or surreptitiously gotten.

Ver. 23. And wrote letters by them] For the better confirmation of the weak and confutation of the wilful, to be as a standing monument.

Ver. 24. Subverting your souls] ανασκευαζοντες. Pulling down that which had been set up, unravelling that which had been well knit before. The word signifies unvesselling them, unpacking them (as wares packed up in a vat to be sent beyond sea), scattering them, and bringing all into a confusion.

Ver. 25. To send chosen men with our beloved] Delectos cum dilectis. See #Ac 15:22,27.

Ver. 26. Men that hazarded their lives, &c.] One ancient copy adds εις παντα πειρασμον, to all sorts of trials and tribulations. Love, as it is a passion, so it is tried rather by passions than actions.

Ver. 27. We have sent Judas and Silas] Men skilful in comforting consciences and resolving cases, as #Ac 15:32. Conscience is a diamond, and will be wrought on by nothing but dust of diamond, such as contrition hath ground it to. How like the motion of a puppet, the language of a parrot, is the best discourse, in this subject of conscience, of the not interested man! He is one of a thousand that can declare unto man his righteousness, #Job 33:23. Those that would have oil for their lamps, comfort for their consciences, must repair to them that sell it, #Mt 25:9.

Ver. 28. For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost] That is only a lawful synod wherein the Holy Ghost is present and president. Nothing was resolved by the Trent fathers, but all in Rome; so that a blasphemous proverb was generally used, which I forbear to relate; let him that list read it in the Hist. of Council of Trent, tel. 497. See also fol. 822.

Than these necessary things] Not always and every way necessary (except that of fornication to be avoided), but necessary for preserving the peace of the Church as then it was, by bearing with the weaker Christians. Things inconvenient, even in matters of religion, may be done in some cases to redeem a far worse inconvenience. These burdens are here called necessary things, and they are said to do well, if they observed them, #Ac 15:29. {See Trapp on "Ac 16:3"}

Ver. 29. And from fornication] Some Greek copies add, "and whatsoever ye would not should be done to you, that ye do not the same to others"; which is a general rule, and a foundation of the former. As for fornication, it is here reckoned among things indifferent, because the Gentiles held it so; as the Papists now account it a very small sin; but so did not the council. See #1Co 10:8 Heb 13:4. {See Trapp on "1Co 10:8"} {See Trapp on "Heb 13:4"} A learned man telleth us, that that impostor Mahomet hath (in an apish imitation of this decree of the holy synod) forbidden his followers the self-same things, saving that he nameth swine's flesh in the place of fornication. {See Trapp on "Ac 15:20"}

Ver. 30. And when they had gathered the multitude] This was fair dealing indeed. Among Papists, the people are held in gross ignorance; and taught to believe as the Church believes; which what it is, they must neither understand nor inquire after. One of their bishops boasted that if Luther had not started up when he did, and stood in their way, they could have persuaded the common people to eat grass as horses, or do anything else they had enjoined them. (Scultet. Annal.)

Ver. 31. They rejoiced for the consolation] How should we rejoice in Christ our Saviour, who bare our sins, &c., and freed us from the burden and brunt of both crime and curse!

Ver. 32. {See Trapp on "Ac 15:27"}

Ver. 33. They were let go in peace] i.e. Judas was, but not Silas, upon second thoughts, #Ac 15:34. After their office put upon them by the synod was faithfully discharged, they did not give over the Lord's work and take their ease; but set themselves to do further service. The Roman generals, after they had once triumphed over their enemies, did no more service to the state. But Cato (of whom Lucan witnesseth that he did toti natum credere mundo) is worthily commended, for that after the honour of a triumph he was no less sedulous and solicitous of a public welfare than before: we must never think we have done enough for God.

Ver. 34. To abide there still] Upon second thoughts, after he had leave to depart, he stayed there a while longer. This Silas is thought to be the same with Sylvanus, as Joshua is the same with Jehoshua, #Hag 2:2 Zec 3:1.

Notwithstanding it pleased Silas] sc. Upon better deliberation and more probability of being there serviceable to God and useful to his Church. Martinus decumbens Domine, dixit, si adhuc populo tuo sum necessarius, non recuso laborem. (Sever. Epist. 3.) Choice spirits are all for God; they still study his ends more than their own.

Ver. 35. Teaching and preaching] i.e. Being instant and earnest, non frigidi docent, sed instant et urgent, saith Calvin here; they lay their bones to the Lord's work, they set their sides and their shoulders to it, as those that would do the deed.

With many others also] In the primitive times, saith Mr Baxter (Pref. to Saint's Everlasting Rest), every church had many ministers, wherefore the ablest speakers did preach most in public; and the rest did the more of the less public work. But now sacrilege and covetousness will scarcely leave maintenance for one in a church, &c.

Ver. 36. And see how they do] Whether that wicked one (or troubler, ο πονηρος, #Mt 13:39) hath not cast his club among them, or corrupted their minds from the simplicity that is in Christ, #2Co 11:3. How soon were the Galatians unsettled by seducers and sect makers, #Ga 1:6. What ill work made those deceitful workers at Corinth, in St Paul's absence; and the heretics in the primitive Church, and the Anabaptists in Germany, &c. While Moses was but a while in the mount, the people had gotten them a golden calf. When Calvin was cast out of Geneva but for a short time, Sadoletus wrote a very smooth and subtle epistle to the inhabitants, to persuade them to return back to Popery. We ministers seldom find our work as we left it, we had need therefore visit often, and handle our sheep, &c., to see how they do, and whether (as Gaiuses) their souls as well as bodies be in health and prosper, #3Jo 2.

Ver. 37. To take with them John] Who was Barnabas's sister's son, #Col 4:10. Hence Barnabas might be so desirous to promote him. Paul was also afterwards better conceited of him, as may be seen #Col 4:10.

Ver. 38. Who departed from them] Providing for his own ease; for they were then to take a tedious and dangerous journey over the high hill Taurus. This John liked not, but left them, and went his ways.

Ver. 39. And the contention, &c.] The paroxysm (παροξυσμος) or fit of a fever, so great was the commotion, the perturbation. St Luke being a physician, saith Brentius, useth here a physical expression. Heed must be taken that we overshoot not in the best causes, lest if we be overshot, God's wrath be kindled against us. There is a most sad story of the dissension between Luther and Carolostadius, both good men. And another as sad of those who fled to Frankfort hence in Queen Mary's days; yet among them there were such grievous breaches that they sought the lives one of another, picking out some words against the emperor, in a sermon that Master Knox had preached in England long before, and now accusing him for them to the magistrates of Frankfort, upon which divers of them were fain to flee.

That they departed asunder] And we read not that they joined any more together after this. Barnabas we find halting together with Peter, #Ga 2:13, rather than he would walk uprightly together with his old associate Paul, #Ac 15:14, for the which Paul reproved Peter, who yet maketh honourable mention of Paul, #2Pe 3:15, which was his holy ingenuity. But much to be commended were Basil and Eusebius, who perceiving the Arians to improve a difference between them to the prejudice of the orthodox, were soon reconciled, and united their forces against the common enemy.

Ver. 40. Being recommended by the brethren] Whereby it appeareth that the Church took Paul's part, and God blessed his labours wherever he came; whereas Barnabas lies buried, as it were, and little more is henceforth recorded of him, unless it be that his temporizing with Peter, #Ga 2:9. So Lot is no more heard of after his incest, #Ge 19:36. If we commit such things we deserve but a short story. (Babington in locum.)

Ver. 41. And he went] Being incessant and unsatisfiable in his master Christ's service.

Chapter 16

Ver. 1. But his father was a Greek] Both by nation and religion. This was an unlawful marriage, #Ex 34:10-17 De 7:1-5, and might be a means to humble the good woman, when once she came to a sight of her sin. David had his best children by Bathsheba, as Solomon, Nathan, of whom came Christ, &c. God can turn our sins to our good and comfort, as the skilful apothecary can make of a poisonous viper a wholesome treacle. {a}

{a} Old Pharm. A medicinal compound, orig. a kind of salve, composed of many ingredients, formerly in repute as an alexipharmic against and antidote to venomous bites, poisons generally, and malignant diseases. (ED)

Ver. 2. Which was well reported of by the brethren] This is part of the reward of virtue, and follows it, as the shadow doth the body. {See Trapp on "Ec 7:1"} {See Trapp on "3Jo 12"}

Ver. 3. Took and circumcised him] Paul circumcised Timothy, as a Gentile; in that, for a Jew to be circumcised was no yieldance. And those words, "they all knew his father to be a Greek" demonstrate, he went in estimation for a Gentile. Calvin refusing to administer the communion in Geneva, and to use therein unleavened bread or wafer cakes, was compelled to depart the city; and was not received thither again until he had allowed of the same kind of bread. De quo postea restitutus, nunquam contendendum putavit; minimis tamen dissimulans quid alioqui magis esset probaturus. {a} {See Trapp on "Ac 15:28"}

{a} Beza in Vita Calvinii.

Ver. 4. They delivered them the decrees] Which were agreeable to the Scriptures. And if Gregory thought that the decrees of the four first general councils were to be received with like reverence and respect as the four holy Gospels, how much more these! But what a tyrant is the pope to obtrude his decretals, and the decrees of his councils (though directly opposite to the revealed will of God), upon the consciences of the misled multitude, to be observed, with a Non obstante! The Council of Constance (for instance) comes in with a Non obstante against Christ's institution, withholding the cup from the sacrament; so for prayers in an unknown tongue, singing of psalms, ministers' marriage. {a} When the pope sets forth any bulls, commonly he concludes thus, Non obstantibus et ordinationibus Apostolicis, caeterisque contrariis quibuscunque.

{a} Caranza Sum. Concil. sess. 13.

Ver. 5. Established in the faith, and increased in number] Some were converted by their ministry, others confirmed. This is still the fruit of faithful preaching, which is far more effectual hereunto than other ordinances; like as the rain from heaven hath a fatness with it, and a special influence, more than other standing waters, and as milk from the breast is most nourishing.

Ver. 6. And were forbidden, &c.] This was a heavier judgment upon those coasts than to be denied a harvest, or the light of the sun. Prize the preaching of the gospel as a singular privilege. They that are without a teaching priest are without God, #2Ch 15:3. There were ambassadors sent out of Nubia in Africa to the king of Habassia, to entreat him for a supply of ministers to instruct their nation, and repair Christianity gone to ruin among them; but they were rejected. {a} Amos's famine of the word is far more deplorable than Samaria's famine of bread in that strait siege.

{a} Alvarez Hist. Aethiop, c. 137.

Ver. 7. But the Spirit suffered them not] The Spirit still lusteth against the flesh, and the flesh against, the Spirit, in the hearts of the regenerate, so that they cannot do what they would, #Ga 5:17. As they cannot do what good they would in regard of the flesh, so neither what evil they would in regard of the Spirit.

Ver. 8. Came down to Troas] The relics of old Troy, called also Antigonía and Alexandria, as Pliny testifieth.

Ver. 9. Into Macedonia and help us] The ministers are those by whom God helpeth his perishing people, and pulleth them out of the devil's danger. Hence they are called saviours, #Ob 21 1Ti 4:16; redeemers, #Job 33:24,28; co-workers with Christ, #2Co 6:1.

Ver. 10. Assuredly gathering] It was not therefore a bare vision, but set on upon their spirits by the testimony of the Holy Spirit, as all visions are that come from God. We read in the Roman history of a vision that Brutus had the night before that ill fated battle at Philippi, calling him into Macedonia too, but for his utter ruin. This was a vision from the devil, doubtless, that old man slayer. Cuthbert Simpson's vision, and afterwards Mr Laremouth's (who was chaplain to Queen Anne of Cleve), whereby they were comforted in and delivered out of prison, we may read of in the Book of Martyrs. Cardinal Cusan foretold, by some vision that he had, a reformation of religion that should occur A.D. 1507, which was over fifty years after his death. John Trithemius foretold the same A. D. 1508. Genius vero qui Trithemio haec dictavit, albus an ater fuerit, ego non facile dixerim. Merito suspectum est piis, &c., saith Bucholcerus. Who told him so much I cannot tell; but it was the devil in all likelihood. But what a strange conference was that which Luther had with the devil, by his own confession; whereby he was admonished of many abuses of the mass, which thereupon he wrote against. Is Satan divided against himself? Comes any good out of such a Nazareth? Need we not to prove the spirits, whether they be of God? How many have we today (our modern enthusiasts) that dream their Midianitish dreams, and then tell it for gospel to their neighbours as wise as themselves! that lead men into the lion's mouth (that roaring lion, I mean), under pretence of a revelation; as that old impostor did the young prophet, #1Ki 13:11-18.

Ver. 11. We came with a straight course] Or with a speedy course. The straight way is the next way: {a} "How long wilt thou go about, O backsliding daughter?" #Jer 31:22. Impii ambulat in circuitu, saith the Psalmist, the wicked walk the round; so doth the devil, that great peripatetic, {b} seeking to circumvent, #Job 1:7. But the righteous look straight before them, #Pr 4:25, and make straight paths for their feet, #Heb 12:13; so that they soon finish their course with joy, and live long in a little time.

To Samothracia] An island opposite Thracia; whereof see Pliny, iv. 11.

Neapolis] A city near Philippi, in the borders between Thracia and Macedonia.

{a} εὐθδρομῆς? Utrumquo significat, et recte et cito currentes. Lorin.

{b} Walking about or from place to place in connection with some occupation or calling; itinerant. ÆD

Ver. 13. And on the sabbath] A day that God had sanctified to be a means to convey sanctity into the hearts of his hidden ones, as here of Lydia the purpurisse, {a} #Eze 20:12. It is his exchequer day, his market day.

Where prayer was wont to be made] Or where was a public oratory. So the synagogues are called by Philo in his embassy to Gaius the emperor, minus invidioso nomine.

Unto the women which resorted] St Paul (it may seem) at first had no other hearers but a few women at Philippi. But afterwards they became a flourishing Church. Nec minor ab exordio, nec maior incrementis ulla, saith Eutropius concerning Rome; so may we say concerning the Church of Christ.

{a} A kind of red or purple colouring matter, used by the ancients. ÆD

Ver. 14. Whose heart the Lord opened] Man's heart is naturally locked up and barricaded against God, till he, by his mighty Spirit, make forcible entrance, beating the devil out of his trenches, #2Co 10:4.

Ver. 15. If ye have judged me to be faithful] Not else, upon no other condition doth she desire it; for hypocrites are the botches of society; as Augustus was wont to term his three untoward children, tres vomlcas, tria carcinomata, three mattery imposthumes or ulcerous sores. (Sueton. in Aug.)

Ver. 16. Possessed with a spirit, &c.] These the seventy seniors usually call εγγαστριμυθους, because the devil spake out of their bellies. For which cause also the Hebrews call them Oboth, or bottles; because the bellies of those women that were thus made use of by the devil were swelled as big as bottles. (Beza in loc.) In the year of grace 1536, a certain damsel at Frankfort in Germany, being possessed with a devil, and stark mad, swallowed down pieces of money with much gnashing of her teeth; which monies were presently wrung out of her hands and kept by various ones, &c. This is a true story, reported by Andrew Ebert, the minister of the place, who wrote the same to Luther, requesting his advice; which was, to pray hard for her, &c. (Bucholc. Chr.)

Ver. 17. These men are the servants] Satan etsi semel videatur verax, millies est mendax et semper fallax. #Mr 1:25 Joh 8:47.

Ver. 18. Paul being grieved] Paul took no joy in such a testimony. High words become not a fool. To be praised by a praiseless person is no praise at all.

Ver. 19. Their gains were gone] ἐξηλθεν, was gone forth together with the devil. They that count all fish that comes to not, will in the end catch the devil and all. You are his birds, saith Bradford to such, whom when the devil hath well fed, he will broach you and eat you, chaw you and champ you, world without end, in eternal woe and misery.

Ver. 20. Trouble our city] Faithful preachers have ever been by the wicked accounted trouble towns; these covetous caitiffs (wretches) had not so much ingenuity as the devil himself, #Ac 16:17.

Ver. 21. Neither to observe, &c.] An ordinary thing to oppose the placits and devices of men to the truth of God.

Ver. 22. Rent off their clothes] i.e. the apostles' clothes.

And commanded to beat them] What? before they had examined the matter? This was preposterous justice; like that of those that in the morning hang the offender, and sit upon him in the afternoon; or those spoken of by Aeneas Sylvius (cap. 20, Europ.), that hang up such as are suspected of theft, and three days after judge of the suspicion. Whereas, on the contrary, a judge is to retain the decency and gravity of the law, which is never angry with any man. Lex non irascitur, sed constituit. Alexander in his anger slew those friends of his, whom afterwards he would have revived again with his own life blood.

Ver. 23. Laid many stripes] These were those marks of the Lord Jesus which the apostles so gloried of, as an old soldier doth of his scars and wounds received in battle. Hoc sunt gemmae et pretiosa ornamenta Dei, These are the jewels and costly ornaments of God, saith Munster, concerning his ulcers whereof he died. So might Paul and Silas well say of their stripes, Τα δεσμα περιφερω τους πνευματικους μαργαριτας, saith Ignatius in his Epistle to the Ephesians: I bear my bonds as so many spiritual pearls of price. It was with sweet briar, in some sense, that these apostles were whipped.

Ver. 24. Fast in the stocks] The word το ξυλον signifieth such a pair of stocks, as wherein they used to make fast feet and neck too, saith Beza out of Nonius. Various of our martyrs were thus stocked in the bishop of London's coalhouse; as Mr Philpot, and that martyr that rejoiced that she might have her foot in the hole of the stocks in which Master Philpot had been before her.

Ver. 24. Fast in the stocks] The word το ξυλον signifieth such a pair of stocks, as wherein they used to make fast feet and neck too, saith Beza out of Nonius. Various of our martyrs were thus stocked in the bishop of London's coalhouse; as Mr Philpot, and that martyr that rejoiced that she might have her foot in the hole of the stocks in which Master Philpot had been before her.

bishop of London's coalhouse; as Mr Philpot, and that martyr that rejoiced that she might have her foot in the hole of the stocks in which Master Philpot had been before her.

Ver. 25. Sang praises unto God] His presence turns a prison into a palace, into a paradise. "From the delectable orchard of the Leonine prison"; so the Italian martyr Algerius dated his letter to a friend. "I was carried to the coalhouse," saith Mr Philpot, "where I with my fellows do rouse together in the straw as cheerfully, we thank God, as others do in their beds of down." Philip, Landgrave of Hesse, being a long time prisoner under Charles V, was demanded what upheld him at that time? He answered, that he felt the divine consolations of the martyrs.

Ver. 26. There was a great earthquake] See the great power of prayer. It shaketh heaven and earth, Luther saith; there is a kind of omnipotence in it.

Ver. 27. And the keeper of the prison] In whom the earthquake had wrought a heartquake, as it had also (though not to so good purpose) in the magistrates, #Ac 16:35. {See Trapp on "Ac 16:35"} We read that the people of Antioch, though many of them gave their hands for Chrysostom's banishment; yet, terrified by an earthquake, immediately they sent for him again.

Ver. 28. But Paul cried with a loud voice, &c.] We should likewise cry Cave miser, beware oh wretch, when we see a man busily cutting the throat of his own poor soul, by wilful wickedness, or pitched headlong into hell through despair of God's mercy. "Of some have compassion making a difference" #Jude 22; and others save with fear, pulling them out of the fire of hell, as the angel pulled Lot out of Sodom, and as God pulled Joshua the high priest as "a brand out of the fire," #Zec 3:2 This Jerome calleth Sanctam violentiam, optabilem rapinam, a holy violence, a desirable ravage; and the law of God requireth not only our observation, but our preservation; to cause others to keep it, as well as ourselves.

Ver. 29. And sprang in] As John the Evangelist with like speed sprang out of the bath, when Cerinthus the heretic came into it, lest some evil, for his sake, should befall him. from heaven. (εξηλατο του βαλανειου, Eus.)

Ver. 30. What must I do to be saved?] A reverend divine said once to a poor soul, that told him he was troubled about his salvation; I tell thee, said he, it is able to trouble the whole world.

Ver. 31. Believe on the Lord Jesus] This is the condition on our part required; or rather a stipulation that God hath promised to work in us and for us.

Ver. 32. And they spake unto him] So Master Tyndale, during the time of his imprisonment, converted his keeper, together with the keeper's daughter, and others of his household. Also the rest that were with him in the prison, said, That if Tyndale were not a good Christian man, they could not tell whom to trust. The word of God is not bound, saith Paul the prisoner, #Php 1:13. His bonds were manifest in all Caesar's court, and to all others. In the Book of Martyrs we read also of one Bowler, a perverse Papist, converted by Doctor Sands and Master Bradford, whose keeper he was for over twenty weeks; and afterwards became their son, begotten in their bonds.

Ver. 33. He and all his straightway] God's work is of great importance, and must be presently done, whatever else is left undone. "If ye will inquire, inquire, return, come," #Isa 21:12.

Ver. 34. And rejoiced, believing] A prick with a pin may and doth many times let out corruption as well as lancing. Some suffer more throes in the new birth, some less. But many meet with greatest trials find terrors after conversion. When men take little fines, they mean to take the more rent.

Ver. 35. The magistrates sent] In one ancient Greek copy there is this addition, "And when it was day, the magistrates met together in the market place; and calling to mind the earthquake that had been that night, they feared, and sent the sergeants, saying, Let these men go." See #Ac 16:27.

Ver. 36. And the keeper of the prison] As glad to be the messenger of such good tidings; for he knew well the misery of captivity; by which term, therefore, all that Job suffered is summarily set forth, #Job 42:10.

Ver. 37. They have beaten us] A Roman, by the Valerian law, might not be bound; by the Porcian law, he might not be beaten or put to death, but by the Romans themselves, with the consent of the people. This privilege Paul pleads, and well he might; for the name of a Roman citizen was terrible to other nations. Though we may not return evil for evil, yet we may use all lawful means to right and secure ourselves.

And now do they thrust us out?] Doctor Fuller the chancellor came to William Wolsey the martyr, whom he had imprisoned, and said, Thou dost much trouble my conscience; wherefore I pray thee depart, and rule thy tongue, so that I hear no more complaint of thee; and come to church when thou wilt, and if thou be complained of, so far as I may, I promise thee I will not hear of it. "Master Doctor," quoth he, "I was brought hither by a law, and by a law I will be delivered," &c.

Ver. 38. And they feared when they heard, &c.] Their sin troubled them not, but their danger; for Irasci populo Romano nemo sapienter potest. It was not safe dashing against the rock of Rome's power. Cicero tells us, that Haec vox, Civis Romanus sum, saepe in ultimis terris, &c. This one word, "I am a Roman," relieved and rescued many in the utmost parts of the earth, and among barbarians.

Ver. 39. And they came and besought them] The matter is well amended since yesterday. How suddenly crest fallen are these grandees of Philippi, how bladder like do they shrivel to nothing, that erst swelled with the wind of pride and passion! So did the king of Sodom, Manasseh, Saul, &c.

Ver. 40. And departed] Yet so, as that St Paul soon after visited them with that golden Epistle to the Philippians.

Chapter 17

Ver. 1. Where was a synagogue of the Jews] Who did much hurt there by their crossness, neither pleasing God nor profiting men, #1Th 2:15.

Ver. 2. Out of the Scriptures] Wherein they were wondrously expert. Quilibet nostrum de lege interrogatus facilius quam nomen suum recitat, saith Josephus. We have the Scriptures at our fingers' ends.

Ver. 3. Alleging] Or laying it so plain before their eyes (παρατιθεμενος), that they could not but see it, unless they were of those qui festucam quaerunt unde oculos sibi eruant, as Bernard hath it, who seek straws to put out their own eyes also.

Ver. 4. Consorted with Paul] Were knit unto them in the straitest bonds, as man and wife, brother and sister: Sanctior est copula cordis quam corporis. No such bond as religion, προσεκληρωθησαν.

Ver. 5. Of the baser sort] Viles et venales, saith one, Vagi, otiosique, saith another, such as had little to do but to walk the streets and run on errands, the rascality and sink of the city.

Set all the City on an uproar] Quia perturbato statu melius consequi valent quod volunt. The devil loves to fish in troubled waters. When he hath set all on a hurry, as in Saul, then he can the sooner enter and play his pranks. So can his instruments.

Ver. 6. Turned the world, &c.] αναστατουντες. So Elias was called the troubler of Israel, Luther the trumpet of rebellion. It is not the gospel, but men's corruption, that breeds the trouble; as it is not, the sea, but the foulness of men's stomachs, that makes them seasick.

Ver. 7. Whom Jason hath received] υποδεδεκται. Clanculum excepit, so Erasmus well rendereth it, hath closely and covertly entertained them, as Obadiah did the Lord's prophets.

Contrary to the decrees of Caesar] Unicum crimen eorum, qui crimine vacabant. Tacit. The only crime of them who were without offense.

Ver. 8. And they troubled the people and the rulers] The devil and his agents, as they are of turbulent spirits, like Ishmael, Pope Urban (who was therefore called Turban, from his troublesomeness), and the Jesuits; so they love to fish in troubled waters, and to set all on a hurry by incensing rulers against the people of God, and seeking to persuade them that they are antimagistratical. Hence the devil again casteth some of them into prison, #Re 2:10; sc. by his imps and instruments armed with authority.

Ver. 9. When they had taken security] It was happy that security would be taken, till the heat was over. For, “Ut fragilis glacies frangitur ira mora.” Ovid.

Ver. 10. Went into the synagogue] As he had done before at Thessalonica, and had sped so ill. Heroic spirits are no wit dismayed with difficulties; but rather whetted on thereby to more diligence in duty. And the servant of the Lord must not despond or desist, but be apt to teach, "patient, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves, if peradventure God will at any time give them repentance," &c., #2Ti 2:24,25.

Ver. 11. They were more noble] Better gentlemen (ευγενεστεροι). Virtue is instead of a thousand escutcheons. {a} "Since thou hast been precious in my sight, thou hast been honourable," #Isa 43:4. The nobles of Israel made their staves (the ensigns, haply, of their honour) instruments of the common good, #Nu 21:18; when the nobles of Tekoah are blemished in their blood for this, that they "put not their necks to the work of their Lord," #Ne 3:5. The Biscanians vaunt of themselves among the Spaniards that they are the right Hidalgos, that is, gentlemen, as the Welshmen do here. But Christian nobility is the best and truest where God himself is the top of the kin, and religion the root; in regard whereof all other things are but shadows and shapes of nobleness. The Jews of Berea were more noble, or of better descent, Non per civilem dignitatem, sed per spiritualem dignationem, as one saith: Not by civil descent, but by spiritual advancement.

{a} The shield or shield-shaped surface on which a coat of arms is depicted; also in wider sense, the shield with the armorial bearings; a sculptured or painted representation of this. (ED)

Ver. 12. Therefore many of them believed] There are certain abilities and actions we have, and may perform without special grace; in the employment whereof we are to expect the effectual work of the Spirit. See it in these noble Bereans; they brought their bodies to the assembly, took the heads of Paul's sermons very truly, repeated and examined the notes they had taken, and yet were unconverted, as appears by this verse. Now if any, of us do hide the like talent, we are not to expect the Spirit of sanctification. As our liberty in external acts (as to come to church to hear, &c.) is still some, so must our endeavours be answerable.

Ver. 13. They came thither also] Thus they pleased not God and were contrary to all men; wherefore "wrath is come upon them to the utmost," #1Th 2:15,16.

Ver. 14. To go as it were to the sea] This was a high point of wisdom, not to send Paul the next way to Athens, but about by the sea for avoiding of danger.

Ver. 15. Brought him unto Athens] The eye of Greece, but woefully now bemisted with the fog of superstition, as our universities also have been of late. Athens was a pleasant and ancient city. Cecrops is said to have been king of it in Moses's time. It was anciently called κοσμος κοσμου, "the ornament or glory of the world." But Gregory Nazianzen reports of it that it was the plagiuest place in the world for superstition; and he aeknowledgeth it a great mercy that he and Basil were preserved from those infections.

Ver. 16. His spirit was stirred] The word παρωξυνετο signifies, he was almost beside himself (such was his zeal) to see the idolatry of the Athenians. So was William Gardiner, an English merchant and martyr in Portugal, who, when the cardinal, in a mass before the king, began to take the ceremonial host, to toss it to and fro round about the chalice, making certain circles and semicircles, he not being able to suffer any longer, went to the cardinal, and in the presence of the king and all his nobles and citizens, with the one hand he snatched the cake from the priest, and trod it under his feet, and with the other hand overthrew the chalice, &c. See the like history of William Flower, who wounded the mass priest at Westminster, &c. (Acts and Mon. fol. 1430.) There are those who tell us that this book of the Acts is discerned to be written by Luke, by his physician's language here, παρωξυνετο, he "was in a fever fit," and #Ac 15:39, εγενετο ουν παροξυσμος, "the contention was so sharp between them." The word signifies such sharpness as is in vinegar; and it is used by physicians to denote the sharpness of the feverish humour when it is acting in a fit. It troubled St Paul, that the fountain was so troubled, the eye of Greece so darkened, {a} the "ornament of the world" so slurred with "abominable idolatries," as St Peter expresseth it, #1Pe 4:3.

Wholly given to idolatry] Pausanias reckons up more idols almost in Athens than in all Greece besides. And Xenophon saith that the Athenians kept double the holy days and festivals to what others did. "Ephraim is joined to idols, let him alone," q.d. there is no hope of him, #Ho 4:17. They that make them are like unto them, so are all they that worship them, as blockish as those Balaami-blocks they worship. No Church could be founded at Athens; they for their idolatry were given up to strong delusions, vile affections, just damnation. They were too wise to be saved by the foolishness of preaching.

Ver. 17. With them that met with him] If anybody would but lend him a little audience, he would preach to them, such was his zeal. The word must be preached in season, out of season, &c., volentibus, nolentibus.

Ver. 18. Certain philosophers, &c.] The deep theorems of philosophy (said King James) make one learned, but seldom better, and oftentimes worse, mere atheists. There is an Arabic proverb, Cum errat eruditus, errat errore erudito. When a learned man goes astray, he goes astray by learned deception. And Indocti rapiunt caelum, The unlearned are snatched off to heaven, saith Aug. Melior est humilis rusticus qui Deo servit, quam superbus Philosophus, &c., Better is the lowly peasant obeys God than the proud philosopher, said a devout Dominican. (Erpen. Cent. #2 Pr 28:6)

What will this babler say?] Seminilega, σπερμολογος, by a metaphor from little birds, that yield neither good meat nor good music, but only pick up grain, and live by other men's labours. Master Rogers (our late proto-martyr) interpreteth it a prater, trifler, news-carrier, that tells whatsoever men will have him for gain; that will for a piece of bread say what you will have him.

A setter forth of strange gods] Rogers renders it, a preacher of new devils.

Jesus and the resurrection] Anastasis, or the resurrection, they took for some new goddess, saith OEcumenius.

Ver. 19. Brought him unto Areopagus] A cruel court where Socrates lost his life for the very same crime that St Paul is here charged with; viz. an endeavour to introduce new deities. (Laertius.) That the apostle came off not only with safety, but some success (for Dionysius, one of the judges, was converted), see a sweet providence. Paul wanted a place to preach in; they brought him to Areopagus as a delinquent, where he hath an opportunity of doing God a great deal of good service. So Charles V, emperor, sent the confession of the Protestant Churches to divers princes of Europe to ask their opinions; hereby the gospel was exceedingly spread and propagated; which gave occasion to Luther to deride Pontificiorum stultam sapientiam, the foolish wisdom of the Papists, in a certain epistle to the elector of Saxony. (Scultet. Annal. 274.)

Ver. 20. For thou bringest certain strange things] Or, new, never heard of, ξενιζοντα. Yet now so new neither as they thought for; see #Ro 11:2-4 16:25,26. Papists upbraid us with the novelty of our religion, and ask us where it was till Luther's time? We answer (as one once did), "In the Bible, where their religion never was." See Catalog. Test. verit., and Mr Bernard's Look beyond Luther, Dr Featlie's Conference with Fisher, &c. They boast much of antiquity, as once the Gibeonites did of old shoes and mouldy bread. We refer them to Alex. Cook's Abatement of Popish Brags, and Guild's Popish Boasting of Antiquity; besides abundance of other good authors.

Ver. 21. For all the Athenians, &c.] The self-same truth is testified by Demosthenes, in an answer to Philip's letter. ημεις ουδεν ποιουντες ενθαδε καθημεθα πυνθανομενοι ει τι λεγεται νεωτερον. We (saith he to his countrymen of Athens), to speak truth, sit here, doing nothing but trifling out our time, and listening what news abroad. This their national itch after novelties, made them the more willing to hear Paul speak. It is not amiss to hearken how it goeth with the Church, that we may rejoice with those that rejoice, and weep with those that weep; Cum, singulis pectus meum copulo, saith Cyprian. Eli sat to hear what became of the ark; which when it was taken, it is hard to say whether was first broke, his heart or his neck.

Ver. 22. You are too superstitious] You are fearers of evil spirits; so one renders it; and Paul elsewhere tells the Corinthians that what they sacrificed to idols they sacrificed to devils, #1Co 10:20.

Beza renders ως δεισιδαιμονεστερους, quasi religiosiores (as if the apostle had used an euphemismus), <sup>{a}</sup> somewhat superstitious, or rather religious; the better to insinuate, for the Athenians had tender ears, and loved to hear toothless truths; which made Demosthenes call upon get their ears healed. ( Orat. de Ord. Civ. )

{a} That figure of speech which consists in the substitution of a word or expression of comparatively favourable implication or less unpleasant associations, instead of the harsher or more offensive one that would more precisely designate what is intended. ŒD

Ver. 23. I found an altar] A high altar, βωμος, seems to come from צלח a high place. St Paul, as he preached without a pulpit, #Ac 17:17, so he takes his text off one of their altars. Anything serves turn, so he may do good.

To the unknown God] That uncertainty that attends idolatry caused those mariners to call every man to his God, #Jon 1:5. And lest they might all mistake the true God, they awaken Jonas also to call upon his God. Hence these Athenians worship an unknown God; and hence, the heathens generally closed their petitions with Diique Deaque omnes. All gods and goddesses. (Serv. in Georg. i.)

Pausanias (in Attic.) mentioneth this altar, To the unknown God. Lucian saith the neighbour countries would swear by him unknown at Athens. The cause of erecting this altar some affirm to have been a fearful vision appearing to Philippides (sent ambassador to the Lacedaemonians concerning aid against the Persians), and complaining that he (that is, the great god Pan) was neglected and other gods worshipped, promising likewise his help. They therefore being victorious, and fearing the like event, built a temple and altar to the unknown God. Others say, that the plague being hot at Athens, and no help to be had from their gods, they surmising some other power to have sent and set on the disease, set up this altar, on which was written, To the gods of Asia, Europe, and Africa, to the unknown and strange God. (Justin Martyr, Oecumen. θεοις Ασιας και ευρωπης και Λιβυης, θεωαγνωστοκαιξενω..)

Ver. 24. Dwelleth not in temples] {See Trapp on "Ac 7:48"}

Ver. 25. Neither is worshipped] Colitur vel delinitur, colloqued with, or complimented. Colendi verbum απο του κολακευειν, dictum volant eo quod plerunque Dei hominumque cultus cum adulatione et hypocrisi est coniunctus. Sic α λατρευειν, Gallicum flatter. Some derive the word here used, θεραπευω, of the Hebrew Taraph or Teraphim, idols or images, #Ge 31:30 Jud 17:5. God is not so worshipped. (Stuchius de Sacrif. Gentil.; Avenarius; Ainsworth.)

Ver. 26. And hath made of one blood] This our brainsick diggers do much beat upon, and would therefore lay all level, and have all things common. One of their progenitors came to the Emperor Sigismund, and calling him brother, asked him for means; because he was his brother, and one of the same blood. He gave him a tester, and told him, if all his brethren would do the like for him, he should soon become a rich man.

Ver. 27. They might feel after him] Grope after him, as blind men, ψηλαφησειαν. The apostle dealing here with philosophers, disputes philosophically, showing them, most learnedly and divinely, the true use of natural philosophy, which they were utterly ignorant of. Crucifer oft contemplated the footsteps of God in the creature, saying with Paul, that God was so near unto us that he might be almost felt with hands.

Though he be not far] Not so far as the bark is from the tree, the skin from the flesh, or the flesh from the bones. Deus intimior nobis intimo nostro. He is nearer to us than we are to ourselves, though we see him not. (Bugentag.) Like as if one hear a preacher by night, though he see him not, yet he knows he is there present; so in this case.

Ver. 28. For in him we live, &c.] The heathen could say,

“Est Deus in nobis, agitante calescimus illo.”

We move] Understand it as well of the motions of the mind as of the body.

And have our being] As the beams have their being in the sun, and an accident in the subject. Scholastici dependentiam creatorum a Creatore partita luci, quae in aere remote Sole extinguitur, partita vasculo aquam contentam circumscribenti, partim sigillo in aqua impresso comparant.

As certain also of your own poets] Note that the apostle nameth not Aratus, whom he citeth, though he were his own countryman, a Cilician; notwithstanding the piety of that poet's beginning, Εκ Διός αρχομεσθα, or the divineness of his subject, the heavens, a more sublime and pure matter than useth to be in the wanton pages of other poets. Some sentences of heathenish authors are found in Scripture, as the Egyptian spoils furnished the Israelites, and David helped himself with Goliath's sword: so the Holy Ghost strikes the heathens with their own weapons, Propriis pennis configimur, as Julian the Apostate complained, and therefore forbade the Christians to send their children to the heathen schools, lest they should be wounded with their own weapons.

Ver. 29. That the Godhead is like] Qui primi deorum simulachra induxerunt, errorem auxerunt, metum dempserunt, saith Varro, as Calvin cites his words. Plutarch saith it is sacrilege to worship by images. They were atheists by night that worshipped the sun and atheists by day that worshipped the moon, as Cyril wittily speaketh.

Ver. 30. God winked at] Regarded not. God accounted the times of paganism before Christ (for all their knowledge), even times of ignorance, and looked over or beyond them (as the word ὑπερίδω here signifieth), having respect only to the times of Christianity.

Ver. 31. Because he hath appointed a day] Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord, and the dreadfulnes of that great day, "what manner of men ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness," #2Pe 3:11; breaking off our sins by repentance, and being abrupt in the work, since the very next moment thou mayest hear that summons that Pope Julius II did, and was found dead the next day, Veni miser in iudicium, Come, thou wretch, receive thy judgment. (Jac. Renig.) Hence Austin professed that he would not, for the gain of the world, be an atheist for half an hour; because he knew not how suddenly Christ might come to judge him. Aut poenitendum aut pereundum. Either displeasing or perishing.

Ver. 32. Some mocked] Three sorts of hearers, some derided, others doubted, a few believed, as Dennis and Damaris, but no Church here founded. They were too wise to go to heaven. Not a scholar in Oxford would look upon the good Bishops Ridley and Cranmer, prisoners in Bocardo, that college of the quondams or disposed, as it was then called.

Ver. 33. So Paul departed] They said they would hear him again at better leisure εἰς αὐριον τὰ σπουδαία, as that trifler said), but they never had another opportunity: procrastinators seldom speed better; it fareth with them as Plutarch writes of Hannibal, that when he could have taken Rome he would not, when he would he could not. See #Jer 14:19.

Ver. 34. Dionysius the Areopagite] Not the astrologer, as some have made him, nor the author of the Heavenly Hierachy made by some superstitious monk; but a senator or judge in that court of Mars' Hill in Athens, crowned with martyrdom for the Christian religion, in the year of grace 96, as Trithemius writeth.

And a woman named Damaris] Damaris as well as Dennis. Souls have no sexes. In Christ "there is neither male nor female, bond nor free," #Ga 3:28. It is easy to observe, saith a grave divine, that the New Testament affords more store of good women than the Old. In the preceding chapter, when Paul came first to Philippi, he had none that would hear him, but a company of good women, #Ac 16:13.

Chapter 18

Ver. 1. And came to Corinth] A city very rich, but very loose and luxurious. Magna cognatio ut rei sic nominis, divitiis et vitiis. The Corinthians had within their city the temple of Isis, and without it the temple of Venus, to whom there were well nigh a thousand courtesans consecrated. They held fornication to be no sin; hence the apostle is so earnest against it, #1Co 5.

Ver. 2. Had commanded all Jews, &c.] Wicked men are sick of the saints, and long to be rid of them, not considering that they bear up the pillars of the earth, and that God gratifies his children with the preservation of the wicked, as he did Paul with the lives of those infidels that were in the ship with him, #Ac 27:24. Howbeit they are frequently as foolish as this Claudius who banished God's true servants; or, as the stag in the emblem, which by biting the boughs off the trees under which she lay hidden from the hounds and hunters, bewrayed and betrayed herself into their hands.

Ver. 3. He abode with them and wrought] Being no less busy in his shop among his tents than in his study among his books and parchments, #2Ti 4:13. So Musculus, persecuted and driven out of his place, was forced for a poor living to dig and weave. (Melch. Adam.) And another late martyr, though he were one of the greatest scholars in Christendom, yet in banishment or flight for conscience served the mason.

Ver. 4. Persuaded the Jews] Men may speak persuasively, but God only can persuade. #Ge 9:27, Japheth's children were to be won by persuasion. Therefore Christ sent forth to them not soldiers, but fishers, who might work upon them docendo non ducendo, monendo non minando, by informing them, not by enforcing them.

Ver. 5. And when Silas and Timothy] Good people one kindle another. Paul was much heated with the zeal of God by the company of these two good men. Two flints, though both cold, yet yield fire when smitten together. Billets one kindle another. Iron sharpeneth iron, so doth the face of a man his friend.

Ver. 6. And when they opposed] Gr. Αντιτασσομενων, And when they bade him battle. A military term.

Your blood be upon your own heads] Answerable to their wish, #Mt 27:25, and according to their manner of putting their sins upon the head of the sacrificed creature, #Le 1:4 3:2.

Ver. 7. Whose house joined hard to the synagogue] Quo magis pungeret Iudaeos; for this Justus was (likely) a Gentile. But they were toties puncti et repuncti, minime tamen ad resipiscentiam compuncti, like those bears in Pliny, they could not be awakened with the sharpest prickles; such a dead lethargy had the devil cast them into.

Ver. 8. And many of the Corinthians] When Crispus the chief ruler of the synagogue believed, many of the Corinthians believed also. Great men are the lookingglasses of the country, according to which most men dress themselves. Alexander the Great naturally held his head aside, his courtiers did the like. When Francis the French king was polled for the better healing of a wound in his head, all about him, and many others, cut off their long hair, &c.

Ver. 9. But speak, and hold not thy peace] i.e. Speak out the whole truth plainly and plentifully, be not for any self-respects found guilty of a sinful silence. Inveniar sane superbus, &c., modo impii silentii non arguar, dum Dominus patitur; saith Luther (Epist. ad Staupic.). Let me be counted proud, passionate, impudent, anything, so that I betray not the Lord's cause by a cowardly silence.

Ver. 10. For I am with thee] As to behold thy behaviour ( Cave, spectat Deus ), so to support, defend, and deliver thee. If a child be in the dark, yet, having his father by the hand, he fears nothing. David feared not the "vale of the shadow of death," that is, death in its most horrid and hideous representations, and all because God was with him, #Ps 23:4.

Ver. 11. And he continued there] Gr. εκαθισε, He sat down there a great while, though he met with many discouragements and little love, with loss of love, #2Co 12:15, and unworthy usage, being forced to labour with his hands for a poor living. Howbeit, inasmuch as God had much people there, he, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ, suffered hardship, and sacrificed himself to the service of their faith (Isidore); not seeking theirs but them, and "catching them by craft," #2Co 12:16, as the fox doth the fowls that fall upon him when he feigns himself a dead carcase.

Ver. 12. And when Gallio was] This Gallio was brother to Seneca, who being a great courtier, obtained for him of Claudius the emperor to be made deputy of Achaia, as Tacitus testifieth.

Ver. 13. Contrary to the law] That is, contrary to our law. For the Romans had granted liberty to the Jews to worship God as their own law prescribed.

Ver. 14. Or wicked lewdness] The Greek word, ραδιουργημα, doth elegantly set forth the disposition of a lewd man; which is to be easily drawn to any wicked way. If the devil do but hold up his finger, he may have him at his beck and obedience; he is the devil's clay and wax, and may be wrought to anything with a wet finger.

Ver. 15. A question of words or names] Gallio esteemed no better of divine doctrine than vain words, and airy discourses. His brother Seneca jeereth the Jews for casting away a seventh part of their time upon a weekly sabbath. Profane persons hold it a madness to be so conscientious. Philosophandum, sed paucis. Religiosum esse oportet, sed non religantem, {a} A little religion serves turn well enough.

{a} Aug. de Civ. Dei.

Ver. 16. And he drave them from the tribunal] As so many Vitilitigatores, qui de lana saepe caprina rixantur, that contended for trifles, and such as deserved the whipping post, which is the punishment that the Turks put such among them to as are litigious.

{a}

Ver. 17. Took Sosthenes] A beloved brother of St Paul's, #1Co 1:1

Ver. 18. In Cenchrea] A haven of the Corinthians. Here he was shorn, as a Nazarite, for the sake of some weak Jews, whom herein he gratified and gained to the faith. The Popish shaving is so bald a ceremony, that some priests in France are ashamed of the mark, and few of them have it that can handsomely avoid it.

Ver. 19. And reasoned with the Jews] Whose salvation he dearly desired, #Ro 9:3, and therefore never gave them over, though he had small thanks for his labour. His love to them was like the ivy, which if it cleaves to a stone or an old wall, will rather die than forsake it.

Ver. 20. He consented not] Though lovingly invited, and otherwise easy to be entreated. There was therefore something in it more than ordinary. Θεω εἶπεν, follow God whithersoever he leadeth thee, was a maxim among heathens. (Boeth. Consol.) Magnus est animus qui se Deo tradidit, saith Seneca (Epist. cvii.); that is a brave spirit that hath given up itself to God; and that is a base degenerate spirit which stands off; et Deum mavult emendare, quam se, and had rather find fault with God than with himself.

Ver. 21. Keep this feast] As waiting an occasion, by that solemn meeting, of winning many to Christ. Paul was insatiabilis Dei cultor; as insatiable worshipper of God, Chrysostom truly saith of him. George Eagles the martyr, for his great pains in travelling from place to place to confirm the brethren, was surnamed Trudgeover the World.

Ver. 22. And gone up] sc. To Jerusalem, which stood on high in respect of Coelesyria and the seacoasts.

Ver. 23. Strengthening all the disciples] For as natural life needs nourishing, and young plants watering; so do the saints need confirmation, and Christ hath provided it for them, #Lu 22:32 Eph 4:11,12.

Ver. 24. An eloquent man] Et eruditum sonat et prudentem, saith Erasmus. It imports, 1. skill in the words; he could expound well: 2. good locution; he could well express his exposition. Matter in form, as they do all in nature, so also in art. Good matter well habited is more acceptable.

Ver. 25. Taught diligently] According to that skill he had. Of Lactantius, Jerome passeth this judgment. Lactantius quasi quidam fluvius Tullianae eloquentiae utinam tam nostra potuisset confirmare, quam facile aliena destruxit. So Cicero (De Nat. Deor.) wished that he could as easily find out the true God as he could disprove the false gods.

Ver. 26. And expounded unto him] A humble man will be glad to learn of the meanest that is. "A little child shall lead him," #Isa 11:6. One man may, for counsel, be a God to another, as Moses was to Aaron.

Ver. 27. Helped them much, who had believed through grace] For faith is a fruit of free grace. We can glory in nothing, saith Austin, because no good thing is ours; we bring forth faith and the fruits thereof, as Sarah's dead womb brought forth a child; it was not a child of nature, but of the mere promise; so are all our graces. Others read it thus: "He helped them through grace, who had believed": that is, he freely communicated to the brethren that grace that he had received, as a good steward; and helped them what he could toward heaven. True grace is diffusive; and is therefore compared to fire, water, wind, light, to spices of aromatic trees, that sweat out their precious and sovereign oils for the good of others. Apollos was not of those that desire rather proficere than prodesse, to inform themselves than to instruct others; to know than to teach, to be seraphims, for illumination, than to be angels, for ministry: account, he knew, was to be given of his time and of his talents to an austere master, &c.

Ver. 28. Convinced the Jews] Who might have been convinced out of their own Cabala, that Christ was come: but that seeing they saw, but perceived not.

Chapter 19

Ver. 1. While Apollos was at Corinth] A mercy of God to the Church, that in Paul's absence they should be so well provided of a preacher.

Ver. 2. Have ye received the Holy Ghost] That is, the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost in prophecy, tongues, &c., as #Ac 19:6.

Ver. 3. Unto John's baptism] That is, unto John's doctrine sealed by baptism. This Paul shows to be nothing so, #Ac 19:4. Whence Piscator collecteth that they were baptized by some of John's disciples into John's name, as if he had been the Christ. For that John had some such zealots about him, appears by #Joh 3:26, &c.

Ver. 4. John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance] That is, he taught the doctrine of repentance: {See Trapp on "Ac 19:5"} It is not to be thought that those were by Paul re-baptized who were formerly baptized by John; for if that had been necessary, Christ would have baptized his disciples again: but he baptized none himself, #Joh 4:1,2; and they baptized not themselves.

Ver. 5. They were baptized] That is, say some, they were re-baptized, because baptized before in a wrong name. Therefore Paul first catechiseth them, #Ac 19:4. Others say that it was rather their renewing to their baptism than their baptism to them; and not that they took any other than that of John, but that they now began to entertain and apply it to the right intent. (Mr Lightfoot, Harm.)

Ver. 6. And prophesied] By a divine and evident inspiration they expounded the writings of the prophets, and also foretold future events.

Ver. 7. And all the men were about twelve] These twelve, being the firstfruits of this Church, were endued with extraordinary gifts to be for elders and rulers there: for these gifts were not common to all believers, as Beza well noteth.

Ver. 8. The things concerning the kingdom of God] The subject matter of his discourse were faith, righteousness, life eternal. Of these things he disputed, and so informed their judgments: and these things he persuaded, and so reduced all to practice. Lo, this is preaching. Every sound is not music; neither is every pulpit discourse, preaching.

Ver. 9. But when divers were hardened] Hardness of heart is either natural or habitual: and this again is increased either by doing (that is, by resisting the word of God), or by suffering it to pass by us without amendment of life.

He departed from them and separated] So did Zuinglius and Luther separate from the Papists for like reason. It was laid to Luther's charge that he was an apostate. Confitetur se esse apostatam, sed beatum et sanctum, qui fidem diabolo datam non servavit. An apostate he confessed himself; but one that had fallen off from the devil only.

In the school of one Tyrannus] In one ancient copy it is added, "From the fifth hour to the tenth hour": so indefatigable a preacher was Paul, a very χαλκεντερος, or iron-sides. He had a golden wit in an iron body, as one saith of Julius Scaliger.

Ver. 10. So that all they that dwelt in Asia] Which now (according to the notation of its name) became אֵשׁ־יָהּ Esh-jah, the fire of God: not from the fire which at first they worshipped as God; but from the fire of grace kindled upon the hearth of their hearts, and making them shine as lamps in their lives. Father Latimer, when he was demanded the reason why so much preaching and little practice?

answered, Deest ignis, the fire of God is wanting, there is not a coal to warm at. It was otherwise now at Ephesus; all was on a light fire, which opened to St Paul that great door and effectual, #1Co 16:9, so that all they that dwelt in Asia were fired up to a holy contention in godliness.

Ver. 11. And God wrought special miracles] Virtutes non vulgares, not common power, yet ordinary in the infancy of the Church, but now not to be expected. Manna ceased when they came to Canaan; as if it would say, Ye need no miracles now you have means. So here.

Ver. 12. Handkerchiefs or aprons] Which having been touched by Paul's body, became sovereign (by a miracle) to cure diseases and cast out devils.

Ver. 13. Exorcists] But of these (having no call from God, but unwarrantably emulating Paul, and yet using good words) we may say, as one doth of witches with their good prayers (as they call them, Si magicae, Deus non vult tales; si piaae, non per tales. If magical, God will none of them; as if good prayers, yet because out of an evil mouth, he rejects them.)

Ver. 14. Seven sons of one Sceva] All fathers, but especially ministers, should use all utmost care that their children be well educated and instructed; and not think it sufficient to say of them as Pope Paul III did of his dissolute sea Farnesius, Haec vitia me non commonstratore didicit, He never learned it from his father.

Ver. 15. Jesus I know, and Paul] Jesus had destroyed his works, and Paul had felt his fingers, #2Co 12:7, and yet thrown him out of his trenches, #2Co 10:4.

Ver. 16. So that they fled out, &c.] Non omnia possumus omnes. Albeit the eagle in the fable did bear away a lamb in her talons with full flight, yet a raven endeavouring to do the like was held entangled, and fettered in the fleece. Every exorcist must not think to do as Paul did, nor every preacher as Latimer did. He had my fiddle and my stick, said he of one that preached his sermons, but wanted my resin.

Ver. 17. And fear fell on them all] {See Trapp on "Ac 5:5"}

Ver. 18. Confessed and showed their deeds] With detestation, being moved thereto by the fear of God's judgments. This they did publicly, not in the priest's ear, as Papists, nor out of a brain sick humour, as the Anabaptists at Sangall ( Coeperunt plurimi enormia sun delicta profiteri, alius furta, alius adulteria, alius alia, non sine admiratione audientium, non sine stomacho coniugum maritis talibns nihil non imprecantium, saith Scultetus); but with discretion and detestation. Oftentimes the very opening of men's grievances easeth the conscience, as the very opening of a vein cools the blood. Howbeit it is neither wisdom nor mercy to put men upon the rack of confession, further than they can have no ease any other way. (Dr Sibbes.)

Ver. 19. Which used curious arts] The Ephesians were much addicted to the black art. Whence that ancient proverb, Εφεσια γραμματα, Ephesian learning for necromancy. Cornelius Agrippa's dog had a devil tied to his collar, as some write. And Paracelsus (or else Erastus belies him) had one confined to his sword pommel.

Ver. 20. So mightily grew the word of God and prevailed] Happy it is for a people or person, when the word falls upon their spirits in the power of it, and subdues them; when the peace of God ruleth in their hearts, {βραβεuetο, #Col 3:15} and every high thought is so captivated to the obedience of Christ, that they can say, as #Jud 8:22 "Rule thou over us," &c. "For thou hast delivered us from the hand of Midian."

Ver. 21. Purposed in the spirit] i.e. By the instinct of the Holy Spirit, his counsellor and conduct, by whom all his actions were moderated. So he went bound in the spirit, #Ac 20:22. So Simeon came by the spirit into the temple, #Lu 2:27. And so still, the steps of every good man are ordered by the Lord, #Ps 37:23.

Ver. 22. In Asia] i.e. At Ephesus, the chief city of Asia the Less. {See Trapp on "Ac 19:10"}

Ver. 23. No small stir] Covetousness, as itself is idolatry, so it upholds idolatry. (as here) under a pretext of piety. Deos quisqus sibi utiles cudit, saith Epictetus. Ubi utilitas, ibi pietas, saith another. The Papists are sound in those points that touch not upon their profit, as in the doctrine of the Trinity, &c. Luther was therefore so much set against (as Erasmus told the Elector of Saxony) because he meddled with the pope's triple crown and the monks' fat paunches. (Scultet. Annal.)

Ver. 24. Which made silver shrines] Gr. temples, Templa portatilia, small portable temples, resembling that greater temple of Diana; as now the Agnus Dei (lamb of God) among the Papists. (Beza.) Some say they were little houses or caskets to put the idols in. (Casaubon.) Others, small coins stamped with the image of that famous temple. (Piscator.) Idolatrous trinkets they were, such as brought no small gain to the craftsmen, to whom gain was godliness. Ver. 25. By this craft we have our wealth] And wealth is the wordling's god, which he prizeth, as Micah did his idol; and can as hardly forego it. What a cursing made Micah's mother in the loss of her eleven hundred shekels of silver, #Jud 17:2, and what a hubbub raised Micah all the country over, when the Danites had despoiled him of his dunghill deity, #Jud 18:22-27. So did the silversmiths here, and they thought they had reason to be thus mad when their trade was taken away.

Ver. 26. They be no gods] The town clerk then told a loud lie, #Ac 19:5. Politicians think they may lawfully lie for peace sake. Howbeit Paul decried Diana's temple and worship with better discretion than Abdias the bishop burnt down the temple of the fire (which the Persians worship) at Persepolis. Whereupon not only he himself was slain, but all the temples of the Christians throughout Persia were overthrown, and many Christians put to death; the Persian priests being their chief persecutors, A. D. 413. (Funccius.)

Ver. 27. This our craft] Whereof they had the patent, the monopoly, το μερος. Dictio est mercimoniorum et negotiorum, in genere significans illud quod in divisione obvenit, saith Lorinus. Istud quod nobis est peculiare. So Beza renders it.

To be set at nought] Gr. εις απελεγμον ελθειν. To be refuted, disgraced, decried, and we greatly damnified. Nobis refutatum intercidat. (Beza.) This was the Diana they strove for, and about which they raised all this uproar. So the poor Waldenses were persecuted, not for detestation of their tenets, but out of a jealousy lest these men's plain dealing should discover their drifts and mar their markets.

And her magnificence should be destroyed] Her majesty, μεγαλειοτητα. Utinam aequae saltem reverenter de Dei nomine hodie homines loquerentur, saith Malcolm. I would men would but use like reverence in speaking of the true God.

Ver. 28. They were full of wrath] The Greek word θυμος signifieth the heating or heaving of the blood by the apprehension of the injury offered; hot and fiery anger, such as was that of Nebuchadnezzar, seven fold hotter than his fiery furnace, #Da 3:19.

Great is Diana] Papists boast and write much of the Romish greatness, as Lipsius and others. We grant them to be that great whore in the Revelation, #Re 17:18.

Ver. 29. And the whole city was filled with confusion] {See Trapp on "Ac 17:1"}

Ver. 30. The disciples suffered him not] i.e. They persuaded him otherwise, and prevailed. It is best, if a man can so order his affairs, as not to need the counsel of others. And the next best is to rest in good counsel, and to be ruled by it. But he that is uncounsellable is ripe for ruin, and that without remedy, #Pr 29:1.

Ver. 31. Certain of the chief of Asia] Not rulers, but priests, saith Beza, whose office was to set forth stage players in honour of the gods. These, though bad enough, had some good affection to the Christian religion, and cautioned Paul not to come into the theatre. Christ finds some friends among the worst of men.

Ver. 32. Knew not wherefore, &c.] No more do the most of our common hearers. They follow the drove, and believe as the Church believeth. They will say, they come to Church to serve God; but who that God is, how to be served, wherein, and in whom to be served, they know not. Si ventri bene sit, si lateri, as Epicurus in Horace, if the belly may be filled, the back fitted, it sufficeth them.

Ver. 33. And they drew Alexander] The coppersmith, who was here near to martyrdom, yet afterwards made shipwreck of the faith, #1Ti 1:19,20, and did the apostle much evil, and greatly withstood not his person only, but his preachings, #2Ti 4:15,16, which was a sin of a high and heinous nature.

Would have made his defence] He would have excused his countrymen the Jews (who therefore put him forward), and have turned all the rage of the people upon the apostles. But by a sweet providence of God he could not have audience.

Ver. 34. That he was a Jew] The Jews were generally hated of the Gentiles, and especially after their return from the Babylonish captivity, because they cried down all gods and religions but their own, and would never be drawn again to worship other gods, for which sin they had so exceedingly smarted. At this day the Jews, for their inexpressible guilt in crucifying Christ and their implacable hatred to his people, are by a common consent of nations banished out of the world, as it were. The very Turks themselves so hate the Jews for their crucifying Christ, that they used to say in detestation of a thing, Iudaeus sim, si mentiar, I would I might die a Jew then. Neither will they permit a Jew to turn Turk, unless he be first baptized.

All with one voice cried out, &c.] So the Papists cry up, ad ravim usque, their Lady of Loretto, of Sicheim, of Walsingham, &c., and have nothing in their mouths so much as the Church, the Church; wherein, like oyster wives, they do easily out cry us.

Ver. 35. Great goddess Diana] Who yet, as great as she was, being busy at Alexander's birth (as he said), could not be at leisure to save her temple at Ephesus from burning. Like as Baal was so hot in the pursuit of his enemies, that he could not be at hand to help his friends, #1Ki 18:27.

And of the image that fell] A very ancient image made by Canetias a certain artificer, and for the antiquity of it, said by the covetous priests to have fallen down from Jupiter, that it might be the more venerable. By a like craft the Popish priests now show some shivers of the cross whereon our Saviour suffered, yea, some shreds of the tail of that ass whereupon he rode to Jerusalem.

Ver. 36. Ye ought to be quiet] Or, sedate, composed, kept within compass, "to do nothing rashly or headlongly": Temeritas enim comitem την μετανοιαν εχει.

Ver. 37. Blasphemers of your goddess] This was false: but this politician held it lawful to redeem peace with a lie. Not so St Paul, who knew that after his departure from Ephesus grievous wolves would enter in, #Ac 20:29. And yet, because he could not stay to preach unless he would have restored some Pharisaical observations, and unless, for peace's sake, he would have yielded to the rites and image of Diana, he left the place, because he must not do the greatest good by any evil means.

Ver. 38,39. As the town clerk here quieted the tumultuating people, so ought we to compose unruly passions. Say to them, 1. Ye ought to do nothing rashly. 2. The law is open; so is God's ear, to whom vengeance belongeth. 3. We are in danger of this day's uproar, &c.

Ver. 39. In a lawful assembly] Such as this could not be. Cum boni, cum probi coeunt, non est factio dicenda sed curia: ut e contrario, illis nomen factionis accommodandum est, qui in odium bonorum et Troborum conspirant. (Tertul. Apol. xxxix.)

Ver. 40. For we are in danger] Danger we all desire to decline, whether it be of life, limb, estate, &c., but venture our souls daily to the danger of damnation: this is practical atheism, rank folly.

Ver. 41. Dismissed the assembly] And so Demetrius was deceived. See here the power of civil prudence and flexanimous eloquence. (See Cic. de Oratore, i.)

Chapter 20

Ver. 1. Into Macedonia] Great Alexander's country, called at this day Albany, and is subject to the Turk.

Ver. 2. Into Greece] sc. To Corinth, whence he wrote the Epistle to the Romans.

Ver. 3. And there abode three] Gr. ποιησας, "Was doing there," he was in continual action. Life consists in action; so doth spiritual life, #Isa 38:16. And by this reason one may live more in a month than another in many years. In this sense Seneca saith (Epist. lxxvii.), Quamvis vitae paucos fecerimus dies. See the same word used thus, #Mt 20:12.

Ver. 4. Sopater of Berea, Aristarchus and Secundus, &c.] These all were the very "glory of Jesus Christ," #2Co 8:23, and yet counted the offscouring of all things: {περιψημια, #1Co 4:13} these precious sons of Zion, comparable to fine gold, were esteemed as earthen pitchers, #La 4:2. These worthies of whom the world was not worthy, #Heb 11:38, were cast out of the world as it were by an ostracism. These jewels of Jesus Christ, these "excellent ones of the earth," these earthly angels, were shamefully slighted, and trampled upon by the fat bulls of Bashan with the feet of insolence and cruelty. Howbeit as stars (though we see them sometimes in a puddle, though they reflect there, yet) have they their situation in heaven; so God's saints, though in a low condition, yet they are fixed in the region of happiness. Content they are to pass to heaven (as Christ their head did) as concealed men, and would not change estates with the earth's mightier monarchs.

Ver. 5. Tarried for us at Troas] {See Trapp on "Ac 16:8"}

Ver. 6. In five days] Let them that please read here Ptolemy's first table of Asia, where they shall have this whole voyage of St Paul daintily described.

Ver. 7. Continued his speech till midnight] Media nocte vigilabant, ut eos condemnent qui media die dormiunt, saith Chrysostom. Jacob, fearing his brother, slept not all that night. If Samuel thought it had been God that spake to him, he would not have slept. While Ishbosheth slept, Baanah and Rechab took off his head. After the disciples slept, being bidden watch, they fled from Christ and forswore him, #Mt 26:40.

Ver. 8. And there were many lights] Night meetings are lawful, and, in some cases, needful; though carnal men will calumniate, and muse as they use. Caligula thought there was not a chaste man upon earth, because himself was most detestably unchaste.

Ver. 9. Being fallen into a deep sleep] Woe to many today, when God shall once send out summonses for sleepers.

Ver. 10. His life is in him] After that Paul prayed for him, life returned; or else because he knew it should return, he speaks of it as a done thing.

Ver. 11. And eaten] After the celebration of the Lord's supper, followed the use of daily food. Animantis cuiusque vita est in fuga, saith the philosopher; so that were it not for the repair of nutrition, natural life would be soon extinguished. So would spiritual life also.

Ver. 12. And were not a little comforted] Not so much for the young man's recovery, as for the love of God sealed up unto them therein: this was the kernel, the other but the shell.

Ver. 13. Assos] A chief city of Mysia, called also Apollonia, on the Asiatic shore.

To go on foot] Haply for his health's sake, or for more convenience of visiting the brethren, whose edification he minded more than his own ease.

Ver. 14-15. Mytilene] An island of the Cyclades, now called Meteline. See what great difficulties these good men devoured for the glory of God and good of his people. The love of Christ constrained them (amor addidit alas) and the recompence of reward in heaven quickened them; Quis enim non patiatur, ut potiatur? Who would not suffer for such a felicity?

Ver. 16. To be at Jerusalem] Not so much to observe the legal rites, which he knew to be then abrogated (only sepelienda erat synagoga cum honore), as to edify the Church, by declaring to the faithful there how Christ's kingdom was propagated abroad, and by confuting the slanderous aspersions cast upon him by evil-minded men.

Ver. 17. From Miletus] A city of Asia, lower than Ephesus.

Ver. 18. Ye know] This the apostle speaketh, not out of vain glory or desire of popular applause, but partly for their imitation (all things in a minister should be eximious and exemplary), and partly to procure credit to his doctrine by setting forth the holiness of his life; since quod iussit, et gessit, as Bernard, nec verbis solum praedicavit, sed et exemplis, as Eusebius saith of Origen, he did what he taught; and his life was nothing else but a transcript of his sermons. This would be a real apology for him against the false apostles.

Ver. 19. Serving the Lord, &c.] Here is a mirror for ministers.

Ver. 20. With many tears] He went weeping from house to house, beseeching them to be reconciled to God, persuading them, as knowing the terror of the Lord, #2Co 5:10.

Ver. 21. Testifying] Not barely preaching, but vehemently pressing (as matters of greatest importance).

Repentance towards God] Not a desperate repentance (as was that of Judas), that drives men from God, but such as draws them towards him, and brings them before him, submitting to his justice, and imploring his mercy, as at the meet at Mizpeh, #1Sa 7:5.

Faith towards Jesus Christ] Repentance is put first, because initial repentance is a preparation to effectual faith. See #Mr 1:15. {See Trapp on "Mr 1:15"}

Ver. 22. I go bound in the spirit] Paul's spirit did not hang loose, but it was girt up in a resolution to go through with the work, whatsoever came of it. The Spirit hems us about, comprehends and keeps us, when a man's own strength would fall loose. It is not so with every ungirt gospeller, that hath a loose, discinct, and diffluent mind, and no supernatural strength to support him.

Ver. 23. Bonds and afflictions abide me] Let no faithful minister dream of a delicacy, or think by any discretion to prevent affliction, but be ready, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ, to suffer hardship. To preach is nothing else but to derive upon himself the hate and rage of graceless men, saith Luther.

Ver. 24. Neither count I my life dear] Singula prope verba spirant martyrium, as one saith of Cyprian's writings. When one said to Julius Palmer the martyr, Take heed, it is a hard matter to burn; Indeed, said he, it is for him that hath his soul linked to his body, as a thief's foot in a pair of fetters. Among all the vain mockeries of this world (said the Duke of Somerset at his death in King Edward VI's time) I repent me of nothing more than of esteeming life more dear than I should.

Ver. 25. Shall see my face no more] viz. In the flesh, and upon earth. But in heaven we shall see and say, ἰδοὺ ὁ Παῦλος καὶ ὁ Πέτρος (as Chrysostom thinks) Lo, that is Paul, and the other is Peter. In the transfiguration, Peter knew Moses and Elias, as if he had been long acquainted with them. And yet that was but a glimpse of heaven.

Ver. 26. I take you to record] Happy is that man that can be acquitted by himself private, in public by others, in both by God.

I am pure from the blood of all men] The apostle hath an eye here (doubtless) to that flaming place of #Eze 3:18 "His blood will I require at thine hands"; which words are fulmina, non verba, saith Erasmus, not words, but lighting bolts.

Ver. 27. All the counsel of God] sc. that concerneth you to know, to your eternal salvation by Christ alone. See #Lu 7:30, {See Trapp on "Lu 7:30"}

Ver. 28. Hath made you overseers] ἐπισκοπούς. But many are Aposcopi rather than Episcopi, saith Espensaeus; byseers rather than overseers.

Which he hath purchased with his blood] The Church is to Christ a bloody spouse, an Aeldama, or field of blood; for she could not be redeemed with silver and gold, but with the blood of God; so it is called by a communication of properties, to set forth the incomparable value and virtue thereof.

Ver. 29. Shall grievous wolves enter] Or fat wolves; for Βαρυς in Greek comes of אֵיִרָב in Hebrew, which signifies fat, as some etymologists have observed; a fit epithet for seducers, which fat themselves with the blood of souls. Now it is well observed that heretical seducers are fitly compared to wolves in various respects. First, wolves are dull sighted by day, but quick sighted in the night; {a} so are pernicious seducers sharp witted for error, but dull to apprehend the truth of sound divinity. Secondly, as the wolf deals gently with the sheep at first, carrying it away unhurt upon his back till he have brought it to the place where he means to strangle it: even so deal seducers; they first draw their proselytes into lighter errors, and then into blasphemous and damnable heresies. And thus homo homini lupus est, one man becomes a wolf to another. Thirdly, as a wolf begets a wolf, so doth a deceiver a deceived. {b} Fourthly, as the wolf is said to strike a man dumb, if he spy the man before the man spy him; {c} so when seducers prevail, they strike men dumb in respect of savoury communication or Christian profession. Fifthly, as the wool of a wolf, if it be made into a garment, will prove but an odious garment, breeding vermin upon him that shall wear it, as Plutarch speaks; so the good which poor seduced souls think they receive by impostors, it will prove corruption in the end. Lastly, as wolves are of a ravenous disposition and insatiable, so seducers hunger after gain, #Ro 16:18, and thirst after blood of souls, as those #Mt 23:6.

{b} Omne simile generat sibi simile. Plin. viii. 22.

{c} Lupi me videre priores. Virg.

Ver. 30. To draw away disciples] αποσπαν, to tear them limb from limb by a violent avulsion and distraction, compelling them by their persuasions to embrace those distorted doctrines, διεστραμμενα, that produce convulsions of conscience, #De 13:5. Such are said to thrust men out of God's ways.

Ver. 31. Night and day with tears] Good men weep easily, saith the Greek poet; {a} and the better any is, the more inclined to weeping; as David than Jonathan, #1Sa 20:41. Some (as they say of witches) cannot weep for sin. But they that weep not here, where there are wiping handkerchiefs in the hands of Christ, shall have their eyes whiped out in hell.

Ver. 32. Able to build] As being God's arm, and mighty instruments of his power, #1Co 1:18 Ro 1:16.

Ver. 33. I have coveted no man's, &c.] Non opes, non gloriam, non voluptates quaesivi, &c. Hanc conscientiam aufero quocumque discedo, said Melancthon. (Melch. Adam.)

Ver. 34. These hands have ministered] More shame for them to suffer it. Sed rara ingeniorum praemia, rara item et merces, saith one; and Nescio quomodo bonae mentis soror est paupertas, saith Petronius; and, Paupertas est Thilosophiae vernacula, saith Apuleius. Let God's servant keep them honest, the world will keep them poor enough.

Ver. 35. It is more blessed] Epicurus could say, του ευ πασχειν το ευ ποιειν καλλιον και ηδιον, that to do good was not only better, but sweeter also than to receive good. Julius Caesar counted nothing his own that he bestowed not upon others. And it better pleased Cyrus to give than to possess any good thing that he had. Διδους μαλλον η κτωμενος ηδεται (Xenoph.)

Ver. 36. And prayed with them all] O verum valedicendi morem Christianis dignum, saith one. Now it's no use parting without potting and healthing. Quae turpissima κυκλοσποσια, Principum derisio, a parasitis traxit originem, saith Pasor. Which cursed custom had its beginning from court parasites.

Ver. 37. And they all wept sore] Expletur lachrymis egeriturque dolor. It was noted and noticed by the very heathens that there were no people under heaven so loving one to another as the primitive Christians: animo animaque inter se miscebantur, saith Tertullian of them: it should seem so indeed by this mutual melting heartedness. Well might the heathen beholders say, Vide ut invicem se ament Christiani, See how these Christians love one another; like as the Jews when they saw Jesus weep over Lazarus, said, "Behold how he loved him," #Joh 11:35,36.

Ver. 38. Sorrowing most] They are out, then, qui ferream et immanem constantiam exigunt a fidelibus, who exact of Christians a stoic apathy or insensibleness to crosses and sorrowful occurrences. (Calvin.) Religion doth not root out natural passions, but regulate them. The parting with dear friends (which are as a man's own soul, #De 13:6) is so grievous that death itself is called a "departure."

Chapter 21

Ver. 1. We came with a straight course] ευθυδρομησαντες. So shall all those that make "straight paths for their feet," #Heb 12:13, whose eyes look straight before them, #Pr 4:25, who ponder their paths by the weights of the word, #Pr 4:26.

Ver. 2. Phoenicia] A region of Syria: the woman of Canaan was a Syrophenician.

Ver. 3. Now when he had discovered Cyprus] Vox nautica, a mariner's term; so is συνεσταλμενος, #1Co 7:29. St Paul was a great trader of Christ both by land and sea; and had terms ready for both.

{See Trapp on "1Co 7:29"}

Ver. 4. And finding disciples] Such as Isaiah had long since foretold should leave hoarding and heaping wealth, and find another manner of employment for it, to feed and clothe God's saints, #Isa 23:18.

That he should not go up, &c.] They understanding by his divine revelation, what danger Paul was in, out of charity, and not by any special command of the Spirit, forewarned him, and desired him not to go up.

Ver. 5. And prayed] {See Trapp on "Ac 20:36"}

Ver. 6. We took ship] Leaving them on shore: we shall one day meet, and never more be separated. O dieculam illam, &c. Euge, Deo sit laus et gloria, quod iam instet horula illa gratissima, {a} O that day! O that joy! Castigemus mores et moras. (Bernard.) Let us ripen apace, and hasten to that heavenly home, that glorious panegyris and general assembly, #Heb 12:23.

{a} Greserus moribundus. Melch. Adam.

Ver. 7. And abode with them one day] Suavis hora, sed parva mora, short and sweet abode.

Ver. 8. Philip the Evangelist] He was at first but a deacon; but having well used that lower office, he was advanced to this. A fruitful man shall not sit long in a low place: God will call him forth to a higher employment, and make him master of much, that was so "faithful in a little" #Lu 16:10.

Ver. 9. Did prophesy] That is, they had the gift of foretelling future things by divine inspiration. This was every way extraordinary.

Ver. 10. A certain prophet] So called a procul fando, as some will have it. These New Testament prophets were next to the apostles in office; and are mentioned together with them in laying the foundation of Christianity, #Eph 3:5,2:20.

Ver. 11. So shall the Jews] Who were ever most bitter enemies to Christians, and so they continue. Among the Turks every vizier and pasha of state useth to keep a Jew of his private council; whose malice, wit, and experience of Christendom, with their continual intelligence, is thought to advise most of that mischief which the Turk puts in execution against us. Are those then well advised that desire that the Jews may have free commerce among us, as they have in Poland? where they not only curse all Christians publicly in their daily prayers, but boldly print against our religion whatsoever they please? (Buxtorf. Synag. Jud.)

Ver. 13. What mean you to weep?] Ecclesiastical history mentioneth one Phileas, a nobleman and a martyr, who going to execution, seemed as one deaf at the persuasions and blind at the tears of his friends; Nam quomodo potest terrenis lachrymis flecti cuius oculi coelestem gloriam contuentur? said one Philoramus defending him, and was therefore beheaded with him.

I am ready, not to be bound] This was a brave Roman resolution. Necesse est ut eam, non ut vivam, said Pompey. The Lacedaemonians were wont to say, It is a shame for any man to flee in time of danger; but for a Lacedaemonian, it is a shame for him to deliberate. How much more for a Christian, when called by God to suffer! Go (said Luther), I will surely go (since I am sent for) in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, yea, though I knew there were so many devils to resist me as there are tiles to cover the houses in Worms. Spalatinus had sent to Luther, to inquire whether or no he would go to Worms, and appear in the gospel's cause, if Csesar summoned him; Omnia de me praesumas (said he) praeter fugam, et palinodiam. Fugere nolo, multo minus recantare. Ita me confortet Dominus. Socrates would not hearken to his friend Criton, persuading him to shift for himself by a dishonourable flight. And when some friends dealt with Dr Taylor, martyr, not to appear before Stephen Winchester, but to flee; Flee you (said he), and do as your conscience leads you; I am fully determined, with God's grace, to go to the bishop, and to his beard to tell him that he doth naught. True zeal is of a most masculine, disengaged, courageous nature, and ready to say, Shall I change mine opinion, because Hoc Ithacus velit? does Ithacus wish this? remit of my diligence for fear of death? Oh, that I might enjoy those wild beasts prepared for my torments, said blessed Ignatius. {a} And oh, that it might be so with me, said Basil, threatened with death by Valens the Arian emperor. {b} So we read of another holy bishop, who when his hand was threatened to be cut off, cried out, Seca ambas, nay, cut off both.

{b} Ειθε γενοιτο μοι.

Ver. 14. The will of the Lord be done] Vox vere Christianorum, saith one, Voluntas Dei, necessitas rei. A godly man says Amen to God's Amen; and puts his Fiat Let him do it, and Placet let it be pleasing, to God's. One said, he could have what he would of God. Why? how was that? Because whatsoever was God's will, that was his. It is said that I shall be burned in Smithfield (said blessed Bradford), and that very shortly, Fiat voluntas Domini: Ecce ego, mitte me. Let the will of God be done, behold, me, send me, Mr Beza's last text was the third petition of the Lord's prayer, "Thy will be done," &c. In qua deficere potius quam desinere visas est, saith he that writeth his life. (Melch. Adam.)

Ver. 15. We took up our carriages] A military term; we trussed up our fardles, made up our packs, our bag and baggage, επισκευασαμενοι, instructi et comparati ad quaevis nimirum pericula subeunda, said Beza, being ready prest and prepared to whatsoever hazard.

Ver. 16. An old disciple] A gray-headed experienced Christian, a father, #1Jo 2:13. Such as those mentioned #Ps 92:12-14. A Christian hath his degrees of growth. Ye have his conception, #Ga 4:19; birth, #1Pe 1:13; childhood, #1Co 3:1,2; youth or well grown age, when he is past the spoon, #1Jo 2:13; his full grown age, #Eph 4:13; old age, as #1Jo 2:13, and here. An "old disciple," and yet a disciple still not too old to learn. Solon said, I wax old ever learning somewhat. {a} Julianus, the lawyer, said, that when he had one foot in the grave, yet he would have the other in the school. Chytreus, when he lay dying, lifted up himself to hear the discourse of some friends that visited him; and said that he should die with so much the better cheer if he might better his knowledge by what they were speaking of. (Melch. Adam.)

With whom he should lodge] viz. When we came to Jerusalem. This Mnason was another Gaius, the host of the Church. The Waldenses were so spread in Germany that they could travel from Colen to Milan in Italy, and every night lodge with hosts of their own profession, which was a great comfort to them. (Cade of the Church.)

{a} Γηρασκω αιει πολλα διδασκομενος.

Ver. 17. Received us gladly] Gr. ασμενωσ, smilingly. Dat bene, dat multum, qui dat cum munere vultum. When we come to the new Jerusalem, the whole court of heaven shall meet us, and greet us with great joy.

Ver. 18. Unto James] The son of Alpheus, called by St Mark, "James the less," and by some of the ancients, Bishop of Jerusalem.

Ver. 19. He declared particularly] Gr. καθ εν εκαστον, "one by one." So Moses tells Jethro all things one by one what God had done for Israel, #Ex 18:8. We must not relate God's lovingkindness in the lump or by wholesale, but be punctual and particular.

Ver. 20. Many thousands] Therefore not to be slighted.

Ver. 21. To remake Moses] An odious and false imputation. All that St Paul taught was, that the legal rites and customs were only shadows of things to come, but the body is of Christ, #Col 2:17; and that Christians should know and use their freedom in wisdom and charity, #Ga 2:3 1Co 8:13.

Ver. 22. The multitude must needs come together] And be satisfied, for else that sinister opinion which they have conceived of thee will be increased, and they will take all for granted that is alleged against thee. Now a heathen sage could say (and there is much truth in it), Negligere quid de se quisque sentiat, non solum arrogantis est, sed ei dissoluti: It is a sign of a proud lewd person not to care what people think of him.

Ver. 23. A vow on them] A voluntary vow of Nazariteship, which yet is agreeable to the law's praescript.

Ver. 24. And all may know] There is a real confutation of calumnies.

Ver. 25. And from fornication] {See Trapp on "Ac 15:20"}

Ver. 26. Purifying himself] See Augustine's Epistles 11 and 19.

Ver. 27. The Jews which were of Asia] St Paul's good intent had but evil success; but his conscience was his comfort, as #2Co 1:9,12. So was holy Melancthon's; when but coarsely dealt with, and threatened with banishment, {a} this he could say for himself, I have not sought for myself wealth, honour, pleasure, or victory over mine adversaries. This conscience I take with me, withersoever they shall drive me.

Ver. 28. Crying, Men of Israel, help, this is the man, &c.] An admirable and graphic description of this tumult; every circumstance set forth to the life as it were. No poet could have done it with more skill and artifice. There is as good rhetoric in the Bible as in any heathen orator whatsoever. It was therefore a foolish and profane fear of Politian, Longolius, Bonamicus, and other Logodaedali, that if they should read the Scriptures, they should mar the purity of their style. "This is the man that teacheth," &c. There is not a true word in all this outcry. So Elias was called a troubler, Luther a trumpeter of rebellion, Melancthon a blasphemmer of God and his saints, Calvin a Mahometan, Zanchius an Anabaptist, a Swenckfeldian, Novatian, and what not? Arminius paved his way first by aspersing and sugillating the fame and authority of Calvin, Zuinglius, Beza, Martyr, and other champions of the truth. The Papists reported the Waldenses (those ancient Protestants) to be Manichees, Arians, Catharists, &c., as they do us to be libertines, enthusiasts, atheists, &c. Contra sycophantae morsum non est remedium. They set their mouths against heaven, and their tongue walketh through the earth, #Ps 73:9. But God will cut out such false tongues, #Ps 12:3, and broil them upon coals of juniper, #Ps 120:4.

Ver. 29. Whom they supposed] But was that sufficient ground to make such a coil, to raise such an uproar? Passions are head-long and head-strong; like heavy bodies down steep hills, once in motion, they move themselves, and know no ground but the bottom.

Ver. 30. The doors were shut] That he might not there take sanctuary.

Ver. 31. And as they went about to kill him] The devil was first a liar and then a murderer. The persecutors ever first belied the Church, and then did their worst against her. Slander is a kind of murder, and makes way for it, #Eze 22:9, as in the massacre of Paris. The monks had given out before that the Protestants met for no other purpose but to feast their carcasses, and then (the lights being put out) to satisfy their unlawful lusts promiscuously. Thus they prepared and provoked the people to that bloody butchery, and so slew the innocent Huguenots twice; like as it is said of Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester, that he was thought by the people of England to be doubly murdered, viz. by detraction and deadly practice.

Ver. 32. Who immediately took soldiers] An admirable example of God's good providence, who delighteth to reserve his hand for a dead lift, to save those that are forsaken of their hopes. He cometh unlooked for, as it were out of an engine, απο μηχανης.

They left beating of Paul] Who could better bear it, because he had felt worse fingers than theirs, when that messenger of Satan buffeted him, #2Co 12:7. And surely if the philosopher (when brayed in a mortar by his cruel Scythians) could bear it patiently, saying, Beat on Anacharsis' wind bang, meaning his body, {a} much more could the apostle by the force of his faith. Especially, since his suffering reached only to his flesh, his soul was untouched thereby, #Col 1:24.

Ver. 33. To be bound with two chains] As if he would have presently punished him. This he did to satisfy the mad multitude.

Ver. 34. For the tumult] All was on a hurry, as it was #Ac 19:23-29 at Ephesus, vel ut in regno Cyclopico.

Into the castle] Called Antonia, near the temple, where the soldiers kept garrison.

Ver. 35. He was borne of the soldiers] Who considered as little what a precious pack they now had upon their backs, as once the Midianitish merchants did, what a price they had in their hands, viz. Joseph, the jewel of the world and lord of Egypt.

Ver. 36. Away with him] Yea, but stay, Paul's time was in God's hand, who had told him that after he had been at Jerusalem he must see Rome too. In the mean time it might be some comfort to Paul to hear the same words (and perhaps by the same men) used of him, as had been before of his Master Christ, Away with him, &c. It is sufficient for the servant to be as his Lord. Art thou not glad to fare as Phocion? said he to one that was to suffer with him. {a} Holy Ignatius took great comfort in this, that though he suffered death for Christ, yet in the day when God should make up his jewels, he should reckon not only from the blood of righteous Abel to the blood of Zacharias son of Barachias, but from the blood of Zacharias to the blood of mean Ignatius. We have mentioned before that martyr that rejoiced that she might have her foot in the hole of the stocks in which Mr Philpot had been before her. When Luther thought he should die of an apoplexy, {b} it comforted him that the apostle John had died of that disease. How much more should it do us, that we "fill up that only which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in our flesh," #Col 1:24, and that suffering together, we shall also reign together!

{b} A malady, very sudden in its attack, which arrests more or less completely the powers of sense and motion; it is usually caused by an effusion of blood or serum in the brain, and preceded by giddiness, partial loss of muscular power, etc. (ED)

Ver. 37. Canst thou speak Greek] Ay, no man better, whensoever he pleased; witness his gallant apology to Tertulhs, Ac. xxiv., and again his most accurate apology to Agrippa, Ac. xxvi., wherein (Pericles-like) fulgurabat, iutonabat, &c., he lightened one while, thundered another, did what he would with his audience, became master of their affections, being as potent in his divine rhetoric as Cicero in his human; who, as it is said, while he pleaded for Ligarius, disarmed the angry emperor and got pardon for the poor suppliant.

Ver. 38. Art not thou that Egyptian?] Of whom read Joseph. ii. 10, de Belle Jud., and Antiq. xx.

That were murderers] Assassins, cut-throats. These were of the faction of Judas Gaulonites or Galileus. See #Lu 13:1. (Godw. Heb. Antiq.)

Ver. 39. Of no mean city] And yet more ennobled by Paul than Paul was by it; like as Hippo was better known by Austin than Austin was by Hippo, whereof he was bishop; the island Cos by Hippocrates than Hippocrates by Cos; King Archelaus by his friend Euripides than Euripides by Archelaus.

Ver. 40. In the Hebrew tongue] i.e. In the Syriac, a daughter of the Hebrew, and the mother tongue of them who were called Hebrews.

Chapter 22

Ver. 1. Men, brethren, and fathers] They that spake for themselves before the Areopagites in Athens, were required to do it ανευ παθων και προομιων, without passions or prefaces, not so here.

Ver. 2. In the Hebrew tongue] {See Trapp on "Ac 21:40"}

Ver. 3. At the feet of Gamaliel] Among the Jews, the Rabbi sat, termed בשוי or the sitter the scholar was called קלבהמ or one that lies along in the dust, a token of the scholar's humility, subjecting himself even to the feet of his teacher, as here, and #Lu 10:39 2Ki 2:5. Knowest thou not that the Lord will take thy master from thine head? A phrase taken from their manner of sitting in the schools. This, same custom (saith one) it is thought St Paul laboured to bring into the Christian Church, #1Co 14:6. (Godw. Antiq. Heb.)

And was zealous toward God] With a blind zeal, which is no better than mettle in a blind horse than fire on the chimney top, than the devil in the demoniac, which threw him into the fire sometimes, and sometimes into the water.

Ver. 5. {See Trapp on "Ac 9:2"}

Ver. 6. {See Trapp on "Ac 9:3"}

Ver. 7. {See Trapp on "Ac 9:4"}

Ver. 8. I am Jesus of Nazareth] Why saith our Saviour, Jesus of Nazareth? Doth any good come out of Nazareth? Why saith he not rather I am Jesus the Son of God, the heir of the world &c. Nazareth was a reproach cast upon Christ and he glories in it: should not we prefer the reproach of Christ before the highest honour the world can do us?

Ver. 9. But they heard not] {See Trapp on "Ac 9:7"}

Ver. 10. See #Ac 9:16-18.

Ver. 14. Hath chosen thee] Gr. προεχειρισατο hath handled thee beforehand. Beza, "hath designed thee," Erasmus, "hath prepared thee," viz by unhorsing and blinding thee. Schola Crucis schola lucis. The school of the cross is the school of light.

Ver. 15. Of what thou hast seen] sc. When rapped into the third heaven, #2Co 12:2, which might very well be in that three days' darkness. {See Trapp on "Ac 9:9"}

Ver. 16. Wash away thy sins] By being inwardly baptized in the blood of Christ, by his merit and spirit. For there is baptismus flaminis et baptismus fluminis, a baptism of fire and water, #Mt 3:11; hence we read of baptisms, #Heb 6:2, and of the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost #Tit 3:5. {See Trapp on "Ac 2:38"}

Ver. 17. Even while I prayed] Then especially God's people are rapped and ravished. {See Trapp on "Ac 10:10"}

Ver. 18. They will not receive] And I have ordained thee for a better purpose than to lie idle He therefore that heareth, let him hear, and he that forebears, let him forbear. God will not always be with men in the opportunities of grace but make them know the worth by the want. #Eze 3:27.

Ver. 19. Lord, they know that I imprisoned] Therefore no wonder though they of Jerusalem reject my testimony, as a light giddy headed fellow who now teach that religion that I lately persecuted; sed praestat herbam dare quam turpiter pugnare. Luther was counted and called an apostate, he confessed the action; but blessed God that had given him grace to fall off from the devil. Bugenhagen having read some few leaves of Luther's book de Captivitate Babylonica, rashly pronounced Luther the most pestilent heretic that ever troubled the Church. But shortly after, reading the book through, and wisely weighing the arguments therein used and urged, he recanted his former censure, and publicly averred and maintained that all the Christian world was out, and Luther only in the right; Hic vir unus et solus verum videt, said he to his collegioners; many of whom he convinced and converted to the truth. (Scult. Annal.) It is judged by many that the fear of disgrace began to work upon Paul here (as it had done upon Jonah, #Jon 4:2), q.d. I shall be counted a moon-calf; {a} a Retraxit shall be entered against me, as is against a plaintiff that will not proceed in his suit.

{a} An abortive shapeless fleshy mass in the womb; a false conception. Obs. Regarded as being produced by the influence of the moon. (ED)

Ver. 20. When the blood of thy martyr] An honour not afforded to any angel in heaven, said Father Latimer. God forgive me mine unthankfulness, said Bradford, for this, that I must die a martyr, that Christ will be magnified in my mortal body, whether it be by life or by death. Stephen, Christ's proto-martyr! Antipas, my faithful martyr! what a high style is this! Ignatius professed that he would rather be a martyr than a monarch. He called his bonds his spiritual pearls, and triumphed in his voyage to Rome to suffer, to think that his blood should be found among the mighty worthies, such as Abel, Stephen, Antipas, &c. {a}

Ver. 21. And he said unto me, Depart] Which good Paul was full loth to do; having (with the vinedresser in the Gospel, #Lu 13:8) both digged and begged for his unworthy countrymen, till there was no remedy, #2Ch 36:16, till the very last period of their day of grace, #Ac 13:46. {See Trapp on "Ac 13:46"}

Ver. 22. And they gave him audience] The Jews to this day will not hear of the Gentiles having any interest in their Messiah, they call us bastard Gentiles, and curse us Christians in their daily prayers, with a Maledic Domine Nazaraeis. Gog, curse the Nazarene. They stick not to say that rather than we should have any benefit by their Messiah, they would crucify him a hundred times over. Thus to this present they please not God, and are contrary to all men, #1Th 2:15. We must pity them and pray for them, as #Ps 14:7. Lopez the traitor, at Tyburn, affirmed that he loved Queen Elizabeth as he loved Jesus Christ; which from a Jew was heard not without laughter. (Camd. Eliz.)

Ver. 23. And as they cried] A graphic description of their unreasonable rage and rout. Well might our Saviour say, Beware of men acted and agitated by the devil, #Mt 10:17; and St Paul pray to be delivered from absurd and wicked men, #2Th 3:2, as bad as those beasts that he encountered at Ephesus, #1Co 15:32. Let a bear robbed of her whelps meet a man rather than a fry of furious fools in their folly, #Pr 17:12.

Ver. 24. Examined by scourgings] Politicians consider not often what is just, but what is of use for the present purpose, be it right or wrong. Paul is here commanded to be scourged, and then examined. This is hysteron proteron, justice turned topsy-turvy.

Ver. 25. A man that is a Roman] A citizen of Rome might neither be bound nor beaten. {See Trapp on "Ac 16:37"} Paul by this freedom escaped whipping; we by that which Christ hath purchased us, not for gold or silver, but his own blood, #1Pe 1:19, escape the pain of eternal torment.

Ver. 26. This man is a Roman] The centurion might believe St Paul upon his bare word, because if any claimed that privilege and could not prove it, he was to die for so doing.

Ver. 27. He said, Yea] And withal he made it out (likely) by sufficient proof to be so; he produced some convincing evidence, though it be not here recorded. All God's people are fellow citizens with the saints, burgesses of the new Jerusalem, free denizens of heaven, #Eph 2:19 Heb 12:23; where their names are enrolled long since, as the manner was at Rome, and likewise at Jerusalem, #Ps 48:3. But they must look up their evidences, and be able to prove their interest by irrefragable arguments, when Satan shall roar upon them and shake his chain at them. It should be our care and study to find out that which Luke calls the certainty, #Ac 1:4, and not be led by conjectural suppositions, but be fully persuaded, #Ac 22:1, and get such a victorious faith as the gates of hell may not prevail against. God is no way wanting to us herein, as having made heaven ours both by covenant and his testament, his covenant he hath written not only in his word, but also in our hearts; and we have witnesses thereof, three in heaven and three on earth; his seals also and oath to confirm it. And lest we should think that covenant may break, he hath likewise given us heaven by testament, confirmed by the death of the Testator. A certainty therefore may be had of our interest in heaven, of our names written there; and that is an ignorant distinction among Papists, that men may have a certainty of hope, but not of faith in matters of salvation.

Ver. 28. With a great sum] Or, with long service. This privilege was first sold at a dear rate to foreigners, but afterwards for a small matter. (Dio in Claudio.)

But I was freeborn] Tarsus, Paul's country, was a Roman colony, and made free of Rome by Mark Antony.

Ver. 29. Then straightway they departed from him] Thus wonderfully and opportunely doth the Lord free his people, sometimes, from evils and enemies, when in human apprehension there is no way of escape.

Ver. 30. And brought Paul down] sc. From the castle, or from the rock Antonia. See #Ac 21:34.

Chapter 23

Ver. 1. In all good conscience] Good, both with the goodness of integrity and of tranquillity. A recta conscientia transversum unguem non oportet quenquam in omni sua vita discedere, saith Cicero (Ep. ad Attic.). Let a man keep his conscience clear. Better offend all the world than conscience.

Ver. 2. To smite him on the mouth] So when Henry Zutphen, martyr, was bound hard to a ladder and cast into the fire, he no sooner began to pray and to repeat his creed, but one struck him upon the face with his fist, saying, Thou shalt first be burned, and afterwards pray and prate as much as thou wilt: (Acts and Mon.)

Ver. 3. God shall smite thee] He was afterwards cruelly slain by Manaimus, a captain of the Jews in the beginning of the Jewish wars. As Master Bradford went towards the stake, he was met by a brother-in-law of his, called Roger Beswick, which as soon as he had taken Bradford by the hand, Woodroof, sheriff of London, came with his staff and brake the said Roger's head, that the blood ran about his shoulders. But within half a year after, God so struck Woodroof on the right side with a palsy, or whatever it was, that for eight years' time, to his dying day, he was not able to turn himself in his bed, &c.

Thou whited wall] That is, thou hypocrite, #Mt 23:27. So Master Philpot, martyr, to Doctor Morgan that scoffed him, I must now tell thee (said he), thou painted wall and hypocrite, that God shall rain fire and brimstone upon such scornors of his word and blasphemers of his people as thou art. What an arrogant fool is this (said Bonner to Philpot), I will handle thee like a heretic, and that shortly. I fear nothing (answered Philpot) that you can do to me; but God shall destroy such as thou art; and that shortly, as I trust. So when Shaxton, Bishop of Salisbury, said to William Wolsey, martyr, and some others with him, Good brethren, remember yourselves and become new men; for I myself was in this fond opinion that you are now in, but I am become a new man; Wolsey replied, Ah, you are become a new man! Woe be to thee, thou wicked new man; for God shall justly judge thee, &c.

Ver. 4. Revilest thou God's high priest?] Some think it was not the high priest himself, but his surrogate, such as Dic of Dover was to the Archbishop of Canterbury, active against the martyrs in Queen Mary's days, and known by that name.

Ver. 5. I wist not, brethren] Whether he spake seriously or ironically it is doubtful. He might not know him, as having been long absent from Jerusalem. Or his present heat might so darken his judgment, that he might not for present acknowledge the high priest's authority. It was certainly some disadvantage to Paul, that (although provoked and unjustly smitten) he called the high priest whited wall; he was glad to excuse it by his ignorance. We may not be too bold or too forward to speak in a good matter, lest we overshoot. Luther confessed before the emperor at Worms, that in his books against private and singular persons he had been more vehement than his religion and profession required. And he cried to our Henry VIII for mercy for his uncivil handling of him.

Ver. 6. But when Paul perceived] Paul lacked not human prudence; wise as serpents we should be to improve all advantages that we may with the safety of our consciences. Religion doth not call us to a weak simplicity; but allows us as much of the serpent as of the dove. The dove without the serpent is easily caught; the serpent without the dove stings deadly. Their match makes themselves secure, and many happy.

Of the hope and resurrection] For fiducia Christianorum est resurrectio mortuorum, the faith of the Christians is the resurrection from the dead, saith Tertullian. Christians look for great things at that great day, and in that other world, which the Hebrews call saeculum mercedis, the world of wages.

Ver. 7. A dissension betwixt the Pharisees] So among Papists, the priests disparage the Jesuits, the Jesuits the priests, the priests again the monks, the monks the friars, and the Jesuits all.

Ver. 8. Sadducees say there is no resurrection] The occasion of this heresy is said to be this: when Antigonus taught that we must not serve God, as servants do their masters, for hope of reward, his scholars Sadoc and Baithus understood him as if he had utterly denied all future rewards or recompense attending a godly life; and thence framed their heresy, denying the resurrection, world to come, &c.

Ver. 9. We find no evil in this man] God, when he pleaseth, can find patrons of his cause among his very enemies. (Beza.)

But if a spirit or an angel, &c.] It is well observed by a reverend man from this Scripture, that men will grant truths or not, as their passions lead them. Before Paul revealed himself to be a Pharisee, they all with one consent cried out, "This man is not worthy to live." But now that he shows himself to be on their side, "I am a Pharisee, and the son of a Pharisee," oh, how finely do they mince the matter. "Perhaps an angel hath revealed it to him"; he was an honest man then. So men either judge, or not judge, as their passions and affections carry them.

Ver. 10. To take him by force] This the soldiers did, for none other end than to prevent sedition and man slaughter; but God had a further end in it, viz. to preserve his servant for further noble employment; ideoque caecas manus illuc dirigit, saith Calvin, and therefore he directeth their blind hands thereunto. The truth is, every creature walks blindfold. Only he that dwells in light sees whither they go.

Ver. 11. The Lord stood by him] Turned his prison into a palace, as likewise he did to Algerius, Christ's prisoner, and Master Philpot, thus to his friends, Though I tell you I am in hell in the judgment of this world, assuredly I feel in the same the consolation of heaven, I praise God; and this loathsome and horrible prison is as pleasant to me as the walk in the garden of the King's Bench.

Ver. 12. Bound themselves, &c.] The constable of France, when he covenanted with God, that if he had the victory at St Quentin's he would set upon Geneva, thought no doubt that he had made a great good bargain with God. Much like to Julian the emperor, who going against the Persians, made his vow that if he sped well, he would offer the blood of Christians. But what did God? Came not both their vows to like effect? "My times are in thy hand," saith David. Pilate could do nothing against Christ were it not given him from above. Commit we therefore ourselves to God in well-doing, as to a faithful Creator.

Ver. 13. And they were more than forty] The assassins are a kind of most desperate men among the Mahometans, who, strongly deluded with the blind zeal of their superstition, and accounting it meritorious by any means to kill any great enemy of their religion, for the performance thereof, as men prodigal of their lives, they desperately adventure themselves into all kinds of dangers. Such also are the Spahyels among the Turks, a kind of voluntary horsemen in mere devotion to gain paradise by dying for the Mahometan's cause. (Blount's Voyage.)

Ver. 14. And they came to the chief priests and elders] With whom they knew they should hereby ingratiate. Rulers' vices as seldom go unattended as their persons. If Herod mock Christ, his men of war will do so too, #Lu 23:11 "If a ruler hearken to lies, all his servants are wicked," #Pr 29:12.

Ver. 15. As though he would inquire] Craft and cruelty are combined in the Church's enemies; neither of them wanteth his mate, as the Scripture speaketh of those birds of prey and desolation, #Isa 34:16, and as the asp is said never to wander alone without his companion with him.

Ver. 16. And when Paul's sister's son] A sweet providence that this boy should be by, to detect and defeat their wicked counsel. God will be seen in the Mount; he suffereth often his enemies to go to the utmost of their tether, and then pulls them back with shame to their task. He delights to make fools of them. He lets them have the ball on their foot till they come to the very goal, and yet makes them miss the game.

Ver. 17. And said] i.e. prayed, #Ac 23:18. The poor man speaks supplications, #Pr 18:23, puts his mouth in the dust, speaks as out of the ground in a low language, in a submissive manner, when a suitor especially; for in that case the answer commonly cuts off half the petition, as the echo doth the voice.

Ver. 18. Paul the prisoner] But therein happier than any potentate, {#Ps 89:27} with all his chains of gold. Τιμη αλυσεις, δεσμα μαργαριται, said Ignatius; my chain is my honour, my links pearls. One hour changed Joseph's fetters into gold chains, his stocks into a chariot, his jail into a palace, Potiphar's captive to his master's Lord, the noise of his gyves {a} into abrech. So and much more than so shall it be with all Christ's prisoners at his coming: besides their prison comforts in the meanwhile; those divine consolations that Philip Landgrave of Hesse, prisoner to Charles V, for defence of the truth, said that he sensibly felt in the time of his sad captivity, Divinas Martyrum consolationes se sensisse dixit. This made Chrysostom say that he had rather be Paul the prisoner of Jesus Christ than Paul rapped up into the third heaven. (Homil. in #Eph 3:1)

{a} An instrument of torture (invented in the reign of Hen. VIII by Leonard Skevington or Skeffington, Lieutenant of the Tower), which (bringing the head to the knees) so compressed the body as to force the blood from the nose and ears. Also Skevington's gyves, irons. (ED)

Ver. 19. Took him by the hand] Courtesy and affability in high degree is very attractive; it easily allureth men's minds, as do fair flowers in the spring the passenger's eyes.

Ver. 20. As though they would] See #Ac 23:15.

Ver. 21. Which have bound themselves] Gr. ανεθεματισαν, wished themselves dead, or given up to the devil, except they brought their purpose to pass; and likely enough they had their wish, for they missed their purpose. Cursing men are cursed men. See #Ac 23:17.

Ver. 22. See thou tell no man] Taciturnity is reckoned among the virtues. Detexit facinus fatuus, et non implevit, saith Tacitus (that best historian) of a fool that could not keep his own counsel, and so marred the design.

Ver. 23. At the third hour of the night] A well chosen season is the greatest advantage of any action, which, as it is seldom found in haste, so it is often lost in delay.

Ver. 24. That they may bring him safe] The Vulgate Latin adds, For he feared lest the Jews would take him away by violence and kill him, and so he should suffer blame, as if he had been hired to permit it. But this the Greek hath not.

Ver. 25. And he wrote a letter] Gr. an epistle, cuius ornamentum est ornamentis carere, saith Politian.

Ver. 26. Unto the most excellent] Felix was (as likewise Haman) of base birth, but highly advanced in court by means of his brother Pallas, a great favourite of Nero's, insomuch as he became husband to three queens successively, as Suetonius writeth. He cruelly killed Jonathan the Jewish priest, and committed many other outrages in this province; so that being complained about at Rome, he had been put to death, but for the greatness of his brother, who begged his pardon. (Josephus.)

Ver. 27. Understood that he was a Roman] He saith nothing of binding him to have been scourged against the law. Nature needs not be taught to tell her own tale. Every man strives to make his own penny as good silver as he can.

Ver. 28. I brought him forth into their council] As being himself ignorant of their religion; and haply having as evil an opinion of it as Cicero had, who disdained at the Jews for their slighting the Roman superstition, and censured their religion as false, because they and their religion were in subjection to the Romans. {a}

pro L. Fiacco.

Ver. 29. Questions of their law] Which these profane heathens held to be mere trifles and niceties, quae nec ignorantibus nocent, nec scientem iuvant, as Seneca saith. See #Ac 18:15. {See Trapp on "Ac 18:15"}

Ver. 30. And gave commandment to his accusers] For no man is bound to accuse himself; and, De secretis non iudicat lex. In the courts of men it is safest to plead Non feci, not guilty, saith Quintilian (though in God's court it is otherwise).

Ver. 31. To Antipatris] So called by Herod (who had repaired it) in honour of his father Antipater. Christ, the everlasting Father, #Isa 9:6, hath his name far better propagated and perpetuated by his sons and daughters, #Ps 72:17, his name shall endure for ever (filiabitur nomine eius) by a continual succession of spiritual children (so the Hebrew word signifieth), who shall build his house, and keep up his name, much better than Rachel and Leah did the house of Israel, #Ru 4:11.

Ver. 32. And returned to the castle] Whereof see #Ac 21:34.

Ver. 33. Presented Paul also before him] And so was fulfilled in him that of our Saviour, #Mt 10:18. {See Trapp on "Mt 10:18"} Neither was he more afraid of Felix, than Moses and Micaiah were to stand before Pharaoh and Ahab, when once they had seen God in his majesty. Animo magno nihil magnum. With a great soul, nothing is great. (Seneca.)

Ver. 34. Of what province he was] So the Romans called the countries by them subdued; looking upon themselves as lords of the world, #Lu 2:1. {See Trapp in "Lu 2:1"}

Ver. 35. I will hear thee] Pergam te audire, et auditionem absolvam (so Beza rendereth the Greek, διακουσομαι), I will hear thee out, when thine accusers are come. In the mean while I will keep, ους αδιαβλητον, mine ear free. {a} I will not be prepossessed; nor hear one tale till I may hear both. This was well done of Felix, and judge like; qui “ *Si statuat aliquid, parte inaudita altera,

Aequum licet statuerit, haud aequus fuerit.* ”

At Rome, the accuser had six hours allotted him to accuse; the guilty or defendant had nine hours to make his answer. This Felix knew full well.

{a} καθαρὸν οὐκ φυλάττω καὶ ἀδιαβλήτων, said Alexander.

Chapter 24

Ver. 1. With a certain orator] One of those sordida poscinummia (as Plautus phraseth it), those leguleiorum faeces decem drachmariae, as another styleth these mercenary orators, qui linguas habent venales. It is reported of Nevessan (a better lawyer than an honest man) that he should say, he that will not venture his body shall never be valiant: he that will not venture his soul, never rich.

Ver. 2. Tertullus began to accuse him] Prosperior Afro Oratori eloquentia quam morum fama, saith Tacitus. (Tacit. Annal.) Ciceronis linguam omnes fere mirantur; pectus non ita, Almost all marvelled at the tongue of Cicero, but not so his heart, saith Augustine (Confess. iv. 3). The Duke of Buckingham, speaking to the Londoners for Richard III, gained the commendation, that no man could deliver so much bad matter in so good words and quaint phrases. Such another was Tertullus, wittily wicked, et malo publico facundus, eloquent for mischief to other men. There is a story of a poor man who complained to his king that a man (naming a lawyer) had taken away his cow from him. I will hear, said the king, what he will say to the matter. Nay, saith the poor man, if you hear him speak, then have I surely lost my cow indeed.

Ver. 3. We accept it always] So they say, the sooner to ingratiate; when in truth they worthily hated Felix for his oppression and cruelty. Nota hypocrisin cum assentatione, saith Beza. "In his estate shall stand up a vile person," #Da 11:21, that is, Antiochus Epiphanes. And yet Josephus reports that the Samaritans writing to him, because he tormented the Jews, to excuse themselves that they were no Jews, styled him, by flattery, Antiochus the mighty God. Romani, propter omnia quae a Nerone fiebant etiam scelera, quasi gratias agentes, sacra faciebant: such was their baseness, and such were these Jews.

Ver. 4. That I be not further tedious unto thee] Gr. να μη επιπλειον σε εγκοπτω, that I hinder thee not in thine haste to other businesses; that I put not a stop to thy praise worthy proceedings, by a troublesome prolixity, &c. Thus he cunningly insinuateth into the judge's affections; which is one of the rhetorical precepts: and another is (Tertullus likely had learned it out of Cicero), Non ad veritatem solum, sed etiam ad opinionem eorum qui audiunt, accommodanda est oratio. An orator may make a little bold with the truth to give his hearers content. Socrates in his apology, "My lords" (said he to his judges), "I know not how you have been affected with mine accusers' eloquence while you heard them speak; for my own part, I assure you that I, whom it toucheth most, was almost drawn to believe that all they said, though against myself, was true: when they scarcely uttered one word of truth."

Ver. 5. A pestilent fellow] Gr. λοιμον, a botch, sicut Scelus pro scelerato: Tubulus quidam, paulo supra Ciceronem, Praetor fuit, homo tam Proiecte improbus, ut eius nomen non hominis sed vitii esse videretur. (Lips., Antiq. Lect.) Now if so precious a man as Paul (than whom, saith Chrysostom, the earth never bare a better since it bore Christ) were counted and called a pest, let not us think much to be so esteemed.

And a mover of sedition] So Elias was held, and called the "troubler of Israel," Luther Tuba rebellionis, the trumpet of turmoil. So it was said to one Singleton, sometime chaplain to the Lady Ann Boleyn, that he was the murderer of Packington, and afterwards that he was a stirrer up of sedition and commotion, who also suffered as a traitor for the same; where in very deed the true cause was nothing else but for preaching the gospel, saith Master Fox. And he might as safely say as Mr Latimer did in his third sermon before King Edward VI, "As for sedition, for aught that I know, methinks I should not need Christ, if I might so say." (Acts and Mon.)

Of the sect of the Nazarenes] Who stirred up the people to stand up for their liberty against the Romans, saith an interpreter.

Ver. 6. To profane the temple] A loud lie: but innocence is no target against calumny.

Ver. 7. Took him out of our hands] Wherein he did well, though he hear ill; as public persons must look to do.

Ver. 8. By examining of whom] By this outfacing boldness, and these specious pretences, they hoped to have swayed the governor to deliver up the prisoner to their pleasure without any more ado, and to have condemned him unheard. But God had otherwise ordered it.

Ver. 9. And the Jews assented] With what face could they do it, but that their faces were hatched with impudence; and they had taken an order with their consciences not to trouble them: "Trouble me not, for I am in bed," as he in the Gospel said to his neighbour.

Ver. 10. Forasmuch as I know, &c.] Paul was a stately orator when he listed, as here. Porphyry said it was a pity that such a man as Paul should be bestowed upon our religion. How bravely doth he here unstarch the orator's speech, and make his own defence.

Ver. 11. There are yet but twelve days] And therefore in so short a time I could surely do no such great matters as they charge me with.

Ver. 12. And they neither found me in the temple] As he had argued from the circumstance of time, #Ac 24:11 (to disprove their empty allegations), so here of place. It fared with the apostle as the historian saith it did with Cuthbert Tunstal, bishop of Durham, who was sent to the Tower for concealment of (I know not what) treason written to him (I know not by whom), and not discovered until (what shall I call) the party did reveal it. False accusers, as they affirm without reason, so they may be dismissed without refutation: unless we will answer them with a downright denial, as here. It happens often, that plain dealing puts craft out of countenance.

Ver. 13. Neither can they prove the things] And if to be barely accused be sufficient to make a man guilty, no man shall be innocent. It is happy if we can write (as the Lady Elizabeth did in Woodstock windows),

Nothing proved can be.”

Ver. 14. Which they call heresy] Haeresis est vex Ecclesiae peculiaris. Antiquitus enim dicebatur; In hac haeresi sum, id est in hac sum sententia vel sic sentio. (Tull. Paradox.) Ecclesiastical writers take it for an error in religion, for an opinion repugnant to the word of God. There must be in it, Error in ratione, et pertinacia in voluntate. Fevardentius, that fiery friar, feigns 1400 errors and heresies, all which he fathers and fastens on the Calvinists. Genebrard imputes to Calvin as an error, that he taught Christ to be αυτοθεος, God of himself. It is not so long since, whosoever among us was not an Arminian, was eo nomine a doctrinal Puritan, as he was then termed; and now, he that was the old English Puritan, cried out upon as the worst of men, and greatest Heteroclite. {a}

Ver. 15. And have hope toward God, which themselves also allow] The Jews generally believed no article of the faith more than this, #Joh 12:24 Ac 23:8. The primitive times yielded some that denied it, #1Co 15:12-19; so do these unhappy times of ours: we must all look to our standing, and get our hearts ballasted with grace (as the bee, when she is to fly against the wind, ballasteth her body with some little stone carried between her feet), that we be not whirled about with every wind of doctrine. A man is to expect, if he live out his days, to be urged to the breach of every branch of the Decalogue, and to be put to it in respect of every article of the creed. Provide for a storm: shipmen in a calm, or at a haven, look to their tacklings: see the ship be well ballasted, victualled, watered, &c.

Ver. 16. And herein] Or, meanwhile (εν τουτω, i.e. χρονω, ασκω), for this cause do I exercise myself: or, I use diligence, skill, and conscience; I lay my policy, or bend my wit, I discipline and inure myself.

Ver. 17. To bring alms to my nation] And therefore should have been better welcomed; a present makes room for a man, #Pr 18:16. But it is God alone that fashioneth men's opinions and affections: and therefore, #Ro 15:31, St Paul prayeth that this service of his might be accepted by the saints themselves. The Jews at this day send their alms yearly from all parts to Jerusalem for the maintenance of the praying poor that live there.

Ver. 18. Purified in the temple] Therefore surely not profaning of it: unless they will say of me, as Diogenes did of Antipater (who being vicious, wore a white cloak, the ensign of innocence), that he did virtutis stragulam pudefacere, put honesty to an open shame: or unless they will concur in opinion with their utter enemy Florus, who calleth the temple at Jerusalem impiæ gentis arcanum, libidinum sacrarium, &c. secret place of a wicked nation, a shrine of lust. Virgil.

Ver. 19. Who ought to have been here before thee] For those that are here to accuse me, speak but by hearsay, which is tam ficti pravique tenax quam nuntia veri, a loud liar, for the most part.

Ver. 20. Or else let these same here say] This is the best defence, that is thus fetched from the accusers themselves, who are apt to make the worst of everything and to aggravate faults beyond truth. This is no small prejudice to Luther's adversaries, said Erasmus, that they cannot but say he lives honestly. And the like is recorded of Bucer, Bradford, others; the Papists could not find fault with their lives, only they taxed them for heresy; but so they could not Paul, unless they would conclude themselves also heretics, #Ac 24:21.

Ver. 21. Except it be, &c.] And if this be a fault in true account, why are not all the whole nation of the Pharisees faulted, that hold the same thing? Is that Naevus in me that is Venus in them? Or is that a vice in Gaius that is a virtue in Titus? Are they not apparently partial in themselves, and become judges of evil thoughts? #Jas 2:4. If Dioscorus the heretic could cry out in the Council of Chalcedon, I am cast out with the Fathers, I defend the doctrine of the Fathers, I transgress them not in any part; may not I more truly lay the like claim to the Pharisees, those fathers of our nation?

Ver. 22. He deferred them, and said] Truly and timely spake the orator, De vita hominis nulla saris diuturna cunctatio esse possit {see #De 17:3} In a case of life and death there cannot be too much caution and cunctation. (delay)

Ver. 23. And to let him have liberty] This shows that Felix himself found that it was malice, more than matter, that moved the Jews to prosecute. And the same perhaps is hinted in the former verse, "having more perfect knowledge of that way"; that is, as some sense it, being well acquainted with their courses, and knowing it to be their common practice to accuse innocent men of mere spite. But why then did not Felix punish those malicious men, and let Paul go? why is he still a prisoner, though a free prisoner, under a keeper, or with some chain on him? Oh, it is a mercy to have judges modo velint quae possint, modo audeant quae sentiant, so they be willing to do what they may, and dare do what they judge fit to be done. (Cic. pro Milone.)

Ver. 24. With his wife Drusilla] The sister of King Agrippa, and wife of Abidus, king of Emesenes, whom she had basely forsaken, and came and joined herself to this Felix (Joseph. Antiq. 20), worthy therefore to have been hanged, as Joan queen of Naples, was at a window for like treachery by Lewis, king of Hungary. (Heyl. Geog. 167.)

Ver. 25. Of righteousness, temperance, &c.] Whereas Felix did many things there tyrannously and had greater regard to gain than to justice; and whereas Drusilla, a Jewess, was not only married to an uncircumcised man, but also a filthy adulteress,—Paul in a certain kind of grave wisdom, which yet had joined with it great liberty of speech, reasoneth and disputeth of things that he knew principally lacking in his hearers.

Felix trembled] See the force of conscience, which, like Samson's wife, conceals not the riddle, #Jud 16:17; like Fulvia a courtesan, who declared all the secrets of her foolish lover Gneius, a noble Roman, bewrays (maligins) and betrays those that harbour her. She is a watch and will at length give warning. (Sallust. Bell. Cat.)

Go thy way for this time, &c.] The president of St Julian's being sent to Angrogne would have forced a poor man to rebaptize his child. He, after he had prayed, required of the president that he would write and sign the same with his own hand, that he would discharge him before God of the danger of that offence, and that he would take the peril upon him and his. The president hereat was so confounded, that he spake not one word a good while after. Then said he, "Away, thou villain, out of my sight." After that he was never called more. (Acts and Mon.)

Ver. 26. He hoped also, &c.] Fuit Felix inexplebilis gurgis, as Tacitus testifieth. He trembled, and yet gaped after money. A man may as soon find a harvest in a hedge as the least goodness in a covetous heart. Privatorum fares in nervo et compedibus oetatem agunt; publica in auro et purpura visuntur. (Cato apud Gell. lib. xi. 18.) Public thieves are gallant fellows. And covetousness is a dry drunkenness. Justice is often made a hackney by them to be backed for money; and a golden spur brings her to the desired journey's end of injury and wrong. Whereas a judge, as he should have nothing to lose, so he should have nothing to get, he should be above all price or sale; and justice justice, as Moses speaketh, that is, pure justice without mud should run down amain, #De 16:20.

Ver. 27. Willing to show the Jews, &c.] Politicians care not to gratify others and serve their own turns with the loss of right and good conscience. In the reign of Henry II of France, A. D. 1554, many were there burnt for religion, not without the indignation of honest men, who knew that the diligence used against these poor people was not for piety or religion, but to satiate the covetousness of Diana Valentina, the king's mistress, to whom he had given all the confiscation of goods made in the kingdom for cause of heresy. (Hist. of Council of Trent.)

Chapter 25

Ver. 1. Now when Festus] Who succeeded Felix in the government, as after Festus came Albinus, and after him Florus, under whom Jerusalem was sacked and ruined. That heavy curse was executed upon this wretched people, #Le 26:17 "If ye still trespass against me, I will set princes over you that shall hate you," mischievous, odious princes; odious to God, oppressive to the people. After the revolt of the ten tribes, they had not one good king. And a Popish writer complains, that for many successions the see of Rome non merita est regi nisi a reprobis, had deserved to be ruled by none but reprobates. When Phocas had slain Mauricius, there was an honest poor man (saith Cedrenus) who was wonderfully importunate at the throne of grace, to know a reason why that wicked man prospered so in his design; he was answered again by a voice, that there could not be a worse man found, and that the sins of Christians did require it.

Ver. 2. Informed him against Paul] ενεφανισαν, they gave him private intelligence (so the word signifies, saith Erasmus), they buzzed false reports into his ears: an old practice of persecutors. Proprie significat tacite et clam indicare. Truth seldom goes without a scratched face. The Arminians endeavoured to persuade the States of Holland that the orthodox pastors sought to diminish the authority of the civil magistrates, and to affect and arrogate to themselves a power collateral or equal to their power. {a}

{a} Act. Synod. Dordrecht. proefatione.

Ver. 3. Desired favour] Or a good turn, χαριτυ: such was their impudence.

Ver. 4. That Paul should be kept, &c.] How easily can God defeat the most cunning contrivances of his Church's enemies! He sees and smiles, he looks and laughs. Commit we therefore ourselves to him in well doing, as unto a faithful Creator, #1Pe 4:19.

Ver. 5. That are able] Or well appointed, well provided of moneys and other necessaries for such an enterprise. He that prosecutes another need be well underlaid.

Ver. 6. Commanded Paul to be brought] This is now the third time: and what if it had been the thirtieth? Cato (the very best of the Romans) as he was thirty-two times accused, so he was thirty-two times cleared and absolved.

Ver. 7. Laid many and grievous complaints against Paul] Whereby to take away his precious life: which because they could not, they had little comfort of their own. Some of their own Talmudists have observed that the devil was as much wounded with that restraint that he should not take away Job's life, as Job was with all those wounds that the devil inflicted on his body.

Ver. 8. Neither against the law of the Jews] Quam multa quam paucis! how much, how little, said Cicero of Brutus' laconical epistle: and the same may I say of this defence, How much in a little! {See Trapp on "Ac 24:12"}

Ver. 9. Wilt thou go up to Jerusalem?] Irreligious persons that are not acted by the Spirit of God, we see how flexible and inclinable they are to corrupt counsels and courses. Before, he would not yield to the Jews' motion; now he would. "A double minded man is unstable in all his ways," αστατος, #Jas 1:6.

“Et tantum constans in levitate sua.”

But should not the chief posts in a building be heart of oak? should not the standard be made of metal of proof? Fabricius is famous for his well knit resolution; sooner might a man turn the sun out of his course than draw him to do anything that was not just and equal. As, on the other side, those Athenian judges shall be infamous to all posterity, who when they had determined to condemn Phryne (that stinking strumpet), were yet drawn to acquit her, after that they beheld her beautiful bosom, which Hyperides (her advocate) had purposely laid open (pulling her clothes aside) to move them to show her mercy. (Plut. in Hyperid.)

Ver. 10. I stand at Coesar's judgment seat] We may safely make our just defence when falsely accused, and take the benefit of the law. Ambrose would be judged at Milan, where he was known; and Athanasius refused to be censured by corrupt councils.

Ver. 11. I appeal to Coesar] Who though a lion, #2Ti 4:17, yet I hope to be tutus sub umbra leonis, against a manifest violence of a corrupt judge, notoriously forestalled and preoccupied. Iudex, locusta civitatis est, malus. (Scaliger.)

Ver. 12. Hast thou appealed, &c.] Elegans loquendi forma, saith Piscator: such as are those, #1Co 7:18,21,27 Ro 13:3. A cutted kind of speech, say others, savouring of discontent.

Ver. 13. King Agrippa and Bernice] Son and daughter to that Herod mentioned #Ac 12:1. They were known, saith Josephus, to live in detestable incest. It pleased God that his faithful servant Paul should plead for his life before these two filthy beasts; which he did freely and modestly.

Ver. 14. A certain man left in bonds] Wherein he glorieth more than others in their gold chains, #Eph 3:1 Phm 1:1. Non ita beatum Paulum puto, saith Chrysostom, #Eph 3:1, quod in coelum raptus, quam quod in carcerem coniectus: I hold not Paul so happy in his rapture as in his captivity.

Ver. 15. To have judgment against him] Damnationem, saith Beza. This was the favour they craved of Festus, #Ac 25:3. So a writ came down while the Lady Elizabeth was in the tower, subscribed with certain hands of the council for her execution, Stephen Gardiner being the chief engineer; but God prevented them. The Lord Paget in a certain consultation said that King Philip should never have any quiet commonwealth in England unless Lady Elizabeth's head were stricken from her shoulders. The Spaniards thereto answered, God forbid that their king and master should have such a mind to consent to such a mischief. (Acts and Mon.)

Ver. 16. Have the accusers face to face] Here was no oath ex officio to force a man to accuse himself. Among the Romans the accusers sat in those seats that were at the left hand of the judge; the accused and his advocate at the right hand. The accuser had three hours allotted him, the defendant six. And if he were found guilty, yet was he not given up to his adversaries to be punished at their pleasure (as these Jews would have had it) but as the judge appointed it.

Ver. 17. Without delay] This was well; judges should dismiss timely those whom they cannot presently despatch, as Jethro adviseth, #Ex 18:13-26. It is recorded of Sir Thomas Moore, to his eternal commendation, that when he was Lord Chancellor, and sat in the Court of Chancery, he called for the next cause, and there was none remaining. But what meaneth Festus here to crack so much of his diligence in doing justice?

“ Cur ego, si nequeo, ignoroque, Poeta salutor.”

Horat.

What is the honour of this world, or the applause of men (though well deserved), but a puff of stinking breath? and what advantageth it a man to have the world's Euge, well done, and God's Apage? Away with you.

Ver. 18. Of such things as I supposed] They accused Paul of sedition; but because they failed in the proof, he makes it nothing. This is said by the historian (Tacitus) to be the commune crimen eorum qui crimine vacabant, the innocent man's crime.

Ver. 19. But had certain questions] See how basely this profane fellow speaketh of God's true service. These cocks on the dunghill know not the price of that pearl, and do therefore avile it. They took occasion also from the contentions of the Church's doctors, to condemn their doctrine. It was therefore a devilish device of Julian the Apostate, to call home those heterodox and heretical bishops that had been banished by Constantine, that they might embroil and darken the Church by their mutual discords among themselves, and so bring the Christian religion into disgrace.

Ver. 20. And because] He tells not Agrippa, that to gratify the Jews (who in all likelihood had bribed him) he asked, whether he would go up to Jerusalem; but pretends another matter. Nature need not be taught to tell her own tale, or to make the best of her own case, bad though it be. And this is incident to the very best, as to do what we can to hide our bodily deformities, so our moral defects and frailties. What dost thou here, Elias? saith God. I have been very zealous for the Lord of hosts, saith he. He had rather say so, than, I was fearful of Jezebel, and here I hide me from her malicious pursuit. But were it not better to speak out, and to acknowledge all with aggravation of circumstances? since such only find mercy as in confession show the Lord the iniquity of their sin, the filthiness of their lewdness, the abomination of their provocations.

Ver. 21. Send him to Caesar] That is, to Nero. But for memory of their two first emperors, Caesar and Augustus, all their successors bore these two names. Many other swelling titles they had; but all or most of them, till Constantine, died unnatural deaths, and got nothing by their adoption or designation, nisi ut citius interficerentur; but to be sent out of the world the sooner.

Ver. 22. I would also hear the man] More for his mind's sake, and to see what he would say for himself, than out of any desire to learn from him. So Herod desired to see Christ, as a man would see some magician act his feats, and make him sport.

Ver. 23. With great pomp] Gr. μετα πολλης φαντασιας, with great fantasy, or vain show. For no better is all worldly pomp and state. Of Cardinal Wolsey's twenty great mules passing through London, laden with roasted eggs, and rotten shoes, and other like treasure, as was discovered by the fall of one mule that cast his burden, read Acts and Monuments, fol. 899. My Lord Cardinal, said Bayfield, the martyr, is no good man; for Christ never taught him to follow riches, promotions, worldly pomp, as he doth; to wear shoes of silver and gold, set with pearls and precious stones. Christ had never two crosses of silver, two axes, nor pillars of silver and gold, &c.

Ver. 24. That he ought not to live any longer] All malice is bloody, and is therefore called murder; because it wisheth him out of the world whom it maligneth. {See Trapp on "Ac 25:7"}

Ver. 25. Nothing worthy of death] What an honour and comfort was this to the apostle! Lysias acquits him, so doth Felix, and now Festus; neither doth Agrippa dissent. {See Trapp on "Ac 25:6"}

Ver. 26. To write unto my lord] Κυριος signifieth one that hath rule or dominion, being a word of relation, {a} This title was first affected by tyrants; but afterwards the good princes suffered it to be given unto them, as appeareth by Pliny's Epistle to Trajan. The emperors disclaimed only the name of king, to avoid the hatred of the people, and yet sought the full right of kings, and to destroy the liberty of the people. But God calls them kings, #1Pe 2:13,17. God hateth hypocrisy in whomsoever; and will unmask even kings, if they dissemble.

Ver. 27. For it seems to me unreasonable] And should not God's people be as careful to perform unto him a reasonable service, #Ro 12:1, such as whereof they can render a sound and intelligible reason out of the word of God? Should they not prove what that good, and holy, and acceptable will of God is, #Ac 25:21, by taking warrant from his word, and doing all to his glory? Is not this to do the works of God, #Joh 6:28, and to do them in God, #Joh 3:22, and for God, according to that, Quicquid agas propter Deum agas? καλον καλως. And is not the contrary will worship, #Col 2:22; spiritual fornication, #Ps 106:39; idol worship, #Ex 32:4; devil worship, #1Co 10:20 cf. Ac 17:23 Re 9:20

Ver. 1. And answered for himself] This the apostle doth most artificially and effectually. Raptare eum iudices credas, as one saith concerning Cicero, involvere, praecipitem agere, nec incendere auditorem, sed ipsum putes ardere: animorum denique quendam credas Deum.

Ver. 2. I think myself happy] Est quaedam putativa felicitas, saith an interpreter here, si concedatur nobis causam nostram aperte agere. Beatitudo autem vera in peccatorum remissione, &c., #Ps 32:1,2. It is a kind of happiness to have fair hearing before men; but the true happiness is to find favour with God.

Ver. 3. To be expert in all customs and questions] As being a Jew, and conversant among the Jews (for he was Herod's son), and therefore a more competent judge.

Ver. 4. My manner of life from my youth] And although with some, Principium fervet, medium leper, exitus alget, their best is at first, as Nero (who now reigned at Rome) for his first five years was very hopeful; yet that is not ordinary. A good beginning hath for the most part a good ending, and a young saint proves an old angel.

Ver. 5. After the most straitest sect] There were three several sects among the Jews, Pharisees, Sadducees, and Essenes; which last lived a monastic kind of life, and besides the Bible, studied medicine: whence also they had their name of Asa, to heal. The Pharisees were most in request, professing extraordinary strictness, as those districtissimi Monachi, those puritan monks among the Papists (as one calleth them) that carried wooden crosses at their backs continually, and pretended for it #Mt 10:38.

Ver. 6. For the hope of the promise] The goodness of his cause made much for his comfort. It is one thing to suffer as a martyr, and another thing to suffer as a malefactor. Ibi erat Christus, ubi latrones: similis poena, dissimilis causa. Christ and the thieves were in the like condemnation, but their cause was not alike. (Angustin.) Samson died with the Philistines by the fail of the same house; simili quidem poena, sed dissimili culpa, et diverso fine ac fato, but for another end, and by a different destiny. (Bucholcer.) Together with the Lord Cromwell was beheaded the Lord Hungerford; neither so Christianly suffering, nor so courageously dying for his offence committed against nature. (Speed.) Blessed are they that suffer "for righteousness' sake," #Mt 5:10; and, "for thy sake are we slain all the day long," #Ps 44:22. And, O beata Apocalypsis, quam bene mecum, agitur qui comburam tecum? said a certain martyr when he saw the Revelation cast into the fire with him. (Fox.) So might St Paul say by that hope of the promise made of God unto the fathers, for the which he now stood and was judged.

Ver. 7. Instantly serving God] And yet finding enough to do, when they have done their utmost, to get to heaven. The time is short, the task long; Castigemus ergo mores st moras,

Praecipita tempus, mors atra impendet agenti.

Silius.

Ver. 8. Why should it be thought a thing incredible?] Philosophy indeed is against it. A privatione ad habitum, &c. Et redit in nihilum, quod fuit ante nihil, as the epicure in Ecclesiastes concludeth. But first, many heathens believed a resurrection; as Zoroaster, Theopolupus, and Plato. And the Stoic's opinion was, that the world should be dissolved by fire or water; and all things brought to a better state, or to the first golden age again. {a} Secondly, no article of the faith was more generally believed among the Jews than this, #Joh 12:24 Ac 23:8. Hence they called their burying places Domus viventium, the houses of the living, בית חיים the Greeks called them dormitories, or sleeping houses, κοιμητήρια, as holding that their dead should once awake again, and be filled with God's image, #Ps 17:15. The Germans call the churchyard God's Acre; because the bodies are sown there to be raised again. What if those profane popes (sons of perdition), Leo X and Julius II, jeer at the resurrection, as if anything were impossible with God?

cannot he that made man at first of nothing make him up again of that substance of the body that is preserved after death, though never so dispersed? God knows where every part and parcel of it is, and can easily bring it together again. In the transfiguration, that body of Moses which was hidden in the valley of Moab, appeared glorious in the hill of Tabor; that we may know that these bodies of ours are not lost, but laid up, and shall as sure be raised in glory as they are laid down in corruption. Do we not see a resurrection of the creatures every spring? and the grain we sow, doth it not first rot and then revive? See we not men of ashes to make glass? and cannot a skilful gardener discern his different seeds when mixed together, and gather every one of them to their own kind? Have we not observed how those little balls of quicksilver dispersed, will not mix with any of another kind; but if any man gather them, they run together of their own accord into one mass? why then should it be thought a thing incredible with any, that God should raise the dead? Consentaneum est Phoenicem, saith Nyssen. It is probable enough, that that Phoenix that was found in the reign of Nero (and perhaps at this very time when St Paul was thus pleading for the resurrection) might signify the resurrection of Christ, and of all believers by him; according to that of the prophet, "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead," #Isa 26:19.

{a} Sen. Nat. Quaest. iii. 26, 27.

Ver. 9. Contrary to the name, &c.] Tertullian testifieth, that in the primitive Christians, nomen damnabatur, non crimen aut scelus: solum nomen innocuum, hominibus innocuis esse pro crimine, &c. And Tacitus to the same purpose, that when Nero had set the city on fire for his pleasure, and then fathered it upon the Christians, a great company of them were presently slaughtered, haud perinde in crimine incendii, quam odio humani generis, convicti: Not for any fault whereof they could be convicted, but out of a general hatred of their persons and religion.

Ver. 10. I gave my voice] So did Gerson to the condemnation of John Huss and Jerome of Prague at the Council of Constance, against his conscience doubtless. (Joh. Manl.) So did the Lord Cromwell to the condemnation of Lambert the martyr; for the which he afterwards cried him mercy. And so did Sir John Cheek, in Queen Mary's days, out of a base fear of the bishops; he was, saith Mr Fox, through the crafty handling of the Catholics, allured first to dine and company with them; at length drawn unawares to sit in the place where the poor martyrs were brought before Bonner and other bishops, to be condemned; and so to give his voice, or seem to do so by his presence there. The remorse whereof so mightily wrought in his heart, that not long after he left this mortal life; whose fall though it was full of infirmity, yet his rising again by repentance was great, and his end comfortable.

Ver. 11. Compelled them to blaspheme] So the ancient persecutors compelled many not only to renounce their religion, but to curse Christ. (Plin. Epist. ad Trajan.) When the Emperor Heraclius sent ambassadors to Chosroes, king of Persia, to desire peace of him, he received this threatening answer: I will not spare you, till I have made you curse your crucified God, and adore the sun. He was afterwards (like another Sennacherib) deposed and murdered by his son Siroes.

And being exceedingly mad, I persecuted] He was not then so mad in persecuting, but when God turned the stream, he was judged by some as mad in preaching, #2Co 5:13, and pressing toward the high prize which he persecuted (that is, his word,  $\delta\iota\omega\kappa\omega$ , #Php 3:14) with as much eagerness as ever he had done God's poor saints and servants.

Ver. 13. {See Trapp on "Ac 9:2"}

Ver. 14. I heard a voice] I not only saw a sign. So in the transfiguration, a voice came forth to them from the excellent glory. Signo verbum est coniungendum. God in the sacraments, for the furtherance of our faith, affects both our learned senses, as Aristotle calleth our sight and hearing; giving us his word both audible and visible.

Ver. 15. See #Ac 9:5.

Ver. 16. But rise and stand upon thy feet] Thus,

*“Deiecit ut relevet; premit ut solatia praestet;
Enecat, ut possit vivificare, Deus.”*

Ver. 17. Delivering thee from] For though thou art sent to them for their greatest good, viz. "To open their eyes," &c., #Ac 26:18, yet they shall fly at thine eyes, as frantic people fly in the faces of their physicians; they shall fly against the light that thou shalt set up among them, as bats do, because their works are evil; they shall kick and wince, as horse and mule at those that come to cure them, #Ps 32:9. But I will deliver thee, fear not.

Ver. 18. To open their eyes, &c.] An excellent description of St Paul's commission to preach, by the five ends or effects of it, viz. conversion, faith, remission of sins, sanctification, salvation.

Ver. 19. I was not disobedient] As I should have been if I had taken flesh and blood into counsel, #Ga 1:16 {See Trapp on "Ga 1:16"} but silencing my reason, I exalted my faith, and putting myself into God's hands, said,

‘Te duce, vera sequor: te duce, falsa nego.’

Ver. 20. Works meet for repentance] Gr. "worthy of repentance," that weigh just as much as repentance doth. The Syriac hath it, works equal and even with repentance. {See Trapp on "Mt 3:8"}

Ver. 21. Went about to kill me] Gr. διαχειρισασθαι, to tear me in pieces, or pull me limb from limb with their own hands, as the Senators did Romulus, and afterward Caesar. The Italians that served the French king, having taken the town of Barre, did out of hatred of religion rip up a living child, and taking out his liver, being as yet red hot, they did eat it as meat. Many children there at the same time had their hearts pulled out, which in rage those cannibal Papists gnawed with their teeth. (Acts and Mon.)

Ver. 22. Saying none other thing] Truth is one and the same in all ages; it is also ancient, and ever at agreement with itself. As on the other side, error is new, manifold, dissonant, and contradictory to itself, and much more to the truth. Paul delivered no new truths, but stood in the good old way of Moses and the prophets, and followed them, κατα ποδα. Those that stumble from the ancient ways, to walk in "new paths, in a way not cast up," they are people that "forget God," #Jer 18:15, to sacrifice to new gods, that came newly up, #De 32:17; they are none of God's ancient people, #Isa 44:7, but an upstart generation that knew not Joseph.

Ver. 23. That Christ should suffer] This verse may be fitly called a little Bible, a short gospel, a model of the mystery of godliness. The Greek runs thus, "Whether Christ should be a sufferer; εἰ παθητός ὁ χριστός, &c.," "whether he should be the first that should rise from the dead." As if St Paul should hold forth these questions, and offer to prove them out of the prophets and Moses: and hence (haply) that way of expounding the Scriptures, by propounding doubts and questions. Abulensis hath his eight-score questions (and more than a good many sometimes) upon the shortest chapter in the Bible. The schoolmen were great questionists; and they had it from the Artemonites, a sort of heretics, A. D. 220, that, out of Aristotle and Theophrastus, corrupted the Scripture, by turning all into questions. In detestation of whose vain jangling and doting about questions (Jac. Revius, #1Ti 6:4), Luther saith, Propre est ut iurem: I dared to swear, almost, that there was not one school divine that rightly understood one chapter of the Gospel. So that we may say of their expositions as one did once, when being asked whether he should read such a comment upon Aristotle? he answered, Yes, when Aristotle is understood, then read the comment.

Ver. 24. Much learning hath made thee mad] Core diminuit harem, the seed is lessened, let it grow, as Ennius hath it. Paul was indeed a man of much learning; for besides the Bible, and the Jewish records, he had read the poets (whom also he citeth), and Plato, from whom he borrowed that excellent word ἀναζωπυρεῖν, #2Ti 1:6 "Stir up thy gift," &c. But if Paul were so great a scholar, why did not Festus show him more favour, or at least do him better justice? Aeneas Sylvius was wont to say of learning, that popular men should esteem it as silver, noblemen as gold, princes prize it as pearls. Festus might possibly have heard or read of Antony the Triumvir, that when Varro (his very enemy, and of a contrary faction) was proscribed for death, he thus gallantly superscribed his name, Vivat Varro vir doctissimus: Let Varro have his life for his learning' sake. And if Antipater (saith Sir Walter Raleigh, Hist. of the World) upon his conquest had carried all other actions never so mildly, yet for killing Demosthenes, all that read his eloquent orations do condemn him for a bloody tyrant to this day.

Ver. 25. I am not mad] Paul rather pitieth his ignorance than blameth his blasphemy, and allegeth his own words for a proof of his non-madness; like as Sophocles produced a tragedy he had recently made, that was full of art and wit, when his sons would have begged him for a dotard. These real apologies are most powerful; when thus managed, especially, with "meekness of wisdom."

Ver. 26. For this thing was not done in a corner] Neither Christ's passion, nor Paul's conversion. Rome rang of the former, and it was seriously debated in the senate-house, whether Christ should not be received into the number of the gods? Tiberius would have had it so; but it was carried against him, because of the poverty of Christ's life and the infamy of his death. And as for Paul's conversion, it was far and near talked of. For as a bell cannot be turned from one side to another, but it will make a sound and report its own motion; so will the turning of a sinner from evil to good; such a sinner especially: his conversion was toto notissima caelo: like the trumpet of God in Mount Sinai, it filled the whole country.

Ver. 27. I know thou believest] sc. The truth of what the prophets spoke concerning Christ, and that are accordingly fulfilled in him. Faith hath for its general object the whole Holy Scripture; but for its special object the promises, or rather Christ revealed in the promises. All the Israelites beheld the wilderness and the whole hemisphere; but such only as were stung, looked up to the brazen serpent, and were healed. Devils and reprobates may believe the truth of the Scriptures, and see far into the mystery of Christ by a common illumination, but true believers only can close up themselves in the wounds of Christ, and by a particular faith receive healing by his stripes.

Ver. 28. Almost thou persuadest me] Here he was nigh God's kingdom, who yet (for aught we find) never came there. Almost he could be content to be, but altogether may chance bring a chain with it. Jehu will not part with his calves, lest he venture his kingdom. Policy is ever entering caveats against piety. It is thought of Cardinal Pole, that toward his latter end, a little before his coming from Rome to England, he began somewhat to favour the doctrine of Luther, and was no less suspected at Rome, and therefore put by the popedom; notwithstanding the pomp and glory of the world did afterwards carry him away to play the Papist. Such as these Philo calleth semper factae virtutis homines, cakes half-baked, #Ho 7:8. {See Trapp on "Ho 7:8"}

To be a Christian] The profane philosophers called the Christians credentes, that is, believers, by way of reproach, because they did not argue by reason, but take things upon trust. "We believe and know" (not, we know and believe) "that thou art the Son of the living God," #Joh 6:69. Illi garriant, nos credamus, saith Austin. Let them jeer us for our faith, let us believe nevertheless; and our faith shall be one day found "to praise, honour, and glory," #1Pe 1:7. If Agrippa had been right, he would have esteemed it the highest honour to be able to say, Christian is my name, and Catholic my surname. Those that might well have been his masters and makers, viz. Constantinus, Valentinianus, and Theodosius (three emperors), called themselves Vasallos Christi, not Christians only, but the vassals of Christ, as Socrates reporteth: and Justinian the emperor styled himself, Ultimum servorum Christi, the meanest of Christ's servants.

Ver. 29. I would that all] Charity is no churl; there is no envy in spiritual things, because they may be divided in solidum: one may have as much as another, and all alike. Self-love writes, as that emperor did, τα εις εμαυτον, For mine own use only. It makes men like those envious Athenians, who sacrificed for none but themselves and their neighbours of Chios. But true Christian love wisheth well to the community. "I would to God" (said Mr Dad) "I were the worst minister in England" (and England had but a few better), not wishing himself worse than he was, but other men better.

Ver. 30. The king rose up and the governor] A little of such sad discourse served their turn: they were soon sated, and ready to say as Antipater king of Macedonia did, when one presented him a book treating of happiness, he answered, ου σχολαζω, I have somewhat else to do than to learn or listen to such businesses; when perhaps they might never have the like opportunity of hearing such a persuasive preacher while they breathed again, as Paul was.

Ver. 31. This man doth nothing worthy] Here Festus, consenting with the rest, condemneth himself. See #Ac 25:25.

Ver. 32. If he had not appealed] Which if he had not, this freeman of Rome had been "free among the dead," #Ps 88:5, free of that company ere this time of day. There was a necessity of his appeal, for the saving of his life. And he is the better contented with his present condition, because he had been told in a vision that he must go to Rome also, #Ac 23:11; while it was in store, and not yet come to that— tota est iam Roma lupanar; Rome is no better than a great brothel house. That once "faithful city is now become a harlot; it was full of judgment; righteousness lodged in it, but now murderers," #Isa 1:21.

Chapter 27

Ver. 1. It was determined] First by God, #Ac 23:11, and then by the ordinary magistrate guided by God.

Ver. 2. One Aristarchus, &c.] St Paul's fellow traveller first, and then fellow prisoner too, yea, fellow worker unto the kingdom of God, and a great comfort to him, #Col 4:10,11 Ac 19:29 20:4, Optimum solatium, sodalitium. The best comfort was his co-workers. Therefore David so bewails the loss of Jonathan. St Paul counts it a singular mercy to him that Epaphroditus recovered, #Php 2:27. And St John found himself furthered and quickened by the graces of the elect lady, #2Jo 12.

Ver. 3. Liberty to go to his friend] A great favour: there is no small comfort in the communion of saints. This heathen persecutors knew, and therefore banished and confined the Christians to isles and mines, where they could not have access one to another. (Cyprian.)

Ver. 4. Because the winds, &c.] The Straits of Magellan is such a place, that which way soever a man bendeth his course (saith one) he shall be sure to have the wind against him.

Ver. 5. And when we had sailed] These things are therefore particularly set down, that we may see Paul's perils by sea no less than by land; and say with Solomon, "No man knoweth either love or hatred" by all that befalleth him, #Ec 9:1. {See Trapp on "Ec 9:1"}

Ver. 6. Sailing into Italy] To show that they had a terrible tempestuous time of it all along, from Sidon to Malta. So have the saints of God here, for the most part, ab utero ad urnam, from the womb to the tomb, from the birth to the burial. This made Solomon prefer his coffin before his cradle, #Ec 7:1, yea, before his crown; as Queen Elizabeth also did; for indeed, this life is pestered with so many miseries and molestations, satanical and secular, that it were to be accounted little better than hell were it not for the hopes of heaven, that sweetest harbour and haven of happiness. (Bernard.)

Ver. 7. Salmone] A high cliff of Crete. See Strabo, lib. ii., and the use of geography and other sciences, to the better understanding of the Scriptures.

Ver. 8. Called The fair havens] Which name it retains also at this day, Calos Limenas: for better cause, I believe, than the sea called Pacific, or calm, which Sir Francis Drake ever found rough and troublous above measure.

Ver. 9. Now when much time was spent] Not spilt; for that Paul was not idle all that while, see #Tit 1:5, and Beza's annotations thereupon. Nolite tempus in nugis conterere, Do not waste time on trifles, saith one. Time is a precious commodity. Of all other possessions a man may have two at once; but two moments of time together no man could ever have. Therefore Cato held, that a wise man should be able tam otii quam negotii rationem reddere, to give an account of his leisure as well as of his labour. (Cic. de Senectute.) Nullus mihi per otium dies exit, saith Seneca, I spend no day idly. And Pliny said to his nephew when he saw him walk out some hours without studying, Poteras has horas non perdere, You might have better bestowed your time. The common complaint is, we lack time; but the truth is, we do not so much lack it as waste it; Non parum habemus temporis, sed multum perdimus. (Sen.)

Because the fast was now past] The Jews' yearly fast, #Le 23:27, which occurred in the seventh month, that answereth to our October, when navigation is dangerous. This yearly fast (or feast of expiation, as it is called) was instituted, that they that had committed heinous offences worthy of death, and could not by offering up particular sacrifices for them, and confessing them, but hazard the loss of their lives, might have this day of expiation for all their sins whatsoever; God of his goodness so providing for the worst of his people.

Ver. 10. But also of our lives] Which every creature, from the highest angel to the lowest worm, maketh much of. Why is living man sorrowful? #La 3:39. As if the prophet should say, He hath cause to rejoice that he is yet alive amidst all his sorrows. A living dog is better than a dead lion. "Joseph is yet alive." This was more worth to Jacob than all Joseph's honour. It is the Lord's mercy that we are not consumed. Skin for skin, &c. It should not be grievous to any man to sacrifice his estate to the service of his life.

Ver. 11. Nevertheless the centurion] Profane persons, trusting more to their own carnal wisdom than to God's word, cast themselves wilfully into the greatest dangers. Believe the prophets, and ye shall prosper. The wicked pass on and are punished, #Pr 22:3. We cannot get men to believe, till they feel, as Pharaoh.

Ver. 12. And lieth toward the south-west] It is a just complaint that a modern writer maketh of many men's spirits among us today; that they lie like this haven, toward the south-west and north-west, two opposite points. (Mr Burroughs, Heart Div.) Methinks it should lie heavy upon those men's spirits that first divided us, by publishing and pressing their new fangled fancies.

Ver. 13. Supposing that they had, &c.] God maketh many times the strongest sinew of the arm of flesh to crack.

“ Fallitur augurio spes bona saepe suo.”

Ver. 14. Called Euroclydon] A stormy blast coming from the east,

“ Una Eurusque Notusque ruunt, creberque procellis

Africus, et vastos volvunt ad littora fluctus.”

(Virg. Aeneid. ii. 28.) This wind is by Pliny called Navigantium pestis, the mariner's misery. How happy is the Church to whom, what wind soever bloweth, blows good and comfort, #So 4:16. As for others, like as here, after a soft south wind arose Euroclydon; so to them after a false peace will be a sad storm, Tranquillitas ista tempestas erit.

Ver. 15. Could not bear up] Or direct the eye against the wind, could not look it in the face. There is an elegance in the original, because part of the foreward of the ship is by mariners called the "ship's eye," αντοφθαλμειν. (Verbum Polybiauum. Hist. iv.)

Ver. 16. To come by the boat] i.e. To recover, take up, and save the boat, that the waves should not break it.

Ver. 17. Undergirding the ship] With trusses or strong ropes, for fear lest she should split.

Ver. 18. And being exceedingly tossed] Seneca speaking of such as have lived long to little purpose, not improving their time and their talents, he saith that their lives are like ships in a storm, mullam iactati sunt, non navigarunt, tossed much, but have sailed nothing; or like a mill stone, that is ever moving, but removes not at all; or as when men make imperfect dashes, they are said to scribble, but do not write.

Ver. 19. The tackling of the ship] eth hacchelim, #Jon 1:15, which is almost our word "tackling."

Ver. 20. All hope that we, &c.] God delights to help those that are forsaken of their hopes: he reserveth his hand for a dead lift. Good therefore and worthy of all acceptation is the prophet's counsel, #Isa 50:10,11. A child of light walking in darkness must do as these here, when neither sun nor star appeared for many days, cast the anchor of hope within the veil of heaven, pray and wait till the day dawn, and the day star appear in his heart.

Ver. 21. Gained this harm] i.e. Prevented it. Prevision (foresight) is the best way of prevention, but for lack of prudent forecast "men pass on and are punished." Leo cassibus irretitus dixit, si praescivissem. Men might by wisdom redeem many miseries.

Ver. 22. Be of good cheer] So Bishop Ridley being once tossed by a sad tempest, Be of good cheer, said he to the boatmen, and ply your oars; for this boat carrieth a bishop that must be burned, not drowned. So Caesar said to the ferryman in a storm, Noli timere; Caesarem fers, et fortunam Caesaris: Never fear; Caesar is of better fortune than to die by drowning. That was a memorable speech of a philosopher, who being in danger of shipwreck in a light starry night, said, "Surely I shall not perish, there are so many eyes of providence over me." Much more may a saint say so.

Ver. 23. Whose I am, and whom I serve] Lo, how holily he speaks, and like a Christian, among a company of profane and rude soldiers and seamen; so doth Jacob in his intercourse with Esau: these, saith he, are the children whom God of his grace hath given me, #Ge 33:5. Ubiquity is a sure sign of sincerity. An upright man is the same in all companies and in all conditions; as a pearl is a pearl, though cast into a puddle; as gold will glister whether cast into the fire or the water. Good blood will not belie itself; neither will a good spiritual constitution show itself otherwise than by suitable both communication and conversation.

Ver. 24. God hath given thee all] It is for the godly's sake that the wicked are spared and favoured. To the wicked, God saith concerning his servants, as the prophet once said to Jehoram, "Surely were it not that I regard the presence of Jehoshaphat king of Judah, I would not look toward thee, nor see thee," #2Ki 3:14.

Ver. 25. For I believe God] The believer walks about the world as a conqueror. Faith drinks to him in a cup of nepenthes, and bids him sing away sorrow; "But if ye will not believe, surely ye shall not be established," #Isa 7:9.

Ver. 26. We must be cast] Where our ship being broke, we shall be brought safe to land by an all-powerful hand of God, who delights to help at a dead lift. And this is here foretold, that it may not be thought to happen by hap-hazard.

Ver. 27. In Adria] That is, in the Adriatic Sea.

Ver. 28. Fifteen fathoms] A sign they were nearer shore than before.

Ver. 29. Wished for the day] Wish we as much for the day of redemption, when after much tossing on this glassy sea, we shall safely land at the haven of happiness, at the quay of Canaan, the kingdom of heaven.

“ Discupio solvi, tecumque, o Christe, manere; Portio fac regni sim quotacunque tui. ”

Ver. 30. And as the shipmen] So to shift for themselves, not caring what became of the passengers. A private spirited man is totus in se, entirely in himself, like the snail, still within doors, at home; and though he may look abroad sometimes, and seem well affected to others, yet he seeks himself; as the snail creeping abroad out of the walls and hedges, yet still keeps within its own house.

Ver. 31. Ye cannot be saved] God must be trusted, but not tempted, by wilful neglect of due means. He is not tied to them, but yet doth usually work by them. {See Trapp on "Mt 4:4"}

Ver. 32. Then the soldiers] According to St Paul's counsel, who was now somebody with them. Indeed he was grown, by much exercise and experience, harum rerum callentissimus, et vir in omnibus rebus excellentissimus, as one saith of him, a most gallant man, and every way accomplished.

Ver. 33. Having taken nothing] i.e. Having made no set meal but by snatches and catches. When life is in danger, all is laid aside till that be secured. Oh that we were likewise wise for our souls; surely if we knew our danger, we should neither eat nor drink till we had made our peace with God. For is it nothing to lose an immortal soul? to purchase an everliving death?

Ver. 34. Not an hair] A proverbial speech, #Lu 21:18. See #Mt 10:30. {See Trapp on "Mt 10:30"}

Ver. 35. In presence of them all] He was not ashamed of God's service before those heathens. No more was Abraham who built an altar to his God wherever he came. That was the first work he did, not fearing the idolatrous Canaanites. A bold and wise profession is required of every Christian. It is no gold that glitters not.

Ver. 36. Then were they all of good cheer] By Paul's good example. For as one bad man may hinder much good, #Ec 9:18, so on the contrary.

Ver. 37. We were in all two hundred, &c.] And that not one of this "all" should miscarry, was a miracle of God's mercy; since all of them could not swim (likely), and being so low brought with fear and fasting, how could they so bestir themselves, as in that case was requisite? Or being so many on a cluster, how did they not one hinder another? But God was in the shipwreck; and if he command deliverance, it shall be done with ease and expedition. In case their skill or strength fail, "he shall spread forth his hands in the midst of them, as he that swimmeth spreadeth forth his hands to swim," #Isa 25:11; with great facility he shall do it: the motion in swimming is easy, and with a slight; strong, violent strokes in the water, would rather sink than support.

Ver. 38. Cast out the wheat] Fastidientes divinum verbum, et damnum et dedecus pall oportet. "Behold! they have rejected the word of the Lord, and what wisdom is in them?" #Jer 8:9.

Ver. 39. They discovered a creek] Then chiefly are we to look for tempests when we draw nighest to the shore, to the haven. Our last encounter at death is like to be the sharpest. The Israelites never met with such opposition as when they were to take possession of the land. Then all the kings of Canaan combined against them.

Ver. 40. Hoised up the mainsail] Which before they had struck by reason of the violence of the storm. If God afflict, we must carry our sail accordingly, #Ru 1:20.

Ver. 41. Where two seas met] The men of Malta show a certain place at this day which they call lascala di San Paulo, Saint Paul's arrival.

Ver. 42. To kill the prisoners] An ill requital of Paul's kindness. But soldiers make but a sport of killing men. "Let the young men arise and play before us," said Abner.

Ver. 43. Willing to save Paul] By whom he had been hitherto saved; and in whom he saw that goodness that could not but attract all hearts not congealed into steel and adamant. I read of a monster, who that night that his prince pardoned and released him, got out and slew him; this was Michael Balbus. (Zonaras in Annal.) Such another was bloody Bonner, active in bringing the Lord Cromwell (who had been his great patron) to an untimely death. In like sort dealt Bishop Watson by Mr Rough, and Bishop Bourn by Mr Bradford, who had saved their lives with the hazard of their own. William Parry was for burglary condemned to die, but saved by Queen Elizabeth's pardon; this ungrateful man afterwards sought to requite her, by vowing her death, A. D. 1584, and was therefore worthily executed as a traitor; and indeed hanging was too good for him. (Speed.) The senate of Basil first tortured, and then burnt to ashes, a villain called Paulus Sutor, that murdered an old man that had done him many fatherlike courtesies, A.D. 1565, as judging, that to render evil for evil is brutish, but to render evil for good is devilish. (Lonicer.) Lycurgus the Lacedaemonian lawgiver would make no law against such, quod prodigiosa res esset beneficium non rependere, because it could not be imagined that any would be so unworthy as not to recompense one kindness with another. If this centurion should have done otherwise than he did in saving Paul, by whose prayers and for whose sake he and his company had escaped, no time would have worn out his utter disgrace and infamy.

Ver. 44. Hominum malitiam vincit Dei bonitas, saith Beza here. God's goodness overcometh man's badness.

Chapter 28

Ver. 1. And when they were escaped] Some of them escaped perhaps as narrowly as did Sir Thomas Challoner, who when he was young, served under Charles V in the expedition of Algiers; where being shipwrecked, after he had swam till his strength and his arms failed him, at the length catching hold of a cable with his teeth, he escaped, not without the loss of some of his teeth. He was afterwards knighted for his valour at Mussleborough field, and died A. D. 1566. (Camd. Britan.)

Ver. 2. And the barbarous people] So the Grecians (and afterwards the Romans) called all other nations besides themselves. But now the Grecians, having lost their ancient liberty and glory, by means of the Turkish oppression, are become no less barbarous than those rude nations whom they before scorned. Which misery, with a thousand more, they may justly impute to their own ambition and discord.

Ver. 3. And fastened on his hand] Thus, many are the troubles of the righteous; but out of them all the Lord delivereth them. No country hath more venomous creatures than Egypt, none more antidotes; so godliness hath many troubles, and as many helps against trouble. The devil's design here was to have destroyed Paul, but he was deceived. So he desired to have Peter, #Lu 22:31, sc. to hell, but that was more than he could do.

Ver. 4. Yet vengeance suffereth not, &c.] Nemo scelus gerit in pectore, qui non idem habet Nemesin in tergo. The fall of Blackfriars slew nearly a hundred, whereof two were priests; a third having taken water, together with many others that had escaped, purposing to go into Flanders, were drowned at London bridge shortly after, the boat being overturned.

Ver. 5. And he shook off the beast] So should we do false and slanderous reports; or rather make a good use of them; as the skilful apothecary of the flesh of this poisonous beast makes a wholesome theriacle (θηριακα), or treacle, <sup>{a}</sup> as we call it.

And felt no harm] No more did Queen Elizabeth, when Squier, the traitor, sent by Walpool the Jesuit, had poisoned the pummel of her saddle. The vigour of the poison (said the Jesuit) is such as neither continuance of times nor subtilty of air could check or unvirtuate. And yet, albeit the season were hot, and the veins open to receive any malign tincture, her body thereupon felt no distemperature, nor her hand felt no more hurt (saith Speed) than Paul's did when he shook off the viper into the fire.

{a} A medicinal compound, originally a kind of salve, composed of many ingredients, formerly in repute as an alexipharmic against and antidote to venomous bites, poisons generally, and malignant diseases. Obs.

ⒺD

Ver. 6. That he should have swollen] Or, have been inflamed, πυμπρασθαι, viz. with the viper's venom. The devil's darts are called fiery for the dolour and distemper they work, #Eph 6:16; in allusion likely to the poisoned darts that the Scythians of old and other nations now use in war, dipped in the blood and gall of vipers, the venomous heat of which, like a fire in their flesh, killed the wounded with torments; the likest hell of any other, saith one. These fiery darts sting the wicked, as the fiery serpents did the Israelites. The saints shake them off without hurt, though not always without smart.

Ver. 7. Who received us and lodged us three days courteously] Gr. φιλοφρονως, of a friendly mind. As he is the best Christian that is most humble, so is he the truest gentleman that is most courteous. And as fair flowers in the spring draw passengers' eyes, so doth courtesy in high degrees win men's affections.

Ver. 8. Sick of a fever] Which hath its name both in Greek and Latin from the fire that is in it, πυρετος. Febris a fervore. The difference is not so great whether a man broil in the bed, or at a stake by frying a faggot: fear it not.

Ver. 9. Came and were healed] On both sides (likely), and hence their forwardness and freeheartedness, #Ac 28:10.

Ver. 10. Who also honoured us] Perraro grati reperiuntur, saith Cicero. A thankful man is worth his weight in gold, saith Mr Ward. The Italian hath a proverb, Seiapato il morbo, fraudato il santo; when the disease is departed, the saint is defrauded, viz. of the honour that was vowed to be done to him. Not so here.

Ver. 11. Whose sign was Castor and Pollux] Seamen say that if these two stars arise not together, it is a sign of an ensuing tempest. Dissension is a forerunner of destruction.

Ver. 12. Syracuse] The metropolis of Sicily, where lived and died that famous mathematician Archimedes; who by his art so long held out the city against Marcellus the Roman general, that beleaguered it. (Plut.)

Ver. 13. Came to Rhegium] Which hath its name of breaking, from ρηγνυμι, rumpo; because, say some, there the sea broke off Sicily from Italy, which was before but one continent. The like they report concerning France and England.

Ver. 14. Seven days] For mutual enjoyment of one another; there being no such comfort upon earth, next to communion with God, as the communion of saints, #2Jo 12, that our joy may be full. This, heathens knew, and therefore relegated Christians and confined them to isles and mines, where they could not have access one to another. (Cyprian, Epist.)

Ver. 15. They came to meet us] So Paul entered Rome as a long-looked-for triumpher.

Ver. 16. Paul was suffered to dwell] So Bradford, prisoner in the King's Bench, was in so good credit with his keeper, that he had license to go all about the city without a keeper, &c. Yea, to ride into Oxfordshire to a merchant's house of his acquaintance, &c.

Ver. 17. After three days] Ministers should free themselves as much and as soon as may be from sinister suspicions. For they must never think to do good on those that have conceived an incurable prejudice against them.

Ver. 18. Because there was no cause] See #Ac 25:25.

Ver. 19. To accuse my nation of] But to defend Christ's cause and mine own innocence, with as little reflex on the Jews as may be. It is an ill business to defame a whole nation (one's own especially), as Scaliger, that proud hypercritic, who gave this base and unmannerly character, Gothi belluae, Scoti non minus, Angli perfidi, inflati, ferri, contemptores, stolidi, amentes, inertes, inhospitales, immanes. The Goths are beasts, so are the Scots. As for the English, they are perfidious, proud, fierce, scornful, fools, madmen, sluggards, inhospitable, cruel.

Ver. 20. For the hope of Israel] That is, for the resurrection of the dead and that eternal life that Israel hopes and looks for. Hallucinantur philosophi, qui sapientem non metu solum sed et spe vacare vellent. Spes in terrenis incerti nomen boni, spes in divinis nomen est certissimi, #Heb 11:1. Hope in God, saith every David to himself, #Ps 43:5.

I am bound with this chain] At Rome, such prisoners as had liberty to go abroad, had a long chain, the one end whereof was fastened to their right hand, and the other end was tied to a soldier's left hand, who was to be his keeper. Thus was St Paul bound, likely.

Ver. 21. We neither received letters] Not because the priests and elders were now grown better minded toward Paul than they were wont to be (for malice is like the crocodile, that groweth as long as it liveth; and, as we used to say of cheeze, the older it is, the stronger), but that they could not so well deal with him at such a distance; and besides, being so far off them, he could be no such eye sore to them.

Ver. 22. Everywhere it is spoken against] Nomen in Christianis damnabatur, non crimen, saith Tertullian. When Attalus the martyr was put to death at Lyons, a table was set up over his head with this inscription, Hic est Attalus Christianus, This is Attalus the Christian; that was all they had to charge him with. So when Polycarp was martyred, all the crime objected against him was that he confessed himself to be a Christian. Nero made this cruel edict, Whosoever confessed himself to be a Christian, let him be presently put to death without any more ado, as a convicted enemy of mankind. {a}

Ver. 23. There came into his lodging] Tertullian telleth us that it was forbidden the primitive Christians by a public statute, to have temples or places of public meetings. It is yet better with us, blessed be God. We have, as Joseph provided them in Egypt, a granary or storehouse in every city, and village for the most part.

Ver. 24. And some believed not] The word, as Moses, slays the Egyptian, saves the Israelite. It is to some the savour of life, to others of death, as Obedom was blessed for the ark, the Philistines cursed.

Ver. 25. And when they agreed not] They jarred. It is a metaphor from musical instruments that make no harmony, ἀσυμφωνοί.

Had spoken one word] A terrible stinging word, that would stick in their souls and flesh, as the envenomed arrows of the Almighty, throughout all eternity.

Ver. 26. Hearing, ye shall hear, &c.] A heavy ear is a singular judgment. Antagoras, cum Thebaidos librum apud Boeotos recitaret, nec quisquam recitanti applauderet, complicato volumine, Merito, inquit, Boeoti vocamini, quia boum habetis aures. (Erasm. Chiliad.) The Greeks have a proverb, Asino quispiam narrabat fabulam, ac ille movebat aures.

Seeing, ye shall see] Speculatively.

And not perceive] i.e. Practically, as given over for their wilfulness to spiritual blindness.

Ver. 27. Is waxed gross] "Their heart is as fat as grease; but I delight in thy law," saith David, #Ps 119:70. Naturalists tell us that fat-hearted men are dull-witted. Γαστηρ παχεια λεπτον ου τικτει voov. It is a heavy case when men have got a kind of hoof over their hearts, callum obductum, corneas fibras, brawny breasts, horny heart strings.

Their eyes have they closed] Gr. εκαμμυσαν. They have winked, they shut the windows, lest the light should come in. Ut liberius peccent, libenter ignorant, saith Bernard. Sponte quidem reluctantur veritati, non tamen fortuito, saith Beza.

Ver. 28. That the salvation of God] i.e. The gospel, that "grace of God that bringeth salvation," #Tit 2:11, and is the power of God to salvation to as many as believe, #Ro 1:16; therefore called the word of this life, that is able to save souls; and hath heaven in it, potentially, as the kernel hath the tree, or the seed the harvest.

Ver. 29. Had great reasoning, &c.] It is not the gospel, but the contempt of the gospel, that breedeth questions and quarrellings.

Ver. 30. And received all that came in unto him] Being a genuine child of the Church, set forth by that πανδοχειον, #Lu 10:34, that inn that receives and helps all sin-sick visitors. Christ himself (saith one) was therefore born in an inn, to signify that in the Church there is lodging for all. Let our houses be little churches and receptacles for the righteous, as Paul's was, #Col 2:5; so that a stranger coming thither, may behold our holy order, and say, as Jacob did of Bethel, "This is the house of God, this is the gate of heaven," #Ge 28:17.

Ver. 31. Preaching the kingdom, &c.] Mr Bradford, during the time of his imprisonment, preached twice a day continually, unless sickness hindered him; where also the sacrament was often ministered. And through his means (the keeper so well did bear with him) such resort of good people was daily at his lecture, and ministration of the sacrament, that commonly his chamber was well nigh filled.

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. Paul] A little man, it should seem by his name (such as was James the Less, #Mr 15:40): but as the Church of Philadelphia (discommended for nothing), though she had but a little strength, yet had a great door set open; and as Bethlehem was the least, and yet not the least among the princes of Judah; so was this apostle the last, #1Co 15:8 (and perhaps the least in stature), as one born out of due time. {a} But God (who loves to be maximus in minimis the greatest in the least) had designed him to great services, and gifted him accordingly, so that he was no whit behind the very chiefest of the apostles, #2Co 11:5; and for painstaking, he laboured more abundantly than they all, #1Co 15:10. Hence Chrysostom calleth him insatiabilem Dei cultorem, an insatiable servant of Christ. And himself seems as insatiable a praiser of this apostle (the apostle he commonly nameth him "by an excellency"), for he hath written eight homilies in his commendation. And if any think he hath said too much, it is because either they have not read him, or cannot judge his worth. Qui tricubitalis caelos transcendit (as the same father saith), little though he were, yet he got above the heavens. {b}

A servant of Jesus Christ] This is a higher title than monarch of the world, as Numa, second king of Rome, could say. {c} Constantinus, Valentinus, and Theodosius, three emperors, called themselves Vasallos Christi, the vassals of Christ, as Socrates reporteth.

{a} {See Trapp on "Ac 13:9"} #Re 3:9 Mt 2:6 cf. Mic 5:2 1Co 15:8.

{c} του θεου υπηρεσιαν βασιλευειν ενομιζεν. Plut.

Ver. 2. Promised] Foreshowed and foreshadowed in the types of the ceremonial law (which was their gospel, it was Christ in figure), and in the writings of the prophets; only by degrees and piecemeal, πολυμερως. God spake of old to our fathers, by his servants the prophets, #Heb 1:1. All was in riddles to what it is now; and that saying took place, Et latet, et lucet. It is close, and yet clear.

Ver. 3. Concerning his Son] Here is a lofty and lively description of Christ's sacred person. The whole Epistle being the confession of our Churches, as Melancthon calleth it, who therefore went over it ten different times in his ordinary lectures (Scultet. Annal.): the Epistle being such, as never can any man possibly think, speak, or write sufficiently of its worth and excellency. Mr Perkins adviseth, in reading the Scripture, first to begin with the Gospel of John, and this Epistle to the Romans, as being the keys of the New Testament. And for this Epistle to the Romans, Cardinal Pole adviseth to begin at the twelfth chapter, and read to the end; and practise the precepts of repentance and mortification, and then set upon the former part of the Epistle, where justification and predestination are handled.

According to the flesh] i.e. Either his body or his human nature, called a swift cloud (as some will have it), #Isa 19:1 "Behold, the Lord rideth upon a swift cloud, and shall come into Egypt." And the habitable part of God's earth, #Pr 8:31. For the Word dwelt among us, #Joh 1:14. And here was habitatio Dei cum carne, God dwelling with flesh, which the magicians held impossible, #Da 2:11. It was much for God to "pour out his Spirit upon all flesh," the best thing upon the basest, #Joe 2:28. But it was more, for the fulness of the Godhead bodily to inhabit it, #Col 2:9. {See Trapp on "1Co 1:2"} St Paul seems to have learned of the holy angels, thus to salute, #Lu 2:14.

Ver. 4. Declared to be, &c.] Gr. ορισθεντος, defined; for definitions explain obscurities.

With power] For, Superas evadere ad auras, Hic labor, hoc opus est -a work befitting a God. See #Eph 1:20. {See Trapp on "Eph 1:20"}

The Spirit of holiness] The divine essence of Christ, #2Co 13:4, which sanctifieth the human nature assumed by him.

Ver. 5. For obedience to the faith] That is, to the gospel (that doctrine of faith), or to Christ, who is often put for faith (whereof he is the proper object) in this Epistle. "Kiss the Son," &c. "Hear him," #Ps 2:12 Mt 17:5.

Ver. 6. Ye are the called] With a high and heavenly calling, #Heb 3:1. {See Trapp on "Heb 3:1"}

Ver. 7. Called to be saints] Those then that are called, are saints while alive, and not only those that are canonized by the pope after they are dead in numerum Deorum ab Ecclesia Romana relati, as Bembus profanely speaketh of their St Francis, a sorry man, of whom (as once of Becket 48 years after his death) it may well be disputed whether he were damned or saved. Pope Callistus III sainted some such in his time, as of whom Cardinal Bessarion, knowing them for naught, said, These new saints make me doubt much of the old.

Grace be to you, and peace] {See Trapp on "1Co 1:2"}

Ver. 8. Your faith is spoken of] See #Ro 16:26, and Juvenal, Tacitus, and other profane writers, who bitterly exagitate the doctrines and practices of those Roman Christians. Now that must needs be good that such men speak evil of: and as Jerome writeth to Austin, Quod signum maioris gloriae est, Omnes haeretici me detestantur: the heretics hate me; and that is no small grace to me.

Ver. 9. Whom I serve in my spirit] That is, with all the faculties of my soul centred and co-united.

Ver. 10. I might have a prosperous journey] This he prayed, and this he had by such a way as he little dreamed of. Little thought Paul, that when he was bound at Jerusalem, and posted from one prison to another, that God was now sending him to Rome; yet he sent him, and very safe with a great convoy. God goes often another way to work for our good than we could imagine.

Ver. 11. That I may impart] There is no envy in spiritual things, because they may be divided in solidum; one may have as much as another, and all alike. Scientiarum (sic et gratiarum) ea vis est naturae et quo plus doceas, et alteri de tuo largiare, eo ditior ac doctior fias, saith Bodina. Such is the nature and property of sciences and graces, that the more you communicate them, the more you increase them.

Ver. 12. That I may be comforted] Or, exhorted, Ad communem exhortationem percipiendam, saith Beza out of Bucer, and others. The meanest of Christ's members may contribute somewhat to the edifying even of an apostle, #2Jo 12. That favourite of Christ would be furthered and quickened by the graces of a woman. Now when such grandees in grace have benefit by communion of saints, how much more may they whose measures are less! The very angels know not so much but they would know more, #Eph 3:10 1Pe 1:12.

Ver. 13. But was let hitherto] Either by Satan, #1Th 2:18; or by the Holy Spirit otherwise disposing of him, as #Ac 19:6,7; or by some intervenient but important occasion, as #Ro 15:20,21.

Ver. 14. I am debtor] Because intrusted with talents for that purpose, #1Co 9:16. {See Trapp on "1Co 9:16"} It might more truly be said of Paul than it was of Cato, that he did— toti natum se credere mundo, believe himself born for a common good (Lucan); or, than it was said to Bucer by his physicians, Non sibi se, sed multorum utilitati esse natum, that he was born for the benefit of many. (Melch. Adam.)

Ver. 15. So as much] Quicquid in me situm est, promptum est. A notable expression.

Ver. 16. For I am not ashamed] As men are apt to be; whence that fatherly charge, #2Ti 1:8. Do ye think (said John Frith, martyr, to the archbishop's men that would have let him go) that I am afraid to declare mine opinion unto the bishops of England in a manifest truth? If you should both leave me here, and go tell the bishops that you had lost Frith, I would surely follow as fast after as I might, and bring them news that I had found and brought Frith again.

For it is the power, &c.] Eternal life is potentially in the word preached, as the harvest is potentially in the seed.

Ver. 17. The just shall live by faith] #Hab 2:4, that is, they shall enjoy themselves by their faith, in greatest disasters or dangers, when others are at their wits' ends. That is the prophet's sense; and the apostle not unfitly applieth it to prove justification by faith alone, for if a man live by faith he is just by faith.

Ver. 18. Who hold the truth] Hold the light of their conscience (which is as a prophet from God) prisoner. The natural man, that he may sin the more securely, imprisons the truth which he acknowledgeth, and lays hold on all the principles in his head that might any way disturb his course in sin, locking them up in restraint. Hence it appears that no man is righteous in himself, or by his own righteousness, which was the το κρινομενον. Those of the philosophers that knew most, as Socrates, Aristotle, Plato, &c., are belied if they were not vicious in their practice, et de virtute locuti, Clunem agitant. (Juvenal.) Plato had the knowledge of one God; but dared not say so publicly. It is neither easy (saith he) to find out the Creator of all, nor safe to communicate the knowledge of him to the common people. So Seneca wrote a book (now lost) against superstitions; but saith Austin, Libertas affuit scribenti, non viventi: colebat quod reprehendebat, agebat quod arguebat, quod culpabat adorabat: He lived not after his own writings, but worshipped what he reprov'd; he did what he decried, he bowed before that he blamed; saying (as Domitius Calderinus when he went to mass) Eamus ad eomunem errorem, Let us go to that which we cannot but condemn for a common error. (Bucholcer.)

Ver. 19. Because that which may] Heathens might know God the Creator, per species creaturarum (as they speak), either in way of negation, or causality, or eminence: not so God tile Redeemer.

Ver. 20. Are clearly seen] Pervidentur. As in a mirror, or as on a theatre. Ut solem in aquis, sic Deum in operibus contemplamur. God (saith one) is best seen in his works, as the sun in the west. {a}

{a} Saeculum est speculum, quo Deum intueamur.

Ver. 21. Neither were thankful] How then shall we answer to God our hateful unthankfulness, which is (saith one) "a monster in nature, a solecism in manners, a paradox in divinity, a parching wind to dam up the fountain of divine favours." Woe be to our Solifugae that abuse gospel light; these put not light "under a bushel" (as the poor Paynims did) but under a dunghill; Gravis est lux conscientiae, Heavy is the light of conscience, saith Seneca; but heavier is the light of the gospel, gravior est lux Evangelii, say we. A heavy account will they give that abuse the light of nature; but much heavier they that "receive the grace of God in vain."

But became vain in their imaginations] Gr. διαλογισμοις, in their reasonings, disputations, discourses upon serious deliberation. They stood not to their own principles (as, that there is one God only, that this God is to be worshipped, &c.), but were atheists by night that worshipped the sun, and atheists by day that worshipped the moon, as Cyril saith wittily.

Ver. 22. Professing themselves to be wise] Aristotle, nature's chief secretary, writeth many things most absurdly concerning God; as, that he is a living creature, that he worketh not freely, but by a kind of servile necessity; and that therefore he deserveth no praise or thanks from men for his many benefits, since he doth but what he must needs do. These are Aristotle's absurd assertions. And yet at Stuckard in Germany was found a doctor of divinity that preached to the people, that the Church might be sufficiently well taught and governed by Aristotle's ethics, though we had no Bible. And the Collen divines set forth a book, concerning Aristotle's salvation, and called him Christ's forerunner in naturals, as John Baptist had been in supernaturals. But what saith St Paul, #1Co 2:14 "The natural man receiveth not," &c. Gr. ψυχικός, the souly man, that doth excolere animam, improve of the mind, such as Aristotle, Cicero, &c., who the wiser they were, the vainer they were, and the further from God and his kingdom; their learning hung in their light, and served but to light them into utter darkness. {a}

Ver. 23. Made like to corruptible man] God made man in his own image; and man (to be even with him, as it were) will needs make God after his image.

And four-footed beasts] God therefore justly gave them up to sodomy, which did abase them below the beasts; that there might be an analogy between the sin and the punishment. This is called a "meet recompence," #Ro 1:27. They dishonoured God, they dishonoured therefore themselves. They would not know nor honour him, they shall not therefore know nor spare one another, &c.; so severely will God punish the contempt of and rebellion against the light.

And creeping things] In Lapland the people worship that all day for a god, whatsoever they see first in the morning, be it a bird or worm.

Ver. 24. Gave them up to uncleanness] Aristotle confesseth the disability of moral knowledge to rectify the intemperance of nature; and made it good in his practice; for he used a common strumpet to satisfy his lust. Socrates is said to have had his catamite {a} inter Socraticos, &c. (Juvenal.)

{a} A boy kept for unnatural purposes. CED

Ver. 25. Who changed] They tare out their natural principles and turned atheists, as Diagoras, who yet was an atheist more with his tongue than with his heart; for having cried down a deity in a famous oration, he yet suffered himself to be deified by the people for his eloquence. Qua ornari ab eo Diabolus quaerebat, as Austin writeth to a learned but lewd person of his times. See my Common Place of Atheism. Epicurus verbis reliquit Deos re sustulit, saith Cicero (De Nat. Deor.).

Ver. 26. Into that which is against nature] So against nature, that children (natures end) and posterity is utterly lost by it. Paul seems to point here at Messalina (that shame of her sex), the wife of Claudius the emperor.

Ver. 27. Leaving the natural] As at this day in the Levant, sodomy is held no sin. The Turkish pashas have many wives, but more catamites, {a} which are their serious loves. (Blount's Voyage.)

Burned in their lust] Gr. ἐξέκαυσθησαν, "were scalded." Some men put off all manhood, become dogs, worse than dogs. Hence #De 23:18 "The price of a dog," that is, of a sodomite, as Junius and Deodatus expound it.

{a} A boy kept for unnatural purposes. GED

Ver. 28. To a reprobate mind] Or, an injudicious mind; or, a mind rejected, disallowed, abhorred of God; or a mind that none hath cause to glory in, but rather to be much ashamed of.

Ver. 29. With all unrighteousness] The mother of all the ensuing misrule.

Wickedness] The Syrian saith, "bitterness." See #Jer 2:19. The word πονηρία may be rendered troublesomeness, as the devil is called ο πονηρος, the troublesome one, the molester of God's people; restless in himself and disquieting others.

Envy, murder] Three such alliterations are found in this black beadroll. {a} {b} The apostle seems delighted with them, as was likewise the prophet Isaiah. Of which noble two, I may well say as one doth of Demosthenes and Cicero, Demosthenes Ciceroni praeripuit ne esset primus orator; Cicero Demostheni, ne solus.

Malignity] Or, morosity, crossness, ill conditions; or an evil disposition, that taketh everything the worst way; whereas a better disposition would make a better exposition, and take things by the right handle.

Whisperers] These are worse than backbiters, because they work underground, like as the wind that creeps in the chinks and crevices in a wall, or the cracks in a window, prove commonly more dangerous than a storm that meets a man in the face upon the champaign. A vento percolato, et ab inimico reconciliato libera nos.

{a} πορνεία, πονηρία. φθονου, φονου. ασυνετους, ασυνθετους. κακοηθεια, κακια.

{b} A list of persons to be specially prayed for ÆD

Ver. 30. Haters of God] And so God-murderers, #1Jo 3:15. {See Trapp on "1Jo 3:15"}

Ver. 31. Implacable] That will not hear of a truce, much less of a peace. Nihil se libentius facere dictitabat Caesar, quam supplicibus ignoscere. (Caesar. Comment.) And surely, as any one is more manly, he is more merciful, as David, #2Sa 1:12. And, on the contrary, the basest natures are most vindictive; neither will they ever be heartily reconciled. Their reconciliations are vulpinae amicitiae, fox-like friendships.

Ver. 32. Have pleasure] Or they patronize, applaud, and approve, συνευδοκουσι this is set last, as worst of all; it comprehends all kinds of consent. (Theop.) To hold the bag is as bad as to fill it. The law of God requires not only our observation but our preservation, to cause others to keep it, as well as ourselves; and to rebuke, at least by a cast of our countenance (as God doth, #Ps 80:16), those that violate it. There is little difference, faveasne sceleri, an illud facias, whether thou commit sin or consent to it.

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. Therefore thou art inexcusable] Though thou have no pleasure in them that do evil, as #Ro 1:32, but dost superciliously censure them, being thyself otherwise as bad. Cato is said to have exercised usury, to have prostituted his wife, to have slain himself. God often sets a Noverint universi "let it be known to the whole world" upon the world's wizards, for the foulest fools.

Ver. 2. Which commit such] As Cato, #Ro 2:1, whom yet Velleius affirmeth to have been hominem virtuti simillimum. But God judgeth not as man.

Ver. 3. Thinkest thou] This is preaching to the conscience, to the quick. Our exhortations should be as forked arrows to stick in men's hearts; and not wound only, as other arrows. A poor hermit came to our Richard I, A. D. 1195, and preaching to him the words of eternal life, bade him be mindful of the subversion of Sodom, and to abstain from things unlawful: otherwise, said he, the deserved vengeance of God will come upon thee. The hermit being gone, the king neglected his words. But afterwards falling sick, he more seriously bethought himself, and waxing sound in soul as well as in body, he grew more devout, and charitable to the poor. (Hoveden. Speed.)

Ver. 4. The goodness of God] Gr. το χρηστον, his native goodness, ready to be employed to the behoof and benefit of the creature, #Tit 3:4. Now as the beam of the sun shining on fire doth discourage the burning of that; so the shining of God's mercies on us should dishearten and extinguish lust in us. This is so equal and needful a duty, that Peter picks this flower out of Paul's garden, as one of the choicest, and urgeth it upon those to whom he writes, #2Pe 3:15.

Ver. 5. Treasurest up unto thyself] Sicut mittentes pecuniam in gazophylacium, quod, ubi iam impletur, confringitur, saith Stella upon Luke. In treasuring, there is, 1. Laying in; 2. Lying hidden; 3. Bringing out again, as there is occasion. Wicked persons, while by following their lusts they think they do somewhat to their happiness, shall in the end find, pro thesauro carbores, those burning coals, #Ps 140:10.

Ver. 6. Who shall render] The Papists hence infer merit of works. But it is well observed that the Church in the Canticles is nowhere described by the beauty of her hands, or fingers. Christ concealeth the mention of her hands, that is, of her works (Cotton on Canticles): 1. Because he had rather his Church should abound in good works in silence than boast of them (especially when they are wanting), as Rome doth. 2. Because it is he above that worketh all our works for us, #Isa 26:12 Ho 14:4 Joh 15:5. Certum est nos facere quod facimus; sed ille facit, ut faciamus. (Augustine.) We do what we do; but it is he that causeth us so to do. {See Trapp on "Mt 16:27"}

Ver. 7. Who by patient continuance] Or, by suffering persecution for righteousness' sake. Gordus the martyr said, "It is to my loss, if you bate me anything in nay sufferings." Maiora certamina, maiora sequuntur praemia, οπου πλειων κοπος, πολυ κερδος, saith Ignatius. Much pains hath much gains.

Ver. 8. But unto them that are contentious] That wrangle and thwartle against clearest truths, searching the devil's skull for carnal arguments, as those Athenians, #Ac 17:16-21; being refractory as Pharaoh, who would not sit down under the miracle, but sent for the magicians. And though the word doth eat up all they say, as Moses's rod did, yet harden they their hearts, as Pharaoh, and resolve to curse, as Balaam, whatever come of it. These are those contentious ones, εξ εριθειας.

Ver. 9. Of the Jew first] Qui ideo deteriores sunt, quia meliores esse deberent. Who are therefore worse, because they should be better. Salvian.

Ver. 10. Peace] Safety here and salvation hereafter.

To every man that worketh good] Yet not for his work's sake, because no proportion between the work and the wages; no more than between in a nutshell. That wretched monk therefore died blasphemously, who said, Redde mihi aeternam vitam quam debes, Pay me eternal life, that thou owest me. And how dare Bellarmine say, that good works are mercatura regni caelestis, the price we pay for heaven? or that other Papist, God forbid, that we should enjoy heaven as of mere alms to us: no, we have it by conquest. Strange impudence!

Ver. 11. For] {See Trapp on "Ac 10:34"}

Ver. 12. Perish without law] Or, though they had no written law, as that of Moses.

Ver. 13. But the doers of the law] The Scriptures are verba vivenda non legenda, as Egidius, Abbot of Nuremberg, said of the 119th Psalm. Boni Catholici sunt qui et fidem integram sequuntur, et bones mores. (Aug.) Lessons of music must be practised, and a copy not read only but acted. Divinity must be done as well as known.

Ver. 14. Do by nature, &c.] Velleius saith that Cato was Homo virtuti simillimus, cui id solum visum est rationem habere, quod haberet iustiam, omnibus humanis vitiis immunis, &c. Aristides, Phocion, and Socrates were famous for their integrity. (Plin. vii. 31.)

Are a law to themselves] The Thracians gloried that they were αυτονομοι living laws, walking statutes.

Ver. 15. Their thoughts meanwhile] Or, between whiles: or in every interim of this life, μεταξυ. Other faculties may rest; an obscene dream by night shall not escape conscience's record; it is index, iudex, vindex, informer, judge and defender, God's spy and man's overseer; and it is better to have it sore than seared.

Ver. 16. According to my gospel] Which promiseth heaven to believers. This is comfort to those that are faithful in weakness, though but weak in faith. The sentence of the last day shall be but a more manifest declaration of that judgment that the Lord in this life, most an end, hath passed upon men. Heathens shall be judged by the law of nature; profligate professors by the law written, and the word preached; believers by the gospel, which saith, "If there be a willing mind, God accepteth," &c.

Ver. 17. Restest in the law] So spending thy time in a still dream, but thou shalt have sick waking, then when God shall send out summons for such sleepers. Men dream their Midianitish dreams, and tell them for law or gospel to their neighbours, #Jud 7:13.

Ver. 18. Being instructed out of the law] Gr. κατηχομενος, Being well catechised and principled, thou art able to discern the doctrines, and choose the best. Luther somewhere professeth himself to be discipulum catechismi, a scholar to the catechism; and those that are not well seen in the principles, can make no good progress in religion.

Ver. 19. Of the blind] The Chinese say that all other nations see but with one eye, they with two. The Pharisees were called Pekachin aperti, open-eyed: because they only saw. One of them was called Or hagnolam, "The light of the world." In Scripture, wise men only are termed Seers, Pekakim, #Ex 23:8 "Are we also blind?" say they to our Saviour; q.d. No, we scorn it: and yet how often hear we in that one chapter, #Mt 23:16,17,19,24,26 "Thou blind Pharisee, Ye fools and blind."

Ver. 20. Which hast the form of knowledge] A platform of wholesome words, a system, a method artificially moulded, μορφωσις, such as tutors and professors of arts and sciences have, and do read over again and again to their auditors.

Ver. 21. Teachest thou not thyself?] He that knows well and does worse is but as a whiner which carrieth a torch in his hand to show others his own deformities. I have read of a woman, who living in professed doubt of the Godhead, after better illumination and repentance, did often protest that the vicious life of a great scholar in that town did conjure up those damnable doubts in her soul. Neronis illud (quautus artifex pereo?) quadrabit in te peritum et periturum. That is the best sermon that is digged out of a man's own breast. Origen's teaching and living were said to be both one. Eusebius said that he preached not by his words only, but by his practice; and that thereby he had almost persuaded Alexander Severus the emperor to be a Christian; his mother Mammaea he fully persuaded. But Ferdinand I, emperor, complained of some divines that they were in sua ipsorum vitia fecundi satis, bitter against those vices in others which they too much favoured in themselves. {a}

{a} Non verbis solum sed exemplis Grammatici de Ullis erroribus disserentes suos non vident. Bern.

Ver. 22. Thou that sayest] Hypocrites can talk of religion, as if their tongues did run upon pattens, they are fair professors, but foul sinners; as was that carnal cardinal Cremensis, the pope's envoy, sent hither, A. D. 1114, to interdict priests' marriages, and being taken in the act with a common strumpet, he excused it by saying he was no priest himself, but a correcter of them.

Dost thou commit sacrilege?] The chronicler noteth of Queen Mary, that she restored again all ecclesiastical livings assumed to the crown, saying that she set more by the salvation of her own soul than she did by ten kingdoms. Shall not she that abhorred not idols rise up and condemn those that do, and yet commit sacrilege? (Speed's Chron.)

Ver. 23. Through breaking] By shooting short, or beyond, or wide of the mark; by omission, commission, or failing in the manner.

Ver. 24. For the name of God, &c.] Heretics and hypocrites do still with Judas deliver up the Lord Christ to the scoffs and buffetings of his enemies. Augustine (De Civ. Dei, i. 52) complains of the ancient heretics, that in them many evil-minded men found matter of blaspheming the name of Christ because they also pretended to the Christian religion. Epiphanius addeth, that for the looseness of such men's lives, and the baseness of their tenets, many of the heathens shunned the company of Christians, and would not be drawn to hear their sermons. Origen before them both cries out, Nunc male audiunt, castiganturque vulgo Christiani, quod aliter quam sapientibus convenit vivant, et vitia sub obtentu nominis celent, &c. There is an ill report goes of Christians for their unchristian conversation, &c. Ammianus Marcellinus, a heathen historian, deeply taxeth the pride, luxury, contentions, covetousness of the bishops in his time, and the deadly hatreds of common Christians. Nullae infestae hominibus bestiae sunt, ut sibi ferales plerique Christiani, saith he. A sad thing that a heathen should see and detest such hellish miscarriages among Christians. Bellarmine telleth us of certain hereties anciently called Christianocategori, that is, accusers of Christians, because for their sakes Christians were accused as worshippers of idols. {a} Papists give the same offence to Jews, who call scandal Chillul Hesham, a profaning of God's name, which they hold the greatest of sins.

{a} De Eccles. Triumph. lib. ii. 11.

Ver. 25. If thou keep the law] Which thou art thereby bound to do, either by thyself, or by thy surety Christ Jesus.

Thy circumcision is made uncircumcision] Thou art no whit privileged by it. Unregenerate Israel is to God as Ethiopia, #Am 9:7.

Ver. 26. If the uncircumcision] Which it can never do. But admit it could, &c.

Ver. 27. Judge thee] Men's guilt is increased by their obligations, as was Solomon's in departing from Gad, who had appeared unto him twice, #1Ki 11:9.

Ver. 28. Neither is that circumcision] See #Col 2:11. {See Trapp on "Col 2:11"} Inward circumcision is (as Origen describeth it) Purgatio animae et abiectio vitiorum, or (as St Paul in the place above named) the putting off old Adam with his actions, by the circumcision of Christ, by his merit and Spirit.

Ver. 29. Which is one inwardly] An Israelite indeed, #Joh 1:47, that hath put away the foreskin of his heart, #Jer 4:4. That worshippeth God in spirit, rejoiceth in Christ Jesus, and hath no confidence in the flesh, #Php 3:3.

Whose praise is not] He seeks not the applause of men, but God's approbation; and holds the Euge well done of conscience far better than the world's Hic est. Here is. The holy virgin was so far from affecting the vain praises of men, that she was troubled when truly praised of an angel.

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. What advantage] Gr. το περισσον, what odds, singular thing, prerogative?

Ver. 2. Chiefly, because that, &c.] This was their prime privilege, that they were God's library keepers, that this heavenly treasure was concredited unto them. Other nations are said to have been without God, because without those lively oracles, #2Ch 15:3 Eph 2:12. Prize we this privilege, and improve it. You must never expect another edition of the faith once received, #Jude 3, once for all.

Ver. 3. The faith of God] That is, his faithful promises, opposed to man's perfidy. Fides quia fit quod dictum est. God is faithful, saith the apostle often.

Ver. 4. Every man a liar] viz. By nature. But, #Isa 63:8, God's people are "children that will not lie," they will die rather. Non ideo negare volo ne peream, sed ideo mentiri nolo ne peccem, saith she upon the rack, of whom St Jerome writeth. The officers of Merindol answered the bishop that moved them to abjure, that they marvelled much that he would persuade them to lie to God and the world. And albeit that all men by nature are liars, yet they had learned by the word of God that they ought diligently to take heed of lying in any matter, be it never so small, &c.

Every man a liar] So he is either by imposture, and so in purpose, or by impotence, and so in the event, deceiving those that rely upon him, #Ps 62:9.

That thou mayest be justified in thy sayings] David speaketh of the truth of Nathan's reprehension; Paul applies it to the truth of God in his promises also. Let us give him a testimonial, #Joh 3:33; such as is that #De 32:4 "A God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he."

And mightest overcome] Mayest be pure, saith David, #Ps 51:4. Zacah in the Syriac is used for overcoming. Vincit veritas, et dare non dignis res mage digna Deo est.

Ver. 5. Is God unrighteous] Such heart boilings there were in the rejected Jews. And Job said little less, till God, overhearing him, steps, as it were, from behind the curtains, and takes him up for it, #Job 38:2 "Who is this," saith he, that talketh thus? How now?

Ver. 6. I speak as a man] q.d. Is there not such language heard in some men's hearts?

For then how shall God judge the world] How shall every transgression and disobedience receive a just recompence of reward? #Heb 2:2. God's will is the absolute rule of right, nec tantum recta, sed regula. (Bonav.)

Ver. 7. For if the truth of God] Here the former objection is repeated, explicated, and more fully answered, that every mouth might be stopped. Ferunt ranas lampade supra lacum, in quo tumultuantur; appensa, illius fulgore repercussas conticescere. (Lomelius.) So gainsayers are silenced, when the truth is thoroughly cleared.

Ver. 8. As we be slanderously reported] So are the reformed Churches by the black mouthed Papists. See the Abatement of Popish Brags, by Alex. Cook, the Preface; Eudaemon Joannes against Casaubon, and Calvino-Turcismum, &c.

Whose damnation is just] In the year of grace 1552, a monk of Berlin in Germany, who in the pulpit charged St Paul with a lie, was suddenly smitten with an apoplexy, while the word was yet in his mouth, and fell down dead in the place on St Stephen's day, as they call it. (Scultet. Annal.)

Ver. 9. That they are all under sin] Whole evil is in man, and whole man in evil. Homo est inversus decalogus. Man by nature is no better than a filthy dunghill of all abominable vices. His heart is the devil's storehouse, throne, nest. His eyes great thoroughfares of lust, pride, vanity, &c. His life a long chain of sinful actions, a web of wickedness spun out and made up by the hands of the devil and the flesh, an evil spinner, and a worse weaver. (Mr Whately's New Birth.)

Ver. 10. As it is written] What the prophets had said of some particular people or person is here applied to the whole race of mankind, because by nature there is never a better of us. Κακοι μεν θριπες, κακοι δε και ιπες. (Eras. Adag.)

Ver. 11. None that seeketh] That seeketh and fetcheth him out of his retiring room, as she did, #Mr 7:24,25.

Ver. 12. Become unprofitable] Or rotten, nasty, stinking, as the Hebrew hath it, #Ps 14:3. The old world was grown so foul, that God was forced to wash it with a deluge.

Ver. 13. The poison of the asps] Of that sort of asps that spit their venom far from them upon the bystanders. (πρυσιαδες.) There is a great deal of such vermin and venom in that newly found world of wickedness, the tongue, #Jas 3:6. It is easy to observe that St Paul here, making the anatomy of a natural man, stands more on the organs of speaking than all other members, and showeth how his tongue is tipped with fraud, his lips tainted with venom, his mouth full of gall, his throat a gaping grave, his tongue as a rapier to run men through with, and his throat as a sepulchre to bury them in. As for the asp, they write of her, That whereas her poison is so deadly, that the part infected cannot be cured but by cutting off, succurrit periclitantibus benignior natura, et noxiosissimo animali caliginosos obtutus dedit. (Jo. Wover.) Aspidi (saith Pliny, viii. 23) hebetes oculi dati, eosque non in fronte, sed in temporibus habet.

Ver. 14. Full] Γεμετ, As a ship that hath its full freight and lading.

Ver. 15. Swift to shed blood] As Paul, till God stopped him in his cursed career.

Ver. 16. They mind nothing but mischief.]

Ver. 17. They are restless and troublesome.]

Ver. 18. There is no fear of God] This is set last, as the source of all the former evils.

Ver. 19. Guilty] Culpable, and such as cannot plead their own cause without an advocate. (Chrysos.)

Ver. 20. Therefore by the deeds of the law] This is directly against Popish justification by works, merits, &c. Those misled and muzzled souls did worse than lose their labour that built religious houses, Pro remissione et redemptione peccatorum, pro remedio et liberatione animae, in eleemosynam animae, pro salute et requie animarum patrum et matrum, fratrum et sororum, &c. These were the ends that they aimed at, as appears in stories. And here observe how the once faithful city of Rome is now become a harlot, #Isa 1:21,22; her silver is become dross, her wine mixed with water, yet with blood, now since the Council of Trent, #Re 16:3,5; and this Epistle of Paul to the Romans is now become the Epistle of Paul against the Romans; like as Roma Rome is become Amor inversus. love perverted.

Ver. 21. But now] Since Christ came.

Ver. 22. Upon all] So that none shall hinder their happiness.

Ver. 23. All have sinned] The first man defiled the nature, and ever since the nature defileth the man. Adam was a parent, a public person, a parliament man, as it were; the whole country of mankind was in him, and fell with him.

Short of the glory of God] i.e. Of his image now obliterated, or of his kingdom, upon the golden pavement whereof no dirty dog must ever trample. It is an inheritance undefiled, #1Pe 1:4.

Ver. 24. Being justified freely] Because the apostle's word δωρεα is expounded by Varinus to be χαριτος αλλαγη, therefore Thammerus will needs conclude from this text that God by justifying us, doth but pay for our pains, give us what we have earned. Caelum gratis non accipiam, saith Vega. Opera bona sunt caeli mercatura, saith another. Heaven is the purchase of good works.

By the redemption] i.e. By faith applying this redemption, wrapping herself in the golden fleece of that Lamb of God.

Ver. 25. To be a propitiation] Or a covering, in allusion to the law; where the ark covering the two tables within it, the mercy seat covering the ark, and the cherubims covering the mercy seat and one another, showed Christ covering the curses of the law, in whom is the ground of all mercy; which things the angels desire to pry into, as into the pattern of God's deep wisdom.

For the remission of sins] Gr. παρεσιw, for the relaxation or releasement of sins, as of bonds or fetters.

Ver. 26. To declare] Gr. ενδειξις, for a clear demonstration or pointing out with the finger.

Ver. 27. Where is boasting then, &c.] A certain sophister would hence prove the authority of the Church. He read the words thus, by a mistake of their shorthand writing, Ubi est gloriatio? Ecclesia est, Where is boasting, it is the church, for exclusa est. it is excluded.

Ver. 28. A man is justified by faith] Here St Paul shows himself a pure Lutheran, and is therefore sharply and blasphemously censured by some Jesuits for a hot-headed person, who was so transported with the pangs of zeal and eagerness beyond all compass in most of his disputes, that there was no great reckoning to be made of his assertions. (Speculum Europae.) Yea, he was dangerous to read, as savouring of heresy in some places, and better perhaps he had never written. Four years before the Council of Trent, Cardinal Contarenus asserted the doctrine of justification by faith alone, in a just treatise, and was therefore soon after poisoned. Cardinal Pole is thought to have been sound in this point. Bellarmine reproves Pighius for consenting to Luther herein, whom he undertook to confute, and yet Bellarmine himself with his tutissimum est, it is most safe. doth as much upon the matter. Magna est veritas, et valebit, Great is the truth, and shall prevail.

Ver. 29. Is he the God of the Jews only] That is, Doth he justify the Jews only? For he is their God only whom he justifieth. Now men are said to be justified effectively by God, apprehensively by faith, declaratively by good works. The schoolmen are very unsound in this capital article of justification, and are therefore the less to be regarded. Nam quae de gratia Dei iustificante scholastici scribunt, commentitia universa existimo, saith Cardinal Pighius, who is therefore much condemned by Bellarmine, but without cause.

Ver. 30. And uncircumcision] All by one way, lest he should seem not to be one, but alius et alius.

Ver. 31. We establish the law] Which yet the Antinomians cry down, calling repentance a legal grace, humiliation a backdoor to heaven; grieving that they have grieved so much for their sins, &c., that they have prayed so often, and done other holy duties. Islebius Agricola (the first Antinomian that ever was) and his followers held these unsound opinions; That the law and works belong only to the court of Rome; that as soon as a man begins to think how to live godlily and modestly, he presently wandereth from the gospel; that a man was never truly mortified till he had put out all sense of conscience for sin; that if his conscience troubled him, that was his imperfection, he was not mortified enough; that St Peter understood not Christian liberty when he wrote those words, "Make your calling and election sure"; that good works were perniciosa ad salutatem, destructive to men's souls; with a deal of such trash. All which, this Islebius afterwards condemned and recanted in a public auditory, and printed his revocation. Yet when Luther was dead, he relapsed into the same error, and hath to this day among us too many disciples. We have need, therefore, to take St Paul's part, to establish the law, to settle it, now that it is falling (as the Greek word, ἰστωμεν, signifies), to make it valid, ἰκανωμεν (as some copies have it), sufficient and effectual to those ends for which it was given, viz. to discover transgression and to restrain it, #Ga 3:19; to humble men for sin, #Ro 3:19,20; to be a schoolmaster to Christ, and a rule of life, that, according to his royal law, #Jas 2:8, we may live royally above the rank of men, in obedience; while by the gospel, we obtain grace in some measure to fulfil the law; having a counterpart of it in our hearts, and a disposition answerable to it in all things, #Heb 8:8-10 cf. 2Co 3:2,3; as the lead answers to the mould, as tally answers tally, indenture indenture. That was a good saying of Luther's, Walk in the heaven of the promise, but in the earth of the law; that in respect of believing, this of obeying. Another of his sayings was, That in the justification of a sinner, Christ and faith were alone tanquam sponsus cum sponsa in thalamo, as the bridegroom and bride in the bed; howbeit it is such a faith as works by love. A third golden saying of his was, He that can rightly distinguish between law and gospel, let him praise God for his skill, and know himself to be a good divine.

Ver. 1. As pertaining to the flesh] That is, As touching his works, #Ro 4:2, called also the letter, #Ro 2:27, and the law a carnal commandment, #Heb 7:16.

Ver. 2. But not before God] Who when he begins to search our sacks, as the steward did Benjamin's, can find out those our thieveries that we thought not of; bring to mind and light those sins that we had forgotten, or not observed. When he comes to turn the bottom of the bag upwards it will be bitter with us. Abimelech's excuse was accepted, and yet his sin was chastised, #Ge 20:6. Vae hominum vitae quantumvis laudabili, si remora misericordia iudicetur. The best lamb should abide the slaughter, except the rams were sacrificed, that Isaac might be saved.

Ver. 3. Abraham believed God] Latomus of Louvain was not ashamed to write that there was no other faith in Abraham than what was in Cicero. And yet our Saviour saith, Abraham saw my day and rejoiced; so did Cicero never. Another wrote an apology for Cicero, and would needs prove him to have been a pious and penitent person, because in one place he hath these words, Reprehendo peccata mea, quod Pompeio confisus, eiusque partes secutus fuerim. A poor proof: Hoc argumentum tam facile diluitur, quam vulpes comest pyrum. (Joh. Manl.)

Ver. 4. Now to him that worketh] Yet it is an act of mercy in God to render to a man according to his works, #Ps 62:12 Ex 20:6. God's kingdom is not partum, but paratum, #Mt 25:34, not acquired, but prepared.

But of debt] Not so indeed, #Ro 11:31, but according to the opinion of the merit monger, who saith as Vega, Caelum gratis non accipiam. I may not receive heaven by grace.

Ver. 5. His faith] Yet not as a work, not in a proper sense, as Arminius and Bertius held, but as an act of receiving Christ.

That justifieth the ungodly] i.e. Him that was ungodly; but being justified is made godly also; or the ungodly, that is, him that is not perfectly godly; for Abraham is here made the ungodly person.

Ver. 6. Unto whom God imputeth] Ten times the apostle mentioneth this grace of imputed righteousness in this chapter. Yet the Papists jeer it, calling it putative righteousness, so speaking evil of the things they know not. Stories tell us of a Popish bishop that lighting by chance upon this chapter, threw away the book in great displeasure, and said, O Paule, an tu quoque Lutheranus factus es? Art thou also a Lutheran, Paul? But if the faith of another may be profitable to infants at their baptism, as Bellarmine holdeth, why should it seem so absurd a thing, that Christ's righteousness imputed should profit those that believe on him? The Jews indeed at this day being asked, Whether they believe to be saved by Christ's righteousness? They answer, That every fox must pay his own skin to the slayer. Thus they reject the righteousness of God, #Ro 10:3. As their fathers did, so do they, #Ac 7:51. The Lord open their eyes, that they may convert and be saved.

Ver. 7. Are covered] Sic velantur ut in iudicio non revelentur; so covered as that he never see them again, but as the Israelites saw the Egyptians dead on the shore.

Ver. 8. Imputeth not] Chargeth it not, setteth it not upon his score, #2Co 5:19.

Ver. 9. Cometh this blessedness] This is the third time that the apostle avoucheth the universality of the subject of justification. For this he had done once before, #Ro 3:23, and again, #Ro 3:29-31. The Scripture doth not use, saith one, to kill flies with beetles, to cleave straws with wedges of iron, to spend many words where there is no need.

Ver. 10. In, circumcision] As the Jew would have it. No such matter.

Ver. 11. A seal of the righteousness] Circumcision is called a sign and a seal by a doctor of the Jews more ancient than their Talmud Zohar, #Ge 17:9-14

That righteousness might be imputed] How foolish is that inference of Thammerus, that because the word here used to signify imputed comes of a word that signifies reason, therefore the righteousness of faith must be such as a man may understand and comprehend by reason (λογισθηναι, λογος).

Ver. 12. Walk in the steps] That herein personate and express him to the life, as Constantine's children, saith Eusebius, did their father.

Ver. 13. Heir of the world] That is, of heaven, say some; of Canaan, say others, the pleasant land, more esteemed of God than all the world besides, because it was the seat of the Church. A man is called every creature, #Mr 16:15; the Church is called all things, #Col 1:18. So Canaan is called the world, and Tabor and Hermon put for the east and west of the whole world, #Ps 89:12.

Ver. 14. Faith is made void] {See Trapp on "Ga 3:12"} {See Trapp on "Ga 5:2"} That Epistle to the Galatians is an epitome of this to the Romans, and lends light to it. It is compendium, sed non dispendium.

Ver. 15. No transgression] sc. Is imputed by men where there is no law written. See #Ro 5:13.

The law worketh wrath] That is, manifesteth it, and so seemeth to work it, as likewise affliction doth corruption in God's children; stir the puddle with a stick, and the mud will soon be on the top of the water. Rub the brand, and sparkles will fly abroad.

Ver. 16. It is of faith] Fidei mendica manu.

That it might be by grace] Paul was a great advancer of the grace of God, and abaser of man. For he knew that as wax and water cannot meet together, so neither can Christ and anything else in the work of man's salvation.

Ver. 17. Who quickeneth the dead] As he doth when he maketh a man a believer, #Eph 1:19; he fetcheth heart of oak out of a hollow tree, and a spiritual man out of a wild ass colt. See both these metaphors, #Job 11:12.

Ver. 18. Who against hope, &c.] Elegans Antanaclasis propter speciem contradictionis, saith Piscator. Spes in terrenis, incerti nomen boni; spes in divinis, nomen est certissimi, saith another.

Believed in hope] It is the nature of faith to believe God upon his bare word; and that against sense in things invisible, against reason in things incredible: sense corrects imagination, reason corrects sense, but faith corrects both. It will not be, saith sense; it cannot be, saith reason; it both can and will be, saith faith, for I have a promise for it.

Ver. 19. He considered not] Gr. ου κατενοησε, He cared not for all his own body, &c.; he never thought of that.

When he was about a hundred years old] This the Scripture makes a great matter; whereas Terah was a hundred and thirty when he begat Abraham; but because Abraham had his child by faith, therefore was it a great matter. And so, saith a divine, in all other things that we have, do, or suffer, if they be by faith, they are great things.

Ver. 20. Giving glory to God] Confessing and exalting God, as #Lu 17:18, giving him a testimonial, as it were, #Joh 3:33 cf. #De 32:4.

Ver. 21. Being fully persuaded] Gr. πληροφαρηθεις, being carried on with full sail, and going gallantly towards heaven.

Ver. 22. {See Trapp on "Ro 4:5"} {See Trapp on "Ro 4:6"} God, by reason of his faith, held him to be as sufficiently disposed to obtain the accomplishment of his promises, as if he had had all the righteousness required by the law to receive God's benefits. (Diodat.)

Ver. 23. For his sake alone] But for our instruction and encouragement, #Ro 15:4. {See Trapp on "Ro 15:4"}

Ver. 24. That raised up Jesus] And with him all believers, #Col 3:1 Ro 6:4.

Ver. 25. Who was delivered, &c.] Not that his death had no hand in our justifying, but because our justification, begun in his death, was perfected by his resurrection. Redemption we have by Christ's abasement, application of it by his advancement. This one verse is an abridgment of the whole gospel, the sum of all the good news in the world, the grand inquest of all the ancient prophets, #1Pe 1:11. Adore we the fulness of the Holy Scriptures.

Chapter 5

Ver. 1. Being justified by faith] As he had said, #Ro 4:24.

We have peace with God] A blessed calm lodged in our consciences; like as when Jonah was cast overboard, there followed a tranquillity. This is that continual feast, a very heaven beforehand, an anticipation of glory, ουρανος προ ουρανου.

Ver. 2. We have access] προσαγωγην, Christ leading us by the hand, and presenting us to the Father, with, "Behold, here am I, and the children whom thou hast given me." #Eph 2:18.

Wherein we stand] εστηκαμεν, not stirring a foot, for any temptation or perdition. A metaphor from soldiers keeping their station in the battle.

Ver. 3. We glory in tribulations] As an old soldier doth in his scars of honour. See #Ga 6:17 2Co 7:4. Feri, Domine, feri; nam a peccatis absolutus sum, saith Luther: Strike, Lord, and spare not, since I am acquitted by thee from my sins. Seca ambas, Cut of both, cried out that good bishop, when his hand was threatened to be cut off. A man that hath got his pardon is not troubled though he lose his glove or handkerchief, nor though it should prove a rainy day.

Ver. 4. And experience, hope] Without hope patience is cold almost in the fourth degree, and that is but a little from poison.

Ver. 5. Hope maketh not ashamed] As among men, many lie languishing at hope's hospital, as he did at the pool of Bethesda, #Joh 5:1-9, and return as they did from the brooks of Tema, #Job 6:17. Or, as men go to a lottery with heads full of hopes, but return with hearts full of blanks. The Dutch have a proverb to this purpose, Sperare et expectare, multos reddit stultos. And we say, He that hopes for dead men's shoes, may hap go barefoot. Bad men's hopes may hop headless, they may perish in the height of their expectancies. Not so those that hope in God; they shall yet praise him who is the help of their countenance, and their God, #Ps 43:5. Nunquam confusi, Deo confisi. Never perplexed, having trusted in God.

Ver. 6. Christ died for] A sufficient evidence of God's dearest and deepest love shed abroad in our hearts, as a most sweet ointment.

Ver. 7. Yet peradventure for a good man] For a public person. Lilloe stepped between the murderer and King Edwin his master to intercept the deadly thrust. (Speed's Chron.) A common soldier lost his life at Musselborough field to save the Earl of Huntly's life; so did Nicolas Ribische to rescue Prince Maurice at the siege of Pista.

Ver. 8. God commendeth, &c.] Herein God lays naked to us the tenderest heart of his fatherly compassions, as in an anatomy. A young student in history (saith Polybius) should have the whole history of the world under his view; and should reduce all into one body. {a} God, by giving his Son for us, showed us all his love at once, as it were embodied. All other spiritual blessings meet in this, as the lines in the centre, as the streams in the fountain. If the centurion were held worthy of respect because he loved our nation (said they) and built us a synagogue, what shall we say of Almighty God, who so loved our souls that he gave his only begotten Son, &c.

Christ died for us] "Behold how he loved him," said those Jews, when they saw Christ weep for him, #Joh 11:37. What shall we say of this love of his beyond compare, in bleeding for us? Ama amorem illius, &c. Oh love that love of his, and never leave meditating on it, donec totus fixus in corde, qui totus fixus in cruce, till he be wholly fixed in your hearts, who was wholly fastened to the tree for your sakes. (Bernard.)

{a} ὑπο μιαν συνουσιαν αγειν και σοματοροειν

Ver. 9. Much more then] It is a greater work of God to bring men to grace, than, being in the state of grace, to bring them to glory; because sin is far more distant from grace than grace is from glory.

Ver. 10. We shall be saved] Here the apostle reasoneth from regeneration to eternal life, as the lesser.

Ver. 11. Not only so] Not in tribulation only do we glory, {as #Ro 5:3} but in the whole course of our lives. Yet not without some damps and dumps, while here. While I live (saith Rollec) I never look to see perfect reformation in the Church, or feel perfect ravishing joys in mine heart. Here Christ comes to his Spouse as a wooer only, and gives her no more than the prelibations and foretastes of his love, as a bunch of the grapes of Canaan.

Ver. 12. As by one man] Yet Anabaptists deny original sin, as did also the Pelagians of old, confuted by Augustine. Egranus, a German preacher, said (as Melancthon reporteth) that original sin is a mere fiction of Augustine and other divines; and that, because there was no such word found in the Scriptures. (Joh. Manl.) Papists say that original sin is the smallest of all sins, not deserving any more of God's wrath, than only a want of his beatifical presence; and that, too, without any pain or sorrow of mind from the apprehension of so great a loss. There have been among us that have said, that original sin is not forbidden by the law. Directly, indeed, and immediately it is not; but forbidden it is, because cursed and condemned by the law. In original sin is a tacit consent (eminently) to all actual sin. And some understand this text of all sin, both original and actual.

And so death, passed upon all men] As a sentence of death on a condemned malefactor; or, as those diseases that are called by physicians corruptio totius substantiae; or as the rot overruneth the whole flock, διηλθεν.

Ver. 13. Sin is not imputed] In men's esteem, as #Ro 4:15.

Ver. 14. Death reigned] From the reign of death, he concludes the reign of sin. Infants are no innocents; the first sheet or blanket wherein they are covered is woven of sin, shame, blood, and filth, #Eze 16:4-6.

Ver. 15. Many be dead] Many is here put for all, as all for many, #1Ti 2:3.

Ver. 16. Of many offences] i.e. Of all, whether imputed to us, inherent in us, or issuing from us,

Ver. 17. Abundance] That is, abundant grace.

Ver. 18. By the offence of one] We were all in Adam, as the whole country in a parliamentman. And although we chose not, God chose for us.

Ver. 19. Many] That is, all except Christ, sinners, tainted with sins, guilt, and filth.

Ver. 20. But where sin abounded] But then where sin that abounded in the life, it abounds in the conscience in grief and detestation of it, as the greatest evil. Bonner objected to Mr Philpot, martyr, that he found written in his book, In me Ioanne Philpotto ubi abundavit peccatum, superabundavit et gratia. In me John Philpot, where sin abounds, even grace superabounds. This he said was an arrogant speech. Novum crimen, C. Caesar. Fresh sin, Gaius Caesar. (Acts and Mon.)

That the offence might abound] Either by accident, through man's corruption, and not of God's intention, #Ro 7:13. Or if it be taken causally, it must be interpreted by #Ga 3:19. God gave the law after the promise, to advance the promise. The law was added because of transgression, sc. that hereby guilt and danger being discovered, we might acknowledge the riches of free grace and mercy.

Ver. 21. That as sin hath reigned] That is, the wrath of God by sin.

Through righteousness] Imputed and imparted.

By Jesus Christ] See how sweetly the end answers the beginning of the chapter, and how Christ is both author and finisher, &c.

Chapter 6

Ver. 1. Shall we continue] Quasi dicat, that were most unreasonable, and to an ingenuous nature, impossible. To argue from mercy to liberty, is the devil's logic. Should we not after deliverance yield obedience? said holy Ezra, #Ezr 9:13,14. A man may as truly say, the sea burns, or fire cools, as that certainty of salvation breeds security and looseness.

Ver. 2. Live any longer therein] Fall into it we may and shall; but it is not the falling into the water that drowns, but lying in it; so it is not falling into sin that damns, but living in it.

Ver. 3. Baptized into his death] Hoc est baptizari pro mortuis, saith Beza, to be buried with Christ in baptism, #Col 2:12, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh, #Ro 6:11.

Ver. 4. We are buried] Burial is a continuing under death, so is mortification a continuation of dying to sin, Mors quaedam perpetuata; sin is by degrees abated, and at length abolished, when once our earthly tabernacles are dissolved.

Walk in newness of life] Resurrectione Domini configuratur vita, quae hic geritur. Walk as Christ walked after his resurrection.

Ver. 5. For if we have been planted] Burying is a kind of planting. The Dutch call the burial place God's Acre.

Ver. 6. The body of sin] For whole evil is in man, and whole man in evil.

Is crucified] Which is a lingering but a sure death.

Should not serve sin] As those do that commit it, #Joh 8:34; not only act it, but are acted by it, having as many lords as lusts, victors as vices. #Tit 3:3.

Ver. 7. Is freed from sin] Anacreon saith the like, ο θανων ουκ επιθυμει; death is the accomplishment of mortification. It doth at once what death doth by degrees. Herbs and flowers breed worms, which yet at last kill the herbs and flowers. So sin bred death, but at last death will kill sin. A mud wall, while it standeth, harboureth much vermin, which when it falleth fly away; so doth corruption, when once these cottages of clay fall to ruin.

Ver. 8. We shall also live] Then we are said properly to live, when our regeneration is perfected in heaven. To live here is but to lie a dying.

Ver. 9. Death hath no more, &c.] Christ, being the life essential, swallowed up death in victory, as the fire swalloweth up the fuel, and as Moses' serpent swallowed up the sorcerers' serpents.

Ver. 10. He died unto sin] That is, to abolish sin, as #Ro 8:2.

Ver. 11. Reckon ye also] By faith, reason and reckon yourselves wholly dead in and through Christ, who once died perfectly to sin, as a common person.

Ver. 12. Let not sin therefore] As if the apostle should say, we preach purity and not liberty, as the adversary suggesteth, #Ro 6:1 cf. 3:8. Let not sin reign; rebel it will; but do not actively obey and embrace the commands of sin, as subjects to your king. Let sin be dejected from its regency, though not utterly ejected from its residency. Give it such a deadly wound that it may be sure to die within a year and a day. Sprunt it may, and flutter as a bird when the neck is broken, but live it must not.

Ver. 13. Unto sin] As Satan's general, who hath his trenches, #2Co 10:4; his commanders, as here, and his fighting soldiers, #1Pe 2:11; his weapons, as here.

Ver. 14. Sin shall not have dominion] Rebel it may, but reign it shall not in any saint. It fareth with sin in the regenerate, as with those beasts, #Da 7:12; they had their dominion taken away, yet their lives were prolonged for a season and a time.

Ye are not under the law] i.e. Under the rigour, irritation, curse of the law, Quatenus est virtus peccati. Or, "ye are not under the law," sc. of sin, as #Ro 7:23,25.

Ver. 15. Shall we sin, because, &c.] Some Antinomian libertines would persuade men that God is never displeased with his people, though they fall into adultery, or the like sin, no, not with a fatherly displeasure; that God never chastiseth his people for any sin, no, not with a fatherly chastisement; that God seeth no sin in his elect; that the very being of their sin is abolished out of God's sight; that they cannot sin, or if they do, it is not they, but "sin that dwelleth in them," &c. What is this but to "turn the grace of God into wantonness," which there hence becometh the savour of death to death unto them; like as Moses' rod, cast on the ground, turned to a serpent; or as dead men's bodies, when the marrow melteth, do bring forth serpents? Corruptio optimi pessima.

Ver. 16. His servants ye are] Sinners, though not drunk, yet are not their own men, but at Satan's beck and check, whom they seem to defy, but indeed deify.

Ver. 17. That form of doctrine] Gr. "That type or mould"; the doctrine is the mould, hearers the metal, which takes impression from it in one part as well as another. And as the metal hath been sufficiently in the furnace, when it is not only purged from the dross, but willingly receiveth the form and figure of that which it is cast and poured into, so here.

Ver. 18. Versus est planus, saith Pareus.

Ver. 19. After the manner of men] That is commonly, Crassius et rudius loquor, by a similitude drawn from human affairs of easy and ordinary observation.

To uncleanness, and to iniquity] Mark the opposition, there are three tos in the expression of the service to sin; but in the service of God only two. Wicked men take great pains for hell; would they but take the same for heaven, they could not likely miss it.

Ver. 20. Free from righteousness] That is, utterly void of grace, and did therefore sin lustily and horribly, earnestly opposing with crest and breast whatsoever stood in the way of their sins and lusts.

Ver. 21. Whereof ye are ashamed] Where sin is in the saddle, shame is on the crupper. Men would have the sweet, but not the shame of sin; and the credit of religion, but not go to the cost of it.

Ver. 22. Become servants to God] Phrasis vulgatissima est, Deum colere. Non secus atque agri fertiles inprimis et optimi, sic Dei cultus, fructus fert ad vitam aeternam uberrimos.

Ye have your fruit unto holiness] Every good work increaseth our holiness, and so hability for obedience.

Ver. 23. For the wages of sin] The best largesse or congiary (οψωνιον) that sin gives to his soldiers is death of all sorts. This is the just hire of the least sin. <sup>{a}</sup> The Jesuits would persuade us, that some sins against which the law thundereth and lighteneth, are so light in their own nature, Ut factores nec sordidos, nec malos, nec impios, nec Deo exosos reddere possint. (Chemnit. de Theol. Jesuitar.) But as there is the same roundness in a little ball as in a great one; so the same disobedience in a small sin as in a greater. Indeed there is no sin little, because no little God to sin against. Every sin hales hell at the very heels of it.

{a} αμαρτια ψυχη θανατου, και θανατος ψυχης Nazianzen

Chapter 7

Ver. 1. Know ye not, brethren] Bellarmine saith of his Romans (more true perhaps of these), Romani sicut non acumina, ita nec imposturas habent. As they are not very knowing, so not cunning to deceive.

Ver. 2. She is loosed, &c.] And so at liberty to marry again, though Jerome compare such to the unclean beasts in the ark, and to vessels of dishonour in a house, yea, to dogs that return to their vomit; which was his error. Patres legendi cum venia, saith one.

Ver. 3. So then if] The sects then are out that say today, that if they have husbands and wives that will not turn saints, that is, sects, they may leave them, and marry others.

Ver. 4. That we should bring forth fruit] The ministry of the word, saith one, is the bridal bed; wherein God by his Spirit doth communicate with our souls his sweetest favours, and maketh them be conceived with the fruits of righteousness to everlasting life.

Ver. 5. In the flesh] In our pure naturals.

The motions of sin] Those maladies of the soul (παθηματα).

By the law] By the irritation of the law.

Did work] Gr. did inwardly work (ενηργειτο).

Ver. 6. Not in the oldness of the letter] That is, not in that old kind of life that we lived under subjection to the law, to the irritation, co-action, and curse of it.

Ver. 7. I had not known lust] Involuntary evil motions. The apostle calleth concupiscence sin, saith Possevine the Jesuit, but we may not say so. Most of the most dangerous opinions of Popery spring from hence, that they have slight conceits of concupiscence, as a condition of nature. But inward bleeding will kill a man, so will concupiscence, if not bewailed. The Council of Trent saith, that it is not truly and properly a sin, albeit it be so called, because it proceeds from sin, and inclines a man to sin. Neither want there among us that say, that original sin is not forbidden by the law; directly indeed, and immediately, it is not; but forbidden it is, because cursed and condemned by the law.

I had not known sin] The law of nature discovers not original sin with its evil lusts. True it is that a philosopher could say (Timon apud Laertium), παντων μεν πρωτιστα κακων επιθυμια εστιν,

Concupiscence is the root of all evil; but whether he understood what himself said, I greatly question. Erras, si tecum vitia nasci putas, saith Seneca; supervenerunt, ingesta sunt: Thou mistakest if thou thinkest that thy vices were born with thee, they came in since, they were brought into thee. Tam sine vitio quam sine virtute nascimur; saith another; We were born as well without vice as without virtue. Quintilian saith it is more marvel that one man sinneth, than that all men should live honestly; sin is so against the nature of man.

Thou shalt not covet] The word concupisco is inceptive: to show (saith one) that the very first motion is sin, though no consent be yielded.

Ver. 8. By the commandment] Not commandments. Papists abolishing, or at least destroying, the sense of the second commandment, by making it a member of the first, that they may retain the number of ten words (so loth are heretics to have their asses' ears seen) they divide this last; which yet Paul here calls the commandment; and sure he knew better than they the analysis of the law.

Wrought in me all manner of concupiscence] The more the law would dam up the torrent of sinful lusts, the higher did they swell. (Nitimur in vetitum.) Corruption doth increase and begin by the law. The more God forbids sin, the more we bid for it: as if we did sin on purpose to provoke God; as if God had need deal with us as he did in the story, who was wont to command the contrary when he would have anything done, because he knew they would cross him. Howbeit, although sin thus take occasion by the law, yet this is per accidens, as in the dropsy, it is not the drink that is to be blamed for increasing the disease, but the ill distemper of the body.

Ver. 9. For I was alive] As being without sense of sin, and conscience of duty.

Sin revived] sc. In sense and appearance.

And I died] sc. In pride and self-justice.

Ver. 10. Ordained to life] By life and death understand peace and perturbation.

Ver. 11. Deceived me] Irritated my corrupt nature, and made me sin the more, per accidens, as Pharaoh was the worse for a message of dismissal.

Ver. 12. The commandment] Vis legis in mandando et praecipiendo. The word (εντολη) properly signifieth an affirmative precept.

Ver. 13. Exceeding sinful] Sin is so evil that it cannot have a worse epithet given it. Paul can call it no worse than by its own name, "sinful sin."

Ver. 14. Sold under sin] But yet ill paid of my slavery, and lusting after liberty.

Ver. 15. I allow not] Gr. ου γνωσκω, I know not, as being preoccupied, #Ga 6:1, wherried and whirled away by sin before I am aware or have time to consider.

Ver. 16. I consent unto the law] I vote with it, and for it, as the rule of right; I wish also well to the observance of it, as David did, #Ps 119:45.

Ver. 17. It is no more I] Mr Bradford, martyr, in a certain letter thus comforteth his friend: At this present, my dear heart in the Lord, you are in a blessed estate, although it seem otherwise to you, or rather to your old Adam; the which I dare now be bold to discern from you, because you would have it not only discerned, but also utterly destroyed. God (saith another reverend man) puts a difference between us and sin in us, as between poison and the box that holds it.

Sin that dwelleth in me] An ill inmate that will not leave, till the house falleth on the head of it; as the fretting leprosy in the walls of a house would not leave till the house itself were demolished. Sin, as Hagar, will dwell with grace, as Sarah, till death beat it out of doors.

Ver. 18. Dwelleth no good thing] Horreo quicquid de meo est, ut sim meus, saith Bernard. It was no ill wish of him that desired God to free him from an ill man, himself, {a} For, though ingrafted into Christ, yet we carry about us a relish of the old stock still. Corruption is, though dejected from its regency, yet not ejected from its inherency; it intermingleth with our best works.

How to perform] Gr. κατεργαζεσθαι, to do it thoroughly; though I am doing at it, as I can.

{a} Domine, libera me a malo homine, meipso.

Ver. 19. For the good, &c.] Nature, like Eve and Job's wife, is always drawing us from God. As the ferryman plies the oar, and eyes the shore homeward, where he would be, yet there comes a gust of wind that carries him back again; so it is with a Christian.

Corruption, egged with a temptation, gets as it were the hill, and the wind, and, upon such advantages, too often prevaieth.

Ver. 20. It is no more I] Every new man is two men. {See Trapp on "Ro 7:17"}

But sin that dwelleth in me] A scripture ill applied by that female Antinomian; who when her mistress charged her for stealing her linens and other things which she found in her chest or trunk, she denied that she stole them; and when she was asked how they came to be laid and locked up there? Did not you do this? No, said she, "it was not I, but sin that dwelleth in me." {See Trapp on "Ro 6:15"} {See Trapp on "Ro 7:17"}

Ver. 21. When I would do good] Something lay at the fountain head, as it were, and stopped him when he would do his duty. But God valueth a man by his desires. {a} There often cometh a prohibition from Chancery to stay proceedings at common law, so here; when we would pray, meditate, confer, &c., we are hindered and interrupted. But God considereth it; and as the service of a sick child is doubly accepted, so here.

Evil is present] We can stay no more from sinning than the heart can from punting and the pulse from beating. Our lives are fuller of sins than the firmament of stars or the furnace of sparks. Erasmus was utterly out, that said with Origen, Paulum hoc sermone balbutire; quam ipse potius ineptiat, saith learned Beza. So Joannes Sylvius Aegranus, a learned but a profane person, reprehended Paul for want of learning, and said, Quod usus sit declamatoriis verbis, non congruentibus ad rem, &c. Nominabat sophisms, quod diceremus homines non posse implere legem. (Joh. Manl.)

{a} Tota vita boni Christiani sanctum desiderium est. Aug.

Ver. 22. I delight] Germanicus reigned in the Romans' hearts, but Tiberius in the provinces. So here.

Ver. 23. A law in my members] Called the deeds of the body, #Ro 8:13, because corruption acteth and uttereth itself by the members of the body. {a} The πανσπερμια (vox Empedoclea) is within, but easily and often budgeth and breaketh out.

Warring against the law] The regenerate part. Plato in Cratylo pulchre ait; Ut mentem appellamus νοον, ita legem dicimus νομον, quasi μενοντα νοον, alioqui mens hominum vagatur.

And bringing me into captivity] The sins of the saints (those of daily incursion) are either of precipitancy, as #Ga 6:1, or of infirmity; when a man wrestles, and hath some time to fight it out, but for want of breath and strength, falls, and is in some captivity to the law of sin; this is the worse.

Ver. 24. O wretched man] We must discontentedly be contented to be exercised with sin while we are here. It is so bred in the bone, that till our bones, as Joseph's, be carried out of the Egypt of this world, it will not leave. The Romans so conquered Chosroes the Persian, that he made a law, that never any king of Persia should make war against the Romans. (Evagrius.) But let us do what we can to subdue sin, it will be a Jebusite, a false borderer, yea, a rank traitor, rebelling against the Spirit. Only this we may take for a comfortable sign of future victory, when we are discontent with our present ill estate, grace will get the upper hand; as nature doth, when the humours are disturbed, and after many fit. And as till then there is no rest to the body, so neither is there to the soul. The conflict between flesh and spirit is as when two opposite things meet together (cold saltpetre and hot brimstone), they make a great noise. So doth Paul here, Miserable me, &c. Basil fitly compareth him to a man thrown off his horse, and dragged after him crying out for help. Another, to one that is troubled with a disease called the mare, or Ephialtes; which (in his slumber) maketh him think that he feels a thing as big as a mountain lying on his breast, which he can no way remove, but would fain be rid of.

Who shall deliver me] Nothing cleaves more pertinaciously, or is more inexpugnable, than a strong lust.

From this body of death] Or, this dead body, by a Hebraism, this carcase of sin to which I am tied and long held, as noisome every whit to my soul as a dead body to my senses; and as burdensome as a withered arm or mortified limb, which hangs on a man as a lump of lead. Some remnants of sin God hath left in us, to clear to us his justifying grace by Christ's righteousness. This the apostle falls admiring, #Ro 8:1 "Now then there is no condemnation," &c.; as I might well have expected, being carried captive to the law of sin. Herein also Christ deals as some conquerors, who had taken their enemies prisoners, but yet killed them not immediately, till the day of triumph came. This will keep the saints nothing in their own eyes, even when they are filled brimfull with grace and glory in another world.

Ver. 25. I thank God, &c.] The Grecians being delivered but from bodily servitude by Flaminius the Roman general, called him their saviour; and so rang out, Saviour, saviour, that the fowls in the air fell down dead with the cry. How much greater cause have we to magnify the grace of Christ, &c.

So then, with the mind, &c.] The stars by their proper motion are carried from the west to the east; and yet by the motion of obedience unto the first mover, they pass along from the east unto the west. The waters by their natural course follow the centre of the earth, yet yielding to the moon, they are subject to her motions; so are saints to God's holy will, though corrupt nature repine and resist. Grace is the prince in the regenerate soul. The will may sometimes be drawn away from the king and fly to the enemy, as David fled to Achish for fear; yet when he went abroad to fight, he killed the Philistines in the south country, and he carried still a loyal heart to his king; so in this case. A ravished woman vexari potest, violari non potest, may be vexed, but not violated. We read of one that (when she could not otherwise help herself) thrust her shears into the belly of an unclean bishop that would have forced her.

Chapter 8

Ver. 1. There is therefore now] Now, after such bloody wounds and gashes, chronicled #Ro 7. Though carried captive, and sold under sin, yet not condemned, as might well have been expected. This the apostle doth here worthily admire.

No condemnation] Non una condemnatio; ουδεν κατακριμα, not one condemnation. There is none in heaven, God doth not condemn them: none on earth, their own heart and conscience doth not condemn them: no word, no commandment, no threatening. An unbeliever shall have a double condemnation; one from the law which he hath transgressed, and another from the gospel, which he hath despised: as a malefactor, that being condemned and dead in law, rejecteth his prince's pardon. But it is otherwise with those that are in Christ Jesus. The law cannot condemn them, because they have appealed: the gospel cannot, because they have believed. God will "cast out condemnation for ever," as one renders that place, #Mt 12:10, εως αν εκβαλη εις νικος την κρισιν. (Lud. de Dieu.)

Ver. 2. For the law of the Spirit] That is, Christ revived and risen hath justified me. {See Trapp on "Ro 4:25"}

Ver. 3. It was weak through the flesh] Which was irritated by the law, and took occasion thereby.

In the likeness of sinful flesh] Christ condescended to our rags, sordes nostras induit, took our passions and infirmities natural, but not sinful. He was in all things like unto us, but in sin: as the brazen serpent was like the fiery serpents, but only it had no sting.

Ver. 4. Might be fulfilled] In us applicative, in Christ inhaesive.

Ver. 5. Do mind the things] For want of a better principle. The stream riseth not above the spring.

Ver. 6. To be carnally] The quintessence of the flesh's wittiness, or rather wickedness, φρονημα.

Ver. 7. Because the carnal mind] The best of a bad man is not only averse, but utterly adverse to all goodness. Homo est inversus decalogus, #Job 11:12, an ass's foal for rudeness, a wild ass's for unruliness.

Neither indeed can be] Spiritual arguments to a carnal heart are but warm clothes to a dead man. He hath brought a miserable necessity of sinning upon himself: his soul and all the powers thereof being but the shop of sin; his body and all the parts thereof tools of sin; his life and all his actions of both soul and body a trade of sin.

Ver. 8. Cannot please God] Their best works are but dead works, saith the author to the Hebrews; but silken sins, saith Augustine. Lombard citeth that Father, saying thus, Omnis vita infidelium peccatum est: et nihil bonum sine summe bone. The whole life of unbelievers is sin: neither is there anything good without the chiefest good. Ambrose Spiera, a Popish postiller, censureth this for a bloody sentence, Crudelis est illa sententia, Harsh is that opinion, saith he.

Ver. 9. He is none of his] As the merchant sets his seal upon his goods, so doth God his Spirit upon all his people, #Eph 1:13.

Ver. 10. The body is dead] Death to the saints is neither total, but of the body only, nor perpetual, but for a season only, #Ro 8:11.

Ver. 11. Your mortal bodies] As he hath already quickened your souls.

Ver. 12. Not to the flesh] We owe the flesh nothing but stripes, nothing but the blue eye that St Paul gave it. It must be mastered and mortified. Drive this Hagar out of doors, when once it grows haughty.

Ver. 13. If we live after the flesh] We must not think to pass E coeno ad Caelum, from the mire to heaven, to dance with the devil all day, and sup with Christ at night, to fly to heaven with pleasant wings. Beetles love dunghills better than ointments; and swine love mud better than a garden; so do swinish people their lusts, better than the lives of their souls. At Paris ut vivat regnetque beatus, Cogi posse negat. (Horat.) That carnal cardinal said, that he would not part with his part in Paris for Paradise.

But if ye mortify the deeds, &c.] Either a man must kill here, or be killed, Aut fer, aut feri, as Queen Elizabeth often sighed and said to herself concerning the Queen of Scots. Valentinian the emperor dying, gloried about one victory above the rest, and that was his victory over the flesh. Inimicorum nequissimum devici, carnem meam, said he. Be always an enemy to the devil and the world, but specially to your own flesh, said Robert Smith, martyr, in a letter to his wife. Surely, as the Prince of Orange said to his soldiers at the battle of Newport when they had the sea on the one side and the Spaniards on the other; If, saith he, you will live, you must either eat up these Spaniards, or drink up this sea; so must men either eat up their fleshly lusts, or drink of the burning lake: Fire and brimstone shall be else the portion of their cup, #Ps 11:6.

Ver. 14. For as many as are led] As great men suffer their sons to go along with them, but set tutors to overlook and order them; so dealeth God by his; the Spirit leadeth them into all goodness, righteousness, and truth, #Eph 5:9, and fetcheth them again in their wanderings.

Ver. 15. The spirit of bondage] Δουλειας, as #2Ti 1:7, Δειλειας. The law will convince the judgment; but it is the gospel that convinceth the lust and the affection, and so sendeth us to treat with God as a Father, by fervent prayer. The Spirit is here called a "spirit of bondage"; because by the law he enlighteneth a man to see his bondage and slavery to sin and Satan, and his subjection to God's wrath and vengeance.

Ver. 16. Beareth witness] What an honour is this to the saints, that the Holy Ghost should bear witness at the bar of their consciences.

Ver. 17. And if sons, then heirs] All God's sons are heirs; not so the sons of earthly princes. Jehoshaphat gave his younger sons great gifts of silver, of gold, and of precious things, with fenced cities in Judah; but the kingdom gave he to Jehoram, because he was the firstborn, #2Ch 21:3. God's children are all higher than the kings of the earth, #Ps 89:27.

Ver. 18. Are not worthy to be, &c.] Heaven will pay for all; hold out therefore, faith and patience. When Saul had the kingdom, some despised him, but he held his peace, though a man afterwards froward enough. What is a drop of vinegar put into an ocean of wine? What is it for one to have a rainy day, who is going to take possession of a kingdom? Pericula non respicit martyr, coronas respicit, saith Basil A Dutch martyr feeling the flame to come to his beard, Ah, said he, what a small pain is this to be compared to the glory to come! Luther said he would not take all the world for one leaf of the Bible. What then would he take for the glory that it revealeth? St Paul useth a word here that signifieth (upon a good account justly cast up, and the matter well weighed) to conclude, resolve, and determine, as #Ro 3:28 6:11, λογιζομαι. The globe of the earth is, as mathematicians compute, 21,000 miles in compass, and above: yet compared to the greatness of the starry sky, it is but as a centre or little prick to the circle, to which it beareth no proportion; much less do our afflictions to heaven's happiness.

Ver. 19. For the earnest expectation] Gr. "The intent expectation of the creature expecteth": a Hebrew pleonasm, {a} and also a metaphor either from birds that thrust a long neck out of a cage, as labouring for liberty; or else from those that earnestly look and long for some special friends coming, as Sisera's mother, who looked out at a window, and cried through the lattice, "Why is his chariot so long in coming?" #Jud 5:28.

Ver. 20. Subject to vanity] The creature is defiled by man's sin, and must therefore be purged by the fire of the last day; as the vessels that held the sin offering were purged by the fire of the sanctuary.

Ver. 21. Because the creature itself] See Mr Wilcox's discourse upon these words, printed, together with his Exposition of the Psalms, Proverbs, &c., in folio. The creature is said to be subject to vanity and bondage of corruption, 1. As corruptible. 2. As teachers of men, and they will not learn; so that they lose their labour. 3. As they are instruments of man's punishment. 4. As they are forced to serve wicked men's turns and uses, who have no peace with the creature, and should have no service from them.

Ver. 22. The whole creation groaneth] Even the very heavens are not without their feebleness and the manifest effects of fainting old age. It is observed that since the days of Ptolemy, the sun runs nearer the earth by 9976 German miles, and therefore the heavens have not kept their first perfection.

And travaileth] How Mr Bradshaw pitied the poor beast he rode on, and said, that men take too much liberty in killing and misusing some contemptible creatures, see in his Life by Mr. Clark, p. 130.

Ver. 23. The firstfruits] Which the creatures have not, and yet they groan: how much more we!

The redemption] Our full and final deliverance.

Ver. 24. For we are saved by hope] Hope is the daughter of faith, but such as is a staff to her aged mother.

Ver. 25. Then do we with patience] Religious men find it more easy to bear evil than to wait till the promised good be enjoyed, #Heb 10:36. The spoiling of their goods required patience; but this more than ordinary.

Ver. 26. Helpeth our infirmities] Lifts with us and before us in our prayers. Or helpeth us as the nurse helpeth her little child, upholding it by the sleeve. (συναντιλαμβανεται. Beza.)

For we know not what, &c.] The flesh with her murmurings maketh such a din that we can hardly hear the voice of the Spirit, mixing with the flesh's roarings and repinings, his praying, sighs, and sobbings.

But the Spirit itself] Prayer is the breath of the Spirit, who doth super expostulate for us, υπερευθυγγανει, inditing our prayers. We cannot so much as suspirare, a sigh unless he do first inspirare, breathe out a sigh for sin, if he breathe it not into us.

With groanings that cannot be uttered] He that would have unspeakable joy, #1Pe 1:8, must by the Spirit stir up unutterable groanings.

Ver. 27. Knoweth the mind, &c.] Quomodo enim non exauditur spiritus a patre, qui exaudit cum patre? (Augustine.)

Ver. 28. All things work together] Not affliction only (as some would here restrain it), but sin, Satan, all. Venenum aliquando pro remedio fuit, saith Seneca. Medici pedes et alas cantharidis, cum sit ipsa mortifera, prodesse dicunt. The drinking of that wine wherein a viper hath, been drowned cureth the leprosy. The scorpion healeth his own wounds, and the viper (the head and tail being cut off), beaten and applied, cureth her own biting. God changeth our grisly wounds into spangles of beauty, and maketh the horrible sting of Satan to be like a pearl pin, to pin upon us the long white robe of Christ, and to dress us with the garment of gladness.

Ver. 29. Conformed to the image] In holiness, say some; in glory, say others; in affliction, is the apostle's meaning. Art not thou glad to fare as Phocion? said he to one that was to die with him. (Plut. in Apophtheg.) May not Christ better say so to his co-sufferers?

Ver. 30. Them also he called, &c.] If ye feel not faith (said that holy martyr), then know that predestination is too high a matter for you to be disputers of, until you have been better scholars in the school house of repentance and justification, which is the grammar school wherein we must be conversant and learned, before we go to the university of God's most holy predestination and providence.

Them he also justified] Vocation precedeth justification. Deus iustificat fide iam donatos, sicut damnat prius indurates. (Cameron.)

Them he also glorified] That is, he keepeth them glorious by his glorious Spirit, even in this life, from impenitent sin, and maketh them stable and constant in godliness.

Ver. 31. What shall we say then?] q.d. Predestination, vocation, justification, glorification? What things be these? We cannot tell what to say to these things, so much we are amazed at the greatness of God's love in them. A brave conclusion of the whole disputation concerning justification by faith alone.

If God be for us, &c.] Maximilian the emperor so admired this sentence, that he caused it to be set in chequer work upon a table, at which he used to dine and sup, that having it so often in his eye, he might always have it in mind also.

Ver. 32. He that spared not] Qui misit unigenitum, immisit spiritum, promisit vultum, quid tandem tibi negaturus est? saith Bernard. Nihil unquam ei negasse credendum est, quem ad vituli hortatur esum, saith Jerome.

Ver. 33. Who shall lay anything] This is that confident interrogatory of a good conscience, επερωτημα, #1Pe 3:21.

It is God that justifieth] Some read it questionwise thus, Shall God that justifieth? No such matter. And if the judge acquit a prisoner, he cares not though the jailor or fellow prisoners condemn him; so here.

Ver. 34. Who is he that condemneth?] To the sentence of death he opposeth Christ's death.

Who is even at the right hand] And as Christ is at the right hand of his Father, so is the Church at the right hand of Christ, #Ps 45:9, a place of dignity and safety.

Ver. 35. Who shall separate us] Who shall separate me? saith the Syriac.

Ver. 36. We are killed all the day] In Diocletian's days 17,000 Christians are said to have been slain in one month. In the Parisian massacre 30,000 in as little time, and within the year 300,000.

As sheep to the slaughter] That lamentable story of the Christians of Calabria that suffered persecution, A. D. 1560, comes home to this text. For being all thrust up in one house together, as in a sheepfold, the executioner comes in, and among them takes one, and blindfolds him with a muffler about his eyes, and so leadeth him forth to a larger place, where he commandeth him to kneel down. Which being done, he cutteth his throat, and so leaveth him half dead; and taking his butcher's knife and muffler all of gore blood, he cometh again to the rest, and so leading them one after another, he despatcheth them, to the number of 88, no otherwise than doth a butcher kill his calves and sheep.

Ver. 37. We are more than conquerors] What is that? Triumphers, #2Co 2:14. We do overcome; because through faith in Christ we overcome before we fight, and are secure of victory. {a} And again, "we are more than conquerors," because we gather strength by our opposition (as that giant that fought with Hercules is fabled to do, by his falling to the earth), we conquer in being conquered. The tormentors were tired in torturing Blandina: and, We are ashamed, O emperor; the Christians laugh at your cruelty and grow the more resolute, said one of Julian's nobles to him.

Ver. 38. For I am persuaded] Or, I am sure by what I have heard out of God's word. {a} He that hath this full assurance of faith goes gallantly to heaven. What (saith the world) should a rich man all? The Irish ask such, What they mean to die? But I wonder more at such as have the riches of full assurance, yea, that have but the assurance of adherence, though not of evidence, what they mean to walk heavily. Mr Latimer says that the assurance of heaven is the desert of the feast of a good conscience. There are other dainty dishes in this feast, but this is the banquet.

Ver. 39. For the love of God] viz. Wherewith he loved us. For he loveth his own to the end, and in the end, #Joh 13:1. See the note there. The wife of Camerarius heard Sarcerius interpreting this text and #Ro 8:35 thus, and was much comforted after a sore conflict. (Joh. Manlii, loc. com.)

Chapter 9

Ver. 1. I say the truth, &c.] As any one is more assured of his own salvation, the more he desireth the salvation of others. Charity is no churl; as we see here in Paul.

Ver. 2. Continual sorrow] Such as a woman in travail hath, οδυνη. So #Ga 4:19.

Ver. 3. Were accursed] Devoted to destruction, αναθεμα, as those malefactors among the heathens were, that in time of common calamity were sacrificed to their infernal gods, for pacifying their displeasure, that the plague might cease. Out of greatest zeal to God and love to his countrymen, the apostle wisheth himself anathema, that is, not to be separated from the Spirit and grace of Christ (for so he should have sinned), but from the comforts of Christ, the happiness that comes in by Christ, as one well interpreteth it. Charitas exuberans optat etiam impossibilia, saith Luther; his overabounding charity wishes impossibilities; but his wish was voluntas conditionata, saith one. His love to the Church was like the ivy, which if it cleave to a stone or an old wall, will rather die than forsake it. Somewhat like to this holy wish was that of Ambrose, that the fire of contentions kindled in the Churches might (if it were the will of God) be quenched with his blood. And that of Nazianzen, that (Jonah-like) he might be cast into the sea, so by it all might be calm in the public.

Ver. 4. The adoption] For Israel was God's firstborn, and so "higher than the kings of the earth," #Ps 89:27.

And the glory] The ark of the covenant, #1Sa 4:21, whence Judea is called "the glorious land," #Da 11:41. As for the ark, it is elsewhere called God's face, #Ps 105:4. Yea, God himself, #Ps 132:5.

The covenants] The moral law in two tables.

The giving of the law] The judicial law.

The service] The ceremonial law.

The promises] Of the gospel made to Abraham, and his seed for ever. These promises are a precious book, every leaf whereof drops myrrh and mercy.

Ver. 5. Of whom is Christ] This is as great an honour to all mankind (how much more to the Jews!) as if the king should marry into some poor family of his subjects.

Ver. 6. Not as though the word] That word of promise, #Ro 9:4, which is sure hold, "Yea and Amen."

For they are not all Israel] Multi sacerdotes, et pauci sacerdotes, Many priests and few priests, saith Chrysostom, multi in nomine, et pauci in opere, many in name and few in work. So here.

Ver. 7. Neither because they are] This profiteth them no more than it did Dives that Abraham called him son.

Ver. 8. The children of the promise] Abraham by believing God's promise, begat, after a sort, all believers, yea, Christ himself, the head of his seed, his Son according to the flesh, but more according to the faith.

Ver. 9. At this time] {See Trapp on "Ge 18:10"}

Ver. 10. But when Rebecca] She, and not Isaac, is named, because she received the oracle, whether from the mouth of Melchisedec or some other way, I have not to determine.

Ver. 11. For the children, &c.] Here the apostle wadeth into that profundum sine fundo, bottomless subject, predestination.

Being not yet born] Sapore's son of Misdates, king of Persia, began his reign before his life. For his father dying, left his mother with child, and the Persian nobility set the crown on his mother's belly, acknowledging thereby her issue for their prince, before she as yet had felt herself quick. God elects not of foreseen faith or works, but of free grace.

Ver. 12. Shall serve] Servitude came in with a curse, and figureth reprobation, #Ge 9:25 Joh 8:34,35 Ga 4:30.

Ver. 13. Esau have I hated] i.e. I have not loved him, but passed him by; and this preterition is properly opposed to election.

As it is written] Malachi is alleged to explain Moses. It was rightly observed by Pareus (in the close of his Comment upon Genesis) that all the following Scriptures are but expositions of that first book. {a}

{a} Quicquid dehinc scripturarum est, huius est commentarius.

Ver. 14. Is there] Carnal reason dares reprehend what it does not comprehend. (Para.)

Ver. 15. I will have mercy, &c.] Dei voluntas est ratio rationum, nec tantum recta, sed regula. The will of God is the rule of his plan, neither only right but his rule.

Ver. 16. So then it is not, &c.] Nec volentis, nec volantis (as a nobleman gave it for his motto), though a man could run as fast as a bird can fly.

Ver. 17. Raised thee up] For a vessel of wrath, and an instance of my justice.

Ver. 18. Therefore] God being a free agent, cannot be unjust; he is bound to none.

Whom he will, he hardeneth] There is a threefold hardness of the heart: 1. Natural and hereditary, whereby all men are by nature not only averse from, but also adverse to, the motions of grace; this is called a neck possessed with an iron sinew, #Isa 48:4 2. Actual, adventitious, voluntary; which is, when, by often choking good motions, a man hath quit his heart of them; being arrived at that dead and dedolent disposition, #Eph 4:18, past feeling, and ripe for destruction. This is called a brow of brass in the above named text, #Isa 48:4 3. Judiciary, penal hardness; happens when God, for a punishment of the former, withholds his graces, and delivers a man up to Satan to be further hardened, and to his own heart's lusts, which is worse. The incestuous person was delivered up to Satan, and yet repented; but he that is delivered up to his own heart, to a reprobate mind, cannot be renewed by repentance; but is in the ready road to that unpardonable sin. And this last is here meant.

Ver. 19. Why doth he yet find fault] Queritur; Complain, saith the Vulgate; which interpretation deceived Aquinas, as if it had been written Quaeritur. Be sought for. #Lu 15:8. Gregory the Great and others, for Everrit, swept away, read Evertit; destroyed, which mistake produced many groundless glosses.

Ver. 20. That repliest against God] Gr. Ανταποκρινομενος, chattest and worstest it with him?

Ver. 21. Of the same lump] The apostle alludeth to man's creation, and therehence ascendeth to God's eternal decree of predestination.

Ver. 22. Fitted to destruction] Non dicit Deum eos aptasse ad interitum, ne videretur dicere Deum eis indidisse peccatum, quo ad exitum praepararentur. (Molinaeus.)

Ver. 23. And that he might] He rejected some, that his mercy might the more appear in the election of others.

The riches of his glory] That is, of his mercy wherein he principally glorieth, and for the which he is most of all glorified.

Ver. 24. Even us] Not me Paul only hath he assured of vocation, and so consequently of election to eternal life.

Ver. 25. And her beloved] #Jer 12:7. God calls the Church the beloved of his soul, or (as the Septuagint and Vulgate read it) his beloved soul, την ψυχην την ηγαπημενην.

Ver. 26. The children, &c.] This is such a royalty, #Joh 1:12, as the apostle worthily wondereth at, and sets an Ecce Behold, upon it.

Ver. 27. A remnant] Reserved for royal use. Diaconos paucitas honorabiles fecit saith Jerome. Sic et sanctos, say I

Ver. 28. A short work] When once he sets to work to cut off hypocrites.

Ver. 29. Except the Lord of Sabaoth] That is, of hosts. God is commander-in-chief of all creatures. The Rabbis well observe that he hath Magnleh Cheloth, and Matteh Cheloth, two general troops, as his horse and foot, the upper and lower troops ready pressed. (Kimchi.)

Ver. 30. Which is of faith] Faith wraps itself in the righteousness of Christ, and so justifieth us.

Ver. 31. The law of righteousness] That is, the righteousness of the law.

Ver. 32. For they stumbled] So they do to this day. So do Papists and carnal Protestants, Non frustra Lutherus in libris toties vaticinatus videtur, sese vereri dictitans, ne se extincto vera illa iustificationis disciplina prorsus apud Christianos exolescat. {a}

{a} John Fox, Christus Triumphans, Epist.

Ver. 33.] {See Trapp on "1Pe 2:6"}

Shall not be ashamed] That is, shall be confirmed, comforted, established. The Scripture loves to speak with the least in promising good to God's people: or else by way of exclamation, "Oh how great is thy goodness which thou hast laid up for them that fear thee!" q.d. it is unutterable; fitter to be believed than possible to be discoursed, #Ps 31:19.

Chapter 10

Ver. 1. My heart's desire] So it should be ours. See my True Treasure, chap. vii. sect. 2.

Ver. 2. They have a zeal of God] So had those two Rabbis, David Rubenita and Shelomoh Molchu, that set upon the Emperor Charles v. to persuade him to Judaism, and were therefore put to a cruel death, A. D. 1530. (Alsted. Chron.) So had Latimer before his conversion: I was as obstinate a Papist, saith he, as any was in England: insomuch that when I should be made Bachelor in Divinity, my whole oration went against Philip Melancthon and his opinions, &c. Being a priest, and using to say mass, he thought he had never sufficiently mingled his massing wine with water: and moreover that he should never be dammed, if he were once a professed friar; with various such superstitious fantasies. (Acts and Mon.) Zeal without knowledge is as wild fire in a fool's hand; it is like the devil in the demoniac, that casts him sometimes into the fire and sometimes into the water.

Ver. 3. For they being ignorant] The soul that is without knowledge is not good, and he that (without knowledge) hasteth with his feet, sinneth, #Pr 19:2; the faster he goeth, the farther he is out.

Ver. 4. For Christ is the end, &c.] q.d. Ay, and for Christ's sake, is the righteousness of God. But the Jews submit not to Christ, therefore not to the righteousness of God. Christ, saith Austin, is Legis finis interficiens, et perficiens. The ceremonial law he hath slain and taken out of the way: the moral law he hath fulfilled for us, and we by him, so by faith in his name, which maketh his obedience to become ours.

Ver. 5. Shall live by them] This do and live; that is, saith Luther, morere, to delay, die out of hand: for there is no man lives and sins not. We can as little cease to sin as the pulse to beat, heart to pant, &c.

Ver. 6. Say not in thine heart] The law preacheth faith in Christ, as well as the gospel.

Ver. 7. Into the deep] Those deeps of the earth, #Ps 71:20.

Ver. 8. The word is nigh thee] Moses meant it of the law, but it more fitly agreeth to the gospel. The babe of Bethlehem is swathed up in the bands of both Testaments: he is author, object, matter, and mark of both. Therefore if we will profit in hearing, teaching, reading, we must have the eye of our minds turned toward Christ, as the faces of the cherubims were toward the mercy seat.

Ver. 9. That if thou shalt confess] That is, if thou shalt call upon the name of the Lord, as it is expounded, #Ro 10:13.

Ver. 10. For with the heart, &c.] Plutarch tells us that of all plants in Egypt, that they call Persica is consecrated to their goddess Isis, and that for this reason, because the fruit of it is like a heart, the leaf like a tongue.

Ver. 11. Shall not be ashamed] Maketh not haste, saith the prophet. Shame and confusion follow haste and precipitancy: Sed Deo confisi nunquam confusi. But trust in God is never confused.

Ver. 12. Is rich unto all, &c.] He cannot therefore be poor that can pray; for he shall have out his prayer, either in money or money's worth.

Ver. 13. Shall be saved] Though he miss that particular mercy he asked for, he is certainly sealed up to salvation.

Ver. 14. How shall they hear, &c.] The word read is of divine use and efficacy; but of preaching we may say as David did of Goliath's sword, "There is none to that." Milk warmed is fitter for nourishment; and the rain from heaven hath a fatness with it, and a special influence, more than standing waters; so there is not that life, operation, and blessing in the word read as preached.

And how shall they preach unless they be sent] Here you have that scala caeli, ladder of heaven, as a good old martyr called it; and we must not presume to alter the rounds of this ladder. The apostle holds it for impossible that any should preach that are not sent. Let such look to it, as run before they are sent, press into the pulpit without a call thereunto. Let them remember Nadab and Abihu with their strange fire, Korah and his complices with their dismal usurpations, Uzzah and Uzziah with their exemplary punishments, &c. God hanged these up in gibbets, as it were to warn others.

Ver. 15. How beautiful are the feet] How much more their faces! "Surely I have seen thy face as the face of God," said Jacob to Esau,

#Ge 33:10, that is, honourable and comfortable. We know how Cornelius received Peter; and the Galatians, Paul, till they were bewitched from him, #Ga 3:1. But it must be remembered that we "glorify the word," not the preacher, #Ac 13:48.

Ver. 16. Who hath believed our report?] Gr. ακοην, our hearing, passively taken. So Caesar and Cicero use auditio for report and rumour. Some sit before a preacher as senseless as the seats they sit on, pillars they lean to, dead bodies they tread on. Others rage, Tange montes et famigabunt, &c.

Ver. 17. By the word of God] That is, by the word of God's command, sending out preachers gifted for the purpose, and saying to them, "Go preach," &c.

Ver. 18. Yes verily; their sound, &c.] Sonus tonus, οο φθογγος. David saith only, "their line," #Ps 19:2. That accurate and artificial frame of the heaven preacheth, as it were, the infinite wisdom and power of the Creator. All God's works are his Regii professores, regal preachers, his Catholic preachers, or real expositors (as one calleth them) of his Divinity. The world (saith Clem. Alex.) is Dei Scriptura, writing of God, God's great Bible with three great leaves—heaven, earth, and hell. David's words are here very fitly applied to the sound of the gospel; the circle whereof is like that of the sun, universal to the whole world; and the motion not unlike: for it arose in the east of Judea, went thence to the south of Greece, and then to the west of Italy and the Latins; from whence it is come to these northern parts of the world (the very utmost angle of the universe), where that it may continue, let us pray,

“ Vespera nunc venit, nobiscum Christe maneto: Extingui lucem nec patiare tuam.”

"All that I fear," saith Mr Baxter, "is, lest Mr Herbert be a true prophet, and the gospel be in its solar motion travelling for the American parts, and is quitting its present place of residence and unworthy professors and possessors: and then farewell England." Contempt drove Christ from Nazareth, his own country, which he came purposely to heal. Confer #Jer 51:9 Eze 24:13.

Ver. 19. Did not Israel know] sc. That the Gentiles were to be called? they were often told of it.

Ver. 20. Is very bold] So that for his boldness he was sawn asunder, saith Jerome.

Ver. 21. Stretched] A metaphor from a mother.

Chapter 11

Ver. 1. I say then, Hath God, &c.] As I may seem to have said, #Ro 10 Ministers must do their utmost to prevent mistakes. Zuinglius, when in his sermons he had terrified the wicked, was wont to shut up with Bone vir, hoc nihil ad te, Thou good man, I mean not thee.

Ver. 2. Saith of Elias] A man of such transcendent zeal, that to heighten the expression thereof some have legended of him, that when he drew his mother's breasts, he was seen to suck in fire.

Ver. 3. And I am left alone] To withstand and reform the common corruptions. Some have commended it to our consideration, that from the first service in the temple when it was built, and the time of Elijah's reformation, was about a hundred years. And from the reformation in King Edward VI's days until now is about the same proportion of time.

Ver. 4. The image of Baal] Τη Βααλ, to that lady, as our modern idolaters also call the Virgin Mary, whom they despight with seeming honours. They would persuade the world, that Christ by dying obeyed not his Father only, but his mother too, that she is the complement of the Trinity, that she entreateth not, but commandeth her Son, is the most imperious mother of our Judge, with many like horrid blasphemies, which I tremble to relate. {a}

{a} Salazar Jesuita in #Pr 8:19,23,29.

Ver. 5. According to the election of grace] St Paul was Constantissimus gratiae praedicator, as Austin calleth him, a most constant preacher of God's free grace.

Ver. 6. Then is it no more of works] Whatsoever conferrumination {a} of grace and works Papists dream of. They think that as he that standeth on two firm branches of a tree is surer than he that standeth upon one only; so he that trusteth to Christ and works too is in the safest condition. But, 1. They are fallen from Christ that trust to works, #Ga 5:4 2. He that hath one foot on a firm branch, and another on a rotten one, stands not so sure as if he stood wholly on that which is sound. But let them be Moses' disciples, let us be Christ's. Set not up a candle to this Sun of righteousness; mix not thy puddle with his purple blood, thy rags with his raiment, thy pigeon's plumes with his eagle's feathers. He can and will save his to the utmost, #Heb 7:25. Detest all mock stays; and account accursed for ever that blasphemous direction of the Papists to dying people, Coniunge, Domine, obsequium meum cum omnibus quae Christus passus est pro me: Join, Lord, mine obedience with all that Christ hath suffered for me.

{a} Soldering together; fig. intimate union or combination. CED

Ver. 7. Israel] i.e. The carnal Israelite.

He seeketh for] viz. Righteousness and salvation by works.

Hardened] By a judiciary hardness.

Ver. 8. The spirit of slumber] So that with those bears in Pliny they cannot be awakened with the sharpest prickles; and with those asses in Etruria, that feeding upon henbane they lie for dead, and awake not till half-hilded. Such a dead lethargy is now befallen Papists.

Ver. 9. Be made a snare] As the bait is to the birds.

Ver. 10. Bow down] i.e. Bring them down into bondage and misery. Compare #Le 26:13.

Ver. 11. Have they stumbled] He that stumbleth and comes not down, gets ground.

Ver. 12. How much more their fulness] O dieculam illam! dexter mihi prae laetitias alit oculus. How long, Lord, holy and true?

Ver. 13. I magnify mine office] I make the utmost of it by gaining souls to Christ.

Ver. 14. And might save some] Ministers must turn themselves as it were into all shapes and fashions, both of spirit and speech, to win people to God.

Ver. 15. Be the reconciling] Not as a cause, but as an occasion.

Life from the dead] That is, Res summe bona, saith Phocius, a special good thing.

Ver. 16. If the firstfruit be holy] Not with a natural, but a federal holiness, as #1Co 7:14.

Ver. 17. Were grafted in] Gr. ενεκεντρισθης, pricked into the middle, the centre of the olive.

Ver. 18. Boast not] Gr. throw not up thy neck, in a scornful insulting way, but rather pity and pray for them. (Isidor. Solil.)

Ver. 19. Thou wilt say] Carnal reason will have ever somewhat to say, and is not easily set down. (Greg. Moral.)

Ver. 20. Be not high-minded, but fear] Alterius perditio tun sit cautio, saith one. Ruina maiorum sit cautela minorum, saith another. Seest thou thy brother shipwrecked? look well to thy tackling.

Ver. 21. Take heed lest] Cavebis autem si pavebis.

Ver. 22. Severity] Gr. Λποτομιαν, Resection or cutting off, as a surgeon cutteth off proud and dead flesh. The dispersion of the Jews for this sixteen hundred years and upward is such, as that one of their own Rabbis concludeth from thence that their Messiah must needs be come; and they must needs suffer so much for killing him. Epiphanius testifieth, that after the destruction of Jerusalem, the Jews of Tiberius had this custom, when any of their friends or kindred were at the point of death, they would secretly whisper them in the ear to this purpose: Believe in Jesus of Nazareth, whom our rulers crucified; for he shall come again to judge thee at the last day. Fincelius also (Lib. iii. de miraculis) tells of a certain converted Jew of Ratisbon, who being demanded (among other questions put to him by the Christians) why the Jews did so exceedingly desire the blood of Christians, answered that that was a great secret among them, known to none but their chiefest Rabbis; but this was their custom, to anoint their dying friends with the blood of Christians, and to use words to this effect: If he that was promised in the law and prophets hath already appeared, and that Jesus who was crucified were the true Messiah, let this blood of an innocent man, who died in the faith of Jesus, cleanse thee from thy sins, and be a means to further thine eternal happiness. Oh, the severity of God! and, oh, the obstinace and misery of this hard hearted people!

Ver. 23. God is able] He can fetch heart of oak out of a hollow tree, and of carnal make a people created again, #Ps 102:18 Eph 2:10.

Ver. 24. Contrary] Therefore nature contributes nothing toward the work of conversion.

Ver. 25. That blindness in part] It is neither total nor perpetual. Lyra was a famous English Jew. Tremellius was also a Jew born; they are but methe mispar; a very few that are yet converted. They pretend (but maliciously) that those few that turn Christians in Italy are none other than poor Christians hired from other cities to impersonate their part. But when God shall have united those two sticks, #Eze 37:19, and made way for those kings of the East, #Re 16:12, then it shall be said of Jacob and Israel, "What hath God wrought?" #Nu 23:23. Jachiades (a Jewish doctor) upon those words, #Da 12:4, would have us believe that God sealed up the time of the coming of the Messiah; that for their sins, which are many, it is deferred, &c., but concludeth his animadversions there with this truth, Verum enimvero Deus nos dignabitur clarissima visione; cum Deus reducet Zionem, tunc intelligemus res ipsas, prout sunt, i.e. God shall vouchsafe us a most clear vision at that time when he shall bring back the captivity of Zion, and then we shall understand things even as they are.

Ver. 26. Shall turn away ungodliness] That is, He shall pardon their sin. The prophet Isaiah hath it, Unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, &c. They whose persons are justified, have their lusts mortified.

Ver. 27. When I shall take] By the spirit of judgment and of burning, #Isa 4:4 cf. 27:9.

Ver. 28. They are enemies] i.e. Hated of God, as appears by the opposition; and banished, as it were, by a common consent of nations, out of human society. See #1Th 2:15,16.

Ver. 29. Are without repentance] When God is said to repent, it is Mutatio rei non Dei, effectus non affectus, facti non consilii, a change, not of his will, but of his work. Repentance with man is the change of his will; repentance with God is the willing of a change. But what a sweet comfort is this, that God's favour is so constant that what he hath written he hath written, that there is no blotting out of the book of life ( Nulla litura in decretis sapientum, say the Stoics no erasure of the decrees of the wise, ), that it is, I have blessed him, and he shall be blessed; and that his blessing is (as Thucydides saith of a well composed history), κτημα εις αι ζυγκειμενον, an everlasting possession.

Ver. 30. Through their] By occasion of their unbelief. Pungit Iudaeos et humiliat Gentes, saith one.

Ver. 31. That they also] It noteth not the cause, but the event, as #1Co 11:19.

Ver. 32. For God hath concluded] Or locked them all up in the law's dark dungeon, αννεκλεισε, #Ga 3:22. Unbelief breaks all the law at an instant by rejecting Christ, as the first act of faith obeys all the law at an instant in Christ.

That he might have mercy upon all] Luther in a very great conflict was relieved and comforted by the often repeating of this sweet sentence.

Ver. 33. O the depth of the riches] The Romans dedicated a certain lake, the depth whereof they knew not, to Victory; so should we admire the unsearchable counsels of God, being subdued to that which we cannot subdue to our understandings. God, saith one, is like the pool Polycritus writeth of, which in compass at first scarcely seemed to exceed the breadth of a shield, but if any went into it to wash, it extended itself more and more. (Aristot. de Mirab. Auscult.) And Chrysostom speaking of the love of God in Christ, Oh, saith he, I am like a man digging in a deep spring; I stand here, and the water riseth up upon me; and I stand there, and still the water riseth upon me. Oh, dive we not into this deep; for here (as in the salt waters), the deeper, the sweeter.

Past finding out] It is with us here as with hounds at a loss, having neither footsteps nor scent left of the game they pursue (ανεξιχνιαστοι). Let it satisfy us for present, that at the last day of judgment we shall see a harmony in this discord of things; and that the reason of God's ways, now hidden, shall then be made manifest. In the meantime know, that Arcana Dei, Arca Dei (Augustine), secrets of God and the ark of God, of pry not into it, lest ye perish; but hold this for certain, God's judgments are sometimes secret, always just.

Ver. 34. Who hath been his counsellor] Alphonso the wise (the fool rather) was heard blasphemously to say, that if he had been of God's counsel at the creation, he could have advised and ordered many things much better than now they are. This Alphonso, the tenth of that name, king of Spain, who by a just hand of God upon him deprived of his kingdom, and died in public hatred and infamy.

Ver. 35. Who hath first given to him? Do we not owe him all that we have and are? And can a man merit by paying his debts?

Ver. 36. For of him] As the efficient cause, and "through him" as the administering cause, and "to him" as the final cause, are all things. A wise philosopher could say, that man is the end of all in a semicircle; that is, all things in the world are made for him, and he is made for God.

To whom be glory for ever] God, saith one, counts the works and fruits that come from us to be ours, because the judgment and resolution of will whereby we do them is ours. This he doth to encourage us. But because the grace whereby we judge and will aright comes from God, ascribe we all to him. So shall he lose no praise, we no encouragement.

Chapter 12

Ver. 1. I beseech] Volumus et iubemus we wish and we order, became the pope's style, A. D. 606.

By the mercies of God] His manifold mercies, δια των οικτιρμων. Per miserationes amplificationis causa. (Beza.) We that have received so many mercies, must not only servire Deo, sed et adulate, serve God but even worship him, saith Tertullian. Mercy calls for duty; deliverance commands obedience, and there is so milch disingenuity in the contrary, that holy Ezra thinks heaven and earth would be ashamed of it, #Ezr 9:13,14. The cords of kindness are called "the cords of a man," #Ho 11:4; rational motives befitting the nature of a man. So that to sin against mercy is to sin against humanity; it is bestial, and fits a man for destruction, #Ro 9:22; like as when medicine which should remove the disease, doth co-operate with it, then death comes with the more pain and speed. No excess more dangerous than that of bread: no judgment more terrible than that of mercy despised and abused. Abused mercy turns into fury. Patientia laesa fit furor.

That ye present] As they of old did their sacrifices at the altar. With the burnt offering, which signified the sacrificing of the flesh, was joined the sin offering, that is, Christ. Faith applies Christ to the believer, and the believer to Christ.

Your bodies] That is, your whole person. Cainistce sunt, saith Luther, offerentes non persoham, sed opus personae. They are Cainists that offer to God the work done, but do not offer themselves to God.

A living sacrifice] In the old law they had many kinds of sacrifices killed and offered. Now, saith Origen, instead of a ram we kill our ireful passions; instead of a goat our unclean affections; instead of flying fowls our idle thoughts, &c.

Ver. 2. To this world] To the corrupt customs and courses of wicked worldings. See them set forth, #Ro 13:13 Eph 4:18-20 1Pe 4:3, and shun them. Erasmus rendereth it, Ne accommodetis vos ad figuram, Accommodate not yourselves to the figure and fashion of the world; do not impersonate and act the part of such; as a player doth, when he playeth the drunkard or wanton on the scaffold or stage (so μη συζηματιζεσθε signifies). St Paul writeth to his Corinthians, not to company with fornicators of this world, or with the covetous, or with extortioners, or idolaters, lest they should conform to them, #1Co 5:9,10. For as the creatures living in the several elements are commonly of the temperature of the element they live in (as the fishes, cold and moist like the water; the worms, cold and dry as the earth, &c.), so are we apt to conform to the company we converse with. It is both hard and happy not to do as the rest do; but to be like fishes, that retain their sweetness in the salt sea; like salamanders, that remain unscorched in the fire; like pearls, that growing in the sea, have the colour and brightness of heaven; like oil, that will easily overtop all other liquors, and not commingle; ever holding constant a countermotion to the course of the world and corruptions of the times; that amidst all, a good conscience may be kept, that richest treasure and dearest jewel that ever the heart of man was acquainted with.

But be ye transformed] Gr. metamorphosed, the old frame being dissolved, and a new form acquired.

That ye may prove] so. By your practice.

Ver. 3. But to think soberly] Gr. φρονειν εις το σωφρονειν, to be wise to sobriety. Socrates made no distinction between wisdom and sobriety, σοφιαν και σωφροσυνην non distinguebat. (Xenoph.) We shall be sober, if we take not that upon us that we have not, nor brag of that which we have. There is an elegance in the original that cannot be rendered.

Ver. 4. For as we have, &c.] See #1Co 12:12, which is a commentary on this text.

Ver. 5. One body in Christ] {See Trapp on "1Co 12:12"} {See Trapp on "1Co 12:13"}

And every one members] Try thy membership, if, 1. Sociable with Christ and Christians. 2. Useful and serviceable to the body. 3. Compassionate, as Paul; "Who is afflicted," saith he, "and I burn not?" I feel twinges when others are hurt; and I hold myself a debtor (as a member) to Greeks and barbarians, to the wise and unwise, be they but of the body, #Ro 1:14.

Ver. 6. According to the proportion] That form of sound words, #2Ti 1:13, those principles of the doctrine of Christ, #Heb 6:1, with which all interpretations of Scripture must bear due proportion.

Ver. 7. Or ministry] Take it either largely for the whole ministry, as #1Co 12:5 Ac 1:24-26 17; or more strictly for the office of a deacon, as #Ac 6:1-6.

Ver. 8. Or he that exhorteth] The pastor properly so called. {See Trapp on "Eph 4:11"}

Ver. 9. Abhor that which is evil] Hate it as hell itself, αποστουγουντες, so the word signifies; Mihi certe Auxentius nunquam aliud quam diabolus erit, quia Arianus, saith Hilary, I shall look upon Auxentius no otherwise than as upon a devil, so long as he is an Arian.

Ver. 10. Be kindly affectioned] As natural brethren and more. Arctior eat copula cordis quam corporis. We are brethren in Adam according to the flesh, in and by Christ according to the Spirit.

Ver. 11. Not slothful] Or, not driving off till it be too late (ακνηρος, cunctator the delayer). Charles, the son of Charles Duke of Anjou, who was king of Sicily and Jerusalem, was called Carolus Cunctator; not in the sense as Fabius, because he stayed till opportunity came, but because he stayed till opportunity was lost.

Fervent in spirit] Gr. ζεοντες, seething hot. God, who is himself a pure act, loveth activeness in men; the very rest of heavenly bodies is in motion in their proper places.

Ver. 12. Rejoicing in hope] Hope makes absent joys present, wants, plenitudes, and beguiles calamity as good company doth the time. But without hope, patience is cold almost in the fourth degree, and that is but a little from poison. It was a dotage of the Stoics, that a wise man should be free, as from fear, so from hope too. How much better the Elpistici, another sort of philosophers, who held hope to be the only stay and staff of man's life, without which to live were but to lie dying! This life would be little better than hell, saith Bernard, were it not for the hopes of heaven. Sed superest sperare salutem, and this holds head above water, this keeps the heart aloft all floods of afflictions, as the cork doth the line, as bladders do the body in swimming. Ibat ovans animis et spe sua damna levabat, He was going with a rejoicing spirit and hope of being released from his corruptions, saith Bembus concerning St Stephen going to his death. (Vivere spe vidi qui moriturus erat. Ovid.) I look to live by hope who was about to die. He that seeth visions of glory, and hath sure hopes of heaven, will not matter a shower of stones; he that is to take possession of a kingdom will not stand upon a foul day. Hope unfailable is grounded upon faith unfeigned, which is seldom without its joy unspeakable and full of glory, #1Pe 1:8.

Patient in tribulation] Bearing up under pressures, as among many other martyrs Nicholas Burton, who by the way to the stake, and in the flame, was so patient and cheerful, that the tormentors said, the devil had his soul before he came to the fire, and therefore his senses of feeling were past. (Acts and Mon.)

Continuing instant in prayer] Constant and instant, προσκατερουντες. A metaphor from hunting dogs, that give not over the game till they have got it. Nazianzen saith of his sister Gorgonia, that she was so given to prayer, that her knees seemed to grow to the very ground. Of Trasilla, it is reported, that being dead she was found to have her elbows as hard as horn, by leaning to a desk at which she used to pray. St James is said to have had knees as hard as camel's knees, by his continual kneeling in prayer. And Paul the Eremite was found dead kneeling upon his knees, holding up his hands, lifting up his eyes; so that the very dead corpse seemed yet to live and to pray to God. (Jerome.)

Ver. 13. To the necessity] Gr. χρειαις, to the uses of the saints, not staying till they be in necessity.

Ver. 14. Bless them] {See Trapp on "Mt 5:44"}

Ver. 15. Weep with them that weep] St Cyprian's compassion is remarkable, Cum singulis pectus meum copulo, maeroris et funeris pondera luctuosa participo: cum plangentibus plango, cum deflentibus defleo, &c. I partake in every man's grief, and am as much affected and afflicted as if it were mine own case.

Ver. 16. Be of the same] This verse had been easy had not interpreters obscured it, as Origen observeth.

Ver. 17. Recompense to no man] In reason, revenge is but justice; Aristotle commends it, the world calls it manhood; it is doghood rather. The manlier any man is, the milder and more merciful, as David, #2Sa 1:12, and Julius Caesar, who wept over Pompey's head presented to him, and said, Non mihi placet vindicta, sed victoria, I seek not revenge, but victory.

Ver. 18. As much as lieth in you] Let it not stick on your part. Give not offence carelessly, take not offence causelessly. {See Trapp on "Mt 5:9"} It is the first office of justice, saith Cicero, to hurt nobody, unless first provoked by injury. But how true and trim a sentence, saith Lactantius, hath Cicero here marred by adding the last, "unless!" Mahomet's laws run thus: Avenge yourselves of your enemies; rather do wrong than take wrong; kill the infidels, &c. Profess love to thine enemy, saith Machiavel; and if he fall into the water up to the knees, give him thine hand to help him out; if up to the waist, help him likewise; but if up to the chin, then lay thine hand upon his head and duck him under the water, and never suffer him to rise again. But we "have not so learned Christ." Seneca could say, Immane verbum est ultio, Revenge is a bloody word; and Qui ulciscitur excusatus peccat, He is somewhat excused (but not altogether) from doing evil, that seeketh revenge.

Ver. 19. Avenge not yourselves] Some take the sword into their own hands; and, lest they should seem Anabaptists in taking two blows for one, will give two blows for one.

Give place to wrath] sc. To the wrath and vengeance of God, which he seemeth to prevent that seeks revenge. Or, "give place to wrath." Do nothing in thine heat, but walk into the garden, as Ahasuerus did, when kindled against Haman, #Es 7:7. Theodosius was advised by Ambrose to say over the Lord's prayer; Augustus by Athenodorus, to repeat the Greek alphabet, before they determined anything in their anger.

Or, give place to wrath] Currenti cede furori, set not thy wit to his (for anger is a short madness), but bear with his weakness that wrongeth thee.

Ver. 20. Thou shalt heap] Thou shalt melt him, and make him thy friend for ever.

Ver. 21. Be not overcome] In rixa is inferior est, qui victor est, saith Basil. In revenge of injuries, he is the loser that gets the better. Hence the apostle disgraceth it, by a word that signifieth disgrace or loss of victory, ηττημα, #1Co 6:7. When any one provokes us, we use to say, We will be even with him. There is a way whereby we may be, not even with him, but above him; that is, forgive him, feed him with the best morsels, feed him indulgently (so the apostle's word ψωμιζε in the former verse signifies), feast him, as Elisha did his persecutors; providing a table for them, who had provided a grave for him. "Set bread and water before them," saith he, and mark what followed; "The bands of Syria came no more after that time," by way of ambush or inroad, "into the bounds of Israel," #2Ki 6:22,23. In doing some good to our enemies (saith a grave divine hereupon) we do most to ourselves: God cannot but love in us that imitation of his mercy, who bids his sun to shine on the wicked and unthankful also; and his love is never fruitless. It is not like the winter sun that gives little heat, but like the sun in his strength, that warms and works effectually upon the rest of the creatures.

But overcome evil] This is the most noble victory. Thus David overcame Saul, and Henry VII, emperor of Germany, overcame the priest that poisoned him at the sacrament; for he pardoned him, and bade him be packing. (Fanc. Chron.) So did not Jacup the Persian king, who perceiving himself poisoned by his adulterous wife, enforced her to drink of the same cup; and because he would be sure she should not escape, with his own hand he struck off her head. (Turkish Hist.) But this (to say truth) was not revenge, but justice. Henry IV of France was wont to say, that he made all the days of those golden, who had most offended him; that so, the lead of their wickedness might be darkened by the gold of his goodness.

Ver. 1. Let every soul be subject] In things lawful only; for else we must answer as those apostles did, #Ac 4:29, and as Polycarp, who being commanded to blaspheme Christ, and to swear by the fortune of Caesar, peremptorily refused, and said, We are taught to give honour to princes and potentates, but such honour as is not contrary to God's religion.

Ordained of God] In regard of its institution, though for the manner of its constitution it is of man.

Ver. 2. Resisteth the power] His authoritative commands, not his personal.

Receive to themselves damnation] κριμα, #1Co 11:31,32. Poenam sibi auferent, saith Piscator, they shall receive punishment, to wit, from the magistrate; as Aretine deserved to do, who by longer custom of libellous and contumelious speaking against princes, had got such a habit, that at last he came to diminish and disesteem God himself.

Ver. 3. For rulers, are not, &c.] They should not be. But Jeroboam set a net on Mizpeh, and spread a snare upon Tabor, to watch who would go from him to Judah to worship, #Ho 5:1.

A terror to good works, but to the evil] The sword of justice (saith one) must be furbished with the oil of mercy; yet there are cases wherein severity ought to cast the scale. Duresce, Duresce, o infaelix Lantgravie, Be sern, be stern oh unhappy Lantgrave, said the poor smith to the Landgrave of Thuring, more mild than was for his people's good. Bonis nocet, qui malis parcit. He harms the good who spares the wicked. Edward the Confessor was held a bad prince, not by doing, but enduring ill.

Ver. 4. For he is the minister] It was written upon the sword of Charles the Great, Decem praeceptorum custos Carolus, Charles is Lord Keeper of the Decalogue.

For he beareth not the sword in vain] Like St Paul in a glass window, or St George (as they call him) on a sign post.

A revenger to execute wrath] But now we see how every man almost will be a pope in his own cause, depose the magistrate, at least appeal from him to himself.

Upon him that doeth evil] Whether the evil be civil or religious; Non distinguendum, ubi scriptum non distinguit. Not distinguishing where the law does not distinguish, (See Mr Burroughs' Heartdivisions.) Note this against those that hold that magistrates have nothing to do in matters of religion. See #De 13:6 Ezr 7:26 Da 3:29 1Pe 2:13,14. Their laws bind the conscience per concomitantiam, by way of concomitancy; because they depend upon the law of God, and are agreeable to it; which primarily and per se bindeth. As the soul is said to be in a place per concomitantiam, because it is in the body; so here.

Ver. 5. But also for conscience sake] Good rulers we must obey as God; bad, for God. δια τον θεον. (Basil.)

Ver. 6. Attending continually] As born for the benefit of many. The Parliament in the 25 Edward III is known to posterity by the name of Benedictam Parliamentum, Blessed Parliament. So shall this present Parliament (A.D. 1646) for their continual attendance upon the Lord's work, bending themselves to the business (as the word προσκαρτερουντες signifies) and holding out therein with unparalleled patience.

Ver. 7. Render therefore to all their dues] He saith not their unjust exactions. Melancthon makes mention of a cruel prince, that to get money from his subjects, would knock out their teeth, first one tooth and then another, unless they would bring him in such sums of money as he required. {a}

Fear to whom, &c.] i.e. Reverential observance, far beyond that which Quintus Fabius Maximus yielded to his son, when he became consul. (Liv. Decad. iii. lib. 4.)

Ver. 8. Owe no man, &c.] The Persians reckoned these two for very great sins: 1. To be in debt. 2. To tell a lie; the latter being often the fruit of the former. (Xenophon, Gell. xii. 1.) By the 12 tables of Rome, he that owed much, and could not pay, was to be cut in pieces, and every creditor was to have a piece of him according to the debt. (Acts and Mon.) When Archbishop Cranmer discerned the storm which afterwards fell upon him in Queen Mary's days, he took express order for the payment of all his debts; which when it was done, a most joyful man was he; that having set his affairs in order with men, he might consecrate himself more freely to God. (Mr Wilkins' Debt Book.) Let us therefore (saith a reverend man) be thus far indulgent to ourselves, as to shake off the deadly yoke of bills and obligations, which mancipate the most free and ingenuous spirit, and dry up the very fountains of liberality. Yea, they so put a man out of aim that he cannot set his state in order, but lives and dies entangled and puzzled with cares and snares; and after a tedious and laborious life passed in a circle of fretting thoughts, he leaves at last, instead of better patrimony, a world of intricate troubles to his posterity and to his sureties; which cannot be managed by those who understand them not, but to great disadvantage. We read of a certain Italian gentleman, who being asked how old he was? answered, that he was in health; and to another that asked how rich he was? answered, that he was not in debt: q.d. He is young enough that is in health, and rich enough that is not in debt.

But to love one another] This is that desperate debt that a man cannot discharge himself from, but must ever be paying, and yet ever owing. As we say of thanks, Gratiae habendae et agenda, thanks must be given, and yet held as still due; so must this debt of love.

Ver. 9. Briefly comprehended] Capitulated, fulfilled, saith the Syriac, summed up, ανακεφαλαιουται. St Bartholomew is quoted by Dionysius to have said of divinity, Και πολλην και ελαχιστην, Et magnum esse et minimam, that it was large and yet little, as containing much matter in few words.

Ver. 10. The fulfilling of the law] The filling up of the law in this, that it closeth the duties of the law with the glory of a due manner, and seateth them upon their due subjects, with the unwearied labours of a constant well doing.

Ver. 11. To awake out of sleep] While the crocodile sleepeth with open mouth, the Indian rat gets into his stomach, and eateth through his entrails. While Ishbosheth slept upon his bed at noon, Baanah and Rechab took away his head. Security ushereth in destruction. Go forth and shake yourselves, as Samson did when the Philistines were upon him; lest Satan serve you, at least for your souls, as Captain Drake did the Spaniard at Taurapasa in the West Indies, for his treasure; he found him sleeping securely on the shore, and by him 13 bars of silver to the value of 40,000 ducats, which he commanded to be carried away, not so much as once waking the man. (Camden's Elisa.) Or lest Christ himself deal by us, as Epaminondas did by the watchman, whom he found asleep; he thrust him through with his sword, and being blamed for so severe a fact, he replied, Talem eum reliqui, qualem inveni, I left him as I found him.

For now is our salvation nearer] Stir up yourselves, therefore, and strain toward the mark. There is a Greek word (νυσσα) signifying the end of a race, which is derived of a word that signifieth to spur or prick forward (νυσσω). Surely, as they that run their horses for a wager, spur hardest at the race's end; so, sith our salvation is nearer now than ever it was, therefore we should run faster now than ever we did. When a cart is in a quagmire, if the horses feel it coming, they'll pull the harder; so must we, now that full deliverance is hard at hand. Rivers run more speedily and forcibly when they come near the sea, than they did at the spring; the sun shineth most amiably towards the going down. Tempus iam est (said old Zanchius to his friend Sturmus, who was elder than he) ut ad Christum et caelum stelliferum a terra properemus, &c. It is even high time for you and me to hasten to heaven; as knowing that we shall shortly be with Christ, which is "far far the better," #Php 1:23.

Ver. 12. The night] Here it is taken for all unregeneracy, which (as the night) is full of error, terror, &c. Nox pudore vacat. This night with the saints is far spent, or already past, Transivit, praeterit, as Cyprian and Jerome here render it.

Ver. 13. Let us walk honestly] Handsomely, fashionably, mannerly, with a holy shamefacedness (ευσχημονως).

Not in chambering] Properly, lying a-bed or long-lying (κοιταις).

Ver. 14. But put ye on] Augustine confesseth that he was converted by reading and pondering this text.

And make not provision] Make not projects, cater not for the flesh.

Chapter 14

Ver. 1. Him that is weak, &c.] That is, not thoroughly persuaded of all things pertaining to Christian liberty about things indifferent.

Receive] Affectu charitatis, put him into your bosoms, bear with his weaknesses, &c. Bucer rejected none, though different in some opinions, in whom he found aliquid Christi, anything of Christ, whose weaklings are to be handled with all tenderness. (Haymo.)

But not to doubtful] Make him not question sick, #1Ti 6:4. Wring not men's consciences, you may hap to break the wards if you do.

Ver. 2. Eateth herbs] Rather than meats forbidden by the law, #Da 1:11. The ancient Latins were as well paid of herbs to eat, as if they had had all manner of dainties. Green herbs were both food and medicine to them. Holus ab Vegetables from ολον.

Ver. 3. For God hath received him] viz. For his household servant, which David counted a greater dignity than to be king of Israel. And Justinian the emperor styled himself Ultimum servorum Dei, the meanest of God's servants.

Ver. 4. Who art thou, &c.] The wisdom from above is without censuring, without hypocrisy, saith St James, #Jas 3:17. Intimating, that the greatest censurers are mostly the greatest hypocrites. And as any one is more wise, he is more sparing of his censures.

Ver. 5. Let every man be fully persuaded] It is a safe rule, Quod dubites ne feceris, In doubtful cases be sure to take the surer side. (Plin. Epist.)

Ver. 6. For he giveth God thanks] A custom used by the very heathens to their gods, as is to be read in Homer and Virgil, but grown clean out of use among the Catholics in France and Italy, (Sir Ed. Sands, Spec. Europae.) But if they that give thanks at a meal do eat to God, to whom do they eat that give none?

Ver. 7. For none of us liveth to himself] St Paul stood, as it were, on tiptoes, αποκαραδοκια, #Php 1:20, to see which way he might best glorify God, by life or by death.

Ver. 8. We are the Lord's] Death divides us not from Christ, but brings us home to him, #2Co 5:6. It is but winking (as that martyr said), and thou shalt be in heaven presently.

Ver. 9. That he might be Lord] He won his crown before he wore it; he fought for it, and having vanquished all enemies, he accomplished and proclaimed the victory in his glorious resurrection, triumphed in his wonderful ascension, leading captivity captive, &c., #Eph 4:8.

Ver. 10. But why dost thou, &c.] Three things are not subject to our judgment: 1. The counsels of God. 2. The Holy Scriptures. 3. The persons of men. Be not therefore rash in rejecting or sour in censuring your fellowservant; but let your moderation herein be known to all men; and the rather, because the Lord is at hand, #Php 4:5.

The judgment seat of Christ] Who gives the Lamb in his escutcheon; and wilt thou give the lion?

Ver. 11. As I live, saith the Lord] As true as I live, is an oath, as appears here, and #Nu 14:21 cf. Ps 95:11. Forbear it, therefore.

Ver. 12. So then every one, &c.] It was excellent counsel that the orator gave his hearers, Ita vivamus ut rationem nobis reddendam arbitremur. (Cic. IV in Ver.) Let us so live as those that must give an account of all at last.

Ver. 13. Any more] As they formerly had done; being overly sour and supercilious.

A stumblingblock, or an occasion &c.] A lighter or greater offence to make him go halting to heaven.

Ver. 14. I know and am persuaded] Many, on the contrary, are persuaded before they know; and such will not be persuaded to know. The Valentinian heretics had a trick to persuade before they taught, as saith Tertullian. The old sectaries had their pithanology, insinuating and persuasive language; so have the modern; and hence so many dissonant opinions among us. If ye speak with several tongues (so hold several opinions) will not he that comes in think ye are mad? #1Co 14:9-11 Dii boni, quomodo hic vivunt gentes! How strangely do people live here, said a stranger, observing our divisions in Henry VIII's time, which (alas) were nothing comparable to these of our days, and all because simple men and silly women are soon persuaded to that which they understand not. The silly simple believeth everything: weak as water on a table, which with a wet finger may be led any way. {Pethi, #Pr 14:15}

By the Lord Jesus] Who hath pulled down the partition-wall, and purchased our Christian liberty.

Ver. 15. But if thy brother be grieved] It is his weakness to be grieved thereat, but gratify him howsoever. What one speaks of a plain place of Scripture, this verse, saith he, had been easy, had not commentators made it knotty; the like saith another of a Christian's condition, it is gracious, happy, clear, sure, sweet, did not erroneous judgments vex and unsettle them.

Ver. 16. Let not then your good] That is, your Christian liberty purchased by Christ.

Be evil spoken of] Gr. be blasphemed. Contumely cast upon the people of God is blasphemy in the second table. God, for the honour that he beareth to his people, counts and calls it so.

Ver. 17. For the kingdom of God, &c.] That was a swinish saying of Epicurus, that eternal life should be nothing else but a continual eating of the fat and drinking of the sweet, even unto an incessant surfeiting and drunkenness, κραιπαλην και μεθην αιωνιον. The Turks to this day promise Paradise to such as die in war for the Mahometan faith, where they shall have delicious fare, pleasant gardens, all sensual delights, eternally to be enjoyed, notwithstanding any former sins. Fit lettuce for such lips.

Ver. 18. Is acceptable to God] And he is a happy man that can be acquitted by himself in private, in public by others, in both by God.

Ver. 19. Wherewith one may edify another] Discords among good people do edificare in gehennam, build in hell, as Tertullian phraseth it, build backwards. One of the main scandals the Jews take from Protestants is their dissension.

Ver. 20. The work of God] That work of faith, #1Th 1:3, wrought by the mighty power of God, #Eph 1:19, who puts not forth great power but for great purposes.

Ver. 21. It is good neither to eat, &c.] It will be no grief of heart (as Abigail once told David in another case, #1Sa 25:31) to have forborne in case of scandal. A great grief it would be if by some rash word we should betray a brother, or smite out the eye of our dearest child; should we then destroy the life of grace in another by our unadvised walking?

Ver. 22. Hast thou faith] Posse, et nolle, nobile est. To be able, and unwilling, is noble. Forbear for fear of offence, unless it be in point of necessary duty: for then we may not do evil that good may come, #Ro 3:8.

Ver. 23. Is damned] Both of his doubting conscience, which soundeth heavily, as a shalme; and of God, who is greater than his conscience.

Chapter 15

Ver. 1. Ought to bear] As porters do their burdens, as pillars do the poise of the house, or rather as parents have their babes in their arms. Βασταζειν.

And not to please ourselves] Bis desipit, qui sibi sapit, He is twice foolish who understands himself. #Pr 3:7.

Ver. 2. Please his neighbour] Though he cross himself: this is true Christian love, and driven almost out of the world by sinful self-love, which causeth men to dislike those things in others that they favour and flatter in themselves.

Ver. 3. For even Christ] And we should express him to the world, preach abroad his virtues by our practice, #1Pe 2:9. Our lives should be as so many sermons upon the life of Christ. This is to walk in Christ, #Col 2:6, as Christ, #1Jo 3:6.

Ver. 4. For whatsoever things, &c.] Here the apostle meets with an objection. For some man might say, that that saying of the Psalms pertains to David, how therefore is it applied to Christ? He answers, Whatsoever things, &c. q.d. We must learn to see Christ in David; David in the history, Christ in the mystery; David as the type, Christ the truth.

That we through patience] Hence the Scriptures are called, The word of Christ's patience, #Re 3:10, because they patient the heart under God's holy hand; and are better called medicine for the soul (της ψυχης ιατρεια) than ever was the library of Alexandria.

And comfort of the Scriptures] As the blood and spirits are conveyed by the veins and arteries, so is the Spirit by the promises, helping the soul to lay itself upon Christ by faith, which is a grace of union, and so of establishment.

Ver. 5. Now the God of patience] The soul is then only in good plight when the heaven answers the earth, #Ho 2:21; when Christ the Sun of righteousness shines into it.

Ver. 6. With one mind and one mouth,] It is recorded to the high commendation of the Church of Scotland, that for this 90 years and upwards they have kept unity with purity without schism, much less heresy. (Syntag. Confession, Prefat.)

Ver. 7. To the glory of God] That is, of heaven, the joys whereof it is as impossible to comprehend as it is to compass the heaven with a span, or contain the ocean in a nut shell. Such comfort there is in the presence of Christ (though but in the womb), as it made John to spring. What then shall it be in heaven?

Ver. 8. Now I say that Jesus] Paul proveth particularly in this and the following verses that Christ hath taken both Jews and Gentiles to his glory.

Ver. 9. And that the Gentiles] Though they had no such promises, might glorify God's free grace in the day of their visitation.

Ver. 10. Rejoice] That your names are also written in heaven, and that ye are enrolled in the records of the new Jerusalem.

Ver. 11. All ye Gentiles] As being received into the glory of God, #Ro 15:7.

Ver. 12. In him shall the Gentiles trust] Isaiah hath it, "To him shall the Gentiles seek": to seek to God then argues trust in God. He that hopes not, praises not, or but faintly.

Ver. 13. Fill you with all joy, &c.] Note here that joy and peace are the means whereby faith worketh hope.

Ver. 14. Full of goodness] The excellency of a godly man is to follow God fully, as Caleb, #Nu 14:24; to have a heart full of goodness, as these Romans, a life full of good works, as Tabitha, #Ac 9:36. These shall receive a full reward, #2Jo 8.

Ver. 15. Chrysostom truly saith of St Paul, that he was insatiabilis Dei cultor; an insatiable worshipper of God, one that thought he could never do God or his Church service enough.

Ver. 16. Ministering the gospel] Serving about holy things or doing sacred offices, as the priests under the law, to whom the apostle all along this verse alludes in an elegant allegory, ιερουργουντα λειτουργων; the ministry is a divine and heavenly function. All other callings are for the world, and draw to the world; but this, both in the preparation and execution, draweth to God, keepeth us with God, and to be ever mindful of the things of God.

Ver. 17. I have therefore, &c.] So have all God's faithful ministers at this day against the contempts and contumelies cast upon them by the mad world, ever beside itself in point of salvation. There is a pamphlet lately published that sticks not to make that sacred and tremendous function of the ministry to be as mere an imposture, as very a mystery of iniquity, as arrant a fraud, as the Papacy itself. (The Compas. Samaritan.)

Ver. 18. To make the Gentiles, &c.] Christ by his gospel subdued the Britons, whom the Romans with all their force could never subdue, as Tertullian observed. {a}

Ver. 19. So that from Jerusalem] Chrysostom observeth, that Plato came three times to Sicily to convert Dionysius the tyrant to moral philosophy, and could not. But Paul fetched a great compass, converted many souls, planted many Churches; and why? Christ sat upon him as upon one of his white horses, and went forth conquering and to conquer, #Re 6:2.

Ver. 20. Lest I should build] Lest I should seem to do anything unbecoming the office of an apostle: there is a decorum to be kept in every calling.

Ver. 21. But as it is written,] In obedience to this divine oracle, the apostle preached to those that had not heard, yet neglected not those that had.

Ver. 22. For which cause] By planting Churches and preaching where was more need.

Ver. 23. These many years] The Romans were converted to the faith betimes. Some of them were "in Christ before Paul," #Ro 16:7. Christ made haste also to convert England, whose religion before was tristissimum superstitionum chaos (as Camden hath it), a most sad chaos of superstitions. Sabellicus testifieth that Brittany was the first of all the provinces that publicly professed Christ. And as we were the first that took upon us the yoke of Papal tyranny (so that England was called the Pope's Ass), so were we the first that shook it off again.

Ver. 24. For I trust to see you] Ipse aspectus viri boni delectat, He himself delights at the sight of good men, saith Seneca. There is a great deal of sweetness in the society of saints, and much good to be gotten thereby. Sometimes (saith a grave divine) though we know that which we ask of others as well as they do, yet good speeches will draw us to know it better, by giving occasion to speak more of it: wherewith the Spirit works more effectually, and imprints it deeper, so that it shall be a more rooted knowledge than before. For that doth good that is graciously known, and that is graciously known that the Spirit seals upon our souls.

Ver. 25. To minister unto the saints] The highest angel in heaven may not hold himself too good to serve the saints.

Ver. 26. It hath pleased them] It hath not been squeezed out of them as verjuice is out of a crab, but freely and cheerfully they have contributed, εὐδοκῆσαν.

For the poor saints which are at Jerusalem] The Jews do to this day send their alms yearly from all parts to Jerusalem for the maintenance of the poor that live there, and spend their time praying for the welfare of the whole nation.

Ver. 27. Their debtors they are] And so are we to pity and pray for them. See my "True Treasure," sect. 2. chapt. 7.

Ver. 28. When I have sealed] That is, safely delivered, as if it were under seal.

This fruit] This sweet ripe fruit of their faith and love, their alms.

Ver. 29. In the fulness of the blessing] Christ may use one of less grace to do more good than one of more (for there are diversities of operations, as well as of gifts, #1Co 12:6), but usually he delights to honour those of most sincerity, with most success, #1Co 15:10.

Ver. 30. For the Lord Jesus Christ's sake] This is one of those passages in St Paul, than the which there can nothing possibly be imagined more grave, divine, excellent, saith Beza.

That ye strive together] Even to an agony, as the word συναγωνισασθαι imports. Spiritual beggary is the hardest and richest of all trades, as one said. Learn of this great apostle to beg prayers with all earnestness. Pray for me, I say, pray for me, I say, quoth father Latimer. Pray for me, pray for me, for God's sake pray for me, said blessed Bradford.

Ver. 31. That my service which, &c.] One would have thought that the apostle coming with alms to them, should easily have been well accepted; but he saw cause to seek God for such a mercy, since it is he alone that fashions men's opinions, and gives favour and kind acceptance. Besides wisdom, he gave Solomon honour.

Ver. 32. Be refreshed] {See Trapp on "Ro 1:12"} {See Trapp on "2Jo 12"}

Ver. 33. Now the God of peace] A fit attribute for the present purpose. It is a commendable policy in Christians, when they pray, to propound God to their mind in such notions, and under such titles, as whereby they may see in God the things they desire of God.

Chapter 16

Ver. 1. Servant of the Church] A deaconess to minister to the sick, as #1Ti 5:9, not a praedicantrisse, to preach or have Peter's keys on their belt. (Dr Bastwick against Independency.)

Ver. 2. As becometh saints] Who are great princes, states, in all lands, #Ps 45, and to be observed accordingly, even worthy of God, #3Jo 6.

Ver. 3. Salute Priscilla] She is first mentioned, haply as more forward than her husband in the best things. So was Manoah's wife and Nazianzen's mother.

Ver. 4. Who have for my life] A rare example. Fast friends are in this age for the most part gone on pilgrimage (said one once), and their return is uncertain.

Ver. 5. The church that is in their house] The house of George Prince of Anhalt, for the good orders therein observed, is said to have been Ecclesia, Academia, Curia. the church, the university and the government.

The first fruits of Achaia] The first that received the gospel there. A singular commendation, a sweet happiness. God's soul hath desired such first ripe fruits, #Mic 7:1, such primroses.

Ver. 6. Greet Mary, &c.] It is profitable that men of great parts and place should preserve their memory with others, though it be but in a salutation; for it may be a means to fire up affection to godliness in such whom they so remember.

Ver. 7. Who are of note] Επισημοι, noble, notable Christians, old, experienced, gray-headed disciples. Christianity finds or makes us honourable.

Ver. 8. Greet Amplias] Piety is no enemy to courtesy: it doth not remove, but rectify it.

Ver. 9. Our helper in Christ] A sweet sign to him, that his name was written in the book of life, #Php 4:3.

Ver. 10. Approved in Christ] A high style, far beyond that of the Great Turk, with all his big swollen titles.

Ver. 11. My kinsman] In the flesh, but more in the faith, that surest tie.

Ver. 12. Who labour in the Lord] Though not so much as Persis did, yet doth he not defraud them of their due commendation; Prima sequentem honestum est in secundis tertisque consistere. (Cic. De Orator.) Every man must not look to excel; let him be doing, as he is able.

Ver. 13. His mother and mine] His by nature, mine by affection. The apostles parted with parents and friends at home, found them abroad.

Ver. 14. Salute Asyncritus, &c.] Nothing is said of these; for haste perhaps, or else because they were (as one saith of Jesse, the father of David) Viri, probi et honesti, minus tamen clari, Good honest men, but not much noted. Or, lastly, for that the apostle had no very good opinion of them, as he seems not to have had of Demas, #Col 4:14, 2Ti 4:10, who yet would needs be one in the apostle's register there; a place he will have, though it be the last place. Hermas here mentioned was reputed by some of the ancients to be the author of that Apocryphal Book called "Pastor"; wherein he dealt not so fairly and faithfully in relating what he had received from the apostles, being sublatae fidei auctor. source of the elevated faith.

Ver. 15. And Olympas] Viri, nomen, non mulieris. The name not of a woman, but of a man, saith Beza.

Ver. 16. With a holy kiss] The Independents at Arnheim in Holland propounded this kiss of love to be practised among them. So for anointing the sick with oil, singing of hymns by one man, all the rest being silent, σκοπετε.

Ver. 17. Mark them which] Set a watchful and a jealous eye upon them, as upon pests and enemies. And here, let not our episcopi (whose office it is chiefly) be aposcopi, overseers, be byseers, but look well to the flock, lest these wolves worry them, #Ac 20:29.

And avoid them] Gr. εκκλινατε. Decline them studiously, as ye would do a serpent in your way, or poison in your food.

Ver. 18. But their own bellies] They pretend the service of Christ to their worldly and wicked respects, by a dissembled sanctity, which is double iniquity. The Duke of Bavaria is even eaten up with those Popish flesh flies, friars and Jesuits. It was an honest complaint of a Popish writer, We, saith he, handle the Scriptures, tantum ut nos pascat et vestiat, only for a livelihood; we serve God for gain: as children will not say their prayers unless they be promised their breakfasts. Cajetan writing on #Mt 5:13 "Ye are the salt of the earth," confesseth ingenuously of himself and his fellow prelates, that whereas by their places they should have been the salt of the earth, they had lost their savour, and were good for little else but looking after the rites and revenues of the Church. {a} And such were many of our English prelates grown, before their late extirpation. If you put not into the mouths of these Cerberuses, they would even prepare war against you. Therefore their "sun went down, and the day grew dark over them," #Mic 3:5,6. All seducers are self-seekers: "they teach things that they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake," #Tit 1:11. They are like eagles that soar aloft towards heaven, not for any love of heaven, but that they may spy their prey the sooner, seize upon it the better: or like those ravens in Arabia, that, fully gorged, have a tunable sweet record; but empty, they screech horribly. In parabola oves capras suas quaerunt, comparison to a sheep seeking their nanny-goat, as the ferryman looks one way, rows another.

And by good words, &c.] Those locusts in the Revelation have faces like women, insinuating and flattering. The Valentinian heretics had an art to persuade before they taught, whereas the truth persuadeth by teaching, it doth not teach by persuading. (Tertullian.)

They deceive] As cheaters do, by the cogging of a dye, εν τη κωβεια, #Eph 4:14. Fallax artificium, vel potius artifex fallacia, saith Erasmus on that text, a cumfing kind of cozenage.

Ver. 19. For your obedience, &c.] Whereas the Romans might object, Are we also of those simple ones? Your obedience, saith he, is famous all the world over. Howbeit I would have you wise to that which is good, but simple concerning evil. This simplicity is no disparagement, to be unskilled in the devil's depths, #Re 2:24.

Ver. 20. Shall bruise Satan] Sincerity of a little grace shall be rewarded with abundance of greater graces. Christ our champion hath already won the field, and will shortly set our feet upon the necks of our spiritual enemies. The broken horns of Satan shall be the trumpets of our triumph, and the cornets of our joy.

Ver. 21. Timotheus my workfellow] Of Timothy, read #Ac 16:1,2. Of Lucius, #Ac 13:1. Of Jason, #Ac 17:5. Of Sopater, #Ac 20:4.

Ver. 22. I Tertius who wrote, &c.] Either from the apostle's mouth, or rather out of his foul papers.

Ver. 23. Gaius mine host] Baptized by Paul, for whom therefore, and for other good men, he thought he could never do enough, #1Co 1:14. Such another was Phoebe, #Ro 16:2, who had been a helper, or a hostess, to many, and to myself, saith Paul, Multis hospitium praebeuit. provided much hospitality.

Ver. 24. The grace of our Lord] This is the seal of all St Paul's Epistles, #2Th 3:17.

Ver. 25. Which was kept secret] Even from the very angels, #1Pe 1:12, who do daily profit in the knowledge of this secret, #Eph 3:10.

Ver. 26. According to the commandment] The writings of the prophets concerning the mystery of Christ were not made known to the world by haphazard, but by a special command of God.

For the obedience of faith] Though God purposed good to his people before all worlds, yet that is concealed till such time as they yield this obedience of faith like as water that runs underground, is hidden a long time till it break out suddenly, and then we discover that there was a stream ran underground; as Arethusa and other rivers do.

Ver. 27. To God only wise, &c.] So say I for these few notes thus finished. All that I shall now add is this distich,— “ *Pars superat coepti, pars est exacta laboris:

Hic teneat nostras anchora iacta rates.* ”

1 Corinthians

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. Through the will of God] Not the faculty in God, whereby he willeth, but his act, the thing that he willeth. This will of God is either secret or revealed, #De 22:29. And this revealed will is either of his pleasure, Placiti, or of his good pleasure, Beneplaciti. The former is also in things where the effect is evil; and so God willeth in respect of the end, but not of the means to the end; as in sin, and some miseries. The latter is in those things only where the effect is good, as here, and #Ro 12:2. It was for the very great good of the Church that God would have Paul to be a chosen vessel, to bear his name before the Gentiles, &c., #Ac 9:15. So that Cor Pauli est cor Christi, the heart of Paul is the heart of Christ, as Chrysostom hath it; for, "We have the mind of Christ," #1Co 2:16.

Sosthenes our brother] And companion in the kingdom and patience of Christ, #Re 1:9 Ac 18:17. There he was despitefully entreated, here highly honoured. Christ is a liberal paymaster: never any did or suffered aught for his sake that complained of a hard bargain. It is to my loss (said that martyr) if thou bate me anything in my sufferings. Maiora certamina, maiora sequuntur praemia, After greater battles, greater rewards follow, saith Tertullian.

Ver. 2. Called to be saints] i.e. Either such as are sanctified by habitual infusion, or such as are sanctified by baptismal profession only, that are in covenant with God by sacrifice, #Ps 50:5, and are in Christ, though they bear no fruit, #Joh 15:2. These two sorts of saints make up a true visible Church.

With all that in every place] The apostles then wrote not their Epistles for the particular uses of those times only, as the Jesuits will have it.

Ver. 3. Grace be to you and peace] All peace that flows not from the sense of God's love and favour, is as that of the Romans with the Samnites, unsound and uncertain. Pax infida, pax incerta. Peace with the treacherous is a dubious peace. (Livius.) {See Trapp on "Ro 1:7"}

Ver. 4. I thank my God] Thus he begins most of his Epistles. Deo gratias was ever in Austin's mouth, who had Paul's spirit. Every gracious man is a grateful man. The same Greek word (χαρις) signifieth grace and thanks. Only that part of Abraham's seed that is as the stars of heaven, can in their courses sing a song of praise to God. True it is, that "all his works praise him"; that is, they give matter and occasion so to do; but his saints only bless him, in manner as Paul here doth, #Ps 145:10, and bring actual glory to him, #Eph 1:11,12. Wicked men cannot say, I thank my God, for they have no true notion of God, but as of an enemy; and therefore all their verbal thanks are but as music at funerals, or as the trumpet before a judge, no comfort to the mourning wife or guilty prisoner.

For the grace of God] Intending to chide them, he first commends them, that he may preserve in their hearts an opinion of his love, while he rebuked them sharply, that they might be sound in the faith.

Ver. 5. Ye are enriched] See here what is the Christian's riches. And so David reckons of his wealth, #Ps 119:32. He cannot be poor in whom the word of God dwells richly, #Col 3:16, especially if he be free of discourse, able and willing to communicate. A dumb Christian is to be blamed, as well as a dumb minister.

Ver. 6. The testimony of Christ] The gospel, called also the testimony, #Isa 8:20. To the law, and to the testimony.

Ver. 7. So that ye come behind, &c.] Yet were babes and carnal, #1Co 3:2,3, and fell short in many graces. We must distinguish between gifts and graces, and covet these rather than those, #1Co 13:1.

Ver. 8. In the day of our Lord Jesus] Eleven times in these first ten verses (as Chrysostom well observeth) the apostle mentioneth the Lord Jesus Christ, who was to him, and should be to us, mel in ore, melos in aure, iubilum in corde, honey in the mouth, music in the ear, joy in the heart. (Bernard.) The Jews used to cast to the ground the Book of Esther, before they read it, because the name of God is not in it. This is ill done of them. But that is recorded to the commendation of Augustine, that he cast by Cicero's writings (though otherwise very delightful to him) because he found not in them that mellifluous <sup>{a}</sup> name of Jesus.

Ver. 9. Unto the fellowship] Union being the ground of communion: so that all is in him is for us. I give my goods to the saints, saith David, in the person of Christ.

Ver. 10. That there be no divisions] To break unity in the Church is to cut asunder the very veins and sinews of the mystical body of Christ.

By the name of our Lord] Which is like to suffer by your dissensions, and whereof you ought to be as tender as of treading upon your parents that begat you.

Perfectly joined] Schisms disjoint men; yea, shake them out of their senses, and frighten them out of their wits, #2Th 2:2. {See Trapp on "2Th 2:2"}

Ver. 11. Of the house of Chloe] A godly matron she was no doubt, and a good office herein she did her neighbours: though, likely, she had little thanks for her labour; as likewise Joseph had for bringing his brethren's evil report to their father, #Ge 37:2.

That there are contentions] These often breed schisms; as did the contention between Luther and Carolostadius; and many of the ancient heresies sprang from private grudges and discontents, in sui solatium, for a sorry comfort to those that broached them.

Ver. 12. And I of Christ] q.d. I care neither for Paul nor Apollo, &c. As some say today, they are neither Papists nor Protestants, but Christians, that is, just nothing, flat atheists. Heraclius the emperor being imprudently carried away by some bishops into the opinion of the Monothelites, when that heresy was afterwards condemned by the Council of Jerusalem, the emperor, being ashamed to recant, became a mere neutralist, and held neither one way nor another. And have we not some like-minded among us, who are yet to choose their religion; resolving to resolve on nothing, because (forsooth) there are so many sects and controversies, and such differences in opinion, and contradictions of preachers, therefore they will suspend, serve God (as they call it), and not trouble themselves to know which side hath the better? But these might know, 1. That truth is but one and the same; Christi tunica est unica, Christ's coat is seamless, his truth single, and at good agreement with itself. 2. That we have a most sure word, #2Pe 1:19, sure, and sufficient to perfect the man of God; and that Non est litigiosa iuris scientia sed ignorantia, as the lawyers used to say, it is not too much knowledge, but the ignorance of the Scriptures that begets strife. 3. That God's elect have a promise to be taught of God, to be kept from being finally deceived; to be brought to a certainty and full assurance of what they should hold, so evidently and clearly will God by his Spirit speak to their consciences, that they shall hold fast the faithful word, though they cannot answer every cavil and be unmovable as the centre, as Mount Zion that cannot be stirred. #Mt 24:24 Joh 10:4,5 Job 22:21 1Th 1:5 Joh 7:17 1Jo 2:20 Ps 19:7 Pr 1:4 Isa 52:6 Joh 6:45.

Ver. 13. Baptized in the name] Gr. "Into the name," so as to be called by my name. Those then that will needs be called Franciscans, Lutherans, &c., do after a sort disclaim their baptism, and become renegades from Christ.

Ver. 14. I thank God] He noteth and noticeth herein a sweet providence, beyond all that he then imagined, when he was at Corinth. God is to be seen in every special occurrence.

Ver. 15. Lest any should say] q.d. God hath so disposed of it, that none can with any colour or cause, or show of sense, say such a thing.

Ver. 16. Whether I baptized any] His colleagues belike did it (while he was otherwise busied), with a particular examination and instruction in those principles, #Heb 6:2.

Ver. 17. Not to baptize] As my chief work, {so #Jer 7:22} but to preach and plant Churches, wherein he had a very happy hand; as had likewise Farellus among our late reformers, Qui Mompelgardenses, Aquileienses, Lausanneuses, Genevenses, Novocomenses Ghristo lucrifecit, he gained five cities with their territories to Christ. (Melch. Adam. in Vii. xi.)

Not with wisdom of words] Which yet St Paul could have done as well as another; witness his artificial unstarching of the orator's speech, #Ac 24:10-21. But he liked not to put the sword of the Spirit into a velvet scabbard, that it could not pierce, to speak floride plus quam solide, as those self-seekers at Corinth did, that sought more to tickle the ear than to affect the heart. It repented Augustine (and well it might) that when he was young he had preached more ut placeret, quam ut doceret, to please than to profit. And Luther was wont to say, he is the best preacher that preacheth vulgiter, trivialiter, maximeque ad populi captum. Not but that there is a lawful use of rhetoric in sermons, so it be free from ostentation. See the Preface to my God's Love Tokens.

Ver. 18. To them that perish, foolishness] As it is to the Jews to this day, who rail against Christ's person, calling him the hanged God, the woof and the warp, #Le 13:52, because these two make the figure of the cross. And being asked whether they believe to be saved by Christ's righteousness, they answer, That every fox must pay his own skin to the flayer. The pagans also jeered at Christ and his people, as did Julian, Lucian, Porphyry, &c.

Ver. 19. For it is written] Thus the Old Testament is fulfilled in the New, while the world's wizards are dazzled, dulled, and disannulled, αθετησω.

Ver. 20. Where is the wise?] The teacher of traditions; the Jews had a proverb, οι σοφοι ημων δευτερωσι.

Where is the scribe?] Or the textmen, those that proceed according to the literal interpretation.

Where is the disputer?] The teachers of allegories and mysteries, #1Ti 1:4.

Ver. 21. The world by wisdom] Not the Jews by their deep doctors, nor the Gentiles by their wits and wizards ( qui tanquam noctuae ad solem caligabant), could grope out God, #Ac 17:27, ψηλαφησειαν.

By the foolishness of preaching] An ironic concession; so the mad world esteemeth it, who shall rue for ever the contempt of it, crying out, Nos insensati, &c.

Ver. 22. For the Jews require, &c.] The reason of their rejecting the gospel is, they are prepossessed against it; they look for that which it affordeth not. A prejudicate opinion bars up the understanding. Intus existens prohibet alienum, like muddy water in a vessel, that causeth the most precious liquor to run over.

And the Greeks seek after wisdom] Which yet they attained not. For Sapiens est cui res sapiunt prout sunt, saith Bernard, he is a wise man who conceiveth of things as they are; and all the wisdom of man is only in this, that he rightly know and worship God, saith Lactantius. But this these Greeks could never skill of; no, not these Corinthians (till called and sanctified), who yet were famous for their wisdom (Periander, one of the seven wise men, was a Corinthian), and their city be called by the orator (Cicero) lumen Graeciae, the light of Greece. But whereto tended their light but to light them into utter darkness? And what was all their wisdom without Christ, but earthly, sensual, devilish? #Jas 3:15. Earthly, managing the lusts of the eyes unto the ends of gain; sensual, managing the lusts of the flesh unto ends of pleasure; and devilish, managing the pride of life unto ends of power.

Ver. 23. But we preach Christ] We not only preach of him, but we preach him, we give what we preach. It is the special office of the ministry to lay Christ open, to hold up the tapestry, to untold the hidden mysteries of Christ. The Holy Ghost in them taketh of that which is Christ's, and showeth to men, #Joh 16:15.

Unto the Jews a stumblingblock] These Philistines cannot conceive how out of the eater should come meat, and out of the strong, sweet.

Unto the Greeks] These jeered at Jesus and the resurrection, as at a couple of strange gods, #Ac 17:18. Cato profanely saith, Stultitia est morte alterius sperare salutem: It is a folly to expect safety by the death of another. The gospel was to the Jews a stumblingblock, and to the Greeks a laughing-stock. They both stumbled on the bridge, and so fell into the ditch of destruction.

Ver. 24. Christ the power of God] Opposite to the power of miracles required by the Jews.

And the wisdom of God] Opposite to the Grecian's worldly wisdom.

Ver. 25. Because the foolishness] The wisest man compared to God, Simia videbitur; non sapiens, said Heraclitus, as Plato relateth it, he will appear to be an ape rather than a wise man. But what meant that malicious fool Genebrard, to call reverend Beza, Theomorus for Theodorus? Was it not of God, so to direct the tongue of this Caiaphas the second, that in Beza and himself might this Scripture be fulfilled, το μωρον του θεου σοφωτερον των ανθρωπων, &c., "The foolishness of God," &c.

Ver. 26. Not many mighty] The eagle and lion were not offered in sacrifice, as the lamb and the dove were. It is hard for great ones to deny themselves. Hence it grew to a proverb in times of Popery, that hell was paved with priests' shaven crowns and great men's headpieces. Rasis sacrificulorum verticibus et magnatum galeis. (Jerome.) Indeed if men might pass de deliciis ad delicias, e coeno ad coelum, as Jerome hath it; if they could dance with the devil all day, and sup with Christ at night; if they might live all their lives long in Delilah's lap, and then go to Abraham's bosom when they die, they would have a fine time of it. But that cannot be, and hence so many mighties miscarry.

Not many noble] Blessed be God that any; as Galeacius Caracciolus, an Italian marquis, and nephew to Pope Paul V, was converted by Peter Martyr reading upon this First Epistle to the Corinthians; George Prince of Anhalt, a pious preaching prince, converted by Melancthon; Ulysses Martinengus, earl of Baccha, another Italian convert, and some few more that might be instanced. But good nobles are black swans (saith one) and thinly scattered in the firmament of a state, even like stars of the first magnitude. We may say of such, as Luther (in Epist. ad John Agric.) doth of Elizabeth Queen of Denmark, a pious princess, Scilicet Christus etiam aliquando voluit reginam in caelum vehere. Certainly even Christ ever wished to bear a queen into heaven.

Ver. 27. But God hath chosen] In our Church assemblies the meaner usually, like little fishes, bite more than the greater. The poor are gospelized, #Mt 11:5.

Ver. 28. Things which are not] i.e. That are nought set by, #1Sa 25:10. Thus shall ye say to him that liveth, that is, to him that is rich; for poor men are reputed as dead men. They have but prisoners' pittances, which will keep them alive, and that is all. Arrian upon Epictetus hath observed, that in a tragedy there is no place for a poor man, but only to dance.

Ver. 29. That no flesh] Proud flesh will soon swell, if it have but anything to fasten on. The devil will also easily blow up such a blab.

Ver. 30. But of him are ye] q.d. Albeit ye have nothing of your own, yet in Christ you have all; for in him is all fulness both repletive and diffusive, both of abundance and of redundance too, both of plenty and of bounty.

Is made unto us wisdom] This notes out Christ's prophetic office.

Righteousness and sanctification] By his priestly office.

Redemption] By his kingly office, having fully delivered his from sin, death, and hell; all which is not fully done till after death. And that is the reason why redemption is here set last. See #Ro 8:23 Lu 21:28.

Ver. 31. Glory in the Lord] Acquiesce and exult in him, which is the end why God hath done all this for us in Christ.

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. Not with excellency] St Paul's speech was neque lecta, neque neglecta, neither curious nor careless. Politian could say, that it is an ornament to an epistle to be without ornaments. And yet he had so little grace as to prefer Pindar's Odes before David's Psalms. Hosius also, the cardinal, thought David's Psalms unlearned, applying that, Scribimus indocti doctique poemata passim. Os durum! We write unlearned teachings and poems everywhere. Harsh speech. The Holy Scriptures have a grave eloquence, but lack those pompous and painted words that carnal rhetoricians hunt after. There is difference between a pedantic style and a majestic. Non Oratorum filii sumus, sed Piscatorum, We are not sons of orators but of Picatus, said that great divine to Libanius the rhetorician, that tickled his hearers with tinkling terms, and delighted to wit-wanton it with lascivious phrases of oratory.

Ver. 2. To know anything] To profess or teach any other skill. All the wisdom of a man is in this one thing, saith Lactantius, Ut Christum cognoscat et colat, that he know and worship Christ. Hoc nostrum dogma, haec sententia est., &c.

Ver. 3. In weakness] In misery, and in a mean condition, labouring with his hands, &c., #Ac 18:3.

And in fear] Of adversaries, or through care of discharging my duty among you.

Ver. 4. With enticing words] Religion is not a matter of parts, words, or wit. The devil cares not for the sons of Sceva's adjurations. Abana and Pharpar may cleanse, but Jordan only can cure. God's holy things must be handled, Sancte magis quam scite, with fear and reverence, rather than with wit and dalliance. Let ministers set out the work of God as skilfully and adornedly as they can, but still aim at the winning of souls. Let not the window be so painted as to keep out the light. (The Saint's Everlast. Rest.) Some frothy discourses are like children's babies, that when you have taken away the dressing, you have taken away all; or like beautiful pictures, which have much cost bestowed on them to make them comely and desirable to the eye; but life, heat, and motion there is none. O pulchrum caput! sed sensus non inest, Oh beautiful head but no feeling there, said the ape in the fable. Prudentibus viris non placent phalerata, sed fortia, said Bishop Jewel, who ever loved a manlike eloquence, but not that which is effeminate. No more did Reverend Mr Samuel Crook, but ever shunned those more gay and lighter flourishes of a luxuriant wit, wherewith the emptiest cells affect to be most fraught, as they who for lack of wares in their shops set up painted blocks to fill up vacant shelves. (Clark's Lives; Life of Master Crook, by W. G.)

In demonstration of the spirit] With demonstrations fetched out of the very marrow of the Scriptures. It must be an elaborate speech that shall work upon the conscience. A man must enlighten with his own other men's understandings, and heat by his own other men's affections. Si vis me flere, &c. (Horat.) Bonaventure's words in preaching were non inflantia sed inflammantia, not high-swelling, but inflaming his hearers. (Mr Clark's Life of Bonav.)

Ver. 5. That your faith, &c.] A human testimony can breed but a human faith. Aaron's bells were of pure gold; our whole preaching must be Scripture-proof, or it will burn, and none be the better for it. Ut drachmam auri sine imagine principis, sic verba hortantis sine auctoritate Dei contemnunt homines, saith Lipsius.

In the power of God] In the gospel that lodgeth a certainty in the soul.

Ver. 6. Wisdom among the perfect] Or those that are grown to maturity. Some think the apostleorroweth this term from the pagans' superstition, who admitted none to their most secret ceremonies, but only persons well prepared and purified for many years.

Yet not the wisdom, &c.] Which is like the labour of moles, that dig dexterously underground, but are blind above ground, and never open their eyes, saith Pliny, till pangs of death are upon them. Cry we after Christ, as the blind man in the gospel did, who when he was asked, What wouldst thou have? "Lord," saith he, "that mine eyes may be opened." Philosophers observe, that lumen est vehiculum influentiae; light begets the flower in the field, the pearl in the sea, the precious stone in the earth; so the foundation of all renovation is illumination. O cry aloud to the Father of lights, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ, #2Co 4:6. This will hold out, when the wisdom of this world and the philosophorum facile principes "come to nought."

That come to nought] That are tumbled into hell with all their learning ( nos cum doctrinis nostris, &c. Aug.), which doth but light them into utter darkness.

Ver. 7. Wisdom of God in a mystery] While God did not divide himself into a merciful Father and a just Judge (as Valerius speaketh of Zaleucus), but declared himself to be both a perfectly merciful Father, and withal a perfectly just Judge; which was such an act of wisdom as the world never heard of. This is that great mystery of godliness, #1Ti 3:16.

Ver. 8. Which none of the princes] He calleth the Pharisees and philosophers princes, for their learning, as being himself a scholar. Only he might well have said of them, as Cicero of others in another case, Mihi quidem nulli satis eruditi videntur, quibus nostra sunt ignota, I cannot take them for scholars that partake not of our learning. (Cicero de Poetis Latinis.)

None of the princes of this world knew] Because their learning hung in their light. So it fared with Ulpian the chief lawyer, Galen the chief physician, Porphyry the chiefest Aristotelian, and Plotinus the chief Platonist, who were professed enemies to Christ and his truth. So were Libanius and Lucian, the chief scholars of their time. None miscarry oftener than men of greatest parts. None are so deep in hell as those that are most knowing. They see no more into the mystery of Christ than illiterate men do into the profound points of astronomy. As a man may look on a trade and never see the mystery of it; or he may look on the letter, and never understand the sense; so here.

For had they known it, &c.] It was ignorance then that crucified Christ, #Ac 3:17. And St Paul thanks his ignorance for his persecuting and blaspheming, #1Ti 1:15 "The dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty," #Ps 74:20. And they proceed from evil to evil, because they know not me, saith the Lord, #Jer 9:3. Surely as toads and serpents grow in dark and dirty cellars, so doth all sin and wickedness in an ignorant and blind soul. The Platonist held, that men sin only by ignorance. And Omnis peccans est ignorans, saith Aristotle. In blind ale houses is abundance of disorder, &c.

Ver. 9. Eye hath not seen, &c.] It is reported of one Adrianus, that seeing the martyrs suffer such grievous things, he asked the cause; one of them answered, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things that God hath prepared for them that love him." The naming of which text so wrought upon him that afterward he became a martyr.

The things which God hath prepared] As he prepared Paradise for Adam, so heaven for all his. Yet he reserves not all for the life to come, but gives a few grapes of Canaan in this wilderness. And so this text is to be understood of gospel joy and those present comforts that the saints have here, that praemium ante praemium; for not only after, but in the doing of God's will there is great reward, #Ps 19:11, such as natural eye hath not seen nor ear heard: the stranger meddleth not with this joy; it is the sparkle of that white stone, it is that new name known to none but those that have it; it is a comfort confined to the communion of saints.

Ver. 10. But God hath revealed] The Chinese use to say of themselves, that all other nations of the world see but with one eye, they only with two. This is most true of the natural man compared to the spiritual.

Ver. 11. Save the Spirit, &c.] Man knows his inward thoughts, purposes, and desires, but the frame and disposition of his own heart he knows not, #Jer 17:9.

Knoweth no man] How can he that cannot tell the form and quintessence of things, that cannot enter into the depths of the flowers, or the grass he treads on, have the wit to enter into the deep things of God, hidden from angels till the discovery, and since that they are students in it?

But the Spirit of God] With this heifer of his, therefore, we must plough, if we will ever understand his riddles.

Ver. 12. Not the spirit of the world] The world lieth down in that unclean one, and is under the power and vassalage of that spirit that worketh in the children of disobedience, as a smith in his forge, #1Jo 5:19 Eph 2:2. It is wholly "set upon wickedness," as Aaron saith of the people, #Ex 32:22.

That we might know] A sweet mercy; the cormorants of the world will not let their heirs know what they will do for them till they die. But God assures his of heaven beforehand. Thus we have not received of the spirit of this world: we cannot shift and plot as they can; but we have received a better thing, and have no reason to repine.

Ver. 13. But which the Holy Ghost teacheth] So that not the matter only, but words also of Holy Scripture are dictated by the Spirit, and are therefore to be had in higher estimation, #2Pe 1:21.

Comparing] Or co-apting (συγκρινοντες), fitting spiritual words to spiritual matters, that all may savour of the Spirit.

Ver. 14. But the natural man] This mere animal (ψυχικος), that hath no more than a reasonable soul and natural abilities, #Jude 19. Such was that sapless fellow, לֵבִי #Ps 14:1, that may have a disciplinary knowledge, that is, by hearsay, as a blind man hath of colours, but not an intuitive per speciem propriam, through their very own sight. The water riseth no higher than the spring from whence it came; so natural men can ascend no higher than nature. If the unreasonable creatures could draw a picture of God, said Xenophanes, they would certainly paint him like themselves, quia scilicet nihil animal animali superius cogitare potest, because they can think of nothing above themselves.

Neither can he know them] They that are blear eyed and weak sighted, if at any time they set themselves to see better into a thing, they see the worse (Vives in Aug. de Civ. Dei, xxii. 6), so here; nay more, in our nature there is an antipathy to divine truth. We love the law better than the gospel, and any truth better than the law.

Because they are spiritually] Ambrose reads, Because he is spiritually judged, being delivered up to a reprobate sense. But the other reading is better.

Ver. 15. Judgeth all things] By his spirit of discerning, #1Co 14:2, his spiritual senses exercised to discern good and evil, #Heb 5:14, his undoubted persuasion of that truth he professeth, #Col 2:3, and whereof he hath felt the sweetness, #Col 1:9. Papists will needs have this spiritual man that judgeth all things, yet he himself is judged of none, to be the pope. But when this Epistle was written, there was no such thing as a pope; no such doctrine as that the pope is infallible; that he must not be contradicted though he speak blasphemy or heresy; no, though he should draw thousands of souls after him to hell, say the Canonists, those abominable slowbacks. St Paul, who had the mind of Christ, was never of this mind.

Is judged of no man] Of no natural man, who can judge no more of divine truths than a blind man can do of colours, or a sick man of meats. And herein the poorest idiot (saith one), being a sound Christian, goeth beyond the profoundest clerks that are not sanctified, that he hath his own heart instead of a commentary, to help to understand even the most needful points of the Scripture.

Ver. 16. But we have the mind of Christ] This is a privilege confined to the communion of saints, to have communication of Christ's secrets, to be as it were of his court and council. One saith of Dr Sibbs, that he was a man spiritually rational, and rationally spiritual, one that seemed to see the insides of nature and grace, and the world and heaven, by those perfect anatomies he had made of them all.

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. Could not speak unto you] Unless I would beat the air, and lose my sweet words: q.d. You quarrel me for a shallow trivial teacher, when yourselves are in fault, as not yet capable of more mysterious matter. Our Saviour preached (not as he could have preached, but) "as the people were able to hear," #Mr 4:33. So the author to the Hebrews, #1Co 5:11. Some impute not their profiting to the minister, as he in Seneca, that having a thorn in his foot complained of the roughness of the way as the cause of his limping. Or as she in the same author, that being struck with a sudden blindness, bade open the windows, when as it was not lack of light, but lack of sight that troubled her.

As unto carnal, even as unto babes] Or, at least as unto babes, not yet past the spoon, and that must have their meats masticated for them by their nurses.

Ver. 2. I have fed you with milk] Ministers must condescend to their hearers' capacities, though they be slighted for so doing, as Paul was; or jeered, as Isaiah, #Isa 28:9,10, for his "line upon line, precept upon precept," Kau lekau, and Zau lezau; the sound of the words carries a taunt, as scornful people by the tone of their voice and rhyming words, scorn at such as they despise.

Ver. 3. For ye are yet carnal] It is a shame for Christians to be like other men, as Samson was after he had lost his hair. It ill becomes those excellent ones of the earth, princes in all lands, to contend and quarrel, as those terrigeneae fratres earthly brothers used to do. By the laws of England, noblemen have this privilege, that none of them can be bound to the peace; because it is supposed that the peace is always bound to them, and that of their own accord they will be careful to preserve it.

Envyng and strife, &c.] These overflowings of the gall and spleen came from a fulness of bad humours.

And walk as men] Christians should be as Saul was, higher than the people by head and shoulders. Something singular is expected from them, #Mt 5:47; they should have their feet where other men's heads are, #Pr 15:24. When we do evil, we work de nostro et secundum hominem, we do our kind, as the devil when he speaks lies, speaks de suo, of his own, #Joh 8:44.

Ver. 4. For when one saith, &c.] So those that will needs be called Lutherans, Iurantque in verba magistri. They swear in the words of a teacher. Did not Luther play the man, when he and other Dutch divines advised Philip Landgrave of Hesse, a pious prince, to marry a second wife, that is, an adulteress, while his lawful wife was yet alive? And might he not deceive and be deceived in other things as well as in that? (Zanch. Miscel. Epist. Dedicat.)

Are ye not carnal?] Nay, will not the world think ye are mad? as the apostle speaks in a like case, #1Co 14:23. Will they not think worse. See #Joh 17:21,23. If Christians unite not, if they fall out and wrangle, the world will think "thou never sentest me," saith our Saviour.

Ver. 5. But ministers] Not masters, as Magistri nostri Parisienses. (Praefat. in 1 Sentent.) So the Sorbonists will needs be called, contrary to #Jas 3:1. Bacon the Carmelite was called Doctor resolutissimus, most free, because he would endure no May-bes.

Ver. 6. But God gave the increase] The harp yields no sound till it be touched by the hand of the musician. The heart is never made good till the heavens answer the earth, #Ho 2:21, till God strikes the stroke. Holy Melancthon, being newly converted, thought it impossible for his hearers to withstand the evidence of the gospel. But soon after he complained that old Adam was too hard for young Melancthon. No man can run the point aright, except God give wind to his sails; as, if he speak the word, our words shall not be only like Peter's angle, which took a fish, but like Peter's net, which enclosed a multitude of fishes.

Ver. 7. So then neither is he, &c.] This made Cyril to conclude his preface to his catechism, with Meum est docere, vestrum auscultare, Dei perficere: I may teach, and you hear, but God must do the deed when all is done. Else we may preach and pray to the wearing of our tongues to the stumps (as Bradford said), and to no more purpose than Bede did when he preached to a heap of stones.

Ver. 8. And he that watereth are one] Why then are not you at one? Should ye not follow your leaders, press their footsteps? Surely you would, did you not more mind party than peace. Maxima pars studiorum, est studium partium; a hateful kind of study.

Shall receive his own reward] Those ambitious doctors that draw disciples after them, hunting after popular applause (that empty blast of stinking breath), shall have that for their reward; let them make them merry with it. When faithful ministers shall shine as stars, #Da 12:3.

Ver. 9. For we are labourers, &c.] Let ministers hence learn their, 1. Dignity; 2. Duty. Fructus honos oneris, Fructus honoris onus. Who would not work hard with such sweet company?

Ver. 10. As a wise master builder] Artificers also have their wisdom, as Aristotle yieldeth. "For his God doth instruct him to discretion, and doth teach him," #Isa 28:26. As he did Bezaleel and Aholiah.

Ver. 11. Which is Jesus Christ] The doctrine of his person and offices is the foundation of Christian religion, and must therefore be kept pure and entire by all means possible. Arius's ομοιουσιος, would not be yielded; nor Nestorius's θεοδοχος, for θεοστοκος. So religious were the old bishops, that they would not alter or exchange a letter or a syllable in these fundamentals. Every particle of truth is precious, and not to be parted with.

Ver. 12. Wood, hay, stubble] Rhetorical strains, philosophical fancies, that tend not to edification. There are those who together with the gold, silver, and ivory of sound and savoury truths, have, as Solomon's ships had, store of apes and peacocks, conceits and crotchets. Now if he that debases the king's coin, deserve punishment; what do they that, instead of the tried silver of divine truths, stamp the name and character of God upon Nehushtan, their own base brazen stuff?

Ver. 13. For the day shall declare it] That is, the light of the truth, or time, the father of truth, or the day of death, when many recognize and recant their errors, shall show them their sin.

Ver. 14. If any man's work abide] Error as glass is bright, but brittle, and cannot endure the hammer or fire, as gold can, which, though rubbed or melted, remains firm and orient.

Ver. 15. He shall suffer loss] Of his work (his laborious loss of time) and of some part of his wages.

Yet so as by fire] Not of purgatory (a Popish fiction), but of the Holy Ghost. Or (as one interprets it) like unto them who save themselves naked out of the fire without carrying away any of their goods; so his person shall be saved, but he shall not have the reward of a well-qualified minister.

Ver. 16. Ye are the temple of God] Not God's building only, as #1Co 3:9, but his temple. A mud wall may be made up of anything, not so the walls of a temple or palace, that must have other materials.

And that the Spirit of God, &c.] Next to the love of Christ indwelling in our nature, we may wonder at the love of the Holy Ghost, that will dwell in our defiled souls. (Dr Sibbs on #Eph 4:30) Let our care be to wash the pavement of this temple with our tears, to sweep it by repentance, to beautify it with holiness, to perfume it with prayers, to deck it with humility, to hang it with sincerity. Delicata res est Spiritus Dei; A sumptuous person is the Spirit of God, the Holy Ghost will dwell in a poor, so it be a pure house. Religion loves to lie clean, as was a grave speech of an ancient saint. Ver. 17. Which temple ye are] Man is God's temple; God man's altar. Demosthenes (contra Aristog.) could say, that man's heart was God's best and most stately temple, Iustitia, verecundia, et observantia legum communium. Justice, respected and heeded, reinforces the law.

Ver. 18. Let no man deceive himself] Bis desipit, qui sibi sapit. Consilii satis est in me mihi, said she in the poet. (Arachne up. Ovid, Metam.) Nothing so easy as to overly ween.

Let him become a fool] Let him come to the well with an empty pitcher, Intus existens prohibet alienum. Agur (if a man may believe him) is more brutish than any man, #Pr 30:2,3. See there how he vilifies, yea, nullifies himself before God. So did blessed Bradford, as appears by the subscriptions of many of his letters.

Ver. 19. He taketh the wise] ο δρασσομενος, those natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, #2Pe 2:12; God takes them and makes fools of them.

In their own craftiness] When they have eviscerated themselves like spiders, tried all conclusions, beaten their brains, searched the devil's skull for new devices, done all that may be done (as the word πανουργια imports) to effect their designs. Versutia veteratoria. God lets them carry the ball on the foot till they are almost at the goal, go to the utmost of their tether, and then pulls them back with shame enough to their task. Thus he dealt by Sennacherib, Haman, Herod, others.

Ver. 20. Of the wise] Such as excel in natural gifts, that are the choicest and most picked men. The Psalmist saith only of men, #Ps 94:12.

Ver. 21. Let no man glory in men] That is, that they are such a one's scholars or followers, seeing the Church is not made for them, but they for the Church.

For all things are yours, &c.] Haec est magnae nostrae Chartulae Epitome, saith Sam. Ward. This is an epitome of the Church's grand grant or charter. A Christian hath interest in, and right to, all these things, 1. Entirely, #Eph 1:23 2:10 Col 3:11. 2. Refinedly, the curse is removed, #Ga 3:13 Pr 10:22. 3. Really, #1Co 7:31 Eph 1:23. 4. Safely, #Pr 1:33 5. Serviceably, #Ro 8:28. 6. Satisfyingly, #Ps 22:26. So that the poor Christian, saith one, is like the usurer, who goes meanly and fares hard, but hath thousands out at use.

Ver. 22. All are yours] Though not in possession, yet in use, or by way of reduction, as we say, the worst things are God's children, and in reversion those best things above.

Ver. 23. And ye are Christ's] We hold all we have in capite tenure in Christ. From Christ therefore let us take our denomination. The name of Jesuits savoureth of blasphemous arrogance.

Chapter 4

Ver. 1. Let a man so account] Quasi dicat, though we are yours, as #1Co 3:22, devoted to the service of your faith, yet are we not to be slighted, but respected as Christ's high stewards.

Ministers of Christ] Gr. υπηρετας, "under rowers" to Christ the master pilot, helping forward the ship of the Church toward the haven of heaven.

Stewards of the mysteries] Dispensing all out of God's goods, and not of our own; setting bread and salt upon the table (that is, preaching Christ crucified) whatever else there is.

Ver. 2. That a man be found faithful] Giving every man his due proportion of fit food, #Mt 24:45, not as he in the emblem, that gave straw to the dog, and a bone to the ass.

Ver. 3. But with me it is, &c.] A good minister reviled, may reply, as once a steward did to his passionate lord, when he called him knave, &c. Your honour may speak as you please, but I believe not a word that you say; for I know myself an honest man. Non curo illos censores, qui vel non intelligendo reprehendunt, vel reprehendendo non intelligunt, saith Augustine. Augustus did but laugh at the satires and buffoonaries which they had published against him. Severus the emperor was careful of what was to be done by him, but careless what was said of him. εμμελης των πρακτεων, αμελης δε των περι αυτου λογοποιουμενων. (Dio.) Do well and bear ill is written upon heaven's gates, said Mr Bradford the martyr. Thou art a heretic, said Woodroof the sheriff, to Mr Rogers the protomartyr, in Queen Mary's days. That shall be known, quoth he, at the day of judgment. Some men flatter me, saith Politian, some others slander me, I think neither the better nor the worse of myself for that; no more than I think myself taller or lower for that my shadow is longer in the morning, and shorter at noon. A Spanish Jesuit, saith Beza (Epist. ad Calvin), disputing with us about the Eucharist, called us foxes, apes, serpents, &c. My answer was, that we believed it no more than we believed transubstantiation.

Ver. 4. Yet am I not, &c.] Paul a chosen vessel, but yet an earthen vessel, knew well that he had his cracks and his flaws, which God could easily find out.

Ver. 5. Until the Lord come] Tot argumeta quot verba, saith Paraeus, every word here hath its weight. There shall be a resurrection one day of names as well as of bodies. Let that stay us when belied or misreported.

And then shall every man have praise of God] His faith (now haply hidden, or not noticed) shall then be "found to praise, honour, and glory," #1Pe 1:7, -praise from the mouth of the Judge, honour in the hearts of saints and angels, glory in the kingdom of heaven after the judgment ended. Christ shall then be not only his compurgator, {a} but his encomiast (eulogizer).

{a} A witness to character who swore along with the person accused, in order to the acquittal of the latter.

ⒺD

Ver. 6. I have in a figure, &c.] i.e. I have represented and reprehended your partialities under our names, when I brought you in saying, "I am of Paul, and I of Apollos," &c., #1Co 1:12. For the heads of your factions were your own ambitious doctors, whose names I yet spared, and took the business upon myself and Apollos, for your sakes.

Ver. 7. For who maketh thee] He directeth his speech to those Theologi gloriae, Preachers of praise, as Luther usually calleth such, those vain glorious, self-ascribing pastors at Corinth, that sought to bear away the bell from Paul, and would not stick to answer this demand of his, Quis te discernit? Who makes you to differ? As that insolent Arminian did, Ego meipsum discerno, I make myself to differ. (Greinchovius.)

And what hast thou, &c.] There are those who would hammer out their own happiness, like the spider, climbing by the thread of her own weaving, with motto accordingly, Mihi soli debeo. I only give to myself.

Why dost thou glory] As great a folly as for the groom to be proud of his master's horse, the stage player of his borrowed robes, or the mud wall of the sunshine. Of all the good that is in us, we may well say as the young man did of his hatchet, Alas, master, it was but borrowed.

Ver. 8. Now ye are rich] Crescit oratio, saith Piscator here. The apostle riseth in his expressions, and that all along by an ironic reprehension. These Corinthians had riches, and gifts, and learning; and carried aloft by these waxen wings, they domineered and despised others.

Ver. 9. As it were men appointed to death] As when he fought with beasts at Ephesus. The heathens in their public calamities would commonly call out, Christianos ad leones, To the lions with these Christians, as if they had been the cause. (Tertul. Apol. cap. xl.) Ignatius suffered in this sort.

A spectacle to the world] As those that were first led in triumph, and then had back again to the prison, there to be strangled. (Piscator.)

Ver. 10. We are fools, &c.] Not to the world only, but in your account too. For these Corinthians undervalued and depressed Paul under their silly shallow headed verbalists, not worthy to carry his books after him for sound and substantial learning.

Ver. 11. Even to this present] Thus he complaineth, not out of impatience (for he was active in his sufferings), but to stain their pride, that permitted it so to be, when it was in their power to have relieved him.

Ver. 12. And labour, working, &c.] Whereas they might object, Are you hungry, thirsty, naked? It is because you are idle. No, saith he, "we labour, working with our hands" (a shame for you to suffer it), and yet can hardly sweat out a poor living. This one example of Paul is much pleaded in these times by men of perverse minds to dispute God out of his own. One apostle works with his hands, or two, now and then at pleasure; all the rest live upon the Church (for could those fishermen catch fish in the forests, deserts, or streets?), yet one Paul is set against all the rest of the apostles; yea, set together by the ears with himself; anything to save their purses.

Ver. 13. Being defamed, we entreat] Though Luther call me devil, saith Calvin, yet I will honour him as a servant of God.

We are made as the filth of the world] q.d. The filth of filth; for the whole world lies in wickedness, as a foul sloven in a slough, or as a carrion in the slime of it. The word περικαθαρματα signifies, the sweepings of the world, or the dirt scraped off the pavement thereof.

And the offscouring of all things] Detersorium, sordes, purgamenta, reiectamenta. Piaculares et abominabiles, saith Paraeus. The word signifies the dung cart, saith Mr Burroughs, that goes through the city, into which every one brings and casts his filth. Every one had some filth to cast upon Paul and the apostles. Constantine, a citizen of Rhoad, with three others, being for defence of the gospel condemned to be burned, were put into a dung cart, who thereat rejoicing, said that they were reputed here the excrements of the world, but yet their death was a sweet odour unto God. Budaeus is of the opinion that the apostle here alludeth to those expiations in use among the heathen, performed in this manner. Certain condemned persons were brought forth with garlands upon their heads in manner of sacrifices; these they would tumble from some steep places into the sea, offering them up to Neptune with this form of words, περιψημα ημων γενου, "Be thou a propitiation for us." (Bud. Pandec.) So for the removal of the pestilence they sacrificed certain men to their gods: these they called καθαρματα, filth, loading them with revilings and cursings. (Suidas in περιηγημ.)

Ver. 14. To shame you] An innocent person sometimes, upon the fulness of an aspersion, may conceive shame, as David did, #Ps 44:15, yet usually shame is the effect of an evil conscience, and may prove, by God's blessing, a means of repentance, #2Th 3:14.

Ver. 15. Ten thousand instructors] Gr. pedagogues, who often prove orbiliusses, sharp and severe above measure, Verberibus pluunt, colaphis grandinant. So did these Corinthian school masters, #2Co 11:20. They were also too well skilled in the Doric dialect, crying, Give, give; and taught little more than elegant elocution.

I have begotten you through the gospel] For together with the word there goeth forth a regenerating power, #Jas 1:18. The exhortations thereof are operative means of sanctification, and practical; as when God said, "Let there be light," or Christ said, "Lazarus, come forth." The Spirit maketh the seed of the word prolific and generative; and hence ministers are made fathers, as Moses was father to Aaron's children, #Nu 3:1, who are therefore there called "his generation." And as propriissimum opus viventis est, generare sibi simile, as saith the philosopher, it is the most proper work of every living thing to beget its like; so here.

Ver. 16. Be ye followers of me] As dear children. A bove maiori discit arare minor. From the larger bull the smaller ones are taught to plough, (Ovid.) Constantine's children resembled their father exactly, they put him wholly on, saith Eusebius, and were, as it were, very he, ολον ενεδυσαντο τον Κονσταντινον.

Ver. 17. For this cause] That ye may be followers of me, and know what I do.

Of my ways which be in Christ] It is of excellent use to know what good men, especially ministers, do, as well as what they say. Ministers' lives should be a transcript of their sermons, or as so many sermons on the life of Christ.

Ver. 18. Now some are puffed up] Swelling in the body is an ill symptom. So it is in the soul. A swelling wall will shortly fall.

Ver. 19. Not the speech of them which are puffed up] Dicta factis deficientibus, erubescunt. Malo autem miserandum quam erubescendum, saith Tertullian, either add practice, or leave profession for shame.

Ver. 20. The kingdom of God] i.e. The administration of his ordinances and government of the Church.

Ver. 21. With a rod, or in love?] Both; but (as children) we think not so. Sed sinite virgam corripientem, ne sentiatis malleum conterentem, saith one father. (Bern.) Non erudit pater nisi quem amat, nec corripit nisi quem diligit, saith another. (Jerome.)

Chapter 5

Ver. 1. As is not so much as named] To wit, without detestation. The apostle seems to allude to Antiochus Soter, who married his step-mother Stratonice, being first like to die for love of her, as Erasistratus the physician told his father. (Aelian.) Of this incestuous marriage came Antiochus Theos, or Antiochus the god, so called of the Milesians, because he did put down their tyrant Timarehus. This god was poisoned by his wife Laodice.

Among the Gentiles] In Mexico and those parts, whoredom, sodomy, and incest (those Spanish virtues, as one calleth them) are common without reproof; the pope's pardons being more rife in those parts than in any part of Europe for these abominable filthinesses, whereout he sucketh no small advantage. (Sir Fra. Drake.) Notwithstanding, the Indians abhor this most loathsome living; showing themselves in respect of the Spaniards, as the Scythians did in respect of the Grecians, whom they so far excelled in life and behaviour as they were short of them in learning and knowledge. Who hath not heard of the abhorred incest of the house of Austria? King Philip II could call Archduke Albert both brother, cousin, nephew, and son. (Spec. Europ.) For all this was he to him either by blood or affinity; being uncle to himself, first cousin to his father, husband to his sister, and father to his wife; and all this by papal dispensation. The Papists themselves write with detestation, that in Rome a Jewish maid might not be admitted into the stews of whoredom, unless she would be first baptized. (Espenc. de Continen. iii. 4.)

That one should have his father's wife] Ethelbald, king of West Saxons, with great infamy marrying his father's widow Judith, enjoyed his kingdom but two years and a half. (Daniel's Hist. of Eng.)

Ver. 2. And ye are puffed up] And yet ye are puffed up (so Piscator reads it), viz. with your spiritual gifts, and your brave teachers; whereas you have more cause to be cast down for your other men's sins now made yours, because unlamented by you. There were great divisions among them at this time; and when this incest occurred, the other faction thought they had an advantage against the whole party, and this puffed them up,—Nay, do ye not see what one of them hath done, &c.

And have not rather mourned] That any of you should incur the censure of excommunication; at which time they did anciently fast and lament.

Ver. 3. Have judged already, &c.] q.d. I by mine apostolic authority do excommunicate him. And yet how fiercely doth learned Erastus contend with Calvin and Beza about excommunication, denying the Church any such power. The Jews had their three sorts of excommunication. The heathen also had theirs; among the old Gauls, if any one did not obey the decrees of their Druids or priests, he was forbidden their sacrifices; and therehence shunned by all as a wicked man, he had no benefit of their laws, nor any respect given him, &c.

Ver. 4. With the power of our Lord] Promised, #Mt 18:18-20. This makes it to be a heavy case to be rightly excommunicated. Indeed it may happen that Jonah shall be cast out of the ship, when Ham shall be reserved in the ark. "Your brethren that hated you, that cast you out for my name's sake said (for a pretence), Let the Lord be glorified; but he shall appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed," #Isa 66:5. When the sentence of excommunication began with, In nomine Domini, In the name of God, to be read against a certain martyr, he cried out, as well he might, You begin in a wrong name. And another of them, together with his five fellow sufferers, did formally excommunicate their persecutors. It grew to a common proverb, by the abuse of this ordinance in those corrupt times, In nomine Domini incipit omne malum. In the name of God all evil matters start.

Ver. 5. To deliver such an one to Satan] That he may learn not to blaspheme, that is, not to cause others to blaspheme or speak evil of the good way of God, for his flagitious courses.

Ver. 6. Your glorying is not good] It is the height of wickedness to glory in wickedness, as Lamech, #Ge 4:23,24, and Alexander Pheraeus, who consecrated the javelin wherewith he had slain Polyphron. Protagoras boasted that he had spent forty years in corrupting of youth. (Plato.) Mark Antony vomited out a book concerning his own ability to eat and drink much. Joannes a Casa, dean of the pope's chamber, wrote a poem in commendation of his own beastly sin of sodomy. And Stokesly, Bishop of London in King Henry VIII's time, lying at point of death, rejoiced, boasting that in his lifetime he had burned fifty heretics, that is, good Christians. (Acts and Mon.)

A little leaven leaveneth, &c.] One spoonful of vinegar will soon sour a great deal of sweet milk; but a great deal of milk will not so soon sweeten one spoonful of vinegar. One sinner may destroy much good, saith Solomon, #Ec 9:18. He may be a common mischief, if tolerated, by spreading the infection of his wickedness, which is more catching than the plague.

Ver. 7. As ye are unleavened] viz. In part sanctified. Every new man is two men. Many a one that is merry in company hath a shrew at home; so have the best their inward troubles. The comfort is, that God overlooks our involuntary infirmities, and accounts us unleavened, when yet there is much still to be purged out. The leper, when his leprosy began but to heal, was pronounced clean, because then he went on still to heal, and his leprosy to shale off.

Ver. 8. Let us keep the feast] The benefits we receive by Christ should crown the calendar of our lives with continual festivals; yea, make us everlastingly merry at our convivium iuge everflowing feast of a good conscience. Diogenes could say, that a good man keeps every day a holy day. (Plut.) And the Jews were bound to rejoice at all their feasts. "Eat therefore thy meat with joy, and drink thy wine with gladness, since God now accepteth thy works," #Ec 9:7.

Ver. 9. Not to company with fornicators] Dion Chrysostom saith, that Corinth was the most luxurious and lascivious city in the world, πολιν επαφροδιτατην. Strabo saith, that Venus had a most stately temple there, that was kept by more than a thousand beautiful courtesans. Another saith, that it was the brothel house of Greece, and a most filthy market town of abominable lusts. (Molin.) Cicero indeed calleth it lumen Groeciae, the light or eye of Greece. It might be so in some respects. But surely this sin was no small snuff in this light, but a blemish in this eye.

Ver. 10. Yet not altogether, &c.] Here he lets them know that in that former epistle (not extant now) he meant not that they should wholly sever themselves from those wicked that are yet without the Church (for that they cannot do), but from profligate professors, disinct Christians, that they may be ashamed.

Ver. 11. Not to keep company] Gr. συναμιγνυσθαι, not to be mingled with them. The rivers of Peru, after they have run into the main sea, yea, some write twenty or thirty miles, they keep themselves unmixed with the salt water; so that a very great way within the sea men may take up as fresh water as if they were near the land. So at Belgrade in Hungary, where the Danube and Sara (two great rivers) meet, their waters mingle no more than water and oil, &c. We must so converse with the wicked, as that we commingle not by holding any needless society with such, no, not with him that is called a brother, but belies his profession. Yet still must we perform to such, though excommunicated, offices of charity, natural and civil duties, as those of parents toward their children, of children toward their parents, and the like. But come not near such stinking stuff, except ye have the wind of it.

Ver. 12. Them also that are without] These come not under the verge of Church censures, #Re 22:15.

Ver. 13. Therefore put away] Gr. ἐξαρπείτε, Ye will put away, q.d. I hope ye will, though hitherto ye have not. Soft words and hard arguments do soonest prevail, especially when we reprove or admonish not in our own, but in God's words, as here the apostle doth out of #De 13:1-5. Some warmth must be in a reproof, but it must not be scalding hot. Aegros, quos potus fortis non curavit, ad salutem pristinam aqua tepens revocavit, saith Gregory. They that could not be cured with strong potions, have been recovered with warm water. Gentle showers, and dews that distil leisurely, do comfort the earth, when dashing storms drown the seed.

Chapter 6

Ver. 1. Go to law before the unjust] All unbelievers are, 1. Void of Christ's righteousness imputed; 2. Of true civil righteousness, as being self-seekers in all. 3. They oppress the saints, and draw them before the judgment seats, #Jas 2:6, where they are so ill dealt with oftentimes, that they come to be of Themistocles' mind, who professed, that if two ways were showed him, one to hell, and the other to the bar, he would choose that which went to hell, and forsake the other.

And not before the saints] Christians first brought their causes before the bishops to be judged. And hence grew their power (as Paraeus noteth), which the Christian emperors first would not, and afterwards could not, take away from them. This raised papacy and prelacy to such a height, they would be princes as well as bishops.

Ver. 2. Shall judge the world] That is, the wicked, called the inhabitants of the earth, and of the sea, #Re 12:12, in opposition to the burgesses of the New Jerusalem, #Php 3:20. And let this comfort us under the perverse censures of worldly men, mad and beside themselves in point of salvation. The Lord seeth that their day is coming, #Ps 37:13.

Ver. 3. Things that pertain to this, &c.] That serve to and satisfy the body only, being nec vera, nec vestra, #Lu 16:11,12.

Ver. 4. If then ye have judgments] As the Corinthians, being many of them merchants, had many lawsuits. But if men's hearts were not bigger than their suits, there would not be half so many.

Who are least esteemed] Rather than go to law before heathen judges. The lowest, if of any judgment, are high enough for such a purpose. Why should those sordida poscinumia, qui latrocinia intra moenia exercent, as Columella hath it, those Crumenimulgae, the unconscionable lawyers, make a spoil of us; and then when they die, build hospitals for fools, as one of them did, saying, Of fools I got my estate, and to fools I will leave it. Of those that go to law, we may well say, as Charondas once did of those that go to sea, Se non mirari qui semel mare ingressus sit, sed qui iterum, that he marvelled not at those that went once, but at those that would go again.

Ver. 5. No, not one that shall be able] Our late judge Dier, if there came any controversies of poor men to be tried before him, would usually say, that either the parties are wilful, or their neighbours uncharitable, because their suits were not quietly ended at home. (The Practice of Quietness.)

Ver. 6. But brother goeth to law] Once it was counted ominous to commence actions, and follow suits. Of common barreters, we may say as the historian doth of mathematicians, Genus hominum quod in nostra repub. et vetabitur semper, et retinebitur. (Tacit.)

But brother] Still Satan is thus busy, and Christians are thus malicious; that, as if they wanted enemies, they fly in one another's faces, as did Epiphanius and Chrysostom, Luther and Zuinglius, Hooper and Ridley, Taylor and Lambert, those English exiles at Frankfort in Queen Mary's days, and Knox, &c.

Ver. 7. There is utterly a fault] Gr. ηττημα, a disgrace, a loss of victory: q.d. By your litigious lawing one another, you betray a great deal of weakness and impotency of affection. These be ignoble quarrels, Ubi et vincere inglorium est, et atteri sordidum. {See Trapp on "Ro 12:21")

Because ye go to law] Lightly for every small offence (which if Mahometans do, they are publicly punished), and with spiteful vindictive spirits; whereas in going to law, men should not be transported with hate or heat, but as tilers break their spears on each other's breasts, yet without wrath or intention of hurt, so, &c. The French are said to be very litigious, and full of lawsuits.

Ver. 8. Nay, you do wrong] In person and name.

And defraud] Of goods and estate.

And that your brethren] Which very name should charm and allay all discords, as between Abraham and Lot, #Ge 13:8. Aristotle could say, It is better to suffer wrong than to do it. And, I know how to bear injuries, Εγω μεν επισταμαι αδικεισθαι, said Chilo to his brother, who took it ill that he was not chosen to be one of the judges.

Ver. 9. Shall not inherit] It is an undefiled inheritance, #1Pe 1:4; no dirty dog ever trampled on that golden pavement, #Re 22:15.

Heaven spewed out the angels; shall it lick up the unrighteous? The serpent could screw himself into Paradise, but no wicked could ever get into heaven. There is no happiness to be had without holiness. Let none think to break God's chain, as Balaam, #Nu 23:10.

Ver. 10. Nor thieves, nor covetous] These two be fitly set together, as near akin; so are drunkards and railers.

Nor extortioners] Whose sin is properly immoderate getting, as that of the covetous consists in pinching and saving. So #1Ti 3:3.

Ver. 11. Such were some of you] Oh, the infinite goodness of God, that would once look upon such walking dunghills, such monstrous miscreants!

But ye are washed] In general; as in particular, 1. Ye are sanctified And that by the Spirit of our God. 2. Ye are justified And that in the name, or by the righteousness, of our Lord Jesus Christ. His blood cleanseth us from sins, both guiltiness and filthiness. It is like to those sovereign mundifying waters, which so wash off the corruption of the ulcer, that they cool the heat and stay the spread of the infection, and by degrees heal the same. {See Trapp on "Ro 11:26"} {See Trapp on "Re 19:8"} God never pays our debts, but he gives us a stock of grace.

Ver. 12. All things are lawful] viz. All indifferent things, among which the Corinthians reckoned not only meats and drinks, but also fornication (their national sin). The devil perhaps had persuaded them, as he hath done the Turks to this day, that God did not give men such appetites to have them frustrate, but enjoyed, as made for the gust (appetite) of man, not for his torment, wherein his Creator delights not. Now the apostle grants, that for meats all things are lawful (yet in case of offence or intemperance, they may become inexpedient, and so unlawful). But for fornication, it was utterly unlawful, as he proves by many powerful arguments.

But I would not be brought] As those swinish surfeiters, that wearing their brains in their bellies (with the ass fish), their guts in their heads, do dig their graves with their own teeth; being like the mule, which cannot travel, they say, without a bottle of hay hanging at his nose.

Ver. 13. God shall destroy] The belly shall be destroyed in the other world, not for the substance of it, but for the use of it. And the same may be said for the difference of sexes; the parts shall remain, the use cease. Cato said well, that he was an ill commonwealth's man, qui inter guttur et inguen, cuncta sub ventris ditione posuisset, who between his neck and his privates he would be able to be under spread of his belly, that was a slave to his sensual appetite.

Ver. 14. And will also raise us up] He will make our vile bodies to be like unto his glorious body, the standard. Shall we then defile them with the kitchen stuff of uncleanness?

Ver. 15. Shall I then take] Scipio, when a harlot was offered him, said, Vellem, si non essem imperator; I would, if I were not a general. Say thou, if I were not a Christian.

And make them the members of a harlot] A saint cannot indeed be made the member of a harlot (saith a reverend man), because not κολλωμενος, glued or knit to any sin. Though a member of Christ and sin may fall one upon another, and touch each other; yet they are of a mouldering nature, and will not cleave together. Water and oil violently shaken together may seem to mingle, but will not continue so long; there is no coalition, because they are of diverse natures; the one remaineth water still, and the other oil.

Ver. 16. Is one body] By a most strict but vicious and infamous bond (saith an interpreter), which is sufficient to untie or break any other bond, though lawful and holy, either corporal or spiritual.

Ver. 17. Is one spirit] That is, one spiritual body: while Christ lays hold on us by his Spirit, we lay hold on him by faith. Hence the Church is called Christ, #1Co 12:12, and the fulness of Christ, #Eph 1:23. We have the honour of making Christ perfect, as the members do the body.

Ver. 18. Flee fornication] φευγετε. With post haste flee it.

“Laeta venire Venus, tristis abire solet.”

Be not of those men that are called Borboritae of their miry filthiness, whom Epiphanius and Oecumenius speak of.

Ver. 19. That your body is the temple] Shall we make the temple of God the stews of Satan See #1Co 3:16. Antiochus and Pompey never prospered after that they defiled the temple.

Ver. 20. Ye are bought] Shall I drink the blood of these men? saith David. So, shall I abuse my body, the price of Christ's blood, abandon it to venery? &c.

Glorify God in your body] The very Manichees that denied God to be the author of the body, fasted on sabbath days, and in fasting exercised a humiliation of the body. Pone in pectore dextram. (Pers.) Let God have heart and hand, mind and mouth, faith and feet, spirit, soul, and body, #1Th 5:23, all which are his by a manifold right.

Chapter 7

Ver. 1. Whereof ye wrote unto me] Certain cases of conscience they had propounded, which here he answers. This he could do excellently, and so could Luther, as having had experience, and been much beaten and exercised with spiritual conflicts. Conscience is a diamond, and will be wrought on by nothing but dust of diamond, such as contrition hath ground it to.

It is good for a man] Now since the fall, it is good, i.e. convenient for the many troubles of the married state. It is not evil to marry, but good to be wary, else coniugium may prove coniurgium, marriage a mar-age.

Ver. 2. To avoid fornication] Gr. πορνείας, fornications, comprehending all lustful burnings, self-pollutions, and all other impurities of a single life. How many are there that enter into God's ordinance (marriage) through the devil's portal (fornication), that take such liberty before, that after marriage they rue it all the days of their lives.

Let every man have his own wife] Not many wives. Turks may have as many as they can keep. And some sensualists plead now for polygamy. See #Mal 2:15. Scotorum natio uxores proprias non habet, saith Jerome of the old Scots. And too many among us are sick of a pleurisy. {a}

{a} Inflammation of the pleura, with or without effusion of fluid (serum, pus, blood, etc.) into the pleural cavity; a disease characterized by pain in the chest or side, with fever, loss of appetite, etc.; usually caused by chill, or occurring as a complication of other diseases (scarlatina, rheumatic fever, phthisis, etc.). ED

Ver. 3. Let the husband, &c.] Let them be chaste between themselves, and beware both of excess and defect. Chastity is a man's honour, #1Th 4:5. And modesty is the best preserver of nuptial chastity. Marriage as well as meats must be sanctified by the word and prayer. God must be sent for to bless this physic to the soul. Raging lust is a great enemy to conjugal love.

Ver. 4. The wife hath no power, &c.] The husband's body is servant to the wife, and the wife's to the husband: they have passed themselves one to another by mutual covenant, and God keeps the bonds, #Pr 2:17 Mal 2:14.

Ver. 5. To fasting and prayer] Preces nobis ieiuniis alendum et quasi saginandum. Fasting days are soul fattening days: prayer is edged and winged thereby.

That Satan tempt you not] The temptation is strong to fornication, stronger to adultery. Watch therefore. Our nature is catching this way; and once in, it is not so easy to come off. This is a searing sin, #Ho 4:11 Eph 4:19.

Ver. 6. And not of commandment] Among the Jews marriage was not held a thing indifferent, or at their own liberty to choose or refuse, but a binding command. (Targum on #Ge 1:28) Hereto Paul seems in this verse to allude. In this day every Jew is bound to marry about 18 years of age, or before 20; else he is accounted as one that liveth in sin.

Ver. 7. For I would that all, &c.] He had a peculiar gift, that he was so eminently chaste; such as might be in reprobates. So Moses' meekness was partly from his natural temper. And Luther's not being tempted to covetousness was much helped by the freeness and generousness of his spirit.

Ver. 8. I say therefore to the unmarried] Yet doth not the apostle simply prefer virginity on viduity before marriage as better. The Saturnalian heretics said that marriage was of the devil. And the blemish will never be wiped off some of the ancient fathers, who, to establish their own idol of I know not what virginity, which they themselves had not, have written most wickedly and basely of marriage. If the same God had not been the author of virginity and marriage, he had never countenanced virginity by marriage, as he did in the blessed Virgin.

Ver. 9. Let them marry] There is no lust so hot and violent, but God's medicines rightly applied will cool and heal. Only remember that it is not the having, but the loving of a wife that keepeth a man chaste and clean. And that God doth use to correct excess and dalliance between married couples, with strong temptations after strange flesh.

Better to marry than burn] As an oven heated by the baker, #Ho 7:4. As those pagans were scalded, #Ro 1:27, and these papagans {a} still are, that are forbidden to marry, and yet cannot contain.

{a} Papist, Popish (with allusion to pagan). (ED)

Ver. 10. Yet not I] By prudential advice only.

But the Lord] Not in so many words, but by just consequence drawn from #Mt 19:6.

Ver. 11. Or let her be reconciled] Ut quae mode pugnant iungant sua rostra columbae. (Ovid.) Why should married couples be as glass, that being once broken can never be pieced again? The Lord hates putting away, #Mal 2:16.

Ver. 12. Let him not put her away] For to the pure all things are pure. Uxoris vitium aut tollendum, aut tolerandum est, saith Varro in Gellius. Mend a bad wife, if thou canst; bear with her, if thou canst not.

Ver. 13. If he be pleased, &c.] If he blaspheme not Christ, force her not to deny the faith, &c., as that king of Denmark that would have compelled his wife to go to mass, who was therefore forced to flee for her life to her brother the elector of Brandenburg (as Luther relateth,) where she died Christianly.

Ver. 14. But now they are holy] With a federal holiness, and are therefore to be baptized, as being partakers of the covenant of grace. The Habassines (a kind of mongrel Christians in Africa) have an odd conceit, that the souls of infants departing before baptism, are saved by virtue of the eucharist received by the mother after conception, which sanctifieth the child in the womb. Anabaptists play the devil's part (saith a late writer) in accusing their own children, and disputing them out of the Church and covenant of Christ; affirming them to be no disciples, no servants of God, not holy, as separated to him, when God saith the contrary, #Le 25:41,42 De 29:10-15 Ac 15:10, and here.

Ver. 15. But God hath called us to peace] To domestic peace, which they that lack, Plus quam dimidiae beatitudinis suae parte privati sunt, saith Aristotle; They have lost the greater half of the happiness of their lives. This was verified in Phoroneus the lawgiver, and Sulla the Roman general. (Bruson.)

Ver. 16. Whether thou shalt save] And to have any hand in saving a soul is the highest honour.

Ver. 17. But God hath distributed] In case you should not save your yoke fellow, yet keep your station, be content with your condition, and adorn it, #1Pe 3:1,2. It is the duty of a Christian (said Luther) to believe things invisible, to hope for things deferred, and to love God when he shows himself contrary to us.

Ver. 18. Let him not become uncircumcised] Some Jews, for fear of Antiochus, made themselves uncircumcised, #/RAPC 1Ma 1:15. Others for shame after they were gained to the knowledge of Christ, as here. This was done by drawing up the foreskin with a surgeon's instrument. And of this wicked invention Esau is said to be the first author and practiser. (Godw. Antiq. Hebr.)

Ver. 19. But the keeping of the commandment] This is that bonum hominis, good of man, #Mic 6:8, that totum hominis, the whole of man, #Ec 12:13, that one thing necessary, that is better than sacrifice, #1Sa 15:22. Mallem obedire, quam miracula facere, saith Luther; I had rather obey than be able to do miracles.

Ver. 20. Abide in the same calling] And therein learn to "maintain good works," or to be their craftsmen, to excel in their profession, honestis functionibus praeesse, as some render the apostle there, #Tit 3:8,14. Αιεν αριστευειν και υπειροχον εμμεναι αλλων. These things are good and profitable unto men.

Ver. 21. Use it rather] Liberty is that we lost by sin, and affect by nature. Servus est nomen officii. A servant is not αυτοματος, one that moveth absolutely of himself, he is the master's instrument, and ολωσ εκεινου, wholly his, saith Aristotle. Oh that we could be God's servants in that sort!

Ver. 22. For he that is called] See a parallel place to this, #Jas 1:9,10. Our preferment in Christ should make us hold up our heads, but not too high, And be cheerful, but not also scornful. Laeti simus in Domino, sed caveamus a recidivo. Bern.

Ver. 23. Ye are bought with a price] The redeemed among the Romans were to addict themselves to the service of their redeemers, and to observe them as their parents all days of their lives.

Be not ye the servants of men] When they command you things forbidden by Christ, or when they would tyrannize over your consciences, as the Jesuits, that require blind obedience. Cardinal Tolet saith, The people may merit at God's hand in believing a heresy, if their teacher propound it; for their obedience is meritorious. (Cases of Conscience.) If a priest teach it (saith Stapleton), be it true, be it false, take it as God's oracle. If the Church should approve and authorize Arianism or Pelagianism, saith Erasmus (Epist. ad Firkeimer), I would do so too. But so would no wise man.

Ver. 24. Let every man wherein, &c.] This is the same with #1Co 7:20. The apostle inculcateth it, as we not only anoint our benumbed limbs with ointments, but also rub and chafe them in.

Ver. 25. I give my judgment] The Rhemists (after Erasmus) render it counsel, and thereupon ground a distinction between Divine commands and counsels. But the word γνῶμην betokens virī boni rectum et verum iudicium, saith Magirus, the right and sound judgment of some good man. (In Arist. Ethic.) And surely if the apostle had no express command from Christ, neither had he any counsel from him concerning this business.

Ver. 26. I suppose therefore] This is his judgment, his vote or verdict: the first part thereof we have here; the second, #1Co 7:28; the third, #1Co 7:35.

Ver. 27. Art thou bound to a wife?] A manifest metaphor from oxen. Hence we call them yoke fellows:

“ Quam male inaequales veniunt ad aratra iuveni;
Tam premitur magno, &c.” (Ovid. Epist.)

Dare not to yoke thyself with any untamed heifer that bears not Christ's yoke.

Ver. 28. Thou hast not sinned] If any man call lawful marriage a sinful defilement, he hath the apostate dragon dwelling in him, saith Ignatius. (Epist. ad Philadelph.) And yet the Papists teach that it is a far greater sin for a priest to have a wife than to keep many harlots.

Such shall have trouble in the flesh] Mark that he saith, "in the flesh"; the delights of wedlock will be alloyed with troubles, to avoid surfeit. Before marriage people promise themselves much happiness in that estate, and think they could live together with all delight; but after, they see they are deceived, and therefore need to go to school to learn how to behave themselves one toward another.

But I spare you] q.d. No more of that; and yet I'll show you a way how you may escape, or at least mitigate those troubles in the flesh. Thus this First Epistle of Paul to the Corinthians, though in weight of argument it be far inferior to the preceding Epistle to the Romans, yet in variety of things it ought to be judged equal, and in order of time before the other. Thesaurus sane est, imo vere mundus rerum cognitu dignissimature, as Erasmus saith of Pliny's Natural History: surely it is a treasure, yea, a very world of things, most worthy to be understood.

Ver. 29. This then I say, brethren] The best counsel I can give you, is, that you hang loose to all these outward comforts, as having yourselves but a while to be here. You have a long task, and but a little time. God hath hanged the heaviest weights upon the weakest wires; for upon this moment depends eternity. Castigemus igitur mores et moras nostras. Up, therefore, and be doing.

The time is short] Gr. συνεσταλμενος, contracted and rolled up, as sails used to be by the mariners, when the ship draws nigh to the harbour. Others say, it is a metaphor from a piece of cloth rolled up, only a little left at the end. So hath God rolled up all his works, only he hath left a little at the end, and then all his glory shall appear. The time is short, saith the apostle, and you have business enough another way; therefore let other things (as wiving and buying, &c.) pass, and mind the main. There is water little enough to run in the right channel, therefore let none run beside. Some that have lain dying would have given a world for time: as I have heard (saith a reverend man) one crying day and night, Call time again. And I also have known the like of a great lady of this land. Let us therefore use all speed and diligence, lest (so as children have usually torn their books) we have ended our lives before we have learned our lessons; or (as Themistocles) we begin but to be wise when we come to die.

They that have wives, &c.] Not be uxorious, since they know not how soon God may take from them, as he did from Ezekiel, the delight of their eyes, their dearest spouses. The Jews of this day have a custom, when a couple are married, to break the glass wherein the bridegroom and bride drank; thereby to admonish them of their dying condition, and that there must be a parting again ere long. (Sphinx. Philos.)

Ver. 30. And they that weep] viz. In the loss of wife or children: let them moderate their grief, as Abraham did in the loss of Sarah, #Ge 23:2 "He came to weep for her"; where the Hebrew hath one little letter extraordinary, {Hebrew Text Note} to note, that Abraham wept but a little for her; and this, not because she was old and overly worn (as the Rabbins give the reason), but because he had hope of a happy resurrection, #1Th 4:14, and because she was his still, though dead; therefore he so often in that chapter calleth her "my dead," #1Co 7:4,11,13,15.

And they that rejoice] In the marrying of wives, or birth of children. The marriage day is called the day of "the rejoicing of a man's heart," #So 3:11: and when should men be merry rather than at the recovering of the lost rib? But he was to blame that said, he had married a wife, and therefore he could not come. And he was a wiser man that said, Uxori nubere nolo meae, (Martial.)

As if they possessed not] Mind earthly things we must, as if we minded them not: as a man may hear a tale, and have his mind elsewhere; or as a man that baits at an inn, his mind is somewhere else. A right believer (saith Mr Ward) goes through the world as a man whose mind is in a deep study; or as one that hath special haste of some weighty business. Rebus non me trado, sed commodo, saith Seneca. Be not wholly dulled or drowned in the world; look at it out of the eyes' end only, lest, as the serpent Scytale, it bewitch us with its beautiful colours, and sting us to death.

Ver. 31. As not abusing it] Not shooting our affections overly far into it. David was as a weaned child, Paul as a crucified man. If Job's heart had not been weaned from the world, when as yet he wallowed in worldly wealth, he could not have borne so bravely the ruin of so rich a state without repining. The devil hath no way to entangle us, but to say, as he did to Christ, Mitte te deorsum, Cast thyself down, pitch upon the bait, eat and devour hook and all. We have no safer way to escape him, than by minding the main, and looking upon all things here below as by-businesses. The Fathers make this observation here; that the joys of this world are but quasi, as if they were joys, not joys indeed, but shadows or figures, as #Isa 29:8, like the commotions of the affections in a dream.

For the fashion of this world] The word σχημα signifies a mathematical figure, which is a mere notion, and nothing in substance. So #Ps 39:6 "Surely every man walketh in a vain shadow," he leadeth an imaginary life, rather than a life itself. The pomp of this world is but a fantasy, #Ac 25:23. (See the note there.) The glory of it, an opinion. The word here used intimateth that there is nothing of any firmness or solid consistency in the creature. It is but a surface, outside, empty promise; all the beauty of it is but skin-deep. The word here used signifies, say some, such a fashion as is in a comedy or stageplay, where all things are but for a while, to please the eye.

Passeth away] Temporals are as transitory as a hasty headlong torrent. The posting sun of all worldly pleasure, after a short gleam of vain glistening, sets in the ocean of endless sorrow. In the pope's enthronization, before he is set in his chair, and puts on his triple crown, a piece of tow or wad of straw is set on fire before him, and one appointed to say, Sic transit gloria mundi, The glory of this world is but a blaze. It is indeed an ignis fatuus, a walking fire that leadeth men into brakes and ditches. And so some render this text. The fashion or hue of this world deceiveth, misleadeth, carrieth men another way, out of their way, παραγει. Fallit, transversum agit. (Bud.) For of the world we may say as Plutarch saith of Herodotus, Both the words and shows of it are full of fraud. Δολερα μεν τα σχηματα, δολερα δε τα ρηματα. Nec tantum fallacia sunt quia dubia (saith Lactantius), sed et insidiosa, quia dulcia.

Ver. 32. Without carefulness] That unavoidably attendeth the marriage state, #Ge 30:30 1Ti 5:8.

Ver. 33. Careth how he may please] He taketh extraordinary care to please, and so doth she, #1Co 7:34. The word μεριμνα implies a dividing of the mind into various thoughts, casting this way and that way, and every way, how to give best content. That is a happy study. Ver. 34. Careth for the things] Expeditius vacat.

Holy both in body and spirit] For contemplative wickedness and mental uncleanness also greatly displeaseth God. Incesta est, et sine stupro, quae stuprum cupit, saith Seneca (In Declam.); and, Quae quia non licuit non facit, illa facit, saith Ovid. The very desire to do evil is to do evil. The Romans punished one of their Vestal Virgins for uttering this verse only:

“Faelices nuptae! moriar ni nubere dulce est.
Oh! ‘tis a brave thing to be married.”

How she may please her husband] As Sarah did Abraham, calling him lord; as Rebecca did Isaac, by providing him the meat that he loved; as Livia did Augustus, by observing his disposition, and drawing evenly with him, being a piece so just cut for him, as answered him rightly in every joint.

Ver. 35. That you may attend, &c.] Gr. εμπροσεδρον. That you may sit close to him, as Mary did, #Lu 10:40, while Martha was distracted about much service. Let every man bend himself to banish and beat away distractions, “Nam neque chorda sonum reddit, quem vult manus et mens

Poscentique gravem persaepe remittit acutum.”
Hor. de Art. Poet.

Ver. 36. If she pass the flower] Childhood is counted the flower of age: so long the apostle would have marriage forborne. While the flower of the plant sprouteth, the seed is green, unfit to be sown.

Ver. 37. And hath so decreed] Reserving still a liberty of doing otherwise, if need require: which Popish votaries do not.

Ver. 38. Doth better] 1. For the better waiting upon God’s work without distraction. 2. For the better bearing of persecution.

Ver. 39. She is at liberty] The Montanists therefore (and with them Tertullian in his old age) were in an error that condemned second marriage, and said it was no better than fornication. Secundas nuptias pro fornicationibus habent. (Aug) Howbeit that of Jerome is not to be disliked. Think daily of death; and that will be enough to forbid the bans of second marriage.

Ver. 40. But she is happier] i.e. She shall live more at ease, and have less to care for. And we should contract our cares into as narrow a compass as we can, in hard times especially.

Chapter 8

Ver. 1. Now as touching things] Another case that they had propounded to him in their letter, #1Co 7:1.

We know] So all pretend. Sed nummos habuerunt Athenienses ad numerandum, et scientiam ad sciendum.

That we all have knowledge] But that is not sufficient, unless we have love too. There be many things concur to the making up of a good work, a lawful action.

Knowledge puffeth up] A metaphor from a pair of bellows, blown up and filled with wind. The French fitly call fools Fols, a follibus, qui nihil continent nisi aerem, from bellows which contains nothing unless filled with air. Such are all proud fools.

Knowledge puffeth up] Swelling us above measure, unless humility, laid on as a weight, keep us down, and charity regulate our knowledge for the good of others. Knowledge without love is as rain in the middle region. But how foolish were they of whom Austin maketh mention, that neglected the means of knowledge, because knowledge puffeth up, and so would be ignorant, that they might be humble, and lack knowledge, that they might lack pride. This was to be like Democritus, who plucked out his eyes, to avoid the danger of uncleanness. Or that silly friar, to whom Sir Thomas Moore wrote this distich;

Littera: nam nota est littera nulla tibi.* ”

*Thou takest good care the letter kill thee not:
Thy skill is such, thou knowest not B from Bot.*

Ver. 2. If any man think] This is one thing I know, that I know nothing, said Socrates. Neither know I this yet, that I know nothing, saith another. Though I know myself ignorant of many things (saith a third), yet I dare boldly profess with Origen, Ignorantiam meam non ignore, I am not ignorant that I am ignorant. The greatest part of our knowledge is but the least part of our ignorance. And yet how apt are we to think we know all that is knowable: as in Alcibiades' army all would be leaders, none learners. Epicurus said, that he was the first man that ever discovered truth, and yet in many things he was more blind than a beetle. (Aug. de Civ. Dei, 16.) Aratus the astrologer vaunted, that he had counted the stars and written of them all. Hoc ego primus vidi, I first saw this, said Zabarel. And Laurentius Valla boasted, that there was no logic worthy to be read but this, which therefore he called, Logicam Laurentinam. Joseph Scaliger is for his human learning called by one Daemonium et miraculum hominis naturae, a matchless man. But surely it had been happy for him to have been ignorant of this one thing, that he knew so much. He might, by his skill in languages, have much advanced the literary republic, had he not so much admired himself, and more seriously affected to seem witty than ponderous. Wine is good, when it goes to the heart to cheer it; but when it fumes all up into the head, it maketh it giddy: so doth knowledge. Nestorius the heretic bragged that he alone understood the Scriptures; and that, till his time, all the world was benighted. He afterwards fell into horrid blasphemy, and died in banishment.

Ver. 3. But if any man love God] And his neighbour for God's sake; his friends in God, his foes for God.

The same is known of him] That is, knows him savingly, #Ga 4:9, is taught of God, #1Th 4:9, who only gives true wisdom, #Jas 1:5.

Ver. 4. Is nothing in the world] A mere fiction it is, that the idol representeth a brat of man's brain. We may well say of it, as one doth of Scaliger's doctrine De emendatione temporum, Concerning the correction of times, that it is in a manner wholly fictitious, and founded upon the confines of nothing. Nothing the idol is, in respect of the divinity ascribed unto it, as the following words show. Or nothing, that is, of no virtue or value. "Shall I bow down to yonder jackanapes?" <sup>{a}</sup> said that martyr (Julius Palmer), pointing to the rood (crucifix) in Paul's.

None other God but one] This the wiser heathen also acknowledged, and for opposing the multitude of gods Socrates suffered. Cicero in his books of the Nature of the Gods, takes pains to show the vanity of heathen deities. And after all, wisheth that he were as well able to find out the true God as to discover the false.

{a} Applied contemptuously to a crucifix. Obs. OED

Ver. 5. That are called gods] Hesiod reckons up 30,000 of them that were in his time, Τρις γαρ μυριοι εισιν επι χθονι πουλυβοτειρη αθανατοι. What an army may we think there were of them in later ages!

As there be gods many] The serpent's grammar first taught Deum pluraliter declinare, "Ye shall be as gods," #Ge 3:5, saith Damianus.

And lords many] Demi gods, heroes, whose images were worshipped. Ninus was the first that made an image for his father Belus, and all that came to see it were pardoned for all their offences; whence in time that image came to be worshipped. But they did a very ill office that first brought in images, saith Varro (as Calvin citeth his words), "for they increased error and took away fear." And Plutarch saith, It is sacrilege to worship by images.

Ver. 6. But to us there is but one God] Be the gods of the heathen good fellows (saith one), the true God is a jealous God, and will not share his glory with another.

Of whom are all things, and we for him] So that God is the first cause and the last end of all: which two are the properties of the chief good.

Ver. 7. Unto this hour] Though they have been better taught and clearly convinced, yet they stiffly retain, at least, some tincture of their old odd superstitious conceits. No man's speech, whether he be learned or unlearned (saith Cicero), shall ever persuade me from that opinion which I have taken up from mine ancestors concerning the worship of the immortal gods. (De Nat. Deor. iii.)

Their conscience being weak] That is, not rightly informed of the true nature of things indifferent.

Is defiled] By doing what they doubt of.

Ver. 8. But meat commendeth us not] This is another objection: meat is indifferent. The apostle answers, Ver. 9. True, it is indifferent, so it prove not a stumblingblock to the unresolved. For in such a case thou must suspend thy liberty, and forbear to exercise it.

Ver. 10. Be emboldened] This is, Proficere in peius, aedificare in gehennam, To make in more evil, is to build in hell, as Tertullian hath it. While men look upon parti-coloured objects they bring forth spotted fruits, as Laban's sheep did.

Ver. 11. Thy weak brother perish] Revolt to paganism, or at least pollute his conscience with mortal sin, which shall be set upon thy score? And hast thou not sins enough of thine own to answer for?

Ver. 12. And wound their weak consciences] Gr. τυπτοντες, beat upon it to make it sound heavily, as a shaulm (shawm). {a} Sin is as a stroke upon the heart, #2Sa 24:10.

Ye sin against Christ] Who holds himself highly concerned in the misusages of his servants. It is an idle misprision to sever the sense of an injury done to any of the members, from the head. Joab had slain Abner and Amasa. David appropriates it; "Thou knowest" (saith he to Solomon) "what Joab did to me." The arraignment of mean malefactors runs in the style of wrong to the king's crown and dignity. So here.

{a} A mediaeval musical instrument of the oboe class, having a double reed enclosed in a globular mouthpiece. ED

Ver. 13. While the world standeth] We must stand unchangeably resolved, neither to give offence carelessly, nor to take offence causelessly.

Chapter 9

Ver. 1. Am I not an apostle, &c.] That is to say, Do I require you to do anything more than I myself do daily, in parting with my proper rights? All things in a minister should be exemplary, and for imitation; #Tit 2:7 "In all things show thyself a pattern of good works." The word τυπος, there used, signifies a thing that makes the stamp on the coin, or the mould whereinto the vessel is cast and shaped.

Have I not seen the Lord?] viz. In visions and ecstasies. The false apostles reported him no apostle because he had not conversed with Christ in the flesh. It is ordinary with seducers to detract from the truth's champions, that they may be the better esteemed of. Thus Bellarmine rejecteth the fathers and others that make not for him as heretics. To Iraneus, Tertullian, Eusebius, and Luther (said he) I answer, Omne manifesti haeretici sunt, they are all manifest heretics. So Arminius's course was to detract from the authority and fame of Calvin, Zanchius, Beza, Martyr, &c., that he might build himself upon better men's ruins. (Synod. Dordec. Praefat.) The Jesuits speak most basely of St Paul, a making much against many of their tenets; and stick not to teach in their pulpits, that he was not secure of his preaching but by conference with St Peter; nor that he dared publish his Epistle till St Peter had allowed them. Zuinglius mentioneth some bold fellows in his time, A. D. 1519, who spake very contemptuously of this great apostle: Quis tandem Paulus, &c. Calvin telleth that Quintinus the Libertine called him Vas fractum, a broken vessel. And Leo Judae, in his preface to Bullinger's book against the Catabaptists, noteth, that albeit there were various sorts of those sects, and all at odds among themselves, yet they all concurred in this, that they vexed and disparaged the godly preachers of the truth. And do they not still antiquum obtinere, hold to their old wont?

Ver. 2. The seal of mine apostleship] See the like, #Jer 23:21 Mt 21:27, where our Saviour proveth John Baptist's ministry to be from heaven, by the success.

Ver. 3. Mine answer to them, &c.] Or, this is mine apology to those that cavil and quarrel my calling, viz. that I have converted you and others; a real proof, a visible demonstration. So #2Co 13:3-5.

Ver. 4. To eat and to drink] At the Church's charge; so that we do it moderately without excess, as Josiah did, and it went well with him, #Jer 22:15.

Ver. 5. To lead about a sister] At the Church's charge likewise. The Papists that deny the lawfulness of ministers' marriage, are condemned and cursed by their own canon law (Distinct 29 and 31.)

See Acts and Monuments, fol. 1008. Paphnutius opposed this proposition in the Nicene Council, and prevailed.

Ver. 6. To forbear working] At our trade? Yes, or else I should easily be of Melancthon's mind, who when one had said of the ministry, that it was the art of arts, and the science of sciences; if he had added (said Melancthon) that it is the misery of miseries, he had hit the nail on the head. (Joh. Manl. loc. com. 471.)

Ver. 7. Who goeth a warfare, &c.] Ministers as they should be valiant as soldiers, diligent as husbandmen, vigilant as shepherds (Pastor; arator; eques, &c.), so should they live from their labour, as every tinker and tapster doth. It is a sign of gasping devotion, when men are so close handed to their ministers whose very cold water goes not unrewarded.

Ver. 8. Or saith not the law] Not of nations only, as #1Co 9:7, but of God expressly, Verbis non solum disertis, sed et exertis?

Ver. 9. Doth God take care for oxen?] He doth, doubtless, #Joh 4:11; he preserveth man and beast; he heareth the young ravens that cry to him only by implication. Doth he not then much more take care for men, for ministers? The Hebrews have a proverb, Bos debet edere ex tritura sua, The ox should eat of the grain he treadeth out. But today, by slight or might, they so muzzle the poor labouring ox that they make an ass of him, saith one. In many places they allow him nothing but straw, for treading out the grain; and so much straw as themselves please, saith another. Do they not now go about to deal by Christ's faithfulest servants, as those Grecians did, that put an engine about their servants' neck (called πανσικοπη) which reached down to their hands, that they might not so much as lick of the meal, when they were sifting it (Dr Stoughton.) It was long since complained about, that many dealt by their ministers as carriers do by their horses, they laid heavy burdens upon them, and then hung bells about their necks: hard work and good words they shall have; but easy commons and slight wages; as if they were of the chameleon kind, and could live by air, &c. The statute of mortmain {a} provided that men should give no more to the Church, but now tempera mutantur. Let it control be changed.

{a} The figurative use is often based on the notion that the 'dead hand' means the posthumous control exercised by the testator over the uses to which the property is to be applied. (ED)

Ver. 10. Should plough in hope] Of maintaining his life by his labour, which is therefore called "the life of our hands," because it is upheld by the labour of our hands: Ludit, qui sterili semina mandat humo. (Propert.)

Ver. 11. Is it a great thing, &c.] Do not we give you gold for brass? Cast we not pearls before you? Alexander the Great gave Aristotle for his book de Natura Animalium, 800 talents, which is 800,000 crowns at least. Theodorus Gaza translated that book into Latin, and dedicated it to Pope Sixtus. The Pope asked him how much the rich outside of the book stood him in; Gaza answered, forty crowns. Those forty crowns he commanded to be repaid him, and so sent him away without any reward for so precious a piece of work. Interrogavit asinus papa quanti ornatus constaret? (John Manl. loc. com.) How well might the poor old Grecian sit and sing,

“ Heu male nunc artes miseras haec saecula tractant, Spes nulla ulterior. ” (Juven. Satir. 7.)

Ver. 12. If others be partakers] If your ordinary pastors, &c., for the false apostles preached gratis (as some gather out of #2Co 11:12), partly to draw more disciples, and partly to bring an odium upon the apostle, if he should not do the like.

Ver. 13. Live of the things of, &c.] Yea, they lived plentifully and richly, as appears by the liberal gifts of those Levites for Passover Offerings, #2Ch 35:9.

Ver. 14. Even so hath the Lord] Note that "so," saith one; "that is, as they of old lived at the altar by tithes, so ministers now. How else will men satisfy their consciences in the particular quantity they must bestow upon the ministers? The Scripture speaks only of the tenth part."

Ver. 15. Better for me to die] To be hunger starved than to do anything to the prejudice of the gospel. Affliction is to be chosen rather than sin, #Job 36:21. Quas non oportet mortes praeeligere, saith Zuinglius, Epist. 3. What death should not a man choose, nay, what hell, rather than to sin against his conscience? Daniel chose rather to be cast into the lions' den than to bear about that lion in his own bosom. The primitive Christians thought it far better to be thrown to lions without, than to be left to lusts within. Ad leonem magis quam lenonem. (Tertul.) Potius in ardentem rogam insiliero, quam ullum peccatum in Deum commiserio, said a good man once. I will rather leap into a bonfire than wilfully commit any wickedness. The mouse of Armenia will rather die than be defiled with any filth. If her hole be besmeared with dirt, she will rather choose to perish with hunger than be polluted. Such was Paul here, and such we ought all to be.

Ver. 16. I have nothing to glory of] My glorying is, that I preach it gratis, and thereby stop an open mouth, #2Co 12:16-18, give them the lie that falsely accuse me that I make a prize of you.

Yea, woe is unto me] It was death for the high priest to enter the tabernacle without his bells. Preach, man, preach; thou wilt be damned else, said one to his friend. Be instant, or stand over the work in season, out of season, επιστηθι. See Jacob's diligence, #Ge 31:40. And Paul's, #Ac 20:20-28, &c., which one rightly calleth St Paul's trumpet, the voice whereof may be to every minister, like that trumpet in Mount Sinai, that hath both clangorem et horrorem: or as Samuel's message, making Eli's two ears to tingle and his heart to tremble. (Barlow.) Let him give good heed to it, and then say with the civilian (Ulpian), Perquam durum est: sed ita lex scripta est. Hard or not hard it must be done, or I am utterly undone. Preach I must, or perish.

Ver. 17. I have a reward] Yet not earned, but of free grace, God crowning his own works in us. He was a proud Papist that said, Caelum gratis non accipiam, I will not have heaven for nought. (Vega.) And he another, that said, Opera bona mercatura regni caelestis, Good works are the price of heaven. (Bellarm.) God will cast all such merit merchants out of his temple.

But if against my will] Virtus nolentium, nulla est. God will strain upon no man. All his servants are a free people, #Ps 110:3. All his soldiers volunteers. They fly to their colours as the doves to their windows, #Isa 60:8.

Ver. 18. What is my reward then?] My merces mundi, reward of the world, all that I have here.

That I abuse not] i.e. That I make no indiscreet use of it. Non opes, non gloriam, non voluptates quaesivi (said holy Melancthon). Hanc conscientiam aufero quocunque discedo. I never sought wealth, honour, or pleasure. This my conscience tells me, whatever becomes of me.

Ver. 19. That I may gain the more] The Greek word for gain signifieth also the joy and delight of the heart in gaining. It signifies also craft or guile, such as is that of the fox; which when he is very hungry after prey, and can find none, he lieth down and feigneth himself to be a dead carcase, and so the fowls fall upon him, and then he catcheth them. So must a minister deny himself to gain his hearers. κερδος because κερσ ηδει

Ver. 20. And unto the Jews, &c.] Not in conforming to their impieties; but, 1. In the use of things indifferent; 2. In merciful compassion toward them.

To them that are under the law] Though not Jews born, yet proselytes, as the Ethiopian eunuch, Cornelius, &c.

Ver. 21. That I might gain them] A metaphor from merchants, Qui κερδαινοντες ου κοπωσι, who are never weary of taking money. (Naz.) St Paul harps much upon this string, out of a strong desire of winning souls to God. Ministers must turn themselves into all shapes and fashions both of spirit and speech to gain souls to God. Christ useth every engine of wisdom (παση σοφιας μηχανη, saith Clemens Alexand.) that he may convert some. Ministers should labour to be masters of their people's affections, δημαγωγοι, as the Athenian orators were called, i.e. people leaders.

Ver. 22. To the weak] Not pressing upon them the austerities of religion, but condescending and complying with them, as far as I could with a good conscience.

That I might save some] This is the highest honour in the world, to have any hand in the saving of souls. Let all of an ability put forth themselves hereunto; and if they have not fine manchet, yet give the poor people barley bread, or whatsoever else the Lord hath committed unto them, as Bucer bade Bradford. (Acts and Mon.)

Ver. 23. That I might be partaker] i.e. That I might be saved together with you. For the bell may call men to the Church, though itself never enter. The field may be well sowed with a dirty hand; the well yield excellent water, though it have much mud. Noah's builders were drowned: and the sign that telleth the passenger there is wholesome diet or warm lodging within, may itself remain in the storms without. See #1Ti 4:16. Nihil turpius est Peripatetico claudo. Oh how many heavenly doctrines are in some people's ears, that never were in the preacher's heart. So true is that of Hilary, Sanctiores sunt aures plebis, quam corda sacerdotum. More consecrated are the ears of the common people than the hearts of the priests.

Ver. 24. Know ye not] The apostle argueth from their profane sports, yet approveth them not; as neither doth the Lord patronize usury, #Mt 25:27; injustice, #Lu 16:1; thefts, #1Th 5:2; dancing, #Mt 11:17.

So run that ye may obtain,] Here is the race, but above the crown, saith Ignatius to Polycarp. (ὠδε μὲν ἐστὶ τὸ σταδίου, ἐκεῖ δὲ οὐ στεφάνοι.) Run to get the race, said Mr Bradford to his fellow sufferers, you are almost at your journey's end. I doubt not but our Father will with us send to you also, as he did to Elias, a fiery chariot to convey us into his kingdom. Let us therefore not be dismayed to leave our cloak behind us, that is, our bodies to ashes. (Acts and Mon.)

Ver. 25. Is temperate in all things] These luxurious Corinthians were much addicted to their belly; he calls them therefore to temperance. Ill doth it become a servant of the Highest to be a slave to his palate, to have animum in patinis et calicibus, as the Sybarites. A man may eat that on earth that he must digest in hell. (Aug.)

Ver. 26. Not as uncertainly] For, 1. I forget those things that are behind, all worldly things. I set those by. 2. I have oculum ad metam (which was Ludovicus Vives' motto), an eye upon the mark. 3. I strain and stretch toward it. See all these #Php 3:13,14. Duties are not to be done in a lazy, formal, customary strain, like the pace the Spaniard rides; but with utmost diligence and expedition.

That beats the air] As young fencers use to do, but I beat mine adversary.

Ver. 27. My body] My body of sin in the whole man, not mine outward man only. If we find the devil practising upon the flesh, the way is not to revile the devil, but to beat the flesh. Give it a blue eye, leave a blot in the face of it, as the word υποπαιζω signifieth, batter it as those were wont, that tried masteries with plummets of lead; we owe it nothing but stripes, #Ro 8:12. It is of a slavish nature, and must be held hard under, δουλαγωγῶ; as slaves thrust into a mill, or bound to an oar.

A castaway] Cast out of heaven, as they were out of the fencing schools, that were either cross or cowardly; or that could offend, but not defend. An orator (how much more a preacher!) should be vir bonus dicendi peritus, a good man able to discourse. (Quintilian.) Diogenes blamed those orators that studied bene dicere, non bene facere, to speak well, but not to do accordingly. And Chrysostom saith, Nihil frigidius est doctore verbis solummodo philosophante. Hoc non est doctoris sed hishrionis. A wordy doctor is an unworthy creature, and more fit to make a stageplayer than a preacher.

Chapter 10

Ver. 1. I would not that ye should] Historiae fidae monitrices, saith Bucholcer. There is very good use to be made of other men's examples. Historia hath its name, saith Plato, from stopping the flux of errors and evil manners. (παρα το ισταναι τον ρουν, in Crat.). For mutate nomine de te fabula narratur. What bitter effects sin hath produced in some men, it may in any man. Lege igitur historiam, ne fias historia.

Ver. 2. And were all baptized] And yet were rooted out and rejected. Baptism sayeth; not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but, &c., #1Pe 3:21. By this text it appears that infants also were baptized unto Moses, who was a typical mediator; therefore they ought to be into Christ, the true. It is here objected that those infants did also eat manna and drink of the rock; therefore by a like reason, they should also now receive the Lord's supper. For answer, 1. How doth it appear that they did eat manna, &c.? 2. Though they did, yet they may not communicate at the Lord's table, because they cannot "examine themselves, nor discern the Lord's body," and are therefore flatly forbidden to come there, #1Co 11:28,29.

Ver. 3. And did all eat] They fed upon sacraments, and yet died in God's displeasure. The carcase of the sacrament cannot give life, but the soul of it, which is the thing represented. It is well observed that sacraments do not work as physic, whether men sleep or wake, ex opere operate, by virtue inherent in them; but ex opere operantis, according to the disposition and qualification of the party that partaketh.

Ver. 4. The same spiritual drink] Here was no dry communion.

That spiritual rock that followed them] The waters of the rock, the virtue and benefit, went along with them. See #Ps 105:41 De 9:21. So should the efficacy of the Lord's supper with us. We should walk in the strength of it, as Elijah did of his cake.

Ver. 5. They were overthrown] They died with the sacramental meat in their mouths. Our privileges excuse us not, but aggravate our enormities.

Ver. 6. Were our examples] Worthily are they made examples, that will not take them. Alterius perditio tua sit cautio. The destruction of others should be a terror to us, that we may wash our feet in the blood of the wicked, #Ps 52:6. It is a just presage and desert of ruin, not to be warned.

As they also lusted] As at Kibroth Hattaavah, where by a hasty testament they bequeathed a new name to the place of their burial.

Ver. 7. And rose up to play] Now if they were so cheered and strengthened by these murdering morsels, should not we be made active and abundant in God's word by the dainties of God's table?

Ver. 8. And fell in one day] The apostle, instead of the cloak of heat of youth, puts upon fornication a bloody cloak, bathed in the blood of twenty-three thousand. (Knewstub. on Com. 7.)

Three and twenty thousand] Moses mentions 24,000, whereof one thousand were the chief princes, the others inferiors, provoked to sin by their example. But why doth the apostle insist in the special punishment of the people? To show (saith learned Junius) how frigid and insufficient their excuse is, that pretend for their sins the examples of their superiors.

Ver. 9. Neither let us tempt] By provoking him to jealousy, as #1Co 10:22, especially by idolatry, that land desolating sin.

Ver. 10. As some of them also] viz. #Nu 14:1-5 And God said Amen to it, #1Co 10:28. May he not justly say the same to our detestable God-damn-me's? "As truly as I live, saith the Lord, as ye have spoken in mine ears, so will I do to you."

Ver. 11. For our admonition] God hangs up some, as it were, in gibbets, for public example. See #1Co 10:6. Let us therefore set a memorandum upon God's punishments; and mark his spits with our stars. Let us be wise by other men's woes; take a pearl out of the serpent, a good stone out of the toad's head, suck sweet honey out of bitterest weeds, &c.

Upon whom the ends, &c.] These then are the last and worst days, the very lees and dregs of time. Now the worse the times are, the better we should be; and the rather, because an end of all things is at hand.

Ver. 12. That thinks he stands] If he do but think so, if he be no more than a seemer, he will fall at length into hell's mouth. A man may live by a form, but he cannot die by a form. Therefore rather seek to be good than seem to be so.

Ver. 13. But such as is common] Such as is human, παν πρασδοκαν δει ανθρωπον οντα. (Xenophon.) Either such as is incident to men as men, #Job 5:6; or such as men may well bear without buckling under it; or such as come from men, not from devils; "Ye wrestle against flesh and blood," &c. Or you are yet only allured to idolatry, not forced by persecution. You gratify your idolatrous acquaintance with your presence at their idol feasts; you are tempted and soon taken.

But God is faithful] When Mr Latimer stood at the stake, and the tormentors about to set fire to him and Ridley, he lifted up his eyes toward heaven with an amiable and comfortable countenance, saying these words, Fidelis est Deus, &c. God is faithful, Ridley also at the stake, with a wondrous cheerful look, ran to Latimer, embraced and kissed, and, as they that stood near reported, comforted him, saying, Be of good heart, brother, God will either assuage the fury of the flame, or else will strengthen us to abide it. (Acts and Mon.)

But will with the temptation] He proportioneth the burden to the back, and the stroke to the strength of him that beareth it. I thank God, said Mr Bradford, my common disease (which was a rheum, with a feebleness of stomach) doth less trouble me than when I was out of prison, which doth teach me the merciful providence of God toward me.

Ver. 14. Flee from idolatry] He calleth their sitting at the idol's feasts, though without intent of honouring the idol, by the name of idolatry; because, 1. Hereby they yielded a tacit consent to that sin. 2. Petty matters pave a causey for the greater.

Ver. 15. I speak as to wise men] i.e. Well skilled in the doctrine of the sacraments, from one of which I am about to argue. Piscator, after he had read some of the Fathers, gave over for this reason, because scarce any of them did rightly understand the use and efficacy of baptism.

Judge ye what I say] Jovianus the emperor was wont to wish that he might govern wise men, and that wise men might govern him.

Ver. 16. The cup of blessing] Not the chalice, but the common cup. Calvin chose rather to leave Geneva than to use unleavened bread or wafer cakes at the Lord's supper. (Diest. de ratione studii Theol.) We may not symbolize with idolaters.

Is it not the communion] Doth it not signify and set forth, yea, as an instrument, effect and exhibit this communion?

Ver. 17. And one body] By the force of faith and love. #So 6:9 "My dove is but one; the daughters saw her, and blessed her." No such oneness, entireness, anywhere as among the saints. Other societies are but as the clay in the toes of Nebuchadnezzar's image, they may cleave together, but not incorporate one into another.

Ver. 18. Are not they which eat, &c.] See #Le 7:15; hence he infers that these Corinthians also eating of the idol's sacrifices, were defiled with idolatry; a pari, from the like.

Ver. 19. What say I then] He prevents a mistake. See #1Co 8:4. Ministers must in their discourses meet with all objections as much as may be.

Ver. 20. They sacrifice to devils] A good intention then excuseth not. The Gentiles thought they had sacrificed to God. So do the Papists, who yet worship devils, while they worship idols of gold, and silver, and brass, and stone, #Re 9:20. The devil is εἰδωλοχαρής, saith Synesius, an idol lover.

Ver. 21. Partakers of the Lord's table] Name and thing. The Popish opinion of mass was, that it might not be celebrated but upon an altar, or at least upon a superaltare, which must have its prints and carects, or else the thing was not thought to be lawfully done. Our communion table they call an oyster board. (Acts and Mon.)

And the table of devils] Redwald, king of East Saxons, had in the same church one altar for Christian religion, and another for sacrifice to devils. (Camden.)

Ver. 22. Do we provoke the Lord] As Caligula that dared his Jove to a duel; as the raging Turk at the last assault of Scodra most horribly blaspheming God. But who knoweth the power of his anger? #Ps 90:11. It is such as none can avert or avoid, avoid or abide. To such therefore as will needs provoke the Lord, we may well say, as Ulysses' companions said to him, when he would needs provoke Polydamas; “Σχετλιε τιπτ εθελεις ερεθιζεμεν αγριον ανδρα.

What mean'st thou, wretch, to enrage this cruel man?”

Ver. 23. All things are not expedient] An liceat, an deceat, an expediat, Is it permitted, is it proper, is it expedient, are three most needful questions. (Bernard.) Things lawful in themselves may be unseemly for our state and calling; unbehoveful also to the benefit of others. Think unlawful for thee whatsoever implies either inexpediency or indecency.

Ver. 24. Let no man seek his own] Self miscarries us all, and makes us eccentric in our motions, nothing more.

Ver. 25. Whatsoever is sold, &c.] A portion of the consecrated flesh was usually sold by the priests, who make their markets of it, as Augustine upon the Romans testifieth.

Ver. 26. For the earth is the Lord's] God, of his bounty, spreads a table for all; make no scruple therefore, eat freely.

Ver. 27. And ye be disposed to go] Our Saviour, when he saw that John's austerity was censured, took his liberty in the use of creatures, and convenient company keeping, #Lu 7:33,34. I do not find where ever he was bidden to any table and refused. Not for a pleasure of the dishes, but for the benefit of so winning a conversation.

Ver. 28. The earth is the Lord's] Therefore in case of scandal abstain. Why shouldest thou use this creature, as if there were no more but this? suspend thy liberty; hast not thou all the world before thee?

Ver. 29. Why is my liberty judged] As a profane licence. We should be shy of the very shows and shadows of sin, Quicquid fuerit male coloratum, as Bernard hath it; if a thing look but ill-favoured, abstain from it.

Ver. 30. For if I by grace] Or, by thanksgiving. The same Greek word, χαρις, signifies both; to teach us, that a grateful man is a gracious man. The unthankful and the evil are set together as the same, #Lu 6:35. God is "kind to the unthankful, and to the evil."

Ver. 31. Whether therefore ye eat, &c.] Of a reverend Scotch divine it is said, that "he did even eat and drink and sleep eternal life." These common actions also are steps in our Christian walking, despise them not, therefore, but refer them to that supreme scope. Socrates, even in his recreations, profited his companions no less than if he had been reading lectures to them. παιζων ουδεν ηττον ελυσιτελει τοις συνδιατριβουσιν αυτω. (Xenoph.) Plato and Xenophon thought it fit and profitable that men's speeches at meals should be written. Quicquid agas propter Deum agas, saith one. Propter te, Domine, propter te, saith another. (Drus. Apophth.) The glory of God ought to eat up all other ends, as Moses' serpent did the sorcerers' serpents; or as the sun puts out the light of the fire. Jovinian the emperor's motto was, Scopus vitae Christus.

Ver. 32. Give none offence] This is another end we should aim at, the edification of others. Finibus non officiis a vitiis discernuntur virtutes. (Augustine.) Two things make a good Christian: good actions and good aims.

Ver. 33. Not seeking mine own profit] This, saith Chrysostom, is the most perfect canon of Christianity, the top gallant of true religion.

Chapter 11

Ver. 1. Be ye followers of me] This verse properly belongs to the former chapter. The distinguishing of the books of Scripture into chapters is not very ancient. But that of verses was devised and done by Robert Stephens, Pio quidem at tumultuario studio, as Scultetus saith well, with a good intent, but with no great skill, as appears here and in various other places. The apostles, #1Co 10:33, had showed his own practice: here he calls upon them to do accordingly. As the ox follows the herd, so will I follow good men. Etiam si errant, saith Cicero, although they do amiss. Sicut bos armenta, sic ego bones vires. (Cic. ad Attic.) This was more than St Paul desires. Be ye followers of me, saith he; but only so far as I am of Christ, not an inch further. Christians are not bound, as Latimer saith, to be the saints' apes; labouring to be like them in everything. It is Christ's peculiar honour to be imitated in all morals absolutely.

Ver. 2. And keep the ordinances] Gr. the traditions or doctrines by word of mouth. These are, 1. Dogmatic, concerning faith and practice, #2Th 2:15 2. Ritual; and these again are, 1. Perpetual, as that of the manner of administering the two sacraments. 2. Temporary, as that of abstaining from certain meats, #Ac 15:28,29. And those other pertaining to the observing of external order and decency in Church assemblies. And of these the apostle here speaketh. (Sclater.)

Ver. 3. The head of the woman is man] Were it not an ill sight to see the shoulders above the head, the woman usurp authority over the man αυθεντειν, #1Ti 2:12. A prudent wife commands her husband by obeying, as did Livia.

Ver. 4. Dishonoureth his head] As they accounted it then and there. In other places it is otherwise. The French preach covered. The Turks neither kneel nor uncover the head at public prayer, as holding those postures unmanly. Several countries have their several customs. Basiliades, duke of Muscovy, showed himself a tyrant in nailing an ambassador's hat to his head, for not uncovering it before him.

Ver. 5. Praying or prophesying] That is, joining with the man that prayeth or prophesieth, and going along with him in her heart. Thus the king and all Israel with him offered sacrifice before the Lord, #1Ki 8:62. And thus the unlearned say Amen, #1Co 14:16. {See Trapp on "Ro 16:1"}

Ver. 6. For a woman to be shorn] Our Hic muliers hold it now no shame. If Henry VI had seen such creatures, he would have cried out, as once he did at the sight of naked breasts, Fie, fie, ladies, in sooth you are to blame. (Daniel's Hist.)

Ver. 7. He is the image and glory of God] Even as an image in the glass doth look toward us, from whom it is reflected. So, saith one, doth God's image in us make the eyes of our minds view him the author of it in us. (Bayn's Letters.) And as the eye becometh one with that which it seeth, and is after a sort in that light it beholdeth; so are we by the vision of God, which is begun in us, one with him and in him.

The woman is the glory of the man] Either because he may glory in her, if she be good; or because she is to honour him, and give glory to him.

Ver. 8. But the woman of the man] Of a bone she was made, and but one bone, Ne esset ossea, saith a divine (Vitis Palatina); a bone of the side it was, not of the head (she is not to be his mistress), not of the foot (she is not to be his handmaid), but of the side, to show that she is a companion to her husband. A bone from under the arm, to mind the man of protection and defence to the woman. A bone not far from his heart, to mind him of dilection and love to the woman. A bone from the left side, to put the woman in mind that, by reason of her frailty and infirmity, she stands in need of both the one and the other from her husband.

Ver. 9. For the woman] sc. To serve her, unless it be some women (as Artemisia, Zenobia, Blandina), specially called to and qualified for government. Among whom Queen Elizabeth, that female glory, is famous, of whom a great French duchess said, that she was Gloriosissima, et omnium quae unquam sceptrum gesserunt faelicissima femina. Besides her sex, there was nothing in her woman-like or weak.

Ver. 10. To have power] That is, a veil, called in Hebrew Radid, of Radad, to bear rule. And indeed what was this subjection to the husband, but a kind of power and protection derived to the wife, in respect of her former estate?

Because of the angels] Present in the assemblies of the saints. This was set forth of old by the hangings of the tabernacle wrought with cherubims within and without. Others understand this text of ministers, frequently called angels, #Hag 1:12,13 Re 2:1,8,12,18 3:1,7,14 Jud 2:1 (that angel is thought to be Phineas); #Ec 5:6 "Neither say thou before the angel" (i.e. before the Lord's priest) "it was an error." (Vorstius.) Some think the apostle argues from the example of the angels; we should imitate their modesty, who were wont to cover their faces, to testify their subjection toward God.

Ver. 11. Nevertheless neither is] This is added for the woman's comfort. There must be all mutual respects and melting-heartedness between married couples, which being preserved fresh and fruitful, will infinitely sweeten and beautify the marriage state. Love is a coin that must be exchanged between them, and returned in kind. "Husbands, love your wives," #Col 3:19. He saith not, Rule over your wives, as he had said, Wives, submit yourselves to your husbands, but Love your wives; yea, let all your things be done in love: for neither is the man without the woman; he is not complete without her, he wants a piece of himself; neither is the woman without the man, she cannot subsist without him, as the vine cannot without a supporter. The rib can challenge no more of her than the earth can of him, &c.

Ver. 12. But all things of God] God consulted not with man to make him happy, saith one. As he was ignorant while himself was made, so he did not know while a second self was made out of him. Both that the comfort might be greater than was expected; as also that he might not upbraid his wife with any great dependence or obligation, he neither willing the work, nor suffering any pain to have it done.

Ver. 13. Judge in yourselves] All Christ's sheep are rational, able to discern the things that differ, having their senses thereunto exercised, #Heb 5:14. But some sins are condemned by common sense, as here; and religion is founded upon so good reason, that though God had not commanded it, yet it had been our wisest way to have chosen it. But lust doth often so blear the understanding, that a man shall think he hath reason to be mad, and that there is great sense in sinning.

Ver. 14. That if a man hath long hair] Bushes of vanity, which they will never part with, said Marbury, until the devil put a candle into the bush. But our gallants object, that the apostle here intendeth such hair as is as long as women's hair. Whereunto we answer, That Homer calleth the Greeks hair-nourishing men (καρηκομοωντας Αγατους, Homer), who yet did not wear their hair long as women. How Cromwell handled the shag-haired ruffian, see Acts and Monuments of the Church, fol. 1083. How God hath punished this unnatural sin by that loathsome and horrible disease in the hair, called Plica Polonica, see Hercules de Saxonia; and out of him Mr Belfort in his Four Last Things, page 40. It begun first, saith he, not many years ago in Poland; it is now entered into many parts of Germany. And methinks our monstrous fashionists, both male and female, the one for nourishing their horrid bushes of vanity, the other for the most unnatural and cursed cutting their hair, should every hour fear and tremble, lest they should bring it upon their own heads, and among us in this kingdom. Our Henry I repressed the wearing of long hair, which though it were a gaiety of no charge, yet for the indecency thereof, he reformed it, and all other dissoluteness. (Daniel's Hist.) See Mr Prins' Unloveliness of Love Locks. See also a book entitled Diatriba Theologica de capillis, constans disputatione Textuali, ad #1Co 11:14,15.

Ver. 15. Her hair is given her] Now it is a vile thing to go against nature. Cyprian and Austin say that garish apparel is worse than whoredom; because whoredom only corrupts chastity, but this corrupts nature.

Ver. 16. Seem to be contentious] A doctore glorioso, et pastore contentioso, et inutilibus questionibus, liberet Ecclesiam suam Domiuus, said Luther. From a vain-glorious doctor, from a contentious pastor, and from endless and needless controversies, the good Lord deliver his Church. The word rendered "seem," signifieth, "is pleased to be, desires and hath a will to be, yea, boasts and prides himself in it," δοκει δοκησισοφος. This is a foul fault in any, but especially in ministers; who must see (saith Luther) that those three dogs follow them not into the pulpit, pride, covetousness, and contentiousness. A quarrelsome person is like a cock of the kind, ever bloody with the blood of others and himself; and divisions are Satan's gun powder plot to blow up religion.

We have no such custom] viz. To strive about trifles, but to submit to our teachers, #Heb 13:17. It is a vile thing, saith Bifield, {on #1Pe 3} to vex our ministers by our obstinace; yea, though they were not able to make so full demonstration, yet when they reprove such things, out of a spiritual jealousy and fear that they corrupt the people's hearts, they are to be heard and obeyed.

Ver. 17. I praise you not] q.d. I discommend and dispraise you. The Corinthians were in many things faulty and blameworthy. St Paul deals plainly and freely with them, and would not therefore take their offered kindness, #2Co 12:14-18, lest he should be engaged to them, and by receiving a courtesy, sell his liberty.

Ver. 18. There be divisions] Gr. σχισματα, schisms, rents, yea, and that about the sacrament of the Lord's supper (that bond of love), through Satan's malice. Now there can be no greater sin committed, saith Chrysostom, than to break the peace of the Church. Cyprian saith, It is an inexpressible blemish, such as cannot be washed off with the blood of martyrdom. {a} The error of it may be pardoned (saith Oecolampadius in his epistle to the Lutherans of Snevia) so there be faith in Christ Jesus; but the discord we cannot expiate though we should lay down our lives to do it.

{a} Hom. 11. ad Ephes.

Ver. 19. There must be heresies] Therefore much more schisms, which also, for the most part, do degenerate into heresies; as an old serpent into a dragon. In the time of Pope Clement V, Frederick, king of Sicily, was so offended at the evil government of the Church, that he began to question the truth of the Christian religion. But Arnoldus de Villanova confirmed and settled him by this and such like places of Scripture, "Offences must come, there must be heresies," &c., God having so decreed and foretold it. It behoves that there be heresies in the Church; as it is necessary there should be poison and venomous creatures in the world, because out of them God will work medicines.

May be made manifest] As they are now, if ever, in these shedding and discriminating times. So in the Palatinate they fell to Popery, as fast as leaves in autumn.

Ver. 20. This is not to eat, &c.] When the Lord's supper therefore is not rightly administered, it is no longer his; especially if the substantials thereof be omitted. As in those sacrifices, #Ho 9:4 "Their bread for their soul shall not come into the house of the Lord"; that is, the bread for their natural sustenance. He speaks of that meat offering, #Le 2:4, appointed for a spiritual use, yet called the "bread for their life or livelihood"; because God esteemed it no other than common meat. So #Jer 7:21, in scorn he calls their sacrifice, flesh, &c.

Ver. 21. Every one taketh] Eateth and communicateth with those of his own sect and faction only, not staying for others. Such among the Philippians were those of "the concision," #1Co 3:2, that made divisions, and cut the Church into little pieces and sucking congregations, making separation.

Ver. 22. What, have ye not houses?] Here he abolished their love feasts, for the disorder that happened therein. The Greek Church nevertheless retained them; but the Roman Church laid them down, as Justin Martyr witnesseth.

Ver. 23. For I have received] Rectum est regula sui et obliqui. The apostle seems to rectify them, by reducing them to the first institution; and by letting them know that he had his authority from heaven; he received what he delivered, and delivered what he received, keeping nothing back, #Ac 20:27.

The same night, &c.] It was his last bequeath to his Church, for a καθαρηριον αλεξικακον, as Ignatius hath it, a sovereign both purgative and preservative.

Ver. 24. This is my body] En praeclaram illam consecrationem, Behold that goodly consecration (saith Beza) for the which the shavelings say that they are more holy than the very Virgin Mary; for that Mary only conceived Christ, but they create him. Whereunto the Virgin might well reply, that she carefully nourished Christ, whom they cruelly devour. Dost thou believe (said the doctor to the martyr) that Christ's body and blood is in the eucharist really and substantially? I believe, saith he, that that is a real lie, and substantial lie. When Cranmer was brought forth to dispute in Oxford, Dr Weston, Prolocutor, thus began the disputation, Convenistis hodie, fratres, profligaturi detestandam illam haeresin de veritate corporis Christi in Sacramento, &c. We are gathered today, brothers to overthrow that wicked heresy concerning the truth of the body of Christ in the sacrament, At which mistake, various learned men burst out into a great laughter.

Ver. 25. He took the cup] {See Trapp on "Mt 26:27"}

Ver. 26. Ye do show] We need no other crucifix to mind us of Christ's passion. Hence this sacrament was by some ancients termed a sacrifice, viz. representative and commemorative, but not properly, as the Papists make it.

Till he come] There shall be a Church then, and the pure worship of God, till the world's end, maugre the malice of tyrants and heretics.

Ver. 27. Shall be guilty] Because they profane the holy symbols and pledges of Christ's blessed body and blood. These are in some sense as guilty as those that spit upon Christ's face, or that spilt his blood. As the Donatists, that cast the holy elements to dogs; or as that wretched Booth, a Bachelor of Arts in St John's College in Cambridge, who being popishly affected, at the time of the communion took the consecrated bread, and forbearing to eat it, conveyed and kept it closely for a time, and afterwards threw it over the college wall. Not long after this, he threw himself headlong over the battlements of the chapel and so ended his life. (Bishop Morton, Instit. of the Sac.)

Ver. 28. Let a man examine] A metaphor from metallaries or lapidists, as they try their metals or precious stones, and do it exactly, that they be not cozened; so here, men must make an exact scrutiny.

And so let him eat] After preparation, participation. The heathens had their caena pura, pure supper the night before their sacrifices. The Russians receive children after seven years old to the communion, saying, that at that age they begin to sin against God. But can they say, that at that age they can examine themselves and receive preparedly? Chrysostom calleth the Lord's table, that "dreadful table" (φορικωδης), and the ancients call the sacraments, "dreadful mysteries" (τα φορικτα μυστηρια).

Ver. 29. For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily] He saith not unworthy (for so we are all), but unworthily, that is, unpreparedly, for a good work may be spoiled in the doing, as many a good tale is marred in the telling, and many a good garment in the making.

Eateth and drinketh damnation] He that came in without a wedding garment on his back, went not away without fetters on his feet. He was taken from the table to the tormentors. God's table becomes a snare to unworthy receivers; they eat their bane, they drink their poison. Henry VII, emperor of Germany, was poisoned in the sacramental bread by a monk; Pope Victor II by his sub-deacon in the chalice; and one of our bishops of York by poison put into the wine at sacrament. God will deal with ill communicants as #Job 20:23. They will speed no better than Amnon did at Absalom's feast; or than Haman did at Esther's. Sin brought to the sacrament, picks out that time to petition against them, as Esther did against Haman at the banquet of wine, #Es 7:2,6. So that they shall cry out as that emperor beforementioned did, Calix vitae calix mortis, The cup of life is to us a cup of poison.

Ver. 30. Many are weak] The mortality at Corinth began at God's house, and that for unworthy communicating. God will be sanctified of all that draw near to him. He loves to be acquainted with men in the walks of their obedience, and yet he takes state upon him in his ordinances, and will be served like himself, or we shall hear from him. What manner of men therefore ought we to be that come so near to God in this holy ordinance? Nadab and Abihu can tell you that the flames of jealousy are hottest about the altar. Uzzah and the Bethshemites, though dead, do yet tell you that justice as well as mercy is most active about the ark. Judgment begins at God's own house, #1Pe 4:17; and the destroying angel begins at the sanctuary, #Eze 9:6.

Ver. 31. We should not be judged] God should be prevented, and the devil put out of office, as having nothing to say against us, but what we have said before. Let us therefore up and be doing at this most needful but much neglected work of self-judging, that God may acquit us. First search and try our ways, as examiners, #La 3:40. Next, make a bill of indictment, and confess against ourselves, as informers; aggravating all by the circumstances. Thirdly, step from the bar to the bench, and pass sentence upon ourselves, as so many judges: when we are to come to the Lord's supper especially. Otherwise blind Popery shall rise up in judgment against us and condemn us. We read of William de Raley, bishop of Winchester, A. D. 1243, that being near death, he had the sacrament brought unto him. And perceiving the priest to enter his chamber with it, he cried out, "Stay, good friend, let the Lord come no nearer to me: it is more fit that I be drawn to him like a traitor, that in many things have been a traitor unto him." (Godwin's Catalogue.) His servants therefore, by his commandment, drew him out of his bed unto the place where the priest was, and there with tears he received the sacrament; and spending much time in prayer afterwards, he so ended his life. The like is reported of William Langespe, base son of King Henry II, and Earl of Salisbury; that lying very sick, the bishop brought the sacrament. He understanding of the bishop's coming, met him at the door half naked, with a halter about his neck, threw himself down prostrate at his feet, and would not be taken up until, having made confession of his sins with tears and other signs of sincere repentance, he had received the sacrament in most devout manner.

Ver. 32. That we should not, &c.] Ferre minora volo, ne graviora feram. I to bear the lesser punishments so that I will not bear the heavier ones.

Ver. 33. Wherefore, my brethren] He that reproveth and adviseth not, doth as it were snuff the lamp and not pour in oil.

Chapter 12

Ver. 1. I would not have you ignorant] To wit, of the only author and true end of them, "lest ye be vainly puffed up by your fleshly mind," #Col 2:18. Ignorance breeds pride, #Re 3:17.

Ver. 2. Even as ye were led] It is the misery of a natural man that hath not his heart stablished with grace, to be carried away as he is led, to be wherried about with every wind of doctrine, to have no mould but what the next seducer casteth him into; being blown like a glass into this or that shape, at the pleasure of his breath.

Ver. 3. Calleth Jesus accursed] As the wicked Jews do in this day in their daily prayers and abbreviature; and as the Gentiles did of old, and these Corinthians among the rest. But now they would rather die than do so; as Pliny writes to Trajan the emperor, that he could never force any that were Christians indeed, either to invoke the gods, or to do sacrifice before the emperor's image, or to curse Christ, Quorum nihil cogi posse dicuntur qui sunt revera Christiani. (Plin. Epist.)

And that no man can say, &c.] That is, no man can, with the fiducial assent of his heart, acknowledge Christ to be the only Lord, whom he is to worship by the same impulsions, by which another curses and blasphemeth him, but by such peculiar motives as are suggested and revealed unto him by the Holy Ghost.

Ver. 4. But the same Spirit] As the divers smell of flowers come from the same influence, and the divers sounds in the organ from the same breath.

Ver. 5. Differences of administrations] i.e. Ecclesiastical functions, all of them the dona honoraria of the Lord Christ, #Eph 4:8-11.

Ver. 6. Diversities of operations] The Holy Ghost may use one of less grace to do more good than one of more; though he delights to honour those of most sincerity with most success, as #1Co 15:10.

Ver. 7. To profit withal] We are neither born nor born again for ourselves. If we be not fit to serve the body, neither are we fit to be of the body; he is not a saint that seeketh not communion of saints. Pudeat illos, qui ita in studiis se abdiderunt, ut ad vitam communem nullum fructum ferre possint, saith Cicero. They may well be ashamed that employ not their talents for a public good. <sup>{a}</sup> The Greek word το συμφερον importeth such a kind of profit, as redounds to community. It seemeth to be a metaphor from bees, that bring all the honey they can get to the common hive.

Ver. 8. The word of wisdom] "The tongue of the learned," to time a word, #Isa 50:4, to set it upon its circumferences, #Pr 25:11, to declare unto man his righteousness, when not one of a thousand can do it like him, #Job 33:23.

The word of knowledge] This, say some, is the doctor's office, as the former word of wisdom is the pastor's (Mr Edwards). But the essential difference between pastors and doctors in each congregation is much denied by many learned and good divines. Others by "the word of wisdom" will have understood knowledge infused by divine revelation; as by "the word of knowledge," that knowledge that is acquired by study and industry. (Barlow. Taylor upon Titus.)

Ver. 9. To another faith] The faith of miracles, which a man may have, and yet miscarry, #1Co 13:2. So doth not any one that hath the faith of God's elect; that fails not, #Lu 22:32. Some say the apostle here meaneth historical faith; and this seems the more probable, because he speaketh of the working of miracles, #1Co 12:10.

Ver. 10. Discerning of spirits] They discerned not men's hearts of themselves (for to God only), but by a special work of God's Spirit discovering them to their eyes, as Peter discerned Ananias, and afterwards Simon Magus, whom Philip mistook and baptized. (Rolloc. de Vocatione.)

Ver. 11. One and the self-same Spirit] Who yet is called the seven spirits of God, #Re 1:4, for his manifold and various operations.

Dividing to every man severally, as he will] It is reported that in Luther's house was found written, Res et verba Philippus. Res sine verbis Lutherus. Verba sine re Erasmus. Everyone hath his own share; all are not alike gifted; yet by "one and the self-same Spirit," that one and that self-same Spirit, as the Greek text runs, repeating the article, very elegantly and emphatically, το εν και το αυτο πνευμα..

Ver. 12. So also is Christ] Mystical Christ, the Church. Christ the Saviour of his body {#Eph 5:23} accounts not himself complete without his Church, #Eph 1:23. So God is called Jacob, #Ps 24:6.

Ver. 13. For by one Spirit, &c.] By the testimony of the two sacraments, whereof we all partake, the apostle proveth that we are all but one body, and should therefore as bees bring all our honey to the common hive.

Are we all baptized] The apostles received all into the Church that believed and were baptized, without particular probation for some days, weeks, months, or years, and entering into a private solemn covenant.

And have been all made to drink] Potionati sumus, We have drunk, saith Piscator, and so prove ourselves to be of the corporation and company of believers. But what was the meaning of that passage in the old Church catechism, "There are but two sacraments only, as generally necessary," &c. Are there any more than two, though not absolutely and generally necessary to all men in all times, states, and conditions whatsoever? The Papists themselves say, that five of their sacraments at least are not generally necessary.

Ver. 14. Not one member, but many] As man's body curiously wrought, and as it were by the book, #Ps 139:16. Had God left out an eye or hand in his common place book (saith one) thou hadst wanted it.

Ver. 15. If the foot should say, &c.] Inferiors must not envy those above them, but be content, since it is God that cutteth us out several conditions; and a scavenger may honour God in his place, as well as a minister in his.

Ver. 16. If the ear] A man had better be blind, lame, dumb, than deaf; because by the ear life enters into the soul, #Isa 55:3.

Ver. 17. If the whole body, &c.] It is proper to God to be πανοφθαλμος, all eye; Sic spectat universos quasi singulos, sic singulos quasi solos.

Ver. 18. God hath set, &c.] And he, as only wise, doth all in number, weight, and measure. Shall we not rest in what he hath done as best "What can the man do that cometh after the king?" #Ec 2:12.

Ver. 19. Where were the body?] So the body political consisteth not of a physician and a physician (saith Aristotle), but of a physician and a husbandman, &c.

Ver. 20. But now are they many members, &c.] 1. Use; 2. Necessity; 3. Honour; 4. Comeliness, 5. Mutual consent,—commend these things. Let every man try his membership (1. If sociable with Christ and his people; 2. If useful and serviceable to the body; 3. If sensible and compassionate, &c., being himself also in the body), as was before advised.

Ver. 21. The eye cannot say, &c.] Superiors may not slight their inferiors, since they cannot be without them, as one time or other they will be forced to acknowledge. It was a saying of General Vere to the king of Denmark, that kings cared not for soldiers until such time as their crowns hung on the one side of their heads.

Ver. 22. Which seem to be, &c.] As the organs of nourishment, not so noble, but more necessary than those of the senses.

Ver. 23. And those members] As the organs of excretion and generation, called less honourable and uncomely, non per se, sed comparate, comparatively in respect of those parts that are singularly comely.

Our uncomely parts, &c.] It was at the abomination of Baal-peor, or Priapus, that his worshippers said, Nos, pudore pulso, stamus sub Iove, caelis apertis, &c. God taught our first parents to make coverings to hide their nakedness, and the contrary is often threatened as a curse, #Isa 3:17.

Ver. 24. For our comely parts] A fair face needs no dress, is its own testimonial, a bait without a hook, said Socrates, δελεαρ ανευ αγκιστρον..

Ver. 25. Should have the same care] As if the heel do but ache, the whole condoleth and cureth, and careth; and yet without dividing care, that there might be no schism in the body.

Ver. 26. And whether one man suffer] This spiritual sympathy, mirum est quam frigide tractetur inter Christianos hodie, saith Aretius on this text. {See Trapp on "1Co 12:20"} {See Trapp on "1Co 12:27"} Luther in a certain epistle of his to Lampertus Thorn, a prisoner for Christ, thus writeth, Consolabor me quod vestra vincula men sunt, vestri carceres et ignes mei sunt; sunt vero, dum ea confiteor et praedico, vobisque simul compatiar; et congratulor; that is, I doubt (and it is a grief to me) that I shall never have the honour of martyrdom as you have. But herein I can comfort myself, that your bonds are my bonds, your imprisonment and burning at a stake mine; for so they are so long as I confess and extol them; so long as I both suffer with you and rejoice with you. (Tom. ii. Epist.)

Ver. 27. Now ye are, &c.] St Cyprian's sympathy is remarkable, Cum singulis pectus meum copulo, moeroris et funeris pondera luctuosa participo; Cum plangentibus plango, cum deflentibus defleo. Hereby he showed himself a living member.

Ver. 28. Diversities of tongues] This comes in last, either to bid check to their pride, who gloried so much in their many languages; or because he meant to say more to it in the words following.

Ver. 29. Are all teachers?] Yes, some would have it so, as in Alcibiades' army all were leaders, no learners.

Ver. 31. Covet earnestly, &c.] Ζηλουτε, ambite. This is the best ambition. Christians should strive to excel, and be the best at what they undertake. Melancthon saith that Frederick the elector of Saxony had cropped off the tops of all virtues.

A more excellent way] What was that? Charity to God and men, #1Co 13:1. Graces are better than gifts. A shopful of barrels enrich not, unless full of commodities. Gifts as to heaven are but the lumber of a Christian; it is grace maketh him rich toward God; and is therefore chiefly to be coveted. Care also is to be taken that we get not the spiritual rickets; grow big in the head (in gifts), decay in the vitals, i.e. in grace and the exercise of it.

Chapter 13

Ver. 1. Though I speak with the tongues] The Corinthians gloried much in this gift of tongues; but this a man may have, and yet perish, as Mithridates, who is said to have spoken two and twenty languages. And Cleopatra was a great linguist, she could give answers to Ethiopian, Hebrew, Arabic, Syrian, Median, and Parthian ambassadors, saith Plutarch; yea, she could turn and tune her tongue as an instrument of many strings to what dialect she pleased, την γλωτταν ὡσπερ ὄργανον τι πολυχορδον ευπετως τρεπουσα..

And of angels] Not that angels have tongues; as neither have they wings, though they are said to fly, and even unto weariness of fight, #Da 9:21. A certain friar undertook to show to the people a feather of the angel Gabriel's wing, and so verified the old proverb, "a friar, a liar." But the apostle here useth a high kind of expression, such as is used #Ac 6:15 Ps 78:25. Unless, perhaps, saith Chrysostom here, the angels have suo modo sua colloquia. The schoolmen have great disputes about it, and tell us that when an angel hath a conceit in his mind of anything, with a desire that another should understand it, it is enough, it is done immediately. But are not these they that intrude into those things that they have not seen? #Col 2:18, understanding neither what they say nor whereof they affirm, #1Ti 1:7. Like unto these are our new millenaries, that upon a mistake of some high expressions in Scripture, which describe the judgments poured out upon God's enemies in making a way to the Jews' conversion by the pattern of the last judgment, think that Jesus Christ shall come from heaven again, and reign here upon earth a thousand years. (See Mr Cotton's Sixth Vial.)

Or a tinkling cymbal] Sounding only for pleasure, but signifying nothing. Tiberius the emperor was wont to call Apion the grammarian cymbalum orbis, the cymbal of the world, for his much prattle. (Sueton.) And Jerome inveighs against some in his time, qui verbis tinnulis et emendicath utebantur, that used only tinkling and tickling words, without weight or worth.

Ver. 2. And have not charity] If I knew and did all for ostentation, not for edification; as Stephen Gardiner, who blew up his gifts to the view of others, as butchers blow up their flesh. Chrysostom saith that to show mercy is a more glorious work than to raise from the dead. Removing of mountains is instanced, because noted by our Saviour as a master miracle, #Mt 17:20 Lu 17:6. A man may cast out devils, and yet be cast to the devil.

And have not charity, it profiteth me nothing] The same is true of all other parts of obedience, whether active or passive. If we were as constant frequenters of the Church as Anna the prophetess was of the temple, #Lu 2:36-38, si aures nostrae ad portam Ecclesiae fixae essent, saith one, if our ears were nailed to the church doors, if our knees were grown as hard as camel's knees with much kneeling before the Lord, if our faces were furrowed with continual weeping, as Peter's is said to have been, yet if we lacked charity, all were nothing.

Ver. 3. Though I bestow all my goods] Unless I draw out my soul as well as my sheaf to the hungry, #Isa 58:10. Many shrink up charity to a handbreadth, to giving of alms.

And though I give my body, &c.] As Servetus the heretic did at Geneva, A. D. 1555. So Mauzius the Anabaptist gave his body to be drowned at Tigure, A. D. 1527 (Scultet. Annal.); Fisher, Bishop of Rochester, to be beheaded for holding the pope's supremacy; Friar Forest, to be hanged for the same cause. And how many of our popish martyrs (malefactors or traitors, I should say) have worn the Tyburn tippet, <sup>{a}</sup> as Father Latimer phraseth it! And more of them must, for they be some of them knaves all, as the L. Audley, chancellor of England, once said to the thirteen Calais prisoners for religion, whom he discharged; and like bells they will never be well tuned till well hanged. For what reason? they are flabella et flagella Reip., &c.

Ver. 4. And is kind] χρηστευεται, or, is easy to be made use of, ready to any good office. Charity is no churl.

Vaunteth not itself] With the scorn of others. Arrianus saith, that he is περιπερος, that blameth others and is restless in himself. Such a one was Timon of old and Laurentius Valla of late.

Is not puffed up] Hence charity is portrayed as a naked child with a merry countenance, covered in a cloud, with a bloody heart in the right hand, giving honey to a bee without wings.

Ver. 5. Behave itself unseemly] οισχημονει, or, doth not disgrace any one.

Is not easily provoked] παροξυνεται, falls not into any sharp fit, as they did, #Ac 15:39, so as that her teeth are set on edge, or that she should show her anger by the trembling of the body.

Thinketh no evil] Is not suspicious, or doth not meditate revenge.

Ver. 6. Rejoiceth with the truth] Nulla est igitur inter males charitas, sed coniuratio potius, saith a grave expositor. It is not charity, but conspiracy, that is found in wicked men. (Dr Sclater.)

Ver. 7. Beareth all things] στεγει, tegit. Covereth faults with her large mantle, dissembleth injuries, swalloweth down whole many pills that would prove very bitter in the chewing. The Greek word is metaphora a tignis, say some, and signifies, that charity "beareth all things," as the cross main beam in a house supporteth the whole building. (Pareus a Lapide.)

Believeth all things] Is candid and ingenuous, yet not blind and blockish. No man may ravish me out of my wits, saith one; to conclude as Walter Mapes did of his Church of Rome, after he had related the gross simony {a} of the pope, Sit tamen Domina materque nostra Roma baculus in aqua fractus, et absit credere quae vidimus. If a Papist see one of their priests kissing a woman, he is by their canon law bid to believe that the priest is giving her counsel only. Their rule to their novices is, Tu et Asinus unum estote. You and an ass shall be one.

Endureth all things] Love, as it is a passion, so it is tried rather by passions than actions.

{a} The act or practice of buying or selling ecclesiastical preferments, benefices, or emoluments; traffic in sacred things. (ED)

Ver. 8. Prophecies, they shall fail] The archprophet shall teach us immediately, as he had done Moses and Elias, who appearing to Christ in the transfiguration, knew and could say far more to our Saviour for his comfort and confirmation against the bitterness of his death than ever they could while here living upon earth, #Lu 9:31.

Whether there be knowledge] Gotten by study, and communicated to others. For Lilmod lelamreed, say the rabbins, we therefore learn that we may teach.

Ver. 9. We prophesy in part] We therefore know but imperfectly, because we are taught but imperfectly. My greatest knowledge, said Chytraeus, is to know that I know nothing. (Melch. Adam.) And not only in most other things am I ignorant, said Augustine, {Epist. cxix. chapt. xxi.} but even in the Scriptures (my chief study and trade of life) multo plura nescio quam scio I am ignorant of more matters than I know. The rabbins in their comments upon Scripture, when they meet with hard knots that they cannot explicate, they solve all with this, Elia cum venerit, solver omnia, Elias, when he comes, shall assoil all our doubts. Erastus at the point of death said, that he therefore held it a happiness to die, because now he should fully understand an answer to all those harder questions wherein here he could have no satisfaction. (Melch. Adam, in Vita Erasti.)

Ver. 10. Then that which is in part] As the old slough falls off when the new skin comes on. As a man returns no more to the free school that hath proceeded in the university.

Ver. 11. When I was a child] Adrian VI, before he became pope, taxed the Church of Rome for many errors; but afterwards, being desired to reform them, he wickedly abused these words for an answer, "When I was a child, I spake as a child, &c., but now being a man," &c.

Ver. 12. In a glass, &c.] See #Nu 12:8.

But then face to face] i.e. Distinctly, Clearly, immediately, beatifically. And surely, if Lipsius thought when he did but read Seneca that he was even upon Olympus' top, above mortality and human things; what a case shall we be in, when we shall behold Christ in his glory, and consider that every vein in that blessed body bled to bring us to bliss! If the mathematics alone are so delectable, that men think it sweet to live and die in those studies; what shall we think of heaven's happiness, which we shall one day clearly apprehend, but not fully comprehend?

Now I know in part] The present tense in grammar is accompanied with the imperfect; the perfect with the plusquam perfectum pluperfect. And such is the condition of our present and future happiness.

Even as I am known] We shall know the creatures by knowing God; as God now knows all his works by knowing himself.

Ver. 13. The greatest of these] Because longest lasting. Gifts that suppose imperfection in us, as faith and hope, or misery in others, as pity, &c., shall be put away. Secondly, because it is diffusive of itself to the use of others; whereas faith and hope are private goods; they are confined to the person of the believer. That was a memorable saying of Elizabeth Folks, martyr, at the stake, "Farewell all the world, farewell faith, farewell hope"; and so taking the stake in her hand, she said, "Welcome love."

Chapter 14

Ver. 1. Follow after charity] Διωκετε, follow it hot-foot, as they say; pursue and practise it. It is more than to desire or to be zealous of a thing, as it follows in the next words, Ζηλουτε, "Be zealous of spiritual gifts." Follow charity close, as the hunter doth his prey, or as the persecutor doth the martyr, that will hide or escape if he can. Charity may be fitly compared to the precious stone Pantarb, spoken of by Philostratus; a stone of great beauty and of strange property; so bright it is and radiant, that it gives light in the darkest midnight; and that light is of that admirable virtue, that it brings together the stones that it reacheth into heaps, as if they were so many hives of bees; but nature, lest so precious a gift should be undervalued, hath not only hid this stone in the secret bowels of the earth, but hath also put into it a property of slipping out of the hands of those that hold it, Nisi provida ratione teneatur; unless they hold it fast indeed.

Ver. 2. In an unknown tongue] So they that preach in a kind of a Roman English, and not in a low language to the people's capacity.

But unto God] Canit sibi et Musis, as the proverb is; and as good he may hold his tongue, for God needs him not.

Ver. 3. To edification, to exhortation] These three ends every preacher ought to propound to himself: 1. Edification in knowledge and holiness. 2. Exhortation, that is, reprehension and admonition. 3. Consolation, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way, #Heb 12:13.

Ver. 4. Edifieth the Church] Therefore prophecy is the more worthy, because profitable. Prodesse melius quam praeesse.

Ver. 5. I would that ye all spake with tongues] Gr. "I will." He here prefers prophesying (which was most edifying) before speaking with tongues, which they most affected, because it served most ad pompam, for applause and admiration.

Ver. 6. If I come unto you, &c.] This you would not like in me. And is that Venus in Caio Venus in Gaius, that is Naevus in Titio? a mole in Titius, a blemish in one that is a beauty in another?

By revelation, or by knowledge, or, &c.] Piscator reads it by revelation or by knowledge; that is, either by prophesying or by doctrine. The apostle expounding himself.

Ver. 7. Except they give a distinction] Unisono nihil auribus molestius. Discords in music make the best harmony. Through all Turkey there runs one tune, nor can every man play that; yet scarcely any but hath a fiddle with two strings.

Ver. 8. For if the trumpet] Similes are excellent for illustration, and must be fetched from things familiar.

Ver. 9. Ye shall speak into the air] You shall lose your labour, and may as well keep your breath to cool your broth.

Ver. 10. So many kinds of voices] Seventy-two material languages, they say.

Ver. 11. A barbarian] So the Grecians called all nations that spoke not their language. It is reported that nowhere in this day is spoken more barbarous language than at Athens, once the Greece of Greece. (Neand. Chron.)

Ver. 12. To the edifying of the Church] Clouds when full pour down, and the presses overflow, and the aromatic trees sweat out their precious and sovereign oils; and every learned scribe must bring out his treasure for the Church's behoof and benefit.

Ver. 13. Pray that he may interpret] Pope Innocent III never prayed thus; for he said, that the Church decreed the service in an unknown tongue, Ne sacrosaneta verba vilescerent, lest the holy words should be underprized. But public prayers in an unknown tongue, saith Erasmus, must be attributed to the change of time itself in Italy, France, and Spain, for there a long time the Latin was understood by all. But when afterwards their speeches degenerated into those common tongues now there used, then the language, not of the service, but of the people, was altered.

Ver. 14. Is unfruitful] In regard of others' edification. It were a great grace, said Lambert the martyr, if we might have the word of God diligently and often spoken and sung unto us in such wise, that the people might understand it; then should it come to pass that craftsmen should sing spiritual psalms sitting at their work, and the husbandman at his plough, as wisheth St Jerome. Pavier, townclerk of London in Henry VIII's time, was a man that in no case could abide to hear that the gospel should be in English; insomuch that he once swore a great oath, that if he thought that the king's Highness would set forth the Scripture in English, and let it be read by the people by his authority, rather than he would so long live, he would cut his own throat. But he broke promise, for shortly after he hanged himself.

Ver. 15. I will pray with understanding] To an effectual prayer there must concur intentio et affectus, the intention of the mind and the affection of the heart; else it is not praying, but parroting. I have read of a parrot in Rome, that could distinctly say over the whole Creed. (Sphinx. Philos.)

Ver. 16. Say Amen] This the apostle reckons for a great loss. The poor misled and muzzled Papists are enjoined not to join so far with a Protestant in any holy action, as to say Amen. But in that there is no so great loss. (Specul. Europ.)

Ver. 17. But the other is not edified] This we should all labour, viz. to edify others. Synesius speaks of some, who having a treasure of tongues and other abilities in them, would as soon part with their hearts as their meditations; the canker of whose great skill shall be a witness against them.

Ver. 18. I thank my God, &c.] Skill in tongues is, as now, a great blessing. Indeed at first when men began θεομαχειν, to fight against God, they were compelled λογομαχειν, to babble in divers languages, 72, as Epiphanius affirmeth. But God hath turned this curse into a blessing unto his people, #Ac 2:4-13, and as in the first plantation of the gospel, so in the late reformation; God sent it before, as his munition to batter the forts of Antichrist, who had banished arts and languages, overspreading all with barbarism and atheism. Graece nosse suspectum erat. Hebraice fere haereticum.

Ver. 19. In an unknown tongue] A Parisian doctor tells us that though the apostle would have God's service to be celebrated in a known tongue, yet the Church for various weighty reasons hath otherwise ordered and appointed it. (Benedict.) The Mahometans read their Koran (which they supposed were profaned if it were translated into common tongues) and perform their public devotions in the Arabic tongue, which is their learned language. (Montan. in #1Co 14)

Ver. 20. Be not children] Mentibus scilicet, sed moribus, #Mt 18:3.
{See Trapp on "Mt 18:3"}

In malice be ye children] In innocence and ignoscence.

In understanding be men] Is it not a shame to have no more understanding at 80 than at eight years of age?

Ver. 21. With men of other tongues] God threatened the Jews, that since they would not hearken to their own prophets, they should hear foreign enemies, #Isa 28:11 Jer 5:15. So those that will not obey the sweet command of Christ, "Come unto me," shall have one day no command to obey, but that dreadful discedite, "Depart from me," &c.

Ver. 22. But for them which believe] To confirm and comfort believers; this is the chief end of preaching. Let this comfort those that cannot say they have converted any by their ministry.

Ver. 23. Will they not say ye are mad?] And may they not say as much if we jangle and dissent in opinion, one holding this, and another that. Ammianus Marcellinus taxed the ancient bishops of his time for their hateful miscarriage in this kind.

Ver. 24. He is convinced of all] God smiteth the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips doth he slay the wicked, #Isa 11:4. By his word he telleth a man (as he did the Samaritaness, #Joh 4:16,17,39) all that ever he did.

Ver. 25. The secrets of his heart] God's word is a curious critic, #Heb 4:12 "a discerner of the thoughts," &c. It finds and ferrets out secret sins.

Ver. 26. Let all things, &c.] There is edifying even in appointing of fit Psalms.

Ver. 27. Or at the most by three] Lest the hearers be tired out. Our infirmity will not suffer any long intention, either of body or mind.

Long services can hardly maintain their vigour, as in tall bodies the spirits are diffused. Erasmus hath observed that Origen never preached above an hour, often but half an hour: Consultius iudicabat crebro docere, quam diu, saith he. He held it better to preach often, than long. (Eras. Praefat. ad Orig. Opera.)

Ver. 28. Let him keep silence] Such as stuff their sermons with Greek and Latin are here silenced, further than they interpret the same. If thou canst help my hearers to Greek and Latin ears (saith a reverend preacher) they shall have Greek and Latin enough.

Ver. 29. Let the other judge] But is not this a disparagement to the prophets? may some say: no, but an honour. #1Th 5:20,21, after "despise not prophesying," he subjoineth, "try all things."

Ver. 30. That sitteth by] And is extraordinarily inspired and qualified; a little otherwise than our enthusiasts, that brag of their lumen propheticum, light of prophecy.

Ver. 31. That all may learn] The most learned may learn something by the discourses of others less learned than themselves. Apollos, a learned teacher, may yet be taught by a tentmaker. The Jewish rabbins acknowledge that they came to understand #Isa 14:23, by hearing an Arabian woman mention a besom in her language to her maid, וְאִשָּׁה (R. David in Radic.)

Ver. 32. Are subject to the prophets] To be scanned and examined: which they should not be, unless they took their turns in course to prophesy. Eloquere, said one, ut quid sis videam: Speak, that I may see what is in thee.

Ver. 33. Not the author of confusion] Nec author, nec fautor. Unquiet spirits are of the devil, who keeps ado, and fills the Church with confusion by his turbulent agents and emissaries, sowing sedition and spreading schisms.

Ver. 34. Let your women, &c.] {See Trapp on "Ro 16:1"}

Ver. 35. Ask their husbands] Who therefore must dwell with them according to knowledge, #1Pe 3:7, and be manly guides unto them in the way to heaven. The master's breast must be the household's treasury.

For it is a shame for women, &c.] She was a singular example that taught the Greek and Latin tongues at Heidelberg, A.D. 1554; her name was Olympia Fulvia Morata, an Italian, of the city of Ferrara. Ancient histories indeed make mention of one Aratha, who read openly in the schools at Athens 25 years, made 40 books, and a hundred philosophers to her scholars. Leoptia likewise wrote against Theophrastus; Corinna often contended with Pindarus in versifying.

Ver. 36. What? came the word, &c.] As if he should say (and he saith it with some displeasure), Are ye the first, or the only Christians? are ye too good to be admonished? take heed lest your arrogance and high spiritedness lay you low enough, even in that slimy valley, #Job 21:31,32.

Ver. 37. The commandment] And therefore to be obeyed by the best of you. Aut faciendum, aut patiendum: Aut poenitendum, aut pereundum. Either do it, or die for it.

Ver. 38. But if any man be ignorant, &c.] If stubbornly ignorant and uncounsellable; let him take his own course. I have cleared the truth in things now controverted, and there I rest me. Who so blind as he that will not see? such put not light under a bushel, but under a dunghill, and shall give a heavy account of it to God. When I hear men (saith Lord Kemp) under all the means that we enjoy, yet think that their ignorance shall excuse them, it makes me think of the answer of the agent of Charles V, emperor to the ambassador of Sienna. The Siennesis having rebelled against the emperor, sent their ambassador to excuse it; who when he could find no other excuse, thought in a jest to put it off thus: What, saith he, shall not we of Sienna be excused, seeing we are known to be all fools? the agent replied, Even that shall excuse you, but upon the condition which is fit for fools, which is, to be kept bound and enchained.

Ver. 39. Wherefore, brethren] This he adds as a corollary, to prevent mistakes, as if that he were an enemy either to prophecy or tongues, so soberly and orderly used. Arbitror nonnullos in quibusdam locis librorum meorum, opinatuos me, sensisse quod non sensi, aut non sensisse quod sensi, saith Augustine (lib. iii. de Trin. c. 3): I foresee that some will construe many passages of my writings far otherwise than I intend them: and it happened accordingly, as Baronius testifieth. (Annul. tom. 6, A. D. 450, n. 17.)

Ver. 40. Let all things, &c.] A general rule of great moment. In things both real and ritual decency and order must be observed in Church meetings. For this the Colossians are much commended, #Col 2:5. Our Saviour caused the people whom he had fed to keep order in their sitting on the grass; they sat down rank by rank, as rows or borders of beds in a garden; so the Greek imports. {a}

Whereupon an expositor noteth, Ordinatum res in Ecclesia faciendae, order must be observed in the Church.

{a} πρασαι πρασαι, Hebraisc. ut #Ex 8:14. Cartwright.

Chapter 15

Ver. 1. And wherein ye stand] εστηκατε, a military term, as Martyr noteth. Satan overthroweth the faith of some, #2Ti 2:18, and by this very engine wherewith he assaulted these Corinthians, ibid. So that the apostle was fain to make apology, #1Co 15:19, to make a barricado.

Ver. 2. By which also ye are saved] Eternal life is potentially in the word, as the harvest is potentially in the seed, or as the tree is in the kernel or scion, #Jas 1:21.

If ye keep in memory] He limiteth the promise of salvation to the condition of keeping in memory what they had heard. Tantum didicimus, quantum meminimus, said Socrates; many have memories like nets, that let go the fair water, retain the filth only; or like sieves, that keep the chaff, let go the corn. If God come to search them with a candle, what shall he find but old songs, old wrongs, &c.? not a promise of any word of God hidden there: for things of that nature they are like Sabinus in Seneca, that never in all his life could remember those three names of Homer, Ulysses, and Achilles. But the soul should be as a holy ark, the memory like the pot of manna, preserving holy truths.

Ver. 3. First of all] Christ is to be preached with the first, as being the prora et puppis of man's happiness, #Joh 16:14. It is the office of the Holy Ghost to take of Christ's excellencies, and hold them out to the world. What then should ministers, the mouth of the Holy Ghost, do rather?

Ver. 4. According to the Scriptures] Which both foreshowed and foreshadowed it in Adam's waking, Isaac's reviving, as it were from the dead, Joseph's abasement and advancement, Samson's breaking the bars and bearing away the gates of Gaza, David's being drawn out of the deep, Daniel's out of the den, Jeremiah's out of the dungeon, Jonah's out of the belly of hell, #Mt 12:39, &c.

Ver. 5. Seen of Cephas] Adam died, and we hear no more of him. But Christ showed himself after death in six several apparitions for our confirmation.

Then of the twelve] So they are called for the rotundity of the number, utcunque unus vel alter vel deesset eel abesset. Judas had made one long letter of himself, Longam literam fecit.

Ver. 6. Above five hundred] The number of believers were then greater than some would gather out of #Ac 1:15. Those 120 may seem to have been chieftains, such as that any one of them might have been thought meet to succeed Judas in his apostleship.

Ver. 7. Seen of James] This is not mentioned in the Gospel, as neither that of Peter, #1Co 15:5.

Ver. 8. One born out of due time] Quasi malo astro abortus, et adversante natura coactus. One that deserved to be rejected, as that forlorn infant, #Eze 16:4,5.

Ver. 9. I am the least of the apostles] Not come to my just size, as one born out of due time, and not without violence. Paulus quasi Paululus, saith one, because he was least in his own eyes, "less than the least of all saints," #Eph 3:8. Melancthon was of a like self-denying spirit, insomuch as Luther thought he went too far this way; Certe nimis nullus in hae est Philippus, Philip is too low conceited.

Not meet to be called] True humility, as true balm, ever sinks to the bottom of the water, when pride, like oil, ever swims on the top.

Ver. 10. I laboured more abundantly] See #2Co 11:23 Ro 15:19. George Eagles, martyr in Queen Mary's days, for his great pains in travelling from place to place to confirm the brethren, was surnamed, Trudge over the world. Might not St Paul have been fitly so surnamed?

Not I, but the grace of God] So those good servants, #Lu 19:16, Not we, but thy talents have gained other five, and other two, &c. Let God have the entire praise of all our good. We should boast and glory of nothing, because nothing is ours, saith holy Austin, who (being wholly of St Paul's spirit) was a great advancer of the grace of God, and abaser of man against 'all those patrons of nature with their vitreum acumen, bright but brittle sharpness of wit, as he styleth it.

Which was with me] Present with me, not which did work with me, as the Synergists would have it.

Ver. 11. So we preach, and so ye believed] A happy compliance, when the hearers' affections and endeavours do answer the affections and endeavours of the preacher, as here, and at Ephesus, #Ac 20:31-37; when people deliver themselves up to the form of doctrine, and are cast into the mould of the word, #Ro 6:17.

Ver. 12. No resurrection] More than that of regeneration, #Mt 19:28, that estate of the gospel called a new heaven and a new earth, #2Pe 3:13, the world to come, #Heb 2:5, that resurrection already past, #2Ti 2:18, that first resurrection, #Re 20:5.

Ver. 13. Then is not Christ risen] But of Christ's resurrection there were many both living and dead witnesses, as the earthquake, empty grave, stone rolled away, clothes wrapt up, &c.

Ver. 14. Then is our preaching vain] Never was there any imposture put upon the world as Christianity, if Christ be yet in the grave.

Ver. 15. False witnesses of God] For they might safely say with Jeremiah, Lord, if we be deceived, thou hast deceived us.

Ver. 16. Then is not Christ raised] And so God's decree is cassated, #Ac 13:33 cf. Ps 50:7.

Ver. 17. Ye are yet in your sins] #Ro 4:25. If he had not been let out of prison, our debt had remained upon us. But God sent his angel to roll away the stone, as the judge sends an officer to fetch one out of prison, and to release him. And this is the strength of our Saviour's reason, #Joh 16:10. The Spirit shall convince the world of righteousness (that I am Jehovah their righteousness), because I go to the Father, which I could not have done, unless you were acquitted of all your sins.

Ver. 18. Asleep in Christ] The Germans call the churchyard God's Acre, because the bodies are sowed therein, to be raised again. The Greeks call them κοιμητήρια, sleeping houses. The Hebrews call the grave Becbajim, the house of the living, Job calls it the congregation house of all living, #Job 30:23. As the apostle calls heaven the congregation house of the firstborn, #Heb 12:23.

Ver. 19. Most miserable] Because none out of hell ever suffered more than the saints have done.

Ver. 20. The firstfruits, &c.] As in the firstfruits offered to God, the Jews were assured of God's blessing on the whole harvest; so by the resurrection of Christ, our resurrection is insured.

Christ is risen] This was wont to be the form of salutation among Christians of old, Christus resurrexit, Christ is risen from the dead.

Ver. 21. By man came also, &c.] God's justice would be satisfied in the same nature that had sinned.

Ver. 22. Shall all be made alive] The saints shall be raised by virtue of the union with Christ to glory, the wicked shall be dragged to his tribunal by his Almighty power as a judge, to be tumbled thence into hell's torment.

Ver. 23. At his coming] As in the meantime their very dust is precious; the dead bodies consumed are not so destroyed, but that there is a substance preserved by a secret influence proceeding from Christ as a head. Hence they are said to be dead in Christ, who by rotting refineth them.

Ver. 24. Delivered up the kingdom] Not his essential kingdom, as God, by his economical, as Mediator.

Ver. 25. Till he hath put] And after too, but, 1. Without adversaries; 2. Without any outward means and ordinances.

Ver. 26. That shall be destroyed] It is already to the saints swallowed up in victory, so that they may say to it, as Jacob did to Esau, "Surely I have seen thy face as the face of God." This Esau, death, meets a member of Christ with kisses instead of frowns, and guards him home, as he did Jacob to his father's house.

Ver. 27. All things under his feet] This, #Ps 8:7,8, spoken of man in general, is properly applied to the man Christ Jesus; in whom also it extendeth to the saints, who are therefore more glorious than heaven, earth, or any creature, and shall have power over all, #Re 2:26. (Cameron. de Eccles.)

Ver. 28. That God may be all in all] Till sin and death be abolished we have no access to God but by Christ. But after that all enemies be trod under foot, then shall we have an immediate union with God; yet so, as that this shall be the proper and everlasting praise of Christ, as he is the procurer of that union.

Ver. 29. Which are baptized] The several senses that are set upon this text, see in Beza, Piscator, but especially our new annotations upon the Bible.

Ver. 30. In jeopardy every hour] Carrying our lives in our hands, as both the Hebrews and Greeks phrase it, εν τη χειρι την ψυχην εχειν. (Athenseus.)

Ver. 31. By our rejoicing] i.e. By our infirmities, afflictions, wherein he so much glorieth, #2Co 11:23-12:10, as an old soldier doth of his scars. As if the apostle should say, I appeal to all those miseries that I have suffered among you for a testimony.

Ver. 32. If after the manner, &c.] Paul fought with beasts at Ephesus after the manner of men, that is, say some, the men of Ephesus fought with him after the manner of beasts. (Beza, Sclater.) Others more probably understand it literally; If after the manner of men, that is, as men use to do, to show their valour (he meaneth those Bestiarii fighters with wild beasts at shows among the Romans), I have been cast to the beasts, and have either overcome them, as Lysimachus did the lion, or have been spared by them, as corpora sanctorum martyrum tangere multoties refugiebant bestiae, saith the historian, what advantageth it me, &c. And this latter sense is a stronger argument of the resurrection. (Chrysost. Ambros.)

Let us eat and drink] An ill inference of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth. Chrysostom saith, There were a sort of such in his time, as said δος μοι την σημερον και λαβε την αυριον, Give me today, and take thou tomorrow (την αυριον τις οιδεν. Anacreon.) And have not we those that say, Let us be merry while we may, we shall never be younger, Ede, bibe, lude, post mortem nulla voluptas, Eat, drink and play, there is no pleasure after death, it was wisely done of the Romans to banish Alaeus and Philiscus, a couple of swinish epicures, lest they should by their evil communication and conversation corrupt others. St Paul, though he allegeth this saying out of #Isa 22:13, yet he alludeth (likely) to Sardanapalus's epitaph at Tarsus, a city built by this Sardanapalus, Εσθιε, πινε, παιζε, ως της αλλα τουτου ουκ αξια, Ede, bibe, lude; nam caetera omnia nec huius sunt; Eat, drink, sport; for all other things are not worth a fillip: for so his statue was carved as if his hands had given a fillip, and his mouth had spoken these words. (Greg. Posthum.)

Ver. 33. Evil communication] Evil words are not wind, as most imagine, but the devil's drivel, that leaves a foul stain upon the speaker, and often sets the like upon the hearer. Shun obscene borborology (filthy talk) (saith one) and unsavoury speeches; thou losest so much of thine honesty and piety as thou admittest evil into thy tongue.

Ver. 34. Awake to righteousness] Go forth and shake yourselves (as Samson did) out of that dead lethargy whereinto sin hath cast you; your enemies are upon you, and you fast asleep the while.

I speak this to your shame] Ignorance is a blushful sin. Are ye also ignorant? said Christ to his apostles; q.d. that is an arrant shame, indeed. The Scripture sets such below the ox and the ass.

Ver. 35. But some man will say] Some epicure will object, and say, How can these things be? A privatione ad habitum non datur regressus. {See Trapp on "Ac 17:18"}

Ver. 36. Thou fool] A hard knot must have a hard wedge, a dead heart a rousing reproof. He confutes atheists from the course of nature, which they ascribe so much unto.

Ver. 37. And that which thou sowest] This is an answer to the epicure's second demand, #1Co 15:35, with what body do they come? with a dead, diseased, rotten body, &c.? No, no, saith the apostle. Sin is only rotted with its concomitancies, infirmities; but the rotting of the body is but as the rotting of a kernal under the clod, that it may arise incorruptible. Or as the melting of an old piece of plate in the fire, to bring it out of a better fashion. Christ was buried in a garden, to note that death doth not destroy our bodies, but only sow them: the dew of herbs will revive them again.

Ver. 38. But God giveth it a body] Deus naturae vires et vices ita moderatur, &c., saith one. God so orders all, that nothing is done without him. The same Hebrew word הוֹלִים that signifieth an ear of grain, doth also signify a word; because every field of grain is a book of God's praise, every land a sheaf, every sheaf a verse, every ear a word, every corn of wheat a letter to express the power and goodness of God.

Ver. 39. All flesh is not the same] This is another answer to the epicure, who might haply reply, and say, If man's flesh, when rotted, shall revive, why not likewise the flesh of other creatures? The apostle answereth, "All flesh is not the same," &c. Man's flesh only is informed by a reasonable and immortal soul, not so the flesh of other creatures: and hence the difference.

Ver. 40. There are also celestial] Stars and spirits (the inhabitants of that other heaven) I find, saith a divine, like one another. Meteors and fowls in as many varieties as there are several creatures. Why? Is it because man, for whose sake they were made, delights in variety, God in constancy? Or is it because that in these God may show his own skill and their imperfection?

The glory of the terrestrial] The glory of our terrestrial bodies shall at the resurrection be celestial; they shall be more like spirits than bodies, so clear and transparent, saith Aquinas, that all the veins, humours, nerves, and bowels shall be seen, as in a glass: they shall be conformed to the glorified body of Christ, as to the standard.

Ver. 41. One star differeth, &c.] The morning star is said to cast a shadow with its shine. "Canst thou bind the sweet influences of the seven stars?" #Job 38:31, whose work is to bring the spring, and which, like seven sisters or lovers (as the word signifies), are joined together in one fair constellation. Or "loose the bands of Orion?" the star that brings winter, and binds the earth with frost and cold. "Canst thou bring forth Mazzaroth," the southern constellations? "Or canst thou guide Arcturus with his sons," that is, the northern stars, those storehouses of God's good treasure, which he openeth to our profit? #De 28:12.

Ver. 42. So also is the resurrection] Whether there are degrees of glory, as it seems probable, so we shall certainly know, when we come to heaven. Three glimpses of the body's glory were seen, in Moses' face, in Christ's transfiguration, and in Stephen's countenance.

Ver. 43. It is raised in power] The resurrection will cure all infirmities. At Stratford-le-Bow were burned in Queen Mary's days, at one stake, a lame man and a blind man. The lame man after he was chained, casting away his crutch, bade the blind man be of good comfort, for death would heal them both; and so they patiently suffered.

Ver. 44. A spiritual body] Luther saith the body shall move up and down like thought. Augustine saith, they shall move to any place they will, as soon as they will. As birds (saith Zanchius) being hatched, do fly lightly up into the skies, which being eggs, were a heavy and slimy matter; so man, being hatched by the resurrection, is made pure and nimble, and able to mount up into the heavens.

Ver. 45. A quickening spirit] Christ is called a spirit from his Deity, as #Heb 9:14, and a quickening spirit, because he is the principle of life to all believers.

Ver. 46. And afterward, that is spiritual] Nature, art, grace, proceed from less perfect or more perfect. Let us advance forward, and ripen apace, that we "may be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead," #Lu 20:35.

Ver. 47. Of the earth, earthy] Gr. dusty, slimy, ex terra friabili. Let this pull down proud flesh. Let us throw this proud Jezebel out of the windows of our hearts, and lay her honour in the dust, by remembering that we are but earth and dust. Adam of Adamah, red earth; homo ab humo. Humility comes from the same root, because it lays a man flat on the ground; and because, like the earth, it is the most weighty of all virtues.

The Lord from heaven] Not for the matter of his body, for he was "made of a woman"; but for the original and dignity of his person, whereof see a lively and lofty description, #Heb 1:2,3.

Ver. 48. They that are earthy] κερυμος ο ανθρωπος, Vulgus fictilis. Man is but an earthen pot, #Isa 64:8.

Ver. 49. The image of the heavenly] See #Php 3:21. Our bodies shall be fashioned like to Christ's glorious body in beauty, brightness, incorruption, immortality, grace, favour, agility, strength, and other unspeakable qualities and excellencies. Whether they shall have that power as to toss the greatest mountains like a ball, yea, to shake the whole earth at their pleasure, as Anselm and Luther think, I have not to say.

Ver. 50. Flesh and blood] The body as it is corruptible, cannot enter heaven, but must be changed; we shall appear with him in glory. The vile body of Moses, that was hidden in the valley of Moab, was brought forth glorious in the hill of Tabor, #Mt 17:3.

Ver. 51. I show you a mystery] Not known till now to any man living. This, likely, was one of those wordless words, ρηματα αρρητα, that Paul heard in his rapture, #2Co 12:4.

Ver. 52. The trumpet shall sound] As at the giving of the law it did, #Ex 19:16. If the law were thus given (saith a divine), how shall it be required? If such were the proclamation of God's statutes, what shall the sessions be? I see and tremble at the resemblance; the trumpet of the angel called to the one; the trumpet of the archangel shall summon us to the other. In the one the mount only was on a flame; all the world shall be so in the other. To the one Moses says, God came with ten thousands of his saints; in the other thousand thousands shall minister to him, and ten thousand thousands shall stand before him.

Ver. 53. For this corruptible] Pointing to his body, he speaketh, as #Ps 34:6 "This poor man cried, the Lord heard him." So the old believers, when they rehearsed the creed, and came to that article, I believe the resurrection of the flesh, they were wont to add, Etiam huius carnis, even of this self-same flesh. So #Job 19:27.

Ver. 54. Death is swallowed up] As the fuel is swallowed up by the fire; as the sorcerers' serpents were swallowed up by Moses' serpent.

Ver. 55. Death, where is thy sting?] This is the sharpest and the shrillest note, the boldest and the bravest challenge, that ever man rang in the ears of death. Sarcasmo constat et hostili derisione, qua mors ridenda propinatur, saith one. Death is here out-braved, called craven to his face, and bidden do his worst ( Tollitur mors, non ne fiat, sed ne obsit. Aug.). Death destroy, let it not happen but let it not hurt. So Simeon sings out his soul, Hilarion chides it out, Ambrose is bold to say, I am neither ashamed to live, nor afraid to die. Anne Askew, the martyr, thus subscribeth her own confession: Written by me, Anne Askew, that neither wisheth for death, nor feareth his might; and as merry as one that is bound towards heaven. Mr Bradford being told he should be burned the next day, put off his cap, and lifting up his eyes, praised God for it.

Ver. 56. The sting of death is sin] Christ having unstinged death, and as it were disarmed it, we may safely now put it into our bosoms, as we may a snake whose sting is pulled out. If it shoot forth now a sting at us, it is but an enchanted sting, as was that of the sorcerers' serpents. Buzz it may about our ears, as a drone bee; but sting us it cannot. Christ, as he hath taken away not sin itself, but the guilt of sin; so not death itself, but the sting of death.

Ver. 57. But thanks be to God, &c.] Here St Paul, Christ's chief herald, proclaims his victory with a world of solemnity and triumph.

Ver. 58. Always abounding, &c.] This will strengthen faith, as the often knocking upon a stake fastens it. When faith bears fruit upward, it will take root downward.

Forasmuch as ye know] Bestir you therefore. It troubled a martyr at the stake that he should then go to a place where he should ever be receiving wages and do no more work. It will repent us (if it were possible to repent in heaven) that we began no sooner, wrought no harder.

Chapter 16

Ver. 1. Collection for the saints] The poor believers at Jerusalem, #Ro 15:26, who had suffered hard things of their own countrymen, #1Th 2:14, and taken joyfully the spoiling of their goods, #Heb 11:34, and were therefore relieved by the Churches of the Gentiles at Paul's motions, #Ga 2:10. The word here used for saints signifieth such as are taken off from the earth. {a} The saints, though their commoration be upon earth, their conversation is in heaven.

{a} Not οσίοι, but αγίοι, from α and γη.

Ver. 2. Upon the first day] The Christian sabbath, the Lord's day, as the Greek scholiast well renders it; which to sanctify was in the primitive times a badge of Christianity. When the question was propounded, Servasti Dominicum? Hast thou kept the Lord's day? The answer was returned, Christianus sum; intermittere non possum, I am a Christian, I can do no less than keep the Lord's day. But the world is now grown perfectly profane (saith Dr King, on Jonah, Lect. 7), and can play on the Lord's day without book; the sabbath of the Lord, the sanctified day of his rest, is shamelessly troubled and disquieted.

Lay by him in store] Gr. as a treasure, #1Ti 6:18. Manus pauperum gazophylacium Christi, The poor man's box is Christ's treasury.

As God hath prospered him] Gr. εὐδοῶται, Given him a good arrival at the end of his voyage, and enabled him; for we may not stretch beyond the staple, and so spoil all.

Ver. 3. Your liberality] Gr. your grace; that which having received of God's free grace you do as freely part with to his poor people.

Ver. 4. That I go also] And go he did, #Ro 15:25 Ac 24:17. The very angels hold not themselves too good to serve the saints.

Ver. 5. When I shall come, &c.] He was not then yet come into Macedonia, neither was this Epistle written at Philippi (as the subscription saith,) a chief city of Macedonia.

Ver. 6. Yea, and winter with you] They had ill deserved such a favour of him; for the more he loved them the less he was beloved of them, #2Co 12:15; but sought he not theirs, but them. Discourtesies must not discourage us from God's work. Calvin, though but coarsely used at his first coming to Geneva, brake through all.

Ver. 7. If the Lord permit] The Lord ordereth a good man's goings, #Ps 37:23 See #Ac 16:7-10 cf. Jas 4:13. It was rather rashness than valour in our Richard I, who being told (as he sat at supper) that the French king had besieged his town of Vernoil in Normandy, protested that he would not turn his back until he had confronted the French, And thereupon he caused the wall of his palace that was before him to be broken down toward the south, and went to the sea coast immediately into Normandy.

Ver. 8. But I will tarry at Ephesus] From thence then he wrote this Epistle, and not at Philippi, as the subscription hath it. See #1Co 16:5.

Ver. 9. And effectual] ενεργης, or, busy, that requires great painstaking. The ministry is not an idle man's occupation, as some fools think it.

And many adversaries] Truth never lacks an opposite. In the beginning of the late Reformation, Eckius, Roffensis, Cajetan, Moore, Faber, Cochlaeus, Catharinus, Pighius, all these wrote against Luther, Summo conatu, acerrimo desiderio, non vulgari doctrina, as one saith, with utmost desire and endeavour.

Ver. 10. For he worketh, &c.] So doth every faithful minister, though of meaner parts: the vine is the weakest of trees, but full of fruit. A little hand may thread a needle. A little boat may do best in a low river. Philadelphia had but a little strength, #Re 3:8, and yet it served turn, and did the deed.

Ver. 11. Let no man despise him] For his youth; for he hath lived much in a little time (as it is said of our Edward VI), and is an old young man, μειρακιογερων, as was Macarius the Egyptian.

Ver. 12. I greatly desire him] Paul did not compel or command him as the pope takes upon him to do, even to princes and potentates.

Oh, that all kings would answer him in this case, as Philip the Fair of France did Pope Boniface, claiming a power there to bestow prebends and benefices Sciat tua maxima fatuitas. (Alsted. Chron.)

Ver. 13. Watch ye, &c.] Solomon's wisdom, Lot's integrity, and Noah's sobriety felt the smart of the serpent's sting. The first was seduced, the second stumbled, the third fell, while the eye of watchfulness was fallen asleep.

Ver. 14. Let all your things, &c.] Love is the saint's livery, #Joh 13:35. Heathens acknowledged that no people in the world did love one another so as Christians did. In the primitive times, Animo animaque inter se miscebantur, as Tertullian speaketh. But now, alas, it is far otherwise love began to grow cold among these Corinthians. Hence this sweet and savoury counsel. Charity in Christ's days was much decayed; in Basil's time, dried up. Latimer saw much a lack of it, that he thought the last day would have been just then. It were to be wished that this apostolical precept were well practised; and that we were all (in a sober sense) of the family of love.

Ver. 15. To the ministry of saints] To serve them in collecting and distributing alms to the necessitous.

Ver. 16. That ye submit] Giving them due honour, doing them all good offices.

Ver. 17. They have supplied] viz. Your absence; for in them I take a short view of you all.

Ver. 18. They have refreshed] Ipse aspectus viri boni delectat. It is some comfort to see a good man's face.

Ver. 19. Aquila and Priscilla] Paul's fast friends and constant companions, worth their weight in gold.

Ver. 20. With a holy kiss] Not hollow, as Joab and Judas; not carnal, as that harlot, #Pr 7:13. See #Ro 16:16.

Ver. 21. With mine own hand] Well known to the Corinthians, to prevent imposture.

Ver. 22. If any man love not] That is, desperately hate. A sin so execrable, that the apostle would not once name it. So the Jews would not name leaven at the passover, nor a sow at any time, but called it dabar achar, another thing.

Anathema, Maranatha] Accursed upon accursed, put over to God to punish. This is a dreadful curse. (Elias Thisbit.) See a gracious promise, #Eph 6:24. God may suffer such as love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, to be Anathema secundum dici (as Bucholcer said), but not secundum esse. See an instance, #Isa 66:5, and say with David, "Let them curse, but do thou bless, Lord."

Ver. 24. My love, &c.] Though I have sharply rebuked you, &c., #Tit 1:13.

2 Corinthians

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. Our brother] In the faith, not in the flesh. Sanctior est copula cordis quam corporis, #Pr 18:24.

Ver. 2. From God the Father] The Father is the fountain, the Son the conduit, whereby all good things are derived to us.

Ver. 3. The Father of mercies] Only it must be remembered that as he is Pater miserationum, so he is Deus ultionum, #Ps 94:1. As he hath ubera, breasts, so he hath verbera the whip. Christ is girt about the paps with a golden girdle, to show his love, but yet he hath eyes like flaming fire, and feet like burning brass, #Re 1:13-16, to look through and keep under his enemies.

The God of all comfort] It is he that shines through the creature, which else is but as the air without light. It is he that comforteth by the means. It is not the word alone, for that is but as the veins and arteries that convey the blood and spirits. So the Spirit being conveyed by the promises, helpeth the soul to lay itself upon Christ by faith, and so it is comforted. Sometimes comfort comes not by the use of the means till afterwards, that he may have the whole glory: #So 3:3, the Church found not him whom her soul loved, till she was a little past the watchmen. The soul is apt to hang her comforts on every hedge, to shift and shirk in every bycorner for comfort. But as air lights not without the sun, and as fuel heats not without fire; so neither can anything soundly comfort us without God.

“ Una est in trepida mihi re medicina, Iehovae Cor patrium, os verax, omnipotensque manus. ”
Nath. Chytraeus.

Ver. 4. By the comfort wherewith] How forcible are right words, especially when uttered more from the bowels than the brain, and from our own experience; which made even Christ himself a more compassionate High Priest, and Luther such a heart affecting preacher, because from his tender years he was much beaten and exercised with spiritual conflicts, as Melancthon testifieth (in Vita)

He was also wont to say, that three things make a preacher, reading, prayer, and temptation. Reading maketh a full man, prayer a holy man, temptation an experienced man.

Wherewith we ourselves are comforted] Goodness is communicative. Mr Knox, a little before his death, rose out of his bed; and being asked wherefore, being so sick, he would offer to rise? He answered, that he had had sweet meditations of the resurrection of Jesus Christ that night, and now he would go into the pulpit, and impart to others the comforts that he felt in his soul. (Melch. Adam.)

Ver. 5. As the sufferings of Christ] So called, either because the saints suffer for Christ, or because they have him suffering with them, #Ac 9:4. God is more provoked than Nehemiah, #Ne 4:3,5.

So our consolation] As the lower the ebb, the higher the tide, οπου πλεων κοπος, πολυ κερδος, saith Ignatius. The more pain, the more gain. It is to my loss if you bate me anything in my sufferings. As the hotter the day, the greater the dew at night; so the hotter the time of trouble, the greater the dews of refreshing from God.

Ver. 6. And whether we be afflicted] Let the wind sit in what corner soever it will, it blows good to. the saints, #So 3:10. Though north and south be of contrary qualities, yet they make the Church's spices to flow and give forth their scent.

Ver. 7. So shall ye be also, &c.] Our troubles therefore are compared to the throes of a travailing woman, that tend to a birth, and end in comfort, #Joh 16:21.

Ver. 8. For we would not, &c.] It is of great use to know the sufferings that others have sustained before us. The primitive Christians kept catalogues of their martyrs. Dr Taylor the martyr at his death gave his son Thomas a Latin book, containing the sayings and sufferings of the old martyrs, collected by himself. In the English seminaries beyond seas, they have at dinner time their martyrology read, that is, the legend of our English traitors.

We despaired even of life] God is often better to us than our hopes; he reserves usually his holy hand for a dead lift, he comes in the nick of time, and our extremity is his opportunity. {See Trapp on "Lu 18:8"}

Ver. 9. But we had the sentence] Gr. Απολριμα, the answer or denunciation of death. Here we must distinguish between answers of trial and direct answers. This was of the former sort, for Paul died not at that time. When Leyden was so long and so strictly besieged by the Duke of Alva, that they were forced for their sustenance to search and scrape dunghills, &c., and the duke, in the language of blasphemy, threatened the defendants with cruel death, that very night the winds turned, the tide swelled, and the waters came in, and forced him to raise the siege.

That we should not trust] Hope is never higher elevated than when our state in all men's eyes is at lowest.

Ver. 10. In whom we trust] Experience breeds confidence. Thou hast, thou shalt, is an ordinary medium made use of by the Psalmist.

Ver. 11. You also helping together] The best may have benefit by the prayers of the meanest. Melancthon was much cheered and confirmed by the prayers of certain women and children, whom he found tugging with God in a corner for the settling of the reformation in Germany. (Selneccer. Paedagog. Christian.)

Ver. 12. For this is our rejoicing, &c] He was merry under his load, because his heart was upright. The sincere will well stand under great pressures, because they are sound. Whereas if a bone be broken, or but the skin rubbed up and raw, the lightest load will be grievous.

And godly sincerity] A fine word he here useth, ειλκρινεια; and it is a metaphor either from the eagle that trieth her young by holding them forth against the full sight of the sun (so should we the motions of our minds to the word of God); or else from a wise and wary chapman, that holds up the cloth he buys between his eye and the sun. (Arist. Plin.)

Ver. 13. Than what ye read, &c.] Or, than what you can both recognize and approve of; for you have known me through and through.

Ver. 14. You have acknowledged in part] q.d. You ought to have done it more fully; but you have been carried away, as ye were led by the false apostles.

Ver. 15. A second benefit] Gr. "grace," not converting only, but confirming also. All is but enough.

Ver. 16. And to pass by you] So indefatigable and unsatisfiable was he in doing God service. Calvin said, Ne decem quidem maria, &c., that it would not grieve him to sail over 10 seas, about a uniform draught for religion.

Ver. 17. Did I use lightness] So the false apostles suggested against him. Ministers must carefully clear themselves of suspicions and aspersions cast upon them, either by a verbal or real apology.

Ver. 18. Our word toward you, &c.] God's children are all such as will not lie, say and unsay, blow hot and cold with a blast, #Isa 63:8. Christianus est, non mentietur; He is a Christian, he will not lie, was an old proverb. Sophronius testifieth of Chrysostom, nunquam eum mentitum fuisse, that he was never taken in a lie.

Ver. 19. For the Son of God] What is that to the purpose? Thus: if the gospel that Paul preached be not yea and nay, then neither are Paul's promises yea and nay. This is his intendment, else his inference is nothing. And by that which follows, it reacheth all Christians; q.d. Look what a Christian doth promise, he is bound by the earnest penny of God's Spirit to perform. He dares no more alter his words to the discredit of his profession than the Spirit of God can lie. (Mr Cotton on the Seven Vials.)

Ver. 20. In him are yea and amen] That is, truth and assurance. They will eat their way over all Alps of opposition, as one speaketh.

Ver. 21. Hath anointed us] i.e. Consecrated and qualified us.

Ver. 22. Sealed us] As the merchant sets his seal upon his goods.

The earnest of the Spirit] Whereof God should undergo the loss, if he should not give the inheritance, as Chrysostom noteth. The Greeks bought usually repraesentata pecunia, for ready money; and this was to buy Graeca fide; Greek trust, howbeit sometimes they gave earnest: and this ἀρραβών, or earnest, was (usually) the hundredth part of the whole bargain. {See Trapp on "Eph 1:14"}

Ver. 23. I call God to record] He purgeth himself by oath. So those, #Jos 22:22.

Ver. 24. Dominion over your faith] As masters of your consciences; such as the bridge maker of Rome ( Pontifex Romanus) will needs be, #Re 17:1. The purple whore sitteth upon the nations, i.e. she useth them vilely and basely, sitting upon their consciences. Stephen, king of Polonia, was wont to say that these three things God had reserved to himself: 1. To make something of nothing. 2.

To know future events. 3. To have dominion over men's consciences.

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. That I would not come again] Ille dolet quoties cogitur esse ferox. It goes as much against the heart of a good minister as against the hair with his people, if he say or do anything to their grief. It is no pleasure to him to fling daggers, to speak millstones, to preach damnation, &c. But there is a cruel leniency, as was that of Eli to his sons; and evil men must be sharply rebuked, that they may be sound in the faith, #Tit 1:13.

Ver. 2. But the same which is made, &c.] Nothing can cure a faithful minister of his cordolium, of his heart's grief, but his people's amendment. "Now we live if ye stand fast in the Lord," #1Th 3:8, else we are all amort, {a} and you kill the very hearts of us.

{a} In the state or act of death; lifeless, inanimate; fig. spiritless, dejected. (ED)

Ver. 3. Of whom I ought to rejoice] Nothing sticks a man more than the unkindness of a friend, than expectation of love dashed and disappointed. All evils, as elements, are most troublesome, when out of their proper place, as impiety in professors; injustice in judges; unkindness or untowardness in a people toward their pastor, &c.

Ver. 4. With many tears] Non tam atramento, quam lachrymis chartas illevit, saith Lorinus. {in #Ac 22:19} St Paul's Epistles were written rather with tears than with ink.

Ver. 5. Have caused grief] Wicked livers are Hazael's to the godly, and draw many sighs and tears from them. Lot's righteous soul was set upon the rack by the filthy Sodomites. Jeremiah weeps in secret for Judah's sins. Paul cannot speak of those belly gods with dry eyes, #Php 3:18.

Ver. 6. Sufficient to such a man] The Novatians therefore were out, that refused to receive in those that repented of their former faults and follies. The Papists burnt some that recanted at the stake, saying, that they would send them out of the world while they were in a good mind.

Ver. 7. Should be swallowed up] It was a saying of Mr Philpot, martyr, Satan goes about to mix the detestable darnel of desperation with the godly sorrow of a pure penitent heart.

With overmuch grief] Some holy men (as Master Leaver) have desired to see their sin in the most ugly colours, and God hath heard them; but yet his hand was so heavy upon them therein, that they went always mourning to their graves; and thought it fitter to leave it to God's wisdom to mingle the portion of sorrow, than to be their own choosers. (Dr Sibbs, on #Ps 42:5) It is a saying of Austin, Let a man grieve for his sin, and then joy for his grief. Sorrow for sin, if it so far exceed, as that thereby we are disabled for the discharge of our duties, it is a sinful sorrow, yea, though it be for sin.

Ver. 8. Confirm your love, &c.] Gr. κυρωσαι, ratify it, and declare it authentic, as it were in open court, and by public sentence, {as #Ga 3:15} and that at mine instance, as an advocate, παρακαλω.

Ver. 9. Whether ye be obedient] First to the Lord, and then to us by the will of God, #2Co 8:5. Confer #Heb 13:17 Isa 50:10.

Ver. 10. To whom ye forgive] Or, gratify. Mercy is that we must mutually lend and borrow one of another. Let the rigid read #Ga 6:1.

Ver. 11. Lest Satan] That wily merchant, that greedy bloodsucker, that devoureth not widows' houses, but most men's souls, see #2Co 2:7. πλεονεκτηθωμεν.

For we are not ignorant] He is but a titular Christian that hath not personal experience of Satan's stratagems, νοηματα, his set and composed machinations, his artificially moulded methods, his plots, darts, depths, whereby he outwitted our first parents, and fits us a penny's worth still, as he sees reason.

Ver. 12. A door was opened] An opportunity offered. Where the master sets up a light, there is some work to be done; where he sends forth his labourers, there is some harvest to be gotten in.

Ver. 13. I had no rest, &c.] Gr. ανεσιν, no relaxation, viz. from my former cares and anxieties about you, because he was not yet returned to tell me how it was with you, #2Co 7:6. God's comforts are either rational, fetched from grounds which faith ministereth; or real, from the presence of comfortable persons or things.

Ver. 14. Now thanks be to God] Deo gratias was ever in Paul's mouth, ever in Austin's; and a thankful man is ever ready with his present, as Joseph's brethren were, #Ge 43:26.

Causeth us to triumph] Maketh us more than conquerors, even triumphers; while he rides upon us as upon his white horses, all the world over, "conquering and to conquer," #Re 6:2.

Ver. 15. A sweet savour] The Church is the mortar, preaching the pestle, the promises are the sweet spices, which being beaten, yield a heavenly and supernatural smell in the souls of the godly hearers. (Bifield on #1Pe 2)

Ver. 16. The savour of death] Aristotle writeth, that vultures are killed with oil of roses. Swine (saith Pliny) cannot live in some parts of Arabia, by reason of the sweet scent of aromatical trees there growing in every wood. Tigers are enraged with perfumes. Vipera interficitur palmis, Snakes are killed with palm dates, saith Pausanias. Moses killed the Egyptian, saved the Israelite. Obededom was blessed for the ark, the Philistines were cursed. The sun of the gospel shining upon one that is ordained to eternal life reviveth and quickeneth him; but lighting upon a child of death it causeth him to stink more abominably. Gregory in his Morals saith that "this word is like the planet Venus, which unto some is Lucifer, a bright morning star arising in their hearts, whereby they are roused up, and stirred from iniquity; but to the other is Hesperus, an evening star, whereby they are brought to bed, and laid asleep in impiety." Oecumenius tells us, that the fragrance of precious ointment is wholesome for doves, but kills the beetle, columbam vegetal, scarabaeum necat, &c.

And who is sufficient] And yet now who is it almost that thinks not himself sufficient for that sacred and tremendous function of the ministry "Who am I?" saith Moses; "Who am I not?" saith our upstart. Bradford was hardly persuaded to become a preacher. Latimer leaped when he laid down his bishopric, being discharged, as he said, of such a heavy burthen. Luther was wont to say, that if he were again to choose his calling, he would dig, or do anything rather than take upon him the office of a minister; so said reverend Mr Whately of Banbury once in my hearing.

Ver. 17. Which corrupt the word] Gr. καπηλευοντες, which huckster it, by handling it craftily and covetously, not serving the Lord Jesus Christ, but their own bellies; as those popish trencher flies and our court parasites, who served for false glasses, to make bad faces look fair, and doubted not to adulterate the milk of the word, to the hurt of men's souls.

In the sight of God] It is impossible to speak as in God's presence, and not sincerely; such as do so are not acquainted with that "holy hypocrisy" commended in Dominic the founder of the Dominican friars (Vincent. Belnac. Episc. in hist. Sancti Dom.), whom he was wont to admonish, to feign themselves more virtuous than indeed they were, when they came in company with the laity, that they might get the more respect to themselves and to their doctrine. This was one of the "devil's depths," τα βαθη του Σατανα, #Re 2:24; whereunto God's faithful ministers are perfect strangers.

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. Do we begin again, &c.] As we had done before, #2Co 1:12.

To commend ourselves] Quod magnificum referente alio fuisset, ipso qui gesserat recensente vanescit. (Plin.) "Let another man praise thee, and not thine own mouth," #Pr 27:2. Laus proprio sordescit in ore. But the apostle was necessitated to it.

As some others, letters of commendation] As the false apostles, who carried it by testimonial; in giving whereof, many good people are much to blame. Beauty needs no letters of commendation, saith Aristotle; much less doth virtue, where it is known. If moral virtue could be seen with mortal eyes, saith Plato, it would soon draw all hearts to itself.

Ver. 2. You are our epistle] The fruitfulness of the people is the preacher's testimonial; as the profiting of the scholar is the teacher's commendation.

Written in our hearts] Or rather in your hearts, as tables; the Spirit writing thereon, by his ministers as pens, that form of doctrine, #Ro 6:17, that law of their minds, #Ro 7:23 Heb 8:10, to be known and read of all men.

Ver. 3. Ministered by us] Who are devoted to the service of your faith, and are the Lord Christ's secretaries.

But in fleshy tables] In the softened heart God writes his law, puts an inward aptness, answering the law of God without, as lead answers the mould, as tally answers tally, as indenture answers indenture.

Ver. 4. Such trust have we] i.e. Such boldness of holy boasting. If Cicero could say, Two things I have to bear me bold upon, the knowledge of good arts and the glory of great acts; how much more might Paul!

Ver. 5. Not that we are sufficient] Lest they should think him arrogant. Cyrus had this written upon his tomb, "I could do all things," παντα ποιειν εδυναμην, as Arrianus reports. So could Paul too; but it was through Christ which strengthened him, #Php 4:13.

All our sufficiency is of God] Had not ministers then need to pray? Bene orasse est bene studuisse, saith Luther. And whether a minister shall do no more good to others by his prayers or preaching, I will not determine (saith a reverend writer), but he shall certainly by his prayers reap more comfort to himself; whereto I add, that unless he pray for his hearers as well as preach to them, he may preach to as little purpose as Bede did, when he preached to a heap of stones; and that if people pray not for their ministers, they may prove ministorum opprobria, like Laban's lambs, or Pharaoh's kine; they may thank themselves for their minister's insufficiency and their own non-proficiency.

Ver. 6. Not of the letter] To wit, of the law, which requireth perfect obedience, presupposing holiness in us, and cursing the disobedient; but the gospel (called here the Spirit) presupposeth unholiness, and, as an instrument, maketh us holy, #Joh 17:17 Ac 10:32. For we preach Christ, #1Co 1:23. We give what we preach. The Spirit is received by the preaching of faith, #Ga 3:2. This manna is rained down in the sweet dews of the ministry of the gospel, #1Pe 1:22.

For the letter killeth] Many popish priests, that hardly ever had seen, much less read, St Paul's writings, having gotten this sentence by the end, "The letter killeth," took care of being killed, by not meddling with good literature. Hence that of Sir Thomas Moore to one of them,

Littera: nam nulla est littera nota tibi."

Ver. 7. The ministration of death] That is, the law. David was the voice of the law awarding death to sin, "He shall surely die." Nathan was the voice of the gospel awarding life to repentance for sin, "Thou shalt not die."

For the glory of his countenance] Which yet reflected not upon his own eyes. He shone bright and knew not of it: he saw God's face glorious, he did not think others had so seen his. How many have excellent graces and perceive them not!

Ver. 8. Be rather glorious] Let this comfort the ministers of the gospel under the contempts cast upon them by the mad world, ever beside itself in point of salvation. See #Isa 49:5.

Ver. 9. Exceed in glory] A throne was set in heaven, #Re 4:2; not in the mount, as #Ex 25:9. The pattern of our Church is showed in the heavens themselves, because of that more abundant glory of the gospel above the law. And therefore also John describeth the city far greater and larger than Ezekiel, #Re 21:16; because Ezekiel was a minister of the law, John of the gospel. (Brightman in loc.)

Ver. 10. Had no glory] To speak of, and in comparison. The light of the law was obscured and overcast by the light of the gospel. The sea about the altar was brazen, #1Ki 7:23, and what eyes could pierce through it? Now our sea about the throne is glassy, #Re 4:6, like to crystal, clearly conveying the light and sight of God in Christ to our eyes.

Ver. 11. Much more that, &c.] As the sun outshineth Lucifer his herald.

Ver. 12. Plainness of speech] Or, much evidence, as #Joh 10:24 11:14 16:29; with much perspicuity and authority we deliver ourselves; we speak with open face, not fearing colours.

Ver. 13. Could not stedfastly, &c.] Could not clearly see Christ the end of the law, #Ro 10:4 Ga 3:14.

Ver. 14. But their minds] Unless God give sight as well as light, and enlighten both organ and object, we can see nothing.

Which vail is done away] See #Isa 25:7. Faith freeth from blindness; we no sooner taste of that stately feast by faith, but the vail of ignorance, which naturally covereth all flesh, is torn and rent.

Ver. 15. The vail is upon their hearts] By a malicious and voluntary hardening, they curse Christ and his worshippers in their daily devotions, and call Evangelium Avengillaion the gospel a volume of vanity or iniquity. (Elias in Thisb.)

Ver. 16. When it shall turn] Of the Jews' conversion, and what hinders it. {See Trapp on "Ro 11:7"} {See Trapp on "Ro 11:8"} {See Trapp on "Ro 11:25"}

Ver. 17. The Lord is that Spirit] Christ only can give the Jews that noble spirit, as David calleth him, #Ps 51:12, that freeth a man from the invisible chains of the kingdom of darkness.

Ver. 18. Are changed] As the pearl by the often beating of the sunbeams upon it becomes radiant.

From glory to glory] That is, from grace to grace. Fulness of grace is the best thing in glory. Other things, as peace and joy, are but the shinings forth of this fulness of grace in glory.

Chapter 4

Ver. 1. As we have received mercy] Since we have so freely been called to the ministry of mere mercy, we show forth therein all sedulity and sincerity. When I was born, said that French king, thousand others were born besides myself. Now what have I done to God more than they, that I should be a king, and not they Tamerlane having overcome Bajazet, asked him whether ever he had given God thanks for making him so great an emperor; who confessed ingenuously he never thought of it. To whom Tamerlane replied, that it was no wonder so ungrateful a man should be made a spectacle of misery. For you, saith he, being blind of one eye, and I lame of a leg, was there any worth in us why God should set us over two such great empires of Turks and Tartars? (Leunclav. Annal. Turc.) So may ministers say, What are we that God should call us to so high an office? &c.

We faint not] We droop not, we flag not, οὐκ εκκακουµεν, we hang not the wing, though hardly handled. For, Praedicare nihil aliud est quam derivare in se furorem totius mundi, as Luther said.

Ver. 2. The hidden things of dishonesty] All legerdemain <sup>{a}</sup> and underhand dealing. They that do evil hate the light, love to lurk. But sin hath woaded an impudence in some men's faces, that they dare do anything.

To every man's conscience] A pure conscience hath a witness in every man's bosom. See #1Co 14:24. St Paul did so preach and live, that every man's conscience could not choose but say, Certainly Paul preacheth the truth, and liveth right; and we must live as he speaketh and doeth. One desired a misliving preacher to point him out a nearer way to heaven than that he had taught in his sermons; for he went not that way himself. Of such a one it was once said, That when he was out of the pulpit, it was pity he should ever go into it; and when he was in the pulpit, it was pity he should ever come out of it. St Paul was none such, as all knew.

{a} Sleight of hand; the performance of tricks which by nimble action deceive the eye; magic; conjuring tricks. ED

Ver. 3. To them that are lost] It is a sign of a reprobate goat, #Joh 8:43,47 "Sensual, having not the Spirit," #Jude 19. The devil holds his black hand before their eyes, that they may fall blinding into hell. Herein he dealeth as the eagle, which setting on the hart, saith Pliny, lights upon his horns, and there flutters up and down, filling his eyes with dust borne in her feathers, that at last he may cast himself from a rock.

Ver. 4. The god of this world] The devil usurps such a power, and wicked men will have it so. They set him up for God: if he do but hold up his finger, give the least hint, they are at his obedience, as God at first did but speak the word, and it was done. All their buildings, ploughings, plantings, sailings, are for the devil. And if we could rip up their hearts, we should find written therein, The god of this present World.

Ver. 5. We preach not ourselves] We are Christ's paronymphs or spokesmen, and must woo for him. Now if we should speak one word for him and two for ourselves, as all self-seekers do, how can we answer it?

Ver. 6. Hath shined] The first work of the Spirit in man's heart is to beat out new windows there, and to let in light, #Ac 26:18. And then, Semper in sole sita est Rhodes, qui et calorem et colorera nobis impertit. Always in the sun was Rhodes placed which bestowed to us both warm and colour. (Aeneas Sylv.)

Ver. 7. In earthen vessels] Gr. εν οστρακινοις, in oyster shells, as the ill-favoured oyster hath in it a bright pearl. Vilis saepe cadus nobile nectar habet. In a leather purse may be a precious pearl.

Ver. 8. We are troubled on every side] This is the world's wages to God's ministers. Veritas odium parit. Opposition is Evangelii genius, said Calvin. Truth goes ever with a scratched face.

We are perplexed] Pray for me, I say, pray for me, saith Latimer; for I am sometimes so fearful, that I could creep into a mouse hole; sometimes God doth visit me again with comfort, &c. There is an elegance here in the original that cannot well be rendered (απορούμενοι αλλ ουκ' εξαπορούμενοι. Tertullian hammers at it in his Indigemus, sed non perindigemus. Beza hath it Haesitamus at non prorsus haeremus. Mr Dike "staggering," but not wholly sticking.

Ver. 9. Persecuted, but not forsaken] The Church may be shaken, not shivered; persecuted, not conquered. (Concuti, non excuti.) Roma cladibus animosior, said one; it is more true of the Church. She gets by her losses, and, as the oak, she taketh heart to grace from the maims and wounds given her. Duris ut ilex tonsa bipennibus.

“ *Niteris incassum Christi submergere navem:
Fluctuat, at nunquam mergitur illa ratis:*”

as the pope wrote once to the Great Turk.

Cast down, but not destroyed] Impellere possunt, said Luther of his enemies, sed totum prosternere non possunt: crudeliter me tractare possunt, sed non extirpare: dentes nudare, sed non devorare: occidere me possunt, sed in totum me perdere non possunt. They may thrust me, but not throw me; show their teeth, but not devour me; kill me, but not hurt me.

Ver. 10. The dying of the Lord] A condition obnoxious to daily deaths and dangers.

Might be made manifest] As it was in Paul, when being stoned, he started up with a Sic, sic oportet intrare, So so proper to enter. Thus, thus must heaven be had, and no otherwise.

Ver. 11. For we which live, &c.] Good men only are heirs of the grace of life, #1Pe 3:7. Others are living ghosts and walking sepulchres of themselves.

Ver. 12. Death worketh in us] It hath already seized upon us, but yet we are not killed with death, as those were, #Re 2:23. As a godly man said, that he did aegrotare vitaliter; to be mortally ill so as to give life, so the saints do mori vitaliter, die to live for ever.

But life in you.] q.d. You have the happiness to be exempted, while we are tantum non interempti, yet not killed, little less than done to death.

Ver. 13. The same spirit] That you have, and shall be heirs together of heaven with you, though here we meet with more miseries.

I believed, and therefore, &c.] The spirit of faith is no indweller where the door of the lips open not in holy confession and communication.

Ver. 14. Shall present us with you] Shall bring us from the jaws of death to the joys of eternal life.

Ver. 15. That the abundant grace] This is one end wherefore God suffers his ministers to be subject to so many miseries, that the people might be put upon prayer and praise for their deliverance.

Ver. 16. Yet the inward man] Peter Martyr dying, said, "My body is weak, my mind is well, well for the present, and it will be better hereafter." This is the godly man's motto.

Ver. 17. For our light affliction] Here we have an elegant antithesis, and a double hyperbole, beyond translation. For affliction, here is glory; for light affliction, a weight of glory; for momentary affliction, eternal glory.

Which is but for a moment] For a short braid only, as that martyr said. Mourning lasteth but till morning. It is but winking, and thou shalt be in heaven presently, quoth another martyr.

Worketh unto us] As a causa sine qua non, as the law worketh wrath, #Ro 4:15. If our dear Lord did not put these thorns into our bed, we should sleep out our lives and lose our glory: affliction calls to us as the angel to Elijah, Up, thou hast a great way to go.

A far more exceeding] An exceeding excessive eternal weight. Or, a far more excellent eternal weight. Nec Christus nec caelum patitur hyperbolen, saith one. Here it is hard to hyperbelize. Words are too weak to express heaven's happiness. The apostle heard wordless words, ρηματα ρητα #2Co 12:4, when he was there, and in speaking of it commonly useth a transcendent super-superlative kind of language. The Vulgate interpreter's supra modum in sublimitate, Erasmus' mire supra modum, Beza's excellenter excellens, falls a far deal short of St Paul's emphatic Grecism here. Διπλασιαζει, saith Chrysostom. He could not comprise it in one single word, he doubleth it therefore, and yet attaineth not to what he aimeth at.

Weight of glory] The apostle alludeth to the Hebrew and Chaldee words which signify both weight and glory, רָקִי לִבֵּב. Glory is such a weight, as if the body were not upheld by the power of God, it were impossible it should bear it. Joy so great, as that we must enter into it; it is too big to enter into us. "Enter into thy Master's joy," #Mt 25:21. Here we find that when there is great joy, the body is not able to bear it, our spirits are ready to expire; what shall it then be in heaven?

Ver. 18. Whiles we look not] Gr. σκοπουτων, while we make them not our scope, our mark to aim at. Heaven we may make our mark, our aim, though not our highest aim.

At the things that are seen] While we eye things present only, it will be with us as with a house without pillars, tottering with every blast, or a ship without anchor, tossed with every wave.

But at the things which are not seen] Pericula non respicit martyr, coronas respicit; plagas non horret, praemium numerat; non videt lictores inferno flagellantes, sed angelos superne acclamantes, saith Basil; who also tells us how the martyrs that were cast out naked in a winter's night being to be burned the next day, comforted themselves and one another with these words, Sharp is the cold, but sweet is Paradise; troublesome is the way, but pleasant shall be the end of our journey; let us endure cold a little, and the patriarch's bosom shall soon warm us; let our foot burn awhile, that we may dance for ever with angels; let our hand fall into the fire, that it may lay hold upon eternal life. Δριμυς ο χειμων, &c., Basil. εις τους μαρτ.

But the things which, &c.] The Latins call prosperous things res secundas, because they are to be had hereafter; they are not the first things, these are past, #Re 21:4.

Chapter 5

Ver. 1. For we know] Not we think, or hope only; this is the top gallant of faith, the triumph of trust; this is, as Latimer calls it, the deserts of the feast of a good conscience. There are other dainty dishes in this feast, but this is the banquet. The cock on the dunghill knows not the worth of this jewel.

Our earthly house] In the wonderful frame of man's body the bones are the timberwork, the head the upper lodging, the eyes as windows, the eyelids as casements, the brows as penthouses, the ears as watchtowers, the mouth as a door to take in that which shall uphold the building, and keep it in reparations; the stomach as a kitchen to dress that which is conveyed into it; the guts and baser parts as sinks belonging to the house, &c., as one wittily descants.

Our earthly house of this tabernacle] Our clay cottage. Man is but terra friabilis, a piece of earth neatly made up. The first man is of the earth earthy; and his earthly house is ever mouldering over him, ready to fall upon his head, #1Co 15:47. Hence it is called "the life of his hands," because hardly held up with the labour of his hands, #Isa 57:10. Paul, a tentmaker, elegantly compares man's body to a tent. Plato also in his dialogue of death, calleth the body a tabernacle, το οκηνος. A house the body is called, as for the singular artifice showed in the framing of it (the woman's body is, by a specialty, called God's building, #Ge 2:22, because her frame consisteth of rarer room; of a more exact composition, say some, than man's doth), so, secondly, because the soul dwells in it; the reason whereof (besides God's will, and for the order of the universe) Lombard gives this, that hereby man might learn and believe a possibility of the union of man with God in glory, notwithstanding the vast distance of nature and excellence.

We have a building of God] The ark, transportative till then, was settled in Solomon's temple; so shall the soul be in heaven. As when one skin falls off, another comes on; so when our earthly tabernacle shall be dissolved or taken down, we shall have a heavenly house. The soul wears the body as a garment, which when it is worn out, we shall be clothed with a better suit, we shall change our rags for robes, &c. Itaque non plangimus, sed plaudimus, quando vitam claudimus, quia dies iste non tam fatalis quam natalis est.

Ver. 2. For in this] That is, in this tabernacle of the body. How willingly do soldiers burn their huts, when the siege is ended; being glad that their work is done, and that they may go home and dwell in houses.

We groan earnestly] As that avis Paradisi, which being once caught and engaged, never leaves sighing, they say, till set at liberty. (Macrob.) The Greeks call the body δεμας, the soul's bond, and σωμα, quasi σημα, the soul's sepulchre.

To be clothed upon] By a sudden change, and not to die at all, as #1Th 4:17 1Co 15:51,52. Quis enim vult mori? prorsus nemo. For who wishes to die, certainly no man. Death when it comes will have a bout with the best, as it had with Hezekiah, David, Jonah, others. For nature abhors it, and every new man is two men. But when a Christian considers that non nisi per angusta ad angusta perveniatur; that there is no passing into Paradise but under the flaming sword of this angel death that standeth at the porch; that there is no coming to the city of God, but through his strait and heavy lane; no wiping all tears from his eyes, but with his winding sheet, he yields, and is not only content, but full glad of his departure; as in the mean while he accepts life rather than affects it, he endures it rather than desires it, #Php 1:23.

Ver. 3. If so be that, &c.] q.d. Howbeit, I know not whether we shall be so clothed upon, that is, whether we that are now alive shall be found alive at Christ's coming to judgment, whether we shall then be found clothed with our bodies, or naked, that is, stripped of our bodies.

Ver. 4. Do groan, being burdened] viz. With sin and misery, whereof we have here our backburdens. And surely great shame it were (as that martyr, Mr Bradford, said) that all the whole creatures of God should desire, yea, groan in their kind for our liberty, and we ourselves to loathe it, as doubtless we do, if for the cross, yea, for death itself, we with joy swallow not up all sorrow that might let us from following the Lord's call and obeying the Lord's providence, &c.

Might be swallowed up of life] Not as a gulf or fire swallows up that which is cast into it, but as perfection swallows up imperfection, as the perfecting of a picture swallows up the rude draught, as perfect skill swallows up bungling, or manhood childhood, not extinguishing, but drowning it that it is not seen. (Dr Preston.)

Ver. 5. He that hath wrought us] Curiously wrought us in the lowermost parts of the earth, that is, in the womb, as curious workmen perfect their choice pieces in private, and then set them forth to public view, #Ps 139:15 cf. Eph 4:9. Others expound it by #Ro 9:23.

The earnest of the Spirit] He saith not the pawn, but the earnest. A pawn is to be returned again, but an earnest is part of the whole bargain.

Ver. 6. Therefore we are confident] Not hesitant, or halting, as Adrian the emperor was, and as he that cried out on his deathbed, Anxius vixi, dubius metior, nescio quo vado, I have lived carefully, I die doubtfully, I go I know not whither: Socrates also, that wisest of philosophers, could not with all his skill resolve his friends whether it were better for a man to die or live longer. Cicero, comforting himself as well as he could by the help of philosophy against the fear of death, cries out and complains at length, that the medicine was too weak for the disease, nescio quomodo, imbecillior est medicina quam morbus; it is the true Christian only that can be confident that his end shall be happy, though his beginning and middle haply may be troublesome, #Ps 37:37.

Whilst we are at home] Or stay for a night as in an inn, ἐνδημουντες. A man that comes into an inn, if he can get a better room, he will; if not, he can be content with it; for, saith he, it is but for a night. So it should be with us.

Ver. 7. For we walk by faith] Which puts our heads into heaven, sets us on the top of Pisgah with Moses, and therehence descries and describes unto us the promised land, gives us to set one foot aforehand in the porch of Paradise, to see as Stephen did Christ holding out a crown, with this inscription, Vincenti dabo I die conquering.

Not by sight] Sense corrects imagination, reason sense, but faith corrects both, thrusting Hagar out of doors, when haughty and haughty grown. But as Nabash, so the devil labours to put out the right eye of faith, and to leave us only the left eye of reason.

Ver. 8. And willing rather] Death is not to be desired as a punishment of sin, but as a period of sin; not as a postern gate to let out our temporal, but as a street door to let in eternal life.

To be present with the Lord] This Bernard calleth Repatriasse. Plotinus the philosopher could say when he died, that which is divine in me I carry back, επι το πρωτογονον θειον, to the original divine, that is, to God. (Synes. ep. 139.) But whether this man believed himself or not, I greatly doubt.

Ver. 9. Wherefore we labour] Our hope of heaven maketh us active and abundant in God's service. The doctrine of assurance is not a doctrine of liberty, but the contrary, #1Jo 3:3. We make it our ambition, φιλοτιμουμεθα, saith the apostle here, to get acceptance in heaven, waiting till our Father shall call us home, and passing the time of our sojourning here in fear, #1Pe 1:17. The saints have their commoration upon earth, ενδημουντες, their conversation in heaven.

Ver. 10. For we must all, &c.] This great assize will not be such an assembly as that of Ahasuerus, of his nobles, princes, and captains only; nor such as the biddings of rich men to their feasts, of their rich neighbours only; but like the invitation of that householder that sent his servants to compel all to come in, #Lu 14:12. On that day Adam shall see all his nephews together.

Appear before, &c.] Be laid open, and have all ripped up, φανερωθηνα. Our sins that are now written as it were with the juice of lemons, shall then by the fire of the last day be made legible. And as in April both wholesome roots and poisonous discover themselves, which in the winter were not seen, so at the day of judgment good and evil actions. (Mac. Hom. 12.)

The things done in his body] That is, the just reward of those things; In die iudicii plus valebit conscientia pura, quam marsupia plena. (Bernard.) Then shall a good conscience be more worth than all the world's good. And this was that which made Paul so sincere a preacher and so insatiable a server of God, as Chrysostom calleth him.

Whether it be good or bad] Wicked men shall give an account, 1. De bonis commissis, of goods committed to them. 2. De bonis dismissis, of good neglected by them. 3. De malis commissis, of evils committed. 4. De malis permissis, of evils done by others, suffered by them. Itaque vivamus, saith the orator. (Cic. iv. in Ver.) Let us so live as those that must render an account of all.

Ver. 11. Knowing therefore the terror, &c.] What a terrible time it will be with the wicked, who shall in vain tire the deaf mountains with their hideous outcries to fall upon them, &c.

We persuade men] To flee from the wrath to come; to repent and be converted, that their sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come, #Ac 3:19. We speak persuasively to this purpose, but it is God only that persuades.

Ver. 12. Which glory in appearance] Gr. εν προσωπω, in the face. Hypocrites, as they repent in the face, #Mt 6:16, so they rejoice in the face, not in the heart. Their joy is but skin deep, it is but the hypocrisy of mirth; they do not laugh, but grin; their hearts ache many times when their faces counterfeit a smile; their mirth is frothy and flashy, such as smooths the brow but fills not the breast, such as wets the mouth but warms not the heart.

Ver. 13. It is to God] i.e. When to the world we seem mad of pride and vain glory, yet then we respect only God's glory.

It is for your sakes] i.e. For your learning, that we are more modest and sparing in commending our apostleship. It is a good rule, Quicquid agas, propter Deum agas, do all for God's sake.

Ver. 14. The love of Christ, &c.] As reward hath an attractive, and punishment an impulsive, so love hath a compulsive faculty. This love of Christ had so closed in St Paul, so hemmed him in, and begirt him round, that his adversaries reported him a mad man, as #2Co 5:13; he erred in love toward his sweet Saviour, and even exhaled has blessed soul in continual sallies, as it were, and expressions of his dear affection to the Lord Jesus. The word συνεχει he here useth, imports that he was even shut up by his love to his dear Lord, as in a pound or pinfold, so that he could not get out. He had meditated so much upon Christ's love, donec totus fixus in corde, qui totus fixus in cruce, that his heart was turned into a lump of love.

Then were all dead] All the body suffered in and with Christ the head, and so are freed by his death, #Heb 2:9, as if themselves in person had died.

Ver. 15. Should not henceforth] Servati sumus ut serviamus. The redeemed among the Romans were to observe and honour those that ransomed them as parents, all their days.

Ver. 16. No man after the flesh] i.e. We esteem no man simply the better or worse for his wealth, poverty, honour, ignominy, or anything outward. See #Jas 1:9-11. Thomas Watts, martyr, spake thus at his death to his wife and children: Wife, and my good children, I must now depart from you, therefore henceforth know I you no more; but as the Lord hath given you to me, so I give you again to him, whom I charge you see that ye obey. (Acts and Mon.)

Though we have known Christ] As possibly Paul might have known Christ in the flesh; for Jesus of Nazareth was a prophet mighty in deed and word before God and all the people, #Lu 24:19. Austin wished that he might have seen three things: Rome flourishing, Paul preaching, Christ conversing with men upon earth. Bede comes after, and correcting this last wish, saith, Yea, but let me see the King in his beauty, Christ in his heavenly kingdom. Paul was so spiritualized that he took knowledge of nothing here below; he passed through the world as a man in a deep muse, or that so looks for a lost jewel, that he overlooks all besides it.

Ver. 17. Is a new creature] Either a new man or no man in Christ. Get into him therefore with all speed; for till this be done, though thou shouldest spend thy time in gathering up pearls and jewels, thou art an undone creature.

All things are become new] The substance of the soul is the same, the qualities and operations altered. In regeneration our natures are translated, not destroyed, no, not our constitution and complexion. As the melancholy man doth not cease to be so after conversion, only the humour is sanctified to a fitness for godly sorrow, holy meditation, &c., so of other humours.

Ver. 18. And all things are of God] He is both author and finisher of our faith, the God of all grace, the Father of all lights, &c.

And hath given us the ministry] He hath taken this office from the angels, those first preachers of peace, #Lu 2:10,14. The angel told Cornelius his prayers were heard in heaven; but for the doctrine of reconciliation he refers him to Peter, #Ac 10:36.

Ver. 19. That God was in Christ, &c.] As the salt waters of the sea, when they are strained through the earth, they are sweet in the rivers; so (saith one) the waters of majesty and justice in God, though terrible, yet being strained and derived through Christ, they are sweet and delightful.

Reconciling the world] What the apostle meaneth by this, see his own exposition. {See Trapp on "Ro 11:15"}

Ver. 20. Ambassadors for Christ] And therefore sacred persons, not to be violated on pain of God's heavy displeasure: "Do my prophets no harm." They that would annihilate the ministry, go to pull the stars out of Christ's hand; and they will find it a work not feasible.

As though God did beseech you] God's grace even kneels to us. En flexanimam suadae medullam; who can turn his back upon such blessed and bleeding embracements?

Ver. 21. To be sin for us] That is, a sin offering, or an exceeding sinner, as #Ex 29:14. So Christ was, 1. By imputation, for our sins were "made to meet upon him," as that evangelical prophet hath it, #Isa 53:6 2. By reputation, for he was reckoned among malefactors, ibid. And yet one Augustinus de Roma, archbishop of Nazareth, was censured in the Council of Basil for affirming that Christ was peccatorum maximus, the greatest of sinners. See Aug. Enchirid. xli. Christ so loved us, saith one, that he endured that which he most hated, to become sin for us (he was made sin passive in himself to satisfy for sin active in us), and the want of that which was more worth than a world to him, the sense of God's favour for a time. Ama amorem illius, &c., saith Bernard. There are two things in guilt, saith a late reverend writer (Dr Sibbs): 1. The merit and desert of it; this Christ took not. 2. The obligation to punishment; this he took, and so he "became sin," that is, bound to the punishment of sin. The son of a traitor loseth his father's lands, not by any communion of fault, but by communion of nature, because he is part of his father. The son is no traitor; but by his nearness to his father is wrapped in the same punishment; so here. In a city that is obnoxious to the king's displeasure, perhaps there are some that are not guilty of the offence; yet being all citizens, they are all punished by reason of their communion. So Christ, by communion with our natures, took upon him whatsoever was penal that belonged to sin, though he took not, nor could take, the demerit of sin.

Who knew no sin] That is, with a practical knowledge; with an intellectual he did, else he could not have reproved it. We know no more than we practise. Christ is said to "know no sin," because he did none.

That we might be made, &c.] As Christ became sin, not by sin inherent in him, but by our sin imputed to him; so are we made the righteousness of God, by Christ's righteousness imputed and given unto us. This the Papists jeeringly call "putative righteousness."

Chapter 6

Ver. 1. As workers together] Not as coadjutors, but as instruments, such as God is pleased to make use of. See the note on #1Co 3:9.

The grace of God in vain,] That embassy of grace, #2Co 5:20; or that unspeakable gift of Christ, #2Co 9:15, which many use as homely as Rachel did her father's gods,—she hid them in the litter and sat on them; or as that lewd boy in Kett's conspiracy, who when the king's pardon was offered the rebels by a herald, he turned toward him his naked posteriors, and used words suitable to that gesture. One standing by discharged a harquebus <sup>{a}</sup> upon the body. (Life of K. Edward VI, by Sir John Hay.)

{a} The early type of portable gun, varying in size from a small cannon to a musket, which on account of its weight was, when used in the field, supported upon a tripod, trestle, or other 'carriage', and afterwards upon a forked 'rest'. The name in German and Flemish meant literally 'hook-gun', from the hook cast along with the piece, by which it was fastened to the 'carriage'; but the name became generic for portable firearms generally in the 16th century, so that the type with the hook was subsequently distinguished as arquebuse à croc: (ED)

Ver. 2. Now is the accepted time] He purposely beats upon the τὸ νῦν, because opportunity is headlong, and, if once past, irrecoverable. Some are semper victuri, always alive, as Seneca saith, they stand trifling out their time, and so fool away their salvation. God will not always serve men for a sinning stock. Patientia laesa fit furor. Do we therefore as millers and mariners, who take the gale when it cometh, and make use of it, because they have not the wind in a bottle.

Now is the day of salvation] And God will not suffer men twice to neglect it. If once past, it will never dawn again. Catch therefore at opportunities, as the echo catcheth the voice, #Ps 27:1, take the nick of time. God is more peremptory now than ever, #Heb 2:2,3.

Ver. 3. Giving no offence] A minister should be as Absalom was, without blemish from head to foot. His fruit should be, as that of Paradise, fair to the eye and sweet to the taste. A small fault is soon seen in him, and easily either imitated or upbraided. God appointed both the weights and measures of the sanctuary to be twice as large as those of the commonwealth.

Ver. 4. In much patience] Or tolerance, suffering hardship, as good soldiers of Jesus Christ.

In afflictions] Out of which there is little or no use of patience; at least she cannot have her perfect work, #Jas 1:4.

In necessities] Want of necessities.

In distresses] Such straits as that we are at a stand, and have not whither to turn us, στενοχωρίας; we are in a little ease, as it were.

Ver. 5. In imprisonment] Chrysostom saith, he had rather be Paul cast into a prison than Paul rapped up into Paradise.

Ver. 6. By pureness] By lamb-like simplicity or sincerity. Religion loves to lie clean, said one. Godliness must run through our whole lives as the woof doth through the web. See #Isa 33:14. No gold or precious stone is so pure as the prudent mind of a pious man, said divine Plato. ουτε χρυσοϛ, ουτε αδαμαϛ ουτωϛ αστραπτει ωσπερ αγαθων ανδρων νοοϛ συμφραδμων~

Ver. 7. On the right hand, &c.] Against the world's both irritamenta and terriculamenta, both allurements and affrightments. Contemptus est a me Romanus et favor et furor, The Roman is despised by me both in goodwill and anger, saith Luther, when the pope one while enticed him and another while threatened him. When he was offered to be cardinal if he would be quiet, he replied, No, not if I might be pope. When he was told that he should find no favour; Quid vero facere poterunt? (said he) occident? Nunquid resuscitabunt, ut iterum occidant? What will they do? will they kill me? But can they raise me to life again that they may kill me again? Can they kill me the second time? (Epist. ad Spal.)

Ver. 8. By honour and dishonour, &c.] It is written on heaven doors (said that martyr), "Do well and hear ill." A bad report is the ordinary reward of very well doing; which made Luther wax proud even of his reproach. Superbus fio, said he, quod video nomen pessimum mihi crescere. Jerome also writeth to Augustine, Quod signum maioris gloriae est, omnes haeretici me detestantur, This is my glory, that none of the heretics can give me a good word or look. It was a divine saying of Seneca, No man sets better rate upon virtue than he that loseth a good name to keep a good conscience. Qui boni viri famam perdidit ne conscientiam perderet.

As deceivers] Aspersed for such, as Christ was, #Mt 27:63. And Lucian blasphemously termeth him εσκολοπισμενον σοφιστην, the crucified cozener (deceiver).

Ver. 9. As unknown] To the world, #1Jo 3:1,2. A prince in a strange land is little set by, as not known. Unkent, unkist, as the northern proverb hath it.

Well known] To those who have spiritual judgment, and can prize a person to his worth, which the world's wizards cannot do, #Isa 53:2,3.

And not killed] God will have a care of that; he corrects in measure, he smites his not at the root, but in the branches, #Isa 27:8. As it is a rule in medicine still to maintain nature, &c., so doth God still keep up the spirits of his people by cordials, #Isa 57:16.

Ver. 10. As sorrowful, yet, &c.] God's works are usually done in oppositis mediis, in opposing means, as Luther said. Out of the eater he brings meat, &c. This riddle the world understands not. The Fathers observe here, that the apostle brings in the saints' sorrow with a quasi, as if it were a sorrow in show or conceit only; but when he speaks of their joy, there is no such quasi.

Yet possessing all things] Godliness hath an αυταρκεια, a self-sufficiency, #1Ti 6:6. Cui cum paupertate bene convenit, pauper non est, saith Seneca. A contented man cannot be a poor man especially if a godly man; for what reason? the Father (that Ancient of days) filleth his memory; the Son (the wisdom of the Father) filleth his understanding; the Holy Ghost the Comforter filleth his will; and so he must needs have all that thus hath the haver of all.

Ver. 11. Our mouth is open unto you] We speak thus freely unto you, out of our deep affection towards you; we even carve you a piece of our heart, we pour forth ourselves in this flood of speech, that thereby ye may take a scantling of our over abundant love to your souls. κεχηνοτες, open mouthed men, are put for fools oftentimes in Lucian and Aristophanes; but in another sense than the apostle here useth it. A large heart maketh a man full in the mouth, as if it sought that way to get out to the thing affected.

Ver. 12. Ye are not straitened in us] Non habitatis anguste in nobis; so Piscator renders it.

But ye are straitened] Ye are bankrupts in love, ye comply not, ye do not reciprocate. Plain things will join every point one with another; not so round and rugged things.

Ver. 13. I speak as unto my children] Here are soft words, hard arguments. This is the way to win; and that was a sad complaint, #2Co 12:15. Love lost is a bitter affliction.

Ver. 14. Be not unequally yoked] Dare not saith Mr Ward, to yoke thyself with any untamed heifer that bears not Christ's yoke. Quam male inaequales veniunt ad aratra iuveni? (Ovid. Epist.) An ox and an ass might not be coupled together in the law; and hereunto the apostle seems to allude. The doctors of Douay upon #Le 19:19: Here all participation, say they, with heretics and schismatics is forbidden. Philip king of Spain said, He had rather have no subjects than subjects of various religions. And out of a bloody zeal, suffered his eldest son Charles to be murdered by the bloody Inquisition, because he seemed to favour our profession.

Ver. 15. What concord hath Christ] Those moderators that plead for a correspondence with Popery, would make a pretty show if there were no Bible. But if these reconcilers (as Franciscus de Sancta Clara, and his adherents) were the wisest men under heaven, and should live to the world's end, they would be brought to their wits' end before they could accomplish this work's end, to make a reconciliation between Christ and Antichrist, between Rome and us. What harmony or concord, saith our apostle, can be between such they can never fall in, or make music together in one choir.

Ver. 16. I will dwell in them] Gr. ενοικησω εν αυτοις, I will indwell in them. This notes God's nearest communion with them. He setteth them before his face continually, #Ps 41:12, as loving to look upon them. The philosopher told his friends, when they came into his little low cottage, The gods are here with me: εντευθεν ουκ απεισι θεοι. God and angels are with his saints.

And walk in them] As they did in Solomon's porch, and other walks and galleries about the temple. And hereunto the prophet alludes, #Zec 3:7. The Turks wonder to see a man walk to and fro, and usually ask such whether they be out of their way or out of their wits. (Biddulph.)

Ver. 17. And be ye separate] For gross idolatry and for fundamental errors only must we separate. Corruptions grew so great in the Church of Rome, that it justly occasioned first the separation of the Greek Churches from the Latin, and then of the reformed Churches from the Roman. Machiavel observed; that after the thousandth year of Christ, there was nowhere less piety than in those that dwell nearest to Rome. (Disp. de Rep.) And Bellarmine bewails it, That ever since we cried up the pope for antichrist, his kingdom hath not only not increased, but hath greatly decreased. (Lib. iii. de Papa Rom. c. 21.)

And I will receive you] So you shall be no losers, I will put you into my bosom. God imparteth his sweetest comforts to his in the wilderness, #Ho 2:14.

Ver. 18. I will be a Father] The fundamental, meritorious, impulsive, and final causes of this precious privilege, see set forth, #Eph 1:5,6.

Saith the Lord Almighty] This is added by our apostle to #Jer 31:9. And not without cause; as for authority' sake, so to intimate that our adoption is a work of God's almighty power. See that sixfold gradation used by the apostle to set forth this truth, #Eph 1:19, having prayed before that their eyes might be enlightened to see the power that wrought in them.

Chapter 7

Ver. 1. Having therefore, &c.] Faith in the promises purifieth the heart, #Ac 15:9, and argueth notably from mercy to duty, melting the hardness of it by the consideration of the promises. Let a cart loaded go over a frozen river, the cart breaks the ice, but it remains ice still. But let the sun shine upon the river, and it dissolveth it. The apostle saith not, Having these menaces, but, Having these promises.

From all filthiness] Sin defileth a man worse than any jakes or leprosy. It is the devil's excrement, it is the corruption of a dead soul. Seldom or never is there a birth of saving grace, but there follows it a flux of mortification.

Of flesh and spirit] i.e. Both of the outward and inward man. Or of flesh, that is, worldly lusts, and gross evils, as uncleanness, earthly-mindedness, &c, And of spirit, that is, more spiritual lusts, as pride, presumption, self-flattery, &c. These lie more up in the heart of the country, as it were; those others in the frontiers and skirts of it.

Perfecting holiness] Propounding to ourselves the highest pitch and the best patterns. And having for our motto that of Charles V, Plus ultra, further yet. And here let faith and obedience make a perfect pair of compasses. Faith as the one foot must be pitched upon the centre, God, while obedience (as the other) walks about in a perfect circle of all good duties. He will not crush but cherish that worm Jacob. "He will not break the bruised reed," &c.

In the fear of God] Which is the fountain whence holiness flows. See #Pr 8:13.

Ver. 2. Receive us] Gr. χωρησατε, Locum date. Make room for us in your hearts and houses. Set wide open the everlasting doors that the King of glory may come in triumphantly, riding upon us, his white horses, #Re 6:2.

We have wronged no man] Ministers must so live that they may, if need be, glory of their innocence and integrity, as did Moses, Samuel, Paul, Melancthon.

We have corrupted no man] viz. As the false apostles had done with their leaven of false doctrine, which eateth as a canker, #2Ti 2:17, or a gangrene, which presently overruns the parts, and takes the brain. Protagoras in Plato boasted that of those sixty years that he had lived, he had spent forty in corrupting of youth.

We have defrauded no man] We have cunningly made sale of no man, as those old impostors that made prize of their prisoners, #2Pe 2:3. And as those Popish Muscipulatores, or mice catchers, as the story calleth them, that raked together their Peter's pence and other monies here in England by most detestable arts. Polydore Virgil was one of these ill officers, that left not so much money in the whole kingdom sometimes as they either carried with them or sent to Rome before them.

Ver. 3. I speak not this, &c.] Though cause enough he had to condemn them for their shameful tenacity toward him, whom they basely suffered to labour for his living and to preach gratis, against all right and reason.

To die and to live with you] Such faithful friends are in this age all for the most part gone on pilgrimage, and their return is uncertain, as once the Duke of Buckingham said to Bishop Morton in Richard III's time. Jonathan and David, Pylades and Orestes, Polistratus and Hippoclidides, are famous for their love one to another. These two last, being philosophers of Epicurus' sect, are said to have been born the same day, to have lived together all their days, and to have died in the same moment of time, being well stricken in years. (Valer. Max.) But the love of Irish foster-brothers is said far to surpass all the loves of all men. (Camd. Elizab.)

Ver. 4. I am exceeding joyful] Gr. υπερπερισσενομαι, I do overbound exceedingly with joy. Others may revel, the godly only rejoice: they have an exuberance of joy, such as no good can match, no evil out match. Witness the martyrs, ancient and modern. Oh, how my heart leapeth for joy, said one of them, that I am so near the apprehension of eternal bliss! God forgive me mine unthankfulness and unworthiness of so great glory. In all the days of my life I was never so merry as now I am in this dark dungeon. Believe me there is no such joy in the world as the people of Christ have under the cross. Thus and much more Mr Philpot, martyr. (Acts and Mon.)

Ver. 5. Our flesh had no rest] Our spirit had no unrest. The outward man suffers much sometimes, when the inward remains unmolested. Philip, Landgrave of Hesse, being asked how he could so well bear his seven years' imprisonment, answered, Se divinas martyrum consolationes sensisse, that he felt the divine consolations of the martyrs, which as bladders bore him aloft all waters.

Ver. 6. God that comforteth] This is a most sweet attribute of God, such as we may profitably plead and produce in prayer. He loves to comfort those that are forsaken of their hopes. He will not crush but cherish that worm Jacob. "He will not break the bruised reed," &c.

By the coming of Titus] Who came very opportunely, even while Paul was writing this Epistle, #2Co 2:12,13. God's comforts are therefore sweet because seasonable. He never comes too soon, nor stays too long. He waits to be gracious, as being a God of judgment, #Isa 30:18. Were we but ripe, he is ready, and will lift us up in due time, #1Pe 5:6.

Ver. 7. Your earnest desire] Of seeing me, or rather of satisfying me.

Your fervent mind] Gr. your zeal, both against the incestuous person and the false apostles, St Paul's adversaries.

Ver. 8. Though it were but for a season] Gr. for an hour. In sin, the pleasure passeth, the sorrow remaineth; but in repentance, the sorrow passeth, the pleasure abideth for ever. God soon poureth the oil of gladness into broken hearts.

Ver. 9. That ye sorrowed to repentance] Gr. εις μετανοιαν, to a transmutation, to a thorough change both of the mind and manners. Optima et aptissima poenitentia est nova vita, The best and most appropriate repentance is a new life, saith Luther. Which saying (though condemned by Pope Leo X) is certainly an excellent saying. Repentance for sin is nothing worth without repentance from sin. If thou repent with a contradiction (saith Tertullian) God will pardon thee with a contradiction. Thou repentest, and yet continuest in thy sin. God will pardon thee, and yet send thee to hell. There is a pardon with a contradiction.

Sorry after a godly manner] Gr. η κατα θεον λωπη, according to God. This is a sorrowing for sin, as it is offensivum Dei, aversivum a Deo. offensive to God and a turning away from God. This both comes from God and drives a man to God, as it did the Church in the Canticles, and the prodigal.

Ver. 10. Godly sorrow worketh] Sin bred sorrow, and sorrow, being right, destroyeth sin; as the worm that breeds in the wood, eats into it and devours it. (Chrysost.) So that of this sorrow according to God we may say as the Romans did of Pompey the Great, that it is the fair and happy daughter of an ugly and odious mother. (Εχθρου πατρος φιλτατον τεκνον. Plutarch.) It may fitly be compared to Faustus, son of Vortigern king of Britain (incestuously begotten of his own daughter) who wept himself blind (saith the chronicler) for the abominations of his parents.

Repentance never to be repented of] That is, saith one, never to fall back again, for a man in falling back, seemeth to repent him of his repentance (αμεταμελητον). Others interpret it, such a repentance as a man shall never have cause to repent of. (Marbury on Repentance.) Job cursed the day of his birth; but no man was ever heard to curse the day of his new birth. For it is repentance to salvation, it hath heaven; it is that rainbow, which if God see shining in our hearts, he will never drown our souls.

But the sorrow of the world] That which carnal men conceive either for the want or loss of good, or for the sense or fear of evil.

Worketh death] As it did in Queen Mary, who died (as some supposed by her much sighing before her death) of thought and sorrow either for the departure of King Philip, or the loss of Calais, or both. There are those who interpret death in this place, of spiritual death, because it is opposed here to life and salvation. (Dike on the Heart.)

Ver. 11. What carefulness] Gr. what study, which (saith Cicero) is an earnest and serious bending and applying of the mind to something with a great deal of delight, σπουδη, Vehemens ad aliquam rem magna cum voluptate applicatio. It is rendered here carefulness, not that of diffidence, but that of diligence, putting a man upon those wholesome thoughts, What have I done? what shall I do? &c.

Yea, what clearing] Gr. apology or defence. The old interpreter renders it satisfaction. It may be (saith Mr Bradford) he meant a new life, to make amends thereby to the congregation offended. As the devil is called the accuser, so the Spirit is called the Comforter or pleader for us; because as he maketh intercession in our hearts to God, so upon true repentance he helpeth us to make apology for ourselves; not by denying our sins or defending them, but by confessing and disclaiming them, as a child to his father.

Yea, what indignation] Or stomach, as Ephraim, #Jer 31:19. The publican who smote himself upon the breast, he would have knocked his corruptions, if he could have come at them, as those, #Isa 30:22, that polluted the idols that they had perfumed, and said unto them, Get you hence, be packing. "What have I to do any more with idols?" #Ho 14:8. Out-of-doors with this Tamar, here is no room for her. So foolish was I, and so very a beast, saith David, #Ps 73:22. How angry and hot was he against himself, #2Sa 24:10.

Yea, what fear] Of God's heavy displeasure, and of doing any more so. The burnt child dreads the fire. He that hath been stung, hates a snake.

Yea, what vehement desire] As that of Rachel after children, as that of David after the water of the well of Bethlehem, as that of the hunted hind after the water brooks, #Ps 42:1. David panted and fainted after God. That martyr cried out, None but Christ, none but Christ.

Yea, what zeal] Which is an extreme heat of all the affections for and toward God. David's zeal ate him up. Paul was just as mad for Christ as ever he had been against him, #2Co 5:13 cf. #Ac 26:11.

Yea, what revenge] Out of the deepest self-aborrence, buffeting the flesh, and giving it the blue-eye, as St Paul (that crucifix of mortification) once did. Thus the women parted with their lookingglasses, #Ex 38:8. Mary Magdalen wiped Christ's feet with her hair, wherewith she had formerly made nets to catch fools in. Cranmer burnt his right hand first, wherewith he had subscribed, and oftentimes repeated in the flames, This unworthy right hand, so long as his voice would suffer him. The true penitentiary amerceeth himself, and abridgeth his flesh of some lawful comforts, as having forfeited all. These seven signs of godly sorrow are to be seen in the repenting Church, #So 5:2-7, as in a worthy example or emblem. "I sleep," there is indignation; "but my heart waketh," there is apology. "I arose to open," &c., there is study or care and diligence. "My soul failed," there is her zeal. "I sought him, I called on him," there is her vehement desire. "The watchmen found me, they smote me," &c., there is her revenge, while she shrank not for any danger, but followed Christ through thick and thin in the night among the watch. And all this shows her fear of being again overtaken with drowsiness.

To be clear in this matter] Because they had heartily repented of it. Quem poenitet peccasse, pene est innocens. Repentance is almost equivalent to innocence. (Sen. in Agam.) Imo plus est propemodum a vitiis se revocasse, quam vitia ipsa nescivisse, saith Ambrose. Ver. 12. Not for his cause] That is, not so much for his cause.

That suffered the wrong] viz. The father of the incestuous person. Compare #Ge 49:4.

But that our care for you] That the Church might not suffer, as allowing such foul facts. How the primitive Christians were slandered by the heathens in this kind, who knows not? Cenalis, bishop of Auranches, wrote against the Church at Paris, defending impudently that their assemblies were to maintain whoredom. Such reports also they cast abroad a little before the massacre. They tell the people in Italy that Geneva is a professed sanctuary of all roguery, that in England the people are grown barbarous, and eat young children, &c.

Ver. 13. His spirit was refreshed] After his long and tedious toil and travel to come to you, he never thought much of his labour. Calvin said that it would not grieve him to sail over ten seas, Ne decem quidem maria, about a uniform draught for religion.

Ver. 14. I am not ashamed] As I should have been, had it proved otherwise. Lying is a blushful sin, and therefore the liar denies his own lie, because he is ashamed to be taken with it; and our ruffians revenge it with a stab.

Ver. 15. Whiles he remembereth] Deep affections make deep impressions.

Ver. 16. I rejoice therefore] Thus by praising them, he further winneth upon them, whom before he had more sharply handled. Sour and sweet make the best sauce.

Chapter 8

Ver. 1. Of the grace of God] It is a favour, yea, an honour to us, that we may relieve poor Christ in his necessitous members, #Ps 16:2. When therefore he sets us up an altar, be we ready with this sacrifice, #Heb 13:16.

Ver. 2. In a great trial of affliction] For affliction tries what metal we are made of. Alchemy gold will not endure the seventh fire as true gold will. Affliction (the trial of our faith) is more precious than gold, #1Pe 1:7. What then is faith itself so tried? #Re 3:18.

The abundance of their joy] While the spirit of glory and of God rested upon them, #1Pe 4:14. Well may grace be called the divine nature; for, as God brings light out of darkness, riches out of poverty, &c., so doth grace: it turns dirt into gold, &c. The world wonders (said that martyr) how we can be so merry in such extreme misery. But our God is omnipotent, which turneth misery into felicity. {See Trapp on "2Co 7:4"}

Their deep poverty] Gr. η κατα βαθους πτωχεια, their poverty being now at the very bottom, and having little left beside hope; they were even exhausted, and yet gave liberally. Giles of Brussels, martyr, gave to the poor whatsoever he had, that necessity could spare, and only lived by his science, which was of a cutler. {a} Some he refreshed with his meat, some with his clothes, some with his household stuff. One poor woman there was brought to bed, and had no bed to lie in; to whom he brought his own bed, himself content to lie in the straw.

Unto the riches of their liberality] Gr. απλοτης, of their simplicity, in opposition to that crafty and witty willingness of the covetous to defend themselves from the danger of liberality; wherein also they are utterly mistaken; for not getting, but giving is the way to thrive.

{See Trapp on "Mt 6:4"}

{a} One who makes, deals in, or repairs knives and similar cutting utensils. CED

Ver. 3. Yea, and beyond their power] One such poor Macedonian might well shame a hundred rich Corinthian curmudgeons. {a} They knew that Manus pauperum est gazophylacium Christi, The hand of the poor man is the treasury of Christ, and might haply have heard of their once King Alexander the Great, how that when he had undertaken the conquest of the Persian empire, he gave away his treasure; and being asked where it was, he pointed to the poor, and said, In scriniis, in my chests; and when he was further asked what he kept for himself, he answered, Spem maiorum et meliorum, The hope of greater and better things.

They were willing] Gr. Αυθαιρετοι, they were volunteers, full of cheerful charity. So were Aidanus, and after him Mr Fox, who gave his horse to a poor beggar that answered him discreetly. Mr Greenham also gave more than he could spare; so that he usually lacked money to get in his harvest.

{a} An avaricious churlish fellow; a miser, a niggard CED

Ver. 4. Receive the gift] Gr. χαριτι, the grace, i.e. the alms; it being of God's free grace that we have, 1. What to give; 2. Hearts to give it. For naturally we are all like children, which though they have their bosoms, mouths, and both hands full, yet are loth to part with any.

Ver. 5. Not as we hoped] God is usually better to us than our hopes.

First gave their own selves to the Lord] Ay, this is the right way of giving alms; and this is done by faith, the work whereof is to be an empty hand, Mendica manus (as Luther calleth it), a beggar's hand to receive it; but when it hath received, it gives back again itself and all, and thinks all too little, as Mary Magdalen did her precious ointment.

And unto us by the will] The good soul delivers up itself to Christ's faithful ministers, and saith in effect to them, as Luther, before he was better informed, wrote to Pope Leo X, A. D. 1518, Prostratum pedibus me tibi offero, cum omnibus quae sum et habeo:—Vocem tuam vocem Christi in te praesidentis et loquentis agnoscam: I humbly prostrate myself with all that I have and am at thy feet. (Scul. Annal.)

Ver. 6. So he would finish] Finis opus coronat. The end crowns the work. "The end is better than the beginning," saith Solomon. Charles V's emblem was Ulterius, Farther. Titus was here desired to take up the whole alms, and not to faint till he had finished, #Ga 6:9.

Ver. 7. As he abound in faith] He purposely commendeth them, that he may the better insinuated into them. Ministers may profitably praise their people in some cases, that they may the sooner win them to duty; for there is no so sweet hearing (saith Xenophon) as a man's own commendation, ηδιστον ακουσμα επινοος.

Ver. 8. To prove the sincerity] Gr. το γνησιον, the germanity, the naturalness, legitimateness opposed to bastardliness. This age aboundeth with mouth mercy, which is good cheap, and therefore like refuse fruit is found growing in every hedge. But a little handful were worth a great many such mouthfuls, #Isa 58:13. Complaint is made that there is not any one that taketh Sion by the hand. St James tells of some in his time that would feed their poor brethren with good words and good wishes, #Jas 2:15,16, as if they had been of the chameleon kind, to live with Ephraim upon wind, #Ho 12:1. But what said the poor man to the cardinal who denied him a penny which he begged, and offered him his blessing, which he begged not? If thy blessing had been worth a penny, I should not have had it: keep it therefore to thyself. (Carle.)

Ver. 9. He became poor] Not having where to lay his head, nor wherewith to pay tribute, till he had sent to sea for it. Lo, he that was heir of all things, #Heb 1:2, was scarcely owner of anything, but disenriched and disrobed himself of all, that through his poverty he might crown us with the inestimable riches of heavenly glory; this is such a motive to mercifulness as may melt the most flinty heart that is. Riches imply two things: 1. Plenty of that which is precious. 2.

Propriety; they must be good things that are our own; and so, those only are rich that have interest in Christ's purchase.

Ver. 10. But also to be forward] Gr. to be willing. This the apostle makes to be more than to do, that is, than to do with an ill will, or for by-respects. Virtus nolentium nulla est. Christ will enjoy his spouse's love by a willing contract, not by a ravishment; the title of all converts is a willing people, #Ps 110:3.

Ver. 11. Now therefore perform] Unless our willing of good be seconded with endeavour, it is nothing worth. Balaam wished well to heaven; so did he that came kneeling to our Saviour with Good master, &c.; but; they stuck at the hardship of holiness, without which there is no heaven to be had; they would not come off here, and therefore got nothing by their short winded wishes. Solomon compares such sluggards to the door that turns on the hinges, but yet hangs still upon them, it comes not off for all the turnings. Their purposes without performances are like a cloud without rain; and not unlike Hercules' club in the tragedy, of a great bulk, but stuffed with moss and rubbish. Virtutem expotant contabescuntque relicta. (Peri.)

Ver. 12. It is accepted] Sic minimo capitur thuris honore Deus. Noah's sacrifice could not be great, yet was greatly accepted. Jacob had his sons take a little of every good thing, and carry for a present to the lord of Egypt. Saul and his servant present Samuel with the fourth part of a shekel, to the value of about our five pence. Thankfulness (they had learned) was not measured by God and by good men by the weight, but by the will of the retributor. God calls for that which a man's heart inclines him to do, be it more, be it less; so low doth his highness stoop to our meanness, preferring the willingness of the mind before the worthiness of the work. That poor widow's mite was beyond the rich man's magnificence, because it came out of a richer mind.

Ver. 13. And you burdened] Gr.  $\theta\lambda\iota\psi\iota\varsigma$ , pinched or pressed, viz. with poverty.

Ver. 14. Your abundance] That your cup may overflow into their lesser dishes, that your superfluities both in respect of the necessity of nature and exigency of estate (as the schoolmen speak) may supply the wants of God's poor afflicted.

A supply for your want] Those that lend mercy may have need to borrow. The Shunammite that refused once to be spoken for to the king by the prophet, little thought she should afterwards have craved that courtesy of his man Gehazi. Those that stand fastest upon earth have but slippery footing. No man can say that he shall not need friends. Pythias was so wealthy a man, that he was able to entertain Xerxes' whole army, consisting of a million of men; yet afterwards he became so poor that he lacked bread.

Ver. 15. He that had gathered much] He that was so nimble as to gather more than his neighbour was to supply his neighbour, that every man might have his omer. Now the equity of this law being common and perpetual, the apostle draweth his argument from it. Riches, saith one, are but as manna; those that gathered more of it had but enough to serve their turn (or if they gathered more, it was but a trouble and annoyance to them), and they that gathered less had no want. Let the rich account themselves the poor man's stewards. "Withhold not good from the owners thereof (the poor) when it is in the power of thy hand to do it," #Pr 3:27. {See Trapp on "Pr 3:27"}

Ver. 16. But thanks be to God] Deo gratias was ever in Paul's mouth, and in Austin's, and should be in ours.

Ver. 17. But being more forward] A good heart is ready to every good work, waiting the occasions thereof, #Tit 3:1; as the bee, as soon as ever the sun breaks forth, flies abroad to gather honey and wax.

Ver. 18. Whose praise is in the Gospel] St Luke, likely, who first wrote the Gospel, as some gather out of #Lu 1:1, and whom Ambrose highly commendeth for the most clear and distinct gospel writer.

Ver. 19. Chosen of the Churches] This compared with #Ac 13:1,2, it may seem the apostle meaneth not Luke, but Barnabas; though others think Timothy. (Danae in #1Ti 6:12)

Ver. 20. Avoiding this] As shipmen avoid a rock or shelf, στελλομενοι; for it is a seafaring term, and shows how shy we should be of doing aught that may render our honesty suspected. Ego si bonam famam servasso, sat dives ere, said he in the Comedy.

Ver. 21. Providing] Projecting, procuring, προνοουμενοι. A good name is a great blessing, and therefore the same word in Hebrew signifieth both, #Pr 28:20, הַכֶּרֶךְ

Ver. 22. Whom we have oft] Some are of the opinion that Luke is here deciphered rather than #2Co 8:19. Whoever it was, it is much for his honour, that Apelles-like he was approved in Christ, and active for the Church, #Ro 16:10.

Ver. 23. Messengers] Gr. apostles, emandati, ambassadors of special and high employment.

The glory of Christ] So the Church is called "the glory," #Isa 4:5; God's glory, #Isa 46:13; a crown of glory, and a royal diadem in the hand of Jehovah, #Isa 62:3; the throne of God, #Ex 17:16 {margin}; the throne of glory, #Jer 14:21; the ornament of God, yea, the beauty of his ornament, set in majesty, #Eze 7:20. There is not so much of the glory of God (saith one) in all his works of creation and providence, as in one gracious action that a Christian performs.

Ver. 24. Wherefore show ye] As by an ocular demonstration, or as by pointing the finger, ενδειξασθε.

Before the Churches] In the face of the Churches, εις προσωπον, whose eyes are now full set upon you, to see what entertainment ye will give to their messengers. A Christian is like a crystal glass with a lamp in the midst.

Chapter 9

Ver. 1. The ministering to the saints] Or the service that ye owe the saints in ministering to their necessities, διακονια. Amadeus, duke of Savoy, Stephanus, king of Hungary, Hooper, bishop of Gloucester, and Doctor Taylor, martyr, are famous for their labour of love in ministering to the saints.

Ver. 2. Was ready] To wit, in their resolutions; for the collection was not yet made.

And your zeal] i.e. Your liberal contribution out of deep affection, and a holy emulation to exceed others in bounty.

Ver. 4. In this same confident boasting] Gr. "in this confidence of glorying." A metaphor from hunters, who confidently expect the beast, and valiantly set upon him. Sic Latini dicunt, subsistere aprum. So the Latins say that the boar stands.

Ver. 5. Not of covetousness] Non ut extortum aliquid, saith Piscator, vel ut illiberale aliquid. Not as wrung out of you, squeezed out, as verjuice {a} is out of a crab. Covetous persons part with their penny as with blood out of their hearts. Citius aquam ex pumice, clavam ex manu Herculis extorqueas. God will set off all hearts from such misers, in their misery, that are so unreasonably merciless. Bounty or blessing (for so the Greek word εὐλογία signifies) is here fitly opposed to covetousness; and St Paul concludes, that when church contributions are not free and liberal, covetousness is the cause.

{a} The acid juice of green or unripe grapes, crab-apples, or other sour fruit, expressed and formed into a liquor; formerly much used in cooking, as a condiment, or for medicinal purposes. (ED)

Ver. 6. Which soweth bountifully] Gr. "that soweth in blessings," εν ευλογιαις; alluding to #Eze 34:26 Ec 11:1 "Cast thy bread upon the water," that is, upon fat and fertile places, loca irrigua. A metaphor from seedsmen, who eat not all, sell not all, but sow some; so should we sow that we have upon the backs and bellies of the poor; sow more of this seed in God's blessed bosom, the fruit whereof we are sure to reap in our greatest need.

Ver. 7. According as he purposeth] God straineth upon none. See #Le 5:6,12 14:10,21,30. Liberality implieth liberty.

God loveth a cheerful giver] Dat bene, dat multum, qui dat cum munere vultum. One may give with his hand, and pull it back with his looks.

Ver. 8. And God is able] Fear not therefore lest yourselves should want hereafter, if you should give liberally now. Is not mercy as sure a grain as vanity? Is God like to break?

Having all sufficiency] He saith not, "superfluity." Enough we shall be sure of, and an honest affluence, if fit for it, and can make us friends with it. Bonus Deus Constantinum magnum tantis terrenis implevit muneribus, quanta optare nullus auderet, saith Austin (De Civit. Dei). God gave Constantine more wealth than heart could wish, and he was no niggard of it to poor Christians.

In all things] The apostle useth many "alls" on purpose to cross and confute our covetousness, who are apt to think we have never enough.

Ver. 9. He hath dispersed abroad] General Norice was like that bishop of Lincoln, that never thought he had that thing that he did not give. Of Mr Wiseheart, the Scottish martyr, it is reported, that his charity had never end, night, day, nor noon. He forbare one meal in three, one day in four for the most part to bestow it on the poor. He never changed his sheets but he gave them away.

His righteousness endureth for ever] Never did a charitable act go away without the retribution of a blessing. {See Trapp on "Mt 10:42"}

Ver. 10. And multiply your seed sown.] He that soweth seemeth to cast away his seed, but he knows he shall receive his with usury. Isaac had a hundred-fold increase. In Egypt, so far as the river Nile watereth, the ground is so fruitful, that they do but throw in the seed, and have four rich harvests in less than four months. Temporalia, Dei servis impensa non pereunt, sed parturiunt. Si dedisses tres aureos, accepisses trecentos, said that bishop of Milan to his servant, that had not given so much to the poor as he had appointed him. (John Manlii, loc. com.) If we never sow we shall never reap, said that good poor minister that bade his wife give three pence (his whole stock) to a poor brother. Another good man having nothing left, and his wife desiring to know how he and his family would live, he answered, he would now put his bond in suit, pray over the promises, and not doubt of the performance. (Rogers.)

Ver. 11. Which causeth through us] While we not only relieve them, but instruct them, as Bishop Hooper did his board of beggars, as Dr Taylor the martyr did the alms people of Hadleigh, and other poor of his parish. As Giles of Brussels did, ministering wholesome exhortation of sound doctrine to them he relieved, and so eliciting from them many thanksgivings unto God.

Ver. 13. For your professed subjection] While you testify your faith by your works, as they produced the coats that Dorcas made, to prove her a devout woman; and as, #Nu 13:26, it appeared by the fruits it was a good land. Heathens acknowledged that no people in the world did love one another so as Christians did.

Ver. 14. And by their prayer for you] A poor Christian's prayers cannot be bought too dearly. "I will restore comfort to him, and to his mourners," #Isa 57:18. Such can do much with God. Et cum talis fueris, memento mei, saith Bernard to his poor, but pure friend. How heartily prayeth Paul for Onesiphorus, #2Ti 1:16.

Ver. 15. For his unspeakable gift] That is, for Christ, (saith Theophylact, whom Piscator followeth) who is called the gift, by an excellence, #Joh 4:10, and the benefit, #1Ti 6:2.

Chapter 10

Ver. 1. By the meekness and gentleness] Whom in those sweet virtues I desire to imitate. The praise of Christ's meekness recorded by the prophet, and explained by Philip, converted the eunuch, #Ac 8:27-39.

Who in presence am base] i.e. Despicable, because I take not upon me, and bear a port, as the false apostles do. Meekness of spirit commonly draws on injuries. A crow will stand upon a sheep's back pulling off wool from her sides.

Am bold toward you] So mine adversaries report me, as if I were over bold and busy by my letters.

Ver. 2. That I may not be bold] That you necessitate me not. Non nisi coactus hoc facio, said that emperor that subscribed a warrant to put one to death.

With that confidence] It was but confidence, but they made the worst of it, and called it boldness, Quam vitio verterunt. Evil will never speaks well.

Ver. 3. We do not war, &c.] The ministry is a kind of militia, #1Ti 1:18. Christ rideth on ministers, as his white horses, conquering and to conquer, #Re 6:2.

Ver. 4. Are not carnal] i.e. Weak, opposed here to mighty. The flesh is weak as water, therefore called the old man, old leaven, &c. These weak weapons of the false apostles (here intimated and taxed) are human eloquence, artificial composures, &c., of those verbalists, Qui exceptis verbis tinnulis et emendicatis nihil loquuntur, as Jerome hath it.

But mighty through God] Note here the apostle's modesty. Not we, saith he, but our weapons are mighty; and not through us that wield them, but through God that works by and with them. {See Trapp on "1Co 15:10"}

To the pulling down of strong holds] Forts, munitions, trenches, cages of foul spirits inhabiting men's hearts.

Ver. 5. Casting down imaginations] As the spittle that comes out of a man's mouth slayeth serpents, so doth that which proceedeth out of the mouths of God's faithful ministers quell and kill evil imaginations, carnal reasonings, which are that legion of domestic devils, that hold near intelligence with the old serpent. Nemo sibi de suo palpet: quisque sibi Satan est. Corrupt reason, like Eve and Job's wife, is always drawing us from God. Out-of-doors with this Hagar.

And bringing into captivity] See here the process of St Paul's ministry. He overthrows, captivates, subdues to the obedience of the Lord Christ. See the like, #Jer 1:10. Chosroes, king of Parthia, was so subdued by the Romans, that he made a law that none of his successors should ever wage war with them again. So here.

Ver. 6. And having in a readiness] Vengeance is every whit as ready in God's hand, as in the minister's mouth. See #Mt 16:19 18:18. Elisha hath his sword as well as Jehu and Hazael, #1Ki 19:17. God hews men by his prophets and slays them by the words of his mouth, #Ho 6:5. By preaching, Christ many times smites the earth, #Isa 11:4; his word lays hold on them, #Zec 1:6, and that which they have counted wind, hath become fire to devour them, #Jer 5:13,14.

Ver. 7. Do ye look on things] q.d. Are ye so weak as to be deceived by an outside, to be carried away with shows and shadows of true worth? Do not many things glister besides gold? Every bird that hath a seemly feather, hath not the sweetest flesh; nor doth every tree that beareth a goodly leaf, bring good fruit. Glass giveth a clearer sound than silver, &c.

Even so are we Christ's] The Rogation heretics would have made the world believe that they were the only Catholics. The Arians called the true Christians Ambrosians, Athanasians, Homousians, &c. The Donatists made themselves the only true Church, &c.

Ver. 8. And not for destruction] If it prove so, it is by accident, and not as we intend it. {See Trapp on "2Co 2:16"}

Ver. 9. Terrify you by letters] As the false apostles object against me. Aspersions must be carefully cleared, when the fruit of a man's ministry is thereby impeached and impeded.

Ver. 10. Weighty and powerful] As often as I read Paul's Epistles, Non verba, sed tonitrua audire mihi videor, saith Jerome, Methinks I hear not words, but thunderclaps. But that his bodily presence was not weak, nor his speech contemptible, see #Ac 13:10. {See Trapp on "Ac 13:10"}

Ver. 11. Such will we be, &c.] That we have not hitherto been so, was because we spared you. Posse et nolle nobile, saith Chrysostom. Kindness is godliness, #Isa 40:6, πῶς

Ver. 12. For we dare not] This he speaks by an irony, whereof he is full in this Epistle; and may therefore be called as Socrates was, ο εἰρων.

But they measuring themselves, &c.] Turning the other end of the perspective, they see themselves bigger and others lesser than they are. So bladder-like is the soul, that filled with earthly vanities, though but wind, it grows great and swells in pride. Oh, pray to be preserved from this perilous pinnacle of self-exaltation. Look into the perfect law of liberty, and draw nigh to God. The nearer we come to God, the more rottenness we find in our bones. The more any man looks into the body of the sun, the less he seeth when he looks down again.

Ver. 13. But we will not boast, &c.] As any man is more worthy, he is more modest: full vessels yield no such sound as empty casks do. A vessel cast into the sea, the more it fills the deeper it sinks; the leaden scale goes downward; the most precious balm sinks to the bottom. The good ear of grain, the fuller it is, the lower it hangs the head.

Ver. 14. For we stretch not, &c.] υπερεκτεινομεν, we tenter not ourselves beyond our scantling.

Ver. 15. Not boasting of things] Ammianus Marcellinus tells of one Lampadius, a great person in Rome, who through all parts of the city, where other men had bestowed cost in building, he would set up his own name, not as a repairer of the work, but as the chief builder. Of the same fault Trajan the emperor is said to have been guilty; whence he was commonly called Herba parietina, or Wall Wort.

Ver. 16. In the regions beyond you] This was a piece of the braggadocio false apostles' vain boasting, as it is now of the Jesuits, those Circulatores and Agyrtae, that compass sea and land, crack of what conversions they have wrought in India and Africa, and, Lampadius-like, take it ill at any man's hand that commend them not every time they spit upon the ground. (Amm. Marcell.) Gaius Caligula the emperor was ready to destroy the whole senate, because they did not deify him for marching with his whole army to the ocean, and fetching thence a few oyster shells, Quibus spoliis acceptis magnifice gloriabatur, quasi oceano subacto. (Dio, in Vita Caligulae.)

Ver. 17. Glory in the Lord] {See Trapp on "1Co 1:31"}

Ver. 18. Whom the Lord commendeth] As he did his servant Job, #2Co 1:8. And as he did his handmaid Sarah, for calling her husband lord, though there was never a good word besides in the whole sentence, #1Pe 3:6 cf. Ge 18:22. Neither was Job so patient, but that he had his outbursts. All which notwithstanding "ye have heard of the patience of Job," &c., #Jas 5:11. He is not challenged at all for his impatience, but crowned and chronicled for his patience. See here the wonderful goodness of God toward his; and take comfort in his white stone, against the black coals of ill-affected persons.

Is approved] δοκιμος, or, will pass for current coin in heaven. When slips are abroad, men will take heed what money they take.

Chapter 11

Ver. 1. In my folly] How foolish were the Pharisees, #Joh 7:49, and after them the Gnostics, the Illuminates, and now the Jesuits, that boast themselves to be the only knowing men! Palemon the Grammarian, that bragged that all learning was born with him, and would die when he died! Epicurus, that he first found out the truth! (Sueton.) Richardus de S. Victore, that gave out that he knew more in divinity than any prophet or apostle of them all! These were fools to purpose; the apostle was put upon a necessity of commending himself, so to vindicate his ministry from the contempt cast upon him by the Corinthians.

Ver. 2. For I am jealous] q.d. My dear love to you puts me upon thus praising myself.

With a godly jealousy] Gr. with a zeal of God, called the flame of God, #So 8:6, such as was that of Job over his children, for fear they should sin against God; not such as was that of the Pharisees over the Galatians, the hypocrisy of jealousy, #Ga 4:17.

For I have espoused you] Gr. I have fitted you, as things that are pieced together are glued or soldered. ηρμωσαμην, Velut ea quae glutino aut ferrumine committuntur. (Erasm.)

To one husband] Here the cedar taketh the thistle to wife ( tantus tantillos), and doth all the offices of a husband to her, #2Ki 14:9 Eze 16:8 1. He first loveth his Church, and then purifieth her, #Eph 5:25,26. (Ahasuerus had the virgins first purified and perfumed before he took them to his bed.) 2. He puts upon her his own comeliness, as Eleazar put the jewels upon Rebecca (hence she is called Callah of the perfection of her attire, ornaments, and beauty, #Jer 2:32). 3. He maketh love to her by his paranymphs, his ministers, who woo for him, and present her to Christ as a chaste virgin. 4. He cohabits with her; #So 7:5 "The king is tied in the rafters." 5. He rejoiceth over her, #Isa 62:4,5 6. He doth the marriage duty to her, and maketh her the mother of us all, #Ga 4:26 Ro 7:1 7. He nourisheth and cherisheth her, #Eph 5:29 8. He hateth putting away, #Mal 2:16, and provideth for her eternal welfare, #Eph 1:7 Col 1:21,22.

Ver. 3. But I fear] Jealousy is made up of love, fear, and anger.

By his subtilty] He mustered all his forces, or rather all his frauds, together to cheat her. That old serpent, when he was young, outwitted our first parents; now that he is old, and we young, #Eph 4:14, what will he not do, if we watch not? Bellarmine saith of his Romanists, Romani sicut non acumina, ita nec imposturas habent, that they are neither sharp nor subtle. The devil is both, and so are they; witness their crafty cruel both positions and dispositions; this old serpent having lent them both his seven heads to plot and his ten horns to push.

So your minds should be corrupted] Satan hath his νοηματα, set and composed machination, #2Co 2:11, whereby he adulterateth our νοηματα, our judgments.

From the simplicity, &c.] Of all graces Satan would beguile us of this simplicity; the world calls it silliness, sheepishness.

Ver. 4. But if he that cometh] Giddy hearers, whirred about with every novelty, have no mould but what the next teacher casts them into; being blown like glasses into this or that shape at the pleasure of his breath. See #Joh 5:43.

Ver. 5. The very chiefest apostles] Either he meaneth those pillars, Peter, James, John, &c., #Ga 2:6; or the false apostles, whom he styleth chiefest by an irony, because they sought to bear away the bell, and be counted prime preachers.

Ver. 6. But though I be rude in speech] Gr. an idiot, a plain, downright, homespun, homely spoken person. The ancients busied themselves (saith Cyril), ουκ εν ευρεσιλογια, not about coin and newly coined language, but εν αποδειξει των θειων γραφων, about solid demonstrations drawn out of the Holy Scriptures. Jerome reports of Didymus that he was an apostolic writer, as you might easily gather by his style, Tam sensuum nomine quam simplicitate verborum. His matter was as lofty as his language low and ordinary. Jerome himself is much commended by learned men, Quod ubique non sit aequae Latinus, that he is not always so curious and choice of his words. But what reason he had, I see not, to censure St Paul so sharply as he doth, Ob sensus involutos, eloquium implicatum, et artis Grammaticae imperitiam, for his intricate sense, dark elocution, and unskilfulness in grammar learning. True it is, he was a plain preacher, as he here acknowledgeth; and why he affected plainness, he telleth us, #1Co 1:17, as stooping to common people's capacities. But that he could play the orator if he pleased, appears #Ac 17:22-31 26:2; insomuch as the Lycaonians called him Mercury, because he was "a master of speech," #Ac 14:12. And as for his Epistles, there is as good rhetoric found in them as in any heathen orator whatsoever. Demosthenes is but dull to him; and Austin's wish was to have seen Paulum in ore, Paul preaching, which he would have esteemed a high happiness.

Ver. 7. I have preached to you freely] Because he get his living with his hands, that he might preach gratis, they despised him as a mean mechanic. This is merces mundi, the world's wages. Nil habet infaelix paupertas, &c. Ministers must have an honourable maintenance (and not be forced to weave for a living, as Musculus was, or to serve the mason, as another great scholar), or else they will be shamefully slighted.

Ver. 8. I robbed other churches] Grandis metaphora, Great metaphor, th Piscator, I took maintenance from them (as the apostle presently expounds himself), I made a prey and prize of them, εσυλησα.

Ver. 9. And wanted] Gr. and was behind hand.

I was chargeable to no man] I was none of those drones that chill the charity of well-disposed people, as the cramp-fish benumbeth those that touch or come near it. (κατεναρκησα, ναρκη, Torpedo.)

Ver. 10. As the truth of Christ is in me] He confirms it with an oath, that he will not take a penny of them while he preacheth in those parts. A minister should be careful of whom he receives a kindness. Note further from this text, that lawful things, when they prove inexpedient and gravaminous, may be forborne by the bond of a covenant.

Ver. 11. Because I lose you not?] It should be a minister's care to preserve in the hearts of his people an opinion of his love to them. For if they once conceive an incurable prejudice against him, that he hates them, or the like, there is no good will be done.

Ver. 12. That I may cut off occasion] There were those that waited for it, as earnestly as a dog doth for a bone, as we say. Habuerunt suos cucullos omnes docti et heroici quolibet tempore, saith Melancthon. Every Zopyrus hath his Zoilus.

That wherein they glory] They, likely, had feathered their nests, and so might well afford to preach gratis. Paul, though not so well underlaid, would not come behind them in that either. He would not be less busy (though he laboured hard for it) in building staircases to heaven, than they were in digging descents down to hell.

Ver. 13. Deceitful workers] They seemed to labour, but indeed they loitered, or worse; seeking to set up themselves in the hearts of God's people.

Transforming themselves, &c.] The Manichees derived their name of manna, because they held that whatsoever they taught was to be received as food from heaven. Montanus said he was the Comforter, &c. Novatus called himself Moses, and a brother that he had, Aaron. The family of love set out their Evangelium regni. Kingdom of the Gospel. The Swenckfeldians (Stinckfeldians Luther called them, from the ill savour of their opinions) entitled themselves with that glorious name, The confessors of the glory of Christ. (Schlussenburg.)

Ver. 14. Satan himself is, &c.] Satan, saith one, doth not always appear in one and the same fashion, but hath as many different changes as Proteus among the poets. At Lystra he appears like a comedian, as if a scene of Plutus were to be presented on the stage. At Antioch like a Jesuit, with traditions in his mouth. At Athens he sallies out like a philosopher; at Ephesus like a craftsman; and here at Corinth he is transformed into an angel of light. Fiery serpents full of deadly poison are called seraphims, #Nu 21:6 Isa 30:6.

Ver. 15. As the ministers of righteousness] Cavete a Melampygo. Try before you trust; sects and seducers are very subtle and insinuitive; the locusts have faces like women; know them and avoid them. When one commended the pope's legate at the Council of Basil, Sigismund the emperor answered, Tamen Romanus est, Yet he is a Roman. So, let Satan or his agents come never so much commended to us in his sugared allurements, let us answer, Yet he is a devil. Sin draws the devil's picture in a man; envy is the devil's eye, falsehood his tongue, oppression his hand, hypocrisy his cloven foot, &c.

Ver. 16. Let no man think me] There was never man, nor action, but was subject to variety of censures and misconstructions, foolish men daring to reprehend that which they do not comprehend. I like St Augustine's resolution in this case. Non curo illos censores, qui vel non intellendo reprehendunt, vel reprehendendo non intelligunt.

Ver. 17. I speak it not after the Lord] Neither by his command nor example, but permission only.

Ver. 18. Glory after the flesh] Or in the flesh, #Ga 6:13, or have confidence in the flesh, #Php 3:4.

Ver. 19. For ye suffer fools] Inter indoctos etiam Corydus sonat. (Quintilian.) Wise men hold them for fools whom fools admire for wise men. As one saith of attorneys, Quod inter opilioes se iactitent iurisperitos, inter iurisperitos ne opilionum quidem aestimatione habeantur. (Rex Platonicus.)

Ver. 20. For ye suffer, if, &c.] As the Popish penitentiaries, those miserably misled and muzzled creatures. They write of our King Henry II, that going to Canterbury to visit the sepulchre of his own martyr, Thomas Beckett, coming within sight of the church, he alighted, and went three miles on his bare feet, which with the hard stones were forced to yield bloody tokens of his devotion on the way. (Daniel's Hist.) Clemens V, pope, caused Dandalus, the Venetian ambassador, to come before him tied in chains, and to wallow under his table with dogs, while his Holiness sat at supper. The pope lashed Henry IV of France (in the person of his ambassador at Rome) after the singing of every verse of Miserere, until the whole Psalm was sung out. Sed exorto iam evangelii iubare, sagaciores (at spero) principes ad nutum Romani Orbis non solvent subligacula, saith a great divine. (Gab. Powell on Tolerat.)

If a man take of you] By way of gratuity, but not of wages; or by their followers, and not by themselves. No Capuchin <sup>{a}</sup> among the Papists may take or touch silver. This metal is as very anathema to these, as the wedge of gold to Achan; at the offer whereof he starts back, as Moses from the serpent. Yet he carries a boy with him that takes and carries it, and never complains of either metal or measure.

{a} A friar of the order of St. Francis, of the new rule of 1528. So called from the sharp-pointed capuche, adopted first in 1525, and confirmed to them by Pope Clement VII in 1528. (ED)

Ver. 21. As though we had been weak] i.e. Worthless and spiritless. But mistake not yourselves; I am another manner of man than you imagine me. It is said of Athanasius, that he was Magnes et Adamas; a loadstone in his sweet, gentle, drawing nature, and yet an adamant in his resolute, stout carriage against heretics and evildoers. (Nazianzen.)

Ver. 22. Are they Israelites] God's select, peculiar. "Happy art thou, O Israel; who is like unto thee, O people!" #De 33:29. The Jews say that those seventy souls that went with Jacob into Egypt were as much as all the seventy nations of the world. Tabor and Hermen, the east and west of Judea, are put for the east and west of the world, #Ps 89:12.

Ver. 23. In labours more abundant] Chrysostom calleth Paul, Insatiabilem Dei cultorem, an unweariable servant of God.

Ver. 24. Forty stripes save one] That they might be sure not to exceed the set number of stripes, limited by the law, #De 25:3.

Ver. 25. Thrice was I beaten, &c.] By the Roman magistrates, as also the martyrs were by the Romish bishops. Thomas Hinshaw was beaten with rods by Bonner, and abode his fury so long as the fat paunched bishop could endure with breath, and till for weariness he was fain to cease. So also he dealt by John Willis, and by Mr Bartlet Green, who greatly rejoiced in the same.

I have been in the deep] Sine nave in mari fui, I was in the sea without a ship, so the Syriac renders it. For 24 hours together I have been floating in the sea.

Ver. 26. By mine own countrymen] A Gentilibus meis, et a Gentibus.

Ver. 27. In weariness and painfulness] Here is dainty rhetoric. Cicero calleth Aristotle's Politics, Aureum flamen orationis, a golden flood of eloquence in respect of the purity of the style and the excellency of the matter. May it not be more truly said of this great apostle's writings?

Ver. 28. That which cometh, &c.] Quasi agmine facto, et repetitis vicibus, His care came upon him, as an armed man, and gave him no rest or respite. The Greek word επισυστασις holds out the cumber; he had as it were all care numbered, and mustered together, and that with anxiety, μεριμνα, with the same solicitude that a man hath about business of his own: yet held he out his whole race without cessation or respiration.

The care of all the Churches] Calvin was not otherwise affected toward the Churches though far remote, than if he had borne them upon his shoulders, saith Beza. He often sighed out, Usque quo Domine, over the poor afflicted Churches of Christ, with the miseries whereof he was much more affected than with any of his own private miseries. I could not but love the man (said Theodosius of Ambrose) for that, while he lived, and when he died, he took more care for the Church than for himself, Magis de ecclesiarum statu, quam de suis periculis angebatur.

Ver. 29. Who is weak] By passion.

And I am not weak] By compassion.

And I burn not] πυροῦμαι, i.e. am exceedingly grieved. Compare #Ps 10:2 7:14. He hotly pursueth the poor. The apostle was even scorched and scalded with sorrow and holy indignation, he felt twinges when others were hurt.

Ver. 30. I will glory of the things] As a conqueror of his spoil, or as an old soldier of his scars. The apostle glorieth in those things that his adversaries condemned as infirm in him. The afflictions also of the best may fitly be called their infirmities; because they are apt to bewray weakness in them. Like as when fire comes to green wood, there issueth out abundance of watery stuff, that was not discerned before; and as, when the pond is empty, the mud, filth, and toads appear.

Ver. 31. Which is blessed for ever] And therefore to be blessed, as he that is the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. This is a praise that he much stands upon, #Ro 15:6. And surely if all generations shall call the Virgin blessed, for that she was the mother of Christ, #Lu 1:48, how much more, &c.

Ver. 32. In Damascus] The chief city of Syria, built (say some) in the place where the blood of Abel was spilt, and thence called Damesek, i.e. a bag of blood. Thither Paul marched with a bloody mind, but was miraculously converted, and so powerfully confounded his countrymen there, that they incensed the governor against him, to his great peril. That is the guise of godless persecutors, to attempt that against the truth by arms that they cannot effect by arguments. See #Ac 9:23,24.

Ver. 33. And through a window, &c.] An honest shift, though against the Roman law of leaping over the walls. Quia leges semper ad aequitatem flectendae sunt, saith Cicero. The sense of the law is the law, and not always the letter. Apices iuris non sunt ius.

And escaped his hands] Of the lawfulness of flight in some cases.

{See Trapp on "Mt 10:23"} {See Trapp on "Ac 9:24"}

Chapter 12

Ver. 1. It is not expedient for me] Because it carries a show at least of pride and folly; and Christians must be shy of the very shows and shadows of sin, ministers especially, whose practice easily passeth into an example. Howbeit for the Corinthians it was expedient, because they thought more meanly of Paul than was meet.

To visions and revelations] The false apostles, haply, boasted of such as some seducers do today, who dream Midianitish dreams, and then tell the same to their neighbours for gospel. But take heed, the old prophet may bring men into the lion's mouth, by telling them of an angel that spake to him.

Ver. 2. I knew a man in Chirst] i.e. A Christian and approved, #2Co 13:5.

Above fourteen years ago] {See Trapp on "Ac 9:9"} All this while till now, he had held his tongue. Taciturnity or silence (in some cases) is a Christian virtue. Either be silent, or say somewhat that is better than silence, was an old moral precept, η σιγα, η κρειττονα σιγης λεγειν..

Ver. 3. Whether in the body, &c.] So far did he forget and neglect his own body, which is so dear and near a thing, in comparison of that incomparable delight he then took in the Lord. "Oh that joy! O my God, when shall I be with thee!" These were the dying words of the last Lord Harrington, that was in heaven beforehand. "Oh the joys, the joys, the unspeakable joys that I feel in my soul!" said another that was even entering into heaven, and had a foretaste of eternal life. Peter in the transfiguration was so transported, that he never thought of a tabernacle for himself, #Mt 17:4; he cared not to lie without doors, so he might longer enjoy that glimpse of heaven's glory.

Ver. 4. How that he was caught up] Not locally (likely) but in spirit, as #Ac 7:56 Eze 8:3.

into Paradise] Heaven, whereof that earthly paradise was but a dark shadow. Jerome comforting a young hermit, bade him look up to heaven, Et Paradisum mente deambulare, to take a few turns in Paradise by his meditations, assuring him that so long as he had Paradise in his mind and heaven in his thought, tamdiu in eremo non eris, he should not be sensible of his solitariness.

Unspeakable words] ρηματα αρηητα, wordless words, such as words are too weak to utter. Nec Christus nec coelum patitur hyperbolen. A man cannot hyperbolize in speaking of Christ and heaven, but must entreat his hearers, as Cicero doth his readers, concerning the worth of Lucius Crassus, Ut maius quiddam de iis quam quae scripta sunt suspicarentur; that they would conceive much more than he was able to express. It is as easy to compass the heaven with a span or contain the sea in a nutshell, as to relate heaven's happiness.

Ver. 5. Yet of myself I will not glory] Non nisi coactus, ut supra. Paul was a model of modesty, a very crucifix of mortification, as one calleth him.

But in mine infirmities] i.e. My troubles, so called, either because under them we seem infirm and contemptible; or else, for that afflictions often show our infirmities, our impatience, &c., they make us sick of the fret, &c.

Ver. 6. Lest any men should think of me] Let no man, saith Gregory, desire to seem more than he is, that so he may be more than he seems. It pleaseth me not, saith Augustine, that by many I am thought to be that which I am not. For truly they love not me, but another for me, si non quod sum, sed quod non sum diligunt, if they love not what I am, but what I am not.

Ver. 7. And lest I should be exalted] So lest Ezekiel should be lifted up with his many rare visions he is frequently called "son of man," to put him in mind of his mortal, miserable condition.

A thorn in the flesh] A corruption edged with a temptation. Satan sent some Delilah to lull Paul asleep in her lap, and bind him with withes of green delights; but his watchful soul, displeased deeply with that flesh-pleasing force, complained thereof, shaked himself, and so found ease.

To buffet me] Perhaps in a proper sense Paul might feel the devil's fingers; take it metaphorically for temptations, and then they are fitly called buffetings, because they come so thick upon a man's spirit that he can hardly take breath. He dogs good hearts with foulest lusts sometimes, as of atheism, idolatry, blasphemy, murder. In all or any of which, if the soul be merely passive (as the word buffeting here implies) they are Satan's sins and our crosses only.

Lest I should be exalted] If Paul had not been buffeted, who knows whither he would have swelled? He might have been carried higher in conceit than before he was in his ecstasy. This "thorn in his flesh" was a means to let out the imposthumated matter of pride out of his heart.

Ver. 8. I besought the Lord thrice] i.e. Frequently and fervently. God respecteth not the arithmetic of our prayers, how many they are; not the rhetoric of our prayers, how neat they are; nor the geometry of our prayers, how long they are; nor the music of our prayers, how melodious they are; nor the logic of our prayers, how methodical they are; but the divinity of our prayers, how heart sprung they are. Not gifts, but graces prevail in prayer.

Ver. 9. My grace is sufficient for thee] God sometimes gives pardoning grace where yet he denies prevailing grace. He roots not out all our Canaanites at once, but leaves some to try and exercise us. "I thank God in Christ, sustentation I have, but suavities spiritual I taste not any," saith Mr Bain, describing the temper of his own spirit. He also went out of the world with far less comfort than some weaker Christians enjoy, God letting Satan loose upon him. (Bain's Life by Mr Clark.)

For my strength is made perfect] It is an act of as great power in God to keep our spark of grace alive amidst so many corruptions, as to keep a fire alive upon the face of the sea. The angels are kept with much less care, charge, and power, than we; because they have no bias, no weight of sin hung upon them.

Ver. 10. Therefore I take pleasure] εὐδοκῶ, I am well paid by them, I reckon them among God's love tokens, pledges of his love, and badges of my sonship.

For when I am weak, then, &c.] This is a seeming contradiction. God, saith Luther, doth most of his works in mediis contrariis, by contraries. Δια τῶν ἐναντιῶν ἐναντία οἰκονομεῖται. He hath a way by himself, saith Nazianzen, that he may be the more admired.

Ver. 11. For in nothing am I behind] And yet there were a sort of silly souls (that thought themselves jolly fellows) in the days of Zuinglius, A. D. 1519, that talked thus at Zurich: Quis tandem Paulus? nonne homo est? Apostolus est, sed suburbanus tantum, non ex 12 viris, non cum Christo est conversatus, articulum fidei non composuit. What was Paul? but a man. An apostle he was, but of an inferior rank; he was not of the twelve; he conversed not with Christ; he composed not any of the 12 articles of the Creed. We would as soon believe Thomas of Scotus, as Paul, &c. "I am as much an apostle as they, who are more than much apostles," saith St Paul here (for so the Greek runs); but (contra sycophantae morsum non est remedium) he cannot be heard.

Ver. 12. In all patience] A grace to be gloried in; Job is crowned and chronicled for it.

Ver. 13. Forgive me this wrong] A pleasant irony, such as whereof this Epistle is full. It is said of a wise man, Quod obiecta probra ut visus nocturnos, et vanas somniorum imagines digno supplicio puniat, festive scilicet contemptu et oblivione, vel si tanti est, misericordia elevet. (John Wover in Polymath.)

Ver. 14. For I seek not yours] Not the fleece, but the flock. He had not those instruments of a foolish shepherd, forcipes et mulctram, the shears and milk pail, &c. The whole senate can witness, saith Beza, that whereas Calvin had a very small stipend, yet was he so far from being discontent therewith, that a more ample allowance being freely offered him, he obstinately refused it. All the goods that he left behind him when he died, his library also being sold very dear, came scarcely to 300 French crowns. Non opes, non gloriam, non voluptates quaesivi, said Melancthon, I never sought riches, pleasures, or preferments; this conscience I carry with me, whithersoever I go. (Melch. Adam.) I do ingenuously profess, saith Mr Rollock, that of all my stipends I have not laid up two pence, for I never cared for the things of this world. Luther never found himself once tempted to covetousness. And herein I could wish we were all Lutherans.

But the parents for the children] We use to say, that one father will better provide for nine children than nine children will for one father. Howbeit, our spiritual fathers (though they seek us, and not ours, yet) they should find both "us" and "ours": "us," in our obedience; "ours," in our recompence.

Ver. 15. Spend and be spent] If like clouds we do sweat ourselves to death, so souls may be brought home to God, it is a blessed way of dying. Mr Samuel Cook's motto was Impendam et expendar, I will spend and be spent; this he cheerfully verified.

The less I be loved] This is many a good man's grief, but his reward is nevertheless with God. The nurse looks not for her wages from the child, but from the parent.

Ver. 16. Being crafty I caught] A blessed craft, a high point of heavenly wisdom, #Da 12:3. It is written of the fox, that when he is very hungry after prey, and can find none, he lieth down and feigneth himself to be a dead carcase, and so the fowls fall upon him, and then he catcheth them. St Paul hungering after the souls' health of his Corinthians, denies himself to gain them.

Ver. 17. Whom I sent unto you] It is said of the pope, that he can never lack money so long as he can hold a pen in his hand; he can command it and have it. But St Paul could not skill of those arts.

Ver. 18. In the same spirit] Who worketh with his own tools only, and is ever like himself in all the saints; through whose whole course godliness runs, as the woof doth through the web, as the spirit doth through the body.

In the same steps] With an upright foot, #Ga 2:14; in Christ, #Col 2:6; as Christ, #1Jo 2:6.

Ver. 19. That we excuse ourselves] And so yield a fault.

I speak before God] The witness of my innocence, #Job 16:19 Ge 20:6.

For your edifying] While ye conceive no ill opinion of us, which, like muddy water in a vessel, might cause the most precious liquor of our doctrine to run over.

Ver. 20. And that I shall be found] Crudelem medicum intemperans aeger facit. The sick man makes harsh headstrong medicine, (Mimus.) We delight not to fling daggers at men's faces; but if men be not told their own, and that with some sharpness, they will on in sin to their utter ruin. Sharp waters clear the eyesight; and bitter potions bring on sweet health. A weak dose doth but stir bad humours and anger them, not purge them out; so it fareth with sins.

Lest there be debates, envyings, &c.] King Edward IV, the night before his death, said to his kinsmen and friends, I remember it to my grief, that there hath been discord among you a great time, not always for great causes, but poor mistakings, <sup>{a}</sup> Some, like salamanders, live always in the fire; like trouts, they love to swim against stream; like Phocion, they think it a goodly thing to dissent from others.

Whisperings] {See Trapp on "Ro 1:29"}

Swellings] That is, taking things unkindly, so that the heart even riseth against another, and we cannot away with him, would have nothing to do with him. Now, as the swelling of the spleen is very dangerous for health; and of the sails, for the overbearing of a little vessel; so is this swelling of the heart by passion, especially if it break out at the lips by tumults, that is, by telling this body, running to that, filling the town with it. Caelum mugitibus implet.

Ver. 21. That have not repented] Impenitence maketh sin mortal, saith St John, #1Jo 5:16, or rather immortal, as saith St Paul, #Ro 2:5. It is not the falling into the water that drowns, but lying in it. God's people may sink once and again to the bottom, but the third time they rise and recover by repentance.

Chapter 13

Ver. 1. Of two or three witnesses] So he calleth his threefold admonition. God's word neglected will one day be a swift witness against the contemners. Moses shall accuse men, #Joh 5:46. God's word lay hold on them, #Zec 1:6, and stick in their hearts and flesh, as fire, throughout all eternity, #Jer 5:14.

Ver. 2. I told you before] Sed surdo fabulam, no telling would serve turn. Many are so wedded and wedged to their sins, that nothing will sunder them but an extraordinary touch from the hand of heaven.

Ver. 3. A proof of Christ speaking in me] The Church is Christi docentis auditorium, saith Bernard, the place wherein he ordinarily teacheth, who hath his school on earth, though his chair in heaven. Scholam habet in terris, Cathedram in caelis.

Ver. 4. Crucified through weakness] i.e. Ex afflicto eius statu, as #Ga 4:14 (Aug.), as having voluntarily subjected himself to all sorts of sufferings for our sakes.

Ver. 5. Examine yourselves] The final trial of our eternal estate doth immediately and solely appertain to the court of heaven. Indeed the disquisitive part belongs to us, the decisive to God.

Prove your own selves] Redouble your diligence in this most needful but much neglected duty of self-examination; an error here is easy and dangerous; hence the precept is doubled; so #Zep 2:1. Excutite vos, iterumque excutite, as Tremellius renders it, Fan yourselves, yea, fan yourselves. He doubleth his phrase, as it were his files. Men are as loth to review their actions, and read the blurred writing of their hearts, as school boys are to parse their lessons and false Latins they have made; the eyes also of their minds are as ill set as those of their bodies, so that they see nothing inwards, though these windows of the soul should be like the windows of Solomon's temple, broad inward, #1Ki 6:4: and men should try themselves thoroughly, for God will; as, though scholars will not scan their verses, their master will. "Let every man therefore prove his own work," #Ga 6:4; so shall he save God a labour, and put the devil out of office. Whereas, sparing a little pains at first doubleth it in the end, as he that will not cast up his books, his books will cast up him at length.

Know ye not your own selves?] Nosce teipsum, Know thyself, say the heathens, came down from heaven; sure it is none can ascend to heaven unless he know himself.

Except ye be reprobates?] Gr. counterfeits, adulterine. Every soul is either the spouse of Christ, or the devil's strumpet.

Ver. 6. But I trust that ye shall know] Whereas they were ready to retort that they were no reprobates, he should well know, let him see that himself were not one. I trust ye shall know, saith he, that we are no reprobates, counterfeits, or inapprovable, opposed to approved, #2Co 13:7.

Ver. 7. Though we be as reprobates] viz. In your esteem. The good heart is content to vilify, yea, nullify itself, so God may be glorified and his people edified; let him be a footstool, or what ye will, to help Christ into his throne. Prorsus Satan est Lutherus, sed Christus vivit, et regnat. Amen, saith Luther. Let me be called a devil, or anything, so Christ may be exalted. (Epist. ad Spalat.)

Ver. 8. For we can do nothing] A temporary may so fall away, as to persecute the truth that he once professed, and the ministry that he once admired. Never falls a saint so far in his greatest relapses. Bishop Latimer tells of one, who fell away from the known truth, to mocking and scorning it; yet was afterwards touched in conscience for it. Beware of this sin, saith he; for I have known no more than this that repented. It is a very dangerous precipice. (Lat. Serm. before K. Edw.)

Ver. 9. Even your perfection] Or, your restoration, or joining again, καταρτισιν. His meaning is, saith Beza, that whereas the members of this Church were all, as it were, dislocated and out of joint, they should now again be joined together in love, and they should endeavour to amend what was amiss among them, either in faith or manners.

Ver. 10. And not to destruction] Unless by accident; or, if to the destruction of the flesh, it is that the spirit might be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus, #1Co 5:5. {See Trapp on "1Co 5:5"} {See Trapp on "2Co 10:8"}

Ver. 11. Finally] Gr. λοιπον, that which yet remains to say more, and then an end.

Be perfect] Or, piece again.

Be of one mind] For matter of opinion.

Live in peace] For matter of affection.

The God of love] The author and fautor.

Ver. 12. With a holy kiss] A custom proper to those times. {See Trapp on "Ro 16:16"} {See Trapp on "1Co 16:20"}

Ver. 13. All the saints salute you] Sanctity is no enemy to courtesy; it doth not remove but rectify it.

Ver. 14. The grace of our Lord] A friendly valediction or fatherly benediction.

Galatians

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. Who raised him from the dead] And by the same almighty power causeth dead souls to hear the voice of the Son of God in his ministers and live, #Joh 5:25 Eph 1:19.

Ver. 2. The Churches of Galatia] They are not unchurched though much corrupted. Uzziah ceased not to be a king when he began to be a leper; the disease of his forehead did not remove his crown.

Ver. 3. Grace be, &c.] {See Trapp on "Ro 1:7"} This Epistle to the Galatians is an epitome of that to the Romans. Peter Martyr observeth that Paul deals more mildly in that Epistle to the Romans than in this to the Galatians; because the Galatians were at first well instructed in the matter of justification, but afterwards did mix other things with Christ; therefore he so sharpens them up, yea, thundereth against them.

Ver. 4. From this present evil world] Bewitched wherewith the Galatians were relapsed from Christ. A subtle and sly enemy it is surely, and hath cast down many wounded; yea, many strong men have been slain by it, as by Solomon's harlot, #Pr 7:26.

Ver. 5. To whom be glory] The benefit of our redemption should make us lift up many a humble, joyful, and thankful heart to God.

Ver. 6. That ye are so soon] Giddy headed hearers have religionem ephemeram, are whirred about with every wind of doctrine, being constant only in their inconstancy, as Ecebolus, Balduinus, and our modern sects. The bishops and doctors of England (said that martyr) in their book against the pope's supremacy, spoke as much as Luther or any Lutheran ever did or could. If they dissembled, who could ever so deeply, speaking so pithily? if not, who could ever turn head to tail so suddenly and so shortly as these did?

Removed from him, &c.] From Christ and me his apostle. Luther often in his books testifieth that he was much afraid, lest when he was dead, that sound doctrine of justification by faith alone would die also. It proved so in various places in Germany. Men fell to Popery as fast as leaves fall in autumn. The word here rendered removed, signifieth properly transported or transplanted. He alludes (saith Jerome) to the word Galal, to roll, as if he should say, You are Galatians, that is, rolling and changing, falling from the gospel of Christ to the law of Moses.

Ver. 7. There be some] That would fain have blended Pharisaism and Christianity, #Ac 15:5.

That trouble you] ταρασσοντες. As camels with their feet trouble the waters they should drink of.

And would pervert the gospel] They pretended only to bring in a Jewish rite or two, and yet are said to pervert the gospel, μεταστρεψαι. Ea quae post tergum sunt, in faciem convertere, as Jerome hath it, to turn that before that should be behind; to speak distorted things, διεστραμμενα, such as produce convulsions of conscience, #Ac 20:30. A little thing untowardly mingled mars all. The monstrous heresy of Nestorius lay but in one letter, θεοδοχος, and of Arius, but in one syllable, ομοιουσιος.

Ver. 8. Or an angel] Not an evil angel (as Ambrose understands it), but a good angel, per impossibile, as #Joh 8:55.

Than that which we, &c.] Or besides that which we have preached. He saith not, contrary to that, but besides that; for indeed that which is directly besides, is indirectly against the gospel.

Ver. 9. Than that ye have] Of the camel it is said, that he will never carry any more weight than what at first is laid upon him; nor go one foot beyond his ordinary journey. Conscience will not budge nor yield a hair for an angel's authority. Stand fast in the good old way, and find rest, #Jer 6:16.

Ver. 10. For do I now persuade men] That is, men's doctrines and devices.

Or do I seek to please men] Ut κοινοφιλης, qui ab omnibus gratiam inire cupit, quem quidam per iocum Placentam vocat. Men pleasers, that curry favour with all, and covet to be counted no meddlers. These lose a friend of God. Neither do they long hold in with those whom for present they do so much please. Constantine checked a preacher, qui ausus est imperatorem in os beatum dicere, that was so bold as to call him a blessed man to his face, thinking thereby to ingratiate. (Euseb. de Vit. Const.) Theodoric, an Arian king, did exceedingly affect a certain deacon, although an orthodox. The deacon thinking to please him better and get preferment, became an Arian; which when the king understood, he changed his love into hatred, and caused his head to be struck from his shoulders. Erasmus, by seeking to please both sides, was neither owned by the Papists nor honoured by the Protestants, Pusillanimitas et ανθρωπαρεσκεια in praeclaro hoc Dei organo praepotuerunt. Dastardliness and man pleasance prevailed too much with him, who otherwise did the Church of God singular good service. (Amama.) How much better had he done if passing by Placenza he had held a straight course to Verona! but he dared not (as Luther) meddle either with the pope's triple crown, or with the monks' fat paunches, lest for his Vae vobis Woe to you, he should have been brought coram nobis, publicly to us, as father Latimer said. He held it best policy to keep his finger out of the sore: and either to say no more than Eli did to his sons, "Why do ye such things," &c., or than Jehoshaphat did to Ahab, "Let not the king say so." As pruriginosa istorum hominum scabies aspetiori certe strigili fricanda fuerat, saith Amama. But those men's mangy hides deserved a sharper currycomb.

For if I yet pleased men] As once I did while I was a Pharisee.

I should not be, &c.] That rule holds good in rhetoric, but not in divinity, Non ad veritatem solum, sed etiam ad opinionem eorum qui audiunt, accommodanda est oratio. (Cic. in Partib.)

Ver. 11. Is not after, man] This he often inculcateth, because the false apostles had buzzed such a thing into their ears to disparage his ministry.

Ver. 12. Received it of man] i.e. Of mere man. Jesus Christ is more than a man.

Ver. 13. And wasted it] επορθουν. As an enemy's country with fire and sword. Mars is styled πολιπορθος. (Homer.)

Ver. 14. Above many mine equals] Porphyry said it was great pity such a man as Paul was ever cast away upon the Christian religion. The monarch of Morocco told the English ambassador in King John's time, that he had lately read Paul's Epistles, which he liked so well, that were he now to choose his religion, he would, before any other, embrace Christianity; but every one, saith he, ought to die in his own religion; and the leaving of the faith wherein he was born was the only thing that he disliked in that apostle.

Ver. 15. Who separated me from, &c.] How knew he this, but by the event? Whosoever is lawfully called to the ministry may conceive that he also was sanctified thereunto from the womb, and should therefore do his utmost in the work. Verbi minister es, hoc age, Be a servant of words, do this, was Mr Perkins' motto.

Ver. 16. To reveal his Son in me] Not only as in an object (wherein the power and grace of Christ might shine and appear), but as by an instrument of revealing and preaching Christ to many.

I conferred not with flesh] i.e. With carnal reason, an evil counsellor for the soul, #Ro 8:7. Indeed in human governments, where reason is shut out, there tyranny is thrust in; but where God commandeth, there to ask a reason is presumption, to oppose reason is flat rebellion.

Ver. 17. But I went into Arabia] Of this journey Luke maketh no mention in the Acts. Into these tents of Kedar came St Paul, and made them, by his preaching, comely as the curtains of Solomon, #So 1:5. Rude they were, but rich; black, but comely, when they had this precious man among them especially, who became a blessing to all places wheresoever he came. Contrary to that which is said of the Great Turk, that wherever he sets his foot he leaves desolation behind him. Arabia was Felix indeed when St Paul was there.

Ver. 18. To see Peter] Not by way of idle visit, but thoroughly to observe the history of his Christian practice for godly imitation. {a} Historiae sunt fidae monitrices. Histor is a faithful warning.

{a} ιστορησαι, videndo observare.

Ver. 19. But other of the apostles] These were busily attending upon their particular charges and offices, according to #Ro 12:7.

Ver. 20. Behold, before God, I lie not] This he solemnly sweareth for their satisfaction. An oath may be lawfully taken to help the truth in necessity, and not otherwise. Hence the Hebrew word Nishbang is a passive, and signifieth "to be sworn," rather than to swear.

Ver. 21. Afterwards I came] He kept, likewise, a diary of his travels, and was able to give a good account of his daily courses. It is not to be doubted, but that our Saviour's disciples kept a register of his holy oracles and miracles, out of which the history of the gospel was afterwards compiled and composed. Father Latimer did the like, as appeareth by his discourses. Mr Bradford also had a journal or dairy, wherein he used to set down all such notable things as either he did see or hear, each day that passed.

Ver. 22. And was unknown] So far was Paul from learning aught of them.

Ver. 23. Now preacheth the faith] A marvellous conversion. I was an obstinate Papist (saith Latimer of himself) as any was in England. Insomuch that when I should be made bachelor of divinity, my whole oration went against Philip Melancthon and his opinions.

Ver. 24. And they glorified God] "Whoso offereth praise, he glorifieth me," #Ps 50:23. God accounts himself as it were to receive a new being, by those inward conceptions of his glory, and by those outward honours that we do to him.

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. I went up] To that first Christian council, Acts xv.

With Barnabas] His constant companion, till that bitter bickering, #Ac 15:39. {See Trapp on "Ac 15:39"}

Ver. 2. By revelation] i.e. By God's special direction; for he ordereth a good man's goings, #Ps 37:23.

I communicated unto them] ἀνεθεμην, I laid open the matter freely and familiarly, as unto bosom friends.

But privately] For all good men are not fit to be trusted with secrets, but only such as can both keep counsel and give counsel.

Or had run in vain] Lest, if it should be thought that I had not held good correspondence with those other apostles, I might lose the fruit of my ministry.

Ver. 3. Was compelled to be circumcised] i.e. I would not yield he should be; lest I should seem to countenance them that held circumcision necessary to salvation. In the year of grace 1549, the ministers of Magdeburg did stoutly oppose them of Wittenberg and Leipsic, and set forth many books against them, because they dealt deceitfully, and by their Adiaphora, or things indifferent, as they called them, they paved a way to Popery. (Alsted. Chron.) And this was our case till this late blessed Reformation. It was not without cause that Peter Martyr commended it to the care of Queen Elizabeth, that church governors endeavour not to carry the ark of the gospel into England upon the cart of needless ceremonies.

Ver. 4. Unawares brought in] παρεισακτοι, or privily slipped in, pretending piety to their worldly or wicked respects. With such ill instruments the Church hath ever been pestered, #2Pe 2:1. These hell-scouts are skulking in every corner.

To spy out our liberty] viz. Of circumcising or not circumcising Titus, that they might pick a quarrel with us.

That they might bring us into bondage] sc. To the ceremonial law. Carolostadius attempted some such thing in Luther's days, and by him was opposed. (Bucholcer.)

Ver. 5. To whom we gave place] We must stick close to the truth, and stickle hard for it, accounting each parcel thereof precious, and not to be parted with for any good. How religious were the apostles and ancients this way! They would not yield for an hour, or exchange one letter or syllable of that holy faith, wherewith Christ had betrustrusted them.

Ver. 6. Seemed to be somewhat] Opinion sets the price; when gold is raised from 20s. to 22s., the gold is the same, estimation only raiseth it.

In conference added nothing to me] They could tell him nothing which he knew not before; when they came to talk together, he found that they did not only hold and teach the same things, but in iisdem verbis, in iisdem syllabis, in the selfsame words and syllables as he did, as Melancthon wisheth all men would.

Whatsoever they were] Augustine being oppressed with the authority of the Fathers, saith he regardeth not quis, sed quid, the worth of the man, but the weight of his reasons.

Ver. 7. As the gospel of, &c.] He equalizeth himself to Peter in office and dignity; though pseudo-apostles and pseudo-catholics deny him that honour. St Peter, Jesuits commend for a worthy spirit, when they censure St Paul for a hot-headed person, &c. And because James is named before Peter, #Ga 2:9, Bellarmine saith that this text is corrupted ( Latini quidem Petrum praeponunt non sine falsi crimine); but what will he say to #1Co 9:5 Joh 1:44 Ac 15:13 21:18, where it appeareth that not Peter but James was president of the council, because he spake the last, and concluded all?

Ver. 8. For he that wrought, &c.] He argues from the success of his and Peter's ministry to the lawfulness of their calling to the work. So he doth #1Co 9:1-3 2Co 13:4,5. {See Trapp on "1Co 9:1"} {See Trapp on "1Co 9:2"} {See Trapp on "1Co 9:3"} {See Trapp on "2Co 13:4"} {See Trapp on "2Co 13:5"} He also ascribeth the glory of all to God, when he saith "was mighty in me." A phrase not unlike that other, #1Co 15:10 "Not I, but the grace of God." And again, not we, "but the weapons of our warfare are mighty through God," &c., #2Co 10:4.

Ver. 9. Who seemed to be pillars] Of the Church, or of the college of apostles. The apostle seems to intimate that even then men began to attribute more than was meet to those holy apostles. This degenerated afterwards into gross superstition, διαστυτικώς dictum. (Cam.)

And they unto the circumcision] Yet were they not so tied up by this agreement, but that they might preach upon fit occasion to the Gentiles too, as might Paut and Barnabas to the Jews; but the Gentiles were their chief charge, and among them they had greatest success.

Ver. 10. Remember the poor] Those Jews that embraced Christianity in Palestine were therefore turned out of all by their unkind countrymen, #Heb 10:31. Hence this care of the apostles, and this forwardness in St Paul. About the beginning of the Reformation in France, the Duke of Lorrain had proscribed some thousands of his Lutheran subjects, who were forced to feed upon haws {a} and acorns, &c. The divines of Strasburgh in Germany, moved with pity towards these poor brethren, ceased not till by their discourses they had prevailed with the senate there to take those miserable exiles into their city, and to provide for them, till they might be conveniently conveyed to other places. (Scultet. Annal.)

{a} The fruit of the hawthorn. (ED)

Ver. 11. But when Peter, &c.] I would gladly learn (said that martyr) why the seat of the primacy (to grant that) should be rather at Rome than elsewhere? They answer, because Peter's chair was at Rome. This is even like to this, because Moses the greatest prophet, and Aaron the first priest, exercised their office until their death in the desert, therefore the most principal place of the Jews' Church shall be in the wilderness. But grant them their reason that it is good, what should Antioch claim? For Peter's chair was there also, when Paul gave him a check, which was unseemly and unmannerly done of Paul, that would not give place to his president and better. Thus far Mr Bradford. Cardinal Baronius withstands Paul as much as ever he did Peter, and blasphemously affirmeth that Peter was not to be blamed, but Paul a great deal more. Bellarmine saith, It was not Peter but Cephas, one of the seventy. A sorry shift, so loth are heretics to have their ass's ears seen. Jerome affirmeth (Epist. 89 ad Augustin.) that Paul reprov'd Peter simulate non serio, nec sensisse quod scripsit, seemingly and not seriously, and that he wrote otherwise than he thought, in saying that Peter walked not uprightly according to the truth of the gospel. But Augustine refuteth this as an error in Jerome, in his 19th epistle to him, and Aquinas also disliketh it; because, #Ga 2:12, Paul sets down a weighty and urgent cause of his reproof. Nevertheless, he doth not call Peter a hypocrite, as Julian the Apostate said he did; for every one that falleth of infirmity is not presently a hypocrite; though he may, in some particular, act the part of a hypocrite. (Cyril ix. in Julian.)

Ver. 12. For before that certain] This history pertains to #Ac 15:30-35, but is not there recorded, that we might search the Scriptures, and compare place with place. So God hath scattered the duties of husbands and wives up and down the Scriptures, that men learning to be good husbands, they may learn also to be good men.

Fearing them of the circumcision] It was not danger that he feared, but offence, wherein he had not done amiss, but that in avoiding a less scandal he fell into a far greater.

Ver. 13. And the other Jews dissembled] The sins of teachers are the teachers of sins; and great men's faults go as seldom unaccompanied as their persons.

Barnabas also] Adhering to Peter rather than to Paul, his old companion, not without a tincture perhaps of the old bitter bickering. "Try all things"; good men may seduce us, as here Peter did Barnabas, and as those would have done Paul, #Ac 21:12. How many learned able men hath the authority of Luther misled in the point of consubstantiation! Ursin was carried away with it for a while; till he was turned from it by the reading of Luther's own arguments; they were such plain paralogisms. {a} (Melch. Adam.)

{a} A piece of false or erroneous reasoning; an illogical argument; a faulty syllogism; a fallacy, esp. (as distinct from sophism) one of which the reasoner himself is unconscious. ŒD

Ver. 14. That they walked not] Ministers must both ὀρθοτομεῖν and ὀρθοποδεῖν, divide the word rightly and foot it uprightly.

I said to Peter before them, all] The fault was public, reproof must be according, #1Ti 5:20. In the year 1159 lived Joannes Sarisburiensis, who both reprov'd the pope to his face and also wrote his Polycraticon, wherein he freely scourgeth the popish clergy. {a} As long before that, in the year 705, Adelin, elect bishop of Sherborn (or Salisbury), while he stayed at Rome for the pope's approbation, the same pope (his name was Sergius) was charged with adultery; for which foul fault this bishop was bold to reprehend his Holiness sharply. (Godw. Catal.)

Why compellest thou, &c.] Peter's example was a compulsion. The company we keep compel us to do as they do.

{a} Praesens praesentem pontificem redarguit. Revius in hist. Pont.

Ver. 15. We who are Jews] The apostle proceedeth in his speech to the Jews at Antioch.

And not sinners of the Gentiles] Because under the covenant of grace; their sins and iniquities will I remember no more. As for the Gentiles, they wanting the rule of God's law, ran headlong into every sin, without restraint or control, #Eph 4:19.

Ver. 16. Knowing] Here is more than an implicit faith or a conjectural confidence.

Ver. 17. But if whiles we seek] This is the same in sense with #Ro 3:31. If we should argue from mercy to liberty, from free justification to lewd and loose conversation, would not all the world cry shame on us? I read of a monster who that night that his prince pardoned and released him, got out and slew him. This was Michael Balbus, who slew the emperor Leo Armenius. Is it possible that any should offer to do so to Christ?

Ver. 18. For if I build again] As I should, if I should license any man to sin, because justified by faith. Christ came by water as well as by blood; he justifies none but whom he also sanctifies.

Ver. 19. Am I dead to the law] i.e. Am freed from the curse, rigour, and irritation of the law. Or, am freed from sin, as #Ro 6:7.

Ver. 20. Christ liveth in me] Luther's motto was Vivit Christus, Christ liveth; and if he were not alive, I would not wish to live one hour longer. Let the Lord live, saith David, #Ps 18:46. Yea, let him live in me, saith Paul. Let him act in me, let him think in me, desire, pray, do all in me. Lord, saith Nazianzen, I am an instrument for thee to touch. Christ dwells in that heart most largely that hath emptied itself of itself. The Israelites felt not the sweetness of manna, till they had spent the flesh pots and other provisions of Egypt.

And gave himself for me] True faith individuateth Christ, and appropriateth him to a man's self. This is the pith and power of particular faith. Mistress Lewis the martyr, being set upon by Satan a little before she suffered, was much comforted and helped by this text.

Ver. 21. I do not frustrate] viz. By seeking to be justified by the law. Ambrose renders it, Non sum ingratus gratiae Dei, I am not ungrateful to the grace of God; I do not repudiate, cassate, nullify it.

Dead in vain] Because he attains not his end in dying, which was not only to leave us a pattern of patience, as Anabaptists hold; but to merit for us remission of sins, and imputation of his righteousness for our justification.

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. O foolish Galatians] Those that are sick of a lethargy must have double the quantity of medicine given them that other men have in other diseases. These Galatians were in a spiritual lethargy, and are therefore thus sharply rebuked, that they might be sound in the faith.

Who hath bewitched you] Or, bemisted you, and dazzled your eyes, #Tit 1:13. The word properly signifies to overlook, as they call it, or to kill with the eyes, by casting out venomous beams, as the basilisk and as witches are said to do. εβασκανε αρα το φαεσι καινειν. (Plin. vii. 2.)

Hath been evidently set forth] As a remedy, by looking whereon ye might have been cured or kept from that bewitching by the eye, like as the stung Israelites were healed by looking on the brazen serpent.

Crucified among you] In the evidence of the doctrine of Christ crucified, and in the administration of the Lord's Supper, that lively picture of Christ on the cross. The Greek word προεγραφη signifieth to paint forth a thing, #Ro 15:4, by a theological painting, not artificial, as the Papists would have it to warrant crucifixes.

Ver. 2. Or by the hearing of faith] The manna of the Spirit comes down from heaven in the dew of the ministry of the gospel, #Nu 11:9 1Pe 1:21. If our eyes see not our teachers, we cannot expect to hear the voice behind us, #Isa 30:20,21.

Ver. 3. Are ye so foolish?] Those then that have the Spirit may play fools in some particulars. Those that are recovered of a frenzy, have yet some mad fits sometimes.

Made perfect by the flesh] As Nebuchadnezzar's image, whose golden head ended in dirty feet.

Ver. 4. If it be in vain] q.d. It is not in vain. God keepeth the feet of the saints, that they cannot altogether lose the things they have wrought, they cannot fall below his supporting grace; the Lord puts under his hand, #Ps 37:1-7 Yet it cannot be denied that a hypocrite may suffer, and all in vain, #1Co 13:3, as did Alexander the coppersmith, who was near unto martyrdom, #Ac 19:34. {See Trapp on "1Co 13:3"}

Ver. 5. Or by the hearing of faith] Faith (and so life) is let into the soul by the sense of hearing, #Isa 55:1-3, to cross the devil, who by the same door brought death into the world.

Ver. 6. It was accounted to him] This the Papists jeeringly call a putative righteousness. The Jews also deride it, and say, that every fox shall yield his own skin to the flayer. See #Ro 4:9,11,12.

Ver. 7. The same are children, &c.] And heirs together with him of the world, #Ro 4:14, which is theirs in right, though detained a while from them by the Amorites, till their sins be full.

Ver. 8. And the Scripture foreseeing] Scripture therefore is not a brute dead thing, as the Jesuits blaspheme. Excellently spake he, who called the Scripture, Cor et animam Dei, The heart and soul of God. (Greg. in Reg. 3.)

Preached the gospel] There is gospel therefore in the Old Testament.

In thee shall all nations] {See Trapp on "Ge 12:3"} "All nations shall be blessed," i.e. justified by faith.

Ver. 9. Are blessed, &c.] For they only are blessed whose sins are remitted, #Ps 32:1. Oh, the blessedness of that man, saith the Psalmist.

Ver. 10. Are under the curse] Aut faciendum, aut patiendum, Either to obey or to be punished. He that will not have the direction of the law must have the correction.

That continueth not in all] #De 27:26. Heb. Shall stand firm, as a square stone, יָקִים, τετραγωνος.

In the book of the law to do them] Done they must be exactly, upon pain of God's curse. For a groat too short in payment of some dues required, our William the Conqueror forced the monks of Ely to lay down a thousand marks, saith the chronicler. The law is no less strict with those that are not freed by Christ.

Ver. 11. Shall live by faith] As being justified by faith. {See Trapp on "Ro 1:17"}.

Ver. 12. And the law is not of faith] Because it promiseth not life to those that will be justified by faith, but requireth works.

Ver. 13. Christ hath redeemed us] As man he bought us, as God he redeemed us, saith Jerome. For to redeem is properly to buy some things back that were mortgaged. Qui redimit, emit quod suum fuit, et suum esse desiit.

Cursed is every one that hangeth] The tree whereon a man was hanged, the stone wherewith he was stoned, the sword wherewith he was beheaded, and the napkin wherewith he was strangled, they were all buried, that there might be no evil memorial of such a one, to say, This was the tree, sword, stone, napkin, wherewith such a one was executed. {a} Constantine abolished this kind of death out of the empire. But what an odd custom was that of the Tiberenes to hang their best friends in courtesy, Longasque ex iis literas facere quos charos habebant? The death on the tree (saith one) was accursed above all kinds of death; as the serpent was accursed above all beasts of the field. Both for the first transgression, whereof the serpent was the instrument, the tree the occasion. (Sphinx Philos.)

{a} Casaub. ex Maimonide.

Ver. 14. The promise of the Spirit] That is, the spiritual promise made to Abraham and his spiritual posterity.

Ver. 15. I speak after the manner] I set the matter forth to you by a familiar comparison.

Though it be but a man's testament] William Tracy, Esq., of Gloucestershire, made in his will, that he would have no funeral pomp at his burying, neither passed he upon a mass. And he further said, that he trusted in God only, and hoped by him to be saved, and not by any saint. This gentleman died, and his son as executor brought the will to the bishop of Canterbury to be proved, which he showed to the Convocation; and there most cruelly they judged that he should be taken out of the ground and be burnt as a heretic, A. D. 1532. Dr Parker, chancellor of Worcester, executed the sentence, and was afterwards sent for by King Henry VIII, who laid high offence to his charge, &c. It cost him 300 pounds to have his pardon. (Acts and Mon.)

Ver. 16. Which is Christ] Mystical Christ, that is, whole Christ; for he accounts not himself complete without his members, who are therefore called his fulness, #Eph 1:23. Caput et corpus, unus est Christus, saith Augustine, the head and members make but one Christ.

Ver. 17. Four hundred and thirty, &c.] This space of time between the promise and the law, the Divine providence cast into two equal portions, of 215 before the people's going down into Egypt, and 215 after their being there. (Lightfoot's Har. Prolegom.)

Ver. 18. Gave it to Abraham] Gr. κεχαρισται, freely gave it. What is more free than a gift? And what better freehold than the divine promise?

Ver. 19. Because of transgressions] Which are discovered by the law. Sight of misery must go before sense of mercy. Lex, lux, the law is a light (saith Solomon), which lays all open, as #1Co 14:25, and threateneth destruction to transgressors.

And it was ordained, &c.] Therefore it is not to be disrespected, though we cannot attain eternal life by it.

In the hand of a mediator] That is, of Moses, who was a mediator of that communication of the law to the people, #Ex 20:19. Christ is the only Mediator of expiation. And of Christ alone some take this text.

Ver. 20. Is not a mediator of one] q.d. God and men were at odds, else what use of a mediator? Sin is the makebate (mischief maker), as being a transgression of the law.

But God is one] One and the same now as of old in taking vengeance on the law's transgressors. Or, God is one party disagreeing or displeased.

Ver. 21. Have given life] That is, have justified a sinner. But herein lay the law's weakness through the flesh, #Ro 8:3.

Ver. 22. But the Scripture] The law and the prophets.

Hath concluded all] Gr. Hath clapped them up close prisoners. All in the neuter gender (both men and women), to prevent cavils, συνεκλεισεν παντα.

That the promise, &c.] That he might have mercy upon all, #Ro 11:32. {See Trapp on "Ro 11:32"}

Ver. 23. But before faith came, &c.] i.e. Before Christ came; faith is put for the object of faith.

We were kept under the law] φρουρουμεθα, as in a prison or garrison, being circled with a compassing strength. The sinner, having transgressed, is kept by the law, as with a guard or garrison, that he cannot escape unless he be delivered by Christ. Some learned men make this expression of the apostle here, "Kept under the law," to denote the duty of a schoolmaster; as one who is to give an account of such as are committed to his charge.

Ver. 24. The law was our schoolmaster] Such a one as that Livy and Florus speak of in Italy, who brought forth his scholars to Hannibal; and if he had not been more merciful than otherwise, they had all perished.

Ver. 25. But after that faith] That is, the gospel, or Christ the author and matter of the gospel. See #Ga 3:23.

Ver. 26. The children of God] Gr. The sons of God, grown up at man's estate; Qui magnum ferulae subduximus, who are no longer under a schoolmaster. How we are the children of God by faith. {See Trapp on "Joh 1:12"}

Ver. 27. Baptized into Christ] And so have had your adoption sealed up unto you, like as in the civil adoption there were certain rites and ceremonies usually performed.

Have put on Christ] To justification and sanctification. {See Trapp on "Ro 13:14"} This is to be clothed with the sun, #Re 12:2. Some think the apostle alludeth here to a custom they had in the primitive times, that those that were to be baptized should come to the church on Whit Sunday (called therefore Dominica in albis) and put upon them white clothing.

Ver. 28. Ye are all one in Christ] Souls have no sexes, and Christ is no respecter of persons. The servant paid the half shekel, as well as the master, #Ex 30:12-16

Ver. 29. Heirs according] Heirs are kept short in their under age, and sometimes forced to borrow of servants; but when once at years, they have all. So shall the saints in heaven, though here hard put to it.

Chapter 4

Ver. 1. Differeth nothing from a servant] In allusion whereunto there is written upon the prince's arms, Ich dien, that is, I serve. Henry the Second, king of England, crowned his eldest son Henry while he was yet alive; which made his ambition quite turn off his obedience. Ambition ever rides without reins. That king, at his son's coronation, renounced the name of king for that day, and as a servant, served at the table; for which he was thus required, My father, said he, is not dishonoured by attending on me, for I am both a king and a queen's son, and so is not he. After this he bore arms against his father, and died in open rebellion.

Ver. 2. But is under tutors] Those under the law were but alphabetaries (rudimentaries) in comparison of those under the gospel. {a} The sea about the altar was brazen, #1Ki 7:23, and what eyes could pierce through it? Now our sea about the throne is glassy, #Re 4:6, like to crystal, clearly conveying the light and sight of God to our eyes.

{a} ο μηδε τον Αισωπον πεπατηκος, Aristophanes.

Ver. 3. When we were children] Gr. νηπιοι, infants, babies, that must be pleased with rattles; so the old Church with carnal ceremonies.

Ver. 4. But when the fulness of the time] This answers to that time appointed of the Father, #Ga 4:2. Plato said that God doth always γεωμετρειν, he doth all things in number, weight, and measure; he never comes too soon, neither stays he too long.

God sent forth his Son] Out of his own bosom. May not we say as they did, #Joh 11:36, Lo! how he loved us. This was a hyperbole of love. Should we not say again, as they did, #Jud 8:22 "Rule thou over us, &c., for thou hast delivered us from the hand of Midian."

Made of a woman] Of the sanctified substance of the holy Virgin. Note this against Marcionites and Anabaptists.

Made under the law] Circumcised the eighth day, and so made a debtor to do the whole law; which he perfectly fulfilled, and yet (for us) suffered the curse.

Ver. 5. To redeem them, &c.] To buy them off, who were in worse case than the Turkish galley slaves chained to an oar.

That we might receive the adoption] That is, the possession of our adoption, the full enjoyment of our inheritance.

Ver. 6. Crying, Abba, Father] God hath no stillborn children. Paul was no sooner converted, but behold he prayed, #Ac 9:11. The spirit of grace is a spirit of supplication, #Zec 12:10. And when God sends this spirit of prayer into our hearts, it is a sure sign that he means to answer our desires; like as when we bid our children say, I pray you, father, give me this, we do it not, but when we mean to give them that which we teach them to ask. The gemination, "Abba, Father," noteth fiducial, filial, vehement affection; and it is made the first word we can speak when we are made sons, to cry "Abba, Father."

Ver. 7. And if a son, &c.] {See Trapp on "Ro 8:17"}

Ver. 8. Ye did service] Here all religious service done to any but God is manifestly condemned as impious, whether in pagans or papagans (papists).

Ver. 9. Or rather are known of God] Whose gracious foreknowing and foreappointing of us to eternal life is the ground and foundation of our illumination and conversion, our love to him a reflex of his love to us.

Ver. 10. Ye observe days] The Christian Church knows no holy days, besides that honourable Lord's day, #Isa 57:14 Re 1:10, and such holy feasts, as upon special occasions the Church shall see fit to celebrate, as Novemb. 5, &c. (Guy Fawkes Day and the gunpowder plot)

Ver. 11. Lest I have bestowed labour] Gr. κεκοπιακα, even to lassitude, as a day labourer. Other work folks find their work as they left it; but a minister hath all marred many times between sabbath and sabbath, or if but awhile absent, as Moses was in the mount.

Ver. 12. Be as I am] No longer a legalist, as once, #Php 3:5,8.

Ye have not injured me at all] He was above their buffooneries and indignities. When an inconsiderate fellow had stricken Cato in the bath, and afterwards cried him mercy, he replied, I remember not that thou didst strike me. (Seneca.) Tu linguae, ego aurium dominus, said one to another that railed on him. I cannot be master of thy tongue, but I will be master of mine own ears. (Tacit.) One having made a long and idle discourse before Aristotle concluded it thus, I doubt I have been too tedious to you, sir philosopher, with my many words. In good sooth, said Aristotle, you have not been tedious to me, for I gave no heed to anything you said. {a} Momus in Lucian tells Jupiter, It is in thy power whether any one shall vex or wrong thee. St Paul here shakes off the affronts and injuries offered unto him with as much ease as once he did the viper, #Ac 28:5. Some would have swelled, and almost died at the sight of such a thing; he only shook it off, and there was no hurt done.

Ver. 13. Through infirmity of the flesh] That is, though much broken with many miseries, yet I spared not to take pains among you. Zachariah, though he ceased to speak, yet he ceased not to minister; he took not his dumbness for a dismissal, but stayed out the eight days of his course, #Lu 1:23.

Ver. 14. And my temptation] That is, mine afflictions, whereby the Lord tempts his, feels which way their pulses beat, and how they stand affected toward him.

Which was in my flesh] My spirit being haply untouched. For often the body is weak, the soul well. Afflictions may reach but to the outward man. Job never complained till he was wet through, till the waters went over his soul.

Nor rejected] Gr. εξετυσατε, ye spit not on, as they did that spat in Christ's face.

Even as Christ Jesus] Who hath said, "He that receiveth you, receiveth me." It was a common saying at Constantinople, Better the sun should not shine than that Chrysostom should not preach.

Ver. 15. Where is then the blessedness] q.d. There was a time when ye held yourselves happy in me, and blessed the time that ever ye saw and heard me. {a} Is the change now in me or in yourselves? Thus the Jews rejoiced in John for a season, but he soon grew stale to them, #Joh 5:35. See the note there. Neutrum modo, mas modo vulgus.

{a} μακαρισμος, Beatitudinis praedicatio. Beza.

Ver. 16. Am I therefore become, &c.] Truth breeds hatred, as the fair nymphs did the ugly fauns {a} and satyrs. The hearing of truth galls, as they write of some creatures, that they have fel in aure, gall in their ears. It was not for nothing therefore that the orator called upon his countrymen to get their ears healed before they came any more to hear him. To preach, saith Luther, is nothing else but to derive upon a man's self the rage of all the country. And therefore when one defined the ministerial function to be Artem artium et scientiam scientiarum, the art of arts and science of sciences, Melancthon said, If he had defined it to be miseriam miseriatom, the misery of miseries, he had hit it.

Because I tell you the truth?] He that prizeth truth (saith Sir Walter Raleigh) shall never prosper by the possession or profession thereof. An expectus, ut Quintilianus ametur? When we seek to fetch men out of their sins, they are apt to fret and snarl; like men when wakened out of their sleep, they are unquiet, ready to brawl with their best friend.

{a} One of a class of rural deities; at first represented like men with horns and the tail of a goat, afterwards with goats' legs like the Satyrs, to whom they were assimilated in lustful character. (ED)

Ver. 17. They zealously affect you] Depereunt vos; as jealous woers they would have you whole to themselves without a co-rival, ερως and επις are related.

They would exclude us] As standing in their way. This is the guise of all sectaries and seducers, they denigrate the true teachers that they may be the only men.

That you might affect them] Our Antinomians call upon their hearers to mark, it may be they shall hear that which they have not heard before, when the thing is either false, or if true, no more than ordinarily is taught by others.

“Quid dignum tanto ferat hic promissor hiatu?”

Her. de Art. Poet.

Ver. 18. To be zealously affected in a good thing] In a good cause, for a good end, and in a good manner. There is a counterfeit zeal, as is that of the Popish martyrs, or traitors rather, of whom Campian in his epistle to the honourable counsellors of Queen Elizabeth, Quamdiu vel unus quispiam e nobis supererit qui Tiburno vestro fruatur; &c. As long as there shall be left any one of us to wear a Tyburn tippet, {a} we will not cease our suit.

And not only when I am present] Since even absent I teach and tell you the truth of God by letters.

{a} A jocular name for a hangman's rope: usually Tyburn tippet. (ED)

Ver. 19. Till Christ be formed] That you may seek for salvation by him alone. Together with the word there goes forth a regenerating power, #Jas 1:18. It is not a dead letter and empty sound, as some have blasphemed. Only let us not, as Hosea's unwise son, stay in the place of breaking forth of children, proceed no further than to conviction; much less stifle those inward workings for sin, as harlots destroy their conceptions, that they may not bear the pain of childbirth.

Ver. 20. And to change my voice] To speak to your necessity; for now being absent I shoot at rovers, and am at some uncertainty (απορομαι) how to frame my discourse to you.

Ver. 21. Ye that desire, &c.] That are ambitious of slavery, of beggary, #Ga 4:9. How many have we at this day that rejoice in their bondage and dance to hell in their bolts!

Ver. 22. For it is written] It was enough of old to say, "It is written"; there was no need to quote chapter and verse, as now. Men were so ready (skilled) in the Scriptures, they could tell where to turn to anything at first hearing.

Ver. 23. Was born after the flesh] In an ordinary way, as all others are; for Hagar was young, and Abraham not old.

Was by promise] i.e. By a supernatural power, by a divine miracle.

Ver. 24. Which things are an allegory] That is, they signify or import an allegory, αλληγορουμενα; or they, being the things that they were, represented and typed out the things that they were not. So did the brazen serpent, the deluge, the Red Sea, &c. As for those allegories of Origen, and other wanton wits, luxuriant this way, what are they else but Scripturarum spuma, as one calleth them, Scripture froth?

Ver. 25. For this Agar is mount] The Arabians call Mount Sinai, Agar. Twice Hagar fled thither, #Ge 16:7,14 21:14, it being in her way home to Egypt. From her the Arabians are called Hagarenes, and since (for more honour' sake) Saracens, of Sarah, Hagar's mistress.

Answereth to Jerusalem] That is, to the Jewish synagogue, born to bondage, as Tiberius said of the Romans, that they were homines ad servitutum parati. men prepared for slavery.

Ver. 26. But Jerusalem which is above] That is, the Christian Church, the heavenly Jerusalem, the panegyris and congregation of the firstborn, whose names are enrolled in heaven, #Heb 12:23. The Hebrew word for Jerusalem is of the dual number; to show, say the Cabalists, that there is a heavenly as well as an earthly Jerusalem, and that the taking away of the earthly was intimated by the taking away of the letter jod out of Jerusalem, #2Sa 5:13. {Hebrew Text Note} (Amama in Coronide.) Let us upon the sight of any famous city lift up our hearts with holy Fulgentius and say, Si talis est Roma terrestris, qualis est Roma caelestis? If there be such stateliness and sweetness here, what is there in that "City of the great King?"

Ver. 27. For it is written] When these testimonies of the Old Testament are thus cited in the New, it is not only by way of accommodation, but because they are the proper meaning of the places.

Ver. 28. Now we, brethren, as Isaac] This the Jews to this day will not hear of, but call us Mamzer Goi, bastardly Gentiles.

Ver. 29. Persecuted him] By cruel mockings and real injuries, challenging the birthright and deriding the covenant, &c. Moses's word, קהזצמ #Ge 21:9, holds forth, that Ishmael did not only himself mock Isaac, but made others also to mock him, exposing him to their jeers. The Papists made way for their great project of perdition in 1588, (Spanish Armada) by dividing the people here under the terms of Protestant and Puritan, and provoking them thereby to real and mutual both hate and contempt. (George Abbot's Answer.)

Even so it is now] And so also it is now, may we say at this day. For what do Papists persecute us for else, but because we reject their justification by works? They poisoned their own Cardinal Contarenus, for that he declared himself sound in this point, by a book that he set forth some four years before the Council of Trent.

Ver. 30. Shall not be heir] No justiciary (official of justice) can be saved. A Papist cannot go beyond a reprobate. Purus putus Papista non potest servari. #Re 19:21.

Ver. 31. We are not children, &c.] q.d. We are in a far better condition than legalists. "I have blessed Ishmael," saith God; "twelve princes shall he beget; but my covenant will I establish with Isaac," #Ge 17:20,21. And such honour have all his saints.

Chapter 5

Ver. 1. Be not again entangled] ενεχεσθε. As oxen tied to the yoke. Those that followed Judas Galileus, #Ac 5:37, chose rather to undergo any death than to be in subjection to any mortal. (Joseph. xviii. 2.) If civil servitude be so grievous, what ought spiritual to be? Those poor misled and muzzled souls that are held captive in the pope's dark dungeon, have an ill time of it. Ever since, being reconciled to the Roman Church, I subjected myself and my kingdoms (said King John of England) to the pope's authority, never anything went well with me, but all against me, Nulla mihi prospera, sed omnia adversa evenerunt.

Ver. 2. Behold I Paul] q.d. As true as I am Paul, and do write these things.

Christ shall profit you nothing] For he profits none but those that are found in him, not having their "own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God through faith," #Php 3:9. As Pharaoh said of the Israelites, "they are entangled in the land, the wilderness hath shut them in," #Ex 14:3; so may it be said of Pharisaical and Popish justiciaries, they are entangled in the fond conceits of their own righteousness, they cannot come to Christ. A man will never truly desire Christ till soundly shaken, #Hag 2:7.

Ver. 3. That he is a debtor] viz. If he be circumcised with an opinion of meriting thereby. Christ will be our sole Saviour, or none; he will not mingle his precious blood with our puddle stuff. Those that will look unto him must look off all things else, as the apostle's word ἀφορῶντες importeth, #Heb 12:2.

Ver. 4. Christ is become of none effect] Woe then to popish merit mongers. William Wickham, founder of New College, though he did many good works, yet he professed he trusted to Jesus Christ alone for salvation. So did Charles V, emperor of Germany. So did many of our forefathers in times of Popery. (Parei Hist. Profan. medul. Dr Ussher on #Eph 4:13)

Ye are fallen from grace] It cannot hence be concluded that the apostle speaks conditionally, and it may be understood of the true doctrine of God's free grace.

Ver. 5. For we through the Spirit] We apostles hope for righteousness by faith. If you will go to heaven any other way, you must erect a ladder, and go up alone, as Constantine said to Acesins the Novatian heretic, Erigito scalam, Acesi, et solus ascendo.

Ver. 6. Neither circumcision] Unregenerate Israel is as Ethiopia, #Am 9:7.

But faith that worketh] Iustificamur tribus modis, Effective a Deo, apprehensive a fide, declarative ab operibus. Faith justifies the man, and works justify faith. To be a mother in Israel, is having Rachel's eye and Leah's womb.

Ver. 7. Ye did run well] Why do ye now stop or step back? Tutius recurrere quam male currere, was the Emperor Philip's symbol. (Reusner Symb.) Better run back than run amiss; for in this case, "He that hasteth with his feet, sinneth," #Pr 19:2. But to run well till a man sweats, and then to sit down and take cold, may cause a consumption.

Who did let you?] Gr. "Threw a block in your way," εγκοπτειν, transversum aliquid struere.

Ver. 8. This persuasion] Sectarians and seducers have a strange art in persuading, πιθανολογια, #Col 2:4. And although we think ourselves able enough to answer and withstand their arguments, yet it is dangerous dealing with them. The Valentinian heretics had a trick to persuade before they taught. (Tertullian.) Arius could cog {a} a dice, and deceive the simple and heedless hearer.

{a} (Dicing.) To practise certain tricks in throwing dice. From contextual evidence it would seem that 'cogging' generally designated some sleight of hand, made use of to control the falling of a die; occasionally it may mean the substitution of a false die for the true one. (ED)

Ver. 9. A little leaven] viz. Of false doctrine, #Mt 16:6. {See Trapp on "Mt 16:6"}

Ver. 10. But he that troubleth you] That heresiarch, or ringleader of the faction. The beast and the false prophet are taken and cast alive into a lake, &c., when the common sort seduced by them had an easier judgment, #Re 19:20,21.

Ver. 11. Why do I yet suffer persecution] From the Jews zealous of the law. It is well observed that the nearer any are unto a conjunction in matters of religion, and yet some difference retained, the deeper is the hatred. {a} A Jew hates a Christian worse than he doth a Turk or Pagan. A Papist hates a Protestant worse than he doth a Jew, &c.

{a} Dr Day upon #1Co 16:9.

Ver. 12. I would they were even cut] Not circumcised only, cut round, but cut off, Non circumcidantur modo, sed et abscindantur. (Chrys.)

That trouble you] That turn you upside down, or that turn you out of house and home.

Ver. 13. Only use not your liberty] In maxima libertate, minima licentia. In the greatest freedom is the least amount of licence. Therefore αναστατουντες, are men the worse, because they should be better. Christ came to call sinners, not to licentiousness, but to repentance, #Mr 2:17, to take his yoke upon them, #Mt 11:29, to hire out their members servants to righteousness, #Ro 6:16. Hence it is, that as St Paul's Epistles largely prove free election and justification by Christ; so the Epistles of James, Peter, and John, press to love and new obedience, lest any should argue from mercy to liberty. Nemo sit liber in fraudem fisci, Let no one be free in mishandling the treasury, saith the civil law. (Valer. Max. ii. 1.) It was enacted among the Athenians, that whosoever, having been a bondman, was convicted of ingratitude for his manumission, should lose his liberty: the Romans made such slaves again; which punishment they term Maximam capitis diminutionem, The greatest demotion of a person. (Justin Instit. i. 16.)

Ver. 14. For all the law] i.e. All the second table. The Scripture often appropriateth the law to the second table, as #Ro 13:8 Eph 6:2, &c. A man must exercise the first table in the second, the duties of his general calling in his particular calling. In the first commandment, saith Luther, the keeping of all the laws is enjoined, Primo praecepto reliquorum omnium observantia praecipitur. Neither can any one love his neighbour as himself, but he that loves God above all.

Ver. 15. But if ye bite, &c.] Si collidimur, frangimur, If we clash, we break. Dissolution is the daughter of dissension, saith Nazienzen. The Turks pray to God to keep the Christians at variance. Israelites in Egypt vexed one another; and Christians, as if they lacked enemies, fly in one another's faces. This is a sad foretoken of a deadly consumption. {a} When the Eastern Churches were all to pieces among themselves, in came the Goths and Vandals, and afterward the Turks and Tartars. {b} When the French Churches began to jangle and jar about discipline, God suffered the Parisian massacre. Our present hideous dissensions (like those civil wars of Rome— nullos habitura triumphos, not any will hold a triumph. Lucan), do as plainly foretell the removing of our candlestick, in case we repent not, as if we had received letters from heaven to that purpose. We read in our chronicles, that those who were born in England in the year after the great mortality, A. D. 1349, wanted some of their cheek teeth. Men seem to have more now than usual; there was never such biting and snarling. England is a mighty animal (saith a great politician), which can never die except it kill itself. And to the same purpose the Lord Rich in a speech to the justices in King Edward VI's days, "Never foreign power (saith he) could yet hurt, or in any part prevail in this realm, but by disobedience and disorder among themselves. That is the way wherewith God will plague us if he mind to punish us. And so long as we do agree among ourselves, we may be sure that God is with us, and that foreign power shall not prevail against us."

{a} Camer. Med. Hist. cent. 2.

{b} Melch. Adam. in Vita Bulling.

Ver. 16. This I say then] For an antidote against abuse of Christian liberty. Set the Spirit, as Pharaoh did Joseph, upon the chief chariot of your hearts, and let all be at his beck and check.

Ver. 17. For the flesh lusteth] Every new man is two men. What can a man see in the Shulamite, but as the appearance of two armies? #So 6:13. These maintain civil broils within her, as the two babes did in Rebecca's womb. All was jolly quiet at Ephesus, till Paul came thither; but then there arose no small stir about that way, #Ac 19:23. So is there in the good soul.

So that ye cannot do the things, &c.] As ye cannot do the good that ye would, because of the flesh, {#Ro 7:21, something lay at the fountain head, and stop it} so neither can ye do the evil that ye would, because of the Spirit. In which respect, setting the ingratitude aside, the sins of godly men are less than others, because the flesh cannot carry it without some counterbuffs.

Ver. 18. Ye are not under the law] For where the Spirit is, there is liberty from the rigour, irritation, and malediction of the law.

Ver. 19. Now the works of the flesh] Sinners are sore labourers; wicked men great workmen. Would they take but half that pains for heaven that they do for hell, they could not, likely, miss of it. The Hebrew and Greek words for sin import labour (Gnamal, πονηρια).

Are manifest] φανερα, they lie above ground, and are condemned by the light of nature. Wicked men also hang out their sins to the sight of the sun, #Isa 3:9, that they must needs be manifest even to a natural conscience; not so the fruits of the Spirit.

Ver. 20. Idolatry] This is fitly set after those fleshly sins, as commonly accompanied with them, #1Co 10:7,8. Sir Walter Raleigh knew what he said, that were he to choose a religion for licentious liberty and lasciviousness, he would choose the Popish religion.

Ver. 21. Murders, drunkenness] This is often the mother of murder. Domitius, the father of Nero, slew Liberius, an honest man, because he refused to drink so much as he commanded him. (Sueton.) Alexander killed many of his dear friends in his drunkenness, whom he would have revived again (but could not) with his own heartblood. Once he invited a company to supper, and provided a crown of 180 pounds to be given to those that drank most. One and forty killed themselves with drinking to get that crown. Mr Samuel Ward in his Woe to Drunkards maketh mention of many brought by this swinish sin to untimely shameful ends in a brutish and bestial manner; among the rest, one of Aylesham in Norfolk, a notorious drunkard, drowned in a shallow brook of water with his horse by him. The like whereunto has occurred in the place where I now live, this instant November 14th, A. D. 1650. At a blind clandestine alehouse, a company of odious drunkards having drunk all the three outs (that is, ale out of the pot, money out of the purse, and wit out of the head), one of them, making homeward, was drowned in a shallow ditch, his body not yet buried: upon his soul I pass no definitive sentence; but what hope can we comfortably conceive of such? Another of the same crew (rebuked by his father at the same time for his ill husbandry) swore he would hang himself; which also he did presently, and had perished by his own hands, had not his father come seasonably and cut the halter. Oh, these ale houses! the pest houses of our nation, the very sinks and sources of all villany.

Ver. 22. The fruit of the Spirit] The spirit of grace are those two golden pipes, #Zec 4:12, through which the two olive branches empty out of themselves the golden oils of all precious graces into the candlestick, the Church. Hence grace is here and elsewhere called the fruits of the Spirit, pleasant fruits, #So 4:16 6:2 Joh 15:16.

Longsuffering] It hath been questioned by Aquinas whether a man can be longsuffering, sine auxilio gratiae, without the help of grace. But that which is right is a fruit of the Spirit.

Gentleness] Gr. χρηστατης. Usefulness, sweetness.

Faith] That is, faithfulness, as #Mt 23:23 1Ti 5:12 Tit 2:10.

Ver. 23. Meekness, temperance] Queen Elizabeth was famous for these two virtues. King Edward VI called her by no other name than his sweet sister Temperance. (Camd. Elizab.) She did seldom eat but one sort of meat, rose ever with an appetite, and lived about 70 years. Next to the Holy Scripture she preferred (as the best piece) Seneca's book of Clemency. When she said, that book had done her much good; yea, said one, but it hath done your subjects much hurt. (Sir W. Vaughan, Mr Heyrick's Three Sermons.)

Against such there is no law] #1Ti 1:9. As for the works of the flesh, there is no gospel. The righteous need no law to compel them, therefore they shall have none to condemn them. The law confineth them to live in that element where they would live; as if one should be confined to Paradise, where he would be, though there be no such law.

Ver. 24. And they that are Christ's] When Christ came in the flesh, we crucified him; when he comes into our hearts, he crucifies us.

Have crucified the flesh] To crucify is not absolutely and outright to kill; crucifixion is a lingering death, no member being free from pain. If then we so repent of sin (as that which crucified Christ), we so pierce the old man, that we are sure he will die of it, though he be not presently dead, this is mortification. Those beasts, #Da 7:12, had their dominion taken away, and yet their lives were prolonged for a season.

With the affections] Sinful sudden passions.

And lusts] More deeply rooted in our natures, and so not so easily overcome.

Ver. 25. If we live in the spirit] Spiritual men only are heirs of life, #1Pe 3:7, all others are dead in trespasses.

Let us walk] Walk orderly, by line and by rule, march in rank, στοιχωμεν. Life consists in action. Life, saith the philosopher, is such a faculty as whereby creatures move themselves in their own places. The godly esteem life by that stirring they find in their souls; as else they lament as over a dead soul, #Isa 38:15,16.

Ver. 26. Let us not be desirous of vain glory] Ingens dulcedo gloriae (saith Aeneas Sylvius) facilius contemnenda dicitur, quam contemnitur. It was this vice that raised so much trouble in Germany between Luther and Carolostadius, and that bred the sacramentary war that is not yet ended. It was a saying of Luther, From a vain glorious doctor, from a contentious pastor, and from unprofitable questions, the good Lord deliver his Church.

Provoking one another, envying one another] And so discovering your weakness, as the vainglorious peacock doth his filthy parts behind, while he delighteth to be seen and to behold his own tail.

Chapter 6

Ver. 1. If a man be overtaken] Gr. προληφθη, be taken before he is aware, before he hath time to consider, or bethink himself of better. It is of incogitancy that the saints sin; put them in mind, and they mend all. It is of passion, and passions last not long. "There is no way of wickedness in them; they stand not in the way of sinners, they sit not down in the seat of scorers," #Ps 1:1 139:24.

Restore such a one] Gr. καταρτοζετε, set him in joint again. A metaphor from surgeons and bone setters who handle their patients tenderly. Or from such as take a mote out of one's eye gently and warily.

Lest thou also be tempted] I have known a good old man, saith Bernard, who when he had heard of any that had committed some notorious offence, was wont to say with himself, Ille hodie, et ego eras, He fell today, so may I tomorrow. Mr Bradford set down in his diary what good he saw in any man, bewailing the lack of it in himself, and praying for more grace; as if he saw or heard of any evil in another, he noted it, as in danger to do so himself; and still added, Lord, have mercy upon me. (Prof. to his Serm. of Rep.)

Ver. 2. Bear ye one another's burdens] When after reprehension sin is become a burden, set to your shoulder, and help to lift it off. "Support the weak, be patient toward all," #1Th 5:14. Nature hath taught the deer to help one another in swimming, the cranes one another in flying; one stone bears up another in buildings contrived by art, &c.

Ver. 3. Think himself to be something] The self-deceiver takes his counter, and sets it up for a thousand pound, as the Pharisees and Laodiceans. Of such it may be said, as Quintilian somewhere of some overweeners of themselves, that they might have proved excellent scholars if they had not been so persuaded already.

Ver. 4. But let every man prove] This is an excellent remedy against self-deceit, and a means to make one fit to reprove others with mercy and meekness.

And then shall he have rejoicing] Ut testimonium perhibeat conscientia propria, non lingua aliena, saith Augustine, that thine own conscience and not another man's tongue may testify for thee. Omnis Sarmatarum virtus extra ipsos, saith Tacitus. All the self-deceiver's goodness is shored up by popularity or other base respects.

Ver. 5. For every man shall bear] Be thorough therefore in the work of self-examination. Sparing a little pains at first, doubles it in the end; as he who will not cast up his books, his books wilt cast up him at length. The misery of most men is, that their minds are as ill set as their eyes, neither of them look inwards. How few are there that turn short again upon themselves so as to say, What have I done? Woe to all such when God shall send out summons for sleepers, when he comes to search Jerusalem with candles, and punish the men that are settled on their lees, &c., #Zep 1:12.

Ver. 6. Communicate unto him] Not sharing as an alms, but sharing as a right; see #Phm 17; as wages for his work, #Mr 6:8; as pay for his pains, #1Co 9:14. {See Trapp on "1Co 9:14"}

Ver. 7. Be not deceived] Think not all well saved that is withheld from the minister. It is a saying in the civil law, Clericis Laici sunt oppido infensi; many think it neither sin nor pity to beguile the preacher. But God is not mocked, neither will he be robbed by any, but they shall hear, Ye are cursed with a curse, #Mal 3:8,9, even with Shallum's curse, #Jer 22:11-13, that used his neighbour's service without wages, and would sacrilegiously take in a piece of God's windows into his wide house, #Ga 6:14.

God is not mocked] They that would mock God, imposturam faciunt, et patientur (as the emperor said of him that sold glass for pearls), they mock themselves much more.

Ver. 8. For he that soweth to his flesh] He that neglecting his poor soul, cares only to feather his nest and to heap up riches. Si ventri bene, si lateri, as Epicurus in Horace; if the belly may be filled, the back fitted, let the soul sink or swim, he takes no thought.

Ver. 9. And let us not be weary] Let us not give in as tired jades, εκκακωμεν; hot at hand seldom holds out. Let us not slack our pace in religion, let not our tears begin to freeze; for this, if it doth not lose, yet it may lessen and lighten our crown. Ambrose noteth of the fig tree, that whereas other trees first blossom and then bring forth fruit, in the fig tree it is otherwise, Poma decidunt ut folia succedant, the figs fall off, that leaves may come in their place. So many that begin in fruits, end in leaves, such are they that weary of well doing, lose the things that they have wrought, #2Jo 8. {See Trapp on "2Jo 8"}

For in due season we shall reap] We must not look to sow and reap in a day; as he saith of the Hyperborean people, far north, that they sow shortly after the sun rising with them, and reap before the sun set; that is, because the whole half-year is one continual day with them. (Herosbach de Re Rustica.)

If we faint not] Quaerendi defatigatio turpis est cum id quod quaeritur, sit pulcherrimum, It is a shame to faint in the search of that, which being found will more than pay for the pains of searching. Caleb was not discouraged by the giants, therefore he had Hebron the place of the giants; so those that faint not in the way to heaven shall inherit heaven.

Ver. 10. As we have therefore opportunity] Catch at it, as the echo catcheth the voice. Joseph took the nick of time to gain Egypt to the king, by feeding the hungry; so may we to get heaven. I read of a Roman emperor who when he heard of a neighbour death, he asked, And what did I for him before he died? Let us ask ourselves the same and the like questions.

Who are of the household] Of the family of faith, God's household servants. That was a desperate resolve of Aigoland, king of Arragon, who coming to the French court to be baptized, and asking who those lazars <sup>{a}</sup> and poor people were that waited for alms from the Emperor Charlemagne's table? When one answered him that they were the messengers and servants of God; I will never serve that God, said he, that can keep his servants no better. (Turpine.)

{a} A poor and diseased person, usually one afflicted with a loathsome disease; esp. a leper. (ED)

Ver. 11. How large a letter] Gr. with what good great text letters. I have written unto you with mine own hand (no fair hand; the greatest clerks are not always the best scribes), and not by any Tertius, or other amanuensis, #Ro 16:22, to show his love, and prevent imposture, #2Th 2:2. (Chrysost. Theophylact.)

Ver. 12. To make a fair show] Gr. εὑπροσωπησαι, to set a good face on it, before the Jews especially, and to ingratiate with them.

For the cross of Christ] That is, for the doctrine of the cross, or of justification by the death of Christ crucified.

Ver. 13. Keep the law] #Ro 2:23. Jerome doubteth not to pronounce that man accursed, that saith it is impossible to keep the law. Sed quid visum sit Hieronymo, nihil moramur; nos quid verum sit inquirimus, saith Calvin. But let Jerome hold as he will, we know there is no such thing.

That they may glory in your flesh] That they may pride themselves in the multitude of their followers, and curry favour with the Jews by gaining many proselytes.

Ver. 14. But God forbid, &c.] The saints keep a constant counter motion, and are antipodes <sup>{a}</sup> to the wicked. They thus and thus, but I otherwise.

Whereby the world is crucified] I look upon the world as a dead thing, as a great dunghill, &c. That harlot was deceived in St Paul, in thinking to allure him by laying out those her two fair breasts of profit and pleasure; he had no mind to be sucking at those botches; he was a very crucifix of mortification. And in his face (as one said of Doctor Raynolds) a man might have seen veram mortificati hominis idaeam, the true portraiture of a mortified man.

And I to the world] q.d. The world and I are well agreed. The world cares not a pin for me, and I (to cry quittance with it) care as little for the world.

<sup>{a}</sup> Of or pertaining to the antipodes; situated on the opposite side of the globe. (ED)

Ver. 15. For in Christ Jesus] That is, in the kingdom of Christ.

But a new creature] Either a new man, or no man.

Ver. 16. According to this rule] viz. Of the new creature. Or the doctrine of this Epistle.

Peace be on them] Not only in them, or with them, but "on them," maugre the malice of earth and hell.

Ver. 17. From henceforth let no man] Here he takes upon him as an apostle, and speaks with authority, Σεμῶς καὶ δειῶς.

I bear in my body the marks] As scars of honour. Paul had been whipped, stocked, stoned, &c. The marks of these he could better boast of than those false apostles of their circumcision. And hereby it appeared that he refused not, as they did, to suffer persecution for the cross of Christ. In the year 1166, the Synod held at Oxford in the reign of Henry II banished out of England 30 Dutch doctors (which taught the right use of marriage, and of the sacraments), after they had first stigmatized or branded them with hot irons. (Alsted Chron.) John Clerk of Melden, in France, being for Christ's sake whipped three different days, and afterwards having a mark set in his forehead, as a note of infamy, his mother beholding it (though his father was an adversary) encouraged her son, crying with a loud voice, Vivat Christus eiusque insignia, "Blessed be Christ, and welcome be these prints and marks of Christ." The next year after, sc. A. D. 1524, he brake the images without the city, which his superstitious countrymen were to worship the next day. For the which he was apprehended, and had his right hand cut off, his nose pulled off with pincers, both his arms and both his breasts torn with the same instrument; and after all he was burned at a stake. In his greatest torments he pronounced that of the Psalmist, "Their idols are silver and gold, the works of men's hands," &c. (Scultet. Annul.) I conclude this discourse with that saying of Pericles, "It is not gold, precious stones, statues, that adorns a soldier, but a torn buckler, a cracked helmet, a blunt sword, a scarred face." Of these Biron, the French marshal, boasted at his death. And Sceva is renowned for this, that at the siege of Dyrrachium, he so long alone resisted Pompey's army, that he had 220 darts sticking in his shield, and lost one of his eyes, and yet gave not over till Caesar came to his rescue. {a} Mr Prinne's Stigmata Laudis are better known than that they need here to be related.

{a} Densamque ferens in pectore silvam. Lucan.

Ver. 18. Be with your spirit] Spirituals are specially to be desired for ourselves and ours. Caetera aut aderunt, aut non oberunt. Other things we shall either have, or not want, but be as well without them.

Ephesians

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. To the saints—to the faithful] Fitly; for it is by faith that we become saints, #Ac 15:9.

Ver. 2. Grace be to you, and peace] These go fitly together; because we must seek our peace in the free grace and favour of God. The ark and mercy seat were never sundered.

Ver. 3. Blessed be God] Gratiae cessat decursus, ubi gratiarum recursus. A thankful man shall abound with blessings.

With all spiritual blessings] εν παση ευλογια πνευματικη, wisdom, prudence, &c., #Eph 1:8, a Benjamin's portion, a goodly heritage; called here spiritual blessing in the singular. All, and yet but one blessing; to note that spiritual blessings are so knit together, that they all make up but one blessing; and where God gives one, he gives all.

Ver. 4. He hath chosen us in him] Christ was mediator therefore from eternity, viz. by virtue of that human nature which he should assume.

That we should be holy] God elected us as well to the means as to the end. Note this against libertines. For as they {#Ac 27:31} could not come safe to land that left the ship; so neither can men come to heaven but by holiness. Cyrus was moved to restore the captivity by finding himself before appointed to this glorious service 170 years before he was born, #Isa 44:28. Should not we likewise be excited to good works by this that we were elected to them?

Without blame] Or blot, #Eph 5:27. Absque querela, #Lu 1:6.

Before him] i.e. In purity of heart, #2Ki 20:3.

In love] In sanctity of life.

Ver. 5. Having predestinated us] Interpreters have observed that this word that signifies to predestinate is but six times to be found in the New Testament (never in the Old), being referred but twice to things, #Ac 4:28 1Co 2:7, four times to persons, #Ro 8:29,30 Eph 1:5,11, and never applied to reprobates, but to elect persons only. Howbeit divines under predestination do usually consider the decree both of election and reprobation. The doctrine hereof men should not adventure to teach till they have well learned and digested it. In the year 1586, Jacobus Andreas, the Lutheran, and Theodore Beza, conferred and disputed for eight days' time at Montpelier: the issue of which conference was unhappy, for from that time forward the doctrine of predestination was much misused and exagitated. (Alsted. Chron.)

Ver. 6. To the praise of the glory] This is the end whereunto it is destined; and hence it is called predestination. Note here, that all the causes of predestination are merely without us. The efficient, God; the material, Christ; the formal, the good pleasure of his will; the final, the praise of God's glorious grace.

Wherein he hath made us accepted] Gr. εχαριτωσεν, He hath ingratiated us, he hath justified us, made us gracious in his beloved Son our Mediator, gratificavit. And although there be an inequality of expressions in duty, quoad nos, in us, yet there is a constancy of worth and intercession by Christ, propter nos, for us. Pareus rendereth these words thus, Nos sibi gratis effecit gratos, He hath freely made us well thought of.

Ver. 7. In whom we have redemption] As captives ransomed at a price. What this price was, see #1Pe 1:19. Should not Christ therefore reap the travails of his soul? #Isa 53:11,12

The forgiveness of our sins] This David counted his crown, and prized it above his imperial diadem, #Ps 103:3,4.

Ver. 8. In all wisdom and prudence] That properly respecteth contemplation, this action. Socrates made no distinction between them. For, said he, who so knoweth good to practise it, and evil to avoid it, he is a man truly wise and prudent.

Ver. 9. The mystery of his will] That is, the gospel, a mystery both to men, #1Co 2:8, and angels, #Eph 3:10.

Ver. 10. That in the dispensation] God is the best economic; his house is exactly ordered for matter of good husbandry, οικονομια. "Dispensation of the fulness of time" is (by a metonymy <sup>{a}</sup> of the adjunct) put for "fulness of times," wisely dispensed. (Bain.)

Gather together in one] Gr. ανακεφαλαιωσασθαι, recapitulate, reduce all to a head, recollect, to restore all things, and bring them to their primitive perfection.

Both which are in heaven] The crowned saints, and perhaps the glorious angels, who (according to some divines) being in themselves changeable creatures (and therefore called Shinan, that is, mutable, #Ps 68:17), receive confirmation by Christ, so that they cannot leave their first station, as did the apostate angels. Others think that the angels stand not by means of Christ's mediation, but of God's eternal election, and are therefore called the elect angels.

{a} A figure of speech which consists in substituting for the name of a thing the name of an attribute of it or of something closely related. (ED)

Ver. 11. We have obtained inheritance] Or we are taken into the Church, as magistrates were by lot into their office. Or we are made God's inheritance, as #De 32:9. It imports our free and unexpected vocation. In sortem adsciti sumus, εκκληρωθημεν; we were sorted out, singled out for a picked peculiar people.

After the counsel of his own will] God doth all by counsel, and ever hath a reason of his will, which though we see not for the present, we shall at the last day. Meanwhile submit.

Ver. 12. Who first trusted] It is a singular honour to be first in so good a matter. Hope is here put for faith, whereof it is both the daughter and the nurse.

Ver. 13. After that ye believed] They, 1. Heard. 2. Believed. 3. Were sealed, i.e. full assured. Assurance is God's seal; faith is our seal God honours our sealing to his truth by his sealing by his Spirit. We yield first the consent and assent of faith, and then God puts his seal to the contract. There must be the bargain before the earnest.

Ver. 14. Which is the earnest] Not the pawn, but the earnest, Quia pignus redditur, arrha retinetur; saith Jerome. A pawn is to be returned again, but an earnest is part of the whole sum, and assures it. We here have eternal life, 1. In pretio; In reward, 2. In promisso; In promise, 3. In primitiis, In the firstfruits.

Ver. 15. Your faith in the Lord Jesus] Love is the fruit of faith, therefore the apostles pray for increase of faith, that they might be able seven times a day to forgive an offending brother, #Lu 17:5.

{See Trapp on "Lu 17:5"}

Ver. 16. Making mention of you] Whether a minister shall do more good to others by his prayers or preaching, I will not determine (saith a grave divine), but he shall certainly by his prayers reap more comfort to himself.

Ver. 17. The Father of glory] That is, the glorious Father, #Ac 7:2. Chrysostom expounds it the Father of Christ, as #Eph 1:3.

The Spirit of wisdom and revelation] So called, because he revealeth unto us God's depths, and reads us his riddles, #1Co 2:9-16. He enlightens both the organ and object; he anoints the eyes with eyesalve, and gives both sight and light. (Saint's Progress, by Dr Taylor.)

Ver. 18. The glory of his inheritance] The glory of heaven is inconceivable, #Re 21, search is made through all the bowels of the earth for something to shadow it by. No natural knowledge can be had of the third heaven, nor any help by human arts, as Aristotle acknowledges. The glory thereof is fitter to be believed than possible to be discoursed.

Ver. 19. And what is the exceeding] Here is a most emphatic heap of most divine and significant words to express that which can never sufficiently be conceived or uttered. A sixfold gradation the apostle useth to show what a power God puts forth in working the grace of faith. Indeed this power is secret, and like that of the heavens upon our bodies; which (saith one) is as strong as that of medicine, &c., yet so sweet, and so secretly insinuating itself with the principles of nature, that as for the conveyance of it, it is insensible, and hardly differenced from that of the principles of nature in us; therefore the apostle prayeth for these Ephesians here, that their eyes may be enlightened to see the power that wrought in them, &c.

Ver. 20. Which he wrought in Christ] God puts forth the same almighty power in quickening the heart by faith, that he did in raising up his Son Christ from the dead; it must needs then be more than a moral suasion that he useth. Christ wrought the centurion's faith, as God; he wondered at it, as man. God wrought, and man marvelled; he did both, to teach us where to bestow our wonder.

Ver. 21. Far above all principality] Quantum inter stellas luna minores. Oh, do but think with thyself (saith oue), though it far pass the reach of any mortal thought, what an infinite, inexplicable happiness it will be to look for ever upon the glorious body of Jesus Christ, shining with incomprehensible beauty; and to consider that even every vein of that blessed body bled to bring thee to heaven; and that it being with such excess of glory hypostatically united to the second person in Trinity, hath honoured and advanced thy nature above the brightest cherub.

To be the head over all things] That is, all persons, all the elect, as #Ga 3:22. Christ is head over angels too, but in another sense than over the Church: viz. 1. As God, he giveth them whatsoever they are or have. 2. As Mediator also, he maketh use of their service for the safety and salvation of the Church. The holy angels are great friends to the Church, but not members of it; "For Christ took not on him the nature of angels, but the seed of Abraham," #Heb 2:16. Besides "he sanctified his Church, and washed it with his blood," #Eph 5:26. But this he did not for the angels, &c. {See Trapp on "Eph 1:10"}

Ver. 23. The fulness of him] That is, of Christ, who having voluntarily subjected himself to be our Head, accounts not himself complete without his members. In which respect we have the honour of making Christ perfect as the members do the body.

That filleth all in all] Not only all the saints, but all of the saints; all their capacities, all their powers, parts, desires, endeavours. Thus he filleth παντα, εν πασι, all, and in all ordinances, occurrences, providences, relations, comforts, &c.

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. Who were dead] Natural men are living carcasses, walking sepulchres of themselves. In most families it is, as once it was in Egypt, #Ex 12:30, no house wherein there is not one, nay, many dead corpses. Howbeit, the natural man, though he be theologically dead, yet is ethically alive, being to be wrought upon by arguments; hence, #Ho 11:4 "I drew them by the cords of a man," that is, by reason and motives of love, befitting the nature of a man. So the Spirit and Word work upon us still as men by rational motives, setting before us life and good, death and evil.

Ver. 2. Wherein ye walked] Hence, #Ac 14:16; sin is called a way, but it leads to the chambers of death.

According to the course of this world] The mundaneity or worldliness of the world (as the Syriac rendereth it), which is wholly set upon wickedness (as Aaron saith of his worldlings, #Ex 32:22), and takes no care for the world to come.

According to the prince, &c.] The devil, by whom wicked men are acted and agitated. Gratian was out in saying that Satan is called prince of the world, as a king of chess, or as the cardinal Ravenna, only by derision. Evil men set him up for their sovereign, and are wholly at his beck and obedience.

The spirit that now worketh] As a smith worketh in his forge, an craftsman in his shop. A natural man as he is the heir of original and father of actual sin, so his soul and all the powers thereof are but Satan's shop of sins; his body and all the parts thereof, tools of sin; his life, and all his actions of both soul and body, a trade of sin, by the same reason.

Ver. 3. Among whom also we all, &c.] Let the best look back often on what they were before calling, that they may thankfully cry out with Iphicrates, εἰς οἴων εἰς οἴα, from what misery to what dignity are we advanced!

Fulfilling the desires] Gr. the wills of the flesh. Now therefore we must as diligently fulfil not the will, but the wills of God, as David did, #Ac 13:22.

The children of wrath] De ires. Gregory the Great said of the English boys that were presented to him, Angli quasi Angeli, English just as Angels. And demanding further what province they were of in this island, it was returned, that they were called De ires; which caused him again to repeat the word, and to say, that it were great pity but that by being taught the gospel, they should be saved de ira Dei, from the wrath of God. (Abbot's Geog.) Whereunto we are subject, even as in nature a child is to the commands and restraints of his father; being damnati priusquam nati, as Augustine hath it, damned ere born into the world.

Ver. 4. But God, who is rich in mercy] Such a mercy as rejoiceth against judgment, as a man against his adversary which he hath subdued, #Jas 2:13.

Ver. 5. Hath quickened, &c.] The very first stirrings in the womb of grace are precious to God; he blesseth our very buds, #Isa 44:3, according to the Geneva translation.

Even when we were dead] This is again repeated, because hardly believed. We are apt to conceit better of ourselves than there is cause for, and can hardly be persuaded that we are dead in sins and trespasses, and lie rotting and stinking in the graves of corruption, much worse than Lazarus did after he had lain four days in his sepulchre. We would be sorry but our penny should be as good silver as another's, and are ready, with the Pharisee, to set up our counter for a thousand pound. In fine, a dead woman we say must have four to carry her forth. A man shall have much ado to persuade the merry Greeks of this world, but that they have the only life of it, and that others are dead in comparison of them. Hence this iteration of the blow upon the natural man, to knock him down dead, as it were, to bring him to Paul's pass, #Ro 7:9.

Ver. 6. And made us sit together] We have taken up our rooms beforehand in heaven, whereunto we have just right upon earth by virtue of the union, the ground of communion, #1Jo 5:12. He that hath the Son hath life; he hath possession of it, as by turf and twig.

Ver. 7. In his kindness toward us] We come not to the knowledge of God but by his works. And even this way of knowing him we naturally abuse to idolatry.

Ver. 8. For by grace ye are saved] So #Eph 2:5, and everywhere almost St Paul is a most constant preacher of the grace of God, as Chrysostom styleth him. Sub laudibus naturae latent inimici gratiae, saith Augustine. The patrons of man's free will are enemies to God's free grace.

Ver. 9. Lest any man should boast] As that fool did that said, Caelum gratis non accipiam, I will not have heaven but at a rate. (Vega.) Non sic Deos coluimus, aut sic vivimus, ut ille nos vinceret, said the emperor Antoninus Philosophus. We have not so lived and deserved of God that the enemy should vanquish us.

Ver. 10. For we are his workmanship] ποτημα, his artificial facture, or creature, that wherein he hath showed singular skill, by erecting the glorious fabric of the new man.

Created—to good works] In the year 1559 there was published a paradox, that good works are pernicious to salvation of men's souls. David George, the broacher of this heresy, was dug up and burnt at Basil.

God hath before ordained] i.e. By his eternal decree. Our vivification then is not a work of yesterday; but such as God hath with singular complacency contemplated from all eternity, rejoicing in that habitable part of his earth, #Pr 8:31.

Ver. 11. Who are called uncircumcision] In great scorn and reproach, as #1Sa 17:26. Howbeit unregenerate Israel was to God as Ethiopia, #Am 9:7. And Jether, by nature an Ishmaelite, #1Ch 7:17, was for his faith and religion called an Israelite, #2Sa 17:25.

Ver. 12. Strangers from the covenant] The saints only are heirs to the promises; but the devil sweeps all the wicked, as being out of the covenant. They stuff themselves with promises, till they have made them a pillow for sin, #De 29:19. Sed praesumendo sperant, et sperando pereunt.

Having no hope] But such as will one day hop headless; such as will serve them as Absalom's mule served her master, when she left him hanging by the head between heaven and earth, as rejected of both.

Without God in the world] Because without a teaching priest, and without law, #2Ch 15:3. As it is said of the poor Brazilians at this day, that they are sine fide, sine rege, sine lege, without faith, without a king, without law. This was the case of our pagan predecessors.

Ver. 13. Are made nigh by the blood] Christ hath paved us a new and living way to the throne of God's grace by his own most precious blood. Oh, happy lapidi pavium! jewel of the peacock. Oh, Golgotha become our Gabbatha! #Joh 19:13,17.

Ver. 14. For he is our peace] That is, our peace maker and peace matter. {a} When he was born, there was among all nations a general

aut pax, aut pactio, either peace or an agreement for peace, as Florus observeth. When he took his name, he would not have it either entirely Hebrew, as Jesus, or entirely Greek, as Christ, but both Jesus and Christ, to show (saith one) that he is our peace that hath reconciled two into one, &c.

{a} ειρηνη παρα το εις εν ειρειν.

Ver. 15. Having abolished in his flesh] That is, by his death in the flesh, #Col 1:22. At which time the veil rent, and the ceremonies died, only they were to be honourably buried.

For to make in himself] Gr. "to create"; sc. by regeneration, #Ga 6:15. So by conjoining he newly created them, and by newly creating he conjoined them.

Ver. 16. In one body] Ubi igitur Separatistae? Therefore, where are the separatists? saith one. All other sins destroy the Church consequentially; but division and separation demolish it directly.

Having slain the enmity] Not the ceremonies only, as #Eph 2:15, but sin, that great makebate (mischief-maker), that sets God at odds with his own creature.

Ver. 17. To them that were nigh] That is, "the children of Israel, a people near unto him," #Ps 148:14.

Ver. 18. We both have an access] With good assurance of success. The Persian kings held it a piece of their silly glory to hold off their best friends, who might not come near them but upon special licence, #Es 4:11. Not so our king. "Oh, come, for the Master calleth thee!"

Ver. 19. Fellow citizens with the saints] Paul, as a citizen of Rome, escaped whipping, #Ac 22:6; we, as citizens with the saints, escape hell tortures and torments.

Ver. 20. Upon the foundation] Foundation is taken either for Christ, #1Co 3:11 Mt 16:16, or the doctrine of the Scriptures which teach salvation only by Jesus Christ, as here and #Re 21:14.

Ver. 21. Fitly framed together] Or, perfectly joined together by the cement of the Holy Spirit, working in the saints faith in Christ and love one toward another, which the apostle calleth the bond of perfection.

Ver. 22. For a habitation of God, &c.] The Father makes choice of this house, the Son purchaseth it, the Holy Ghost taketh possession of it. This happiness he best understandeth that most feeleth. The cock on the dunghill knows it not.

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. For this cause] To wit, that you may be a habitation of God, through the Spirit.

I Paul, the prisoner] I hold not St Paul so happy for his rapture into Paradise (saith Chrysostom upon this text) as for his imprisonment for Christ.

Ver. 2. Of the dispensation] Gr. economy. The Church is God's house, #1Ti 3:15. Paul was faithful therein as a steward, #Mt 24:45.

Ver. 3. As I wrote before in few] sc. #Eph 1:9 2:3, &c. Fulness of matter in fewness of words. This is the Scripture's precellency above all human writings.

Ver. 4. My knowledge in the mystery] The highest point of heavenly learning; and hereby he proveth his calling to the ministry. The priest's lips should both preserve knowledge and present it to the people, to give them the knowledge of salvation by the remission of their sins, #Mal 2:7 Lu 1:77. An ass might not be coupled with an ox in ploughing. No ignorant doltish ass may plough in God's field, the Church; such as was that silly soul, who coming to be ordained, and being asked by the bishop, Esne dignus? answered, No, my lord, I shall dine anon with your men.

Ver. 5. Was not made known] sc. So clearly and particularly. Peter himself could hardly be persuaded to it, #Ac 10:14 11:2-4.

Ver. 6. Gentiles should be fellowheirs] Co-heirs, concorporate, and consorts; three sweet societies, the former founded upon the two latter.

Ver. 7. By the effectual working, &c.] Enabling me to accept and improve that gift of God's grace; whereunto I should otherwise turn not the palm, but the backside of the hand.

Ver. 8. Less than the least] Great Paul is least of saints, last of apostles, greatest of sinners. The best balsams sink to the bottom, the goodliest buildings have lowest foundations; the heaviest ears of grain hang downward; so do the boughs of trees that are best laden.

{a} Ignatius in his epistles saith, I salute you who am ultimus, the last and least of all others. So in another epistle, Tantillitas nostra, our meanness.

The unsearchable riches] Gr. ανεξιχνιαστων. Not to be traced out. Should not ministers be made welcome that come to men on such golden messages? In Christ are riches of justification, #Tit 2:14; sanctification, #Php 4:12,13; consolation, #2Co 12:9; glorification, #1Pe 1:5.

{a} Opulentissima metalla, quorum in alto latent venae. Sen.

Ver. 9. And to make all men see] Gr. to illighten them, far more than the preaching of the prophets could, #2Pe 1:19. To us now is a great light sprung up, #Mt 4:16.

The fellowship] οικονομια. Or (as some copies have it) the dispensation.

Who created all things] i.e. Restored, repaired. Hence gospel days are called the world to come, #Heb 2:5.

Ver. 10. Might be known by the Church] As by a glass or theatre.

The manifold wisdom, &c.] Gr. πολυποικιλος, that hath abundance of curious variety in it, such as is seen in the best pictures or textures. This the very angels look intently into (as the cherubims in the tabernacle did into the mercyseat), and are much amused and amazed thereat. They see then man's salvation by Christ is a plot of God's own devising. Their experimental knowledge is much increased by their observation of God's daily dealing with his people.

Ver. 11. According to the eternal purpose] Of calling and saving the Gentiles by Christ; a secret that the angels themselves could not understand till the afore appointed time came.

Ver. 12. Boldness and access] True peace draws men to God, false drives them from God. Uprightness hath boldness, serenity hath security. The word προσαγωγή, rendered access, signifies such an access as is by manuduction. As Isaac took Rebecca, or as Joseph took his two sons Manasseh and Ephraim by the hand and presented them to Jacob; so doth Christ take his people and lead them into his Father's presence.

Ver. 13. Wherefore I desire] αιτουμαι, mendico. Or, I beg of God, as one would do an alms, #Ac 3:2, humbly, heartily. And here the apostle returns to his former discourse, after a long digression, #Eph 3:2 to #Eph 3:13.

At my tribulations for you] For your sakes am I maliced and molested by the Jews; by whose means also I am now a prisoner.

Ver. 14. For this cause] sc. That ye faint not, but gather strength.

I bow my knees] A most seemly and suitable gesture, usual among all nations but Turks, who kneel not, nor uncover the head at prayer, as holding those postures unmanly. And yet they pray five times every day (saith Mr Terry), what occasion soever they have either by profit or pleasure to divert them.

Ver. 15. Of whom the whole family] Or, paternity; πατρια, parentela. God is the only Father, to speak properly, #Mt 23:9. The Father of all the fatherhood in heaven and earth.

Ver. 16. According to the riches of his glory] That is, of his grace; so #2Co 3:18. {See Trapp on "2Co 3:18"}

Ver. 17. That Christ may dwell] As the sun dwells in the house by his beams. Faith fetcheth Christ into the heart, as into his habitation; and if he dwell there, he is bound to all reparations.

Ver. 18. The breadth and length, &c.] God's mercy hath all the dimensions. "Thy mercy, O God, reacheth to the heavens," #Ps 36:5. There is the height of it. "Great is thy mercy toward me, and thou hast delivered my soul from the lowest hell," #Ps 86:13. There is the depth of his mercy. "The earth is full of thy goodness." There is the breadth of it. "All the ends of the earth have seen thy salvation." There is the length of it. The apostle sets out Christ's love with the four dimensions of the cross; to put us in mind (say the ancient writers) that upon the extent of the tree was the most exact love with all the dimensions in this kind represented, that ever was.

Ver. 19. With, all the fulness of God] That is, of Christ's diffusive fulness, in whom the Godhead dwelt bodily, and in whom we are complete, #Col 2:9,10.

And to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge] Chrysostom speaking of this love of God in Christ, Oh, saith he, I am like a man digging in a deep spring; I stand here, and the water riseth upon me; I stand there, and still the water riseth upon me. But though we cannot ever know it all, yet we may and must grow in the knowledge of this love of Christ, in the searching of this sea that hath neither bank nor bottom; and where, as in the salt waters, "the deeper the sweeter."

Ver. 20. Exceeding abundantly] Gr. υπερ εκ περισσου, more than exceedingly or excessively. God hath not only a fulness of abundance, but of redundance; of plenty, but of bounty. He is often better to us than our prayers.

According to the power] The apostle begins his prayer with mention of God's fatherly mercy; he shuts it up with a description of his power. These two, God's might and God's mercy, are the Jachin and Boaz, the two main pillars of a Christian's faith, whereon it rests in prayer.

Ver. 21. Glorious in the church of Christ] Who is the refulgency of his Father's glory, #Heb 1:3.

Chapter 4

Ver. 1. Worthy of the vocation] There is a το πρεπον, a seemliness appertaining to each calling; so here. We must walk nobly and comfortably, as becometh the heirs of God and coheirs of Christ. Scipio, when a harlot was offered him, answered, Vellem, si non essem Imperator; I would if I were not general of the army. Antigonus being invited to a place where a notable harlot was to be present, asked counsel of Menedemus, what he should do? He bade him only remember that he was a king's son. So let men remember their high and heavenly calling, and do nothing unworthy of it. Luther counsels men to answer all temptations of Satan with this only, Christianus sum, I am a Christian. They were wont to say of cowards in Rome, There is nothing Roman in them: of many Christians we may say, There is nothing Christian in them. It is not amiss before we be serviceable for the world, to put Alexander's question to his followers, that persuaded him to run at the Olympic games, Do kings use to run at the Olympics? Every believer is God's firstborn; and so higher than the kings of the earth, #Ps 89:27. He must therefore carry himself accordingly, and not stain his high blood.

Ver. 2. With all lowliness and meekness] These are virtutes collectaneae, as Bernard calleth them, a pair of twin sisters, never asunder.

Ver. 3. The unity of the Spirit] That is, unanimity; this keeps all together which else will shatter and fall asunder. The daughter of dissension is dissolution, saith Nazianzen.

Endeavouring] σπουδαζοντες, Or using all possible carefulness: this imports, 1. The necessity; 2. Difficulty of the duty. Satan will endeavour, by making division, to get dominion.

Ver. 4. In one hope of your calling] That is, unto one inheritance, which we all hope for. Fall not out therefore by the way, as Joseph charged his brethren.

Ver. 5. One baptism] The author to the Hebrews speaketh of baptisms, #Eph 6:2. But either he puts the plural for the singular; or else he meaneth it of the outward and inward washing, which the schools call baptismum fluminis et flaminis, the baptism of water and fire. {See Trapp on "Mt 3:11"}

Ver. 6. One God and Father of all] Have we not all one Father? saith Malachi. {#Mat 2:10} Why then dissent and jar we? How is it that these many ones here instanced unite us not? "My dove, mine undefiled is but one," #So 6:9.

Ver. 7. According to the measure] And may not Christ do with his own as he listeth? Those of greater gifts are put upon hotter service, στεργε παροντα.

Ver. 8. He led captivity captive, &c.] As in the Roman triumphs, the victor ascended up to the Capitol in a chariot of state, the prisoners following on foot with their hands bound behind, and they threw certain pieces of coin abroad, to be picked up by the common people; so Christ in the day of his solemn inauguration into his heavenly kingdom, triumphed over sin, death, and hell, #Col 2:15, and gave gifts to men.

And gave gifts unto men] The Hebrew hath it, #Ps 68:18 "Thou receivest, gifts for men." Christ received them that he might give them, and said, "It is a more blessed thing to give than to receive." The Psalmist adds, "Ever for the rebellious." To them also Christ gives common gifts, for the benefit of his people. Augustus in his solemn feast gave gifts; to some gold, to others trifles. So God in his ordinances, to some saving grace, to others common grace, and with this they rest content.

Ver. 9. Into the lower parts] That is, into his mother's womb; according to #Ps 139:15 "I was curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth," i.e. in the womb, where God formed and featured me: like as curious workmen, when they have some choice piece in hand, they perfect it in private, and then bring it forth to light for men to gaze at.

Ver. 10. Far above all heavens] That is, above all visible heavens, into the third heaven; not in the Utopia of the Ubiquitaries.

That he might fill all things] viz. With the gifts of his Holy Spirit; for the further he is from us in his flesh, the nearer by his Spirit; he is more efficacious absent than present.

Ver. 11. Some pastors and teachers] Distinct officers, #Ro 12:7,8, yet one man may be both, #1Co 12:28,29. The essential differences between pastors and teachers in each congregation is much denied by many learned and godly divines.

Ver. 12. For the perfecting of the saints] καταρτισμον, for the jointing of them whom the devil hath dislocated.

Ver. 13. Unto the measure of the stature] Or age; that age wherein Christ filleth all in all, as #Eph 3:19. The saints (say some) shall rise again in that vigour of age that a perfect man is at about 33 years old, each in their proper sex; whereunto they think the apostle here alludeth. In heaven (say others) we shall all have an equal grace, though not an equal glory.

Ver. 14. Be no more children] But young men, #1Jo 2:14, strong men. Many men's heads today are so big (like children that have the rickets) that all the body fareth the worse for it.

Tossed to and fro] As a feather or froth upon the waves, whirred about with every wind of doctrine; unstable souls, as St Peter calls them; simple, that believe everything, as Solomon hath it; giddy hearers, that have no mould but what the next teacher casteth them into, being blown like glasses into this or that shape at the pleasure of his breath.

By the sleight of men] Gr. εν τη κυβηα, by men's cogging of a die, the usual trade of cheaters and false gamesters.

Whereby they lie in wait to deceive] Gr. Unto a method of deceiving. The devil and his disciples are notable method mongers, so as to deceive, if it were possible, the very elect; but that they cannot do fundamentally, finally, #Mt 24:24. {See Trapp on "Mt 24:24"}

Ver. 15. But speaking the truth] Or, doing the truth, as the Vulgate hath it, ἀληθευοντες. Truthifying, or following the truth, as one rendereth it. St John bids, love in truth, #1Jo 3:18. St Paul, speak or do the truth in love. And again, let all your things be done in love.

Ver. 16. Compacted by that, &c.] The saints are knit unto Christ by his Spirit, as fast as the sinews of his blessed body to the bones, the flesh to the sinews, the skin to the flesh. The erroneous are like a bone out of joint; it will cost many a hearty groan before they be reduced to their right place.

Unto the edifying of itself in love] Our souls thrive and are edified as love is continued and increased. Nothing more furthereth growth in grace and power of godliness in any place or person, observe it where and when you will.

Ver. 17. This I say therefore] Matters of great importance must be urged and pressed with greatest vehemence.

As other Gentiles walk] Singular things are expected from saints; who are therefore worse than others, because they should be better.

Ver. 18. Having the understanding darkened] By the devil's black hand held before their eyes, #2Co 4:4. {See Trapp on "2Co 4:4"}

Alienated from the life of God] That is, from a godly life, which none can live but those that partake of the divine nature, #2Pe 1:4.

Because of the blindness] Gr. πωρωσιν, callum obductum. Hardness, brawniness, a hoof upon their hearts, corneas fibras, brawny breasts, horny heart-strings. The Greek word imports a metaphor from the hard hand of hardest labourers. They say in philosophy, that the foundation of natural life is feeling; no feeling, no life: and that the more quick and nimble the sense of feeling is in a man, the better is his constitution. Think the same we may of life spiritual.

Ver. 19. Who being past feeling] Under a dead and dedolent disposition, being desperately sinful. Some there are of cauterized consciences, that, like devils, will have nothing to do with God, because loth to be tormented before their time. They feeling such horrible hard hearts, and privy to such notorious sins, they cast away souls and all for lust, and so perish woefully, because they lived wickedly; having through custom in evil contracted such a hardness, as neither ministry, nor misery, nor miracle, nor mercy could possibly mollify. As ducklings dive at any little thing thrown by a man at them, yet shrink not at the heaven's great thunder; so is it with these, till at length they become like the smith's dog, whom neither the hammers above him nor the sparks of fire falling round about him can awake.

Have given themselves over] They make it their felicity to pass their time lasciviously, as though they were born (as Boccas saith of himself) per l'amore dalle dame, for the love of women.

Ver. 20. But ye have not so learned Christ] Caracalla never minded any good, quia id non didicerat (saith Dio), quod ipse fatebatur; because he had never learned it, as himself confessed. One main cause of Julian's apostasy were his two heathenish tutors, Libanius and Jamblichus, from whom he drank in great profaneness. Christians cannot say but they have had the best teacher; they must therefore walk up to their principles lest they shame their profession, discredit their Master, who seemeth to say to them, as Samson once did to his brethren, Do not you bind me; the Philistines I care not for. Do not you dishonour me, &c.

Ver. 21. Ye have heard him, &c.] When Christ speaks once, we must hear him twice, as David did, #Ps 62:11, to wit, by an after deliberate meditation; for otherwise we learn nothing.

Ver. 22. That ye put off, &c.] As the beggar puts off his rags, as the master puts off his bad servant, as the porter puts off his burden, as the husband puts off his lewd wife, as the serpent his slough, or as the captive maid, when she was to be married, put off the garments of her captivity, #De 21:13.

The old man which is corrupt] Sin is said to be the old man, because it lives in man so as sin seems to be alive and the man dead; and because God will take notice of nothing in the sinner but his sin.

According to the deceitful lusts] Sin, though at first it fawn upon a man, yet in the end (with Cain's dog lying at the door) it will pluck out the very throat of his soul, if not repented of. Like the serpent, together with the embrace, it stings mortally. Hence the ruler's meat is called deceivable, #Pr 23:3. There being a deceitfulness in sin, #Heb 3:13, a lie in vanity, #Jon 2:8. Lust hath a deceit in it, as here. Ver. 23. In the spirit of your mind] That is, in the most inward and subtle parts of the soul, the bosom and bottom, the vis vivifica, and very quintessence of it. This he calls elsewhere the wisdom of the flesh, #Ro 8:7, that carnal reason, that, like an old beldam, is the mother and nurse of those fleshly lusts that fight against the soul. Ver. 24. Which after God is created] The new man is nothing else but the happy cluster of heavenly graces.

And true holiness] Or, holiness of truth. Opposite to that deceitfulness of lusts, #Eph 4:22.

Ver. 25. Wherefore putting away lying] A base tinkerly sin, as Plutarch calls it, shameful and hateful: therefore the liar denies his own lie, as ashamed to be taken with it. Cicero indeed alloweth his orator the liberty of a merry lie sometimes; but Vives utterly disliketh it in him at any time. <sup>{a}</sup> And the apostle, #Ga 1:10, shows that we must not speak truth to please men, much less lie; no, though we could win a soul by it, #Ro 3:7. Where then will the Jesuits appear with their piae fraudes, holy delusions, as they call them? and Jacobus de Voragine, that loud liar; with his golden legend? It were much to be wished that that golden age would return, that the argument might proceed, Sacerdos est, non fallit. Christianus est, non mentietur.

For we are members] Of the same holy society. Shall we not be true one to another? shall we not abhor sleights and slipperiness in contracts and covenants?

Ver. 26. Be angry and sin not] The easiest charge under the hardest condition that can be. Anger is a tender virtue, and must be warily managed. He that will be angry and not sin, let him be angry at nothing but sin.

Let not the sun go down] If ye have overshot in passion, let it not rest or roost in you, lest it become malice. Plutarch writeth that it was the custom of Pythagoras' scholars, however they had been at odds, jarring and jangling in their disputations, yet before the sun set to kiss and shake hands as they departed out of the school. <sup>{a}</sup> How many are there that professing themselves the scholars of Christ, do yet nevertheless not only let the sun go down, but go round his whole course, and can find no time from one end of the year to the other to compose and lay aside their discords! How should this fire be raked up when the curfew bell rings! William the Conqueror commanded that cover-few (curfew) bell. It were well that some were admonished every night to cover the fire of their passions, that their wrath might not be memor ira, unforgetable wrath, as Virgil hath it, and αειμνηστος, as that of the Athenians, who hated all barbarians, for the Persians' sake, and forbade them their sacrifices, as they used to do murderers. (Rous's Arch. Attic.) Leontius Patritius was one day extremely and unreasonably angry with John, Patriarch of Alexandria: at evening, the patriarch sent a servant to him with this message; "Sir, the sun is set"; upon which Patritius reflecting, and the grace of God making the impression deep, he threw away his anger, and became wholly subject to the counsel of the patriarch. (Taylor's Life and Death of Christ.)

Ver. 27. Neither give place, &c.] Vindictive spirits let the devil into their hearts; and though they defy him, and spit at him, yet they spit not low enough; for he is still at inn with them, as Mr Bradford speaketh. As the master of the pit often sets two cocks to fight together, to the death of both, and then, after mutual conquest, suppeth with both their bodies; so, saith Gregory, dealeth the devil with angry and revengeful men.

Ver. 28. Let him labour, working, &c.] This is the best remedy against poverty, which often prompts a man to theft, #Pr 30:9. <sup>{See Trapp on "Pr 30:9"}</sup> The Grand Turk himself must be of some trade (Peacham); and Seneca said he had rather be sick in his bed than idle. How much more should "all ours learn to maintain good works for necessary uses, that they be not unfruitful!" #Tit 3:14.

That he may have to give] Day labourers then must do somewhat for the poor. And indeed, alms should not be given until it "sweat in a man's hand," saith he, in the Book of Martyrs. Giles of Brussels gave away to the poor whatsoever he had that necessity could spare, and only lived by his science, which was that of a cutler. (Acts and Mon.)

Ver. 29. Let no corrupt communication] Gr. σαπρος. Rotten, putrid speech. A metaphor from rotten trees, or stinking flesh, or stinking breath. Shun obscene borbology and filthy speeches.

Ver. 30. And grieve not, &c.] As men in heaviness cannot despatch their work as they were wont; so neither doth the Spirit. if we grieve the Holy Ghost, how should we expect that he should comfort us? It is a foul fault to grieve a father; what then the Spirit? Delicata res est Spiritus Dei, saith Tertullian, God's Spirit is a delicate thing, and must not be vexed. "It is a holy thing, that Spirit of that God" (so the original hath it, το πνευμα το αγιον του Θεου), "whereby we are sealed," and so are declared to be the excellent ones of the earth; for whatsoever is sealed, that is excellent in its own kind, as #Isa 28:25, hordeum signatum, sealed barley, &c.

Ver. 31. Let all bitterness, &c.] If the godly man suddenly fall into bitter words, it maketh the Holy Ghost stir within him.

And clamour and evil speaking] These are as smoke to the eyes, and make the spirit ready to loathe and leave his lodging.

Be put away from you] When any lust ariseth, pray it down presently (saith one); for otherwise we are endangered by yielding to grieve, by grieving to resist, by resisting to quench, by quenching, maliciously to oppose the Spirit. Sin hath no bounds, but those which the Spirit puts, whom therefore we should not grieve.

Ver. 32. And be ye kind] χρηστοι. Sweet natured, facile, and fair conditioned; as Cranmer, whose gentleness in pardoning wrongs was such, as it grew to a common proverb, Do my Lord of Canterbury a displeasure, and then you may be sure to have him your friend while he liveth. He never raged so far with any of his household servants, as once to call the meanest of them varlet or knave in anger, much less to reprove a stranger with any reproachful word. Homo Φιλοξενος, nec minus Φιλολογος, saith Tremelius of him, and much more in praise of his courtesy and piety.

Chapter 5

Ver. 1. Be ye therefore followers] In forgiving one another.

As dear children] God hath but a few such children. {See Trapp on "Mt 5:45"} {See Trapp on "Mt 5:48"}

Ver. 2. Hath loved us, and hath given] When Christ wept for Lazarus, "Lo, how he loved him," said the Jews, #Joh 11:35,36. When he poured forth his soul for a drink offering for us, was not this a surer seal of his endeared love?

An offering and a sacrifice] By this to expiate our sins, by that to mediate and make request for us; and so to show himself a perfect High Priest.

Ver. 3. But fornication and all uncleanness] As standing in full opposition to that sweet smelling savour, #Eph 5:2, being no better than the corruption of a dead soul, the devil's excrement. That people fitly punished this filthy sin, who put the offenders' heads into the paunch of a beast where all the filth lieth, and so stifled them to death.

Let it not be once named] Much less acted as in stage plays. Ludi praebent semina nequitiae. (Ovid. Trist.) How Alipius was corrupted by them, St Austin tells us. How the youth of Athens, Plato complaineth. One of our countrymen professeth in print, that he found theatres to be the very hatchers of all wickedness, the brothels of baudery, the black blasphemy of the gospel, the devil's chair, the plague of piety, the canker of the commonwealth, &c. He instanceth on his knowledge, citizens' wives confessing on their death beds that they were so impoisoned at stage plays, that they brought much dishonour to God, wrong to their marriage beds, weakness to their wretched bodies, and woe to their undone souls. (Spec. Belli Sacri.) It was therefore great wisdom in the Lacedaemonians to forbid the acting of comedies or tragedies in their commonwealth, and that for this reason, lest either in jest or earnest anything should be said or done contrary to the laws in force among them. (Plutarch.) What a sad complaint was that of the apostle, #1Co 5:1, that that which was not so much as named among heathens was done by a Christian; whereas the rule of piety here is, that those sins should not be so much as named among Christians which are done by the Gentiles.

Ver. 4. Neither filthiness] Borborology (rumblings?), ribaldry, {a} the language of hell. Some men as ducks have their noses always guzzling in the gutter of obscene talk. Of Eckius' last book concerning priests' marriages, Melancthon saith, Non fuit Cygnea cantio, sed ultimus crepitus: Et sicut felis fugiens pedit, sic ille moriens hunc crepitum cecinit. Legi librum, subinde accipiens partem ad cloacam; alioqui non legissem. These filthy speakers make podicem ex ore, excrement from their mouth, as one phraseth it.

Nor jesting] Salt jests, scurrility, jocularity, dicacity, to the just grief or offence of another. This consists not with piety and Christian gravity. Aristotle useth the word ευτραπεια, here found in a good sense, for urbanity, facility, and facetiousness of speech, in a harmless way. But Jason in Pindarus saith, that he lived twenty years with his tutor Chiron, and never in all that time heard him speaking or acting ουτ εργον ουτ επος ευτραπελον, anything scurrilous or abusive to another. On the contrary, our Sir Thomas Moore never thought anything to be well spoken, except he had ministered some mock in the communication, saith Edward Hall the chronicler, who therefore seemeth to doubt whether to call him a foolish wise man or a wise foolish man. Quid nobis cum fabulis, cum risu? non solum profulos, sed etiam omnes iocos arbitror declinandos, saith Bernard. What have we to do with tales and jests? Tertullian saith he was Nulli rei natus nisi poenitentiae, born for nothing else but for repentance. Crede mihi, res severa est gaudium verum, saith Seneca, True mirth is a severe business.

Which are not convenient] τα μη ανηκοντα. As not conducing to the main end of our lives.

But rather giving of thanks] A special preservative against the former evils, the filth and power of those base vices. And the word rather imports an extraordinary earnestness to be used in giving thanks to God.

{a} Debauchery, lasciviousness, vice. Obs. CED

Ver. 5. Who is an idolater] Dancing about his golden calf, and saying to his wedge of silver, "Thou art my confidence," #Job

30:24; which yet shall prove but as Achan's wedge to cleave his soul in sunder, and as that Babylonish garment to be his winding sheet.

Ver. 6. Let no man deceive you] So as to make you think there is no such danger in fornication, covetousness, &c. There wanted not such proctors for hell in the primitive times, as may be gathered out of #2Pe 2:1-3 Jude 6-11. Against these he here cautioneth.

Ver. 7. Be not ye therefore partakers] Lest by infection of their sin ye come under infliction of their punishment. We are accountable as well for sins of communion as of commission; and he knew what he said, that prayed, From mine other men's sins, good Lord, deliver me. Evil men endanger good men as weeds the corn, as bad humours the blood, or an infected house the neighbourhood. And when an overflowing storm sweeps away the wicked, the tail of it may dash their best neighbours, #Zec 9:3. Hamath lay near to Damascus in place, and therefore partook with it in punishment.

Ver. 8. For ye were sometimes darkness] Which hath in it (as Mr Dugard well noteth): 1. Error. 2. Terror. 3. Inconsistency with light. 4. Impossibility of reducing itself to light.

But now are ye light] Semper in sole sita est Rhodos, saith Sylvius. The saints are always in the sunshine.

Walk as children of light] A godly man should be like a crystal glass with a light in the midst, which appeareth through every part thereof. He is in the light, and shall be more.

Ver. 9. For the fruit of the Spirit] Why grace is called fruit, see note: {See Trapp on "Ga 5:22"}

Ver. 10. Proving what is acceptable] By the practice of what you know. Let your knowledge and obedience run parallel, mutually transfusing life and vigour one into another.

Ver. 11. Have no fellowship] No needless society for fear of infection; get the wind of those stinking carcasses; "hate the garment spotted by the flesh," that is, avoid ill company (saith Perkins), as #Le 15:4. The Lacedaemonians would not allow a stranger to be with them more than three days; and shall we associate ourselves with such as are strangers to God?

Works of darkness] Work done in the dark must be undone again, or else we are sure to be thrust into outer darkness, where we shall never see light again till we see all the world on a light fire.

But rather reprove them] At least by your contrary courses, as Noah condemned the old world, by being righteous in his generation. #Re 14:1-5, those who stood with the Lamb, had his Father's name on their foreheads, led convincing lives: so did Luther, Bucer, Bradford, &c.

Ver. 12. For it is a shame] Sit honos auribus. Joannes a Casa so far forgot both honesty and nature, that he boasted openly of his beastly sodomy; yea, most impudently commended that odious sin in an Italian poem, set forth in print. Faber of Vienna, another filthy Papist, published such a stinking book that Erasmus thus wrote to him,

“Mente cares, si res agitur tibi seria: rursus Fronte cares, si sic ludis, amice Faber.”

Which are done of them in secret] Sin secretly committed shall be strangely discovered, either by the sinner himself, as Judas, or by his companions in evil. When the solder is once melted, this glass will fall in pieces, and all will come out.

Ver. 13. But all things that are, &c.] Or, But all these things, viz. these unfruitful works of darkness, while they are reprov'd or discovered by the light (viz. of the word, as #1Co 14:24 Heb 4:12), are made manifest; so that thereby they grow abashed and abased before God and men.

Ver. 14. Wherefore he saith] Or, the Scripture saith. See the like, #Jas 4:6 "But he giveth (or the Scripture giveth) more grace." It convinceth not only, but converteth; it discovereth not only, but cureth corrupt hearts. These waters of the sanctuary are healing, #Isa 9:2 26:19 60:1. Some there are that interpret this "he" of our Saviour Christ, and take this saying for a sentence of his; such as was that, #Ac 20:35. Others read, Therefore the light saith, &c.

Awake, thou that sleepest] Lex iabet, gratia iuvat: praecipit Deus quod ipse praestat, God giveth us to do what he biddeth us to do.

Ver. 15. See then that ye walk circumspectly] Precisely, exactly, accurately, by line and by rule, and as it were in a frame, striving to get up to the top of godliness, as the word importeth; to keep God's commandments to the utmost, to go to the extremity of it, ακριβως εις ακρον Βαινειν. Hereunto if we stand straightly, one may say safely, Lord, if I be deceived, thou and thy word have deceived me.

Not as fools] Christians must excel others, standing as standard bearers.

But as wise] Great need we have to fly to Christ, who dwells with prudence, #Pr 8, to stand upon our watch. (Σοφος ab Heb. Tsopheh. Speculator.) And when we walk, to tread gingerly, step warily; since as those funambulones, rope walkers (it is Tertullian's comparison), if we tread but one step awry, we are utterly gone.

Ver. 16. Redeeming the time] As wise merchants, trading for the most precious commodity, and taking their best opportunity. The common complaint is, We lack time; but the truth is, we do not so much lack it as waste it. Non parum habemus temporis, sed multum perdimus. (Sen.) The men of Issachar were in great account with David, because they had understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do, #1Ch 12:32. So are they in great account with God that regard and use the season of well doing. It is reported of holy Ignatius, that when he heard a clock strike, he would say, here is one hour more now past that I have to answer for. And of Mr Hooper the martyr, that he was spare of diet, sparer of words, and sparest of time; for he well knew that whereas of all other possessions a man might have two at once, he cannot have two moments of time at once, for any money.

Because the days are evil] Corrupted by the devil, who hath engrossed our time, and out of whose hands we must redeem time for holy uses and pious purposes.

Ver. 17. But understanding what] Drawing your knowledge into practice, as #Eph 5:10. For "the fear of the Lord, that is wisdom, and to depart from evil is understanding," #Job 28:28: where wisdom (proper to the understanding) is ascribed to the will, because practice should be joined to knowledge. Hence also, #Ec 10:2 "A wise man's heart is at his right hand," because his heart teacheth his hand to put things in practice.

Ver. 18. And be not drunk with wine] Nothing so opposite to an accurate life as drunkenness; which therefore is not specially prohibited in any one of the Ten Commandments (saith a divine) because it is not the single breach of any one, but in effect the violation of all and every one; it is no one, but all sins, the inlet and sluice to all other sins, and by them to the devil. Behemoth lieth in the fens, #Job 40:21, he finds no rest in dry places, sober souls, #Lu 11:24. Oh that our carousers were persuaded (as Mahomet told his followers) that in every grape there dwelt a devil.

Wherein is excess] Excessive drinking then is drunkenness; when as swine do their bellies, so men break their heads with filthy quaffing; and are besotted in their very parts, as a snuff of a candle in the socket, drowned in the tallow; a stench, but little or no light remains. Such a deep drunkard was Diotimus, surnamed Tundish, and young Cicero, surnamed Tricongius; and such are not a few in this day among us, to the great shame of our nation.

But be filled with the Spirit] Call for flagons of this holy wine, #So 2:5, that goeth down sweetly, causing the lips of those that are asleep to speak, #So 7:9. This is called by Luther, Crapula sacra, a spiritual surquedry <sup>{a}</sup> or surfeit.

Ver. 19. Speaking to yourselves, &c.] As drunkards sing and halloo over their cups in their goodfellow meetings; so in a sober sense, do you express your spiritual jollity in psalms, &c.

Melody in your hearts unto the Lord] This is the best tune to any psalm. Spiritual songs they are called, both because they are indited by the Spirit, and because they spiritualize us in the use of them.

Ver. 20. Giving thanks always] In our deepest miseries let us sing cheerfully, as Paul and Silas in the dungeon, as Philpot and his fellows in the coal house, as many martyrs in the flames, as Luther did in a great conflict with the devil: Venite, said he to his company, in contemptum diaboli Psalmum de profundis quatuor vocibus cantemus: Let us sing the 130th Psalm in despite of the devil. (John Manli. loc. com.) Happy was that tongue in the primitive times that could sound out aliquid Davidicum, anything of David's doing.

Ver. 21. Submitting yourselves] This is a general admonition to all inferiors, whose duties are afterwards described. Thus in the second table of the law, the fifth commandment for order and obedience is fitly premised to the following precepts.

In the fear of God] This frameth the heart to a ready and regular submission. Hence that saying of Luther, Primo praecepto reliquorum omnium observantia praecipitur, The first commandment includes the other nine.

Ver. 22. Wives, submit, &c.] This includes reverence, obedience, &c. God hath scattered the duties of husbands and wives up and down the Scriptures, that they may search, and by learning to be good husbands and wives, they may learn also to be good men and women.

As unto the Lord] Who taketh himself dishonoured by wives' disobedience. And though husbands may remit the offence done to them, yet they cannot remit God's offence, but there must be special repentance.

Ver. 23. For the husband is the head] And would it not be ill-favoured to see the shoulders above the head?

Ver. 24. Therefore as the Church] Denying herself to please Christ, making his will her law.

In everything] In all her husband's lawful commands and restraints. A wife should have no will of her own, but submit to her husband's; albeit there are those who merrily say that when man lost freewill, woman took it up.

Ver. 25. Husbands, love your wives] He saith not, rule over them (in answer to submit, #Eph 5:22), for this they can readily do without bidding; but love your wives, and so make their yoke as easy as may be. Columbae trahunt currum Veneris. Doves draw the charriot of Venus.

Ver. 26. That he might sanctify] The maids were first purified and perfumed before Ahasuerus chose one. But here it is otherwise. Sanctification is a fruit of justification. The Lord will not have a sluttish Church, and therefore he came not by blood only, but by water also, that clean water of his Spirit, whereby he washeth away the swinish nature of his saints, so that they desire no more to wallow in the mire.

Ver. 27. That he might present] As Isaac did his Rebecca, adorned with his jewels. See #Eze 16:14. Tales nos amat Deus, quales futuri sumus ipsius done, non quales sumus nostro merito, saith an ancient Council.

Ver. 28. As their own bodies] No man may hide himself from his own flesh at large, #Isa 58:7, that is, from his neighbour of the same stock; much less from a wife, which is such another as himself, #Ge 2:18, nay, his very self, as here.

Ver. 29. For no man ever hated] No man but a monk, who whips himself, or a mad man, #Mr 5:5, who cuts himself. It was the saying of the Emperor Aurelius, a wife is to be often admonished, sometimes reproved, but never beaten. And yet of the Russian women it is reported, that they love that husband best that beats them most, and that they think themselves else not regarded, unless two or three times a day well favouredly swaddled. Chrysostom saith, It is the greatest reproach in the world for a man to beat his wife.

But nourisheth it, and cherisheth it] Θαλπει. As the hen doth her chickens, or as the cock pigeon doth the eggs. {a} Contrariwise the magpie hunts away from his mate about autumn, lest he should be forced to keep her all the winter; and so becometh the hieroglyphic of an unkind husband.

Even as the Lord, the Church] Lo, this is the pattern of all true love, whether to ourselves or others.

Ver. 30. Of his flesh, and of his bones] While he that is joined to the Lord is one spirit, #1Co 6:17. This union is neither natural, nor corporal, nor political, nor personal, but mystical and spiritual; and yet it is no less true and real than that of God the Father and God the Son, #Joh 17:21,22. For as the Holy Ghost did unite in the Virgin's womb the Divine and human natures of Christ, and made them one person; by reason whereof Christ is of our flesh and of our bones; so the Spirit unites that person of Christ, his whole person, God-man, with our persons, by reason whereof we are of his flesh and of his bones.

Ver. 31. For this cause, &c.] {See Trapp on "Mt 19:5"} {See Trapp on "Ge 2:24"}

Shall be one flesh] By virtue of that covenant of God between married couples, #Pr 2:17, for he keepeth the bonds of wedlock.

Ver. 32. This is a great mystery] To wit, this mystical marriage with Christ. It passeth the capacity of man to understand it in the perfection of it. Preachers can make it known but in part, and hearers can but in part conceive it. Let us therefore wait for perfect understanding of it, till all things be perfected in Christ.

Ver. 33. Nevertheless] q.d. But that I may return to my former discourse, from the which I have somewhat digressed for your satisfaction.

See that she reverence] 1. In heart, as Sarah did Abraham, and she is crowned and chronicled for it, #1Pe 3:6 2. In her speeches both to him, and of him, as the spouse in the Canticles. 3. In all her gestures and deportments; for she may scold with her looks, &c. Vultu saepe laeditur pietas. By looks often is goodness offended. God hath a barren womb for mocking Michal.

Chapter 6

Ver. 1. Children, obey your parents] As Isaac did Abraham in submitting to be sacrificed; as Christ became obedient even to the death of the cross.

For this is right] Good and acceptable before God and men, #1Ti 5:4. {See Trapp on "Mt 15:4"}

Ver. 2. First commandment with promise] To wit, with special promise of long life. {See Trapp on "Mt 15:4"}

Ver. 3. And thou mayest live long] Good children help to lengthen their parents' days, as Joseph did Jacob's. God therefore lengthens theirs in red-hostimentum, as it were. Or if he take from them this long lease, he gives them a freehold of better value.

Ver. 4. Provoke not, &c.] God forbids bitterness and austerity in husbands, #Col 3:19; masters, #Col 4:1; parents here, and #Col 3:21. Superiors must so carry themselves as to be at once loved and feared.

But bring them up in the nurture, &c.] Or, nourish them and nurture them. The latter is as needful as the former. They that nourish their children only, what do they more than the unreasonable creatures? The blessing upon posterity is entailed to piety in the second commandment. If I may see grace in my wife and children, said reverend Claviger, Satis habeo, satisque mihi, meae uxori, filiis et filiabus prospexi, I shall account them sufficiently cared for. (Selneccer.) Let parents labour to mend that by education that they have marred by propagation; for else they are Peremptores potius quam parentes, parricides rather than parents, and shall dearly answer for their poor children, which like Moses in the bed of flags, are ready to perish if they have not help. Nurture is a great help to nature; and some sons honour not their fathers, because, as Eli, they honoured their sons, that is, they corrected not, but cockered them, #1Sa 2:29 1Ki 1:5,6.

Ver. 5. Servants, be obedient] The centurion was happy in his servants: and no marvel, for he was a loving master. {See Trapp on "Mt 8:6"} And observe here that inferior duties are first described; because, 1. They are less willing to subject themselves. 2. They should be readier to perform duty than to expect it. 3. Hereby they shall win upon their superiors, who will lie the heavier upon them if there be strife who shall begin. (Bernard.)

Ver. 6. Not with eyeservice] And yet it were well if we would do God, our great Master, but eyeservice. For his eye is ever upon us, and pierceth into the inward parts. So that they much deceive themselves, who think all is well because no man can say to them, Black is thine eye.

Ver. 7. As to the Lord] In obedience to his will, and with reference to his glory.

Ver. 8. Whether he be bond or free] The centurion did but complain of the sickness of his servant, and Christ, unasked, says, I will come and heal him. He that came in the shape of a servant, would go down to the sick servant's pallet, would not go to the bed of the rich ruler's son.

Ver. 9. Do the same things] That is, Do your parts and duties by them; and use them as men, not as beasts. Eadem dicit, non opere et officio, sed modo et proportione, saith Estius.

Forbearing threatening] Those blusters and terrible thunder cracks of fierce and furious language found in the mouths of many masters, if never so little crossed. Severitas nec sit tetra, nec tetrica: Servants should be chidden with good words, with God's words, and not reviled. (Sidon. Epist.)

Ver. 10. Be strong in the Lord] For by his own strength shall no man prevail, #1Sa 2:9. Get God's arm, wherewith to wield his armour, and then you may do anything.

Ver. 11. Put on the whole armour] Or else never think to do the afore mentioned duties; we have a busy adversary to deal with. The Turks bear no weapons but in travel; then some of them seem like a walking armoury; so must a Christian be. Coriolanus had so used his weapons of a child-little, that they seemed as if they had been born with him, or grown into his hands. {a} Seneca reports of Caesar that he quickly sheathed his sword, but never laid it off. No more must we.

The wiles of the devil] Gr. The methods or way-layings of that old subtle serpent, who like Dan's adder in the path, biteth the heels of passengers, and thereby transfuseth his venom to the head and heart, #Ge 49:17. Julian by his craft drew more from the faith than all his persecuting predecessors could do by their cruelty. So doth Satan more harm in his sheepskin than by roaring like a lion.

{a} εγγενη και εμφοτα. Plutarch.

Ver. 12. Not against flesh and blood] Hereby the apostle meaneth not so much the corruption as the weakness of our natures, q.d. We have not only to conflict with weak, frail men, but with puissant devils. Look to it therefore, and lie open at no place; but get on every piece of this spiritual armour, whether those of defence (as the girdle of truth, breastplate of righteousness, the shoes of peace and patience, the helmet of hope), or those of offence, as the sword of the Spirit, and the darts of prayer. Fetch all these out of the Holy Scriptures, which are like Solomon's tower, where hang a thousand shields and all the weapons of strong men. The apostle here soundeth the alarm, crying, Arm, arm, &c.

But against principalities] So wicked men make the devils, by being at their beck and obedience. Observe here, saith an interpreter, in the Holy Ghost a wonderful pattern of candour: he praiseth what is praiseworthy in very enemies. How then shall not the saints be accepted and acknowledged, since they sin not of malicious wickedness, as devils do?

Against spiritual wickedness] Gr. πνευματικα της πονηριας, The spirituals of wickedness, those hellish plots and satanical suggestions, black and blasphemous temptations, horrid and hideous injections, &c. Whereby he seeks to dispirit and defeat us, by setting before us the difficulties of Christian warfare; like as some inhospitable savages make fearful delusions by sorcery upon their shore, to fright strangers from landing.

In high places] εν τοις επουρανιοις, or, about our interest in those heavenly privileges, which the devil would wring from us, and rob us of. He strove with the angel about the body of Moses; but with us about our precious souls. And herein he hath the advantage, that he is above us, and doth out of the air assault us, being upon the upper ground, as it were.

Ver. 13. That ye may be able to withstand] Not seeking to resist Satan's craft with craft, fraud with fraud, sed per apertum martem, but by open defiance. He shoots, saith Greenham, with Satan in his own bow, who thinks by disputing and reasoning to put him off. To argue the case with him is but, as the proverb hath it, to light a candle to the devil. Button up his mouth therefore, as our Saviour did, #Mr 1:25, and buckle close to him and he will fly, #Jas 4:7, for he is but a coward.

“ Est leo si fugias; si stas, quasi musca recedit.”

And having done all to stand] Charles V while he was putting on his armour looked pale, and seemed fearful; but when once armed, he was bold as a lion, and feared no colours.

Ver. 14. Stand therefore] στητε, a military expression. A man may well say to the Christian soldier, as Simon in the ecclesiastical history did to the pillars, which he whipped before the earthquake, Stand fast, for ye shall be shaken.

Your loins girt about] Here, if ever, "ungirt, unblest." He is a loose man that wants this girdle of sincerity.

The breastplate of righteousness] Inherent righteousness, #1Jo 3:7, that insureth election, #2Pe 1:10. The use of a breastplate is to keep the vital parts from being mortally wounded, that a man be not stricken down without recovery; so doth righteousness the soul. "Treasures of wickedness profit nothing; but righteousness delivereth from death," #Pr 10:2. This is that aes triplex circa pectus, that privy armour of proof, that the saints have about their hearts, so that that "wicked one toucheth them not" with any deadly touch, #1Jo 5:18. It is well observed by some, that in all this panoply there is no mention of a back plate (as there is of a breastplate), because the Christian soldier should never flee, but be like Androclid, whom when one derided, because being lame he went to the wars, he answered merrily, he came to fight, and not to run away.

Ver. 15. And your feet shod] As one that is well booted or buskined can walk unhurt amidst briars and brambles, so may he amidst Satan's snares, whereof all places are full, that is, fortified with gospel comforts, whereby God creates peace.

Ver. 16. Above all] ἐπι πασιν, Or, over and upon all. For the word here rendered a shield, cometh from another word that signifieth a door, θυρα, θυρα; to note, that as a door or gate doth the body, so the shield of faith covereth the whole soul. Let us be therefore (as Epaminondas), Non de vita, sed de scuto solliciti. Sceva at the siege of Dyrrachium so long alone resisted Pompey's army, that he had 220 darts sticking in his shield, and lost one of his eyes, and yet gave not over till Caesar came to his rescue.

To quench all the fiery darts] Pointed and poisoned with the venom of serpents, which set the heart on fire from one lust to another; or fiery for the dolour and distemper that they work: in allusion to the Scythian darts, dipped in the gall of asps and vipers; the venomous heat of which, like a fire in their flesh, killed the wounded with torments the likest hell of any other. The apostle here might allude to the custom of soldiers in those times, who, to prevent the mischief of those impoisoned darts, had shields made of raw neats' leather, and when the firey darts lighted upon them they were presently quenched thereby. (Polyb. Vegetins.)

Ver. 17. The helmet of salvation] Hope which holds head above water, and maketh the soul with outstretched neck expect deliverance, #Ro 8:19, crying out not only, Dum spiro, spero, While living I hope, but Dum expiro, spero. While dying, I hope.

And the sword of the Spirit] Wherewith our Saviour beat the devil on his own dunghill, the wilderness, fetching all out of that one book of Deuteronomy, #Mt 4:4. {See Trapp on "Mt 4:4"}

Ver. 18. Praying always] Prayer is not only a part of the armour, but enables to use all the rest. It is not only a charm for that crooked serpent, Leviathan, #Isa 26:16, to enchant him, but a whip of the devil (Flagellum Diaboli) to torment him, and put him into another hell, saith Chrysostom. It fetcheth Christ into the battle, and so is sure of victory. It obtaineth fresh supplies of the Spirit, #Php 1:19, and so maketh us more than conquerors, even triumphers., It driveth the devil out of the field, and maketh him flee from us. Tanquam si leones ignera expuentes essemus, saith Chrysostom. Especially if we go not to the battle δορπον ελοντες, with our breakfast, as Nestor in Homer, but "fasting and praying." For some kind of devils are not cast out but by fasting and prayer.

And watching thereunto] That we be not surprised at unawares. The bird Onocratalus is so well practised to expect the hawk to grapple with her, that even when she shutteth her eyes, she sleepeth with her beak exalted, as if she would contend with her adversary. Let us likewise stand continually upon our guard. The devil watcheth and walketh the round, #1Pe 5:8. Watch therefore.

Ver. 19. And for me] Ministers must be especially prayed for, that they may have a door not only of utterance, but of entrance to men's hearts, and so be able to save themselves and those that hear them. In praying for such, we pray for ourselves.

Ver. 20. I am an ambassador] Venerable for mine age and authority, as the word πρεσβευω signifieth. The ancient and the honourable are usually employed as ambassadors. Cognata sunt γηρας and γερας. Old age and honour are akin in the Greek tongue.

In bonds] Gr. In a chain; instead of a chain of gold (worn commonly by ambassadors), and far more glorious, I bear about my bonds (saith Ignatius in his Epistle likewise to the Ephesians), as so many spiritual jewels or ensigns of honour. {a} Oh, said Alice Driver, here is a goodly neckerchief, blessed be God for it, when the chain was put about her neck.

That therein I may speak boldly] He saith not that I may be freed from my chain, but that I may do my office well in my chain. Let God serve himself upon us, and then no matter what becomes of us. Martinas decumbens, Domine, dixit, si adhuc populo tuo sum necessarius, non recuso laborem. (Sever. Epist. iii.)

{a} τα δεσμα περιφερω τους πνευματικους μαργαριτας

Ver. 21. But that ye may know] It is of good use to the Church to know the lives and affairs of men eminent in goodness and of exemplary holiness, that others may express them; as Polycarp did John the Evangelist, as Irenaeus did Polycarp, as Cyprian did Tertullian, Paraeus did Ursin, &c.

Ver. 22. Comfort your hearts] It is God that comforts by the creatures, as by conduit pipes. The air yields light as an instrument; the water may heat, but not of itself. When a potion is given in beer, the beer of itself doth not work, but the potion by the beer. So in this case.

Ver. 23. Peace be to the brethren] These only be the children of peace, #Lu 10:10. The wicked are like the troubled sea, #Isa 57:20, which may seem sometimes still, but is never so; no more are they. The peace of prosperity they may have, but not of tranquillity. Sinceritas serenitatis mater. Hence it followeth, Ver. 24. In sincerity] εν αφθαρσια. Or "immortality," opposite to that Anathema Maranatha, #1Co 16:23.

Philippians

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. With the bishops and deacons] The word priest is never used at all for a minister of the gospel by the apostles, no, nor by the more ancient Fathers, as Bellarmine himself confesseth. {a} And yet how eager were our late factors for Rome to have priested us all, but that God better provided for us!

{a} De Cultu Sanct. lib. iii. cap. 4.

Ver. 2. Grace be to you] {See Trapp on "1Co 1:2"} {See Trapp on "Eph 1:2"}

Ver. 3. Upon every remembrance] And no wonder; for these were those famous Macedonians, that first gave themselves to the Lord, and then to their faithful ministers by the will of God, #2Co 8:5. {See Trapp on "2Co 8:5"} and compare with #Isa 50:10.

Ver. 4. Making request with joy] Those that grieve their faithful ministers, and quench the Spirit in them, do it to their own singular disadvantage.

Ver. 5. For your fellowship] A good man cannot tell how to go to heaven alone. No sooner had the Philippians received the gospel, but they were in fellowship to a day. The communion of saints was with them a point of practice as well as an article of belief. The apostles' creed was anciently briefer than now. The mention of the Father's being "maker of heaven and earth," the Son's death and descending into hell, and the communion of saints, being wholly omitted; haply as implied sufficiently in other articles. But surely if the creed were called Symbolum, as a sign or badge to difference Christians from infidels and wicked people, there was little reason to leave out the communion of saints, this being a main distinctive character; there being no such fellowship as among the saints, #So 6:9.

Ver. 6. That he which hath begun a good work] Gr. εναρξαμενος, "That he which hath in-begun a good work in you"; for the work is wholly inward and spiritual, saith an interpreter. So God is said to indwell in his people, #2Co 6:16, as if he could never have enough communion with them.

Will perform it] Or perfect it. God doth not use to do his work by the halves, but goes through-stitch with it, #1Th 5:24 Ps 138:8. Only we must pray as Luther was wont to do, "Confirm, O Lord, in us what thou hast wrought, and perfect the work that thou hast begun in us to thy glory. So be it." And as Queen Elizabeth prayed, "Look upon the wounds of thy hands, and despise not the work of thy hands. Thou hast written me down in thy book of preservation with thine own hand; oh, read thine own handwriting, and save me," &c.

Ver. 7. Partakers of my grace] That is, ye communicate with me in my sufferings, which he here calleth his "grace"; and tells them, #Php 1:29 "to you it is given," as an honorary, "to suffer for Christ's sake." Crudelitas vestra gloria nostra, Your cruelty is our glory, said those primitive martyrs. (Tertull.) I had rather be a martyr than a monarch, saith Ignatius. It is to my loss, if you bate me anything in my sufferings, saith Gordius to his tormentors. Gaudebat Crispina cum tenebatur, cum audiebatur, cum damnabatur, cum ducebatur, saith Augustine: {in #Ps 137} Crispina rejoiced when she was apprehended, convented, condemned, executed.

Ver. 8. I long after you all] Here the apostle practised his own precept of fatherly affection, φιλοστοργοι, #Ro 12:10. Pray for me, mine own heart root in the Lord, quem in intimis visceribus habeo ad convivendum et commoriendum saith Bradford in a letter to his fellow martyr, Laurence Saunders.

Ver. 9. And in all judgment] Or, sense. The soul also hath her senses as well as the body. And these must be exercised to discern good and evil, #Heb 5:14, those two learned senses especially (as Aristotle calleth them), the eye and the ear, #Job 34:3 Jer 2:31. Further, observe here, that knowledge and sense, or judgment, are two things. Young trees are more sappy, but old trees are more solid.

Ver. 10. Approve the things] Or, try the things that differ, that ye be not cheated, and so undone, as many a man is by purchasing a counterfeit commodity at an unreasonable rate. A Bristol stone looks like a diamond, and many things glister besides gold.

Ver. 11. Being filled with the fruits] The excellency of a Christian is to follow God fully, as Caleb, #Nu 14:24; to have a heart full of goodness, as those, #Ro 15:14; a life full of good works, as Tabitha, #Ac 9:33. {See Trapp on "Ga 5:22"}

Ver. 12. Rather unto the furtherance] So were Luther's troubles. Quo magis illi furunt, saith he, eo amplius procedo. The more they rage, the more the gospel spreadeth. It was a pleasant sight (saith one) to have beheld Christ and Antichrist striving for masteries. (Sculdet. Annal.) For whatsoever the pope and the emperor attempted against the gospel, Christ turned it all to the furtherance of the gospel. The pope's bull, the emperor's thunderbolt, amazed not men, but animated them to embrace the truth; weakened them not, but wakened them rather.

Ver. 13. In all the palace] So in the Diet held at Augsburgh in Germany, A.D. 1530. Caesar reading the Protestants' confession, and sending it abroad to other Christian princes, as desiring their advice about it, dispersed and spread it more in all parts than all the Lutheran preachers could have done. For which cause Luther laughs agood (heartily) at the foolish wisdom of the Papists, in a certain epistle of his to the elector of Saxony. When Bonner allowed William Hunter, martyr, no more than a half penny a day in prison, he confessed that he lacked nothing, but had meat and clothing enough, yea, even out of the court, both money, meat, clothes, wood and coals, and all things necessary. What friends John Wycliffe found, both in the court of England and in the court of Bohemia, is famously known; and yet the proverb is,

“Exeat aula qui velit esse pius—”

Ver. 14. Are much more bold] This is the fruit of the saints' sufferings. Ecclesia totum mundum sanguine et oratione convertit, saith Luther. As the lily is increased by its own juice that flows from it, so is the Church by its sufferings. This caused Julian to spare some Christians whom he could have wished out of the world. I thank our Lord God (said Bp Ridley, in a letter of his to Bradford) that since I heard of our dear brother Rogers' departing, and stout confessing of Christ and his truth even unto death, my heart, blessed be God, rejoiced of it; neither ever since that time I have felt any lumpish heaviness, as I grant I have felt sometimes before. So Bradford in a letter to Cranmer, Latimer, and Ridley, prisoners at Oxford: Our dear brother Rogers hath broken the ice valiantly. As this day I think hearty Hooper, trusty Taylor, and sincere Saunders end their course and receive their crown. The next am I, which hourly look for the porter to open me the gates after them to enter into the desired rest. God forgive me mine unthankfulness for this exceeding great mercy.

Ver. 15. Some indeed preach Christ] Such self-seekers there are today not a few. Two things make a good Christian, good actions and good aims. Though a good aim doth not make a bad action good, as we see in Uzzah, yet a bad aim makes a good action bad, as in these preachers. They preached Christ, so did the devil, who yet was silenced by Christ, #Mr 1:24,25.

Ver. 16. Preach Christ of contention] Striving to bear away the bell from me, as the better preachers. And with such ambitionists the Church of Christ hath ever been pestered. This made Luther pray, A doctore glorioso, et a pastore contentioso, liberet ecclesiam suam Dominus, From vain glorious and contentious preachers, the good Lord deliver his Church. This made Strigelius when he was on his death bed bless God that now he should be freed ab immanibus et implacabilibus odiis theologorum, from the cruel and implacable hatreds of dissenting divines. (Melch. Ad. in Vit. Strig.) This drew that counsel from Luther to preachers, that they should see that those three dogs did not follow them into the pulpit,—Pride, covetousness, and envy.

Supposing to add affliction to my bonds] As immane cruelty, such as Job and David often complain of, #Job 6:14 Ps 69:26. Queen Elizabeth hated no less than did Mithridates, such as maliciously persecuted virtue forsaken of fortune, saith Camden.

Ver. 17. Knowing that I am set] κειμαι, or, laid by the heels. They of love help out at a deadlift, and do my office abroad; as Marulla, a maid of Lemnos, seeing her father slain in the gate, took up his weapons, and not only revenged his death, but helped to keep out the Turks, who hoped to have surprised the city suddenly.

Ver. 18. Christ is preached, &c.] Prorsus Satan est Lutherus, sed Christus vivit, et regnat, Amen, saith Luther in an epistle of his to Spalatinus; Luther is called a devil; but be it so, so long as Christ is magnified, I am well paid. All private respects should be drowned in the glory of God. But he is a base spirited man that is totus in se, entirely in himself, like the snail, still within doors, and at home. I would to God (saith Mr Dod) I were the worst minister in England; not wishing himself worse than he was, but other men better. Yea, Pedaretus, a heathen, a Lacedaemonian, when he was not chosen into the number of the three hundred counsellors of state, I thank thee, O God (said he), that thou hast given to this city so many men that are better than I am, and fitter to bear office.

Ver. 19. This shall turn to my salvation] God maketh all to cooperate, and turneth all about to the best; as the skilful apothecary maketh of a poisonous viper a wholesome treacle. {a} {See Trapp on "Ro 8:28"} {See Trapp on "Ge 50:20"}

And the supply of the Spirit] επιχορηγια. Fresh supply of subsequent grace, as of the latter rain to the grain, and as the influence of the heavens to fruit trees, without which they cannot bear, though they be fitted to bear fruit.

{a} Old Pharm. A medicinal compound, orig. a kind of salve, composed of many ingredients, formerly in repute as an alexipharmic against and antidote to venomous bites, poisons generally, and malignant diseases. (ED)

Ver. 20. According to my earnest] αποκαραδοκια, St Paul stood as it were on tiptoes to see which way he might best glorify God by life or by death.

Ver. 21. And to die is gain] Because death to a good man is the daybreak of eternal brightness, ianua vitae, porta caeli, the door to life, the gate to heaven, as Bernard hath it, a valley of Achor, a door of hope to give entrance into Paradise, to bring them malorum omnium ademptionem, bonorum omnium adeptionem. freedom from all evils and the reception of all that is good.

Ver. 22. What I shall choose, I wot not] As a loving wife sent for by her husband far from home, and yet loth to leave her children, is in a muse and doubt what to do, so was the apostle. He had mortem in desiderio, et vitam in patientia (as Fulgentius hath it), he rather endured life than desired it, he accepted it rather than affected it.

Ver. 23. For I am in a strait] Plato in the eighth of his laws hath a like speech, The communion of the soul with the body, κοινωνια ψυχη και σωματι διαλυσεως ουκ εστι κρειττων, is not better than the dissolution, as I would say if I were to speak in earnest. But whether Plato believed himself so saying, I have reason to make question, when I consider that his master Socrates, when he came to die, doubted whether it were better with the dead or with the living, as both Plato and Cicero testify.

Having a desire to depart] αναλυσαι, to loose from the shore of life, and launch out into the main of immortality. Or it may be rendered, to return home, or to change rooms. A believer when he dieth, doth but repatriasse (as Bernard phraseth it), return home; he doth but change his place, and not his company, as dying Dr Preston said. He is ready to chide out his soul with Quid hic facto? as Monica, Austin's mother, did, What make I here so far from mine own country? or with an Egrede, o anima mea, as Hilarion did, Go forth, O my soul, to Jesus thy bridegroom; haste, haste, haste to thine happy home. Euge, Deo sit laus et gloria, quod iam mea instet liberatio, et horula gratissima, said Graserus, when death was upon him: Oh, blessed be God for this blessed hour. Oh, what a happy change shall I now make from night to day, from darkness to light, from death to life, from sorrow to solace, from a factious world to a happy being! as Mr John Holland, a Lancashire minister, said, when he was even ready to depart. Oh, wish heartily to die the death of these righteous; and let that be the unfeigned sense of thy soul, which Camerarius left in his will, should be written on his tombstone (Melch. Ad.):

“ Vita mihi mors est, mors mihi vita nova est.
Life is to me a death, death's a new life.”

Or that emortual of George Fabritius (Bucholcer Index Chronol.), α\r+\u0966 ι0\u0955 ι0 \u0960 αρ \u0955 ι640 \u0966 ι-320 “Σοι χαριν οιδα θεω ευσπλαγχνω ος μ εδιδαξας\u0960 αρ \u0955 ι1120 \u0966 ι-320 Εν βιοτη τε θανειν, εν θανατω δε
βιουv.”

“Thanks to my gracious God, who doth me give,
In life to die, and in death's hand to live.”

And to be with Christ] This was all his song ever since he had been in the third heaven. So Mr Bolton, lying on his death bed, said, I am by the wonderful mercies of God as full of comfort as my heart can hold, and feel nothing fit my soul but Christ, with whom I heartily desire to be. (His Life by Mr Bagshaw.)

Which is far better] πολλῶ μαλλόν κρείσσον, Far, far the better. A transcendent expression, such as is that #2Co 4:17. {See Trapp on "2Co 4:17"}

Ver. 24: Is more needful for you] Mr Bolton dying, and desiring to be dissolved, being told that it was indeed better for him to be with Christ, but the Church of God could not miss him, nor the benefit of his ministry, he thus replied with David, #2Sa 15:25,26 "If I shall find favour in the eyes of the Lord, he will bring me again, and show me both it and his habitation. But if otherwise, lo, here I am, let him do what seemeth good in his eyes." No man is born, much less born again, for himself, but for the benefit of many, as Bucer's physicians said to him, Non sibi se, sed multorum utilitati esse natum, that he was not born for himself, but for the good of God's Church; the welfare whereof he had zealously promoted. Dr John Reynolds being persuaded by his friends to give over his incessant pains in the Lord's work for his health's sake, finely answered out of Juvenal,

" Et proffer vitam vivendi perdere finem:

Nor yet, for love of life, lose that dare I

That is the main, care of community."

Ver. 25. And joy of faith] That is, for your full assurance, which is that highest degree of faith, whereby a believer having gotten victory over his doubtings, triumpheth with a large measure of joy.

Ver. 26. That your rejoicing] Gr. Your glorying or exulting in this, that God hath given me in, as an answer to your prayers. It is surely a sweet thing to bear from heaven. David often boasts of it, #Ps 6:8,9 66:19,20

Ver. 27. Only let your conversation] q.d. If you would that God should hear you, and deliver me, be ready prepared for the receipt of such a mercy. The fountain of divine grace will not be laden at with foul hands, #Ps 66:17. The leper's lips should be covered, according to the law.

Let your conversation] πολιτευεσθε, your civil conversation, your common commerce, and interdealings with men also. Hippocrates took an oath from his followers to keep their profession unstained, and their lives unblameable. {a} When our life is contrary to our profession, it is a slander to the gospel; and it may be said of us, as a low countryman said to a gentleman that commended the Spaniards for their devotion and their often blessing and crossing themselves: No doubt, quoth he, they are, holy men; crosses without, and the devil within.

Striving together for the faith] As the barons of Polonia professed to do, by their starting up at the reading of the Gospel, and drawing out their swords half way, in testimony that they would stick and stand to the defence of that truth to the very death. (A. D. 965, Jo. Funccius.) Help the truth in necessity, strive with it, and for it. Say of it, as she did of the shield she gave her son going to the battle, η ταν η επι ταν (Plutarch), Either bring this back, or be brought back upon it. Or, as the Black Prince's resolution in battle was, either to vanquish or perish. The serpent, they say, if he be so environed that he must of necessity pass through one of them, will sooner adventure upon the fire or flame than upon the shadow of the poplar tree. The mouse of Armenia will rather die than be defiled with any filth; insomuch, as if her hole be besmeared with dirt, she will rather choose to be taken than to be polluted. Let us resolve either to live with the faith of the gospel, or to die for it. The Athenians bound their citizens by oath, to fight for defence of their religion both alone and with ethers, αμυνω δε και υπερ ιερων και υπερ οσιων και μονος και μετα πολλων.

{a} αγεως και οσιως τον βιον και την τιχνης εμην

Ver. 28. And in nothing terrified] πυρορομενοι. A metaphor from horses, when they tremble and are sorely frightened. He that feareth God need fear none else, #Ps 3:6,7. But with the horse in #Job 39:22, he mocketh at fear, and is not frightened; neither turneth he back from the sword.

Ver. 29. For unto you it is given] As a high honour not only to believe (though that is a great matter; for he that believeth hath set to his seal that God is true, hath given God a testimonial, such as is that #De 32:4), but also (as a further favour) to suffer for his sake: this is the lowest subjection that can be to God, but the highest honour both to him and us. This made Latimer, after the sentence pronounced on him, cry out, "I thank God most heartily for this honour." Saunders said, "I am the unmeetest man for this high office that ever was appointed to it." "Such an honour it is," said Careless, martyr, "as the greatest angel in heaven is not permitted to have. God forgive me mine unthankfulness."

Ver. 30. Which ye saw in me] #Ac 16:19,23,24, &c. {See Trapp on "Ac 16:19"} {See Trapp on "Ac 16:23"} {See Trapp on "Ac 16:24"}

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. If there be therefore] A most passionate obtestation, importing his most vehement desire of their good agreement; whereunto he conjures them, as it were, by all the bonds of love between him and them. Matters of importance must be pressed with utmost vehemence, #Col 3:14. Love is charged upon us above all those excellent things there reckoned up.

If any comfort of love] As there is very much, making the saints to enjoy one another's society with spiritual delight, #Ps 16:3, and to communicate with gladness and singleness of heart, #Ac 2:46. The Lord doth usually and graciously water the holy fellowship of his people with the dews of many sweet and glorious refreshings; so that they have a very heaven upon earth, for kind the same with that above, and differing only in degrees.

If any bowels and mercies] Ipsa suada, credo, si loqui posset, non potuisset, εμπατικότερως, ubi quot verba, tot tela, &c., saith Dr Morton; that is, persuasion itself could not speak more persuasively, here are so many words, so many weapons, able to pierce and work upon any heart not possessed with an iron sinew.

Ver. 2. Being of one accord, of one mind] Hereunto those many "ones" should move us mentioned by our apostle, #Eph 4:4,5. {See Trapp on "Eph 4:4"} {See Trapp on "Eph 4:5"} {See Trapp on "Ac 4:32"} They were of one heart. Animo animaque inter se miscebantur, saith Tertullian of those primitive Christians; yea, they were una anima, one soul (so Tremellius rendereth this text out of the Syriac), all informed with one and the same soul; all as one man, in the matters of God's worship.

Ver. 3. Let nothing be done through strife] These are those hell hags that set the Church on fire, φιλονεικεια and φιλαρχια: if these men could be cast out of men's hearts, great hopes there were, παντας εις το θειον κηρυγμα ομοφωνως και ορθοδοξως συνδραμειν, as Isidore hath it, that all men would soon consent in one and the same truth, and be at peace among themselves.

Let each esteem other better than themselves] Non minus vere, quam humiliter, as Bernard glosseth; because in some gift or other, at least in the measure or use, another may be better than us.

Ver. 4. Look not every man, &c.] Self is a great stickler, but must be excluded where love shall be maintained. He that is wholly set up within himself is an odious person; and the place he lives in longs for a vomit to spew him out. It is his pleasure, his profit, and his preferment (saith one) that is the natural man's trinity; and his carnal self that is these in unity. Indeed it is that flesh that is the principal idol; the others are deified in the relation to ourselves.

Ver. 5. Let this mind be in you] We should strive to express Christ to the world, not as a picture doth a man in outward lineaments only, but as a child doth his father in affections and actions. Our lives should be as so many sermons upon Christ's life, #1Pe 2:9.

Ver. 6. To be equal with God] Gr. Equals, that is, every way equal; not a secondary inferior God, as the Arians would have him. {See Trapp on "Joh 1:1"} {See Trapp on "Joh 1:2"} {See Trapp on "Joh 1:3"} {See Trapp on "Joh 1:4"} Hold fast this truth; it is of the foundation, it is the rock whereon the Church is built, #Mt 16:18; and all the devils in hell shall not wrest this place from me, for a clear proof of the Divinity of Christ, saith learned Calvin.

Ver. 7. But made himself. &c.] Gr. εκενωσεν, "emptied himself," suspended and laid aside his glory and majesty, and became a sinner both by imputation (for God made the iniquity of us all to meet upon him, #Isa 53:6) and by reputation, for he was reckoned not only among men, but among malefactors, #Php 2:9. Hence he is said to be sent in the likeness of sinful flesh, #Ro 8:3.

And took upon him the form of a servant] Yea, of an evil servant, that was to be beaten.

In the likeness of men] Yea, he was a worm and no man, nullificamen populi, as Tertullian hath it. Christ vilified, nullified himself to the utmost, ex omni seipsum ad nihil redegit, as Beza expounds the former part of this verse, of everything he became nothing.

Ver. 8. He humbled himself] The Sun of righteousness went 10 degrees back in the dial of his Father, that he might come to us with health in his wings, that is, in his beams.

Became obedient unto death] That is, to his dying day, saith Beza. He went through many a little death all his life long, and at length underwent that cursed and painful death of the cross, his soul also being heavy to the death, #Mt 26:38, he suffered the insufferable wrath of God for a season. Ne perderet obedientiam, perdidit vitam, he lost his life lest he lose his submission to authority, saith Bernard. Ver. 9. Wherefore God also, &c.] "Wherefore" denoteth not the cause, but the order of Christ's exaltation, as a consequent of his sufferings, as some conceive.

Ver. 10. That at the name] Gr. In the name. The Papists stiffly defend the ceremony of bowing at the name of Jesus, to countenance the adoration of their deified images, altars, and their host; teaching in their pulpits, that Christ himself on the cross bowed his head on the right side, to reverence his own name, which was written over it. {a} But name is here put for person, bowing of the knee for inward subjection. It is taken out of #Isa 45:23.

{a} Sir Edwin Sands in Spec. Europ.

Ver. 11. And that every tongue] The heathens were wont to say, Mutus sit oportet qui non laudavit Herculem. Let that tongue be tied up for ever that cries not out with David, Vivat Dominus, and with Luther, Vivat et regnet Christus, Amen.

Ver. 12. Work out your salvation] κατεργαζεσθε. The reason that men still tremble, and are still troubled with this doubt, and that fear, is, because their salvation is not wrought out, something is left undone and their conscience tells them so.

With fear and trembling] Opposed to carnal security. Those venturous bold spirits that dare live in any evil, so it stare not in their faces, and have not a heart fearful of the least evil, aspire not to immortality.

Ver. 13. For it is God which worketh] Therefore work out, &c. As acti agentes, moti moventes, as the inferior orbs move, as acted by the superior. When God hath turned, and doth touch us, we must move; and while the Spirit imbreathe us, we must turn about like the mill.

To will and to do] Sub laudibus naturae latent inimici gratiae, saith Augustine; who stood so much for grace, that the schoolmen say he yielded too little to freewill. That we live is the gift of the gods (saith Seneca); that we live well, is of ourselves. A base speech! So Cicero (De Nat. Deor.), Iudicium hoc omnium mortalium est fortunam a Deo petendam, a seipso sumendam sapientiam. For which impious sentence Augustine saith of him, Eum, ut faceret homnes liberos, fecisse sacrileges. (De Civ. Dei, 5.) Ver. 14. Without murmurings] Gr. οργης, wrath and rancour, or discontent, which makes men's lips like rusty hinges seldom to move without murmuring and complaining.

And disputings] Or wranglings about trifles, niceties or novelties, things whereof we can have neither proof nor profit. Zanchy thus distinguisheth these two; murmurings are secret complaints one of another, like to the grunting of hogs; disputings are open contentions and quarrels.

Ver. 15. Blameless and harmless] Gr. ακερατοι, hornless, or sincere, without mixture of deceit or guile, Israelites indeed.

The sons of God] Dignity enforceth duty. Remember that thou art a king's son, said he to Antigonus, and thou canst not do amiss.

Without rebuke] Αμωμητα, such as envy itself cannot justly tax, or fasten her fangs on. Si Luthero faverem ut viro bono, quod fatentur et hostes, &c., saith Erasmus, who yet loved him not. Luther is a good man, as his very enemies cannot but acknowledge. So Bucer, Bradford, Melancthon. Christians should excel others, standing as standard bearers, higher than others, as Saul was by the head and shoulders; being without blemish from head to foot, as Absalom; fair to the eye and good to the taste, as the tree of knowledge, #Ge 3:6.

In the midst of a crooked] As Noah was righteous in his generation; as Joshua would serve Jehovah, though alone; as David therefore loved God's testimonies, because other men kept not his law; as Elijah amidst the Baalites cries, Zelando zelavi; the worse they were, the better was he. Baruch kindled himself ( accendit seipsum, Trem.) from other men's coldness, and quickened himself from other men's dulness, #Ne 3:20.

As lights in the world] φωτηρες, luminaries, great lights, such are the sun and moon, that give light to others. Some wicked have greater common gifts than the godly; as many metals are brighter and more orient than the heavens: yet as those metals are not fit to convey the light of the sun, nay indeed they would stop it; so neither are the wicked fit to shine the true light into us; but Christ and Christians, those lights of the world. Such as Chrysostom was, whom Theodore styleth eximium orbis terrarum luminare, a famous light of the Church; and others said, that the sunlight might better be spared than Chrysostom's preaching.

Ver. 16. Holding forth the word] επεχοντες, as an ensign, or rather as the hand doth the torch, or the watch tower the light, and so the haven to weather beaten mariners.

Ver. 17. Yea, and if I be offered] Or, be poured out as a drink offering upon the sacrifice, &c., to seal up my doctrine, whereby I have brought you to the obedience of faith. Bishop Ridley in a letter to Bishop Brooks of Gloucester, writeth thus: "As for the doctrine which I have taught, my conscience assureth me that it was sound and according to God's word, to his glory be it spoken; the which doctrine, the Lord being my help, I will maintain, so long as my tongue shall wag, and breath is within my body, and in confirmation thereof seal the same with my blood."

Ver. 18. For the same cause also, &c.] The hearers' affections and endeavours should exactly answer to the affections and endeavours of the preacher, as the elders of Ephesus did, #Ac 20:31,37; and as those religious Romans did, #Ro 6:17, and these Philippians, #2Co 8:5.

Ver. 19. That I also may be of good comfort] εμψυχω, that I may be inspirited. For when Silas and Timotheus were come from these Macedonians, Paul was pressed in spirit, and set vigorously upon the Lord's work, #Ac 18:5.

Ver. 20. Likeminded] ισοψυχον, an alter ego to me. True friendship transformeth us into the condition of those we love, as Eusebius into his friend Pamphilus the martyr, whence he was called Eusebius

Pamphili. Amicitia sit tantum inter binos qui sunt veri, et bonos qui sunt pauci. (Jerome.)

Ver. 21. For all seek their own] If it were so then, what wonder if now, as was so long since foretold, #2Ti 3:2. Self must be shouldered out, and Christ's share studied more than our own; all private interests let fall, and all self-respect drowned in the glory of God and the public good; or else we want that pious ingenuity that becometh saints. It is said of Cato, that he did— toti genitum se credere mundo, That the care of the community lay upon him. (Lucan.) Timothy was of a choice and excellent spirit that naturally cared for the Churches' welfare; few such today. {See Trapp on "Php 2:3"}

Ver. 22. As a son with the father] Happy son in such a father, #1Ti 1:2. If Jason the Thessalian held himself so happy in his tutor Chiron (Pindar. lib. 4, Pyth.), Alexander in his Aristotle, Paul in his Gamaliel, how much more was Timothy in Paul the aged, #Phm 9, whose not only doctrine but manner of life he knew fully and followed faithfully, #2Ti 3:10, as a diligent disciple!

Ver. 23. So soon as I shall see] For his life was now in suspense by reason of that roaring lion Nero, whom Tertullian wittily calleth Dedicatorem damnationis Christianorum, quippe qui orientem fidem primus Romae cruentavit.

Ver. 24. Shall come shortly] Whether ever he did come or no we know not. Fallitur augurio spes bona saepe suo. Good hopes are often frustrated. Howbeit the word here signifieth an "assured confidence"; and is seldom or never used but when the thing followeth, which thus is trusted.

Ver. 25. Necessary to send to you] It is not meet that a pastor be long absent from his people. Moses was away but 40 days, and before he came again Israel had made them a golden calf. A godly minister when he is abroad is like a fish in the air; whereinto if it leap for recreation or necessity, yet it soon returns to his own element.

Ver. 26. For he longed after you] επιποθων. The word signifieth such a vehement desire as is impatient of delays. His heart was in the same place his calling was.

And was full of heaviness] Gr. αδημονων, he was out of the world, as it were, and could not take comfort in any company.

Ver. 27. For indeed he was sick] Which should not have been, if St Paul could have cured him, as he did others. This shows that the apostles cured the sick, and did miracles, not by their own power, or at their own pleasure, &c.

But God had mercy on him.] A great mercy it is to recover health, and highly to be prized. After sickness, offer to God the ransom of thy life, as they did, #Ex 32:31-33. Bless Jehovah thy physician, so he is called, #Ex 15:26. Thus did David, #Ps 103:3. Thus Hezekiah, #Isa 36:9. Thus the very heathens, whose custom was after a fit of sickness to consecrate something to their gods.

But on me also] For it is a very sore affliction to lose a dear friend, which is as a man's own soul, #De 13:6, and is there set after brother, son, daughter, wife of a man's bosom, as dearer than all of them.

Lest I should have sorrow] God's care is that we suffer in measure, #Isa 27:8; and according as we can, #1Co 10:13. {See Trapp on "1Co 10:13"}

Ver. 28. That when ye see him] And receive him as risen from the dead. God knows how to commend his mercies to us, by threatening us with the loss of them; for Bona a tergo formosissima. We know best the worth of mercies by the lack of them.

Ver. 29. Hold such in reputation] Or set a just price, a due estimate upon them. Horrible is the contempt that is now cast upon the ministry, by our novellers, as if they had learned of Campian to say, Ministris eorum nihil vilius. To your minister, nothing is vile.

Ver. 30. Not regarding his life] Gr. Ill providing for his life, casting away all inordinate care of it, as if he had put on that Roman resolution, Necesse est ut eam, non ut vivam, Needsly I must go, not needsly live.

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. Rejoice] Or farewell in the Lord. Salutem in sospitatore.

To write the same things to you] So #1Co 5:9 Joh 15:1-5. Some gather out of #Mt 5:1 cf. Lu 6:20, that our Saviour preached the same sermon twice over. Men are dull to conceive, hard to believe, apt to forget, and slow to practise heavenly truths, and had therefore great need to have them much pressed, and often inculcated. Neither let any cry out, Occidit miseros crambe repetita magistros. Surfeit not of God's manna, say not it is a light meat, because lightly come by, or the same again. Austin persuades the preacher so long to pursue and stand upon the beating and repeating of one and the same point, till by the gesture and countenance of the hearers he perceives that they understand and relish it. It was Melancthon's wish, that men did not only teach the same things, but in iisdem verbis, in iisdem syllabis, in the same words, in the same syllables. He himself went over the Epistle to the Romans ten different times in his ordinary lectures. (Sculdet. Annal.) Hippias liked not to have αει παντα, ever the same things; but Socrates desired to have ου μονον αι ταυτα, αλλα και περι των αυτω, not only always the same words, but about the very same matters; since a good thing cannot be heard too often.

Ver. 2. Beware of dogs] That is, seducers and sectarians, who though dead dogs, yet will be barking at godly ministers. And though the dogs of Egypt would not move their tongues against Israel, #Ex 11:7, yet these greedy dogs, #Isa 56:11, can both bark and bite better men than themselves, being set on by the devil. Homines perfrictae frontis, impudent as dogs. Ravenous also when they get among the flocks, #Eze 22:25. Farther, they are crouching, colloquing creatures, #2Ti 3:4: but believe them not; receive them not; for like dirty dogs they will but bemire you with fawning; yea, like cur-dogs, they will suck your blood with licking, and in the end kill you, and cut your throats without biting. Beware of them, therefore, beware, saith the apostle here.

Beware of evil workers] Deceitful workers, #2Co 11:13, that seem to build staircases for heaven, when indeed they dig descents down to hell, taking great pains to very evil purpose.

Beware of the concision] For circumcision; as Diogenes called Zeno's διατριβην κατατριβην and Euclid's αχολην χολην. (Laert.) The Holy Scriptures have many such elegant and pleasant passages, as #Pr 25:27 Ho 4:15 Ga 5:12 Isa 5:7, &c. There is one that senseth it thus, Beware of the concision, that is, of those that make divisions and out the Church into little pieces, and sacking congregations, making separation. So Piscator, Qui conantur vos ab ecclesia Dei rescindere, who seek to sunder you from the Church. The Donatists affirmed that there were no true Churches but theirs, and were also divided among themselves, in minutula frustula, into small factions, as Austin saith.

Ver. 3. For we are the circumcision] Such as have our luxuriances lopped off, our unruly passions mortified, #Col 2:11, casting them away as a wretched foreskin.

Ver. 4. Confidence in the flesh] That is, in external privileges, which yet profit not those that rest in them. An empty title yields but an empty comfort at last. God cares for no retainers, that only wear his livery but serve themselves. A man may go to hell with baptismal water on his face; yea, the sooner for his abused privileges.

Ver. 5. A Hebrew of the Hebrews] That is, by both father's and mother's side. Some think that hereby he argueth the ancientness of his stock and lineage, as being continued from Abraham, called the Hebrew; or from Eber. (Dr Airay.) Sed genus et proavos, &c. Of some ancient families it may be said as of some books, that they are adorandae rubiginis, of more antiquity than authority or respect.

Ver. 6. Concerning zeal] A blind misguided zeal. {See Trapp on "Ro 10:2"} If zeal be not qualified with knowledge all will be on fire, as the primum mobile, first easily swayed, they say, would be with its swift turning about, but for the countermotion of the lower spheres.

Ver. 7. Loss for Christ] Christ is to be sought and bought at any hand, at any rate. This is to play the wise merchant, #Mt 13:44-46. {See Trapp on "Mt 13:44"} {See Trapp on "Mt 13:45"} {See Trapp on "Mt 13:46"} Esteem we Christ, as the people did David, #2Sa 18:3, more worth than ten thousand; as Naomi did Ruth, better than seven sons, #Ru 4:15; as Pharaoh did Joseph, There is none so wise and worthy as thou, said he, #Ge 41:39. Let burning, hanging, all the torments of hell befall me, tantummodo ut Iesum nansciscar, so that I may get my Jesus, said Ignatius. None but Christ, none but Christ, said Lambert, lifting up such hands as he had, and his fingers' ends flaming. We cannot buy this gold too dear. Paul is well content to part with a sky full of stars for one Sun of righteousness. Nazianzen put this price upon his Athenian learning (wherein he was very famous), that he had something of value to part with for Christ. So did Galeacius Caraeciolus abandon all to enjoy the pure ordinances of Christ at Geneva. See that famous epistle written to him by Mr Calvin, prefixed before his Commentary on the First Epistle to the Corinthians.

Ver. 8. And do count them but dung] Dog's dung (as some interpret the word σκυβαλα, quasi κυσιβαλα), or dog's meat, coarse and contemptible. Paul's sublime spirit counts all dung, yet is content, for Christ, to be counted the offscouring of all things.

Ver. 9. And be found in him] Out of whom all are lost in the wilderness of worldly lusts, and woefully wander; yet not so wide, as to miss hell. Paul's desire is therefore to be found in Christ, at such time as he is sought for by the justice of God, to be brought to condign punishment.

Ver. 10. And may know him] Not notionally only (for so a man may do out of every catechism), but practically; not apprehensively only, but affectively; not with that knowledge that is cognoscitiva, only standing in speculation, but that is directiva vitae, as the apostle here expounds himself. A natural man may have a disciplinary knowledge of Christ, that is, by hearsay, as a blind man hath of colour, not an intuitive, i.e. per speciem propriam, &c.

Ver. 11. I might attain to the resurrection] That is (by a metonymy of the subject for the adjunct), that perfection of holiness that accompanieth the estate of the resurrection. True grace never aims at a pitch, but aspireth to perfection. It is a low and unworthy strain in some to labour after no more grace than will keep life and soul together, that is, soul and hell asunder (as one speaketh). But that man for heaven, and heaven for him, that sets up for his mark the resurrection of the dead, that would be as perfect now as the glorified saints shall be at the day of judgment.

Ver. 12. But I follow after] Gr. Διωκω, I persecute, I follow hot footed with utmost eagerness. By this then he signifieth how greedily and incessantly he pursued after the perfect knowledge of Christ, having it as it were in chase, and resolved not to rest till he had attained unto it. (Airay.) Well might Chrysostom call St Paul an insatiable, greedy, devouring worshipper of God.

Ver. 13. I count not myself] Si dixisti satis est, periisti. Satiety is a dangerous disease, and the next step to a declension. The eagle's emblem is sublimius; a loftier position, the sun's celerius, swifter, #Ps 19:3; the wheat's perfectius, more ripened, #Mr 4:28; Ezekiel's profundius, more depth, #Eze 47:4; Christ's superius, more exaltation, #Lu 14:10; and Paul's ulterius more humiliation.

Reaching forth] επεκτεινομενος, straining and stretching out head and hands and whole body to lay hold on the mark or prize proposed. A manifest metaphor from runners in a race, qui caput, totumque corpus, et vires exerunt, ae praecipites ad scopum ruunt, who throw themselves forward like a dart, and stretch out their arms to take hold of the mark. Prone et quasi praecipiti corpore ferri ad scopum. (Beza a Lapide.)

Ver. 14. I press toward, &c.] The ark of the covenant was but a cubit and a half high; so were likewise the wheels of the caldron. Now we know that a cubit and a half is but an imperfect measure, which shows (saith one) that no man in this life is perfectly perfect. Let us strive to perfection, as Paul did; and then, Summum culmen affectantes, satis honesti vel in secundo fastigio conspiciemur. A man may fully fall in with the most forward followers of Jesus Christ, and yet fall short of perfection. It is with Christians (saith Columel well) as with Jonathan's signal arrows, two fell short, and but one beyond the mark; so where one shoots home to the mark of the high calling in Christ, many fail to attain to it.

Ver. 15. As many as be perfect] Comparatively, or conceitedly so.

God shall reveal] Different measures of knowledge and holiness are given to the saints at different times. We are narrow mouthed vessels, and cannot receive all at once. "Whither I go thou canst not follow me now; but thou shalt follow me afterwards," #Joh 13:36.

{See Trapp on "Joh 13:36"}

Ver. 16. Let us walk by the same rule] To wit, of the word; and then you may say, Lord, if I be deceived, thou hast deceived me. Or it may be rendered thus, Let us proceed by one rule; for the word στοιχωμεν is military, and signifies to go on in order, according to the general's commands; who else may justly punish our prosperous disobediences, our disorderly successes.

Ver. 17. Be followers together of me] Longum iter per praecepta, brevius per exempla. Everything in a minister should be exemplary, τυπος. We must propound to ourselves the highest pitch and the best patterns of perfection; even those of most raised parts and graces, of unwearied industry in services, and undaunted magnanimity in suffering; follow the most forward Christians with a desire to overtake them; dwell upon their exemplary lives till ye be changed into the same image.

Ver. 18. And now tell you weeping] Non tam atramento quam lachrymis chartas inficiebat Paulus. {a} Paul was a man of many tears, and might well say here, as Master Fox concludes the story of Lady Jane Grey, Tu quibus illa legas incertum est, Lector ocellis; Ipse quidem siccis scribere non potui.

{a} Lotin in #Ac 22:19.

Ver. 19. Whose god is their belly] A scavenger, whose living is to empty, is to be preferred before him that liveth but to fill privies; as they do that make their gut their god, that dunghill deity. Such a one was that Pamphagus, Nabal, Dives, and others, that digested in hell what they ate on earth. They say the locust is all belly, which is joined to his mouth and endeth at his tail. The spider also is little else than belly. The dolphin hath his mouth almost in his very belly; the ass-fish hath his heart in his belly. (Solinus. Aristot.) In mea patria Deus venter est, et in diem vivitur. In my country (saith Jerome) their belly is their god, they live from hand to mouth, &c. Epicurus said, that eternal life was nothing else but an eternal eating and drinking; ωστε παντα χρονον διαγειν μεθουοντας. See my Common Place of Abstinence.

Who mind earthly things] As they have their hands elbow deep in the world, so their minds are shut in their chests, as dead bodies are buried in coffins; they are interred in the Golgotha of this world, as moles in their hillocks.

Ver. 20. For our conversation] Our civil conversation, or our burgessship, {a} while we live by heaven's laws, and go about our earthly businesses with heavenly minds; this a carnal man cannot skill of. {b} A fly cannot make of a flower what a bee can. There is a generation whose names are written in the earth, #Jer 17:13; these make earth their throne, heaven their footstool, #Isa 66:1, and are loth to die, because they have treasures in the field. But the saints, though their commoration be on earth, yet their conversation is in heaven; as the pearl grows in the sea, but shines in the sky; as stars, though seen sometimes in a puddle, yet have their situation in heaven; as a wise man may sport with children, but that is not his main business. Corpore ambulamus in terra corde habitamus in caelo, saith Austin. Our bodies are on earth, our hearts in heaven (as his was that did even eat and drink and sleep eternal life). We live by the same laws as saints and angels in heaven do. If Satan offer us outward things in a temptation (as he did Luther a cardinalship), we send them away from whence they came, as Pelican sent back the silver bowl (which the bishop had sent him for a token) with this answer, Astricti sunt quotquot Tiguri cives et inquilini, bis singulis annis, solenni iuramento, &c. We, the citizens and inhabitants of Zurich, are twice a year solemnly sworn to receive no gift from any foreign prince; so we, the citizens of heaven, are bound by solemn and sacred covenants not to accept Satan's cut-throat kindnesses. Serpens ille capite blanditur, ventre oblectat, cauda ligat. (Rupert.)

We like not the devil's donatives.”

{a} The status and privileges of a burgess; the 'freedom' of a borough, citizenship. CED

{b} πολιτεῖα. Ut municipes caelorum nos gerimus. Sic reddit Piscator.

Ver. 21. Like unto his glorious body] Which is the standard. {See Trapp on "1Co 15:38"} {See Trapp on "1Co 15:44"} Now we may say to our souls as he did to his, O anima, quam deforme hospitium nacta es? Poor soul, what an ill lodging room hast thou gotten! But at the resurrection all shall be mended. Then these vile bodies shall shine as the sun, and be so clear and transparent, that all the veins, humours, nerves, and bowels shall be seen as in a glass, saith Aquinas, that the soul may sally out at every part, and sparkle through the body as the wine through the glass, saith another author. Three glimpses of glory were seen, 1. In Moses' face; 2. In Christ's transfiguration; 3. In Stephen's countenance.

Chapter 4

Ver. 1. Dearly beloved and longed for] What heart melting language is here! Ministers must woo hard for Christ, and speak fair, if they will speak to purpose: "though I might be much bold in Christ to enjoin thee, yet for love's sake I rather beseech thee," #Phm 8,9. How often are men fain to sue for that which is their own; and how heart glad if by fair entreaties they can gather up their debts!

Ver. 2. I beseech Euodias] A couple of disagreeing sisters, whom the apostle seeketh to reconcile, and it was a wonder if they could resist his rhetoric. Oh that I could but once find you together one (saith Austin of the differences between Jerome and Ruffinus); I would fall down at your feet with much love and many tears; I would beseech you for yourselves, and one another, and for weak Christians' sake who are offended thereat, you would not suffer these dissensions to spread, &c. Hei mihi qui vos alicubi reperire non possum, &c.

Ver. 3. And I entreat thee also] All men should contribute their help to the composing of differences, and bring their buckets, as it were, to quench this unnatural fire, when once kindled.

True yokefellow] Not Paul's wife (for he had none, #1Co 7:7), but either the husband of one of the afore mentioned women, or some special and principal pastor at Philippi.

Which laboured with me in the gospel] Not by preaching, but by partaking of the combats and difficulties that I there underwent, with masculine spirits. Significatur certamen, quale est athletarum, saith Estius. In these good women, besides their sex, there was nothing woman-like or weak.

Ver. 4. Rejoice in the Lord] That is the true and only joy (said Mr Philpot the martyr), which is conceived not of the creature, but of the Creator; to this all other joys being compared are but mournings, all delights sorrows, all beauty filth, &c. Other joy besides this may wet the mouth, but not warm the heart; smooth the brow, but not fill the breast.

And again I say, Rejoice] No duty almost more pressed in both Testaments than this of rejoicing in the Lord. It is no less a sin not to rejoice than not to repent.

Ver. 5. Let your moderation] Or equality, such as was that of David, #Ps 26:12. The scales of his mind hung equal, giving him liberty in all occurrences to enjoy himself. All immoderations are enemies to health; so they are also to the quietness of the mind. (Hippocrates.) Against these (as against poisons) there be two kinds of antidotes, prayer and patience, the one hot, the other cold: the one quenching, the other quickening. The word  $\tau\omicron$   $\epsilon\pi\iota\epsilon\kappa\epsilon\varsigma$ , here used by the apostle, properly signifieth moderation in law businesses, or in laying claim to a man's own right, the preferring of equity before extremity (Arist. Ethic. v. 10), as holding utmost right to be utmost wrong. Summum ius summa iniuria. Austin tells us that it was grown to a proverb among his countrymen, Ut habeas quietum tempus, perde aliquid. For a quiet life, part with some part of thy fight, as Abraham did, #Ge 13:9.

The Lord is at hand] To right you and recompense you, to pay you for all your pains and patience. Iudex pro foribus, saith St James, #Jas 5:9.

Ver. 6. In nothing be careful] Or care for nothing, viz. with a care of diffidence and distrust. {See Trapp on "Mt 6:25"} {See Trapp on "Mt 6:26"} &c.

But in everything by prayer] This is the best cure of care. "Cast thy burden" (or thy request) "upon the Lord," said David, #Ps 55:22 "and he shall sustain thee." Remove thy trouble from thyself to God by virtue of that writ or warrant, and then all shall be well. "They looked unto God, and were lightened," #Ps 34:5. Luther in a certain epistle of his to Melancthon complaineth thus: Ego certe ore pro te, et doleo te pertinacissimam curarum hirudinem meas preces sic irritas facere: I pray for thee, but to no purpose so long as thou givest so much way to carking cares.

Supplication with thanksgiving] We should come to pray with our thanks in our hands, standing ready with it, as Joseph's brethren stood with their present, #Ge 43:25. In the old law, what special request soever they had to make, or what sacrifice soever to offer, they were commanded still to come with their peace offerings. Prayer goes up without incense when without thankfulness. The Church ascends daily to her beloved Christ in these pillars of smoke, #So 3:6, for she knows that unthankfulness hindereth much the restful success of prayer. And the apostle seemeth here to hint that God taketh no notice of their prayers that do not in addition give thanks.

Ver. 7. And the peace of God] Prayer hath virtutem pacativam. "Acquaint thyself with God and be at peace," #Job 22:21. Pray, "that your joy may be full," #Joh 16:24. David prays down his distempers, #Ps 6 Ps 116, and then cries out, "Return to thy rest, O my soul"; he rocks himself asleep in this sort; and sets all to rights often times, even then when his heart was more out of tune than his harp. Would you then have that peace of God, that most precious jewel that ever the heart of man was acquainted with? do as you are here advised: 1. Pray for what you want, and give thanks for that you have: (a sacrifice of praise is called a "pay offering," or a "peace offering," because peace ensues upon it.) 2. Be always doing something that is good, as #Php 4:8,9, for as every flower hath its sweetness, so every good union hath its comfort. This is so true, that very heathens (upon the discharge of a good conscience) have found comfort and peace answerably. How boldly did Abimelech bear himself upon his integrity; and what a blessed composedness had holy Noah, who was righteous in his generation, and therefore sat mediis tranquillis in undis.

Shall keep your hearts] φρουρησει, keep as with a guard, or as in a garrison. Solomon's bed was not so well guarded with his threescore valiant men, all holding swords, #So 3:7,8, as each good Christian is by the power of God without him and the peace of God within him. This peace, like David's harp, drives away the evil spirit of cares and fears; it soon husheth all. God can soon raise up in his an army of powerful thoughts and meditations, so as their very inward tranquillity arising from the testimony of a good conscience (called here, their minds), and the sweet sabbath of spirit, the composedness of their affections (called here, their hearts), can make and keep them secure and sound, yea, bring aid when they are close besieged by sin and Satan.

Ver. 8. Whatsoever things are true] This is that little Bible, as the eleventh to the Hebrews is by one fitly called a little Book of Martyrs. In this one verse is comprised that Totum hominis, whole of man, #Ec 12:13; that Bonum hominis, good of man, #Mic 6:8. For if ye do these things here enjoined, ye shall never fall, but go gallantly into heaven, as St Peter hath it, #2Pe 1:10,11.

Ver. 9. And heard, and seen in me] Est aliquid quod ex magno viro vel tacente proficias. The very sight, nay, thought, of a good man often doth good. Whereas the tongue or heart of a wicked man "is little worth," #Pr 10:20. If their thoughts and discourses were distilled, they are so frothy they would hardly yield one drop of true comfort.

And the God of peace] "Not only the peace of God," as #Php 4:7. Austin somewhere fisheth a mystery out of the word pax, peace, which consisteth of three letters, saith he, to note the Trinity, from whom is all true peace. Others have observed that all the letters in Jehovah are quiescent, be at peace, letters to teach the same truth.

Ver. 10. Hath reflourished] Ανεθαλετο. It had deflourished then for a season, and withered, as an oak in winter, #Isa 6:13, and as a teil tree whose sap is in the root. The best tree may have a fit of barrenness. So may the best men suffer some decays for a season; the spiritual life may run all to the heart, as a people conquered in the field runs to the castle. Howbeit, as Eutychus's life was in him still, and he revived, though he seemed to be dead, and as trees in the spring grow green again, so do the relapsed saints.

Ver. 11. In respect of want] The wicked in the fulness of his sufficiency is in straits, #Job 20:22. Contrariwise, the godly man in the midst of his straits is in a sufficiency. "He hath all things," as having the haver of all things.

For I have learned] In Christ's school, for nature teacheth no such lesson.

"Optat ephippia bos piger, optat arare caballus."

Horat.

The labourers were not content with their penny, #Mt 20:13. They that have enough to sink them, yet have not enough to satisfy them; as a ship may be overladen with gold and silver, even unto sinking, and yet have compass and sides enough to hold ten times more. It is God only that fills the heart, and maketh a man say truly with Jacob, and not feignedly, as Esau, I have enough, my brother. Esau had a deal, but Jacob had all, because he had the God of all (Rabb-li, Col-li, #Ge 33:9,11).

Ver. 12. I know both how, &c.] Sound bodies can bear sudden alternations of heat and cold: so cannot distempered bodies.

Both how to be abased] So Chilo (one of the seven wise men of Greece) said to his brother, who took it ill that he was not chosen to be one of the judges, I know how to be injuriously dealt with; but I hardly believe him. {a} Socrates also could tell Archelaus, that offered him large revenues, My mind and mine estate are matches. {b} But flesh and blood could never carry him so far, for all his saying so. It is God alone that fashioneth a man's heart to his estate, #Ps 33:15, as a suit of clothes is fitted to the body.

I am instructed] μεμνημαι, I am initiated; I am a young scholar, newly entered in this high point of heavenly learning of Christian practice. I have entered into religion, as it were, I have consecrated myself (the word is wondrous significant) and am religiously taught it; I see it is a mystery, but I have got the mastery of it.

To suffer want] Either patiently to wait for what I desire, or contentedly to lack what God denieth.

{a} Εγω μεν επισταμαι αδικεισθαι. Laert.

{b} Arrian. apud Stobaeum.

Ver. 13. I can do all things] A Christian walks about the world like a conqueror, having power given him over all, #Re 2:26,27. It was a vain brag of that heathen prince that caused it to be engraven upon his tombstone, παντα ποιειν εδυναμην, I could do all things. (Cyrus Major. Arrian.) None can say so but the man in Christ, without whom also he himself can do nothing, #Joh 15:5. Suffer nothing, as the word ισχυω here used properly signifieth.

Ver. 14. Ye have well done] For hereby as you have sealed up your love to me, and engaged me to pray for you (as for Onesiphorus, #2Ti 1:16), so you have gotten a good testimony to yourselves that ye are members of Christ's mystical body. The tongue is far enough from the toe, the heel from the head, yet when the toe or heel is hurt, the rest of the members sympathize and seek help for it. So here.

Ver. 15. But ye only] One poor Philippian shamed a hundred close fistied Corinthians. Araunah gave like a king, #2Sa 24:23, and is therefore crowned and chronicled: #Zec 9:7 "Ekron shall be as the Jebusite," that is, as this famous Jebusite Araunah, that parted with his freehold for pious uses. (Tremel.)

Ver. 16. Ye sent once and again] Charity's fountain runs fresh, More perennis aquae, and is never dried up. "The liberal man deviseth liberal things," and holdeth that only his own that he hath given to others. Hoc habeo quodcunque dedi, saith Seneca (De Ben. vi. 3).

Ver. 17. Not because I desire a gift] As those cormorants that "with shame do love, Give ye," #Ho 4:18, as if they could speak no other but the Doric dialect, the horse leech's language. St Paul was none of these.

That may abound to your account] For God keeps an exact account of every penny laid out upon him and his, that he may require it; and his retributions are more than bountiful.

Ver. 18. I have all] viz. That you sent, and I give you an acquittance, which the Greeks, from the word απεχω here used, call Αποχη. Compare #Pr 3:27.

I abound, I am full] As a bird with a little eye, and the advantage of a wing to soar with, may see far wider than an ox with a greater; so the righteous with a little estate, joined with faith and devotion, may feel more comfort and see more of God's bounty than one of vast possessions, whose heart cannot lift itself above the earth. They say, it is not the great cage that maketh the bird sing. Sure we are, it is not the great estate that brings always the inward joy, the cordial contentment. A staff may help a traveller, but a bundle of staves may be a burden to him. The greatest thing in the least compass, saith one, is a contented mind in a man's body; which if a man have, deliciosius vivit etiam is qui teruntium non habet, quam si in unum hominem conflēs sexcentos Sardanapalos, he hath all things, though he want everything.

Ver. 19. But my God] Whom I serve as an ambassador in bonds, #Eph 6:20, and therefore surely he will repay you the sums you have sent me.

Shall supply] Gr. πληρωσει, shall fill up, as he did the widow's vessels: Shut the doors upon thee, saith the prophet, #2Ki 4:4. It was time to shut the doors, when one little vessel must overflow and fill up many greater.

According to his riches in glory] All God's supplies to his come tipped and gilt with a glory upon them, saith one. Providences below, graces within, heaven above; as they have a lovely scarlet blush of Christ's blood upon them; so they are rayed upon with a beam of divine love to them that are in Christ.

Ver. 20. Now unto God] Paul cannot mention God's bounty without a doxology.

Ver. 21. Every saint] A great encouragement to the meaner to be so respected.

Ver. 22. All the saints salute you] Christianity is no enemy to courtesy. God's scholars are taught better manners than to neglect so much as salutations.

They that are of Caesar's household] When Caesar himself lived and died an unconverted caitiff (wretch) and a castaway. So did Seneca, for aught we can find by his writings, though some would have him to be here designed among the rest. {See Trapp on "Ro 1:18"}

Ver. 23. The grace of our Lord] With this wish of grace, grace to them, he both begins and ends. Wisdom is the principal thing, #Pr 4:7.

Colossians

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. Paul an apostle, &c.] This golden Epistle is an epitome, as it were, of that other to the Ephesians; like as that he writeth to the Galatians is an abstract of that other to the Romans.

Ver. 2. Which are at Colosse] A city in Phrygia, swallowed up by an earthquake not long after this Epistle was written. God's judgments are sometimes secret, but ever just. It may be that these Colossians, being led away with the error of these false teachers (who sought to entangle them with many pharisaical observations and philosophical speculations, #Col 2:16-23), had fallen from their own stedfastness, #2Pe 2:17, had suffered a heartquake, being shaken in mind, #2Th 2:2, and were sucked in by the whirlpool of divers and strange doctrines, μη περιφερεσθε, #Heb 13:9. I affirm nothing, but God sometimes speaks from heaven against heretics: as he did against Arius, Nestorius, Stephen Langton, Stephen Gardiner, Arminius (who craftily revived the Pelagian heresy), all which died miserably; that I speak not of those two monsters in New England brought forth by Mistress Hutchinson and Mistress Dyer, and the fearful end that the former of these two women came to, being burnt with her family by the savages of that country. Aliorum perditio tua sit cautio. Christ will have all the Churches know, #Re 2:23, that he is jealous of his glory, and will revenge the quarrel of his covenant. Those primitive Churches sinned away their light, and are therefore now given up to darkness. Infatuati seducebantur, et seducti iudicabantur; saith Austin; that is, being infatuated, they were seduced; and being seduced, they were justly punished. (Melancth.) They were first overspread with Arianism, and therefore now with Mahometism, which is nothing else but Arii sterCUS, the odour of Arius, as one rightly calleth it.

Ver. 3. We give thanks—praying, &c.] Prayer and thanks (saith one) are like the double motion of the lungs; the air that is sucked in by prayer is breathed out again by thanks.

Ver. 4. And of the love, &c.] Faith in Christ Jesus maketh love to all the saints. Therefore they go commonly coupled in Paul's Epistles. And therefore when the disciples heard how often they must forgive an offending brother, "Lord, increase our faith," say they, #Lu 17:5.

{See Trapp on "Lu 17:5"}

Ver. 5. For the hope] It is hope (saith an interpreter here) that plucks up the heart of a man to a constant desire of union by faith with God and of communion by love with man. But by "hope" is here meant the "object of hope."

Ver. 6. As it is in all the world] Eusebius saith that the gospel spread at first through the world like a sunbeam, Αθροως οια τις ηλιου Βολη. The reformation begun by Luther in Germany went on abroad Christendom, as if he had been carried upon angels' wings. That of the Church of England is such as former ages despaired of, the present admireth, and the future shall stand amazed at. It is that miracle, saith one, which we are in these times to look for. (Spec. Europ.)

Ver. 7. Who is for you a faithful minister] Epaphras was their city preacher; whom therefore the apostle here so highly commendeth. Luther is much blamed by his best friends for opposing and disparaging Carolostadius among his own charge at Orlamund, A.D. 1524. (Sculdet. Annul.) A faithful minister should have all good respect, before his own people especially.

Ver. 8. Who also declared unto us] His heart was over joyed with his people's forwardness, and he could not but impart it to the apostle. It was a pride in Montanus to overly ween his Pepuza and Tymium, two pelting parishes not far from Colosse, and to call them Jerusalem, as if they had been the only churches in the world. But this was a commendable practice of Epaphras to relate to St Paul the good he found in his people, that he by an Epistle might further encourage and quicken them.

Ver. 9. In all wisdom and spiritual] {See Trapp on "Eph 1:8"} There you have the same expression. And indeed this Epistle hath many passages common with that, and seemeth to have been written soon after that, cum adhuc qua ad Ephesios scripserat, in animo haerent, while the things that he had written to the Ephesians were yet fresh in his mind and memory. (Grotius.)

Ver. 10. That ye might walk worthy] By walking before God, with God, after God, according to God, as it is phrased in several Scriptures, all to one purpose. See the note on #Eph 4:1.

Unto all pleasing] As Enoch walked with God, and thereby got this testimony, that he "pleased God," #Heb 11:5. So David did all his wills, and was therefore a "man after his heart," #Ac 13:22. The many alls here used in #Col 1:9-11 show that he that will please God must be a "throughout Christian." Now he, and only he, is such, whose whole nature is elevated by the spirit of grace; and all whose principles, practices, and aims are divine and supernatural.

Ver. 11. And longsuffering with joyfulness] The joy of the Lord is the strength of the soul, #Ne 8:10, as true gold comforts and strengthens the heart, that alchemy doth not. At the death of Francis Gamba, a Lombard, that suffered martyrdom, the friars brought in their hands a cross for him to behold, to keep him from desperation at the feeling of the fire. But his mind, he said, was so replenished with joy and comfort in Christ, that he needed neither their cross nor them.

Ver. 12. Of the saints in light] So that though cast into a dark dungeon, the saints may clap their hands upon their bosoms, as Oecolampadius upon his death bed did, and say, Hic sat lucis, Here within is plenty of divine light.

Ver. 13. And hath translated us] A word taken from those that plant colonies, and cause the people to translate their dwellings into another country, μεταστησεν. (Bishop Davenant.)

From the power of darkness] Every natural man is under the power of darkness, nay, of the devil, #Ac 26:18; as the malefactor that goes bound and pinioned up the ladder is under the power of the executioner. Imagine (saith one) a man driven out of the light by devils, where he should see nothing but his tormentors, and that he were made to stand upon snares and gins with iron teeth ready to strike up and grind him to pieces, and that he had gall poured down to his belly, and an instrument raking in his bowels, and the pains of a travailing woman upon him, and a hideous noise of horror in his ears, and a great giant with a spear running upon his neck, and a flame burning upon him round about. Alas, alas, this is the state of every one that is out of Christ, as these places show, whence these comparisons are taken, #Job 18:7,8 20:24,15 15:20,21,26,30.

Ver. 14. Even the forgiveness, &c.] {See Trapp on "Mt 1:21"} Sin is the greatest evil; as that which sets us farthest from God the chiefest good; and as that which procureth and embittereth all other evils that befall us. Christ therefore redeemeth his "Israel from their iniquities," #Ps 130:8; he crosseth out of God's debtbook the black lines of their sins with the red lines of his own blood, and so "redeemeth his Israel out of all their troubles," #Ps 25:22.

Ver. 15. Who is the image] The express image of his person, #Heb 1:2. Milk is not so like milk as this Son is like the Father. By whom also God (otherwise invisible) is manifested to us. And here, he that would see God must set the eyes of faith upon the manhood of Christ; for he "that seeth the Son, seeth the Father." When a man looketh into a crystal glass, it casteth no reflex to him; but put steel upon the back of it, it will cast a reflex. So put the humanity (as a back of steel) to the glass of the Godhead, and it casteth a comfortable reflex to us. As without this, if we look upon God, we see indeed some small sparks of his glory to terrify and amaze us; but in Christ (God and man) we behold the lively and express face of God; not any more as a fearful and terrible Judge, but a most gracious and loving Father to comfort and refresh us.

The firstborn of every creature] As being begotten of the substance of the Father, after a wonderful manner, before all beginnings, and as being the heir of all his Father's goods. And so this text is parallel to that #Heb 1:2.

Ver. 16. For by him were all things] This is a high praise to Christ, #Re 4:11. {See Trapp on "Joh 1:3"}

Whether they be thrones or dominions] i.e. angels with their several degrees or dignities. But what difference there is between these four words, let them tell us that are able (saith Austin), so they prove what they tell us; for my part, I confess I know it not.

Ver. 17. By him all things consist] They would soon fall asunder, had not Christ undertaken to uphold the shattered condition thereof, by the word of his power.

Ver. 18. And he is the head] See the note on #Eph 1:22. Angels are under Christ as a head of government, of influence, of confirmation, not of redemption, as we. (Elton.)

The firstborn from the dead] sc. of those that rise to eternal life. Others rose, but to die again, and by virtue of his resurrection; as the firstborn among the Jews communicated his good things to his brethren.

Ver. 19. In him should all fulness] In a vessel or treasury an emptiness may follow a fulness: not so here. {See Trapp on "Joh 1:14"}

Ver. 20. To reconcile all things] That is, all the saints, who are worth all, better than all, more worth than a world of wicked men, #Heb 11:38. The Jews have a saying, that those seventy souls that went with Jacob into Egypt, were as much as all the seventy nations in the world. What account God maketh of them in comparison to others, see #Isa 43:3,4.

Ver. 21. Enemies in your mind] Haters of God, #Ro 1:30, and so, God slayers, #1Jo 3:15. Omne peccatum est Deicidium. All sin is a killer of God.

Ver. 22. To present you holy and unblameable] By his righteousness imputed and imparted; though most interpreters expound this text of sanctification, and not of justification or future perfection.

Ver. 23. If ye continue in the faith] All the promises are made to perseverance in grace. He that continueth to the end shall be saved. Be faithful to the death, and thou shalt have a crown of life. #Mt 24:13 Re 2:10. But fugitivo nulla corona; by fleeing this is no crown, if any withdraw he falleth into hell's mouth, #Heb 10:39.

Grounded and settled] When faith bears fruit upward, it will take root downward, and make a man as a tree by the river's side, and not as the chaff in the fan, #Ps 1:3,4, or as the boat without ballast.

Preached to every creature] That is, to every reasonable creature, #Mr 16:15. Though to many we preach to no more purpose than Bede did when he preached to a heap of stones: these are unreasonable creatures, #2Th 3:2.

Ver. 24. And fill up that which is behind] Christ suffered much for Paul; it is but meet therefore that Paul should suffer somewhat for Christ. All our troubles are but the slivers and chips, as it were, of his cross. {a} When the Jews offered our Saviour gall and vinegar, he tasted it, but would not drink. He left the rest for his Church, and they must pledge him, not to expiate sin, but for their trial and exercise.

Of the afflictions of Christ] That is (say some) of the Church; the afflictions whereof are said to be the afflictions of Christ, by reason of the sympathy between the head and the members, #Ac 9:4 2Co 1:5 Heb 11:26.

For his body's sake] For the confirmation of men's minds in the truth of the gospel.

{a} υστερηματα, non προτεπηματα. ανταναπλησω. Vicissim rursus impleo.

Ver. 25. According to the dispensation] What a horrid blasphemy therefore is that of the Jesuits, who stick not to tell the people in their pulpits that St Paul was not secure in his preaching, but by conference with St Peter, nor that he dared publish his Epistles till St Peter had allowed them! (Spec. Europ.)

Ver. 26. But now is made manifest] God hath now opened his whole heart to his saints, #Re 11:3. {See Trapp on "Ro 7:25"} {See Trapp on "Mt 4:16"}

Ver. 27. The hope of glory] All the saints are said to worship in the altar, because they place all their hope of life in Christ's death alone.

Ver. 28. Whom we preach] Ministers do not only preach of Christ, but preach Christ, that is, they give what they speak of. As the manna came down in the dew, so doth the Spirit in the ministry of the gospel.

Ver. 29. I also labour, striving] Labour to lassitude, strive even to an agony. Good ministers are great painstakers; and God that helped the Levites to bear the ark, #1Ch 15:26, will help his servants by his Spirit, working in them with power.

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. For I would that ye knew] Little do most men know what incessant care and pains their faithful ministers take for their souls' health. But we would they should know it, and know those that labour among them, and are over them in the Lord, and to "esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake," #1Th 5:12,13.

Ver. 2. That their hearts may be comforted] Ministers are "sons of consolation," while by them God maketh the heart to hear of joy and gladness, #Ps 51:8, and createth the fruit of their lips peace, peace, &c., #Isa 57:19.

Being knit together] No such comfort upon the earth, as in the communion of saints; it differeth from the happiness of heaven but in degrees only.

Of the full assurance of understanding] Such as was that of St Luke, #Col 1:3. {See Trapp on "Col 1:3"}

Ver. 3. In whom are hid] What so great a matter is it then if we be obscured, and our good parts not so noticed? Usque adeone scire tuum nihil est? (Pers.) Christ was content his treasures should be hidden. In maxima sui mole se minimum ostendunt stellae.

All the treasures of wisdom] Out of Christ then there is no true wisdom or solid comfort to be found. "The depth saith, It is not in me, and the sea saith, It is not with me," #Job 28:14. The world's wizards cannot help us to it, #Jer 8:9. Nescio quomodo imbecillior est medicina quam morbus, saith Cicero concerning all philosophical comforts: The medicine is too weak for the disease. And as for wisdom, that of the flesh serves the worldling (as the ostrich's wings) to make him outrun others upon earth and in earthly things, but helps him never a whit toward heaven. Since the fall, every man hath principium laesum, his brain pin cracked (as to heavenly things), neither can he recover but by getting into Christ.

Ver. 4. With enticing words] With probable and persuasible speeches, πιθανολογια. It is not safe for simple men to hear heretics; for though they may think themselves able enough to answer them, yet they have a notable faculty of persuading the credulous and less cautelous. {a} The Valentinian heretics had an art to persuade before they taught. (Tertull.) The locusts have faces like women. In the year 497, Pope Anastasius II, seeking to reduce the heretic Acacius, was seduced by him.

{a} Cautious, wary, heedful, circumspect. (ED)

Ver. 5. Your order, and the stedfastness] Faith and order, that is, doctrine and discipline, saith one. These two make the Church "fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners," #So 6:10.

The stedfastness of your faith] Gr. στερεωμα. The firmament of your faith. As in the first creation, so in the new creature, there is first the light of knowledge; secondly, the firmament of faith; thirdly, repentant tears and worthy fruits, as seas and trees, &c.

Ver. 6. So walk ye in him] Continue well affected, as ye were at your first conversion; fall not from your own stedfastness, #2Pe 3:17. Happy is he that can say in a spiritual sense (as it was said of Moses), that after long profession of religion his sight is not waxed dim nor his natural strength abated.

Ver. 7. Abounding therein with thanksgiving] Thankfulness for smaller measures of grace gets more. Efficacissimum genus est rogandi, gratias agere. (Plin. Panegy.)

Ver. 8. Lest any man spoil you] A metaphor either from sheep stealers or plunderers, συλαγωγῶν. Seducers plunder men of their precious souls. They take them prisoners, #2Ti 3:6. They make merchandise of them, #2Pe 2:3; or bring them into bondage, smiting them on the face, #2Co 11:20. Constantius the emperor suspecting Julian's proneness to paganism, sent him to be carefully grounded in Christianity to Nicomedia; but he frequented by stealth the company of Libanus and Jamblichus the philosophers, who warped him fully to their bent; which brake out afterwards.

Through philosophy] In the year of Christ 220, the Artemonites, a certain kind of heretics, corrupted Scripture out of Aristotle and Theophrastus, turning all into questions, as afterwards the schoolmen also did, that evil generation of dunghill divines, as one calleth them. Tertullian not unfitly saith, that the philosophers were the patriarchs of the heretics. Not but that there is an excellent and necessary use of philosophy, truly so called; but the apostle meaneth it of their idle speculations and vain deceits, those airy nothings, as the apostle expounds himself. {See Trapp on "Ro 1:21"} {See Trapp on "Ro 1:22"}

And not after Christ] The Gentiles then could not be saved by their philosophy without Christ. And yet not only the divines of Cullen set forth a book concerning the salvation of Aristotle, whom they called Christ's forerunner in naturals, as John Baptist was in supernaturals; but also some of the school doctors, grave men (saith Acosta), do promise men salvation without the knowledge of Christ. (Agrippa, Balaeus.)

Ver. 9. All the fulness of the Godhead bodily] That is, essentially, not in clouds and ceremonies, as once between the cherubims, which the Jews called Shechinah; whereunto the apostle here alludeth.

Ver. 10. And ye are complete] Ye have that true happiness of a man, which philosophers hunted after in the thicket of earthly vanities, and lost themselves in the chase. Varro makes report of 288 different opinions that they had about this subject, and were out in all, while they caught at the shadow of fruits in a hedge of thorns, but could not come at the Tree of Life, Christ Jesus, in whom we are complete.

Ver. 11. Made without hands] Oh, how honourable (saith an interpreter) is the work of mortification, even as to make those huge heavens, &c.

By the circumcision of Christ] Which circumciseth our hearts, pulling off that wretched foreskin.

Ver. 12. Buried with him in baptism] Which succeedeth in the place of circumcision, and is also to us a seal of the righteousness of faith, #Ro 4:11. There were (saith one) many ceremonies in baptism used in the primitive Church, viz. putting off old clothes, drenching in water, so as to seem to be buried in it, putting on new clothes at their coming out; to which Paul alludeth in these two verses.

Of the operation of God] In the work of faith God putteth forth the same almighty power that he did in raising Christ from the dead, #Eph 1:19,20. {See Trapp on "Eph 1:19"} {See Trapp on "Eph 1:20"}

Ver. 13. And you being dead] {See Trapp on "Eph 2:1"}

Hath he quickened] The first springing in the womb of grace is precious before God.

Ver. 14. Blotting out the handwriting] Crossing out the black lines of our sins with the red lines of his Son's blood.

Ver. 15. He made a show of them] A plain allusion to the Roman triumphs. {See Trapp on "Eph 4:8"} Christ made the devils a public spectacle of scorn and derision, as Tamerlane did Bajazet the Great Turk, whom he shut up in an iron cage made like a grate, in such sort, as that he might on every side be seen; and so carried him up and down, as he passed through Asia, to be of his own people scorned and derided.

Ver. 16. Let no man therefore judge you] That is, set not up any such for a judge over your consciences; or, if any usurp such an authority, slight him, according to that, #Ga 5:1. Periculosum est in divinis rebus ut quis cedat iure suo, saith Cyprian. In things of God we should be tender of our liberty.

Ver. 17. Which are a shadow] And so a sign of Christ, obscurely and imperfectly representing him to the old Church, and now abolished by his coming in the flesh. In the twelfth year of our Saviour's age (the same year wherein he taught in the Temple, #Lu 2:42) the sanctuary was polluted by the casting about the bones of dead men through every part and porch thereof, at the very feast of the Passover, in the night time. This Josephus saith was done by the Samaritans, out of hatred to the Jewish services. But God had surely a special hand in it, to show that people that those shadows were to vanish, now that Christ the body was come and showed himself.

Ver. 18. Let no man beguile you] Gr. βραβευετω, brave it over you. Confer #Ex 8:9 "Glory over me," Gloriam assume supra me, as thou hast done over thy sorcerers; I give thee this liberty. See also #Jud 7:2 Isa 10:15.

In a voluntary humility] A proud humility. They would not dare to worship God, but angels, &c., yet were vainly puffed up by their fleshly minds. And something like this was that of the Baptist in refusing to wash Christ, and of Peter in refusing to be washed by him, #Joh 13:8.

And worshipping of angels] Setting them up, as Papists do, for mediators of intercession. Let not us acknowledge any other master of requests in heaven but Christ alone, #1Jo 2:1. But what a piece of knavery is that in Surius and Caranza, who rendering that passage of the Laodicean Council, chap. xxxv., ου δει χριστιανους αγγελους ονομαζειν, Christians may not pray to angels; they make the words to be, Non oportet Christianos ad angulos congregationes facere, Christians may not be corner creepers; and the title they make, De iis qui angulos colunt, of those that worship (not angels, but) corners; against all sense. What! will they put out the eyes of God's people? as he said, #Nu 16:14. Or do they not rather, Festucam quaerere unde oculos sibi eruant, as Bernard hath it, seek straws to put out their own eyes also?

Intruding into those things] εμβατευων, or invading those things, blind and bold, busy about such matters, as whereof there is neither proof nor profit. Of this sort of seducers was that daring Dionysius, that writeth so confidently of the heavenly hierarchy; the schoolmen also with their curious speculations and new niceties, as Scotellus and others.

Vainly puffed up by his fleshly mind] Corruption is the mother of pride, as the devil the father. "He is the king of all the children of pride," #Job 41:34.

Ver. 19. And not holding the head] This is worse than all the former, that they despoiled Christ of his dignity; as if he alone were not sufficient to cherish and increase his Church.

With the increase of God] That proceeds from God, that is, from the Spirit of Christ the head; to which growth is opposed that vain puffing up, #Col 2:18, whereby men do not increase, but swell; grow bigger indeed, but weaker, as a gouty hand.

Ver. 20. Are ye subject to ordinances] Why do ye dogmatize; or be burdened with rites or traditions, as they now are in the Papacy? John Aunt, a Roman Catholic, in his humble appeal to King James, in the sixth chapter of that pamphlet, thus blasphemeth God,—The God of the Protestants (whom he knows to be the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost) is the most uncivil and evil mannered God of all those who have borne the names of God upon earth; yea, worse than Pan, god of the clowns, which can endure no ceremonies nor good manners at all.

Ver. 21. Touch not, taste not, &c.] The words of those impostors, which are here mimetically, or by way of imitation, related. See the like #Ec 10:14, where the wise man graphically describeth the fool's tautologies, "A man cannot tell what shall be, and what shall be, who can tell?" As for the sense, an excellent textman gives it thus: "Touch not"; viz. a woman, #1Co 7:1 "Taste not"; viz. meat. "Handle not"; viz. money, meddle not with secular contracts. (Dr Sclater.) This was that holy hypocrisy practised by these ancient seducers, and still commended by the Popish padres to their novices, and that with much eagerness, "touch not, taste not, handle not," without a copulative. The Capuchin friars in this day may not take or touch silver. This metal is as very anathema to these, as the wedge of gold to Achan, at the offer whereof they start back, as Moses from the serpent; yet they have ever a boy with them, that takes and carries it, and never complains of either metal or measure. In the year of grace 1453, John Capistranus, a Minorite, was sent by Pope Nicolas into Germany, and other countries, to preach and persuade obedience to the see of Rome; and that he might win authority to his doctrine, he strictly forbade feasting and sporting, and other civil exercises, lawful to be used; by which holy hypocrisy (as they call it) he gained the reputation of a very pious man, when he was nothing less. (Funccius.) But these things have a show of wisdom in neglecting the body, &c., and silly souls are much taken with such shows, as children are with gaudies and gewgaws. {a}

{a} A gaudy trifle, plaything, or ornament, a pretty thing of little value, a toy or bauble. CED

Ver. 22. Which all are to perish] The very daily perishing of food and raiment are types of thy perishing also, saith a divine.

Ver. 23. And neglecting of the body] Gr. ἀφειδεια. Not sparing of it, as the old and new Baalites, these Flagellantes; and those also among us (good otherwise), that pinch their bodies too much with penury or excessive fasting, are blameworthy. The body is the soul's servant, and that it may be Par negotio, neither supra nor infra negotium, it must have due honour and nourishment.

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. If ye then be risen with Christ] As ye profess to be, #Col 2:12.

Seek those things, &c.] As Christ risen spake and did only the things pertaining to the kingdom of God, #Ac 1:3, and waited alway for his exaltation into heaven; there should be continual ascensions in our hearts. The Church is compared to pillars of smoke, elationibus fumi, #So 3:6, as having her affections, thoughts, desires upward, heavenward. (Tremel.)

Ver. 2. Set your affections on things] Things above outlast the days of heaven, and run parallel with the life of God and line of eternity. Things on earth are mutable and momentary, subject to vanity and violence; when we grasp them most greedily we embrace nothing but smoke, which wrings tears from our eyes, and vanisheth into nothing. Here then the wise man's question takes place, "Wilt thou set thine eyes upon that which is not?" #Pr 23:5. Wilt thou rejoice in a thing of nought? #Am 6:13. Most people are nailed to the earth, as Sisera was by Jael: they go bowed downward, as that woman in the Gospel that had a spirit of infirmity, and was bound by Satan; they strive (with the toad) who shall die with most earth in their mouths. Surely the saying of that Roman general to the soldier that kept the tents, when he should have been fighting in the field, Non amonimium diligentes, I like not those that are thus overly busy, will be used of God, if when he calls us to seek after and set our affections upon the things above, we are wholly taken up about things of an inferior alloy. Cor camera omnipotentis regis, the heart of man is an inverted Pyramis, narrow below, almost sharpened to a point, that it might touch the earth no more than needs must; and broad above, to receive the influence of heaven. But surely, as we used to say of a top, the keen point of it is toward the earth, but it is flat and dull enough toward heaven; so are most men's affections. "My brethren, these things ought not so to be," as St James speaketh in another case. Our souls should be like a ship, which is made little and narrow downward, but more wide and broad upward.

And not on things on earth] Set not thy heart upon the asses, said Samuel to Saul, since the desire of all Israel is to thee; so, set not your affections on outward things, since better things abide you. It is not for you to be fishing for gudgeons, <sup>{a}</sup> but for towns, forts, and castles, said Cleopatra to Mark Antony. So neither is it for such as hope for heaven to be taken up about trifles; as Domitian spent his time in catching flies, and Artaxerxes in making hafts for knives. There is a generation of Terrigenae fratres, whose names are written in the earth, #Jer 17:13, called the inhabitants of the earth, #Re 12:12, in opposition to the saints and heirs of heaven. These may with the Athenians give for their badge the grasshopper, which is bred, liveth, and dieth in the same ground, and though she hath wings, yet flieth not; sometimes she hoppeth upwards a little, but falleth to the ground again. So here. Or at best, they are but like the eagle, which soars aloft not for any love of heaven; her eye is all the while upon the prey, which by this means she spies sooner and seizeth upon better.

Ver. 3. For ye are dead] Crucified to the world, as Paul, #Ga 6:14, weaned as a child from the breasts, or rather botches of the world, as David, #Ps 131:2. Dead also in regard of daily miseries, #Isa 26:19 1Co 15:31.

And your life is hid] As the pearl is hid, till the shell be broken; or as the life of flowers in winter is hidden in the root; or as God hid Christ under the carpenter's son.

Ver. 4. Then shall we appear] What then do we loading onrselfes with thick clay, or moiling ourselfes here as muckworms?

Ver. 5. Mortify therefore] Sin hath a strong heart, and will not be done to death but with much ado. Peccata saepe raduntur, sed non eradicantur. Sins often are itchy but are not rooted out. Something is done about sins, little against them; as artificial magicians seem to wound themselves, but do not; or as players seem to thrust themselves through their bodies, but the sword passeth only through their clothes. Some part with sin, as Jacob did with Benjamin, because otherwise he should starve; or as Phaltiel did with Michal, lest he should lose his head; but to cast it away because it is offensivum Dei, et aversivum a Deo, an offence against God, and a breach of his law, this is mortification; this is more than to have seraphical knowledge and cherubonical affections in any duty. This (saith a Father) is the hardest text in all the Bible, and the hardest task in all Christianity that we can go about; but hard or not hard, it must be done, or we are undone, and check must be given to our corruptions, though full mate we cannot give.

Covetousness, which is idolatry] For it robs God of his flower, his trust, and draws a man away from all the commandments, #Ps 119:36. {See Trapp on "Eph 5:5"}

Ver. 6. On the children of disobedience] Unpersuadable, uncounsellable persons, that regard not good courses or discourses.

Ver. 7. When ye lived in them] Man's life is a walk, and each action a step either to heaven or hell.

Ver. 8. Filthy communication] The devil's drivel. {See Trapp on "Eph 5:4"}

Ver. 9. Lie not one to another] No, not in jest, lest ye go to hell in earnest. {See Trapp on "Eph 4:25"}

Ye have put off the old man] As the serpent doth his slough, the eagle his bill, the lizard his skin in spring and autumn. (Arist. Hist. Animal. viii.)

Ver. 10. After the image] If moral virtue could be beheld with mortal eyes, saith the philosopher, it would stir up wonderful loves of itself. How much more would the image of God in the hearts of his people! {See Trapp on "Eph 4:24"}

Of him that created him] Adam and Eve were not then created simple and stupid, and without the use of reason; else they would not have been so deceived; as the Rabbis, and, after them, the Socinians have dreamed.

Ver. 11. Christ is all, and in all] Not only in the hearts of men, but in all things else, εν πασι, in the neuter gender. This second Adam hath filled all things again; neither is there anything else required to justification and salvation.

Ver. 12. As the elect of God, holy and beloved] Therefore holy, because elect, and therefore beloved, because holy; as God's name is holy, and therefore reverend, #Ps 111:9. God chose his for his love, and now loves them for his choice.

Bowels of mercies] Draw out thy soul as well as thy sheaf to the hungry, #Isa 58:10. Steep thy thoughts in the mercies of God, saith one, and they will dye thine, as the dye vat doth the cloth.

Humbleness of mind] Even to be content to "be trampled upon," as the word signifieth; {a} or to be laid low as earth, as Paul, #Php 4:12; to have a low mind in a high conversation, as Athanasius (υψηλου βιας ταπεινον φρονημα). Humility is the veil of a Christian, that maketh the bride look most lovely.

{a} ταπεινος, quasi πατεινος, vel εδαφεινος.

Ver. 13. If a man have a quarrel] Occasions will be given, and offences will happen. Now it is the glory of a man to pass over a transgression, #Pr 19:11; see #1Sa 10:27; and to forgive where there is just cause of complaint. If no quarrel, no thank.

Ver. 14. Above all these] "Put on love," as the upper garment, the "parti-coloured coat," whereby all God's children are known (as Joseph, and Tamar, David's daughter, were), the cognizance of every true Christian, #Joh 13:35. {See Trapp on "Joh 13:35"}

The bond of perfectness] Or the couple, the juncture, the tie, συνδεσμος. As the curtains of the tabernacle were joined by loops, so are all true Christians by love.

Ver. 15. And let the peace of God rule] βραβευετω, it certaminis moderator: let it rule after the manner of a moderator or an umpire. Let it oversee and overrule in all your personal discords. Or (as others sense it) let it carry away the prize, or distribute the garlands.

And be ye thankful] sc. To those that are courteous and beneficial to you. 2 Ingratum dixeris, omnia dixeris. Lycurgus would make no law against unthankfulness, because he could not think there could be any such evil committed. If there be any sin in the world against the Holy Ghost, said Queen Elizabeth in a letter to Henry IV of France, it is ingratitude. This saith one, is a monster in nature, a solecism in good manners, a paradox in divinity, a parching wind to dam up the fountain of divine and human favours. (Camden.) Ventus urens et exsiccans.

{a} Arbor honoretur cuius nos umbra tuetur.

Ver. 16. Dwell in you richly] ενουκειτω πλουσιως, indwell in you, as an ingrafted word, incorporated into your souls; so concocted and digested by you, as that you turn it in succum et sanguinem, into a part of yourselves. This is your riches; and thus David reckons of his wealth #Ps 119:32.

Teaching and admonishing one another] It is rightly observed by a late reverend writer, {a} that although we know that which we ask of others as well as they do, yet good speeches will draw us to know it better, by giving occasion to speak more of it, wherewith the Spirit works more effectually, and imprints it deeper, so that it shall be a more rooted knowledge than before. For that doth good that is graciously known; and that is graciously known that the Spirit, seals upon our souls.

In psalms and hymns] Papists forbid people to sing psalms, and permit only choristers to sing, lest the music should be marred.

(Binnius.) But the apostle biddeth every saint to sing. And Nicephorus writeth that the Christians of his time, even as they travelled and journeyed, were wont to sing psalms. Tatianus also saith, That every age and order among the Christians were Christian philosophers, yea, that the very virgins and maids, as they sat at their work in wool, were wont to speak of God's word. {Hist. Eccl. iii. 37}

With grace in your heart] This is the best tune to any Psalm.

{a} Dr Sibbs on Cant. v.

Ver. 17. Do all in the name] By the warrant of his word, and with an aim to his glory. For his sake and service; and to God's acceptance, through Christ's assistance.

Ver. 18. Wives, submit yourselves] Inferiors are ordered before superiors to teach them to do duty before they expect it. Love descendeth, duty ascendeth. Submit is a short word, but of large extent. It comprehendeth, 1. Reverence; "Let the wife see that she reverence her husband," #Eph 5:33, as Sarah did, and is chronicled for it, #1Pe 3:6. But God hath a barren womb for mocking Michal. 2. Obedience to all his lawful commands and restraints, as the Shunammite, #2Ki 4:22, and the Shulamite, who lives by Christ's laws, and yields to his will, direction, and discretion.

As it is fit] Ut decet, as it is comely; and women love comeliness, delight to be neat. Hereby shall appear comely, first, to God, #1Pe 3:4. Next, to men in the gate, #Pr 31:23,31. Thirdly, to their husbands and children, #Pr 31:28. Fourthly, to all, even opposites, as being an ornament to sincerity and holiness, #Tit 2:3.

In the Lord] Though the husband's will be crooked (so it be not wicked), the wife's will is not straight in God's sight, if not pliable to his. Sed liberum arbitrium, pro quo tantopere contenditur, viri amiserunt, uxores arripuerunt, saith an author.

Ver. 19. Husbands, love your wives] He saith not, Rule over them, subdue them if they will not submit, but love them, and so win them to your will; make their yoke as easy as may be, for they stand on even ground with you, as yokefellows, though they draw on the left side. "Yet is she thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant,"

#Mal 2:14. He therefore that is free may frame his choice to his mind; but he that hath chosen must frame his heart to his choice.

“ *Uxorem vir amato, marito pareat uxor:
Coniugis illa sui cor, caput ille suae.* ”

And be not bitter against them] Nothing akin to Nabal, to those Chaldeans, a bitter and furious nation, or to that star, #Re 8:11, called wormwood, that embittereth the third part of the waters. The heathen, when they sacrificed at their marriage feasts, used to cast the gall of the beasts sacrificed outside; to signify that married couples should be as doves without gall. (Plut. praec, coniug.) Vipera virus ob venerationem nuptiarum evomit, saith Basil. The viper, going to copulate, vomiteth up her venom; and wilt not thou, for the honour of marriage, lay aside thy bitterness and boisterous behaviour?

Ver. 20. In all things] Vultu saepe laeditur pietas. {See Trapp on "Eph 6:1"}

Ver. 21. Provoke not your children] {See Trapp on "Eph 6:4"}

Lest they be discouraged] αθυμωσιν, dispirited, and through despondency grow desperate in their resolutions.

Ver. 22. Not with eye service] {See Trapp on "Eph 6:5"} {See Trapp on "Eph 6:6"} It is in the original, "Not with eye services," in the plural, μη εν οφθαλμοδουλειαις; to show that do they never so much service, yet if not in sincerity, all is lost.

Fearing God] That hath power to cast body and soul to hell. Fear him more than you do your masters, that have power over the flesh only.

Ver. 23. Do it heartily, as to the Lord] This is to make a virtue of necessity, while in serving men we serve the Lord Christ, going about our earthly businesses with heavenly minds, with not only a habitual, but an actual intention, as much as may be, of glorifying God in all.

Ver. 24. The reward of inheritance] And so be made of servants sons, whose it is to inherit.

For ye serve the Lord Christ] While godliness runneth through your whole lives as the woof doth through the web, and you seek to approve yourselves to Christ in all your actions and employments.

Ver. 25. But he that doth wrong] Be it but by not doing right to poor servants, which in those days were bondslaves. Note here, saith an interpreter, the apostle's candour; he was not of the humour of lawyers, that seldom speak much but for great men, or when they may have great gifts.

Chapter 4

Ver. 1. That which is just and equal] See they must both to the well choosing and the well using of their servants.

Ye also have a master] #Ec 5:8 "There be higher than they"; and wherein they deal proudly, God is above them, #Ex 18:11.

Ver. 2. Continue in prayer] Constant and instant in it, wait upon it, lay all aside for it (as the word προσκταρερειτε signifieth, #Ac 6:2); while prayer stands still, the trade of godliness stands still.

And watch in the same] Against dulness of spirit, drowsiness of body, Satanic suggestions, secular distractions, &c.

With thanksgiving] Have your thanks ready, for you are sure to speed.

Ver. 3. Withal, praying also for us] {See Trapp on "Eph 6:19"} By the word a door is opened into heaven.

Ver. 4. As I ought to speak] As every sound is not music, so neither is every pulpit discourse a sermon.

Ver. 5. Walk in wisdom] Neither giving offence carelessly, nor taking offence causelessly.

Redeeming the time] Opportunities are headlong, and must be timously laid hold on, or all is lost. {See Trapp on "Eph 5:16"} It is said of Hooper the martyr, that he was spare of diet, sparer of words, and sparest of time. Latimer rose usually at two of the clock in a morning to his study. Bradford slept not commonly more than four hours in the night, and in his bed, till sleep came, his book went not out of his hand. He counted that hour not well spent wherein he did not some good, either with his pen, tongue, or study. These worthies well weighed what a modern writer hath well observed, that they that lose time are the greatest losers and wastefullest prodigals. For of all other possessions two may be had together, but two moments of time (much less two opportunities of time) cannot be possessed together.

Ver. 6. Seasoned with salt] Of mortification and discretion: even our common communication must be so seasoned; as we powder most those meats that be most apt to putrefy, and as upon our uncomely parts we put the more comeliness.

Ver. 7. All my state shall Tychicus] {See Trapp on "Eph 6:21"}

Ver. 8. And comfort your hearts] {See Trapp on "Eph 6:22"}

Ver. 9. With Onesimus a faithful] Once unprofitable, but now profitable, faithful, and beloved. Plato went thrice to Sicily to convert Dionysius, and lost his labour. Polemo of a drunkard, by hearing Xenocrates, became a philosopher. But Ambrose saith well of him, si resipuit a vino, fuit semper tamen temulentus sacrilegio, if he repented of his drunkenness, yet he continued drunk with superstition. Philosophia non abscondit vitia, sed abscondit. Paul's convert proved better, a faithful preacher and a beloved brother.

Ver. 10. Marcus, sister's son to Barnabas] Hence Barnabas stood so stiff for him against Paul his faithful fellow traveller, #Ac 15:37. {See Trapp on "Ac 15:37"} Natural affection sways overly much with some good men, as it did with Eli, and perhaps with Samuel, #1Sa 8:1,3.

If he come unto you, receive him] St Paul had now a better opinion of him than once, when he broke with Barnabas about him. He was not of the Novatian opinion, never to think well again of those that had fallen through infirmity, albeit they repented. They are not to be liked, that say, I never liked him since, &c.

Ver. 11. These only are my fellowworkers] St Paul complains of fickle and false friends, that forsook him in his distress, as Demas, #2Ti 4:10,16, that like Job's friends proved miserable comforters, and as the brooks of Tema, which in a moisture swell, in a drought fail; or as the river Novanus in Lombardy, that at every midsummer solstice swelleth and runneth over the banks, but in mid-winter is clean dry. Howbeit Marcus, Aristarchus, Onesimus, Onesiphorus, and some few others, stuck to him. A great mercy: Optimum solatium, sodalitiium, the greatest comfort and fraternity.

Ver. 12. Epaphras, who is one of you] See #Col 1:7. {See Trapp on "Col 1:7"} This Epaphras is thought to be the same with Epaphroditus; as Sylvanus is called Silas, and Jehoshuah is called Joshua, by an abbreviature.

Always labouring fervently] Constant and instant in prayer, according to that #Col 4:2.

Complete in all the will of God] Gr. πεπληρωμενοι, carried on end by it, with full career; as a ship is by a full gale.

That ye may stand perfect] In his absence especially, for then the devil is most busy, as he was with the people when Moses was but a while in the mount, #Ex 32:1-6.

Ver. 13. And them that are in Laodicea] A minister must be like the sun, that shineth not only within its own orb, but illigheneth all round about it and within the reach of it.

Ver. 14. And Demas] He will needs be one, and is, but without any title of honour, as the rest. He began to be suspected; and he afterwards proved an utter apostate, and (as Dorotheus saith) an idol priest at Thessalonica.

Ver. 15. Salute the brethren] Christianity is no enemy to courtesy. It removes not, but rectifies it.

The brethren which are in Laodicea] There God had his remnant, there Christ was Amen, the faithful and true witness, and there there were such as by a new creation of God were begotten again, even among so careless a multitude, #Re 3:14. There remain in Constantinople at this day above 20 churches of Christians; and in Thessalonica above 30, besides very many churches abroad in the province, &c. The whole country of Asia the Less, wherein stood Colosse, Laodicea, and Hierapolis, is now under the power and superstition of the Turk; yet no doubt God hath his remnant there. (Chytrae de statu Ecclesiar.)

Ver. 16. Read the Epistle from Laodicea] Other good books then must be read as well as the Scriptures; yet not idle pamphlets and love toys. These should be burnt, as those curious books were, #Ac 19:18-20

Ver. 17. And say to Archippus] Archippus was a pastor of the Laodicean Church; so that before St John's time in Patmos they began to cool.

Take heed to the ministry] Gr. see to it, that is, to thyself, and to all the flock, #Ac 20:28 cf. #Eze 34:31, to strengthen the weak, to heal the infected: to splint the sprained, to reduce the wandering, to seek the lost, to cherish the strong: work enough. Age ergo quod tui muneris est, as Valentinian said to Ambrose. Clericus in oppido, piscis in arido, A preacher in the town, fish in the desert, saith another. "What is that to thee?" #Joh 21:22. The Church is thy proper element, the pulpit thy right ubi where, the sanctuary should be the centre of all thy circumference. It is a good hearing that the Levite makes haste home, #Jud 19:10. An honest man's heart is the place where his calling is. And this charge, by how much the more sacred it is, so much the more attendance it expects. Even a day breaks square with those with a good conscience.

That thou fulfil it] By preaching the word in season, out of season, &c., and so doing the work of an evangelist, fulfilling his ministry, #2Ti 4:2-5. This to do the people were to excite their pastor; yet with all due respect and reverence to his office, #1Ti 5:1, μη επιπληξῆς. An elder must not be lashed or jerked with the scourge of the tongue as a puny, but entreated as a father.

Ver. 18. Remember my bonds] To pray for me, and minister to me, &c. This he here inserteth as his last charge, that they may the better remember and practise it. Something we should leave with those we love that may stick by them, and stand them instead when we are gone or have done with them.

1 Thessalonians

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. Paul and Sylvanus] Otherwise called Silas, #Ac 15:40, as Jehoshuah the high priest is called Joshua, #Ezr 3:2 5:2. It is not therefore unlawful to abbreviate names.

Unto the church of the Thessalonians] Thessalonica, the chief city of Macedonia, is now known by the name of Salonicks, and is under the Turk. For the plantation of a church here, see #Ac 17:1-9. {See Trapp on "Ac 17:1"} &c. There are 30 churches of Christians in it this day, and but three of Mahometans.

Ver. 2. We give thanks to God] Thus he beginneth most of his Epistles with thanksgiving; this being held to be the first that ever he wrote to any of the Churches, the beginning of his strength, as Reuben (Jacob's firstborn), and the excellency of dignity, #Ge 49:3.

Ver. 3. Remembering without ceasing] A good memory is required to assiduity in prayer. All the faculties are exercised, and the whole man hard wrought.

Your work of faith] We believe not without much conflict. When faith goes about to lay hold on Christ, the devil raps her on the fingers, and would beat her off. Hence the believer hath such ado to believe.

And labour of love] Every man's love is as his labour is, #Heb 6:10. Therefore also love and labour are of one root in Latin, because love is diligent and laborious.

And patience of hope] To wait the accomplishment of God's promises. Thus every Christian virtue hath its proper distinctive character, to difference it from that which is counterfeit.

In the sight of God] True grace will stand to God's trial, which false grace cannot abide; as alchemy gold cannot pass the seventh fire; nor doth it comfort the heart as true gold doth.

Ver. 4. Knowing, brethren beloved of God] Knowing it by the judgment of charity, not of infallibility. He that believeth hath the witness in himself, #1Jo 5:10. But the white stone, the new name, and the hidden man of the heart are not certainly known to any, but to such as have them. Howbeit, holy men in some degree are known one to another, to make the communion of saints the sweeter. Strong confidence one may have of another's salvation; but no certainty either of sense or of science, much less of faith, or immediate revelation.

Ver. 5. For our gospel came not] Hence he collects their election, according to #Ac 13:48. The ministry sent to a place is an argument of some elect there. A husbandman would not send his servant with his sickle to reap thistles and nettles only.

As ye know what manner] The Church is endued with the spirit of discerning; and ministers should approve themselves spiritual in word and conversation, #2Co 12:10.

Ver. 6. Followers of us and of the Lord] The apostles walked in Christ, #Col 2:6; as Christ, #1Jo 2:6; their lives were a commentary upon his life, #1Pe 2:9.

Received the word in much affliction] Opposition is (as Calvin wrote to the French king) Evangelii genius, the black angel that dogs the gospel at the heels. To preach (saith Luther) is nothing else but to get the ill will of the world.

With joy of the Holy Ghost] Which bore them up above all persecutions, as blown bladders bear a man up aloft all waters.

Ver. 7. So that ye were ensamples] Gr. τυποι, types, moulds, patterns of piety, to those that were in Christ long before them. A brave commendation, and not every man's happiness. Affliction to some is like a growing ague, or as a warm rain to garden herbs, that maketh them shoot up sensibly in one night.

Ver. 8. For from you sounded out] A vobis diffamatus est sermo. Remigius, commenting upon this place, telleth us that the apostle here speaketh somewhat improperly, by saying diffamatus for divulgatus. This man knew not (belike) that St Paul wrote in Greek and not in Latin; so great was the ignorance of that ninth age. The Greek word importeth that from the Thessalonians the word of the Lord sounded out as a trumpet, and resounded as an echo, ἐξηχῆται. A vobis ebuccinatus est sermo Domini; so Vatablus rendereth it.

So that we need not to speak] A good people may ease their pastor of a great deal of pains.

Ver. 9. What manner of entering in, &c.] The pastor hath his part and share in the people's commendation. If they grow famous, he cannot lie obscured.

Ye turned to God from idols] They gave not the half turn only from east to south, but the whole turn, from the east to west, from idols to God, #Ho 6:4. Ephraim shall say, "What have I to do any more with idols?" #Ho 14:8; those Balaam blocks, those mawmets and monuments of idolatry, those images of jealousy? Ephraim is now no longer as a cake half-baked, as a speckled bird, #Jer 12:9. Better be a Papist than an atheist, a gross idolater than a profligate professor, a carnal gospeller.

Ver. 10. And to wait for his Son] This is pinned as a badge to the sleeve of every true believer, that he looketh and longeth for Christ's coming to judgment. The old character of God's people was, they waited for the consolation of Israel, Christ's first coming; so is it now, the earnest expectation of his second coming.

Which delivered us from the wrath to come] This is the Etymon, the notation of his name Jesus, a Saviour. Salvation properly betokeneth the privative part of man's happiness, but includeth the positive too. King Alphonsus, when he saw a poor man pulling his beast out of a ditch, he put to his hand to help him. Is it not more that Christ should stoop so low as to help us (who were in worse condition than the beasts that perish) out of the ditch of destruction? The devil is said to be λεων ωρουμενος, a roaring lion, but our comfort is, that the Lion of the tribe of Judah is οο ρουμενος he that delivereth us from the wrath to come. The Sun of righteousness (as Pelbartus saith, allegorizing God's covenant signified by a rainbow) falling into a cloud of passion, is our security against a deluge of damnation.

The wrath to come] There is a present wrath that men suffer; and who knoweth the power of this wrath? Even according to a man's fear, so is God's wrath, #Ps 90:11. Let a man fear never so much, he shall be sure to feel more, when God's wrath falls upon him. A timorous man can fancy vast and terrible fears; fire, sword, racks, scalding lead, boiling pitch, running bell metal. Yet all this is but as a painted fire to the wrath to come, that eternity of extremity, which graceless persons shall never be able to avoid or to abide.

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. Our entrance in unto you] The word preached in any place doth usually work best at first. After a while men become like unto birds in a belfry, that can well enough bear the noise of the bells and not be frightened.

Ver. 2. But even after that, &c.] From this to the 13th verse, ministers may as in a mirror see how they ought to behave themselves in the house of God.

We were bold in our God] The Church, as the palm tree, spreadeth and springeth up the more it is oppressed; as the bottle or bladder, that may be dipped, not drowned; as the oak, that sprouts out the thicker from the maims and wounds it receiveth. {a} This daunted Diocletian, and made him lay down the empire in discontent. This caused Julian the Apostate to leave off force, and use fraud to draw men from the truth.

Ver. 3. Was not of deceit, nor, &c.] Neither for profit, pleasure, nor preferment (the worldling's trinity). A minister, as he should have nothing to lose, so he should have nothing to get, but should be above all price or sale. He hath too impotent a spirit, whose services, like the dial, must be set only by the sun of self-respects. True grace is of a most masculine, disengaged, noble nature, and remits nothing of its diligence either for fear of a frown or hope of a reward.

Ver. 4. But as we were allowed] Enabled and counted faithful, #1Ti 1:12.

Not as pleasing men] {See Trapp on "Ga 1:10"} Men be they pleased or displeased, God must not be displeased.

But God] Who looketh upon displeasing service as a double dishonour.

Which trieth our hearts] And so knoweth our aims, Quicquid igitur agas, propter Deum agas. Propter te, Deum agas, propter te, as he cried. It stands me upon, saith one, to see, that though my work be but mean, yet it may be clean; though not fine, yet not foul, soiled and slubbered with the slur of a rotten heart, since it is God I have to deal with. (Drus. Apophth.)

Ver. 5. For neither at any time] Sinisterity of ends is here opposed to sincerity in God's works. And flattery, covetousness, ambition declared to be the fountains of insincerity.

Nor a cloak of covetousness] This sin goes usually cloaked with the name and pretence of good husbandry. The ordinary language of the world is, "He is a man somewhat with the hardest, a little with the nearest, a little too much for the world, but yet a marvellously honest, a wondrously good man." Covetousness is seldom without feigned words, #2Pe 2:3, to hide it from others without, or subtle thoughts and evasions to blind fold the conscience within. Alcibiades embroidered a curtain with lions and eagles to cover his pictures of owls and apes; so all sin hath its vizard; neither is there any wool so coarse but will take some colour.

God is witness] That he flattered not; he reports himself to them, that he coveted not; he appeals to God, who is not mocked with masks or specious pretences, but will pull off the vizard, wash off the covetous man's varnish with rivers of brimstone. Religion, as it is the best armour, so it is the worst cloak: and will serve self-seekers, as the disguise Ahab put on and perished, #1Ki 22:30. The covetousness of the court of Rome was anciently muttered forth in that saying, Curia Romana non petit ovem siue lana; and again, In parabola ovis, capras suas quaerunt. This the poor people were ever sensible of; but dare say little. There is a story of Walter Mapes (sometime archdeacon of Oxford), who relating the gross simony <sup>{a}</sup> of the pope for confirming the election of Reinold, bastard son to Jocelin, bishop of Sarum, into the see of Bath, concludeth his narration thus, Sit Domina tamen materque nostra Roma baculus in aqua fractus; et absit credere quae vidimus, i.e. Nevertheless let our lady and mother of Rome be as a staff in the water, that seems only to be broken; and far be it from us to believe our own eyes. They dared not see, or at least say what they saw; but now all is laid open, and shall be much more at the last day, when (as at a great fair) all fardels {b} shall be uncorded, and all packs opened.

{a} The act or practice of buying or selling ecclesiastical preferments, benefices, or emoluments; traffic in sacred things. (ED)

{b} A bundle, a little pack; a parcel. (ED)

Ver. 6. Nor of men sought we glory] Theologus gloriae dicit malum bonum, et bonum malum (saith Luther), Theologus crucis dicit id quod res est: A vain glorious preacher calleth good evil, and evil good, &c.

Ver. 7. But we were gentle] This is the way to win; for man is a cursed, crabbed creature, and may be led, but not easily dragged to duty. Soft words and hard arguments soonest prevail with him.

Ver. 8. So being affectionately desirous] Honing and hankering after you. The Greek word signifieth the most swaying heart passion, the most effectual affection. (μειρομενοι. Cupidine rapti.)

But also our own souls] Greater love than this hath no man; and such a love ought there to be in every pastor toward his people. Love is liberal, charity is no churl.

Ver. 9. Our labour] Even to lassitude, yea, to solitude.

And travail] So, to spare them, he spared not himself.

Ver. 10. Ye are witnesses, and God also] Happy is that man that can be acquitted by himself in private, in public by others, in both by God: bystanders may see more.

How holily, and justly, and unblameably] Here he practised his own precepts, #Tit 2:12. And herein lies the difference between divinity and other sciences, that it is not enough to prescribe it, but you must practise it, as lessons of music, and as a copy must not be read only, but acted also.

Ver. 11. As a father] Before, as a mother, #1Th 2:7, a nurse not mercenary, but natural, with greatest tenderness and indulgence. Here he tempers his mother-like meekness with the gravity and authority of a father. Ministers must turn themselves, as it were, into all shapes and fashions, both of speech and spirit, to win people to God.

Ver. 12. Walk worthy of God] Whose livery we wear, whose image we bear, whose kingdom we are called unto, &c. Those that stood with the Lamb, #Re 14:1, had his Father's name on their foreheads. Our wanderings reflect upon God, who will require and requite.

Ver. 13. Not as the word of men] Whom yet he maketh use of to cast down Satan's strongholds, as he made use of little David against Goliath, and of the frogs and flies against Pharaoh, and of the ram's horns against Jericho. This treasure, these pearls, he giveth us in vile oyster shells, #2Co 4:7.

As the word of God] With reverence and diligence, with all good affection and attention. When Samuel knew it was God that called him (and not Eli) he had no more mind to sleep. "We are all here present before God," saith Cornelius, #Ac 10:33. And "God is in you of a truth," saith the Corinthian convert, #1Co 14:25.

Ver. 14. Of your own countrymen] Malice against the truth breaks all bonds of nature or amity. Moab was irked because of Israel, or vexed at them, #Nu 22:3,4, though they were allied to Israel, who passed by them peaceably, and by the slaughter of the Amorites, freed them from evil neighbours, which had taken away part of their country, &c. The English Papists in four years sacrificed 800 of their innocent countrymen in Queen Mary's days. In the holy war (as they called it) against the Waldenses (those ancient Protestants) in France, the pope's great army took one great populous city, and put to the sword 60,000, among whom were many of their own Catholics. For, Arnoldus the Cistercian, abbot (being the pope's envoy in this great war) commanded the captains and soldiers, saying, Caedite eos, novit enim Dominus qui sunt eius, i.e. Down with them all, for God knoweth which of them are his. (Caesarius Heisterbach. Hist. v. 21.) And the issue of this was, ut potius caesi, fugati, bonis ac dignitatibus ubique spoliati sint, quam ut erroris convicti resipuerint, i.e. that they were rather slain, scattered, spoiled of their goods and dignities, than brought by a sight of any error to sound repentance, saith Thuanus, an ingenuous Papist.

Ver. 15. Who both killed the Lord] And are therefore banished out of the world, as it were, by a common consent of nations, for their inexpressible guilt. Even in Jerusalem there be hardly to be found a hundred households of them. (Breerwood Inquir.) In Cyprus it is at present death for any Jew to set his foot upon the island. (Dio. Cass.) In Thessalonica and Constantinople there are many thousands of them, but at every Easter they are in danger of death, if they but stir out-of-doors, because at that time they crucified our Saviour. (Biddulph.) The Turks themselves so hate the Jews for crucifying Christ, that they use to say in detestation of a thing, "I would I might die a Jew." Neither will they permit a Jew to turn Turk, unless he be first baptized. The Romans permitted other nations to call themselves Romans after they had conquered them; but so they would not suffer the Jews to do, though they complied never so much, and were their servants (as August. in Psal. lviii. witnesseth), lest there should some blot stick to the glory of the Romans, by that odious and sordid people. O Marcomanni, O Quadi! said one emperor.

And their own prophets] Whose slaughter (though long since done) is in recent remembrance with God, and is reckoned and registered together with the death of Christ himself.

And have persecuted us] They still curse the Christians in their daily prayers, which they close up with a Maledic, Domine, Nazaraeis. Curse, of God, Christians. Lopez at Tyburn affirmed, that he had loved Queen Elizabeth as he loved Jesus Christ. Which from a Jew was heard not without laughter. (Camden's Elizabeth.)

And they please not God] Yet they challenged the title of God's Church, as the Papists will needs be the only Catholics. They cried, ad ravim usque, The temple of the Lord, when they nothing regarded the Lord of the temple.

And are contrary to all men] Being herein rather Ishmaelites than Israelites, #Ge 16:12. The trout delights to swim against stream. The herb alexander will agree with no other herb but itself. Such antipodes {a} are our Jesuits, so insufferably ambitious and impudent, that neither their doctrine nor their conversation pleaseth those of their own religion.

{a} Diametrically opposite (to anything). (ED)

Ver. 16. Forbidding us to speak to the Gentiles] Bale out of Capgrave reporteth, that St Asaph (as they called him) had this saying often in his mouth, Quicumque verbo Dei adversantur, salutem hominum invident, Those that are against the preaching of the word, do envy the salvation of men. Such were Stephen Gardiner, and before him Archbishop Arundel, who died of a grievous swelling in their tongues, and that deservedly; quod verbum Dei alligassent, ne suo tempore praedicaretur; saith the historian, because they had hindered the preaching of the word.

To fill up their sin alway] Bounds are set to sin by the Divine decree, #Zec 5:7. Wickedness is compared to a woman pressed in an ephah; when the measure is full, the business is finished. {See Trapp on "Mt 23:32"} The bottle of wickedness, when once filled with those bitter waters, sinketh to the bottom.

Wrath is come upon them to the uttermost] Or, until the end: wrath is come upon them finally (εις τελος), so as it shall never be removed; cloud, which at length covered the whole heaven; so some interpret it. God's wrath is like Elijah's, or as thunder, which you hear at first a little roaring noise afar off; but stay awhile, it is a dreadful crack. "Who knoweth the power of thy wrath?" saith Moses, #Ps 90:11. The Jews are to this day a people of God's wrath and curse.

Ver. 17. For a short time] Or, In a short time, suddenly. See #Ac 17:9,10.

Being taken away] Or separated, as orphans are from their dear parents, or parents from their deceased children, απορφανισθεντες. The separation of friends is so grievous, that death itself is styled no other than a departure.

Ver. 18. But Satan hindered us] He still doth his utmost to hinder the communion of saints, and to keep them asunder. He knows two are better than one; and therefore he stirred up the primitive persecutors to banish the Christians, and to confine them to isles and mines. Where they could not have access one to another: whether Satan hindered Paul by sickness, or by imprisonments, or tempests at sea, who can resolve saith one. (Cyprian. Epist.) He hindered him by casting a necessity upon him of disputing often with the Stoics and Epicures which were at Athens, saith another interpreter. Satan-Hindering

Ver. 19. For what is our hope, &c.] A very lively and lofty expression, such as the apostle ordinarily useth in speaking of heavenly glory. Nec Christus, nec caelum patitur hyperbolen, A man can hardly hyperbolize in speaking of heaven.

Ver. 20. For ye are our glory and joy] Let no man therefore envy us these temporary good things, a competent maintenance: there are better things abide us above.

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. No longer forbear] στεγοντες, or, stand under our burden of vehement desire after you. See a like expression, #Isa 42:14. As a travailing woman bites in her pain as long as she is able, and at length cries aloud; so God is patient till he can hold no longer, &c.

We thought it good] Publica privatis anteferenda bonis, A public spirit is a precious spirit. And that is a golden saying of divine Plato, η δε δικαιοσυνη αλλοτριον μεν αγαθον, οικεια δε ζημια. (De Rep. lib. 3.) Goodness is all for the good of others, though to its own disadvantage; like as nature will venture its own particular good for the general. As heavy things will ascend to keep out vacuity, and to preserve the universe.

Ver. 2. To establish you] Who haply are somewhat unsettled by the troubles that befell me among you. But as young trees shaken, root the better, so should you. Capito in an epistle to the brethren at Basil, writeth thus, Pauciores vobiscum perimuntur, quod ita Domino visum est ut stabiliantur seu lenibns pluviis, ac sementis mollioribus, plantulae in arbores maximas proditurae.

Ver. 3. That no man should be moved] Gr. σαινεσθαι, flattered, as a dog flattereth, by moving his tail; q.d. The devil, by flattering you, with promise of more ease by a contrary course, will but do as a dirty dog, defile you with fawning.

That we are appointed thereunto] viz. By God's decree, whereunto if damned ghosts must subscribe, #Ro 9:19,20, how much more should God's elect! #1Pe 1:6. It is but a delicacy to dream of heaven to be had without much hardship. Many would fain pull a rose without pricks, feed on manchet, pass a deliciis ad delicias: they would sit in the seat of honour with Zebedee's children, but not drink the cup of affliction. This will not be. Elijah must to heaven, but in a whirlwind. Daniel must be brought through lions and leopards to the meek Lamb of God, Messiah the Prince. John shall hear the harmony of harpers, but first the noise of thunder. The Israelites had five days of sorrow before their feast of joy, #Le 23:27,34. The first handsel {a} God gave them in their journey to the promised Canaan, was bitterness and thirst. It was by Marah that they came to Elim; neither could they taste of the sweet waters of Siloam, till they had crossed the swift streams of Jordan. We cannot sing the song of Moses, of God's servants, and of the Lamb, but we must first swim through a sea of burning glass, #Re 15:2,3. Non nisi per angusta, ad augusta. Not unless through trouble to glory.

{a} Lucky prognostic, omen, presage, augury; token or omen of good luck. Obs. ED

Ver. 4. We told you before] Darts foreseen are dintless: premonition is the best premunition. Troubles foretold come never a whit the sooner, but far the easier; whereas coming unexpected, they find weak minds secure, make them miserable, leave them desperate.

Ver. 5. To know your faith] That is, your perseverance and increase in faith. That which the devil mainly endeavoureth, is, to hinder and unsettle our faith, as he dealt by Eve and Peter, #Lu 22:31,32, to batter this buckler, #Eph 6:16, for then he knows he may do what he will with us. Omnia perdidit, qui fidem amisit. He destroys all things who loses faith. (Seneca.)

Lest by some means the tempter] Who feels our pulses, and fits his assaults accordingly. {See Trapp on "Mt 4:3"}

And our labour be in vain] So it proves many times by Satan's malice. Other labourers can find their work as they left it, not so ministers; the devil cometh and marreth all.

Ver. 6. And brought us good tidings] Here the devil was disappointed. He had been nibbling, but could not fasten: this matter was not malleable. God stints him, and staves him off, when he would worry his poor lambs, turning all to their eternal good.

Ver. 7. We were comforted] Nothing so cheereth up the heart of a godly minister as his people's tractableness. If this be wanting, his very heart is broken, though they be otherwise never so kind and courteous to him.

Ver. 8. For now we live] A joyless life is a lifeless life. An unsuccessful pastor hath little or no joy in his life. "Thus shall ye say to him that liveth," #1Sa 25:6, that is, that liveth at heart's ease. "All the days of the afflicted are evil," #Pr 15:15. As good be out of the world (say they) as have no joy of the world. Now, "I have no greater joy," saith St John, "than to hear that my children walk in the truth," #3Jo 4. This revived his good old heart, and made it dance lavoltas {a} in his bosom.

{a} A lively dance for two persons, consisting a good deal in high and active bounds. (ED)

Ver. 9. For what thanks, &c.] q.d. No sufficient thanks. Spiritual joy vents itself by an infinite desire of praising God, whereby it seeks to fill up the distance between God and the good soul. In our thanksgivings let there be modus sine modo, as Bernard hath it. Let us still deliberate what more to do, as David, #Ps 116:12.

Ver. 10. Night and day praying exceedingly] Prayer must be constant and instant, with utmost assiduity and intention of affection, #Lu 18:1. {See Trapp on "Lu 18:1"}

And might perfect that which is lacking in your faith] Faith is not as Jonah's gourd, that grew up in a night; or as a bullet in a mould, that is made in a moment; but is perfected by degrees and so made even (as the word καταρτισσαι signifies here in the original) and complete.

Ver. 11. Now God himself. &c.] At the very mentioning of prayer, he falls a praying. Good affections soon kindle in a gracious heart.

Direct our way unto you] "A man's heart deviseth his way, but the Lord directeth his steps," #Pr 16:9. Let God be our pilot, if we mean to make a good voyage of it. Let our hand be on the stern, our eye on the star; let our course as the mariner's, be guided by the heavens.

Ver. 12. To increase and abound] By doubling his word, he signifieth a double portion of God's, grace, which he wisheth unto them; we are sure to receive as much good from God by prayer as we can bring faith to bear away. "Hitherto ye have asked me nothing." Ask, saith Christ, ask enough, open your mouth wide, &c.

Ver. 13. To the end he may stablish] Love is of a ferruminating, establishing property. That grace will not hang together, nor hold out, that is severed from charity.

Chapter 4

Ver. 1. How ye ought to walk] Every good man is a great peripatetic, walks much. Christ also walks; so doth the devil, apostates, heretics, worldlings; but with this difference: Christ walketh in the middle, #Re 1:13 2:1; the devil to and fro, up and down, #Job 1:7, his motion is circular, and therefore fraudulent, #1Pe 5:8. Apostates run retrograde, they stumble at the cross, and fall backward, Heretics run out on the right hand, worldlings on the left, #Jas 1:14. Hypocrites turn aside unto their crooked ways, #Ps 125:5. They follow Christ, as Samson did his parents, till he came by the carcase; or as a dog doth his master, till he meeteth with a carrion. The true Christian only walks so as to please God; his eyes look right on, his eyelids look straight before him, #Pr 4:25. He goes not back, with Hezekiah's sun, nor stands at a stay, as Joshua's, but rejoiceth as a strong man to run his race, as David's sun, #Ps 19:5. Yea, he "shineth more and more unto the perfect day," as Solomon's, #Pr 4:18.

Ver. 2. For ye know what, &c.] It is expected therefore that ye do them; else the more heinous will be your sin, and the more heavy your reckoning, #Isa 59:11,12. What brought such roarings and trouble on them, and that when salvation was looked for? Our iniquities testify to our faces, and we know them.

Ver. 3. For this is the will of God] This is his prescribing will, which we must obey; as we must submit to his disposing will, the will of his providence, and grow acquainted with his approving will, the will of his gracious acceptance, #Mt 18:14 Joh 1:23.

Ver. 4. To possess his vessel] That is, his body, wherein the soul is, Tota in toto, et tota in qualibet parte. If any ask, why so glorious a soul should be in this corruptible body? Besides God's will, and for the order of the universe, Lombard gives this reason, that by the conjunction of the soul with the body (so far its inferior) man might learn a possibility of the union of man with God in glory, notwithstanding the vast distance of nature and excellence, the infiniteness of both in God, the finiteness of both in man.

In sanctification and honour] Chastity is a man's honour; incontinence sets on an indelible blot, #Pr 6:33. Castus, quasi καστος, ornatus. Sic αγνος ab αγος, veneratio.

Ver. 5. Not in the lust of concupiscence] Or, in the disease of lust, that dishonourable disease, #Ro 1:26, that wasteth not only the substance of the body, but the honesty and the honour of it.

Ver. 6. That no man go beyond or defraud] Or, oppress or cheat. Theft by unjust getting is either επιβολη or επιβουλη, by violence or cunning contrivance. What else is this but crimen stellionatus, criminal lizard, the very sin of deception.

The Lord is the avenger] Though haply they lie out of the walk of human justice, as not coming under man's cognizance.

Ver. 7. For God hath not called us] {See Trapp on "Eph 4:1"} It is a sure rule given by the ancients, Confusiones libidinum sunt signa cuius libet sectae. Simon Magus had his Helena, Carpocrates his Marcellina, Apelles his Philumena, Montanus his Priscilla and Maximilla, &c.

Ver. 8. He therefore that despiseth] That thinks it a trick of youth to fornicate, and a trick of wit to over reach or oppress; that holds it a matter of nothing to set light by the former lessons; he shall find that he hath to deal with God and not man in this business; and that it is by the Spirit of God that we have spoken unto him, who will punish their contempt of his counsels.

Ver. 9. Ye need not that I write] Since the divine nature, whereof ye are partakers, prompteth you to it, as common nature doth brethren to love one another. The very name of a brother is potent enough to draw affections.

Are taught of God] Therefore have no such need to be taught by men, as those that are yet strangers to the life of God. Quando Christus magister, quam cito discitur quod docetur? saith Augustine. Nescit tarda molimina gratia Spiritus sancti, saith Ambrose. All Christ's scholars are nimble and notable proficientes.

To love one another] The affections are such things as the Lord only can meddle with; therefore the apostle saith, you "are taught of God to love one another."

Ver. 10. Towards all the brethren] This universality of their love showed the sincerity of it, and that it was for the truth's sake, #2Jo 2. One or more good men may be favoured of those that love no good man, as Jeremiah was of Nebuzaradan, because he foretold the victory.

Ver. 11. Study to be quiet] Gr. Be ambitious of peace; as earnest and eager after it, as the ambitionist is after honour; who commonly rides without reins, rides over other men's heads to compass his desire. The original is, φιλοτιμεισθαι, love the honour to be quiet, or to rest and live in silence and not to be noted or noticed, ut qui vivens moriensque sefellit, affecting rather quietness from the world than any great acquaintance with it.

And to do your own business] Not oaring in other men's boats, not meddling in other men's bishoprics, #1Pe 4:15. Tu fuge ceu pestem, την πολυπραγμοσυνην. Choler in the gall is useful to the body; but if it overflow, the body grows distempered. Let every man keep to his place, and affect to be no meddler, not to suffer as a busy body, Intra pelliculam tuam te contine, keep within your circle; eccentric motions cannot be right.

With your own hands] Or else with your own brains, as students, which is by far the harder labour.

Ver. 12. Lack of nothing] He becometh poor that dealeth with a slack hand, but the hand of the diligent maketh rich, #Pr 10:4. Jabal that dwelt in tents and tended herds had Jubal to his brother, the father of music. Jabal and Jubal, industry and plenty, not without sweet content, dwell together.

Ver. 13. But I would not have, &c.] Ignorance is the mother of mistake, and of causeless trouble, of error and terror; as the Roman soldiers were once much frightened at the sight of the moon's eclipse, till the general had undeceived them by a discourse of the natural cause thereof.

That ye sorrow not] Non est legendus qui moritur, sed desiderandus, saith Tertullian. Abraham mourned moderately for his deceased wife, #Ge 23:2, as is imported by a small caph in the word libcothah, to weep. {Hebrew Text Note} So did David for the child born in adultery, though for Absalom he exceeded. It is one of the dues of the dead to be lamented at their funerals. {a} But Christians must know a measure, and so water their plants, as that they drown them not.

Even as others, which have no hope] Lugeatur mortuus, sed ille quem Gehenna suscipit, quem Tartarus devorat, &c. Let that dead man be lamented whom hell harboureth, whom the devil devoureth, &c. But let us (whose departed souls angels accompany, Christ embosometh, and all the court of heaven comes forth to welcome) account mortality a mercy; and be grieved that we are so long detained here from the company of our Christ, saith Jerome.

{a} Νομιζόμενα. Iusta defunctorum

Ver. 14. Sleep in Jesus] Dead in Christ. The union then is not dissolved by death. But as by sleep the body is refreshed, so by death it is refined. Let our care be to cleave close to Christ in the instant of death; so shall he be to us, both in life and death, advantage.

Ver. 15. By the word of the Lord] Or, in the word, &c., in the self-same words that the Lord used to me, probably, when I was rapped up, #2Co 12:2,4, and heard wordless words.

Shall not prevent them] They shall rise ere we shall be raptured, and as they have been before us in death, so shall they be in glory; now priority is a privilege.

Ver. 16. With a shout] Ingenti angelorum iubilo, et acdamatione, saith Aretius. With a huge applause and acclamation of angels, ἐκ κελευσματι, such as is that of mariners, when near the haven—Italiam Italiam laeto clamore salutant With a happy shout, they greet, Italy, Italy, (Virg. Aeneid), or that of soldiers, when to join battle with the enemy.

And with the trump of God] To require the law, in manner as it was given. Mount Sinai only was then on a flame, but now the whole world, &c. Then God came with ten thousand of his saints; but now thousand thousands shall minister to him, and ten thousand thousands shall stand before him.

Ver. 17. Then we which are alive] He speaketh thus of himself as alive at Christ's coming, because we should daily expect it, and even hasten to it.

Shall be caught up together] This is that mystery mentioned #1Co 15:51, and not till now made known to the world. {See Trapp On "1Co 15:51"}

In the clouds] As Christ also ascended, #Ac 1:9. These be the wagons and chariots that Christ will send for us, as Joseph sent his father's family down to Egypt.

And so shall we ever be, &c.] Oh, blessed hour! oh, thrice happy union! Nothing ever came so near it as the meeting of Jacob and Joseph, or of those two cousins, Mary and Elizabeth, #Lu 1:39-45.

Ver. 18. Wherefore comfort, &c.] Scripture comforts come home to the heart, so do not philosophical. Nescio quomodo (saith Cicero of such medicina) morbo est imbecillior. And albeit it is marvellous sweet to meditate (as Mr Knox found it on his deathbed, so that he would have risen and gone into the pulpit to tell others what he had felt in his soul, Melch. Adam. in Vit.), yet there is a special force of strong consolation in Christian communication, which the Lord usually watereth with the dews of divine blessing.

Chapter 5

Ver. 1. But of the times and the seasons] When Christ shall come to judgment, this is to be reckoned inter arcana imperii. {See Trapp on "Mt 24:36"} The times and the seasons God hath put in his own power, #Ac 1:7. This is a key that he keepeth under his own girdle. Let it suffice us to know that "this is the last hour," that "the ends of the world are come upon us, and that the Lord is at hand." "The time is short" (saith our apostle, #1Co 7:29), or rolled up, as a piece of cloth, only a little left at the end. Moses brake the tables 1582 years before the birth of Christ. Nou existimo, &c., I do not think (saith holy Melancthon) that the time since the end of the Jewish polity shall be much longer than that was before the end thereof. Watch, therefore, and "be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless," #2Pe 3:14.

Ver. 2. The day of the Lord] That day, by a specialty, #Lu 21:34, that great day, #Re 6:17, that day of the declaration of God's just judgment, #Ro 2:5,16, that day of Christ, #2Th 2:2, of God, #2Pe 3:12, wherein he will show himself to be God of gods and Lord of lords.

As a thief in the night] Who giveth no warning, #Mt 24:43. {See Trapp on "Mt 24:43"}

Ver. 3. For when they shall say] Security is the certain usher of destruction, as in Benhadad's army, and Pompey's before the Pharsalian field. Some of them contended for the priesthood, which was Caesar's office, others disposed of the consulships and offices in Rome, as if all were already their own; Pompey himself being so wretchedly reckless, that he never considered into what place he were best to retire if he lost the day.

Then shall sudden destruction] As philosophers say, that before a snow the weather will be warmish; when the wind lies, the great rain falls; and the air is most quiet when suddenly there will be an earthquake.

As travail upon a woman] 1. Certainly; 2. Suddenly; 3. Irresistibly, inevitably.

Ver. 4. Should overtake you as a thief] Though it come upon you as a thief in a time uncertain. Free you are from the destruction of that day, though not altogether free from the distraction of it, till somewhat recollected you remember that now your redemption draweth nigh. Hence the saints love Christ's appearing, #2Ti 4:8; look for it with outstretched necks, and long after it, #Re 22:20.

Ver. 5. We are not of the night, &c.] Alexander willed that the Grecians and barbarians should no longer be distinguished by their garments, but by their manners (Qu. Curtius); so should the children of light and of darkness.

Ver. 6. As do others] What wonder that the Grecians live loosely? saith Chrysostom; but that Christians do so, this is worse, yea, intolerable.

But let us watch and be sober] We must not be like Agrippa's dormouse that would not awake till cast into boiling lead, or Matthiolus's asses fed with hemlock, that lie for dead, and are half hilded ere they can be aroused. (Comment. in Dioscor.) But rather we should resemble Aristotle and others, who were wont to sleep with brazen balls in their hands, which failing on vessels purposely set on their beds' sides, the noise did dissuade immoderate sleep.

Ver. 7. Are drunk in the night] But now, alas, drunkenness is become a noonday devil. Once Peter's argument (saith Mr Harris) was more than probable, "These men are not drunk, for it is but the third hour of the day." Now men are grown such husbands as that by that time they will return their stocks, and have their brains crowing before day.

Ver. 8. Be sober] Drunkenness misbeseemeth any man, but especially a saint; for it robs him of himself, and lays a beast in his room.

Putting on the breastplate of faith and love] Faith is the forepart of this breastplate, whereby we embrace Christ, and love the hinder part thereof, whereby we embosom the saints.

Ver. 9. God hath not appointed us] As he hath all drunken beasts, #1Co 4:10. Yet, all those dry drunkards, #Isa 28:1, that will not awake (though never so much warned) out of the snare of the devil, &c., #2Ti 2:25.

Ver. 10. Whether we wake or sleep] That is, live or die, our souls cannot miscarry; because God will have out the full price of his Son's death. See #Ro 14:8. {See Trapp on "Ro 14:8"}

Ver. 11. Comfort yourselves together] This he subjoins as a singular help to the practice of the former points of duty. Social charity whets on to love and good works, as iron whets iron, as one billet kindleth another, &c.

Ver. 12. And we beseech you, brethren] Do not so exhort and edify one another as to think that now the public ministry is no further useful or needful. Let your pastors have all due respect, be your gifts never so eminent.

Ver. 13. Very highly] Gr. υπερ εκ περισσου, more than exceeding. {a} Turks and Papists shall else condemn us, who honour every hedge priest of theirs, and have them in singular esteem, above their merits. The Grecians gave great respect to their philosophers above their orators, because these taught them how to speak, but those how to live well.

For their work's sake] Which is high and honourable, divine and heavenly, a worthy work, #1Ti 3:1. Such as both in the preparation to it and execution of it draweth them to God, keepeth them with God, and to be ever mindful of God, and no less active for God, #Eph 4:12, by gathering together the saints and building up the body of Christ.

And be at peace among yourselves] So shall your pastor have the better life, and follow his work with more content and comfort.

Lactantius.

Ver. 14. Warn them that are unruly] Cry Cave miser, Beware the wretch, stop them in their cursed career, tell them that hell gapes for them, and is but a little before them; snatch them out of the fire, saving them with fear, #Jude 23. Neglect of private admonition, how it stings the consciences of the best at death, see Mr Hiron's Life prefixed to the second part of his worthy works. See also Mr Baxter's Saint's Everlasting Rest, p. 497.

Comfort the feeble minded] The dispirited, faint hearted, sick, and sinking under the sense of sin and fear of wrath. A Christian should have feeding lips and a healing tongue. The contrary whereunto is deeply detested, #Eze 34:4.

Support the weak] Set to your shoulder and shore them up, αστεξεσθε. Deal not as the herd of deer do with the wounded deer, forsake and push it away from them. Christ gathereth his lambs with his arm, and bears them in his bosom, #Isa 40:11. He had a great care of his weaker tribes when they marched through the wilderness, for in their several brigades he put a strong tribe to two weak tribes, as Judah to Issachar and Zabulon, &c. The Greek word here rendered support, signifieth sublevare alioqui ruituros, saith Beza, to keep up those that would else go to the ground.

Ver. 15. See that none render] Nothing is so natural to us; and Aristotle commends revenge as a piece of manhood, when indeed it is doghood rather. Excellently Lactantius, Non est minus mall

referre iniuriam, quam inferre. It is as bad to recompense wrong as to do wrong. {See Trapp on "Mt 5:44"} {See Trapp on "Ro 12:17"}

But ever follow that which is good] Not to do good is to do evil; not to save a man when we can, is to destroy him, #Mr 3:4. {See Trapp on "Mr 3:4"}

Ver. 16. Rejoice evermore] A duty much pressed in both Testaments, but little practised by many of God's whinnels, who are ever puling and putting finger in the eye, through one discontent or another. The wicked may not rejoice, #Ho 9:1; the saints must, #Ps 32:11 33:1, and that continually, striving to a habitual cheerfulness, which occurs when faith heals the conscience, and grace husheth the affections, and composeth all within: what should ail such a man, not to be perpetually merry?

Ver. 17. Pray without ceasing] While prayer standeth still, the trade of godliness stands still. All good comes into the soul by this door, all true treasure by this merchant's ship. Paul beginneth, continueth, and concludeth his Epistles with prayer, Nehemiah sends up ejaculations ever and anon. Of Carolus Magnus it was spoken, Carolus plus cum Deo quam cum hominibus loquitur; that he spake more with God than with men. Our hearts should be evermore in a praying temper; and our set times of prayer should not be neglected, though we be not always alike prepared and disposed thereunto. Disuse breeds lothness to do it another time. Mahometans, what occasion soever they have, either by profit or pleasure, to divert them, will pray five times every day. {a} Oratio est quantitas discreta, saith the philosopher. Oratio debet esse quantitas continua, saith our apostle. A Christian must ever be praying habitually, and vitally too; for, semper orat qui bene semper agit. He hath manifold occasions of calling actually upon God, as, 1. His daily morning and evening sacrifice, the neglect or non-performance whereof the Jews counted and called an "abomination of desolation." 2. The sanctification of creatures, calling, and relations. 3. New mercies. 4. New infirmities. 5. Variety of crosses. 6. Faintness of faith, spiritual deserts, temptations of Satan. 7. Sweetness of meditation. 8. Forethought of his last account, &c. Neither let any say we cannot awhile; for, 1. "A whet is no let"; a bait by the way is no hindrance to the journey; time spent in prayer hindereth not our business; for though it take so much from the heap, yet it increaseth the heap, as it is said of tithes and offerings, #Mal 3:10 Blind Popery could say, Mass and meat hindereth no man's thrift. 2. The greater the business, the more need there is of prayer to speed it; to be as oil to the wheel, as wings to the bird. Jacob, after he had seen God at Bethel, lift up his feet, and went lustily on his journey, #Ge 29:1 3. How much idle time spend we, either in doing nothing, or worse, that might better be bestowed in this holy duty! Only take heed that frequency breed not formality, that we pray not in a lazy, customary, bedulling strain, like the pace the Spaniard rides, but rousing up ourselves, and wrestling with God, set we sides and shoulders to the work, lift up hearts and hands to heaven, lean upon Christ's bosom as the beloved disciple did, lie hard upon him, as she did upon Samson, to learn out his riddle; press him as they did the prophet, till he was even ashamed to say them nay, #2Ki 2:17, till you put him to the blush, and leave "a blot in his face," υπωπιαζη, as the importunate widow dealt by the unjust judge, #Lu 18:5. So this is prayer; and thus we are to "continue instantly in prayer," to wait upon it (as the word προσκατερειν signifieth), and to persevere in it, as David did, #Ps 27:4 119:81,82.

{a} Lawless Liberty, in a sermon by Mr Terry.

Ver. 18. In everything give thanks] If God give prosperity, praise him, and it shall be increased, saith Augustine. If adversity, praise him, and it shall be removed, or at least sanctified. Job blessed God as well for taking as giving, #Job 1:20-22. He knew that God afflicted him, non ad exitium, sed ad exercitium, to refine him, not to ruin him. But this is Christianorum propria virtus, saith Jerome, a practice proper to Christians, to be heartily thankful for crosses. Basil spends all his sermon upon this text in this theme. Every bird can sing in a summer's day, and it is easy to swim in a warm bath; but in deep affliction to cover God's altar, not with our tears, as #Mal 2:13, but with the calves of our lips, #Ho 14:2, this none can do but the truly religious.

Ver. 19. Quench not the Spirit] In his motions or graces. See the canon for the fire on the altar, and observe it, #Le 6:12,13. Confess here as Hezekiah did, #2Ch 29:6,7. And take the apostle's counsel, #2Ti 1:6. Stir up this fire on the hearth of our hearts; let the priest's lips blow it up into a flame; despise not prophesying, &c. It may be quenched either by the withdrawing of fuel (neglect of ordinances) or by casting on water (falling into foul courses).

Ver. 20. Despise not] i.e. Highly honour, and precious esteem, as an honorary given by Christ to his Church at his wonderful ascension, #Ps 51:17 Eph 4:8,11.

Propheying] That is, preaching, #1Co 14:3, so called because they took their texts out of some of the prophets.

Ver. 21. Prove all things] Take nothing that you hear upon trust (Νηφε και μεμνησο απιστειν, Epicharm.), but bring all to the test, #Isa 8:20. To the law, i.e. the Old Testament, and to the testimony, i.e. the New, which is by St John often called the testimony. Mercer observes that of the Hebrew word ozen for an ear, cometh Moznaiim for a pair of balances; to note that we must weigh what we hear; our two ears must be as balances for that purpose.

Hold fast that which is good] Orthodox, current, agreeable to, and approvable by, the Scriptures, especially that which God hath made good and sweet to your own souls. Hold fast that thou hast, &c. Hast thou found honey? eat it, #Pr 25:16. Go on to heaven eating of it, as Samson did of his honeycomb.

Ver. 22. Abstain from all, &c.] Whatsoever is heterodox, unsound, and unsavoury, shun it, as you would do a serpent in your way or poison in your meats. Theodosius tare the Arian's arguments presented to him in writing, because he found them repugnant to the Scriptures. And Austin retracteth even ironies only, because they had the appearance of lying. God commanded the Jews to abstain from swine's flesh; they would not so much as name it, but in their common talk would call a sow dabbar Achar; another thing. (Elias Thisbit.)

Ver. 23. That your whole spirit, soul, body] The temple consisted of three parts, so doth man; the body is as the outer court, the soul as the holy place, the spirit as the most holy. So the world is three stories high, the earth, the visible heaven, and the third heaven.

Ver. 24. Faithful is he, &c.] Prayer must be founded upon the faithfulness of God in fulfilling his promises. Hereby faith will be strengthened, and affection excited. Prayer is a putting the promises in suit.

Ver. 25. Brethren, pray for us] The best may need the prayers of the meanest. God will have us beholden herein one to another, #1Co 12:21,22. How earnest is that great apostle in begging prayers, #Ro 15:30. Pray for me, I say, pray for me, I say (quoth father Latimer), for I am sometimes so fearful that I could creep into a mouse hole; sometimes God doth visit me again with his comfort. (Acts and Mon.)

Ver. 26. With an holy kiss] Our very civilities should savour of sanctity, and our common conversation relish of religion, #Zec 14:20,21.

Ver. 27. That this epistle be read] It is a matter of greatest necessity and importance that the Holy Scriptures be daily and duly read by all. A sad complaint it is, which Reverend Moulin makes of his countrymen the French Protestants: While they burned us, saith he, for reading the Scriptures, we burnt with zeal to be reading of them. Now, with our liberty is bred also negligence and disesteem of God's word. (Moulin's Theophilus.) And is it not so with us at this day? Our ancestors in Henry VIII's time would sit up all night in reading and hearing, and were at great charges. Some gave five marks for a Bible, that we may have for five shillings.

Ver. 28. Amen] Amen is, 1. Assenting; 2. Assevering; 3. Assuring.

2 Thessalonians

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. In God our Father, and the Lord, &c.] As God is in his people of a truth, #1Co 14:25, so are they in God; and as Christ is at God's right hand, so is the Church at Christ's right hand, #Ps 45:9. Yea, they are in him, and part of him, &c.

Ver. 2. Grace be to you, &c.] {See Trapp on "1Co 1:3"}

And the Lord Jesus Christ] Who is both the fountain, #Joh 1:16, and the conduit, #Joh 1:17; for of his fulness we have all received grace for grace. Grace, that is, God's favour and reconciliation; for grace, that is, for the favour and love that God the Father bare unto his Son, #Eph 1:6.

Ver. 3. We are bound to thank God] Duty is a debt, and a good heart is not well till it have discharged it. As he that hath somewhat lying on his stomach cannot be at ease till he hath got it up, so neither must we, till disburdened in sounding forth God's praises for the good he hath bestowed on us, or on others for our use. This, saith Luther, is sancta crapula; and it can be no hurt to have our hearts thus overcharged.

Because that your faith groweth exceedingly] As corn or plants do after a binding drought. They were under persecution, #2Th 1:4, and gat by it. Storms of persecution beat God's people into their harbour; make them look to their tackling, patience; to their anchor, hope; to their helm, faith; to their card, the word of God; to their captain, Christ; whereas security, like a calm, maketh us forget both our danger and deliverer; Adversity hath whipped many a soul to heaven, saith one, which otherwise prosperity had coached to hell. We are like to children's tops, saith another, that will go but little longer than they are whipped. How often are we sitting down on earth, as if we were loth to go any further, till affliction call to us, as the angel to Elijah, "Up, thou hast a great way to go," and then we trigg.

Ver. 4. For your patience and faith] Faith patienteth the heart, by putting the head into heaven beforehand, and giving a man a glimpse of future glory. Faith drinks to a suffering saint in a cup of Nepenthes, and saith, "Be of good courage, and of good carriage under the cross." Flebile principium melior fortuna sequetur. The right hand of the Lord can mend all. Faith wraps itself in the promises, lays the soul upon Christ, and maketh it of weak to become strong, #Heb 11:34. Whatsoever cross cometh upon it, faith is either as a wreath between the shoulder and the burden, that it wring not, or else a remover of it from the soul to God, by virtue of that writ or warrant, #Ps 55:22 "Cast thy burden," &c.

Ver. 5. Which is a manifest token] ενδειγμα, indigitatio. The saints' sufferings here are an ocular demonstration of a future judgment, wherein all their wrongs shall be righted, all their labour of love recompensed. This held Job's head above water, when else he had been overwhelmed with the floods of affliction, #Job 19:25. So #Da 12:1,2. Though things be otherwise darkly delivered, yet when the Jews were to lose land and life, then plainly the general judgment is mentioned: so #Heb 11:35.

Ver. 6. To recompense tribulation] To trouble these troublers of Israel, and that throughout all eternity, because they would be always troubling God's people if they might; as it is said of the scorpion, that there is not one minute wherein it doth not put forth the sting. (Pliny.)

Ver. 7. Rest with us] As Noah's ark, after much tossing, rested upon the mountains of Ararat; as the ark of the covenant, formerly transportative, was at length settled in Solomon's temple. The word ανειν here used properly signifieth remission and relaxation from hard labour, #Re 14:13 "they rest from their labours." And as the sleep of a labouring man is sweet, so here.

With his mighty angels] Oh, what a glorious day must that needs be, when so many glorious suns shall shine at once; the Lord Christ outshining them all, velut inter ignes luna minores! he will not leave one angel in heaven behind him, #Mr 8:38.

Ver. 8. In flaming fire] Natural fire, #2Pe 3:6,7, whereby the elements shall melt like scalding lead upon the wicked, while they give account with all the world on a flaming fire about their ears. Of this last dreadful fire the very heathen had some blind notions. Esse quoque in fatis meminit, &c. (Ovid, Metam. lib. i.) Lucretius and Cicero (De Nat. Deor.) say somewhat to it, but little to the purpose.

And that obey not the gospel] This is the grand sin of this age, #Joh 3:19. No sin will gripe so in hell as this. This will be a bodkin at the heart one day, I might have been delivered, but I have wilfully cut the throat of my poor soul by refusing those rich offers of mercy made me in the gospel.

Ver. 9. Who shall be punished] Here is the pain of sense, of eternity, of extremity.

From the presence] Here is the pain of loss, which is of the two the greater.

And from the glory of his power] God will set himself to inflict upon the damned such a measure of misery as his power can extend unto.

Ver. 10. To be glorified] This is the chief end of his coming, like as he reprobate some that his mercy in electing others may the more appear.

To be admired] When they shall be seen to shine as the firmament, nay, as the stars, #Da 12:3, nay, as the sun, #Mt 13:43, nay, as Christ himself, that Sun of righteousness, to the great admiration of all men. Admiration is the overplus of expectation; Christ admired at his own work in the Centurion's faith, in Nathanael's integrity ("Behold an Israelite indeed"), in his spouse's beauty, #So 4 How much more shall others admire it at that day, when grace shall become glory, when there shall be no spot, wrinkle, or other deformity! when the saints shall set the crown upon Christ's head, #So 3:11, and cast down their crowns at his feet, #Re 4:10,11, saying, "Thou art worthy," &c.

Ver. 11. The work of faith with power] Without which power neither the goodness of God, nor the good pleasure of his goodness, that is, his decree of glorifying us, nor the work of faith, could be effected.

Ver. 12. That the name of our Lord] It is much for the honour of the saints that Christ shall account himself glorified in their glory. Neither is it for their honour only, but for their advantage; for this glory of Christ shall redound unto them; therefore it is added by the apostle, "And ye in him."

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. Now we beseech you, brethren] Christ's spokesmen must be fair spoken, so wooing for him that they may win upon men's hearts, leading by the hand those that are willing, and drawing after a sort those that are less willing, that they may present them as a chaste virgin to Christ, #2Co 11:2. This earnest obtestation imports that it is both easy and dangerous to be carried away by seducers; for the Scripture doth not use to "cleave straws with beetles" to be so serious in a slight matter. "We beseech you," of all loves, ερωτωμεν (from ερωσ, love). Brethren, womb brethren, as near in nature as is possible. {a} "By the coming of our Lord Jesus," whom you love, look and long for; "and by your gathering together," επισυναγωγη, as ever you desire and hope to hover under his wings, as the chickens under the hen's, that the infernal kites catch you not at that day.

By the coming of our Lord] He draweth an argument from the matter underhand wherewith their hearts were now heated beforehand. It must be an elaborate speech that shall work upon the heart.

And by our gathering together unto him] In that last and great day, when all the eagles shall be gathered to that once dead, but now all-quickening carcass, #Mt 24:28; when the sign of the Son of man shall be lifted up as an ensign, and all the saints shall repair to it, as the soldiers do to their colours, #Eph 1:10.

{a} Αδελφος, from α and δελφος uterus: fratres uterini.

Ver. 2. That ye be not soon shaken] Σαλευθηναι ( a nomine σαλος, salum). As seamen are tossed by a tempest, and even brought to their wits' ends, #Ps 107:27. That ye be not shaken out of your wits, and put beside yourselves; so the words may be rendered. And indeed errors and heresies sanam tollunt de cardine mentem, drive men out of their little wits; as we see by woeful experience at this day.

Or be troubled] Or, terrified, θροεισθαι, as with a sudden hubbub, alarm, tumult, uproar. It imports such perturbation as ariseth from rumour, #Mr 13:5-27, or relation of something troublesome.

Neither by spirit] Pretended revelations, such as was that whereby the old impostor deceived that young prophet into a lion's mouth.

Nor by word] Traditions, unwritten verities, &c.

Nor by letter] Counterfeited, supposititious, spurious, such as were those Gospels that went under the names of St Thomas, St Bartholomew, &c. Or by wresting and writhing that passage of his former letter, #1Th 4:17, to another meaning than ever the apostle intended it. So St Austin was served, and he foresaw it: I believe, saith he, that some of my readers will imagine me sensisse quod non sensi, aut non sensisse quod sensi, that I was in many things of another mind than ever I was indeed. And it happened accordingly; for as Baronius witnesseth, after St Austin's death there arose up divers, Qui ex eius scriptis male perceptis complures invexerunt errores, who by mistaking of what he had written, brought in many pernicious errors, and vouched him for their author. (Baron. Annal. tom. 6.)

As that the day of Christ] Peter's scoffers asked, "Where is the promise of his coming?" as if Christ would never come. These were afraid he would come too soon, and take them with their task undone. The devil usually tempteth by extremes, as he did our Saviour, #Mt 4:1-11, and as he did Mr Knox upon his deathbed, first to despair, by setting his sins before him; and then to presumption, by reminding him of his reformations.

Is at hand] Just now, this present year, for so the Greek ενεστηκεν signifieth. This fear racked and almost wrecked their minds, as a storm forceth a ship riding in the road to cut cable.

Ver. 3. Except there come a falling] Gr. αποστασια, an apostasy, viz. of people from the truth, when the whole world went a wondering and a wandering after the beast, #Re 13:3. To the fathers these prophecies of Antichrist were riddles. The prophecy is sealed to the end, #Da 12:9, till unsealed by event. Austin saith ingenuously, he understood not this text. And herein he did better than those other of the Latin Fathers that interpreted it of the falling away of various nations from the Roman empire. Daniel set forth Antichrist typically, in that little Antichrist, Antiochus; Paul typically, in this chapter. John writeth the mystery of Antichrist, in his Revelation; Paul sets a commentary upon him, and graphically describeth him, calling him apostasy in the abstract here, as some will have it; and in the next verse, "that man of sin," that is, meram scelus, sheer wickedness, as Beza hath it.

And that man of sin] That breathing devil, so portentously, so peerlessly vicious, Ut eius nomen non hominis, sed vitii esse videatur (as Lipsius saith of one Tubulus, a Roman praetor), that sin itself can hardly be more sinful.

The son of perdition] Destined to destruction, even to be cast alive into the "lake of fire burning with brimstone," #Re 19:20. Well might Pope Marcellus II strike his hand upon the table, and say, Non video quomodo qui locum hunc altissimum tenent, salvari possunt, I see not how any pope can be saved. (Onuph. in Vita.) When I was first in orders (said Pope Pius Quintus) I had some good hopes of salvation; when I was made a cardinal, I doubted; but now that I am pope, I do almost despair. (Cornel. a Lapide in #Nu 11:11) Ver. 4. Who opposeth himself] ἀντικείμενος, who standeth in full opposition to Christ, as a counter-christ. The enemy and adversary is this wicked Haman, #Es 7:6, so this "man of sin" that Antichrist of Rome. When the pope sets forth any bulls, commonly he thus concludes, Non obstantibus constitutionibus Apostolicis, caeterisque contrariis quibuscunque, The constitutions and ordinances of the apostles, and all things else to the contrary notwithstanding. The pope's interpretation of Scripture, though it never so much cross the text, yet it is to be esteemed the very word of God, saith Hosius: Tamen est ipsissimum Dei verbum.

And exalteth himself] Perfrica frontem, said Calvus to Vatinius, et digniorem te dic qui Praetor fieres quam Catonem. Pope Boniface III set a good face upon it, and arrogated the title of Universal Bishop. The ancient Romans painted Pride with three crowns on her head. On the first was inscribed Transcendo, I transgress, on the second, Non obedio, I do not obey, on the third, Perturbo. I through into confusion, The modern Romans see all this daily acted by their bishop.

Above all that is called god] In the year 1540 Pope Paul III suffered himself to be thus blasphemously flattered, Paulo tertio optimo maximo in terris Deo, to Paul III, the greatest and best God in the world. In the year 1610, books were printed at Bonony and at Naples, with this inscription, Paulo V vice-deo, Christianae reipublicae monarchae invictissimo, Pontificiae omnipotentiae conservatori acerrimo: To Paul V, vice-god, most invincible monarch of Christendom, most stout defender of the papal omnipotency. The pope can do all that Christ can do, and is more than God, saith Hostiensis the canonist, and after him Zabarel: Of wrong he can make right, of vice virtue, of nothing something, saith Bellarmine. (Lib. i. de Pontif. Rom.) He is lifted above the angels, so that he can excommunicate them; he can dispense against not only the law of nature, but against all the evangelists, prophets, and apostles, saith Pope John XXIII in extrav.; one of his parasites clawed him thus,

“ *Oraclis vocis mundi moderaris habenas:
Et merito in terris diceris esse Deus.* ”

Or that is worshipped] σεβασμα. Or, that is august, above princes and potentates. He is cried up for "Lord of lords and King of kings," one that hath both the swords throughout the world, and an illimited empire over all reasonable creatures, Dulia adorandus, &c. How he trod upon the emperor of Germany, and how he lashed Henry II of England, and Henry IV of France till the blood followed, is better known than that I need here to relate. Sed exorto Evangelii iubare sagaciores (ut spero) principes ad nutum Romani Orbilii non solvent subligacula, saith one. Our Richard I, going for the Holy Land, had conference with one Joachim, a Cistercian abbot, being then in Calabria, near Sicily; whom, at his coming, he heard preaching and expounding the Apocalypse touching the afflictions of the Church, and concerning Antichrist, which (said he) was then born and in the city of Rome, and shall be advanced to the see apostolic; of whom the apostle said, "He shall extol himself above all that is called God"; and that the seven crowns were the kings and princes of the earth, that obeyed him: (Hoveden.) Much about the same time, Pope Celestine crowned the emperor Henry and his empress Constantia at Rome with his feet, and kicked off the same crown again. (Speed.)

Sitteth in the temple of God] Sitting is a style proper to the pope; who is said not to reign, but to sit so many years or months; and his place of dominion is called his "see," or "seat." Robert Grossetete, bishop of Lincoln, called him in a letter, "heretic, Antichrist sitting in the chair of pestilence, and next to Lucifer himself." Benedictus the Sorbonist affirmeth that the ass in the history of Balaam signifieth the Church. An quia Pontifex Balaam est qui ei insidet? saith Dr Raynolds, i.e. Doth he not mean by it, that the pope is Balaam that sitteth upon that ass? (De Idolol. Rom.) England was once called the "pope's ass," for bearing his burdens, and obeying his mandates. But beside the present Reformation (which is such as ages past despaired of, the present admire, and the future shall stand amazed at), in the year 1245 (lo, so long since) the pope was denied entrance into England; it being said that he was but like a "mouse in a satchel," or a snake in one's bosom, who did but ill repay their hosts for their lodging. (Scultet. Annal.)

Ver. 5. Remember ye not] Satan usually hides from us that which should help us. But as the soul should be as it were a holy ark; so should the memory be as the pot of manna, preserving holy truth for constant use.

Ver. 6. What withholdeth, &c.] viz. The Roman empire, which had its rise, reign, and ruin, whereupon the popedom was founded, and grew to that excessive greatness, that it laboured with nothing more than with the weightiness of itself.

Ver. 7. For the mystery of iniquity] Policy palliated with the name of piety; dissembled sanctity, which is double iniquity. The Council of Trent (where Popery was established by a law in all parts of it, and a divorce sued out from Christ) was carried by the pope and his complices with such infinite guile and craft, as that themselves will even smile in the triumphs of their own wits (when they hear it but mentioned) as at a master stratagem, a very mystery of iniquity. (Spec. Europ.)

Doth already work] In those ancient apostates and antichrists St John complaineth of. Tertullian condemneth the bishop's sprouting ambition in these words, I hear that there is a peremptory edict set forth lately, Pontifex scilicet maximus. Episcopus episcoporum dicit, &c. Thus saith the chief priest, the bishop of bishops, &c. Odi fastum illius Ecclesiae, saith Basil, I hate the pride of that Western Church. {a} Ammianus Marcellinus (a heathen historian) sharply taxed the Roman bishops of his time for their pride and prodigality. How stiffly did Gregory the Great oppose John of Constantinople for affecting the title of universal bishop; and yet how basely did the same Gregory collogue with Phocas the emperor, that himself might be so styled. This Phocas, a wild, drunken, bloody, adulterous tyrant, advanced the bishop of Rome (Gregory's successor) to the primacy, and was therefore slaughtered by Heraclius, who cut off his wicked hands and feet, and then his genitals by piece-meal. (Zonaras.)

Until he be taken out of the way] That is, the Roman emperor have removed his seat to Constantinople, that Rome may become the nest of Antichrist. Joannes de Columna writeth, that Otho, emperor of Germany, thought to have seated himself at Rome (as former emperors had done), and began to build him there a stately palace. But at the earnest importunity of the Romans he gave over that design. The like had been attempted 300 years before by Constans, nephew to Heraclius, but could never be ejected. This was a singular providence of God (saith Genebrard, a Popish chronologer) that the kingdom of the Church prophesied of by Daniel might have its seat at Rome. If he had said, that the kingdom of Antichrist, prophesied of by St Paul and St John, might have its seat in that city seated upon seven hills, he had said the very truth, he had hit the nail on the head.

Ver. 8. And then shall that wicked] Gr. ανομος, that lawless, yokeless, masterless monster to whom in the Council of Lateran, 1516 (one year only before Luther stood up to reform), there was granted plenary power over the whole Church; which was never settled upon him in any former Council. Pope Nicholas I said, that he was above law, because Constantine had styled the pope God. But the very gloss derides him for this inference.

With the spirit of his mouth] i.e. With the evidence of his word in the mouths of his faithful ministers. Vide catalogum testimonium veritatis. Bellarmine confesseth to his great grief, that ever since the Lutherans have declared the pope to be Antichrist., his kingdom hath not only not increased, but every day more and more decreased and decayed. (Lib. iii. de Papa Rom. cap. 21.) What long hath been the opinion and fear of some not unconsiderable divines, that Antichrist before his abolition, shall once again overflow the whole face of the west, and suppress the true Protestant Churches, I pray God to avert.

With the brightness of his coming] At the last day. The holy city shall they tread underfoot forty and two months, #Re 11:2, that is (as some compute it) till the year of grace 1866. But that is but a conjecture. No more is that other, that Solomon's temple was finished in the year of the world 3000; and was destroyed, together with the city, by the Romans, in the year of the world exactly 4000, therefore the spiritual temple shall be consummated in 3000, or perhaps in 4000 more. (Lightfoot's Harm. 206.)

Ver. 9. After the working of Satan] Who (as God's ape) works effectually in his and by his agents upon others. By corrupt teachers Satan catcheth men, as a cunning fisher by one fish catcheth another, that he may feed upon both.

And lying wonders] The devil is ashamed (saith the Jesuit Gretser) to confirm Luther's doctrine by miracles. But he that now requireth miracles to make him to believe, is himself a great miracle, saith Austin.

Ver. 10. And with all deceiveableness] Popery is nothing else but a great lie, a grand imposture, a farrago of falsities and heresies. It is not without cause that the Centurists say, "That all the old heretics fled, and hid themselves in the Popish clergy." (Cent. x. c. 11.)

Because they received not the love] This is the great gospel sin, punished by God with strong delusions, vile affections, just damnation. Infatuati seducentur; seducti iudicabuntur. Given up by God they shall be seduced, and being seduced they shall be condemned. It is Austin's note upon this text.

Ver. 11. Strong delusion] Gr. the efficacy of error. As in those at Genoa, that show the ass's tail whereupon our Saviour rode, for a holy relic, and perform divine worship to it. (Wolph. Mem. Lect.) And in those that wear out the marble crosses graven in the pavements of their churches, with their often kissing them. (Spec. Europ.) The crucifix which is in the city of Burgos, the priests show to great personages, as if it were Christ himself; telling them that his hair and nails do grow miraculously, which they cut and pare monthly, and give to noblemen, as holy relics. The Jesuits confess that the legend of miracles of their saints is for the most part false; but it was made for good intention: and herein, that it is lawful and meritorious to lie, and write such things, to the end the common people might with greater zeal serve God and his saints; and especially to draw the women to good order, being by nature facile and credulous, addicted to novelties and miracles. (Spanish Pilgr.)

Ver. 12. That they all might be damned] Heresy is the leprosy in the head, #Le 13:29, which is utterly incurable, and destroys the soul. See #Re 19:21.

Had pleasure in unrighteousness] These are delivered up to that dead and dedolent disposition, #Eph 4:19, losing at length all passive power also of awakening out of the snare of the devil, who taketh them alive at his pleasure, #2Ti 2:26.

Ver. 13. But we are bound, &c.] Lest they should be discouraged with the former discourse, the apostle tells them, that being elect they cannot be finally deceived. So the author to the Hebrews, #Heb 6:9. Zuinglius, after that he had terrified the wicked, was wont to come in with Bone vir, hoc nihil ad te: This is nothing to thee, thou faithful Christian. We cannot beat the dogs, but the children will cry, and must therefore be stilled and cheered up.

And belief of the truth.] That is, of Christ the object, in the glass of the gospel.

Ver. 14. To the obtaining of the glory] This is the end of faith, as faith is of effectual calling.

Ver. 15. Stand fast] Though never so many fall from the faith. Falling stars were never but meteors. God also will have the tree of his Church to be shaken sometimes, that rotten fruit may fall off; and that there may be a shedding of the good from temporaries.

Hold the traditions] Hold fast by these, that ye may stand the faster.

Ver. 16. And good hope] The fruit of everlasting consolation, #Ro 15:4. And well called good, because it hath for its object the greatest good, and that which is of greatest certainty, #Heb 11:1.

Ver. 17. Stablish you] Taking you by the hand, and laying hold on you, like as ye lay hold upon his word, #2Th 2:15.

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. Finally, brethren, &c.] Quod superest, το λοιπον, That which yet remains, brethren. Ministers have never done, but have somewhat more to say (Redit labor actus in orbem) when they have said their utmost.

Pray for us] As he had done for them, #2Th 2:16,17. See the like, #1Th 5:23,25. {See Trapp on "1Th 5:23"} {See Trapp on "1Th 5:24"} Oh, pray (said a dying Dutch divine) that God would preserve the gospel: Pontifex enim Rom. et Concilium Tridentinum mira molunfur; For the pope and his Trent conventicle are plotting strange businesses.

May have free course] Gr. πρεχη, may run its race, as the sun doth, #Ps 19:4,5. Eusebius saith that the gospel spread at first through the world like a sunbeam. (Hist. ii. 3.)

And be glorified] As it was, #Ac 13:48. The word never worketh till it be received with admiration.

Ver. 2. From unreasonable] ατοπων, men compact of mere incongruities, solecising in opinion, speeches, actions.

For all men have not faith] And are therefore unreasonable; nothing is more irrational than irreligion. An unbeliever is no better (but in some respects worse) than a beast; a brutish person skilful to destroy, #Eze 21:31.

Ver. 3. But God is faithful] Though men be faithless; and though they be evil, as #2Th 3:2, yet he shall keep you from evil, from whatsoever adverse power either of men or devils. Thus the saints may find and fetch comfort from God under whatsoever disasters. They go always under a double guard, the peace of God within them, #Php 4:7, φρουρησει, and the power of God without them, #1Pe 1:5, φρουρουμενοι. How then can they possibly miscarry?

Ver. 4. That ye both do and will do] Qui monet ut facias quod iam facis, ille monendo laudat, &c. Here the apostle, like an orator, entereth their bosoms; and by praising their present obedience, artificially wresteth from them a redoubled diligence; Virtus laudata creseit. Thus being crafty, he catcheth them with guile, as he did those Corinthians, #2Co 12:16. It must be an elaborate discourse that shall work upon the heart.

Ver. 5. And the Lord direct] Or rectify your crooked hearts and distorted affections, that stand across to all good, till God set them to rights, κατευθυνα. Men's persuasions are but as a key to a lock that is out of order, unless God cooperate.

Ver. 6. Now we command you] To show how hardly we are divided from evil company, as loth to depart as Lot's wife out of Sodom, Velut canis famelicus ab uncto corio.

That ye withdraw yourselves] That ye shun them as studiously as the seaman doth a rock or shelf, στελλεσθαι, Nautarum proprium.

From every brother that walketh disorderly] From every profligate professor, and carnal gospeller, that walketh contra gnomonem et Canonem Decalogi, cuique vita est incomposita, et pessime morata (as an interpreter speaketh), contrary to God, and to every good work reprobate.

And not after the tradition] sc. That men should sweat out their living, and earn it before they eat it. Sin brought in sweat, #Ge 3:19. And now, not to sweat, increaseth sin.

Ver. 7. For yourselves know] You idle addleheads, <sup>{a}</sup> #2Th 3:11. For these he here directs his speech, that by doing nothing, had learned at length to do naughtily. Nihil agendo male agere discimus.

We behaved not ourselves disorderly] Gr. ητακτησαμεν, We brake not our ranks, as unruly soldiers.

{a} Applied contemptuously to one whose intellect seems muddled. (ED)

Ver. 8. Any man's bread for nought] But earned it before we eat it. Bread should not be eaten, till it sweat in a man's hand, or head.

Ver. 9. Not because we have not power] Posse et nolle nobile est. (Chrysost.) {See Trapp on "1Co 9:4"} {See Trapp on "1Co 9:5"} {See Trapp on "1Co 9:6"} {See Trapp on "1Co 9:7"} {See Trapp on "1Co 9:8"} {See Trapp on "1Co 9:9"}

But to make ourselves an example] Those therefore that have enough to live on, must yet be doing something whereby the world may be the better; and not think to come hither merely as rats and mice, only to devour victuals, and to run squeaking up and down. These are ciphers, or rather excrements in human society. By the law of Mahomet, the Great Turk himself is bound to exercise some manual trade or occupation (for none must be idle), as Solyman the Magnificent, that so threatened Vienna, his trade was making of arrow heads; Achmat the Last, horn rings for archers. (Peacham.)

Ver. 10. That if any would not work] In the sweat of thy nose shalt thou eat thy bread, was the old sanction, #Ge 3:19; yea, Paradise, that was man's storehouse, was also his workhouse. They bury themselves alive, that, as body lice, live on other men's labours; and it is a sin to help them. Seneca professed, that he had rather be sick in his bed than out of employment.

Ver. 11. Working not at all] But making religion a mask for idleness; whose whole life is to eat, and drink, and sleep, and sport, and sit, and talk and laugh themselves fat. These are an odious sort of Christians; a kind of vagrant people that, having little to do, are set to work by the devil; for idleness is the hour of temptation. Standing pools are full of vermin. Behemoth lieth in the fens, #Job 40:21.

But are busybodies] Nihil agentes, sed curiose satagentes: Not working at home, but over working abroad, though to no purpose or profit.

Ver. 12. That with quietness] Being no meddler in other men's matters, but minding his own. Res tuas age. The pragmatic person is an odious person, and the place where he lives longs for a vomit to spew him out. {See Trapp on "1Th 4:11"}

Ver. 13. Be not weary in well doing] No, not to those disorderly (and therefore less worthy) walkers, if in extreme necessity, or if thereby ye may win them from the error of their way. As if any prove refractory and irreformable.

Note that man] σημειουσθε, or, notice him, as infamous; brand him, beware of him; let him see a strangeness in you toward him.

That he may be ashamed] Gr. να εντραπη. Ut quaerat ubi se possit prae pudore occultare. (Cameron.) That he may turn into himself, or turn short again upon himself; recognize his disorders, and return to a better course. The repenting prodigal is said to come to himself, #Lu 15:17, and those relenting Israelites to bethink themselves, or to bring back to their hearts, #1Ki 8:47. The Greek here signifies that he may hide his head for shame; Sed illum ego periisse dico, cui perii pudor. (Curtius.) He is past grace that is past shame.

Ver. 15. Yet count him not, &c.] If there be but aliquid Christi, anything of Christ to be discerned in him.

But admonish him as a brother] Conscience is a nice and sullen dame; man a cross, crabbed creature, and will hardly be wrought upon by a stoic sourness, or an imperious boisterousness; but must be gently handled, and fairly admonished. Gentle showers comfort the earth, when dashing storms drown the seed.

Ver. 16. Now the Lord, &c.] He begins, continues, and concludes with fervent prayer. All our sacrifices should be salted with salt, perfumed with this incense of prayer, #Col 3:17.

The Lord be with you all] Thus he poureth out his affection, by prayer upon prayer for them. A sweet closing up!

Ver. 17. So I write, The grace, &c.] This is that St Paul would have every, of his Epistles stamped with his own hand, viz. prayer for all his people.

Ver. 18. So I write, The grace, &c.] This is that St Paul would have every, of his Epistles stamped with his own hand, viz. prayer for all his people.

1 Timothy

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. By the commandment of God] For how should he have preached except he had been sent? This he mentioneth, #Ro 10:15, as a thing impossible.

Of God our Saviour] So the Father also is here called. Hoc autem quantum est? (saith Cicero), Is nimirum Soter est, qui salutem dedit. The Greek word here used is so emphatic, that other tongues can hardly express it.

Our hope] So Christ is called, because the perfection of our life is hid with Christ in God. Something we have in possession, but more in reversion.

Ver. 2. Mine own son] This the apostle speaketh απο πολλης φιλοστοργιας, "out of deep affection," as Chrysostom observeth.

Grace, mercy, and peace] Not only grace and peace, as to others. When we pray for ministers, we must be more than ordinarily earnest for them with God. These three are joined together only in the Epistles of Timothy and Titus; as Theophylact out of Chrysostom hath observed.

Ver. 3. That they teach no other doctrine] Either for matter or manner, for substance or circumstance. What hideous heresies are today broached and preached among us in city and country. See Mr Edwards' Gangrena, the first and second part.

Ver. 4. Endless genealogies] It is but laborious loss of time to search into those things, whereof we can neither have proof nor profit; the gains will not pay for the pains, the task is not worthy the toil. Toilsome toys they are, hard to come by, but of no use or worth; like an olive or date stone, hard to crack the one, or cleave the other; but nothing, or nothing worth aught, when cracked or cloven, within either. The shell fish among the Jews was counted unclean, because it had but a little meat, and a great deal of labour to get it.

Ver. 5. Now the end of the commandment] Or, of the charge, to wit, of that charge, to teach no other doctrine, &c., #1Ti 1:3,4. As if the apostle had said, This is that which a teacher should aim at, to beget such a love in his hearers' hearts, as may speak them true believers and good livers. Boni Catholici sunt (saith Augustine) qui et fidem integram sequuntur, et bonos mores. Those are good Catholics that believe well and live well.

Ver. 6. Some having swerved] ἀστοχησαντες. "Having missed the mark," as unskilful shooters, being "heavenly wide," as Sir Philip Sidney translatheth that proverb, Toto errant caelo.

Having turned aside unto vain jangling] Ignoble quarrels, ubi vincere inglorium est, atteri sordidum, wherein a man cannot quit himself so as to come off with credit or comfort. (Mr Burroughs.) Mr Deal never loved to meddle with controversies of the times; he gave that reason, he found his heart the worse when he did. Grinseus, provoked by Pistorius to dispute, sent back the letters (not so much as opening the seal) with this answer out of Chrysostom, Inhonestum est, honestam matronam cum meretrice litigare, It is no honour for an honest matron to scold with a harlot. (Melch. Adam.)

{See Trapp on "1Ti 1:4"}

Ver. 7. Understanding neither what] Non curo illos, saith Augustine, qui vel non intelligendo reprehendunt, vel reprehendendo non intelligunt. I pass not for the censures of such as dare to reprehend what they do not comprehend.

Nor whereof they affirm] And are therefore to be slighted. Galatinus (saith Mr Sarson), as he affirmeth without reason, so he may be dismissed without refutation.

Ver. 8. If a man use it lawfully] For discovery of sin, for manuduction to Christ, and for a rule of life. Lex, lux, #Pr 6:23. Xenophon telleth us, that this was the drift of the Persian laws, to keep men from acting, yea, from coveting, anything evil or idle, κερται.

Ver. 9. Is not made for a righteous] For he is freed by Christ from the coaction, malediction, and irritation of the law. The law lieth not upon the righteous (so the Greek soundeth), it urgeth not upon them, as it doth upon the wicked. To these it is as chains and shackles, to the righteous as girdles and garters, which gird up his loins and expedite his course the better. It confineth him (saith Rev. Dr Preston) to live in that element where he would live; as if one should be confined to Paradise, where he would be, though there were no such law. The wicked (on the contrary) it confineth to the place where he would not be, and to the actions that he would not do; as Shimei confined, leapeth over the pale after profit and pleasure, and dieth for it.

But for the lawless, &c.] Those masterless monsters, that send messages after Christ, saying, "We will not have this man to reign over us." But shall they thus escape by iniquity? "In thine anger thou wilt cast down these people, O God," #Ps 56:7. Aut faciendum, aut patiendum. Either do or suffer. They that will not bend shall break; they that will not be Christ's subjects shall be his footstool: his arrows are sharp in the hearts of the king's enemies, whereby the people (that fall not down before him) fall under him, #Ps 45:5.

Ver. 10. For menstealers] That steal away other men's children; so those that steal other men's books and writings, and set them out in their own name; as one dealt by Diagoras, who thereupon, out of discontent (because he that had done it was not presently stricken with a thunderbolt), became an atheist. (Diod. Sic.) So Fabricius stole Tremellius' Syriac translation, Villa Vincantius stole Hyperius' Treatise De ratione studii Theologici, and Possevinus recently translated Dr James's Cyprianus redivivus into his Apparatus Theologicus, and made it his own doing. Sic vos non vobis.

And if there be any other thing] For the apostle took no delight to mention more of this cursed crew; but leaves them to the law to handle and hamper them, as unruly beasts, dogs, lions, leopards, are chained and caged up that they may not do mischief.

Ver. 11. Of the blessed God] Blessed in himself, and to be everlastingly blessed of all creatures. Hence he is called, "The blessed," #Mr 14:61. And frequently in the Commentaries of the Hebrew Doctors he is set forth by this title, Baruch hu, "he that is blessed."

Ver. 12. Who hath enabled me] Christ sends none but whom he gifts. Asinos elegit Christus et idiotas, sed oculavit in prudentes, simulque dona dedit et ministeria.

Ver. 13. Who was before a blasphemer] Chrysostom observes it of Paul, as his greatest honour, that although he had obtained pardon of God for his sins, yet he is not ashamed to reckon them up to the world. So David does penance in a white sheet, as it were, #Ps 51:1 title. So Augustine writeth books of confessions. And I was as obstinate a Papist, saith Latimer, as any was in England, and so servile an observer of the Popish decrees, that I thought I had never sufficiently mingled my mass wine with water, and that I should never be damned if I were once a professed friar. Also when I should be made Bachelor of Divinity, my whole oration went against Philip Melancthon and his opinions. And standing in the schools when Mr Stafford (a godly orthodox divine) read, Latimer bade the scholars not to hear him, exhorted the people not to believe him. And yet the said Latimer confessed himself, that he gave thanks to God that he asked him forgiveness before he departed.

Ver. 14. Was exceeding abundant] Hath abounded to flowing over, υπερπλεονασε, as the sea doth above mole hills. "I will scatter your sins as a mist," saith God, "and they shall be cast into the midst of the sea." Note these two metaphors, and despair, if thou canst. Paul was a blasphemer (and so sinned against the first table), he was also a persecutor (and sinned against the second table), he was injurious (and so came near unto the unpardonable sin), and yet he obtained mercy; albeit his ignorance was not invincible, but of a brave disposition. Cheer up therefore and despond not. There is a pleonasm of free grace for thee in other Scriptures, as #Eph 2:7 Ro 5:20, but here is a superpleonasm.

Ver. 15. This is a faithful saying] Worthy to be credited and embraced, as it was by Bilney the martyr, who by this promise was much comforted in a great conflict. So was Ursine by #Joh 10:29. Another by #Isa 57:15. And another by #Isa 26:3, saying that God hath graciously made it fully good to his soul.

Of whom I am chief] Primus, quo nullus prior, as Gerson expounds it; Imo quo nullus peior, as Augustine, more worse than the worst. The true penitentiary doth not elevate but aggravate his sins against himself, is ever full in the mouth this way, as #Da 9:5. Paul veils all his top sails, we see, and sits down in the dust; vilifying and nullifying himself to the utmost.

Ver. 16. Might show forth] By full demonstration and sufficient evidence, ενδειξηται, so that all might see and say, There is mercy with Christ that he may be feared, yea, mercy rejoicing against judgment, that he may be everlastingly admired and adored.

For a pattern to them, &c.] Therefore the apostle was assured of remission in an ordinary way, and not by any special revelation.

Ver. 17. Invisible] God is too subtle for sinew or sight to bear upon. We can but see his back parts and live; we need see no more, that we may live.

Now unto the King immortal] Paul cannot mention the great work of our redemption without a thankful acclamation. The Grecians being restored to liberty by the Roman general Quintus Flaminius, he was entertained by them with such applauses and acclamations, while they roared out Saviour, Saviour, that the very birds that flew over them, astonished with the noise, fell to the ground. When Hunniades had overthrown Mosites, the Turk's general, at his return from the camp, some called him the father, some the defender of his country; the soldiers, their invincible general; the captives, their deliverer; the women, their protector.

The only wise God] The temple of Sophia in Constantinople is now the Turk's chief mosque, and by them still called Sophia, because they hold, even as we do, that the wisdom of God is incomprehensible.

Ver. 18. Son Timothy] This is Timothy's task, whom the apostle fitly calleth son, according to the custom both of those and these times. Patres eos dicimus qui nos catechesi instituerunt, saith Clement: We call them fathers that instruct and catechise us. Hence #Nu 3:1, those there mentioned were Aaron's sons by nature, and they are called Moses's sons, because he taught and instructed them.

Ver. 19. Holding faith and a good conscience] A good conscience, saith one, is as it were a chest wherein the doctrine of faith is to be kept safe, which will quickly be lost if this chest be once broken. For God will give over to errors and heresies such as cast away conscience of walking after God's word. What a blind buzzard then was that Popish inquisitor, who said of the Waldenses, You may know the heretics by their words and manners: Sunt enim in moribus compositi et modesti; superbiam in vestibus non habent: They are neither immodest in their carriage, nor proud in their apparel. (Dr Ussher de Christ. Eccles. success.) Like unto this was the speech of the bishop of Aliff in a sermon preached at the Council of Trent; that as the faith of the Catholics was better, so the heretics exceeded them in good life. (Hist. of Council of Trent.) But can they live well if heretics? how can the treasure be safe, if the ship wherein it is laid be split and broken? Surely a corrupt opinion will soon corrupt a man's life, as rheum falling from the head doth putrefy the lungs and other vital parts.

Ver. 20. That ye may learn] Ut castigati discant; that being buffeted and bodily tormented by Satan, as #Ac 13:2 (for as yet there were no Christian magistrates), they may learn, παιδευθωσι.

Not to blaspheme] That is, not to hold erroneously, and to live scandalously, to the reproach of the gospel. Confer #Pr 30:9.

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. Supplications] Or, deprecations indited by that Spirit of supplication, or of deprecation, as some render it, #Zec 11:10.

Prayers] Strictly taken for petitions or requests of good at God's hands, which go commonly accompanied with vows of better obedience, as #Ge 28:21,22 Ps 51:14. Hence they have their name, προσευχαι.

Intercessions] Interparlings with God, either for ourselves (while we stand upon interrogatories with him, #1Pe 3:21, as Paul doth, #Ro 8:33-35, and expostulate as David often, but especially when Satan, sin, and conscience accuse us), or for others, while we complain to God against such as wrong them, and withal set ourselves seriously to implore his aid for their relief and rescue, εντευξεις, επερωτημα.

For all men] i.e. For all sorts of men, as the word "all" is used #Lu 11:42.

Ver. 2. For kings, &c.] Though persecutors, if they have not yet sinned against the Holy Ghost, as Julian had. Voluit scilicet Christus etiam aliquando Reginam in caelum vehere, saith Luther of Elizabeth, Queen of Denmark, who lived and died in the truth of the gospel. God hath his, even among great ones too.

A quiet and peaceable life] Quiet, from inbred tumults and commotions; and peaceable, from foreign invasions and incursions of the enemy. See #Jer 29:7.

In all godliness and honesty] And not come to eat the bread of our souls with the peril of our lives, as they do in various places of this land at this day. Det meliora Deus. He will do it.

Ver. 3. For this is good, &c.] viz. This praying for all men. And should we not frame to that which God accepts without questioning or quarrelling? Let us not dispute, but despatch our Master's will.

Ver. 4. Who will have all men, &c.] God willeth, to wit, with a will whereby he inviteth, and putteth no bar; not with a will whereby he effecteth it, taking away all impediments.

That all men] Not distributively taken, but collectively, as thrice in one verse, #Col 1:28.

Should be saved] viz. If they do what he commandeth: God doth not tie himself to cause them to do what he commandeth, that they may be saved.

And to come to the knowledge] The only way to salvation. Pray therefore that their eyes may be opened, #Ac 26:18.

Ver. 5. For there is one God] sc. Both of kings and subjects, both of heathens and Christians. Go boldly to him therefore, for yourselves and others. "Have we not all one Father?" #Mal 2:10 "Art not thou our Father?" #Isa 63:16 "O Lord" (saith the Church in Habakkuk), "art not thou from everlasting my God, mine Holy One?" It was a bold question, but God approves it, and assents to it in a gracious answer ere they went further: "We shall not die," say they abruptly; by a cast of God's countenance they could tell so much. So true is that of Jamblichus a heathen (but herein he speaks more like a Christian), Supplicatio familiares et Deorum domesticos facit eos, qui ea utuntur. Prayer gives a humble boldness and a holy familiarity with God unto those that use it; and again, prayer, saith he, is like a key whereby we may open God's treasury, and take out of it plentiful mercy for ourselves and others.

Between God and men] Gr. of God and men; he is God for the business with God; and man, for the business with man.

One Mediator] Not of redemption only (as the Papists grant), but of intercession too. We need no other master of requests in heaven, but the man Christ Jesus, who being so near us in the matter of his incarnation, will never be strange to us in the business of intercession. But what horrible blasphemy is that of the Papists, who in their devotions say thus, By the blood of Thomas Becket, which he did spend, make us, Christ, to climb where Thomas did ascend! (Acts and Mon.)

Ver. 6. A ransom] Gr. ἀντιλυτρον, a counterprice; such as we could never have paid, but must have remained, and even rotted in prison, but for our all-sufficient surety and Saviour.

Ver. 7. A teacher of the Gentiles] His Epistles therefore should be highly prized by us Gentiles, and diligently studied. St Peter admires them, #2Pe 3:15, and commends them to the Church's reading. And because there are some things in them hard to be understood, and easy to be wrested from their right meaning, #2Pe 3:16, it was therefore grave advice that one gives young Christians, that they should begin at the latter end of St Paul's Epistles, which treateth of points of practice. Since a corrupt life can never have a sound judgment.

Ver. 8. Pray everywhere] Any place now (be it but a chimney) may make a goodly oratory, #Joh 4:21.

Lifting up holy hands] Better washed than Pilate's were, rinsed in that blessed fountain of Christ's blood, #Zec 13:1. Else, God utterly abhors them, #Isa 1:15,16. The priests had their laver to wash in, before they sacrificed. The Turks at this day before prayer wash both face and hands, sometimes their head, and other parts of the body. But what saith St James, #Jas 4:8, and the prophet Jeremiah, #Jer 4:14? The fountain of goodness will not be laden at with foul hearts and hands.

Without wrath] Or, rancour, #Mt 5:24. God will not be served till men be reconciled. When Abraham and Lot were agreed, then God appeared.

Or doubting] #Heb 11:6 Jas 1:6; without disceptation or reasoning with carnal reason.

Ver. 9. In like manner also] Men have had their lessons. Now for women they are taught modesty in their attire (such as may neither argue wantonness nor wastefulness), silence in the Church, subjection in the family.

Or costly array] Which yet great ones may wear; but they may not buy it with extortion, and line it with pride; since clothes are the ensigns of our shame, our fineness is our filthiness, and our neatness our nastiness. See #Isa 3:12-26, where the prophet inveighs, as if he had viewed the ladies' wardrobes in Jerusalem.

Ver. 10. But which becometh] Our common conversation should be as becometh the gospel of Christ, πολιτευεσθε, #Php 1:27. And it is a sure sign of a base mind, to think that one can make himself great with anything that is less than himself; or that he can win more credit by his garments than by his graces. The worst apparel, saith one, is nature's garment; the best, but folly's garnish.

Ver. 11. Let the woman learn] Not to teach, to wit, in the public assemblies, be she never so learned or godly. {See Trapp on "Ro 16:1"}

Ver. 12. Nor to usurp authority] As they will easily do if suffered to preach, αθεντειν, to have what she will. Preachers are rulers, guides, captains, #Heb 13:7,17. If the hen be suffered to crow once, &c. A prudent wife commands her husband by obeying him, as Sarah, Livia.

But to be in silence] Video, taceo, I see and say nothing, was Queen Elizabeth's motto. Where should the tongue be but in the head?

Ver. 13. For Adam was first formed] επλασθη. As the vessel is formed by the potter out of the clay. See #Ge 2:7. The common opinion is, that the very same day επλασθη και εξηλασθη, he was formed and driven out; that he lodged not one night in Paradise; so sudden was the serpent's seducing, his wife's consenting, his yielding, God's execution.

Then Eve] For Adam's use and help, therefore she must not take upon her. Howbeit the Jews are out, that hold women to be of a lower creation, made only for the propagation and pleasure of man; also that they have not so divine a soul as men, and therefore they suffer them not to enter into the synagogue, but appoint them a gallery without. Their Rabbis (who have as many foolish dreams about the Old Testament as the Friars have about the New) conceive both Adam and Eve to be created without the use of reason; and that the tree of knowledge was to accelerate it. Socinians also say (but falsely) that they were as simple and weak as little children; otherwise they would not have so sinned. Cuius contrarium verum est.

Ver. 14. And Adam was not deceived] i.e. He was not deceived so much by his judgment (though also by that too) as by his affection to his wife, which at length blinded his judgment. Look we well to our affections; for by these maids Satan still wooeth the mistress.

Being deceived, was in the transgression] Uxor mea tota in fermento est, said he in Plautus. {See Trapp on "Ge 3:6"} Yet Adam sinned more than Eve, because he had more wisdom and strength. He could set his affections as the artificer doth his clock, to make it strike when and what he will.

Ver. 15. Saved in childbearing] δια for εν, ut #Ro 11:28. Not by it, as by a cause; but notwithstanding the cross laid upon all childbearing women, #Ge 3:16, they shall have free entrance into heaven, if they continue in faith and charity, &c.

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. If a man desire] As no woman, so neither may every man desire the office of a minister, but such only as are gifted and fitted for such a service.

He desireth a good work] But a hard work. The ministry is not an idle man's occupation, but a sore labour; Onus ipsis etiam angelis tremendum, saith Chrysostom, a burden too heavy for an angel's shoulders; a pains nothing short of that of a travailing woman, saith Melancthon after Paul, #Ga 4:19. There were those who read this text thus, Quicumque desiderat episcopatum bonum, opes desiderat. But this was a foul mistake at best. That is a good observation of Estius, that the former word, ορεγεται, rendered desire, importeth a more earnest desire (such as is that after meat when one is hungry) than the other following, επιθυμει. "He desireth a good work," quod eadem res nomine Episcopatus desideretur ardentius, quam nomine operis et officii, because the same thing by the name of episcopacy is more ardently desired than by the name of work and duty. That hypocrisy of the Canonists is very ridiculous, not admitting any to personal government in the Church, unless he either seem to refuse it, or unwillingly to undertake it, though he had never so much laboured it. The Bishop of Metis answered cunningly, when being demanded whether he desired a bishopric, he replied, Nolens volo, et volens nolo, I do, and I do not. One reporteth of a priest that used to have a net spread upon his table where he dined, that he might mind St Peter, that fisher of men. But when by his diligent preaching he had gotten a bishopric, he did take away the net, for he had got what he fished for.

Ver. 2. A bishop then must be blameless] That is, every faithful pastor must be such as against whom no just exception can be laid, no gross fault objected. Involuntary failings and unavoidable infirmities have a pardon, of course, both with God and all good men.

The husband of one wife] sc. At once. The Egyptian priests were forbidden also polygamy.

Vigilant] νηφαλιον, pale and wan with watching, ου χρη παννυχιον ευδειν βουλευορον ανδρα (Homer): a public person should not sleep a whole night together.

Sober] σωφρονα, that can contain his passions and keep a mean.

Of good behaviour] κοσμιον. {a} Compositus, modestus. Neat and handsome in his outward habit, venerable in all his behaviour.

Given to hospitality] Quicquid habent clerici, pauperum est: the minister's chest is the poor man's box.

Apt to teach] Not able only, as Dr Taylor, martyr, who preached not only every Lord's day and holy day, but whensoever else he could get the people together. (Acts and Mon.) Praedicationis officium suscipit, quisquis ad sacerdotium accedit, saith Gregory. (Greg. Pastor.) He is no minister that is no preacher.

{a} Bene moratum. Hieron. ad Damasum.

Ver. 3. Not given to wine] No ale stake, tavern haunter, that sits close at it, till the wine inflame him.

No striker] Either with tongue or hand. Such as were Timotheus Herulus, A. D. 467; Pope Julius III, who cast away his keys, and girt on his sword; Bishop Bonner, who usually buffeted the poor martyrs brought before him, pulling off their beards, &c. Cognata vitia sunt vinolentia et violentia, sicut et magna cognatio est, ut rei, sit nominis, divitiis et vitiis.

Not greedy of filthy lucre] So as to get by unjust arts and sinful practices, as the pope by allowing the stews in Rome, and elsewhere. See Fiscus Papalis by Crashaw.

But patient] επεικη, Easily parting with his own right for peace' sake, as Abraham did, as no covetous man will do.

No brawler] Or wrangler, quarrelsome, like a cock of the game, that is still bloody with the blood of others and of himself.

Not covetous] αφιλαργυρον. Not a lover of silver; and that (Euclio-like) sits abrood upon his heaps of illgotten goods, and will part with nothing.

Ver. 4. One that ruleth well] προισταμενον. A good priest in his own family, which he daily perfumes with evangelical sacrifices, till his house, as the house of David, be as God, as the angel of the Lord before them, #Zec 12:8.

Having his children in subjection] Yet Pope Pelagius forbids a bishop to have either wife or children; whereof this wise reason is given, because children are argumentum ambulans super terram, A walking argument of their father's incontinence. Os durum! Hard saying! His successor Paul III had no wife indeed, but children he had. One of whom, named Petro Alvigi Farnesis, having first forced and then poisoned Cosmus Chaerius, bishop of Fanum, received no other check or chastisement of his father the pope but this, Haec vitia me non commonstratore didicit, He never learned those vices from his father.

Ver. 5. For if a man know not how] A very cogent argument from the less to the greater; used also by our Saviour, #Lu 16:11,12. Eli was justly taxed and Augustus heavily upbraided with their domestic disorders, as therefore unfit for government.

Ver. 6. Not a novice] νεοφυτος. Rude and proud, a young scholar or newly converted, but well experimented, and sufficiently commended by men of worth. He that offered to run a race was led about by the crier, to see what any one present could object against him, ere he was suffered to run, as Chrysostom reporteth. <sup>{a}</sup> So it should be here. Was he not a fit man to be a doctor of divinity, and a teacher in Israel, who being asked something touching the Decalogue, denied that he had ever any such book as that in his study Another <sup>{b}</sup> (and he a bishop) taking up a Bible, and reading in it awhile, when one asked him what book he had there, he answered, What book it is I know not; but this I know, that it speaketh altogether against our religion. An ass might not be coupled with an ox in ploughing. No ignorant doltish ass may plough in God's field the Church. Asinos elegit Christus et idiotas, saith Dr Beddingfield, sed oculavit in prudentes; simulque dona dedit et ministeria. Christ chose illiterate men, but made them learned and teachers of others.

He fall into the condemnation of the devil] διαβολος. That is, be condemned as the devil is, for his pride. Or, lest he come under the censure of calumniating persons, who have one common name (in Greek) with the devil. See #1Ti 3:11 2Ti 3:3 Tit 2:3.

Ver. 7. A good report of them, &c.] For a workman that needeth not to be ashamed; such a one as may muzzle the black mouth of any Campian, that shall say, as he doth of our Church, Ministris eorum nihil vilius; this is most true of Popish greasy hedge priests.

<sup>{See Trapp on "1Ti 3:6"}</sup>

Of the devil] Or, of the slanderer, who by carrying tales and finding faults, do the devil's work. <sup>{See Trapp on "1Ti 3:6"}</sup>

Ver. 8. Not doubletongued] διλογους. That can turn their tales, and tune their fiddles to the base of the times, saying as the company says, being as the planet Mercury, good in conjunction with good, and bad with bad. Lingua in vitulis marinis duplex est, {a} Sea calves are double tongued. Ministers must neither be sea calves nor moon calves; double tongued, nor unstable, or double minded, #Jas 1:8. {See Trapp on "Ac 2:3"}

{a} Tyriosque bilingues. Virg. Bartholin. in Anatom.

Ver. 9. Holding the mystery] {See Trapp on "1Ti 1:19"}

Ver. 10. Being found blameless] The world will look round about them, and expect (though unjustly) an angelical perfection.

Let them use the office of a deacon] Diaconus is said to come of κωνις, which signifieth dust, to show that such should be "dustily diligent."

Ver. 11. Must their wives be grave] As themselves must, #1Ti 3:6. Gravity is such an elixir, as by contaction (if there be any disposition of goodness in the same metal) it will render it of the property. So that deacons' wives cannot be otherwise than grave and gracious, having such husbands as is above described.

Ver. 12. Husbands of one wife, &c.] {See Trapp on "1Ti 3:2"} {See Trapp on "1Ti 3:4"}

Ver. 13. A good degree] Or a fair step to a higher order, i.e. to a bishopric or presbytership.

And great boldness in the faith] The peace of a good conscience and the plerophory of faith. This those that are faithful in the ministry shall be sure of; the former preferment they may possibly fail in. In a similar manner, when the twins strove in Rebecca's womb, the worst came forth first, and had the best place, #Ge 25:25; so the unworthiest are often exalted, #Ps 12:8, but the best have that which is better.

Ver. 14. Hoping to come unto thee] And to be an eyewitness of thy diligence, whereof I doubt not, joying in the mean while, "and beholding your order, and the stedfastness of your faith in Christ," #Col 2:5.

Ver. 15. In the house of God] See here the dignity of the Church, and the duty of ministers, which is to be faithful as stewards in all God's house. But what mean the Papists so to cry up the Church even above the Scriptures (as the Council of Basil did by their Cardinal Cusanus in answer to the Hussites), nay, above Christ himself, as Hosius and others. Can they mean honestly (quoth that martyr) that make so much of the wife and so little of the husband? Bastard children are all for their mother, and are called by her name, &c.

Ver. 16. And without controversy] Learned Cameron beginneth this verse at those words before, "The pillar and ground of truth, and confessedly great is that mystery of godliness, God manifested in the flesh," &c. It being a usual form of speech among the Jews (as he proveth out of Maimonides) to preface these very words, "The pillar and ground of truth," to any special doctrine touching religion. The word here rendered "without controversy," signifieth "confessedly," q.d. It is so under the broad seal of public confession.

Great is the mystery of godliness] A mystery, because above natural capacity. And a "mystery of godliness" the gospel is called, because, being believed, it transformeth men into the same image, and stirs up in them admirable affections of piety.

God manifested] Out of the bosom of his Father, out of the womb of his mother, out of the types of the law, &c.

In the flesh] Christ condescended to our rags, he put on a lousy suit of ours, induit sordes nostras, he took our flesh, when it was tainted with treason; our base nature, after it was fallen; which was a wonderful fruit of love: as if one should wear a man's colours or livery after he is proclaimed traitor, it is a great grace to such a man; so here. (Dr Sibbs.)

Justified in the Spirit] Or, "by the Spirit," that is, by the divine nature, #Ro 1:4, and by the Holy Ghost too; the second person raised up itself, but yet it was by the Holy Ghost too; which he used, not as an instrument, but as a common principle with himself, of equal dignity, only differing in order of persons. We shall also be justified and cleared of all false imputations at the resurrection, which shall be of names as well as of bodies. The sun shall scatter all the clouds, &c.

Chapter 4

Ver. 1. Speaketh expressly] Verbis non disertis solum, sed et exertis. Abroad and aloud, that it may be heard all the Church over, ϩητωζ.

Some shall depart from the faith] As did the ancient heretics the Papists (in whom all the old heretics seem to have fled and hid themselves), and the present prodigious sectaries with their opinionum portenta, our modern Antitrinitarians, Ariaus, Antiscripturists, Anabaptists, &c.

Doctrine of devils] Vented by Satan's emissaries and instruments. About the time of Pope Hildebrand, letters were dispersed up and down, that were said to be sent from hell; wherein the devil gives great thanks to the Popish clergy for the great multitudes of souls that by their seductions came thronging to hell more than ever in any age before. (Mat. Paris, Hist. A. D. 1072.) Nicolas Orum, an Oxford doctor, is said to have written those letters. He preached also at Rome, before the pope and his cardinals; discovering and condemning their errors, and foretelling their destruction.

Ver. 2. Speaking lies in hypocrisy] It was grown to a common proverb, "A friar, a liar." One of them undertook to show a feather of the wing of the angel Gabriel. The pope, to honour and encourage Tyrone the rebel, sent him (but who will believe it?) a plume of Phoenix's feathers. The poor people are persuaded to believe that the thunder of the pope's excommunication hath so blasted the English heretics, that their faces are grown all black and ugly as devils; their eyes and looks ghastly, their breaths noisome and pestilent, that they are grown barbarous, and eat children, blaspheme God and all his saints.

Having their consciences seared] There is more hope of a sore, than of a seared, conscience, a dead and dedolent disposition, #Eph 4:17-20, a heart that hath contracted a kind of hoof.

Ver. 3. Forbidding to marry] Papists forbid some to marry at any time, as the clergy; all, at some times, and that not as a precept of convenience, but necessity and holiness. In Anselm's time, cursed sodomitry and adultery passed free without punishment, where godly matrimony could find no mercy. The cardinal of Cremona, after his stout replying in the Council of London against the married estate of priests, was shamefully taken the night following with a notable harlot. They hold that it is far better for a priest to keep many whores than to have a wife. This, say they, is the heresy of the Nicolaitans.

To abstain from meats] As the Papists superstitiously do upon certain days, when to eat an egg is punished with imprisonment. (Schol. in Epist. ad Episc. Basil.) Qui autem totam diem Dominicam vacat temulentiae, scortis, et aleae, audit bellus homo, saith Erasmus: But he that spends the whole Lord's day in drinking, dicing, and drabbing, is let go for a good fellow.

Which God hath created] He made the grass before he made the beasts, and the beasts before man, that all might have food convenient for them.

Ver. 4. If it be received with thanksgiving] While we taste the sweetness of the Creator in the creature, and are stirred up thereby to praise his name. Doves at every grain they pick look upwards, as giving thanks. The elephant is said to turn up towards heaven the first sprig or branch that he feedeth on, &c. Birds chirp and sing to their Maker.

Ver. 5. By the word] Of permission, #Ac 10:15, and of promise, a new right purchased by Christ, &c.

And prayer] For his leave and blessing, that "staff of bread," &c. This is to eat to the Lord #Ro 14:6; to imitate Christ, #Mt 26:26-30; Paul, #Ac 27:35 Samuel, #1Sa 9:13.

Ver. 6. Nourished up in the words] Such are fittest to be made ministers as have been well bred, and inured to the reading of the Scriptures; as have sucked in holy learning together with their mother's milk. Quintilian adviseth that the child that is intended for an orator, should from two or three years old be accustomed to hear and babble out good language, the best words and best pronounced. Quanto id in Theologo futuro expetendum curandumque magis, &c.? saith Amama; how much more needeth such care and pains be taken with the child that is dedicated to the ministry, that he may become (as Quintilian saith an orator should be) vir bonus dicendi peritus, a good man and well able to deliver himself in good terms. I have known some (saith Peach) for their judgment in arts and tongues very sufficient; yet to have heard their discourse (so defective were they in their own tongue) you would have thought you had heard Loy talking to his pigs, or Johannes de Indagine declaiming in the praise of wild geese. Of Matthew Doringus, a Popish commentator, Steuchus (a Papist too) saith truly, that he is not worthy to be named ob universam V. T. scripturam foedissima barbarie conspurcatam, for defiling all the Old Testament with his base barbarisms, as the harpies did the good meat they seized on.

{a} Gr. and Lat. Myth. A fabulous monster, rapacious and filthy, having a woman's face and body and a bird's wings and claws, and supposed to act as a minister of divine vengeance. A type of eagle. (ED)

Ver. 7. But refuse] Gr. παραιτου, make a fair excuse. Shift them off, set them by, say thou art not at leisure to attend to them, hast no time to lose upon them. Poteras has horas non perdidisse, said Pliny to his nephew, You might have found you somewhat else to do.

Exercise thyself] Lay aside thine upper garments, as runners and wrestlers use to do, and bestir thee lustily, γυμναζε, Te nudum exerce. See #Heb 12:1.

Ver. 8. For bodily exercise profiteth little] Somewhat it doth (if rightly used) toward the strengthening of the body, preserving of the health, subduing of the flesh.

But godliness is profitable to all things] The Babylonians are said to make 360 several commodities of the palm tree (Plutarch); but there is a μυριομακαριστης, a thousand benefits to be got by godliness. Godly persons are said in Latin, Deum colere, to cherish God, because they are sure by sowing to the Spirit to "reap of the Spirit life everlasting," #Ga 6:8. Besides that, in this world they "shall obtain joy and gladness" (outward and inward comforts), but "sorrow and sighing shall flee away," #Isa 35:10.

Ver. 9. This is a faithful saying] And yet who hath believed our report? The promises are good freehold, and yet little looked after. Godliness hath but cold entertainment, because she lives much upon reversions.

Ver. 10. For therefore] Because godliness hath so much happiness laid up in the promises, #1Ti 4:8, and there is so much certainty of the performance of those promises, therefore we both do and suffer, #1Co 15:58. Finis edulcat media. The end sweetens the journey.

Who is the Saviour of all men] Not of eternal preservation, but of temporal reservation. For every man should die the same day he is born, the wages of death should be paid him presently; but Christ begs wicked men's lives for a season, saith one. Sin hath hurled confusion over the world, brought a vanity on the creature. And had not Christ undertaken the shattered condition of the world to uphold it, it had fallen about Adam's ears, saith another divine:

Specially of those that believe] Who therefore are in a special manner bound to observe and obey him. Among the Romans they that were saved were wont to crown him that saved them, and to honour him as a father all their days. Σεβεται δε τουτον ως πατερα, Polyb. vi. We must also set the crown upon Christ's head, #So 3:11, and obey this everlasting Father, #Isa 9:6.

Ver. 11. These things command and teach] Teach the tractable, command the obstinate, lay God's charge upon all.

Ver. 12. Let no man despise, &c.] But how should I help it? might he say; the apostle answereth, "Be thou an example to the believers, a pattern of piety"; for holiness hath honour, wisdom maketh the face to shine; natural conscience cannot but stoop to the image of God, wherever and in whomsoever it discerneth it: ου γαρ το νεο ευκαταφρονητον οτας Θεω ανακειμενον η, saith Ignatius (Epist. ad Magnes.) Youth seasoned with the fear Of God is not easily despised.

But be thou an example] Gr. τυπος, such a thing as maketh the stamp upon the coin. Exemplis sciola hac aetate magis aedificant ministri quam concionibus. Reason indeed should rule, and is therefore placed in the head. But when reason cannot prevail, example will.

Ver. 13. Give attendance to reading] First to reading, and then to exhortation; bringing as a good scribe, out of a good treasure, new and old. Father Latimer, notwithstanding both his years and constant pains in preaching, was at his book most diligently about two of the clock every morning. A rare example.

Ver. 14. Neglect not the gift] God's gifts groan under our disuse or misuse; and God hearing gives them the wings of an eagle; so that such may say as once Zedekiah did, "When went the Spirit of the Lord from me to thee?" God dries up the arm and darkens the eye of idle and idol shepherds, #Zec 11:17.

With the laying on of the hands] A custom that came from the Church of the Old Testament, #Ge 8:14 Le 1:4 3:2, is laudably used to this day in the ordination of ministers, but foolishly and sinfully abused by the upstart sectarians.

Ver. 15. Meditate upon these things] And so digest them, turn them in succum et sanguinem. Let your heart study a good matter, that your pen may be as the tongue of a ready writer, #Ps 45:1, and not present crude and rude stuff. When it was objected to Demosthenes that he was no sudden speaker, but came ever to the court after premeditation, he answered, Se si fieri posset, dicturum non tantum scripta sed etiam sculpta; that he would not only write but engrave, if he could, what he was about to utter in public. The same Demosthenes also would have such a one branded for a pernicious man to the commonwealth, who dared propose anything publicly which he had not beforehand seriously pondered. What impudence then is it in a preacher so to do. It was a wise speech of Aristides, who being required by the emperor to speak something propounded ex tempore, answered, Propound today, and I will answer tomorrow; for we are not of those that spit or vomit things, but of those that elaborate them, ου γαρ εσμεν των εμουντων, αλλα των ακριβουντων. Melancthon answered Eccius in like manner, who hit him in the teeth with his slowness in answering arguments. So did Augustine deal by Vincentius Victor, a rash young man, who boldly censured him for his unresolvedness concerning the original of a reasonable soul, and vaunted that he could do it without demurs or delays.

That thy profiting may appear to all] i.e. That it may appear thy gifts increase daily, by thy good husbandry.

Give thyself wholly to them] Gr. εν τουτοις ισθι, Be thou in them: totus in hoc sis. It was Mr Perkins' motto, Verbi minister es, hoc age, Thou art a minister of the word, make it thy whole business.

Ver. 16. Thou shalt both save] What a high honour is this to faithful ministers, that they should be styled saviours in a sense! So #Job 33:24 Ob 21 Jas 5:20. Only it must be their care to save themselves as well as their hearers; and that it be not said of them, as once it was of Laertes, the father of Ulysses, that he ordered all things well, but neglected himself. One desired a bad-living preacher to point him out a nearer way to heaven than that he had taught in his sermons; for he went not that way himself.

Chapter 5

Ver. 1. Rebuke not an elder] Lash him not with the scourge of the tongue, as a puny boy, μη επιληξής. Ne plagam inflixeris. Jerk him not as the pope did Henry IV of France in the person of his ambassador, or as the bishops and their shavelings did Henry II of England till the blood followed. This is not civil usage for an elder.

Ver. 2. With all purity] Not with some only, but "with all purity," for fear of the worst, εν παση αγνεια: and lest any impure motion therewhile creep into the heart unawares. The souls of ministers should be purer than the sunbeams, saith Chrysostom. They are by their office the lights of the world: let no snuff abide in them, they are fullones animarum, fullers of men's souls, to make and keep them white; let them take heed of a smutch. Turpe est doctori, &c. Nihil turpius est Peripatetico claudo. It is a shame for a teacher to be found faulty.

Ver. 3. Honour widows indeed] That is, such as are widows not by divorce, but by the death of their husbands, and loss of their children; such as was Naomi. Honour them, that is, take them into the college of widows, to be maintained at the Church's charge. In this sense ministers are to have double honour, {see #1Ti 5:17} which is therefore so termed, because they testified thereby the virtues of those so sustained.

Ver. 4. Let them learn first to show] Such any one is in truth, as he is at home, #Ps 101:2. The hypocrite's virtues (as that of the Sarmatians) run all outward. Something he seems abroad, but follow him home, and you shall soon see what he is: follow stage players into their attiring house where they disrobe themselves, and then it will appear they are vile varlets. {a} Like unto this apostolic precept, was that of Chile, one of the wise men of Greece, της αυτου οικιας καλῶς προστατεῖν to govern honestly a man's own family. (Laert. in Vita.)

And to requite their parents] {See Trapp on "Mt 15:4"} The storks feed their dams when old; though the young kites expel their dams, and with their bills and wings beat them out of their nest. Boughs bend toward their root, &c.

{a} A man or lad acting as an attendant or servant; a menial, a groom. Now arch. CED

Ver. 5. Trusteth in God] Whereas while she had a husband and children, she trusted overmuch in them. The αμαρροουσα sought not to our Saviour till all her money was gone. #Zep 3:12, they are an afflicted poor people, therefore they trust in the name of the Lord. When the apostle saith of the widow indeed, that she is desolate, he seemeth to allude to the Greek word for a widow, which comes of a verb that signifies to be desolate and deprived, χηρα α χηρω, desolor, destituo. So the Latin vidua a viduando, widow from bereaved of her husband, and the Hebrew almanah of alam, to be dumb; because death having cut off her head, she hath none to speak for her.

And continueth in supplications, &c.] As Anna the prophetess did, #Lu 2:36-38. A noble woman of Savoy, mother to John Galeaz, duke of Milan, after her husband's decease, caused a coin to be made, upon the one side whereof she drew these words, Sola facta, solum Deum sequor; Being left alone, I follow God alone.

Ver. 6. Is dead while she liveth] Cum careat pura mente, cadaver agit. Pamphilius in Terence saith the like of a light housewife. Sane hercle homo voluptati obsequens fuit dum vixit. St Paul's Greek cannot well be rendered but by Terence's Latin, and Terence's Latin cannot well be put into other Greek.

But she that liveth in pleasure] Gr. σπαταλωσα. The delicate dame, such as were those wanton daughters of Sion, those mincing minions mentioned #Isa 3:16-26, as also those of Tyre and Sidon, those of Phoenicia, so called from the Syriac phinneck, delicate: the Greeks call them τρυφεροι, such as lie melting in sensual delights and sinful pleasures, in the froth whereof groweth that worm that never dieth, #Jas 5:5. I have read of a gallant addicted to uncleanness, who at last meeting with a beautiful dame, and having enjoyed his fleshly desires of her, found her in the morning to be the dead body of one that he had formerly sinned with, which had been acted by the devil all night, and left dead again in the morning. Sure he had but ψυχρον παρακαλισμα, a cold armful of her at length (as Lycophron saith of an evil wife), and if God had given grace, it might have brought him to better courses; but where that is wanting, no warning will serve turn. Jeroboam had as great a miracle wrought before him in the drying up of his hand, as St Paul at his conversion, yet was he not wrought upon, because the Spirit did not set it on. Besides, grace is seated in the powers of nature. Now carnal sins disable nature, and so set men in a greater distance from grace, as taking away the heart, #Ho 4:11.

Ver. 7. And these things give in charge] Often inculcate and set on with a great deal of vehemence, that religion suffer not.

Ver. 8. But if any provide not] That they may have Gaius's prosperity, Mentem sanam in corpore sano: though the apostle's meaning here is chiefly as touching bodily nourishment and outward accommodations.

Specially for those of his own house] Socrates, an infidel, took care of the welfare of his family and allies, as Lipanins testifieth, των οικειων επεμελησε και των εκ του γενους εφροντησε. Bishop Ridley was very kind and natural to his kinsfolk. And the Lord Cromwell, before the time of his apprehension, took such order for his servants, that many of them, especially the younger brethren, which had little else to trust unto, had honestly left for them in their friend's hands to relieve them, whatsoever should befall him.

Ver. 9. The wife of one man] As Anna, #Lu 2:36. Such are held to be more modest, to whom the thought of death hath been enough to forbid the banns of second marriage.

Ver. 10. Well reported of, &c.] "A good name is better than precious ointment," #Ec 7:1; and "rather to be chosen than great riches," #Pr 22:1. Provident we must be to preserve it, learning of the unjust steward by lawful, though he did it by unlawful, means; for our Saviour noted this defect, when he said, "The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light," #Lu 16:8.

Ver. 11. To wax wanton] To run away (as pampered palfreys) {a} with the bit between their teeth, and to play the jades, καταστηνιαζειν.

{a} A saddle horse for ordinary riding as distinguished from a war horse; esp. a small saddle horse for ladies.

ÆD

Ver. 12. Having damnation] Or public reproach, as #1Ti 5:14, for their desultory lightness and inconsiderate rashness.

Cast off their first faith] Not that of their baptism (as various of the Indians do that have been baptized by the Spaniards), but their vidual {a} promised chastity and service to the saints.

{a} Of or belonging to, befitting, a widow or widowhood; widowed. ÆD

Ver. 13. They learn to be idle] It is an art soon learned, by doing nothing to do naughtily. Nihil agendo male agere discunt, Idleness is the hour of temptation, and an idle person is the devil's tennis ball, tossed by him at his pleasure.

Wandering about from house to house] As vagrants, or as pedlars opening their packs, and dropping here a tale and there a tale. A practice flatly forbidden by God, #Le 19:16 "Thou shalt not go up and down as a tale bearer." The Hebrew word signifieth a pedlar, גלל whence לגל for a foot. And another Hebrew word used for defaming or slandering, #Ps 15:3, properly noteth a footing or trotting it up and down, prying and spying and carrying tales and rumours, #2Sa 19:27. The Greek word also αργεω, and the Latin word arguo, first signifies to be idle, and next to reprehend others. (Beckman de Origin. ling. Lat.) Because they that have little to do at home, will be overly busy abroad, in censuring and slandering others.

And not only idle] The firstborn of idleness is, to do nothing; the next issue that she hath is, to do evil. Otium negotium, Idleness is a kind of business.

But tattlers also] Gr. φλυαροι, triflers; Magno conatu magnas nugas agunt. The Rabbis have a proverb, "That ten kabs of speech descended into the world, and the women took away nine of them."

And busybodies] For "every fool will be meddling," #Pr 20:3.

Speaking things, &c.] It is a very hard thing well to manage many words: εν πολυλογια πολυωρια, In multiloquio stultiloquium.

Ver. 14. Give none occasion to the adversary] The devil or his instruments, whose mouths he often borrows to blaspheme and rail with, who also watch as diligently for an occasion to speak evil of profession as a dog doth for a bone; they pry more narrowly into every miscarriage than Laban did into Jacob's stuff.

Ver. 15. Turned aside after Satan] Revolted from Christian religion, going out of God's blessing into the world's warm sun. These could not choose unto themselves a worse condition.

Ver. 16. Have widows] That are widows indeed, that have neither children nor nephews to relieve them, #1Ti 5:3, of whom by the law of nature they may require θρεπτηρια, aliment and assistance.

And let not the church be charged] How then will church robbers answer it, if church chargers be in fault? let them give us a just commentary upon #Pr 20:25, and remember Cardinal Wolsey, and his sacrilegious instruments; five of whom came to fearful ends, as Scultetus recordeth, and concludeth with this wish, Utinam his et similibus exemplis edocti discant homines res semel Deo consecratas timide attrectare, I would that men would be warned by these examples, and better advise how they meddle with church maintenance, thereby to enrich themselves. (Scultet. Annal.)

Ver. 17. Worthy of double honour] viz. Countenance and maintenance; that they may give themselves continually and cheerfully to preaching and prayer, #Ac 6:4. Let them have reverence and recompense.

They who labour] οι κοπιωντες, even to lassitude, as he doth that cleaveth wood, or that toileth in harvest, or that goeth on warfare, #2Ti 2:3,4. Preaching is a painful work and enfeebleth a man exceedingly, whence the prophet cries out, "My leanness, my leanness." And our Saviour, at little past 30, was reckoned by the Jews to be toward 50 #Joh 8:57. It is supposed by divines that he had so spent himself in preaching, that he seemed to the Jews to be much older than he was.

Ver. 18. Thou shalt not muzzle, &c.] {See Trapp on "1Co 9:9"}

Worthy of his hire] Of his food, #Mt 10:10; of his wages, as here. Hardest labourers have meat and drink and double wages. Among the Athenians, tragedians and comedians were said to labour in teaching the people, εις διδασχην εργαζομενοι, and therefore highly honoured; for this it was also that the ancients laid out so much money upon their theatres. But what was their pains to ours? and are we yet begrudged a livelihood.

Ver. 19. Receive not an accusation] If to be accused were sufficient to make a man guilty, no good minister should be innocent. Praedicare nihil aliud est quam derivare in se furorem totius mundi, saith Luther. Truth hath always a scratched face. Men hate him that reproveth in the gate. Every fool hath a bolt to shoot at a faithful preacher.

Ver. 20. Them that sin] i.e. Those presbyters that sin publicly, scandalously, as did Peter, #Ga 2:14, and those who were convicted by two or three witnesses, as #1Ti 5:19. Rebuke before all, yet not as if they were whipping boys. {See Trapp on "1Ti 5:1"} But if the fault be not known abroad, that rule of our Saviour takes place, #Mt 18:15,16. Constantine the Great was heard to say, "That if he should take a presbyter in the act of adultery, he would cover the matter with his imperial robe, rather than it should come abroad to the scandal of the weak and scorn of the wicked."

Ver. 21. Without preferring one] Or, without precipitation or prejudice. χωρις προκριματος. Omne iudicium a se aufert, qui ad causam praeiudicium affert. A judge must not sit to hear persons, but causes; therefore justice is drawn blindfold.

Doing nothing by partiality] κατα προσκλισιν, by tilting the balance on the one side, as the word signifies. An even hand must be carried between party and party. The contrary whereunto is called by the Greeks ετερομερεια, siding.

Ver. 22. Lay hands suddenly on no man] The best that can come of rashness is repentance. Scipio would not yield that a wise man should ever come in with "had I wist," ουκ ωμην. (Plutarch.) In ordination of ministers all possible care and caution is to be used. Chrysostom thinks that earnestness used by the apostle in the former verse, belongs chiefly to this. Some also make the two last verses a reason of this.

Neither be partaker of other men's sins] Whom thou shalt rashly ordain, and so thrust upon the people to their and thine infinite disadvantage. "From mine other men's sins (saith one), good Lord, deliver me." The Athenians had their δοκιμασια, which was a solemn examination of the magistrates, whether fit to govern or no; and of the orators, whether not incontinent, prodigal, unkind to parents, &c.; for if so, they were disprivileged, and not suffered to plead or speak publicly. (Rous's Archaeol. Attic.)

Keep thyself pure] See #1Ti 5:2, and know that sin is a filthy thing, and defileth the soul worse than any jakes (outhouses) can do the body, as our Saviour shows, #Mt 7:23.

Ver. 23. Drink no longer water] Timothy, living among the luxurious Ephesians, was so abstemious that the apostle is fain to prescribe him physic. Hypocrites will be chaste only in the mountains where are no women, and sober in Scythia where are no vines; but Lot was chaste in the midst of Sodom, and Anacharsis temperate among the debauched Athenians. The faithful in the world are like a pearl in a puddle; they lose nothing of their virtue, though amidst the vicious; like heavenly salamanders, they remain unscorched in the fire; like fishes, they retain their freshness in the salt waters.

But use a little wine] Modice, hoc est medice, pro remedio parcius, non pro deliciis redundantius, saith Ambrose; who also somewhere relateth of one Theotimus (a good name but a bad man) that he was so far from taking St Paul's advice, that having a disease upon his body, and told by the physicians that unless he drank less wine he was like to lose his eyes, Vale lumen amicum, "Farewell, sweet eyesight," said he, choosing rather to lose his sight than his sin; so will many their souls; being like affected to their base lusts, as the panther is said to be to man's dung, which it exceedingly desireth and maketh after.

Ver. 24. Some men's sins] The Judge of the earth keepeth his petty sessions now, letting the law pass upon some few, reserving the rest till the great assizes. Some wicked God punisheth here, lest his providence, but not all, lest his patience and promise of judgment, should be called into question, as Augustine hath observed.

Ver. 25. Cannot be hid] As putrid hypocrisy shall be detected (for the name of the wicked must rot), so wronged innocence shall be cleared, as the eclipsed moon wades out of the shadow, and recovers her splendour.

Chapter 6

Ver. 1. Count their own masters] And not under a pretence of Christian liberty, and because in Christ Jesus there is neither bond nor free, seek to shake off the yoke of obedience that God hath hung upon their necks. See #1Pe 2:18.

That the name of God and his doctrine, &c.] Be traduced as a doctrine of liberty. Heathens lay at the catch, #1Pe 2:12, spying and prying (as the word εποπτευσαντες there signifies), and imputing all public judgments to Christian miscarriages. Nunc male audiunt castiganturque vulgo Christiani (saith Lactantius, de opif. Dei ad Demet.) quod aliter quam sapientibus convenit, vivent, et vitia sub obtentu nominis celent. Christians are very hardly spoken of to this very day, because their conversation is not as becometh the gospel of Christ, but they think to cover their faults with the fig leaves of profession.

Ver. 2. Partakers of the benefit] i.e. Of Christ who is here called the benefit, as #Joh 4:10, the gift of God.

Ver. 3. If any man teach otherwise] ετεροδιδασκαλει, discover himself heterodox out of affectation of singularity, &c., as divers do in this licentious age; broaching things different from the received doctrine, as holding it, with Phocion, a goodly thing to dissent from others.

Consent not to wholesome words] Words that have a healing property in them. The Scripture (as that library of Alexandria) may be properly said to be the soul's medicine, η της ψυχης ιατρεια. By the reading of Livy, Curtius, Aventinus, and other historians, many are said to have been recovered of various desperate diseases. O facile et beatum curationis genus, saith John Bodin (de Utilit. Historiae). But the reading of the Holy Scriptures doth a far greater cure than this upon the soul. King Alphonsus, cured of a fever by reading Quintus Curtius, cried out, Valeat Avicenna, vivat Curtius, Farewell medicine, well fare history. May not we better say so of these wholesome words, this doctrine according to godliness, purposely composed for the promoting of piety in the world?

Ver. 4. He is proud] Gr. τετοφωται, he is blown up, big swollen. Swelling is a dangerous symptom in the body; but much more in the soul. Pride and self-conceit is a bastard (saith one) begotten between a learned head and an unsanctified heart; which being once conceived in the soul, causeth it to swell till it burst asunder with unthankfulness to God for the bestowing, with envy, scorn, and disdain of men in the imparting of such gifts as may be to them beneficial. Some think that the apostle alludeth here to the wind Typhon, which the ancients held hurtful to men's wits and senses; so that those that were blasted with it ran mad.

Knowing nothing] sc. Aright, and as they ought to know, #1Co 8:2. {See Trapp on "1Co 8:2"} The Gnostics boasted that they knew all things knowable. Irenaeus saith, that they were so besotted with an opinion of themselves, that they accounted their own writings to be gospel. Such self-admirers also were the Illuminates (as they called themselves), the Manichees, the Novatians. And such are now the Jesuits, the sectarians, &c.; and other male feriati fanatici, who lest they should not be reputed to know something unknown to others, profess skill beyond the circumference of possible knowledge.

Doting about questions] Gr. Question sick. As the schoolmen, and our new questionists. But God loveth curristas non quaeristas, saith Luther.

And strifes of words] λογομαχιας, frivolous questions and quarrels. The wit of heretics and schismatics will better serve them to devise a thousand shifts to elude the truth than their pride will suffer them once to yield and acknowledge it.

Ver. 5. Perverse disputings] ταραδιατριβαι, endless and needless discourses and exercises, opposite to those above, #1Ti 4:13-15. The Greek word signifieth galling one another with disputes, or rubbing one against another, as scabbed sheep will, and so spreading the infection.

Of men of corrupt minds] That lack not time but waste it, aliud agendo. As Lactantius saith of some brain sick idolaters in his time, they feigned what they pleased, and then feared what they feigned; so many conceit what they like, and then think themselves bound to justify their wild conceivings.

From such withdraw thyself] Gr. ἀφίστασο, stand off, keep at a distance, as you would from one that hath a plague sore; say of them to yourselves and others, as Austin doth of certain heretics, Illi garriant, nos credamus. Let them prate as they please, let us hold fast the faithful word.

Ver. 6. But godliness with contentment] True piety hath true plenty, and is never without a well contenting sufficiency, a full self-sufficiency. The wicked in the fulness of his sufficiency is in straits, #Job 20:22. Contrariwise the godly in the fulness of their straits are in an all sufficiency.

Ver. 7. We can carry nothing out] But a winding sheet, as Saladin's shirt, which he commanded to be hung up at his burial, a bare priest going before the bier, and proclaiming, Saladin the mighty monarch of the East is gone, and hath taken no more with him than what you see. (Carlon. Chron.) Indeed I read of one that being ready to die, clapped a twenty shilling piece of gold into his mouth, and said, Some wiser than some; if I must leave all the rest, yet this I will take with me. (Mr Rogers' Treatise of Love.) But this was none of the wisest men, you will say; as that great caliph <sup>{a}</sup> of Babylon was none of the happiest, that was starved to death by the great Cham of Cataia, amidst the infinite treasures of gold, silver, and precious stones that he and his predecessors had most covetously heaped together, whereof he willed him to eat, and make no spare. It is with us in the world (saith one) as it was in the Jewish fields and orchards; pluck and eat, they might, while there; not pocket, or put up. Or as boys that rob an orchard and meet with the owner at the door.

“- modo quem fortuna fovendo
Congestis opibus donisque refersit opimis,
Nudum tartarea portarit navita cymba.”
De Annibale, Silius Ital.

{a} The title given in Muslim countries to the chief civil and religious ruler, as successor of Muhammad. ED
Ver. 8. And having food and raiment] Houses are not named: for that then they were to stand ready to run from place to place, and to leave house and all behind them. Food and raiment, τροφην ου τροφην, σκεπασματα ου κοσμηματα, as Isidore here elegantly observeth, Food not junkets, raiment not ornament; garments quasi guardments to guard us from the cold air. Nature is content with a little, grace with less; as, not to starve, not to thirst, μη πηγαν, μη διψαν, saith Galen; Cibus et potus sunt divitiae Christianorum, saith Jerome. Bread and water with the gospel are good cheer, saith another. Epicurus could say, that he would think himself as happy as might be, si aquam haberet et offam, if he could get but a morsel of meat and a mouthful of water. (Aelian.) This was strange from Epicurus. But Epicurei mihi videntur melius facere quam dicere, saith Cicero, Epicurus and his followers practised better than they held. (Cic. de Fin. it.) A little of the creature will serve turn to carry a man through his pilgrimage. Insaniae igitur damnandi sunt (saith Vives), qui tam multa tam anxie congerunt, quum sit tam paucis opus. He is little better than mad that heaps up such a deal, when far less will do the deed.

Let us be content] Gr. αρκεσθησομεθα. Let us have enough, let us count it enough, if we have necessaries (to maintain our state, and live like ourselves); though we have not superfluities, let it seem sufficient.

Ver. 9. But they that will be rich] That are resolved to have it, howsoever— rem, rem, quocunque modo rem. {a} "He that hasteth to be rich shall not be innocent," #Pr 28:20.

And a snare] As the panther, which so loveth man's dung, that if it be hanged a height from it, it will leap, and never leave it till it have burst itself in pieces to get it.

Drown men in destruction and perdition] Ita demergunt ut in aquae summitate rursus non ebulliant, So as they never show themselves above water any more. {b} We read of the inhabitants of Oenoe, a dry island beside Athens, that they bestowed much labour to draw into it a river to water it, and make it more fruitful. But when all the passages were opened, and the receptacles prepared, the water came in so plentifully, that it overflowed all; and at the first tide drowned the island and all the people. So fareth it with many covetous caitiffs, (wretches) who seem to be of Nevessan the lawyer's mind, "He that will not venture his body shall never be valiant; he that will not venture his soul shall never be rich." Hubertus, an English cormorant, made this will: I yield my goods to the king, my body to the grave, my soul to the devil. How much better Aristippus and Crates the Theban, with their Hinc abite malae divitiae: satius enim eat a me vos demergi, &c.: they threw their riches into the sea, saying, Hence, hence, base trash! better we drown you in the sea than that you should drown us in perdition and destruction. Plutarch reports of one Philoxenus, that finding his heart too fast affected to his wealth, he made away with it; and said, nay, swore, that he would part with it rather than be undone for ever by it. {c} Christians have a better way to dispose of their riches than to throw them away, #Ps 16:3 Lu 16:9. But many rich wretches do as Heliogabalus did, who provided silken halters to hang himself withal, ponds of sweet water to drown himself with, gilded poisons to poison himself with, rather than to fall into the hands of his enemies. So do these strangle, drown, poison their precious souls with profits, pleasures, and preferments, &c., and many times meet with perdition and destruction, that is, with a double destruction, temporal and eternal, as some expound it.

{a} Divis qui fieri vult, et cito vult fieri. Juv.

{b} βυθιζουσι, such a drowning as is desperate.

{c} μα απους θεου εμε, ταυτα, τα αγαθα ουκ απολει, αλλ' εγω τυτα. Plut.

Ver. 10. For the love of money] Phocylides saith the same, η φιλοχρημοσυνη μητηρ κακοτητοσ απασησ. Covetousness is the mother of all mischief. Bion called it the metropolis of misdemeanor. Timon, the proper element of evils. There are those who draw it through all the commandments, and demonstrate it to be a breach of all.

The root of all evil] As there is life in the root when there is no sap in the branches; so covetousness often liveth when other vices die and decay, as in old men, who because they are likely to leave the world, spit on their hands and take better hold.

They have erred from the faith] Selling themselves to the devil, as Judas, Ahab, that pope for seven years' enjoyment of the popedom.

And pierced themselves through] Undique transfixerunt, They have galled and gored themselves. The covetous man hath his name in Hebrew of a word that signifieth sometimes to pierce or wound, #Ps 10:3 cf. Joe 2:8. He that will be rich takes no more rest than one upon a rack or bed of thorns; when he graspeth earthly things most greedily, he embraceth nothing but smoke, which wringeth tears from his eyes, and vanisheth into nothing. Three vultures he hath always feeding upon his heart, care in getting, fear in keeping, grief in spending and parting with that which he hath; so that he is in hell beforehand.

Ver. 11. But thou, O man of God] If Timothy were that angel of the Church of Ephesus, #Re 2:1, that left his first love (as some think he was), this counsel was but needful. Christ cautions his disciples to beware of worldliness, #Lu 21:34.

Flee these things] Remis velisque, with all thy might, that thou be not tacked with them, taxed for them.

Follow after righteousness] These are notable antidotes against covetousness. Paul shows him a better project; points him a sovereign amulet or antidote made up of these precious ingredients: 1. Righteousness, which gives every man his own. 2. Godliness, which gives God likewise his own (this the covetous man cannot awhile to do). 3. Faith, which feareth no famine, quelleth and killeth distrust. 4. Love, a professed enemy to sinful self-love, that nurse of covetousness. 5. Patience, to wait upon God, and not to make haste to be rich. 6. Meekness, in case of cross accidents; when the covetous, troubled by others, troubleth his own house, and meditateth revenge.

Ver. 12. Fight the good fight] Not only follow after the former graces, but fight for them, rather than fail of them.

Lay hold on eternal life] While others lay hold on wealth, honours, &c. Catch at the crown, which is hanged up on high, as it were, and provided for conquerors only, that so fight as to finish, #2Ti 4:7,8. Tempus est nos de illa perpetua iam, non de hac exigua vita cogitare, could the heathen orator say (Cic. ad Attic. x.). It is high time now we should think of heaven. Catch at the opportunity, as the echo catcheth the voice.

Ver. 13. Who before Pontius Pilate] Not dissembling the truth, though jeered by Pilate, who scornfully asked him, "What is truth?" q.d. Do you stand upon your life, and yet talk of truth #Joh 18:38. Julian and his heathen instruments had set out certain foolish and false relations under Pilate's name, purposely to cast dirt upon Christ, which are refuted by Augustine and Cyril.

Ver. 14. Without spot] Of foul sins, #De 32:5.

Unrebukeable] So as no just exception can be laid against thee for allowance of lesser evils.

Until the appearing] επιφανειαν. Illustrem illum adventure, as Beza renders it; the bright, clear, or radiant appearing. St Paul would have Timothy so carry himself as if Christ should then come, and to remit nothing of his zeal, though he should live till that time.

Ver. 15. Which in his times he shall show] Let no man therefore ask, Where is the promise of his coming? Though he be slow, yet he is sure; and his time is the best time: wait, #Jas 5:7.

The blessed and only potentate] A lively and lofty description of God, whom yet none can possibly describe. One being asked, what God was, answered, Si scirem, Deus essem.

Ver. 16. Dwelling in the light] So that the seraphims in their addresses to him, clap their wings on their faces, #Isa 6:2, as men are wont to do their hands when the lightning flasheth in their eyes.

Nor can see] We can see but God's back parts and live: we need see no more that we may live for ever.

Ver. 17. That they be not highminded] The devil will easily blow up his blab, if we watch not. Should the ant think herself some great business, because gotten upon her hillock? or the sumpter horse, because laden with treasure? Should the Egyptian ass think himself worshipful for bearing the golden Isis upon his back? And yet so it happens in common experience. Many men's good and their blood rise together; their hearts are lifted up with their estates, as a boat that riseth with the rising of the water. Every grain of riches hath a vermin of pride and ambition in it. Magna cognatio ut rei, sic et nominis, divitiis et vitiis.

In uncertain riches] Riches were never true to any that trusted to them. Vitrea est fortuna: cum splendet, frangitur. Riches, as glass, are bright but brittle. (Mimus.) Some render it the unevidence of riches (αδηλοτης); and indeed they do not evidence God's special love; they are blessings of his left hand, of his footstool, bona scabelli. "Not many rich," &c.

Who giveth us all things richly to enjoy] Thus riches cannot do for us. The covetous enjoy nothing, nor the sick, nor the discontented, nor any else, unless with riches God gives us himself. Our God should therefore be trusted, because he is, 1. A living God. 2. A giving God. The Athenians made their gods standing with their hands upwards, as if they were more willing to receive than to give. (Archaeol. Attic. xlv.) But our God openeth his hand, and lets fall his blessing upon everything living, and holds it a more blessed thing "to give than to receive," #Ac 20:35.

Ver. 18. That they do good] Not the richer the harder; as the sun moveth slowest when it is at the highest in the zodiac, or as the moon when it is fullest of light gets farthest off from the sun.

Rich in good works] This is to be rich in God, #Lu 12:21, when our works are good, Quoad fontem et quoad finem. As from the source until the end.

Ready to distribute] A virtue much commended in the kings of Egypt (Diod. Sic. i.); practised by the Pythagoreans, Essenes, but especially by those primitive Christians, #Ac 4:34,35. See my Common Place of Alms, and to those many examples there set forth of Christian bounty, add that of Mr Fox, who never denied any that asked him aught for Jesus' sake. And being once so asked by a poor man, he questioned him whether he knew Jesus Christ? And finding signs that the man was a believer, he gave him his horse, when he had no money. I commend not his discretion, but his zeal and charity were admirable. The like is reported of Aidanus, as hath been said before. Queen Anne Boleyn gave in alms fourteen or fifteen thousand pounds in three-quarters of a year, as Mr Fox reporteth; accounting that she had nothing of her own but what she had given away. Hoc habeo quodcunque dedi. (Seneca.)

Ver. 19. Laying up in store] As wise merchants, happy usurers, parting with that which they cannot keep, that they may gain that which they cannot lose.

On eternal life] Or, as some copies have it, "Of life indeed," της οντως ζωης. Aeterna vita, vera vita. (Augustine.)

Ver. 20. That which is, &c.] viz. The treasure of true doctrine, esteeming every particle of it precious, as the filings of gold.

Ver. 21. Which some professing] Gr. Promising, as the Gnostics and other heretics.

2 Timothy

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. Paul, an apostle, &c.] The preface of this Epistle seems to be an abridgment of that of the Epistle to the Romans. {See Trapp on "Ro 1:1"}

Which is in Christ Jesus] All out of Christ are living carcasses, walking sepulchres of themselves.

Ver. 2. Grace, mercy, and peace] {See Trapp on "1Ti 1:2"}

Ver. 3. Whom I serve from my forefathers] Those twelve tribes, that served God instantly, day and night, #Ac 26:7. That was a desperate resolution of the heathen orator (Cicero, de Nat. Deor. p. iii.), Me ex ea opinione, quam a maioribus accepi de cultu Deorum immortalium, nullius unquam oratio, aut docti, aut indocti movebit. I will never stir an inch from the religion of my forefathers, for any man's persuasion. Paul forsook his Phariseeism and forefathers to serve God, as Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob had done with a pure conscience.

Ver. 4. Being mindful of thy tears] Timothy was a man of many tears, so was David, Paul, Luther, Bradford, of whom it is said, that he did seldom eat but be bedewed his trencher with tears, and that few days passed him without plenty of tears shed before he went to bed:—Αγαθοι δ αριδακρυες ανδρες.

Ver. 5. In thy grandmother Lois, and mother] A sweet happiness to any child to have a good mother and grandmother. For these have great opportunity of dropping good things into their little Lemuels, as being much about them. The mothers of the kings of Judah are constantly mentioned; and as they were good or evil, so were their children. Partus sequitur ventrem, The birth follows the belly. The grandmothers also, as they often love their nephews better than their own immediate children (for love descendeth), so if they be religious (expertus loquor) they have a strong influence upon them, and are a means of much good unto them, as was Naomi, no doubt, to Obed, #Ru 4:16, though she were but his grandmother-in-law.

Ver. 6. Stir up the gift] Blow up thy smaller spark into a flame. Grace in us is like a dull seacoal fire, saith one, which if not now and then blown and stirred up, though there be no lack of fuel, yet will of itself at length die and go out. The word αναζωπυρειν, here used by the apostle, is Plato's word. The apostle seems to have been well read in Plato's writings. Though I grant the word is also found in the Greek text, #Ge 45:27, and the apostle here might very well allude to the fire of the altar that came from heaven, and was day and night kept in by the priests. See the canon for that fire, #Le 6:12,13, Hezekiah's confession, #2Ch 29:6,7, the good housewife's candle, #Pr 31:18, the wise virgins' lamps, #Mt 25:8, our Saviour's charge, #Lu 12:35, and do accordingly.

Ver. 7. The spirit of fear] δειλαιας, called elsewhere the spirit of bondage, δουλαιας, #Ro 8:15. The law will convince the judgment; but it is the gospel that convinceth the lust and the affection.

Of power and of a sound mind] These two fitly stand together. Sin unrepented of, lies rotting at the heart, and by rotting weakeneth it, as a rotten rag hath no strength.

Ver. 8. Afflictions of the gospel] Affliction is Evangelii genius, a type of the gospel, saith Calvin; hence it is called "the word of Christ's patience," #Re 2:2,19

According to the power of God] For unless he supports us by his power, we shall never bear up in affliction.

Ver. 9. With a holy calling] All that follows (to those words in the end of #2Ti 1:10 "through the gospel") comes in by a parenthesis, and is so to be read.

Ver. 10. By the appearing] By his coming in the flesh; of which also the Psalmist speaketh, #Ps 96:13.

Brought life and immortality to light] As he drew light out of darkness at the creation. And as he then made light on the first day of the week, so on the same day he abolished death, &c., by his resurrection from the dead; by virtue also whereof

*“ Et sensus scoplis, et silvis addidit aures;
Et Diti lachrymas, et Morti denique vitam.
De Orpheo Manilius.*

Ver. 11. A teacher of the Gentiles] His writings therefore should be the more highly prized and studied by us Gentiles, as being properly ours; like as #Ps 127:1, was a song made (specially) for Solomon.

Ver. 12. I know whom I have trusted] Here was not a faint hope, or a conjectural confidence, but a plerophory of faith. The reason whereof is rendered by a Father, Quia in charitate nimia adoptavit me, quia verax in promissione, et potens in exhibitione, Because God, who of his free grace hath adopted me, is both able and faithful to fulfil his promises. (Bernard.) That was a notable speech of Luther (apud Jo. Manlium), Ipse viderit ubi anima men mansura sit, qui pro ea sic sollicitus fuit, ut vitam pro ea posuerit. Let him that died for my soul, see to the salvation of it.

That which I have committed] A child that hath any precious thing given him cannot better secure it than by putting it into his father's hands to keep; so neither can we better provide for our souls' safety than by committing them to God. Tutiores autem vivimus, si totum Deo damus, non autem nos illi ex parte et nobis ex parte committimus: We shall be sure to be safest, if we commit ourselves wholly to God, and seek not to part stakes with him therein. (Aug. de Bono Persev. cap. 6.) The ship that is part in the water and part in the mud is soon beaten in pieces.

Ver. 13. Hold fast the form] The catechistical principles, that method, system, short sum of divinity, that St Paul had compiled for Timothy's use; called here not only a form, τυπος υποτυπωσις, as #Ro 6:17, but a short form or brief method, such as hath both perspicuity and brevity, a platform, draught, or delineation, according to which Timothy was to steer, as by a compass.

Of wholesome words] That have a property in them, and wherein there is nothing froward or perverse, #Pr 8:8, nothing that may hurt or hinder thy soul's health; such as were the writings of Rabbis and philosophers, wherein (to say the best of them) together with the gold, silver, and ivory of some sound truths, they have store of apes and peacocks, toys and trifles; yea, some snakes and serpents, that may destroy the precious soul.

In faith and love] The sum of all sound doctrine and Christian duty. Ver. 14. The good thing that was, &c.] Thy crown of recompence, #Re 3:11. Or thy converts, thy crown of rejoicing, #1Th 2:19. Or the purity of thy doctrine, #1Ti 6:20. The gospel is Christ's depositum with us, committed to our keeping; as our souls are our depositum with him, committed to his. (Theophyl.) Let us therefore strive together for this faith of the gospel, #Php 1:27, resolving either to live with it or die for it. Let us earnestly contend for this faith "once (only) delivered," #Jude 3. Once for all; another edition of it is never to be expected. "Hold fast the faithful word," as with both hands, #Tit 1:9. O pray, pray, saith a Dutch divine, upon his deathbed, pontifex enim Romanus, et Concilium Tridentinum mira moliuntur; for the pope and his complices are doing their utmost to bereave us of our present enjoyments. And are there not still such factors for the devil, such pioneers hard at work among us? Let us carefully countermine them.

Ver. 15. All they which are in Asia] All the ministers there. These stars fell from heaven, #Re 6:13, as fast as the fig tree makes abort, with any never so light and gentle a wind. (Plin.)

Phygelus and Hermogenes] Famous only for their recidivation <sup>{a}</sup> and apostasy. Hermogenes look after Hermogenes the retrograde rhetorician; who at 22 years of age was an excellent orator, but by 24, mente lapsus est, forgot all his skill, and became a very dunce, nulla evidente causa, for no apparent reason, saith mine author (C. Rhodigin).

{a} Relapse into sin, error, crime, etc.; backsliding, apostasy. (Very common in 17th c.) (ED)

Ver. 16. He oft refreshed me] Gr. ἀνεψυξε, poured cold water upon me, as that angel did upon the racked limbs of Theodorus the martyr, mentioned by Socrates and Ruffinus in the days of Julian the Apostate.

Ver. 17. He sought me out very diligently] σπουδαιοτερον, with vehement desire and intention of affection, not as a coward seeks after his enemy, whom he hopes he shall never find, but as Saul sought David, or as the wise men the babe of Bethlehem, &c.

Ver. 18. The Lord] That is, God the Father "grant he may find mercy of the Lord," that is, of God the Son, as "Jehovah from Jehovah," #Ge 19:24.

That he may find] For his care in finding out me, #2Ti 1:17.

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. Be strong] Together with the word there goes forth a power, as #Lu 5:17. Exhortations are God's means to make us such as he requireth us to be.

In the grace that is in Christ Jesus] Weak grace may evidence pardon of sin; but it is strong grace that can overcome the temptations of Satan, #1Jo 2:12,14, and bear up the heart in strong consolation, {a} The blessing upon man in the first creation was, "Increase and multiply"; in the second, "Grow in grace, be strong," &c.

{a} Θαττον αν ειδης την καρδιαν η τα εν τη καρδια.

Ver. 2. Commit them to faithful men] No talent is given us for private and proper use, but that we be trading and transmitting it also to others. Synesius speaks of some, who having a treasure of abilities in them, yet would as soon part with their hearts as with their meditations, &c., the canker of whose great skill shall be a witness against them.

Ver. 3. Endure hardship] Never dream of a delicacy; think not to find God in the gardens of Egypt, whom Moses found not but in the burning bush. Many love Canaan, but loathe the wilderness; commend the country, but look upon the conquest as impossible; would sit in the seat of honour with Zebedee's children, but not drink the cup of affliction. These deceive themselves.

As a good soldier, &c.] Christ saith to us (as the Black Prince's father sent to him, fighting as it were in blood to the knees, and in a great distress), Either vanquish or die; as the Prince of Orange said to his soldiers at the battle of Newport, when they had the sea on the one side, and the Spaniards on the other, If you will live, you must either eat up these Spaniards or drink up this sea.

Ver. 4. With the affairs] Or, gainful negotiations with marriage matters, say the Papists here, but without all show of sense. The Council of Chalcedon strictly forbiddeth ministers to meddle in worldly matters: Clericus in oppido, piscis in arido. (Canon 31.) The apostle seemeth to allude to the Roman soldiers, who might not be tutors to other men's persons, proctors of other men's causes; they might not meddle with husbandry, merchandise, &c.

Ver. 5. Except we strive lawfully] Tam circa ciborum quam continentiae ac honestatis rationem, saith Cassianus, except for matter and manner he observe the laws of wrestling, both for preparation and execution. Aristotle saith, Not he that had a strong body, but he that ran well had the crown in the Olympic games; it was not he that had an athletic ability, but he that wrestled best, that get the garland.

Ver. 6. The husbandman labouring first] Spes alit agricolas. Nae illi falsi sunt (saith Salhst, in Jugur.) qui diversissimas res expectant, ignaviae voluptatem, et praemia virtutis. They are utterly out, that think to have the pleasure of sloth and the guerdon <sup>{a}</sup> of goodness.

Ver. 7. Consider what I say] Apply to thyself these forementioned similes, and so buckle close to thy business.

And the Lord give thee] Unless God open Hagar's eyes, she cannot see the fountain that is hard by. Rebecca cooks the venison, but Isaac only blesseth.

Ver. 8. Remember that Jesus] Remember it for thine encouragement; that Christ, for a reward of his sufferings, was both raised and exalted, #Php 2:9.

Ver. 9. But the word of God is not bound] It runs and is glorified, #2Th 3:1, being free and not fettered. I preach, though a prisoner, saith Paul; so did Bradford and other martyrs. Within a few days of Queen Mary's reign, almost all the prisons in England were become right Christian schools and churches (saith Mr Fox), so that there was no greater comfort for Christian hearts than to come to the prisons to behold their virtuous conversation, and to hear their prayers, preachings, &c. The Earl of Derby's accusation in the Parliament house against Mr Bradford was, that he did more hurt (so he called good evil) by letters and conferences in prison, than ever he did when he was abroad by preaching.

Ver. 10. That they may also obtain] viz. By my pains in preaching, though bound, and by example of my patience in suffering bonds, &c.

Ver. 11. It is a faithful saying] A sound and a sure assertion, #Ro 8:17. Afflictions are the praeludia triumphi, prelude of a triumph.

If we be dead] As Christ, #2Ti 2:8. Or, for Christ, if we be in deaths often, and at length lose our lives for his name's sake.

Ver. 12. If we suffer] No wearing the crown but by bearing the cross first. Ne Iesum quidem audias gloriosum, nisi videris prius crucifixum, saith Luther (Epist. ad Melancthon). Christ himself was not glorified till first crucified. Queen Elizabeth is said to have swam to her crown through a sea of sorrow; so must we.

If we deny him] {See Trapp on "Mt 10:33"} God usually retaliates, pays men home in their own coin, proportions jealousy to jealousy, provocation to provocation, #De 22:21 Isa 66:3,4.

Ver. 13. If we believe not] {See Trapp on "Ro 3:3"} Some sense it thus: though we prove perfidious, yet he is no loser by us, as having all within himself. Howbeit hereby we show that we have no interest in Christ; for he cannot deny himself, though we can deny him.

Ver. 14. Strive not about words] Either out of novelty or niceness. As Longolius, who would not use the word Ecclesia, Church, but instead thereof, Respublica Christiana, The State of Christians. Another Italian bishop for Episcopus took up the heathenish word Flamen; so Castalio for Angelus hath Genius. (Joh. Manl. loc. com.) And Pomponius Laetus was full of such like fooleries, airy contestations, and empty strifes. (Lud. Vives.) Or, strive not with words, bandying contumelious speeches (which is but to wash off dirt with dirt). Bishop Montague could not name any one, that did never so little dissent from him, without a reproach, as Rivet noteth of him. Arbitror te veritate convictum, ad maledicta converti, saith Jerome to Helvidius, I suppose thou hast nothing to say against the truth, and dost therefore fall a railing at me that defend it. Or, think not to carry it by big and boasting words without better proof, but stone thine adversaries with arguments, as Athanasius adviseth; burn heretics with the fire of charity, as Luther teacheth.

Ver. 15. Study to show thyself] There are crept into God's sanctuary such Levites to divide the word, that are not worthy the place of Gibeonites to cleave wood; like those unlearned logicians in Plato, Lacerant doctrinas, sicut caniculi panniculos, saith he; they tear up a text, and torment it, they wrest the Scriptures and wrong them, set them upon the rack, and make them speak what they never meant. These should be driven from the work, as those bastard Levites were by the Tirshatha, #Ezr 2:63.

Rightly dividing the word of God] The Syriac renders it, "Rightly preaching the word." Aeschines saith, an orator's oration and the law (so a preacher's sermon and the word) must be unisons. {a} And if Galen could say, that in anatomizing man's brain, physicians must carry themselves as men do in the temple, how much more must divines do so, in dividing God's Holy Word! The metaphor seems to be taken either from the priests of the law, who were to cut up the sacrifices accurately, and to lay them upon the altar orderly; or else from householders, that cut and carve to every one at table their share of meat. So must ministers, and not do as he in the emblem, that gave straw to the dog and a bone to the ass, but see that every one have their proper portion: this is workmanlike, such as need not be ashamed.

{a} χρη το αυτο φθειγεσθαι τον ρητορα και τον νομον. Aesch.

Ver. 16. But shun] Gr. περιμτασο, go round about them, viz. to suppress them on every side. St Peter calls them bubbles of words, full of wind, #2Pe 2:18.

For they will increase] The Greek word προκοψουσι signifies, to "cut a thing before," to make a passage for other things: as in some countries they cut a passage for their sheep because of the ice. Sure it is that error is of an encroaching nature. Let the serpent but wind in his head, and he will quickly bring in his whole body. He that saith yea to the devil in a little, shall not say nay when he pleases; he that tumbleth down the hill of error, will never leave tumbling till he comes to the bottom. The popish superstition at first grew secretly, the tares were hid under the grain; but now they overtop and choke it. How many (today) first turn Separatists, then Antinomians, then Anabaptists, then Arminians, then Socinians, Anti-scripturists, Antitrinitarians, Stark-atheists. The London ministers in their late vindication complain of this wretched defection of many of their formerly forward hearers, and not without cause. It were far easier to write a book of apostates in this age than a book of martyrs.

Ver. 17. Eat as doth a gangrene] Which presently overruns the parts, and takes the brain, pierceth into the very bones, and if not suddenly cured by cutting off the part infected, kills the patient. Lo, such is heresy and error, which made Placilla the empress earnestly beseech her husband Theodosius senior, not to confer with Eunomius the heretic, lest he should be perverted by his speeches. (Sozom. vii. c. 7.) Anasius II, bishop of Rome, A.D. 497, while he sought to win Acacius the heretic, was seduced by him. (Jac. Revius, de Vit. Pont.) Error is exceeding infectious, and for most part mortal, as the leprosy in the head was held to be. Jealousy, frenzy, and heresy can hardly be cured, saith the Italian proverb.

Ver. 18. Have erred] Gr. ηστοχησαν, have missed the mark, as unskilful archers, or as inconsiderate mariners, by misreckoning of a point, they have missed the haven and run upon the rocks.

That the resurrection is past] These were (likely) the progenitors of Marcion, who taught that there was no resurrection of the body to be believed, but of the soul only from sin. (Epiph. Haeres. 43.) This heresy is now revived among us, and raked again out of the grave; as many other also are and will be, by this lawless liberty.

And overthrow the faith of some.] Not the grace, but the profession of faith; and this they are ever doing at (the word, ανατρεπουσι is in the present tense), that they may undo their disciples; by digging at the foundation thus, that they may demolish the whole fabric.

Ver. 19. Nevertheless the foundation] viz. Of God's election, which is here compared to a sealed book: on the one side of the seal is written, "The Lord knoweth them that are his." On the other side, "And let every one that nameth," &c. This the apostle setteth forth, for the better settling of such as were shaken by the fall of Hymenaeus and Philetus, two such forward professors.

Standeth sure] As on a rock. Our English word "sure" seems to come from the Hebrew tzur, a rock.

Having this seal] A seal is for two ends, safety and secrecy. The Jews use to write on the back of their sealed packets, Nun, Cheth, Shin, that is, Niddui, Cherem, and Shammatha, all sorts of excommunication to him that shall offer to break up sealed businesses. God's hidden ones are in a safe hand, and out of danger of utter apostasy, though he again suffereth the tree of his Church to be shaken, that rotten fruit may fall off.

The Lord knoweth them, &c.] In respect of the freeness of his election and immobility of his affection. Howbeit this knowledge that God hath of his, is carried secret, as a river underground, till he calls and separates us from the rest.

That nameth the name of Christ] He may have an infallible seal of salvation, that but nameth Christ's name in prayer, that can say no more than Abba, Father, desiring and resolving to depart from iniquity.

Ver. 20. There are not only, &c.] Wonder not therefore, murmur not that there are a mixture of good and bad in God's house. He knows how to serve himself of both, #Ro 9:20-22. Neither be offended that some of great note fall away, as did Hymenaeus and Philetus. God hath his vessels of all sorts.

Ver. 21. Purge himself from these] From these seducers or arch-heretics, those vessels of dishonour, whose doctrine defileth worse than any kitchen stuff or leprosy.

He shall be a vessel, &c.] You know (said John Careless, the martyr, in a letter to Mr Philpot) that the vessel before it be made bright is soiled with oil and many other things, that it may scour the better. Oh, happy be you that you be now in this scouring house; for shortly you shall be set upon the celestial shelf as bright as angels, &c.

Ver. 22. Flee also youthful lusts] φευγε, Flee them he must with post haste, though such a chaste and chastened piece as he was. Youth is a slippery age, slippery as glass, easily contracting dust and filth, as the word used by David importeth, #Ps 119:9, . and should therefore cleanse its ways by cleaving to the word. Youth is a hot age, as the Greek word signifies; {a} a black dark age, as the Hebrew word noteth, #Ec 11:10. Therefore put away evil from thy flesh, saith the wise man there, out of his own experience. St Paul repeats and inculcates this precept upon his son Timothy, as men do not only anoint their flesh, but rub in the ointment. He knew that all was but enough. Summopere cavendum divine praeconi, ne dicta factis deficientibus erubescant. Nihil turpius Peripatetico claudo, saith one.

But follow righteousness, faith, &c.] Let not the devil find thee idle, but do what thou canst to be out of the way when the temptation cometh. Keep close to God in other matters, #Ec 7:26 Pr 22:14; exercise thyself in duties of piety with an upright heart, #Pr 23:26,27 6:23,24 2:10,11,16 Ro 1:28.

{a} ηθεος, of αθω, uro; αιζεις, of ζειω, ferveo.

Ver. 23. But foolish and unlearned, &c.] παρατου. Vitiligatorum naenias devita. Shift them off, set them by as seeds of sedition. Shake off vain questionists as great triflers. Such were the schoolmen, in detestation of whose vain jangling and doting about questions Luther saith, Prope est ut iurem nullum esse Theologum Scholasticum qui unum caput Evangelii intelligat; I could almost swear that there is not a schoolman that understands one chapter of the New Testament. One of their doctors said, that he had publicly expounded the Book of Job; but by that time he came to the 10th and 11th chapters, he did verily believe that Job was more vexed and tortured by his interpretations than ever he had been by his botches and ulcers. (Joh. Manl. loc. com.)

Ver. 24. Must not strive] μαχεσθαι, scold, wrangle, Ne rixando amittatur veritas, ut fere fit, lest by striving about the truth we utterly lose it. Facta est fides Evangeliorum, fides temporum, et cum fides una esse debeat, eo pene ventum est ut nulla sit. A sad complaint of Hilary. Erasmus observeth, that in the primitive times there were so many sects and heresies, and so much pretending to the truth by them all, that it was a witty thing to be a right believer. A late writer complaineth, that a Christian now is not the same thing as formerly. Our heads are so big (like children that have the rickets) that all the body fares the worse for it.

Patient] Or, tolerant of evil, both persons and occurrences; he shall have his back-burden of both, and must both bear and forbear: {a} Taceo, Fero, Spero, I am silent, I endure, I hope, must be his motto, as it was Hyperius’.

{a} ανεξικακον. ανεχου και απεχου. sustine, abstine

Ver. 25. Those that oppose themselves] Though they should deal as absurdly with us as those that deny the snow to be white, &c. Aristotle forbids to dispute with such. {a} But Christ commands not only by force of argument to convince them, #Jude 22, but also to handle them gently, and in meekness to instruct them.

If God will give them, &c.] Repentance is God’s gift: neither is it in the power of any to repent at pleasure. Some vainly conceit that these five words, Lord, have mercy upon me, are as efficacious to send them to heaven, as the Papists that their five words of consecration are to transubstantiate the bread. But as many are undone (saith a divine) by buying a counterfeit jewel; so many are in hell by mistake of their repentance.

{a} ελεγητε διακρινομενοι. Arguite disputatos; sic Lorinus vertit.

Ver. 26. Recover themselves] ανανηψωσι. Put away their spiritual drunkenness, #1Sa 1:14, and go forth and shake themselves, as Samson, out of sin’s lethargy. "Out of the snare of the devil," i.e. heretical doctrines or sensual pleasures; both which do intoxicate men’s brains and make them dead drunk.

Taken alive] But to be destroyed, #2Pe 2:12, without repentance unto life, #Ac 11:18. Εζωγημενοι, taken alive, and in hunting.

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. Perilous times] Gr. καιροι χαλεποι, hard times. Hard hearts make hard times. Eiusmodi tempera descripsit (saith Casaubon of Tacitus, and the same may we say of St Paul) quibus nulla unquam aut virtutum steriliora, aut virtutibus inimiciora; he describeth these last and loosest times of the world, barren of virtues, but abounding with vices. There was never any but Noah, that with two faces saw both before and behind. But that Ancient of days, to whom all things are present, hath here told us that the last shall be the worst.

Ver. 2. Lovers of their own selves] This sinful self-love is the root of all the rest that follow in this black beadroll.

Boasters] Or, arrogant, as that Pyrgopolynices, #Isa 10:8-11, Thrasonical {a} Lamech, #Ge 4:23, where he brags and goes on to out dare God himself. Spaniards are said to be impudent braggers, and extremely proud in the lowest ebb of fortune.

{a} Resembling Thraso or his behaviour; given to or marked by boasting; bragging, boastful, vainglorious.

ED

Ver. 3. Without natural affection, &c.] True Christians live soberly, as touching themselves, righteously toward men, and godly towards their God, #Tit 2:12. But these antipodes {a} are, as touching themselves, self-lovers, silver lovers, pleasure mongers, incontinent, boasters, proud, heady, high minded. As for their carriage towards others, they are blasphemers, disobedient to parents, without natural affection, truce breakers, or irreconcilable, ασπονδοι, false accusers, or devils, fierce or savage, despisers of those that are good, traitors, &c. And as to God, they are not lovers of God, but unthankful, unholy. And such dust heaps as these a man may find in every corner of the Church.

{a} Those who dwell directly opposite to each other on the globe, so that the soles of their feet are as it were planted against each other; esp. those who occupy this position in regard to us. ED

Ver. 4. Heady] Head long and head strong, rash and inconsiderate, Qui non vident προσσω και οπισσω, that look not well about them, but make desperate adventures. The Greek word προπετεις signifieth such as fly before they are fledged.

Lovers of pleasure] Not considering that the pleasure passeth, but the pain that attends it is perpetual, φιληδονοι. (Chrysost.) Momentaneum est quod delectat, aeternum quod cruciat. Let not men take pleasure in pleasure. It was not simply a sin in Esau to go a hunting; but yet the more he used it, the more profane he waxed, and came at length to contemn his birthright. Who are void of the Spirit but sensual ones? #Jude 18,19. Who say to God, Depart from us, but those that dance? #Job 21:10,11. Better be preserved in brine than rot in honey. These pleasure mongers are at last as the worst of all. Such a one was Catullus, who wished all his body were nose, that he might spend all his time in sweet smells. Such was Philoxenus, who likewise wished that his neck were as long as a crane's, that he might take more delight in meats and drinks. Such was Boccas the poet, who said that he was born por l'amore delle donne, for the love of women. But in the kingdom of pleasure virtue cannot consist. These voluptuaries (as one saith of them) are, Magis solliciti de mero quam de vero: Magisque amantes mundi delicias quam Christi divitias: as those recusant guests; the worst of all whom, and least excusable, was that epicure, who had married a wife, and therefore could not come.

Ver. 5. Having a form of godliness] Hollow professors are as hollow trees in an old wood; tall, but pithless, sapless, unsound. Their formality is fitly compared to a bulrush, whereof the colour is fresh, the skin smooth; he is very exact that can find a knot in a bulrush, #Isa 58:5. But peel it, and what shall you find within but a kind of spongy unsubstantial substance &c. These, as if religion were a comedy, do in voice and gesture act divine duties, in heart renounce them. Hypocrites only act religion, play devotion; like they are to the ostrich, saith Hugo, qui alas habet sed non volat which hath wings but flies not. God is in their mouths, but not in their reins, as the prophet Jeremiah complaineth; and all they do is an effect rather of art and parts, than of the heart and grace; shells not kernels, shadows and pageants of piety, not heart workings. The swan in the law was rejected for sacrifice, because of her black skin under white feathers. Art may take a man more than nature; but with God the more art, the less acceptance: he loveth truth in the inwards, #Ps 51:6.

Ver. 6. Creep into houses] Gr. ενδυνοντες, shoot themselves into the inner rooms of houses, qui sese immergunt, by their pithanology and counterfeit humility, as the Jesuits and many of our modern sectaries, {a} That creep like ferrets or weasels, as the Syriac here hath it.

Lead captive silly women] Gr. αιχμαλωτιζοντες, take them prisoners, and then make price of them, #2Pe 2:3. Egregiam vero laudem, et spolia ampla refertis. (Virgil.) But omnes haereses ex gynaeceis. It is the guise of heretics to abuse the help of women, to spread their poisonous opinions. They get an Eudoxia, Justina, Constantia on their side; and so work upon Adam by Eve. Of women they have ever made their profit, that have attempted any innovation in religion.

{a} Mulierculas Iesuitae pio studio semper complecti soleni.

Ver. 7. Ever learning, and never able] Because resolved not to lose their lusts. Intus existens prohibebat alienum; there was that within that kept out holy learning. It was therefore an excellent prayer of holy Zuinglius before his public lectures, Father of lights, enlighten our minds and open our hearts, so as that we may both understand thine oracles and be transformed into them. (Sculdet. Annal.)

Ver. 8. Now as Jannes and Jambres] Numenius the Pythagorean calleth him Mambres. These were those Egyptian sorcerers: their names St Paul had either by tradition, or out of some Jewish records. Apuleius in his second apology mentioneth one Joannes among the chief magicians. The Babylonian Talmud also maketh mention of these two by name, as chief of the sorcerers of Egypt. (Tract. Menachoth, cap. ix.)

Resist the truth] Not so much us as the truth. So Alexander the coppersmith did greatly withstand Paul's preachings, #2Ti 4:15; this was far worse than to withstand his person.

Ver. 9. As theirs also was] #Ex 8:19. When they were set, and could not with all their skill make a louse, but by further resistance manifested their folly unto all men. So did that magician of Antwerp, all whose enchantments were made void by Mr Tyndale the martyr, present at that supper, where and when he should, but could not, play his feats, and show his cunning.

Ver. 10. But thou hast fully known] παρηκολουθηκας. Or, thou hast exactly trod in my track, followed my footsteps; as Irenaeus did Polycarp's, as Paraeus did Ursin's; whence Paulus Melissus, “- Sacra docente Pareo, Vividus Ursini spiritus ora movet.”

Ver. 11. What persecutions I endured] Gr. οιοις, what manner of persecutions. A Christian may without sin be sensible of injuries and indignities. Only it must be the mourning of doves, and not the roaring of bears. A sheep may be as sensible of the biting of a dog as a swine is, though he raise not such a dust, make not such a din.

Ver. 12. Yea, and all that will live] Carry they the matter never so discreetly, they must suffer. Many dream of a delicacy, they conceit a godly life without persecution. These would pull a rose without pricks. Armat spina rosas, mella tegunt apes. (Boetius.) Thucydides complains of his countrymen, that none of them would ταλαιπωρειν δια το καλον, suffer aught for goodness' sake. Too few there are that today will do so.

Ver. 13. Shall wax worse and worse] In deterius proficient, a sorry kind of profiting, quando Andabatarum more res procedat. Thus the Illuminates (as they called themselves), a pestilent sect in Arragon, professing and affecting in themselves a kind of angelic purity, fell suddenly to the very counterpoint of justifying bestiality. (Spec. Europ.) And though these men and their light are quenched some while since, yet under pretence of new lights have not our church forsakers wheeled and wheeled about so long to the right hand, that they are perfectly come round to the left? {See Trapp on "2Ti 2:16"} {See Trapp on "2Ti 2:17"}

Ver. 14. But continue thou, &c.] Gr. μενε. Abide, keep thy station. Thou shalt surely be put to it, as that prophetic man in the ecclesiastical history went to the pillars a little before an earthquake, and bade them stand fast, for they should shortly be shaken.

Ver. 15. And that from a child] Gr. απο βρεφους, from a suckling. As all children, so those especially that are dedicated to the work of the ministry, should be betimes inured to Scripture learning. {See Trapp on "1Ti 4:6"} The story of Mistress Elizabeth Wheatenhall, daughter of Mr Anthony Wheatenhall, of Tenterden in Kent, late deceased, is very memorable. She being brought up by her aunt, the Lady Wheatenhall, before she was nine years old (not much above eight), could say all the New Testament by heart; yea, being asked where any words thereof were, she would presently name book, chapter, and verse. Timothy was so sweet a child, that if that had not been his name, it might have been his surname, as Vopiscus saith of Probus the emperor. (David's Love to God's Word, by Mr Stoughton. Epist. to Reader.)

To make thee wise] Gr. σε σοφισαι, to wise thee, that thou mayest wise others, as #Da 12:3. The same Hebrew word שִׁבַּל signifieth, 1. To understand; 2. To instruct others; 3. To prosper.

To salvation] He is the wise man that provides for eternity. And when all the world's wizards shall very wisely cry out in hell, Nos insensati, We fools counted their lives madness; they shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, #Da 12:3. Sapientes sapienter descendunt in infernum.

Ver. 16. All Scripture is given] Gr. Θεοπνευστος, breathed by God, both for matter and words. What frontless heretics then are our upstart anti-scripturists, that dare affirm that the Scriptures are not divine, but human invention, and that the penmen wrote as themselves conceived; they were the actions of their own spirit, &c. Also that the Scriptures are insufficient and uncertain, &c. Papists likewise speak and write basely of the Holy Scriptures, as Bishop Bonner's chaplain, who called it "his little pretty God's book." Gifford and Raynolds say, the Bible contains something profane and apocryphal. A certain Italian bishop told Espencoeus that his countrymen were charged not to read the Scriptures, ne sic fierent haeretici, lest they should thereby be made heretics. (Epenc. in #Tit 1) But Gregory calls the Bible Cor et animam Dei, the heart and soul of God; Augustine, a fortress against errors; Tertullian calleth it Nostra digesta, Our digests, from the lawyers; and others, Our pandects, from them also. Classicus hic locus est, saith Gerhard upon the text. This is a classic place to prove the perfection of the Scriptures against Papists, and whatsoever adversaries, who argue it of insufficiency, accounting traditions or revelations to be the touchstone of doctrine and foundation of faith. If the Scriptures be profitable for all these purposes, and able to make a minister perfect, &c., who can say less of it than that it is the soul's food, ψυχης τροφη, as Athanasius calleth it; the invariable rule of truth, κανων της αληθειας ακλινης, as Irenaeus: the touchstone of errors, the aphorisms of Christ, the library of the Holy Ghost, the circle of all divine arts, the wisdom of the cross, the cubit of the sanctuary.

And is profitable for instruction] See my True Treasure, p. 40. And hereunto add, for consolation, according to #Ro 15:4, though this also is here comprehended in doctrine and instruction for righteousness. The same Greek word, παρακαλεω, signifieth to exhort and to comfort.

Ver. 17. That the man of God] The minister, and so consequently the people too, for whose use the minister hath all. This is observed of them, that still the scholar goes one step farther than the teacher.

May be perfect] αρτιος ( omnibus numeris absotutus), with a perfection of parts, able and apt to make use of the Holy Scriptures to all the former purposes, for the behoof or benefit of his hearers. The authority of the Fathers, saith a grave and learned divine, I never urge for necessity of proof (the Scripture is thereto all-sufficient and superabundant), but only either in some singular points to show consent; or, 2. In our controversies against anti-christians, anti-nomists, Neopelagians; or, 3. When some honest passage of sanctification or seasonable opposition to the corruption of the times is falsely charged with novelty, singularity, and too much preciseness. (Mr Bolton's Four Last Things.)

Chapter 4

Ver. 1. I charge thee therefore] Matters of greatest importance must be pressed with greatest vehemence. As God putteth not forth great power but for great purpose, #Eph 1:18,19, so neither must we use great earnestness but in affairs of great moment. It is a weakness to be hot in a cold matter, but worse to be cold in a hot matter. Farellus persuading Calvin (then a young student, and bound for Italy) to stay and help in the Lord's work at Geneva, pronounced God's curse upon his studies (which Calvin pretended) in case he stayed not. Whereupon, Non ausus fuit Calvinus ad Farelli tonitrua plus quam Periclea, saith mine author, iugum vocationis, quod sibi a Domino imponi videbat, detrectare. Calvin dared not stir after such a charge, but staid it out there to his dying day. (Melch. Adam. in Vita Calv.)

Ver. 2. Be instant] Gr. επιστηθι, stand over it, stand close to it. Chrysostom, at Antioch, having preached many sermons against swearing, was at length asked when he would preach upon another subject? He answered, When you leave swearing, I will leave preaching against swearing.

In season, out of season] On the Lord's day, on the week day, Volentibus nolentibus die importunus, Tu vis errare, tu vis perire, ego nolo, saith Augustine. Let men know, whether they will or not, that for lack of preaching they shall not perish. The shewbread stood all the week before the Lord; to show, that preaching is not out of season on any day. The friars of Basil held that it was Lutheranum diebus profanis praedicare, heretical to preach on working days. (Melch. Adam.) But Anthony Person, martyr, told his persecutors that they were bite sheeps and not bishops for neglecting to preach. It being as great a wonder at Rome to hear a bishop preach as to see an ass fly, said Dr Bassinet. But Bishop Ridley preached usually every sabbath day and holy day; so did Bishop Jewel, Dr Taylor, martyr, Mr Bradford, even during his imprisonment; preaching, reading, and praying was all his whole life. He did sharply reprove sin, pithily improve errors, sweetly preach Christ crucified, earnestly persuade to a godly life.

With all longsuffering, &c.] Si decimus quisque, si unus persuasus fuerit, ad consolationem abunde sufficit, saith Chrysostom. If you gain but the tithe of your hearers, or less, it is well.

Ver. 3. Sound doctrine] Which, as honey, vulnera purgat, ulcera mordet, purgeth green wounds, but causeth pain to exulcerate parts. (Alex. Aphtod. problem.) Children, though they love and lick in honey, yet will not endure to have it come near their lips when they have sore mouths. There are those who are mad against the medicine, and fly in the faces of their spiritual physicians that come to cure them: they are sick of a Noli me tangere, refuse to touch me, and had rather perish in their sins than part with them. These must be pitied as people out of their right minds, and pulled out of the devil's paws; this, saith Jerome, is sancta violentia, optabilis rapina, a holy violence, a desirable rapine; they will thank us, if ever they recover; as if not, yet our reward is with the Lord. The physician is paid, whether the patient live or die. A minister must exhort "with all longsuffering," and often sigh out with good old Jacob (troubled at his children's untowardness), "Lord, I have waited for thy salvation," #Ge 49:18.

Having itching ears] Which must have clawing preachers; such as will never auriculas mordaci radere vero (Horat.), deal plainly and faithfully with their souls.

Ver. 4. Turn their ears from the truth] Aristotle writeth (De Mirabil. Auscult.) that vultures are killed with oil of roses. Sweet smells enrage tigers. Swine cannot live in some parts of Arabia, saith Pliny, by reason of the pleasant scent of aromatic trees there growing in every wood.

Ver. 5. Endure afflictions, do the work] Honor ministerii est in onere, dignitas in diligentia, corona in contemptu.

Make full proof] πληροφορησον, or, accomplish thy ministry. So executing every part of it, as to make it thy whole business. Verbi minister es, hoc age, was Mr Perkins' motto. Thou art a minister, look to it.

Ver. 6. Ready to be offered] To be poured out as a drink offering upon God's altar. <sup>{a}</sup> Thus the apostle expresseth himself emphatically, pathetically, elegantly, setting forth by what death he should glorify God, viz. by being beheaded. Whether my death be a burnt offering, a drinkoffering (by fire or sword), or a peace offering (that I die in my bed), I desire it may be a freewill offering, a sweet sacrifice to the Lord.

The time of my departure] He makes nothing of death. It was no more between God and Moses but "Go up and die." So between Christ and Paul, but launch out, and land immediately at the fair haven of heaven.

<sup>{a}</sup> σπενδομαι. He speaks of it as done already.

Ver. 7. I have fought a good fight] The nearer anything is to the centre, the more strongly and swiftly it moveth. The wine of the Spirit is strongest in the saints, when they are drawing to an end. His motions are quickest when natural motions are slowest, most sensible when the body begins to be senseless, most lively when the saints are dying. See this in Moses' swanlike song; David's last discourse to his son Solomon and his nobles; our Saviour's farewell to the world in that last sweet sermon and prayer of his, #Joh 13:1-17:26, wherein there is more worth, saith Mr Baxter, than in all the books in the world besides. When excellent Bucholcer was near his end, he wrote his book de Consolatione Decumbentium, Of the Comfort of Sick People. Then it was that Tossanus wrote his Vade mecum; Dr Preston, his Attributes of God; Mr Bolton, his Joys of Heaven; and before them all Savonarola, the Italian martyr, his Meditations upon the 51st Psalm, Verbis vivis, animatis sententiis, et spiritus fervore flagrantissimis, in most lively expressions, and with most heavenly affections. (Sixtus Senens.) Indeed, the saints are most heavenly when nearest to heaven; like as rivers, the nearer they grow to the sea, the sooner they are met by the tide.

Ver. 8. There is laid up a crown] Beyond a crown the wishes of mortal men extend not. Alexander inviting many to supper, provided a crown of 180 pounds to be given to those that drank most. Forty-one killed themselves with drinking to get that crown. Shall these do more for a trifle than we will do for heaven?

A crown of righteousness] So salvation is called; not for that it is of right due to us, but because it is purchased for us by the righteousness of Christ, and shall be freely given to those that are justified by faith.

Ver. 9. Do thy diligence, &c.] We want much of our comfort in the want of a friend, #Ec 4:9. Optimum solatium sodalitiū. How doth David bemoan the loss of Jonathan! How did Dr Taylor prize the company of his fellow prisoner, that angel of God, as he called him, John Bradford! What a mercy did St Paul count it that sick Epaphroditus recovered! #Php 2:27.

Ver. 10. Demas hath forsaken me] Blazing comets, as long as they keep aloft, shine bright; but when they begin to decline from their pitch, they fall to the earth. Jonathan followed the chase well, and with greedy pursuit, till he met with the honey; so doth many a Demas.

Having loved this present world] Or, embraced it, αγαπησας: that withered harlot had taken him with her eyelids; that old Circe <sup>{a}</sup> had bewitched him, that shall one day be burnt up by fire, for her enticing men. Divorce the flesh from the world, and then the devil can do us no harm. He hath no way to entangle us but to say, as he did to our Saviour, Mitte te deorsum, Cast thyself down, embrace this present world, follow after these lying vanities.

And is departed unto Thessalonica] Where he became an idol priest, as saith Dorotheus. So Harding (Bishop Jewel's adversary) was one while a thundering preacher, wishing he could cry out against Popery as loud as the bells of Oseney; yet afterwards proved a filthy apostate, and an utter adversary to the truth: and yet the world favoured him not; for the most he could get of his Holiness for all the good service he did him was but a prebend <sup>{b}</sup> of Gaunt, or to speak more properly, saith Dr Featly, a gaunt prebend. Stapleten (another turncoat) was made professor of a petty university, scarce so good as one of our free schools in England. Saunders was starved. Allin was commonly called the starveling cardinal. If any of the world's darlings speed better, let them take that counsel that was given by one to John III, king of Portugal, viz. to meditate every day a quarter of an hour on that divine sentence, "What shall it profit a man to win the whole world, and lose his own soul?"

<sup>{a}</sup> In Greek and Latin mythology the name of an enchantress who dwelt in the island of Aea, and transformed all who drank of her cup into swine; often used allusively. (ED)

<sup>{b}</sup> The portion of the revenues of a cathedral or collegiate church granted to a canon or member of the chapter as his stipend. (ED)

Ver. 11. For he is profitable] Once unprofitable, <sup>{#Ac 15:38}</sup> <sup>{See Trapp on "Ac 15:38"}</sup> but now profitable, #Phm 11.

Ver. 12. Tychicus have I sent] For what end, see #Eph 6:22. <sup>{See Trapp on "Eph 6:22"}</sup>

Ver. 13. The cloak that I left] O suppellectilem Apostolicam! (Eras. in loc.) Oh, what a small deal of household stuff had this great apostle, saith Erasmus; a cloak to keep off the rain, and a few books and writings. Tota etiam supellex mea est chartacea, saith he in another place: All my stock is in books. (Eras. in Farrag. Epistol.) And of judicious Calvin it is reported, that all the goods that he left behind him, his library being sold very dear, came scarcely to 300 florins, that is, about 90 pounds of our money. "Seekest thou great things for thyself?" #Jer 45:5.

But especially the parchments] Notebooks of his own making or collecting: these are highly prized by students. Julius Caesar, being forced to swim for his life, held his Commentaries in one hand above water, and swam to land with the other, <sup>{a}</sup> And what a sweet providence of God was that, that when Heidelberg was sacked and ransacked by the Spaniards, Ursin's Catechism, enlarged by Pareus, but not yet published, was taken among other books for pillage, and by him dropped in the streets, but taken up by a young student, and afterwards printed by Philip Pareus, to the great benefit of all good people!

{a} Maior fuit cura Caesari libellorum quam purpurae.

Ver. 14. Alexander the coppersmith] Who was once martyrio propinquus, saith Calvin, near unto martyrdom in Paul's cause, #Ac 19:33. A glorious professor may become a furious persecutor. "Let him that stands take heed lest he fall."

The Lord reward him] This is neither a curse nor a railing speech, saith an ancient, but a prediction well beseeming an apostle, that avenged not himself, but rather gave place to wrath, #Ro 12:19. (Author quaest. apud Just. Mar.)

Ver. 15. He hath greatly resisted our words] Or, our preachings, not our persons only. This was a foul fault. See #1Th 4:8 Ex 16:8.

Ver. 16. No man stood with me] So that Paul might have said as Socrates did, φίλοι, ουδεις φιλος, My friends, I have never a friend. And as Plato, A friend is a very mutable creature, εμμεταβλητον ζωον. Or, as he in Plautus, Ut cuique homini res parata est, firmi amici sunt. Si res lassae labant, itidem amici collabascunt.

Ver. 17. The Lord stood] God is never so sweet and so seasonable to his saints as in the day of their deepest distress. He loves to help those that are forsaken of their hopes.

The preaching might be fully known] Or, soundly proved to be a divine ordinance, by my constancy and contempt of death.

Out of the mouth, of the lion] Nero, who first orientem fidem Romae cruentavit, as Tertullian speaketh, put Christians to death, and made a bloody decree, that whosoever confessed himself a Christian should, without any more ado, be put to death as a convicted enemy of mankind. Tertullian calleth him Dedicator damnationis Christianorum, The dedicator of the condemnation of Christians.

Ver. 18. And the Lord shall deliver] Experience breeds confidence. St Paul got an opportunity after this from Rome to make an excursion to plant and confirm Churches, returned again to Rome, and was there martyred by bloody Nero, as the story is told.

Unto his heavenly kingdom] So David argues from temporals to eternal, #Ps 23:5,6.

Ver. 19. Salute Prisca, &c.] {See Trapp on "Ro 16:3"}

Ver. 20. At Miletum sick] {See Trapp on "Php 2:27"}

Ver. 21. Do thy diligence, &c.] The apostle quickeneth Timothy, as Cicero did his friend, Quamobrem si me amas, &c., si dormis expergiscere, si stas ingredi, si ingrederis curre, si curris advola. Credibile non est quantum ego in amore et fide tua ponam. Make all possible haste hither, for I rely much upon thy love and loyalty.

And Claudia] An English (or rather British) woman, who went to Rome, was converted by Paul, married a Roman gentleman called Pudens (as here) for his parts, but before called Rufus. It is thought she sent the gospel first into England. (See Antiq. Britan., Camden in Britan., Matth. Parker, Bale, Godwin's Catalogue, Speed's Chron., &c.) This is no article of our faith.

Ver. 22. Grace be with you] God's blessing be with you always, Amen. Even now toward the offering of a burnt sacrifice, said that martyr (Lau. Saunders) in a letter to certain friends.

Titus

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. The faith of God's elect] Not the election of God's faithful ones, as the Arminians make it.

And the knowledge of the truth] It is usual with St Paul in the beginning of his Epistles, to utter much in few, and to set down the sum of the whole gospel, as here he doth justification, sanctification, and the hope of salvation, and all by the acknowledging of the truth. This Epistle is called the abridgment of all St Paul's Epistles; but especially of those two to Timothy, whom he more largely instructeth in point of Church government, because a younger man than Titus, and not so well exercised in ecclesiastical affairs. (Estius.)

Ver. 2. God that cannot lie] The word of promise binds God; therefore it seems, saith one, that it is stronger than God; for he can as soon deny himself as his promise.

Promised] That is, purposed, as #2Ti 1:9, or decreed to promise, or promised to Christ, or promised to our first parents from the beginning of ages, ante multa saecula, so some sense it.

Ver. 3. Manifested his word] As when he said plainly, "He that believeth in the Son hath eternal life."

Ver. 4. Common faith] Common to the communion of saints, #Tit 1:1, and to them proper and peculiar; for all men have not faith, #2Th 3:2. Or common, that is, Symbolo Apostolico comprehensum, saith one, contained in the Apostle's Creed.

Ver. 5. Set in order] Gr. επιδιορθωση, conficias, set straight, or make up the things that I left unfinished. Straighten the things that grow crooked in the Church,

In every city] Crete had a hundred cities, and was therefore called εκατοπολις; as Thebes had a hundred gates, and was therefore called εκατομυλος

Ver. 6. The husband of one wife] Here the apostle canonizeth, saith Scultetus, the marriage of ministers.

Ver. 7. A bishop must be blameless] As was Moses, Samuel, Paul, Bradford, Bucer, &c., who led convincing lives; so that their foes could not in anything stain them, nor their friends sufficiently commend them. It is better, saith one, to live so as thine enemies may be amazed at thy virtues than that thy friends should have cause to excuse thy vices.

Not soon angry] οργιλος, biliosus et bellicosus, testy and tetchy, easily blown up into rage, that will not be laid down without revenge.

Ver. 8. Temperate] εγκρατης. No slave to his fleshly appetite, but one that can master himself and give laws to his lusts. See my Commonplace of Abstinence.

Ver. 9. Holding fast, &c.] αντεχομενον. As with tooth and nail, against those gainsayers that would snatch it from us.

Ver. 10. For there are many unruly] Lawless, yokeless, masterless men, untractable, untameable, that refuse to be reformed, hate to be healed. God will hamper these Belialists, #2Sa 23:6.

Ver. 11. Whose mouths must be stopped] Gr. επιστομιζειν, muzzled, as bandogs are. Frogs, they say, will leave croaking if but a light be hanged over the lake wherein they are. Let but the truth come clearly in place, and heretics will be soon silenced. But if they will not, another course must be taken with them.

Ver. 12. Even a prophet of their own] Epimenides, the poet, who by his countrymen the Cretians was counted a prophet, and had divine honours done to him after his death. This uncircumcised poet Paul brings here into the temple, as before he had done Aratus, #Ac 17:28, and Menander, #1Co 15:33.

The Cretians are always liars] So were the Carthaginians, Tyriique bilingues. {a} The French had so often deceived the English that such as they mean to deceive they call by a common byword, Les Anglois, The English. The Cretians were loud liars, even to a proverb. Of Dolon, Homer saith, that he had an art in lying. But Eudaemon Joannes (that Cretian demoniac) wins the whetstone from all his countrymen, while he blusheth not to tell the world in print that these are the doctrines and practices of the Protestants, to worship no God, to frame our religion to the times, to pretend the public cause to our private lusts, to break our words as we see good for our purpose, to cover deadly hatred under fair flatteries, to confirm tyranny by shedding the blood of innocents. (Eudaemon Joannes contra Casaub.) Evil beasts, cruel as well as crafty. These two are seldom separated; as some write of the asp, that he never wanders alone without his companion; and as the Scripture speaks of those birds of prey and desolation, #Isa 34:16 "None of them wanteth his mate."

Slow bellies] That is, given to sloth and idleness, and luxurious gluttons.

{a} Fides Punica. Virgil. Cres semper mendax, mala bellua, et helluo deses. Cretizare cum Cretensib. vide
Erasm. Adag. ἴσκει ψευσεα πολλὰ λεγειν εἰτοιμοισιν ὁμοία. Hom.

Ver. 13. Rebuke them sharply] Gr. ἀποτομῶς, cuttingly, precisely, rigidly, severely, and to the quick. A metaphor from surgeons, who must not be melch-hearted, saith Celsus, {a} but pare away the dead flesh, Ne pars sincera trahatur. Howbeit, that is a good rule given by a godly divine, that although there must be some warmth in a reproof, yet it must not be scalding hot. Words of reviling and disgrace, they scald, as it were. But words that tend to stir up the conscience to a due consideration of the error or evil reprov'd, they be duly warm, and tend to make the medicine work more kindly. Evangelizatum non maledictum missus es, said Oecolampadins to Farellus: laudo zelum, mode non desideretur mansuetudo. Vinum et oleum in tempore suo infundendum. Evangelistam non tyrannicum legislatorem praestes. Thou art sent to preach, not to rail. Thy zeal I commend, so it be mingled with meekness. Wine must be poured into men's wounds one while and oil another. Thou must show thyself a peaceable preacher, not a tyrannical lawgiver. (Oecolamp. Ep. ad Gul. Farel.) Rebuke, exhort, with all longsuffering, saith Paul to Timothy, #2Ti 4:2. Timothy, they say, was somewhat sharp and tart in his reproofs; and is therefore exhorted to patience and meekness. Titus was gentle, and of a mild disposition; and is therefore thus spurred on to sharpness and severity. The Cretians also were (possibly) a worse people than the Ephesians, and were therefore to be more hardly handled. Let it ever be remembered that matters of moment must be wisely but yet seriously dealt with. To tell wicked men of their sins so softly as Eli did his sons, or reprove them so gently as Jehoshaphat did Ahab ("Let not the king say so"), doth usually as much harm as good; like a weak dose in physic, it stirreth the humours, but purgeth them not.

{a} Chirurgos misericordes esse non oportet.

Ver. 14. Not giving heed to Jewish fables] Wherewith their Talmud is full farced, which while they hug overly hard, as Cleopatra did the snakes that sucked her blood, they perish.

Of men that turn from the truth] αποστρεφομενοι, with utter aversation and detestation, as a man turns his body from a loathsome object. These are those that will not endure sound doctrine, #2Ti 4:3.

Ver. 15. Unto the pure all things, &c.] This Piscator {in #Mr 14:3} holds a sufficient warrant for us to use, Ne forte, and other heathen expressions; like as the apostles used χρηματιζεσθαι χρηματισμος &c., abused by the Greeks to signify their wicked and devilish oracles. But Pasor is utterly against it. (Prefat. ad Lexic.)

Is nothing pure] Their own table is a snare to them, yea, God's table. The saints are kept at hard commons, but have their keeping of freecost: the wicked have larger cares, but pay sweetly.

Conscience is defiled] To wit, with sins, and so can no more judge it than a man can discern colours in a foul and soiled glass.

Ver. 16. They profess that they know] Aliud in titulo, aliud in pyxide. Outside Christians who perform, as Ephraim, dough baked duties, are almost persuaded, as Agrippa, come near God's kingdom with that young Pharisee; faint chapmen that go without the bargain, as he did that came kneeling to our Saviour, and saying, "What shall I do to inherit eternal life?" These do virtutis stragulam pudefacere, put honesty to an open shame, as Diogenes said to Antipater, who being vicious, wore a white cloak, the ensign of innocence.

Being abominable] Gr. βδελυκτοι □ α βδεω, pedo), such as stink above ground, and are of an offensive savour.

To every good work reprobate] αδοκιμοι, or injudicious; such as cannot make a right judgment of any good works, so as to approve and relish them, to see a beauty in them, as good, &c.

But in works they deny him] Which is, as if a man should confess his faith in English and deny it again in Latin. These are no better than devils wrapped up in Samuel's mantle; hot meteors, shooting and showing like stars.

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. But speak thou, &c.] Quasi dicat, the worse others are, the better thou must be; keeping a constant counter motion to the corrupt courses that are in the world through lust. A pearl in a puddle retains its preciousness; and fish in the salt waters retain their freshness.

Ver. 2. That the old men be sober, &c.] Not as it is said of the Flemings, that quo magis senescunt eo magis stultescunt, the elder the more foolish. (Erasm. in Moriae Encom.) Solomon and Asa were so. And the heathen sages wisely warn us, that old age is to be feared, as that which comes not alone, but brings with it many diseases both of body and mind. Saepe fit ut Satan, quem iuvenero capere non potuit, annosum fallat et capiat, said Bucholcerus. Many that have held out well in youth, have failed and been shamefully foiled in old age.

Ver. 3. In behaviour] εν καταστηματι, or, in habit, apparel, gait, gesture.

Teachers of good things] As was Bathsheba, #Pr 31:1,2; Lois, #2Ti 1:5; Monica, &c.

Ver. 4. To be sober] Or wise, teaching them as schoolmasters do their disciples; so the word σωφρονιζωσι signifies. He was a foolish man that said, Μισω σοφην γυναικα, I love not to have a woman wise. (Eurip.) "A prudent wife is of the Lord." Such a one was Abigail, and Aspasia, Milesia, the wife of Cyrus, who was said to be Καλη και σοφη, fair and wise also. (Aelian. xii. 1.) To love their husbands, though old and less lovely, as that famous Valadaura in Ludovicus Vives.

To love their children] And to seal up their love, not by hugging them to death, as apes do their young; but by educating them in the fear and admonition of the Lord, as Bathsheba, #Pr 31:1. Plutarch speaks of a Spartan woman, that when her neighbours were showing their apparel and jewels, she brought out her children, virtuous and well taught, and said, These are my ornaments and jewels. Mothers must learn to love their children's souls, #1Pe 3:4.

Ver. 5. To be discreet, chaste, &c.] Coniugium humanae divina Academia vitae. Much good may be learned by wedlock.

Keepers at home] Carrying her house on her back, as the snail doth. Sarah was found in the tent, so was Jael the wife of Heber. The Egyptian women ware no shoes, that they might the better keep home.

Ver. 6. Young men likewise exhort] {See Trapp on "2Ti 2:22"}

Ver. 7. A pattern of good] Gr. τυπος, a stamp. Digging thy sermons out of thine own breast, and living them, when thou hast done.

Ver. 8. May be ashamed, having, &c.] Oh, it is a brave thing to stop an open mouth, to throttle envy, to cut off all occasion of evil speaking.

Ver. 9. Not answering again] Not chatting or thwarting. Servus sit monosyllabus Domino, saith one. Apelles painted a servant with his hands full of tools, to signify his diligence; with broad shoulders to bear wrongs; with hind's feet to run swiftly about his business; with the ears of an ass, and his mouth shut with two locks, to signify that he should be swift to hear and slow to speak.

Ver. 10. Not purloining] Interverting, embezzling their master's estates, ordinary among the Romans, which made them call servants and thieves by one name, {a} ordinary among the Hebrews; whence that saying of Rabbi Gamaliel, Marbe gnabadim, marbe gezel, He that multiplieth servants, multiplieth thieves. {Pirke-aboth, #Tit 1} Ordinary also among us, whence that proverb, "He that will be rich must ask his servant's leave."

{a} Audent cum talia fures. Virgil.

Ver. 11. For the grace of God, &c.] This is rendered as a reason why servants should be faithful, because to them also belongeth the promise of salvation, yea, the reward of inheritance, as if they were sons, and to them the gospel is preached as well as to others.

Hath appeared] επεφανη. As the sun in heaven, or as a beacon on a hill.

Ver. 12. Denying ungodliness] Every gospel truth strikes at some sin, and thereby may be discerned.

Soberly, righteously, and godly] This is the Christian man's motto, his symbol, and the sum of his whole duty.

“ Haec tria perpetuo meditare adverbia Pauli: Haec tria sint vitae regula sancta tuae.”

The Egyptians when they praised their deceased friends, were wont to commend them for these three things, their godliness, righteousness, and temperance. (Diod. Sicul.)

Ver. 13. Looking for] As with necks stretched out, or head put forth, ἀποκαρδοκία, #Ro 8:19 19; as Sisera's mother looked out of her lattice for her son's happy return, #Jud 5:28.

Ver. 14. That he might redeem us] God will have the price of Christ's blood out; he will thoroughly purge us.

A peculiar people] Gr. A people that comprehend all that God sets any store by, that contain all his gettings; called elsewhere the people of acquisition, περιουσιος, #1Pe 2:9. The word here used Jerome saith he sought for among human authors, and could not find it. Therefore some think the Septuagint feigned this, and εἰουσιον, used also in the Lord's prayer. Theophylact saith it signifieth such a people as are conversant about their master's business, procuring of wealth and riches for him.

Zealous of good works] Give God thine affections, else thine actions are stillborn, and have no life in them. Now zeal is the extreme heat of all the affections, when they are seething or hissing hot, as the apostle's word is, #Ro 12:12, when we love God and his people out of a pure heart fervently, ζεοντες. Non amat qui non zelat, saith Austin, he loveth not at all in God's account, whose love is not ardent, desires eager, delights ravishing, hopes longing, hatred deadly, anger fierce, grief deep, fear terrible, voice, eyes, hands, gestures, actions, all lively, as in holy Bucholcer, Luther, Laurentius, Athanasius, Ignatius, Paul, Baruch: #Ne 3:20, he earnestly fortified, seipsum accendit; he burst out into a holy heat, he wrought with a kind of anger against himself and others, because the work went on no faster. He was not of his temper that said, Deum colo, uti par est, I go as far for God as in discretion it is fit. Religiosum oportet esse, sed non religantem; such and such are more precise than wise. The reserved professor never shows himself but at halt-light; he follows Christ but afar off, as Peter, or as the people followed Saul (they tremble after him, #1Sa 13:7); he is afraid of every new step, saying as Caesar at Rubicon, Yet we may go back. Carnal discretion controls his fervency, cools his courage, keeps him that he cannot be zealous of good works, which he doth at the best in a loose, lazy, perfunctory strain, like the pace the Spaniard rides, like Adonikam, that was the last that set foot forward toward the return of the captives, and therefore had his lot below his brethren, #Ezr 8:13. Where is now our ancient zeal, heating and whetting (saith a reverend zealot)? Oh, how cold and careless, how dissolute, and dilute are we! May it not be said of most of our hearts and houses, as #Isa 47:14, there is not a coal to warm at? May not the old complaint be well renewed, "There is none that calleth upon thy name, that stirreth up himself to take hold of thee?" #Isa 64:7. Let God's love in the work of our redemption be duly pondered (as here), and it will fire us up to a holy contention in godliness.

These things speak and exhort] Lest men should think we should only preach of Christ and grace, preach thou obedience and zeal, saith the apostle.

Ver. 15. Let no man despise thee] περιφρονειτα Nemo te plus sapere ausit. Or have occasion to think himself wiser than thee. He saith not, a #1Ti 4:12 "Let no man despise thy youth," for Titus was (likely) elder than Timothy. Mr Calvin thinketh that these words are spoken to the people; they are, for the most part, of delicate ears, and cannot abide plain words of mortification.

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. To be ready to every] As the bee, as soon as ever the sun breaks forth, flies abroad to gather honey and wax. A ready heart maketh riddance of religious duties.

Ver. 2. To speak evil of no man] Unless it be in an ordinance, for the reformation of the unruly; pleasing all in that which is good to edifying.

Ver. 3. For we ourselves also] I Paul, and thou Titus, were as bad as others; let us therefore show all mercy and meekness to others. Aut sumus, aut fuimus, aut possumus esse quod hic est. Either we are or will be or will be able to be who are here.

Serving divers lusts] As the Persian kings were lords of the world, but slaves to their concubines. {a} The Assyrians led away the Egyptians naked and barefoot, #Isa 20:2, so doth Satan sinners. Hence, though never so great they are called vile perrons, {b} as Antiochus, #Da 11:21, because they have as many lords as lusts Felix, at that very time that he trembled before Paul, could not but covet and expect a bribe from him.

Hateful] Gr. στυγητοι, of στυξ. Horrible, as hell itself, or justly odious to others.

{a} Captivarum suarum captivi. Plutarch. Roma victrix gentium, captiva vitorum. O rem miseram! Dominum ferre non potuimus, conservo servimus. Cic. Epist.

{b} Arch. A platform, to which one ascends by steps, in front of a church, mansion, or other large building, and upon which the door or doors open; sometimes applied to a double flight of steps ascending to such a front door. (ED)

Ver. 4. Kindness and love] His native good ness, and his communicated goodness to us, not yet existing, nay, resisting.

Ver. 5. Which we have done] We that are bankrupts in Adam, would yet fain be doing, and think to be saved for a company of poor beggarly duties; as bankrupts will be trading again, though but for pins, &c.

But according to his mercy] God is no merchant; his kingdom is not partum, but paratum He that said, Coelum gratis non accipiam, I will not have heaven on free cost, went without it. (Vega.)

He saved us by the washing of regeneration] So baptism saveth us, #1Pe 3:21. It sacramentally saveth, by sealing up salvation to the believer: hence it is called the laver of regeneration. It is a noble question in divinity (saith Mr. Burgess, Vindic. Legis.), seeing regeneration is attributed both to the word and to baptism, how one worketh it differently from the other. Or if both work it, why is not one superfluous?

Ver. 6. Which he shed] Gr. ἐξέχεεν, Poured out (as it were by pail fulls) his Spirit (the best thing) upon all flesh (the basest thing), #Joe 2:28.

Ver. 7. Be made heirs] Not purchasers; all is of free grace. Horreo quicquid de meo est, ut sim meus. Paul was a most constant preacher of grace. (Bernard. Augustine.)

Ver. 8. That thou affirm constantly] Be well settled in it thyself, and avouch and aver it confidently to others; being ready to make it good, if questioned, Διαβεβαιουσθαι.

Be careful] Bend their wits, and beat their brains, φροντιζωσι.

To maintain good works] To exceed and excel others in their honest functions and faculties; to be their crafts masters, to bear away the bell from all that are of the same trade or profession. This was Cicero's study, to be best at anything he ever undertook: should it not then be a believer's? Αιεν αριστευειν και υπειροχον εμμεναι αλλων, παντων κρατιστον. (Plutarch.)

Ver. 9. But foolish questions] Such as is that of the Papists, whether an ass drinking at the font do drink the water of baptism, and so may be said to be baptized? Est questio digna asinis, saith Melancthon. Such questionists are (as Stapleton saith of Bodin) magni nugatores, great triflers.

Ver. 10. A man that is a heretic] All heresies are found to flow (saith Chemnitius) either from the supercilious pride of Samosatenus, or from the sophistry of Arius, or from the ignorance of Aetius. (Loc. Com., i. 2.) These men's wits will better serve them to devise a thousand shifts to elude the truth, than their pride will suffer them once to yield and acknowledge it. And here this rule of St Paul takes place. Nestorius was an unlearned and proud man, but very bold and well spoken; insomuch as thereby he often carried it, and so seduced the emperor Theodosius, as that Cyril, a very good bishop, was thrown out of his place. Howbeit he was afterwards restored again with honour, when the emperor had better bethought himself, and the heretic Nestorius was condemned and cast out. (Zanch. Misc. Epist. Dedicat.)

After the first and second admonition reject] Or, avoid, devita, which some Popish dolts interpreted de vita tolle, kill them (as Erasmus reporteth), so to justify their bloody practice of putting Protestants to death. But what saith the same Erasmus speaking of Berquin the martyr, burnt by them for religion; Damnari, dissecari, suspendi, exuri; To be condemned, hanged, quartered, burned, beheaded, are things common to good and bad people. (Scultet. Annal.) To condemn, hang, quarter, burn, behead, is a thing common to righteous judges with pirates and tyrants. The judgments of men are various; happy is he that is absolved by God the Judge of all. And this was as much as he dared say against their proceedings, who for saying so much as he did, hardly escaped with this reproach, that for Erasmus they named him Erat-mus; because he so truly but bitterly biteth their ulcers.

Ver. 11. Is subverted] Gr. ἐξεστραπται, Is turned topsy turvy, as a tumbler that hath his heels in the air and his head on the earth; as a ship turns up her keel, or as a man "wipeth a dish and turneth it upside down," #2Ki 21:13; some render it thus, He hath the fairest side outward, and make it a metaphor from foul linen, the foul side turned inward; as if he should have said, such a man, whatsoever shows he maketh, is a naughty man. (Mr Cranford on #2Ti 2:17)

Condemned of himself] Since, as a headstrong horse, he gets the bit between his teeth, and runs away. Thus did the Pharisees, Toties puncti, et repuncti, minime tamen ad resipiscentiam compuncti, as one saith; they shut the windows lest the light should come in, and so were condemned, by their own consciences. Or, "he is condemned of himself" by excommunicating himself from the holy assemblies (as our church forsakers do), which other sinners are condemned to by the Church. The fornicator, the adulterer, the murderer, &c., are cast out of the Church by the Church officers. But heretics condemn themselves by a wilful departure from the Church; quae recessio propriae conscientiae videtur esse damnatio, and this seems to be the sense of the apostle's self-condemned, saith Jerome upon this text.

Ver. 12. Come unto me to Nicopolis] The inhabitants of this city are said so to have hated the braying of an ass, that they would not endure to hear the sound of a trumpet. So some pretend such a hatred of hypocrisy, that they will not abide the profession of piety.

Ver. 13. That nothing be wanting] Those that labour in the Lord's work must have all necessary accommodations and encouragements.

They must be set forth and brought forward on their journey and in their negotiations worthy of God, #3Jo 6. Deductione honorifica, #Ac 15:3 20:38 21:5. A Balaam will not deal hardly with his ass, if once he perceive the Lord to be in him, and to speak by him; shall we deal unworthily with God's ministers, in whom God is of a truth, #1Co 14:25, and hath given unto them the ministry of reconciliation? #2Co 5:8.

Ver. 14. To maintain good works] {See Trapp on "Tit 3:8"}

That they be not unfruitful] As drone bees or body lice, living upon others' labours, and so opening the mouths of heathens who will be ready to say, as he once did, Odi homines ignava opera, philosopha sententia, I hate those that can give fair words, but that is all they are good for. See we not how every creature in its kind is fruitful The sun, moon, and stars in their courses restlessly move to impart their light, heat, and influence to the inferior creatures. The clouds fly up and down emptying themselves, to enrich the earth, from which notwithstanding they reap no harvest. The earth is cut and wounded with shares and coulter, yet is patient, and yields her riches and strength to the tiller; yea, what herb, plant, or tree grows upon the earth which is not in its kind fruitful, spending itself and the principal parts of its sap and moisture in bringing forth some pleasant berry or such like fruit? (Plin.) And shall only man remain unfruitful, and not serve God and man with cheerfulness in the abundance of all things? Shall he be like the cypress tree, which the more it is watered, the more it is withered? Or like cyparet, whose neither fruit, nor leaves, nor berry, nor shadow is useful, but rather hurtful? Hear what Cicero saith, Pudeat illos qui ita vixerunt, ut ad vitam communem nullum fructum afferre possint. Let them learn to be ashamed of their sloth that have so lived, as to have been altogether useless and unfruitful.

Ver. 15. That love us in the faith] That best ligament of love. The Church is the only daughter of her mother, and is called Ecclesia, of calling all hers together. Religion hath its name of binding, because it binds men all in a bundle, and makes them be of one heart and of one soul, #Ac 4:32, to serve the Lord with one shoulder, #Zep 3:9, to glorify God with "one mind and with one mouth," #Ro 15:6, there being no such oneness in the world as among true believers.

Philemon

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. Paul a prisoner, &c.] This is a notable Epistle, and full of worth; each word having its weight, each syllable its substance. From an abject subject, the receiving of a runaway servant, St Paul soars like a heavenly eagle, and flies a high pitch of heavenly discourse. Elocutione tota gravis et brevis, densus sententiis, sanus iudiciis, &c., as Lipsius saith of Thucydides, may we say of our apostle, Plena roboris et lacertorum est tota epistola. (Lips.) This entire letter is full of strength and muscle.

Our dearly beloved] αγαπητω, diligibili. Or our lovely one, as Jerome renders it.

And fellow labourer] This shows, say some, that Philemon was a minister of the gospel. That he was a master of a family, is out of the question; and his name, which signifies a lover, suits well with his condition; as doth likewise his servant Onesimus, which signifieth profitable. They are not complete Christians that are not good at home as well as abroad; they walk not in a perfect way, that look not to do domestic duties, #Ps 101:2, by the careful performance whereof we are fitter to serve God or converse with men; as may appear by the situation of the fifth commandment, which stands between the two tables, and hath an influence upon both.

Ver. 2. And to our beloved Apphia] For Appia, but this was the manner of pronounciation at Tarsus, St Paul's country. This Apphia was (saith Theodoret) Philemon's wife; whose goodwill might make much to the furtherance of St Paul's suit.

And Archippus our fellowsoldier] Who seems to have sojourned with Philemon. {See Trapp on "Col 4:17"}

And to the church in thy house] Every Christian family is a church. But Philemon's house was (belike) a public meeting house, and so continued for many years after, as Theodorct witnesseth.

Ver. 3. Grace to you, &c.] {See Trapp on "1Co 1:3"} {See Trapp on "2Co 1:2"}

Ver. 4. I thank my God] Thus the apostle begins most of his Epistles. As any man is more or less gracious, so is he thankful. The same Greek word for grace signifieth thankfulness, χαρις. Neither is there anything that seals up more comfort to the soul than for a man to be able from the bottom of his heart to praise God. Self-love may make a hypocrite pray from the bottom of his heart, &c.

Ver. 5. Hearing of thy love and faith] Love is first mentioned, as more noticed. But faith is the mother grace, the womb wherein love and all the rest of that heavenly offspring are conceived.

Ver. 6. That the communication, &c.] This is that which St Paul prayed for Philemon, #Phm 4. For #Phm 5"} comes in by a parenthesis.

Ver. 7. The bowels of the saints are refreshed] Gr. αναπεπανται. Rested, as it were after much toil and travel, which made their hearts ache.

Ver. 8. That which is convenient] το ανηκον, or, that which is thy duty. Officium autem est ius actionis ad quemcunque statum pertinens, saith Jul. Scaliger.

Ver. 9. Yet for love's sake, &c.] Here is brave oratory, such as might well mollify the hardest heart; Petendo movet, et movendo petit.

Paul the aged] And therefore venerable. Cognata sunt. Old age and honour are in the Greek tongue very near akin; γηρας and γερας. It is a crown (saith Solomon), and that of glory, when found in the way of righteousness, #Pr 16:31. These bear a resemblance of the Ancient of days, #Da 7:9. These are like flowers which have their roots perfect when themselves are withering; these, like roses, keep a sweet savour though they lose their colour. These give greatest glimpse at their going down. Magna fuit semper capitis reverentia cani, #Ac 21:16.

Ver. 10. My son Onesimus] Ignatius, in his Epistle to the Ephesians, maketh mention of Onesimus, as pastor of Ephesus, next after Timothy. The Roman Martyrologue saith, that he was stoned to death at Rome, under Trajan the emperor. Paul calleth him his son because his convert. See #1Co 4:15; so Cyprian calleth Caecilius (who converted him) novae vitae parentem, the instrument of his life; and Latimer saith the like of his blessed St Bilney, as he calleth him.

Ver. 11. But now profitable] So is every true convert; there is little cause that men should boast they are no changelings, since whosoever is in Christ is a new creature. Sir Anthony Kingstone came to Mr Hooper the martyr a little before his death, and said, I thank God that ever I knew you; for God did appoint you to call me, being a lost child. For by your good instructions, whereas I was before both an adulterer and fornicator, God hath brought me to forsake and detest the same. Savoy, for the narrow passages infested with thieves, was once called Malvoy, or ill-way; till a worthy adventurer cleared the coasts, and then it was called Savoy or Salvoy, the safe way. Such a change there is in every good soul.

Ver. 12. That is mine own bowels] Pray for me, mine own heart root in the Lord (said Mr Bradford in a letter to Mr Saunders), Quem in intimis visceribus habeo ad convivendum et commoriendum.

Ver. 13. In the bonds of the gospel] Which is bound after a sort, when the preachers thereof are imprisoned.

Ver. 14. Would I do nothing] Posse et nolle nobile est. He that goes to the utmost of his chain may possibly break a link. Concedamus de iure ut careamus life. Part with somewhat for peace' sake. (Augustine.)

Ver. 15. For perhaps he therefore] God hath a hand in ordering our disorders to his own glory and our good. He teacheth us by our temptations. This made Mr Fox say that his graces did him most hurt, and his sins most good.

He departed for a season] Here the apostle makes the best of an ill matter. Converts are to be gently handled, and their former evil practices not to be aggravated.

Ver. 16. Both in the flesh] Perhaps Onesimus was Philemon's kinsman.

And in the Lord] Sanctior est copula cordis quam corporis. "He that is joined to the Lord is one spirit," #1Co 6:17.

Ver. 17. A partner] κοινωνον. One in common with thee. Amicorum omnia communia.

Receive him,] προσλαβου. Take him to thee, put him in thy bosom, make much of him. How effectually doth this great apostle plead the cause of this poor fugitive, now happily brought home to Christ. He deals as one that had himself received mercy, #1Co 7:25. Steep thy thoughts (saith one) in the mercies of God, and they will dye thine, as the dye vat doth the cloth, #Col 3:12.

Ver. 18. If he hath wronged thee] His shameful escape the apostle sweetly mitigateth by the name of wrong; his theft, of debt. See #Phm 1:15 cf. Ge 14:5.

Put that on mine account] To the like effect speaks the Lord Christ on our behalf to his heavenly Father, in his daily intercession.

Ver. 19. Thou owest unto me, &c.] If Cleanthes gave himself to his master Socrates; if Alexander could say that he owed more to Aristotle that taught him than to Philip that begat him; if another could say that he could never discharge his debt to God, to his parents, and to his schoolmaster; how deeply then do men stand obliged to their spiritual fathers and teachers in Christ!

I will repay it] Philemon, though rich, is suspected to be somewhat too covetous, from this expression.

“ O quam difficile est opibus non tradere mores; Et cum tot Croesos viceris, esse Numam!”

*Howbeit in both the Testaments we shall scarcely read of any godly man tainted with covetousness. Luther saith of himself, that though he otherwise had his flaws and frailties, yet the infection of covetousness never laid hold on him. Heu Germann illa bestia non curat aurum, said one of his adversaries, wiser than the rest, that would have stopped his mouth with money. But Seneca was naturally covetous, which he shrouds covertly in that sentence of his in his book de Tranquillitate, Nec aegroto nec valeo, I am neither sick nor well. It had been well for him if he could have said with that dying saint, My body is weak, my soul is well. As for those Epistles pretended to be written to him by St Paul, they are bastard and counterfeit, they savour not of his apostolic gravity and majesty, which shineth even in this to Philemon, being the least of all his Epistles. In those forged Epistles far higher matters are spoken of; but, alas, how coldly, how dryly and poorly! yet here behold a poor* petty matter is set forth with that pithiness and powerfulness of speech, as is admirable. (Dyke.)

Ver. 20. Yea, brother, let me have joy] οναμην, or benefit by thee; an elegant allusion it is in the original to the name of Onesimus; and it is as if the apostle embracing Philemon, and hanging about his neck, should say, I pray thee now let me be so far beholden to thee.

Ver. 21. Knowing that thou wilt, &c.] Who could ever have the heart to resist such rhetoric? Is not here the very marrow of most powerful persuasion ( Suadae medulla), a golden flood of eloquence? as Cicero saith of Aristotle's Politics.

Ver. 22. But withal, prepare, &c.] Thus he despatcheth his own private business in one word, as it were; his main care was, that Onesimus might do well: a fair mirror for ministers.

Ver. 23. Epaphras my fellowprisoner] Clapped up, belike, for visiting and countenancing St Paul, to whom he was sent by the Colossians with relief, while he was prisoner at Rome. The ecclesiastical history telleth us of one Phileas a martyr, who going to execution, seemed as one deaf at the persuasions and blind at the tears of his friends, moving him to spare himself. And when one Philoramus defending him said, Quomode potest terrenis lachrymis flecti, cuius oculi caelestem gloriam contuentur? How can he be moved with earthly tears, who hath his eyes full fed with heavenly glory? he also was taken in, and both presently beheaded.

Ver. 24. Marcus, Aristarchus, Demas] Here Demas was in good credit with the apostle, but soon after fell away; like as glass, and some baser metals, shine brightest in the fire when nearest of all to melting, or as the candle giveth a great blaze when going out with a stench. Hypocrites have their non-ultra when the godly man's motto is (as was Charles V's) Ulterius, Further yet, on, on.

Ver. 25. The grace of our Lord] Say the world what it will, a grain of grace is worth a world of wealth. The blessings that come out of Sion are better than any that come out of heaven and earth, #Ps 134:3; for they outlast the days of heaven, and run parallel with the life of God and line of eternity. Pray for them therefore in the behalf of ourselves and others, as Paul constantly doth for grace, not with graceless Nero, but with the Lord Jesus Christ, one good cast of whose pleased countenance was better to David than his crown and sceptre, #Ps 4:7,8.

Hebrews

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. God who at sundry times, &c.] See my True Treasure.

God who in times past, &c.] The Hebrews had generally a lighter esteem (though without cause) of the prophets than of the law; and of such of the hooks of Holy Scripture as had not the names of God or Lord in them (as Esther, Canticles, &c.) than of those that had. Our apostle, for more authority' sake, begins his Epistle with that nomen maiestativum (Tertul.), that holy and reverend name of God, so precious and pleasant to Hebrew ears; and wades at first into that Profundum sine fundo that bottomless depth of divinity: prefixing Θεός, Θεός (as Pausanias testifieth that the ancients even among the heathens were wont to do, in all their sacred writings), the name of God, for a preface, captandi gratia ominis boni, in token and hope of better speed and success.

Ver. 2. Hath in these last days] God doth his best works last (our last also should be our best, as Thyatira's, #Re 2:19); the sweetest of honey lies in the bottom. Contrarily, Satan (Laban-like) shows himself at parting; and (as the panther doth the wild beasts) inveigleth silly souls (into sin), and then devoureth them, #Jas 1:14,15 1Pe 5:8.

Heir of all things] Be married to this heir, and have all. Ubi tu Caius, ego Caia, may the Shulamite say to her husband, as the Roman ladies said to theirs.

By whom also he made the worlds] Visible and invisible, #Col 1:16; or the ages under the Old and New Testament; which last {#Heb 2:5} he calleth the world to come.

Ver. 3. Who being the brightness of his glory, &c.] A beam of that sun, and the express image of his person, a stamp of that seal. This is somewhat, but who can declare his generation? Some glimpses we may have by such similitudes; the full understanding of this inconceivable mystery we must wait for till we come to heaven. The word ἀπαύλασμα signifieth the glittering refulgency.

Upholding all things] Both in respect of being excellencies and operations. Seneca, rendering the reason why Jupiter was by the ancient Romans surnamed Stator, saith it was quia eius beneficio stant omnia, because all things are upheld by him. How much better may this be said of Christ! Sin had hurled confusion over the world, which would have fallen about Adam's ears (saith one) had not Christ undertaken the shattered condition thereof, to uphold it. He keeps the world together, as the hoops do the barrel. He also keeps all in order; disponens etiam membra culicis et pulicis, disposing of everything even to the least and lightest circumstance. (Aug.) Hence that of our Saviour, "The Father worketh hitherunto, and I also work," #Joh 5:17; hence that of the orator, Curiosus est et plenus negotii Deus, God taketh care of all, and is full of business. (Cic. lib. 1 de Nat. Deor.)

Purged our sins] By his merit and spirit.

Ver. 4. Better than the angels] Therefore is his doctrine, the gospel, with more heed to be heard, than the law ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator, that is, Moses, #Ga 3:19.

Ver. 5. This day] Either the day of eternity, and so it is meant of Christ's eternal generation; or else the fulness of time, wherein God brought his first begotten into the world, and mightily declared him to be the Son of God by the resurrection from the dead, #Ac 13:33 Ro 1:4.

I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son] αὐτοθεός. The second person is of himself, as God; of his Father, as a Son; because the Father communicateth to him his own nature, and that by generation; whence he is called "his begotten Son"; and his "only begotten"; because by generation God hath no more sons 'out him; he is called the "Father of spirits," #Heb 12:9; of all men, #Mal 2:10, as he is Creator and conserver of all; and of "all good men," by the grace of adoption and regeneration, #2Co 6:18 Joh 1:12.

Ver. 6. When he bringeth in the first begotten] He is the "only begotten," and yet is called the first begotten; because he hath the right of firstborn over his brethren, and was begotten before the world was.

And let all the angels of God] The manhood of itself could not be thus adored (because it is a creature), but as it is received into unity of person with the Deity, and hath a partner agency therewith, according to its measure, in the work of redemption and mediation, #Php 2:9.

Ver. 7. A flame of fire] Hence they are called seraphims, because they flame, like heavenly salamanders, in the fire of pure and perfect love to God and his people; and cherubims, from their winged swiftness; swift they are as the wind; which may seem to be the sense of this text, compared with #Ps 104:4,5.

Ver. 8. Thy throne, O God, is for ever] Christ is God, then, as is here set forth by many arguments. God hath laid "help on one that is mighty." "I and the Father am one."

Ver. 9. Hath anointed thee] This imports two things: 1. Ordination to his office, and so the Godhead also of Christ was anointed. 2. Qualification for it, and so the manhood only. And as the holy oil was compounded of various spices, so was Christ filled with all gifts and graces, #Ac 10:38; but especially with wisdom as a Prophet, holiness as a Priest, and power as a King.

Above thy fellows] i. e. Above all kings and potentates, #Ps 89:28. Or above all Christians, who partake of thine anointing, #Joh 1:20, and are made kings and priests, #Re 5:10. It may also be rendered pro consortibus tuis, for thy fellows, as importing a fulness in Christ for us, #Joh 1:16.

Ver. 10. The works of thy hands] #Ps 8:3, they are called the works of God's fingers, artificially elaborated; that heaven of heavens especially, whose artificer and workman is God, #Heb 11:10, τεχνιτης. The apostle there intimates that it is curiously and cunningly contrived.

Ver. 11. They shall perish] The visible heavens are defiled with man's sin, and shall therefore be purged by the last fire, as the vessels that held the sin offering were to pass the fire.

They shall all wax old] {See Trapp on "Ro 8:22"}

Ver. 12. But thou art the same] As in essence, so in will and counsel. Repentance with man is the changing of his will; repentance with God is the willing of a change; Mutatio rei, non Dei, effectus non affectus, facti non consilii.

Ver. 13. Sit on my right hand] As mine equal in honour and power. It seems to be a metaphor from some king, who, having an only begotten, lets him in the throne as heir and successor to reign with him, and use right of dominion over all as partner in the empire. Thus David dealt by Solomon, Vespasian by Titus, and our Henry II by his eldest son Henry, whom he crowned while he was yet alive; though afterwards he suffered him not to be what himself had made him.

Until I make thine enemies, &c.] Till the mystery of man's redemption be finished, death the last enemy destroyed, #1Co 15:26, the saints perfected and placed at his right hand, #Mt 25:33 Re 3:21 Ps 45:1-17.

Ver. 14. Are they not] See nly Common-place of Angels.

Sent forth to minister, &c.] The saints are the spouse, the bride, yea, the members of Christ; and so in nearer union than angels or any creature. This the devil envied, and fell from his station.

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. We should let them slip] Or, run out, παραρρωμεν, as water runs through a cracked vessel. The word mingled with faith in the heart, as #Ac 16:14, must be carefully kept, and it will safely keep us, #Pr 6:20-22. Some render it, Nequando propter fluamus, lest we pass by the things we have heard, as a river swiftly passeth by the side of a city, as the fashion of this world passeth away, as a picture drawn upon the ice soon vanisheth, &c. The Arabic rendereth it, "lest we fall," the Syriac, "lest we perish." They must needs fall and never rise again, perish without remedy, that reject the remedy, that hate to be healed, that spurn at the grace of the gospel, which is post naufragium tabula, the power of God to salvation. This is as if a condemned prisoner should reject a pardon.

Ver. 2. For if the word, &c.] Moses' law, #Ga 3:19.

Was stedfast] Ratified with this sanction, Aut faciendum, aut patiendum, either do it, or die.

And every transgression and disobedience] That is, every commission and omission.

Ver. 3. If we neglect] He saith not, if we reject, renounce, persecute; but if we neglect, let slip, shift off, as the word παραιτηθησθε is, #Heb 12:25, and as those recusant guests did, #Mt 22:1-14. Say we rather with Samuel, "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth." And with that Dutch divine, Veniat, veniat verbum Domini, et submitremus illi, sexcenta si nobis essent colla. Let the Lord utter his mind, and he shall have ready obedience, whatever come of it.

So great salvation] The doctrine of the gospel, that "grace of God that bringeth salvation," #Tit 2:11. I am fully persuaded (saith a late learned light of our Church, Dr Preston) that in these days of grace the Lord is much more quick and peremptory in rejecting men; the time is shorter, he will not wait so long as he was wont to do. The ground is, "How shall we escape if we neglect, &c.? which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed," &c. This is somewhat like St Luke's preface to his Gospel, #Lu 1:2. Hence some have thought that he also was the author of this Epistle.

Ver. 4. And with divers miracles] Whereby, as by the wings of the wind, the doctrine of the gospel was divulged at first. But he that now requireth a miracle, is himself a miracle. The establishing of the present reformation is and will be that miracle which we are in these times to look for. It is that which the former age had despaired of, the present admireth, and the future shall stand amazed at.

Ver. 5. For unto the angels, &c.] The Jews, as they had embraced the Pythagorean transanimation, #Mt 16:14, so the Platonic opinion of angels moving the heavens, and ordering the world; whom therefore they worshipped, intruding into those things whereof there was no sound either proof or profit, #Col 2:18. The angels (say Proculus the Platonist and Plutarch) are messengers that carry God's mind to men and men's requests to God. {a} But who told them all this? Egregie dicis, sed quomodo probas? said Aristotle of Moses, may we better say of these bold affirmers.

{a} πορθμενοντες τα των Θεων προς ανθρωπους.

Ver. 6. But one in a certain place] The full sense is, but he hath subjected it to Christ, as David testified, #Ps 8:4,5; where whatsoever is spoken to man is here applied to the man Christ Jesus; and so is proper to the saints by virtue of their union with Christ. In which respect they are more glorious than heaven, angels, or any creature. {a}

{a} Accommodatio est facilis ad personam Christi, si interpretes non vellent esse nimis ingeniosi. Ames. in #Ps 8:5.

Ver. 7. A little lower] Or, for a little while, Paulisper; viz. Ab utero ad urnam, from the womb to the tomb, from his birth to his burial, from his abasement to his advancement.

And didst set him over the works] Lions hate apes, but fear men; whereof no other probable reason can be given, but this here in the text; insomuch as the most timorous men dare kick and beat the largest elephants.

Ver. 8. Under his feet] It is not said, under his hands, but under his feet: 1. That he may trample upon them with his feet, and not dote upon them with his heart. 2. That by them, as by a step or stirrup, he may raise his heart to things above. A sanctified fancy can make every creature a ladder to heaven.

He left nothing] No, not angels.

Not yet all things put under him] The creature rebelleth against man, because he rebelleth against God. {a} If the master be set upon, the servants will draw, and fight for him.

{a} Rebellis facta est, quia homo numini, creatura homini. Aug.

Ver. 9. But we see Jesus] The saints hold all in cupite tenure in Christ. Now in him all things are already subjected unto us, and made serviceable to our salvation.

For the, suffering of death] Or that he might be in a condition to suffer death, this Sun of righteousness went ten degrees backward, not only below his Father, #Joh 14:28, but below the angels; for man (as man) is inferior to the angels.

Taste death for every man] i. e. For every such man as must be led unto glory, #Heb 2:10; as is of Christ's brethren, #Heb 2:11; as is given of God to Christ, #Heb 2:13; and for none other.

Ver. 10. For it became him] That is, God, whose perfect wisdom, justice, &c., shineth most clearly in that great work of our redemption; than the which God could not have done anything more be seeming himself; whatever the world's wizards conceit to the contrary, #1Co 1:23.

For whom are all things] {See Trapp on "Ro 11:36"}

To make the captain, &c.] He that is captain of the Lord's hosts, #Jos 5:14, is also "Captain of our salvation." This is comfort.

To make perfect] Or, consecrate, τελειωσαι. The priests were first consecrated with oil, then with blood; so was Christ first by the Spirit, and then by his own blood.

Ver. 11. Are all of one] viz. of Adam; only with this difference; that we are of Adam, and by Adam, but Christ was of Adam, not by Adam, for he was not begotten, but made, and so original sin was avoided.

He is not ashamed] Christ was not ashamed of us, when we had never a rag to our backs; should we be ashamed of him and his service?

Ver. 12. I will declare, &c.] #Ps 22:22. A psalm of Christ's sufferings, entitled upon Ajaleth Shachar, that is, "the morning stag," such a one as the huntsmen singleth out to hunt for that day. Christ thus hunted, and praying for deliverance, promiseth to praise God's name amidst his brethren, that is, "his faithful servants."

Ver. 13. I will put my trust in him] Which he needed not, had he not been a man subject to misery.

And the children, &c.] Christ is the everlasting Father, #Isa 9:6, and the saints are the travail of his soul, that prolong his days upon earth, #Isa 53:10,11; Filiabitur nomine eius, #Ps 72:17. There shall be a succession of Christ's name, till he present all his to his heavenly Father at the last day, with, "Behold, I, and the children whom thou hast given me."

Ver. 14. Children are partakers] παιδια, little children. Christ also became a little child, the babe of Bethlehem, #Isa 9:6. Catch him up, as old Simeon did; kiss him, lest he be angry, #Ps 2:12. Stumble not at his weakness, but gather assurance of his love, and grow up unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ, #Eph 4:13.

Took part of the same] Whence they are called Christ's partners or consorts, #Heb 1:9; and they may better say to him than Ruth did to Boaz, "Spread thy skirt over thy handmaid; for thou art a near kinsman, one that hath right to redeem," #Ru 3:9.

Him that had the power of death] As the hangman hath the power of the gallows, "to kill men with death," #Re 2:23. He hath not imperium principis, but carnificis, saith a Lapid. And that power of his also, as to the saints, is cassated, nullified, made void and of none effect, as the word καταργηση signifieth. He may roar upon them, and shake his chain at them; not ruinate them, or once set his fangs in them.

Ver. 15. And deliver them] So that to those that are in Christ, death is but the daybreak of eternal brightness; not the punishment of sin, but the period of sin. It is but a sturdy porter, opening the door of eternity; a rougher passage to eternal pleasure. What need they fear to pass the waters of Jordan to take possession of the land, that have the ark of God's covenant in their eye? Tollitur mors, non ne sit, sed ne obsit. As Christ took away, not sin, but the guilt of it, so neither death, but the sting of it.

Who through fear of death] The king of terrors, as Job calleth death, that terrible of all terribles, as Aristotle. Nature will have a bout with the best when they come to die. But I wonder (saith a grave divine) how the souls of wicked men go not out of their bodies, as the devils did out of the demoniacs, rending, raging, tearing, foaming. I wonder how any can die in their wits, that die not in the faith of Jesus Christ. Appius Claudius loved not the Greek zeta, because when it is pronounced, it representeth the gnashing teeth of a dying man. Sigismund the emperor, being ready to die, commanded his servants not to name death in his hearing, &c. The like is reported of Louis XI, king of France, who to put by death when it came, sent for Aaron's rod and other holy relies (as they reputed them) from Rheims; but all would not do. Cardinal Beaufort, perceiving that death was come for him, murmured that his great riches could not relieve him. Stat sua cuique dies. Now, death is nature's slaughterman, God's curse, and hell's purveyor; and must needs therefore be terrible to those whose lives and hopes end together, and who say as one dying man did, Spes et fortuna valet.

Ver. 16. For verily he took not] επιλαμβανεται. Or, for nowhere took he, q. d. We find not anywhere, either in the Scriptures or in any Church record.

But he took] He assumed, apprehended, caught, laid hold on, as the angel did on Lot, #Ge 19:16, as Christ did on Peter, #Mt 14:31, as men use to do upon a thing they are glad they have got and are loth to let go again. It is a main pillar of our comfort, that Christ took our flesh, for if he took not our flesh, we are not saved by him. But he not only took it, but overtook it by running after it, as the shepherd doth the sheep that is run away. A shepherd witha sheep upon his shoulder, engraved upon the communion cup, in the primitive times of the gospel, imported the same notion that here seems implied.
Ver. 17. In all things] Except in sin; as the brazen serpent was like the fiery serpent, but had no sting, ακαταληπτον, αθεραπευτον..

To make reconciliation] To expiate our sins, and to appease God's wrath, ιλασκεσθαι.

Ver. 18. He is able to succour] And no less apt than able; as he that hath been poor, or troubled with toothache, will pity those that are so. Queen Elizabeth said in her speech to the children of Christ's hospital, as she rode through Fleet Street, We are orphans all; let me enjoy your prayers, and ye shall be sure of mine assistance.

Non ignara mali, miseris succurrere disco.

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. Holy brethren] HOLY, because partakers of a calling that is heavenly. 1. Rations fontis, #Php 3:14,15. 2. Ratione finis, to the fruition of heavenly privileges in Christ.

Consider] Gr. κατανοησατε. Bend your minds with utmost diligence upon him.

The apostle and high priest] Those two chief offices of both Testaments, ut ubique superemineat Christus.

Ver. 2. As also Moses was faithful] And yet how unworthily handled by the author of the Marrow of Modern Divinity, that sly Antinomian, in various passages of his book, as might easily be instanced. How much better (herein at least) Bellarmine! Moses vir Deo longe acceptissimus, saith he, quo nihil habuit antiqua aetas mitius, satientius, sanctius: Moses a man highly accepted in heaven for his meekness, wisdom, holiness.

Ver. 3. Worthy of more glory than Moses] In whom these Hebrews trusted, #Joh 5:45. And the Jews at this day hold that the law of nature shall bring to heaven those that observe it, but the Hebrews (unto whom the law of Moses was peculiarly given) by keeping it shall have a prerogative of glory. Poor seduced souls!

Ver. 4. He that built all things] Moses and all.

Is God] That is, Christ, whom he had proved to be God by many arguments, #Heb 1:1-14. Messiah therefore is to be preferred before Moses.

Ver. 5. As a servant] Famulus ingenuus, a servant of the better sort, a man of worship, as the word seemeth to import (θεραπων, ex verbo θεραπευειν); though it be honour enough to be Christ's servant, of the meaner in his family. Constantinus, Valentinianus, and Theodosius, three emperors, called themselves Vassallos Christi, the vassals of Christ as Socrates testified.

Ver. 6. Whose house are we] And he is bound (by his own promise) to repair. He also is our dwelling house, #Ps 90:1, and by the civil law, De domo sun nemo extrahi debet, aut in ius vocari. A man's house is his castle.

If we hold fast] See here a just description of the invisible Church of Christ.

Ver. 7. Wherefore as the Holy Ghost] It is well observed by Calvin, that the words after "wherefore," to #Heb 3:12, should be enclosed with a parenthesis, and then the sense is clear. If Jerome and Egranus had observed so much in this and other places, they would not so sharply have censured St Paul for his obscurities and incongruities, and lame senses and sentences. (Jerome Epist. ad Algesiam. Joh. Egran. apud Jo. Manl. loc. com.)

Ver. 8. Harden not your hearts] Some hearts are so hard that neither ministry, nor misery, nor miracle, nor mercy can possibly mollify them. Such a heart is in some respects worse than hell. And if God broke David's bones for his adultery, and the angels' backs for their pride, the Lord, if ever he save any, will break his heart too. As when he marks out a man for eternal misery, he denies him his grace; and then the sinner hardens his own heart by his own inward depravity. Like as when an owner denies to prop up or repair a ruinous reeling house, the house falls by its own ponderousness.

Ver. 9. Tempted me] God must be trusted, but not tempted, as he is, when men, 1. Question and awake his power; 2. Limit the Holy One of Israel, and presume to prescribe to him, set him a time, &c.; 3. Neglect the use of means, and serve not his providence.

Ver. 10. I was grieved] The Hebrew text hath it, I was nauseated, and ready to rid my stomach at them, to spew them out of my mouth.

They do alway err] They must needs err that know not God's ways. Yet cannot they wander so wide as to miss of hell.

Ver. 11. They shall not enter] This the apostle propounds to unbelievers of his time, that they may beware. Alterius perditio tua sit cautio. Seest thou another suffer shipwreck? look well to thy tackling.

Ver. 12. In departing from] απιστια parit αποστασιαν. Infidelity is the mother of apostasy; as in Cranmer: but worse in John Dudley, Duke of Northumberland, in Queen Mary's days, who being brought to the scaffold on Tower hill, and having promise of life if he would recant his profession, dastard like forsook his Master, and exhorted the people to the Romish religion. Which his death sermon afterwards came forth in print by authority. (Speed's Chron.)

Ver. 13. But exhort one another] A special preservative from apostasy. See my Common Place of Admonition, and my treatise on #Mal 3:17.

Lest any of you be hardened] Continuance in sin hardeneth the heart, and gradually indisposeth it to the work of repentance. Qui non est hodie, &c. There is a deceitfulness in sin, a lie in vanity, #Jon 2:8. Doctor Preston relateth of one in Cambridge, that had committed a great sin, and had this temptation upon him, Do the act again, and your conscience will trouble you no more. He did it again, and then he grew a very sot indeed and went on in his wickedness.

Ver. 14: For we are made partakers] Christ's consorts, co-heirs with him, #Ro 8:17. This we are in present, if we persevere to the end.

The beginning of our confidence] Gr. υποστασεως, of our subsistence, or substance, that is, of our faith, #Heb 11:1, whereby we subsist, and become sons of God, as Ambrose expounds it. The Greek signifieth the very first act of faith, whereby we began to subsist in Christ.

Ver. 15. While it is said] sc. To you now, as it was said to them of old, #Heb 3:7. We must see our own names written on every precept, promise, example, &c., #Ho 12:4. There God spake with us.

To day if ye will hear, &c.] The negligent spirit cries, Cras Domine, Tomorrow, Lord. In crastinum seria. But who can tell what a great bellied day may bring forth? Either space or grace may be denied. God may leave men under his ordinances, as rocks in the midst of rivers, as blind at noonday.

Ver. 16. Howbeit not all] Yet all fell in the wilderness save Joshua and Caleb. Good men are oft wrapped up in a common calamity. The righteous perisheth, #Isa 57:1, so the world thinketh; "But whether they live, they live unto the Lord, or whether they die, they die unto the Lord," #Ro 14:8. The good grain is cut down together with the tares, but to another and to a better purpose.

Ver. 17. Whose carcasses fell] Gr. κωλα. Whose members, joints, limbs. Cadavera a cadendo. Oh that we could make that use of their disaster, that Waldus the French merchant (father and founder of the Waldenses) did of that sad sight that befell him. For walking in the streets, and seeing one fall suddenly dead, he went home and repented of his Popish errors and profane courses.

Ver. 18. To them that believe not] Or, that will not be persuaded, uncounsellable persons, that acquiesce not in wholesome advice.

Ver. 19. Because of unbelief] A bloody sin, #Joh 3:19. No sin will gripe so in hell as this. The devil will keep a holy day there, in respect of unbelievers.

Chapter 4

Ver. 1. Let us fear] With a fear not of diffidence, but of diligence.

{See Trapp on "Php 2:12"} {See Trapp on "1Co 10:12"}

Lest a promise] Some render it thus, Lest we should seem to fall short of the promise that is left us, &c. But where is that promise left us, may some say? It is closely couched in the former commination, #Heb 3:18. God sware that unbelievers should not enter, and therefore intimates a promise that believers shall enter. A bee can suck sweet honey out of bitter thyme, so cannot a fly do.

To come short of it] To come lag and late, υστερηκεναι, when the gate is shut, the drawbridge taken up, as those foolish virgins, or as lazy race runners, or as those that come a day after the fair, an hour after the feast, and so are frustrated.

Ver. 2. The word preached] Gr. ο λογος της ακοης, the word of hearing, i.e. the promise that fell from the preacher's lips into their ears. Nescio quid divinum in auscultatione est, saith one; I know not what divine business there is in hearing; but sure I am that what we hear doth more deeply affect us, and more firmly abide with us, and stick by us, than what we read.

In them that heard it] In their hearts, as in so many vessels. Faith and the promise meeting make a happy mixture, a precious confection.

Ver. 3. For we which have believed] Believers (and they only) have heaven beforehand in pretio, in promisso, in primitiis, in the price that was paid for it, in the promise of it (which is a sure hold), and in the firstfruits, the graces of the Spirit, which are as those grapes in the land of Canaan.

Ver. 4. And God did rest] Here the apostle showeth what that rest of believers is. Not that seventh day's rest, #Heb 4:5, nor that other rest, #Ps 95:11, meant of the land of Canaan, but another and better, typified in both those, viz. a spiritual resting from our own works of sins, so as God resteth in his love to us, #Zep 3:17, and we sweetly acquiesce in our interest in him, #Ps 116:7.

Ver. 5. If they shall enter] q.d. Then never trust me more. Yet Ambrose here taketh the words for a forcible affirmation, q.d. Si introibunt, bene habebunt.

Ver. 6. Seeing therefore it remaineth] This is a deduction from the former text of the Psalmist. Such as is that of our Saviour, #Mt 22:32, from #Ex 3:6. And such inferences rightly drawn are the very word of God, #1Co 7:10.

Ver. 7. After so long a time] Four hundred years almost passed between Joshua's and David's days. David's today was not Joshua's today.

Today if ye will hear] That day of salvation, wherein the Lord doth offer us mercy in the ministry of his word, showing us our misery, and exciting us to use the remedy.

Ver. 8. For if Jesus, &c.] That is, Joshua, who had his name changed when he was sent as a spy into Canaan, #Nu 13:16, from Oshea to Joshua, from Let God save, to God shall save. Under the law (which brings us, as it were, into a briery wilderness) we may desire, wish, and pray, that there were a Saviour, but under the gospel we are sure of salvation. Our Jesus is Jehovah our Righteousness.

Ver. 9. A rest to the people of God] Gr. A sabbatism, an eternal rest, a sabbath that hath neither evening, #Ge 2:2, nor labour, #Re 14:13. But they shall enter into peace, rest in their beds, #Isa 57:2; be ravished in spirit, receive the full import and purport of the weekly sabbath, rest from travail and trouble, #Re 1:10. 2. Of the seventh-year sabbath; for the creature, the ground shall rest from its vanity and slavery, #Ro 8:20,21. 3. Of the seventh seven year sabbath, the Jubilean sabbath; for their debts shall be all discharged, their mortgages released, their persons set at liberty from sin and Satan's slavery.

Ver. 10. From his own works] From the servile works of sin, #Ps 18:23. These are our own works. As a lie is the devil's own, #Joh 8:44, "When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own"; so when we do evil, we work de nostro et secundum hominem, #1Co 3:3. It is as impossible for us naturally to do good as for a toad to spit cordials.

Ver. 11. Let us labour] Here he resumes and re-inforces his former exhortations; that his words may be as nails and goads fastened by the masters of the assemblies. The judgment is first to be illighted by doctrine, and then the affections to be inflamed by exhortation; like as, in the law, first the lamps were lighted, and then the incense burned.

Fall after the same example] God hangs up some malefactors, as it were in gibbets, for a warning to others. <sup>{a}</sup> Jethro grew wise by the plagues that befell his neighbour, prince Pharaoh, as Rabbi Solomon observeth. And Belshazzar is destroyed for not profiting by his father's calamities; #Da 5:22, "Thou hast not humbled thy heart, though thou knewest all this."

{a} Exemplo alterius qui sapit, ille sapit.

Ver. 12. Quick and powerful] Gr. Lively and energetical; sc. in hearts that can treibble at God's judgments, as David did, #Ps 119:120. As for hypocrites, the word will ransack them, and give them a very glimpse of the judgment to come, as it did Felix, Herod, &c. God smiteth the earth with this rod of his mouth, #Isa 11:4, he dashes them in the teeth, and maketh them spit blood, as it were; hewing them by his prophets, and slaying them by the words of his mouth, #Ho 6:5 Re 11:5.

Soul and spirit] {See Trapp on "1Th 5:23"} It affecteth not only the lower parts of the soul, which are less pure, but the purest also, and most supreme; even the spirit of the mind, the bosom as well as the bottom of the soul.

And of the joints and marrow] The minima and intima, the least things and the most secret.

And is a discerner] Gr. A curious critic judging exactly, and telling tales of the hearers, disclosing the words that they speak in their very bedchambers, as #2Ki 6:12.

Ver. 13. Neither is there any creature] No, not the creature of the heart, the most secret thoughts and intentions.

That is not manifest in his sight] Or in the sight of it, that is, of the word preached; but every the least fibre, the smallest string in the heart, that would escape the sight of the most exact anatomist, is hereby cut up. See #1Co 14:24.

But all things are naked and open] Naked, for the outside, and opened, dissected, quartered, cleft in the back bone (as the word τετραχλισμενα here signifies), for the inside. Erasmus rendereth it, resupinata, making it a metaphor from those that lie with their faces upwards, that all passengers may see who they are. Theodoret readeth it, Hath the throat cut. So opened (say some others) as the entrails of a man that is anatomized, or of a beast that is cut up and quartered; and not only naked, as when the skin is pulled off. He useth a metaphor (saith an interpreter) taken from a sheep whose skin is taken off, and he hanged up by the neck with his back toward the wall, and all his entrails laid bare, and exposed to open view.

Unto the eyes of him] Or rather, of it, of the word, wherewith we have to do. The word, like a sacrificing sword, slits open, and as it were unridgeth the conscience.

Ver. 14. We have a great high priest] Who by a new and living way will bring us into the rest above mentioned. A great high priest Christ is, because, 1. Real, not typical; 2. Eternal, and needed not succession, as Aaron; 3. Entering (not into the holy places made with hands, but) into heaven itself, #Heb 9:23.

Ver. 15. Which earshot be touched] Christ retaineth still compassion, though freed from personal passion. And though freed from feeling, hath still yet a fellow feeling, #Ac 9:5 Mt 25:35. {a} Trajan the emperor being blamed by his friends for being too gentle toward all, answered that being an emperor he would now be such toward private men as he once, when he was a private man, wished that the emperor should be towards him. Christ hath lost nothing of his wonted pity by his exaltation in heaven.

Tempted] Or, pierced through, πεπειρασμενον. Luther was a piercing preacher, and met with every man's temptations; and being once demanded how he could do so? Mine own manifold temptations (said he) and experiences are the cause thereof; for from his tender years he was much beaten and exercised with spiritual conflicts.

Yet without sin] Tempted Christ was to sin, but not into sin.

{a} Manet compassin etiam cum impassibilitate

Ver. 16. Let us therefore come boldly] In the sense of sin to wrap ourselves in Christ's righteousness, and so go boldly to the throne of grace; this (saith a reverend man) is an honour to Christ our high priest. Luther prayed reverently to God, and yet boldly, as to his friend.

Throne of grace] The altar of incense stood against the mercy seat, but yet there was a veil between them. We, when we pray, must act our faith upon the throne of grace, though we see it not.

Chapter 5

Ver. 1. Both gifts] Of things without life.

And sacrifices] Of living creatures.

For sins] Christ, as God, was the priest and altar to offer up and to sanctify the sacrifice; and, as God-man, he was the sacrifice; for the Church was purchased by the blood of God, #Ac 20:28. A bloody spouse she was unto him, as in a sense it may be said.

Ver. 2. Who can have compassion] μετοιοπαθειν. Or, bear anything with reason, and not be easily angry, but show as much mercy as is meet for his, whether they have ignorantly offended, or upon deliberation. They cannot commit more than he can remit.

He is compassed with infirmity] Christ was compassed with that which we call miserable, not that we call sinful infirmity.

Ver. 3. He ought as for the people] A priest is a person by God's appointment taken from among men, and for men to offer gifts and sacrifices for sin in their and his own behalf.

Ver. 4. And no man taketh, &c.] Or if he do, he shall smoke and smart for it, as did Nadab and Abihu, Uzzah and Uzziah, &c. In physicis aer non facit seipsum ignem, sed fit a superiori, as Aquinas noteth upon ft, is text. No man might come uncalled to the king of Persia upon pain of death. What then shall become of such as come without a call to the King of heaven? Christ would not let the devil preach him, #Mr 1:13, quia extra vocationem, as one well notes, because he had no calling to such an office.

Ver. 5. Glorified not himself] As the pope doth, who will needs be styled Pontifex maximus, the greatest high priest (whereas Christ is called only the great, and not greatest high priest, #Heb 4:14). Pope Hildebrand especially, whom when no man would advance to

Peter's chair, he went up himself. Quis enim melius de me iudicare potest quam ego? said he, Who can better judge of me than myself? (Heidfeld.)

But he that said unto him] He glorified him, or made him high priest.

Today have I begotten thee] Add the words following, "Ask of me," &c., and the sense is full. For to ask of God those things that pertain to the people's safety and salvation, is the proper office of a high priest. Christ as he expiated his people's sins by his own blood, so he made intercession for them, 1. A little before his attachment, #Joh 17:1,2, &c., 2. In the very time when the sacrifice was hanged, #Lu 23:34. 3. In the heavenly sanctuary, #Heb 9:24.

Ver. 6. Thou art a high priest, &c.] The former proof was not so evident; but this puts the matter out of all question. A minister should use sound speech that cannot be contradicted; that he that is of the contrary part may be ashamed, having nothing reasonably to oppose, #Tit 2:8. The Jew would object that Christ was not of the tribe of Levi, therefore no priest. The apostle answers; Yes, a priest, but after another order, and proves it. This is συμβιβάζειν, collatis testimoniis demonstrare, as Paul did, #Ac 9:22, to confirm and assert.

Ver. 7. Prayers and supplications] Gr. κετηριας, deprecations, and most ardent requests, uttered with deep sighs, hands lifted up, and manifold moans, in a most submissive manner.

With strong crying and tears] Be our hearts so hard (saith one) that we cannot pray for ourselves or others? cry, Conqueror tibi lachrimis Iesu Christi, I cry to thee with Christ's tears.

Unto him that was able to save him, &c.] Neither let any here object that many martyrs suffered with less ado, nay, with great joy and triumph. For, 1. What were all their sufferings to his? 2. He therefore suffered the worst, that they might the better suffer. 3. They were lifted up with the sense of God's love, which he for present felt not. 4. Their bodily pains were miraculously mitigated; as Rose Allen, being asked by a friend how she could abide the painful burning of her hand held over a candle, so long till the very sinews cracked asunder? She said, at the first it was some grief to her; but afterward, the longer she burned the less she felt, or well near none at all. Sabina, a Roman martyr, crying out in her travail, and being asked by her keeper how she would endure the fire next day; Oh, well enough, said she, for now I suffer in child birth for my sins, #Ge 3:16, but then Christ shall suffer in me and support me.

And was heard in that he feared] απο της ευλαβειας, or, He was heard (that is, delivered) from his fear. For no sooner had he prayed, but he met his enemies in the face, and asked them, "Whom seek ye?" I am he.

Ver. 8. Yet learned he obedience] He came to know by experience what a hard matter it was thus to obey God. Schola crucis, schola lucis. Gideon, by threshing the men of Succoth, taught them, #Jud 8:7-16. God's chastisements are our advertisements, παθηματα μαθηματα. Nocumenta documenta. See my Treatise on Rev. iii., p. 145.

Ver. 9. And being made perfect] τελειωθεις. Or, being offered up in sacrifice; or, being completed by this experimental knowledge of passive obedience also.

The author] And finisher too, #Heb 12:2. Gr. αιτιος, The cause, viz. by his merit and efficacy.

Ver. 10. Called] Gr. προσαγορευθεις, spoken unto, called by name, or entitled a high priest, &c.; therefore he is truly so. For persons and things are as God calleth them.

Ver. 11. Of whom we have, &c.] The digression here begun holds on to the end of the next chapter.

Hard to be uttered] Gr. Hard to be expounded. But difficulty doth not dishearten, but rather whet on heroic spirits to a more serious search: it doth not weaken, but waken their earnestness; not amate, but animate them.

Seeing ye are dull] Gr. Slow paced and heavy handed, τωθροι, from νε and θεω, curro. Our minds are like narrow mouthed vessels. Our Saviour therefore spake as the people could hear, #Mr 4:33, like as Jacob drave as the little ones could go.

Ver. 12. Ye have need that one] But people plead their rotten charters of age and marriage against catechism.

Ver. 13. In the word of righteousness] That is, in the more solid doctrine of the gospel concerning Christ, who is our righteousness.

Ver. 14. To them that are of full age] Or that are perfect, τελειων, comparatively perfect, not only past the spoon, but full grown.

Who by reason of use] Gr. By reason of habit, got by continual custom and long practice, as in an expert artist.

Have their senses exercised] αισθητηρια, their inward senses, for the soul also hath her senses, as the body hath. Instead of seeing, faith; of hearing, obedience; of smelling, hope; of tasting, charity; of touching, humility. These are exercised in the saints with such an exercise as wrestlers use, or such as contend for victory, put forth to the utmost, as that which they have been trained up to, and can therefore very well skill of.

To discern good and evil] "Doth not the ear try words? and the mouth taste his meat?" #Job 12:11. "Eye hath not seen," &c., #1Co 2:9. Where the carcass is the eagles will be. Saints have a spiritual sagacity, and they lay hold on eternal life.

Chapter 6

Ver. 1. Let us go on unto perfection] Gr. φεσωμεθα, let us be carried on, as with a force, #Ac 2:2, breaking through all impediments, aiming at the highest pitch, and eyeing the best patterns. It is a low and unworthy strain in some to labour after no more grace than will keep life and soul together, that is, hell and soul asunder.

Repentance firm dead works] These are the six principles of Christian religion, that must be laid as a foundation. Certa semper sunt in paucis, saith Tertullian. Fundamentals are but few; few they are in number, but many in virtue; in sight small, but great in weight; like gold, which being solid is contracted into a narrow room, but may be drawn into so large an extent, that one angel may cover an acre of ground, as the naturalists have observed. The Apostles' Creed (anciently called Symbolum, a sign or badge to distinguish Christians from infidels and wicked people) was heretofore briefer than now. The mention of the Father's being maker of heaven and earth, the Son's burial and descending into hell, and the communion of saints, being wholly omitted, haply are not necessary for all men to know, as Suarez saith, or sufficiently implied in other articles, or known by the light of reason; and so not making difference between Christians and heathens. (Dr Ussier.) The Papists have lately coined twelve new articles by the authority of Pope Plus IV, A. D. 1564, raised out of the Council of Trent, and added to the Nicene Creed, to be received with oath, as the true catholic faith, to be believed by as many as shall be saved. Those that list to see them, may read the epistle before Bishop Jewel's works, and Sir Humphrey Land's Via tuta. Whereunto if they will add the Jesuit's new ten commandments, let them read the Spanish Pilgrim.

Ver. 2. Doctrine of baptisms] Inward and outward. Flaminis et fluminis, of water and of the Spirit, that "washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost," #Tit 3:5. Calvin thinks the apostle meaneth the solemn rites or set days of baptizing. Others, the doctrine of both the sacraments; one being figuratively put for both, and the mention of the Lord's supper omitted, because the doctrine thereof was not anciently propounded to the catechumeni, or young Christians; neither were they suffered to see it administered.

And of laying on of hands] Hereby is meant the whole ministry and order of Church government, as prescribed by the word. The Scripture is to be taken in the largest sense, if nothing hinder, neither matter, phrase, nor scope. (Wilson's Theol. Rules.)

Ver. 3. If God permit] If God give me life and ability, and you capacity and stability; for many fall away, whose damnation sleepeth not.

Ver. 4. Who were once enlightened] φωτισθεντες, as with a flash of lightning. Knowing persons, and those they call the wits of the world, are in the greatest danger of the unpardonable sin; which begins in apostasy, holds on in persecution, ends in blasphemy.

And have tasted] As cooks do their sauces with the tip of their finger only; or as the Israelites tasted the fruits of the land, and yet perished in the wilderness. Men may taste that which they spit out again, as physicians oft do.

The heavenly gift] Gr. Supercelestial gift, i.e. Christ, who is called the gift, #Joh 4:10, and the benefit, #1Ti 6:2.

Partakers of the Holy Ghost] Of his common and inferior gifts and operations. These a man may lose, and have his dispositions to sin seven times more inflamed than before, #Mt 12:44.

Ver. 5. And have tasted the good word] Catching at the promises, as children do at sweetmeats, rejoicing therein, as the stony ground hearers did, conceiving a rolling opinion, as Haman did, that they are the men whom the King of heaven will honour.

And the powers of the world to come] i.e. The wonderful works of the world to come, as glorification, resurrection, last judgment, whereinto a hypocrite may see far, and have a glimpse of heaven, or a flash of hell upon his conscience, as Balaam, Spira.

Ver. 6. If they shall fall away] Totally and finally, as Judas and Julian did, and as Mr John Glover thought he had done, and did therefore eat his meat against his appetite, only defer the time of his damnation, which, by mistake of this text, he thought he could not possibly avoid. But God, who comforteth those that are cast down, did not only at last rid him out of all his fears, but also framed him to such mortification of life, as the like lightly hath not been seen, saith Mr Fox, who knew it.

And put him to an open shame] As if they had not found him the same that they took him for. In those that have wilfully resisted divine truths made known to them, and after taste, despised them, a persuasion that God hath forsaken them (set on strongly by Satan) stirs up a hellish hatred against God; carrying them to a revengeful desire of opposing whatsoever is God's, though not always openly (for then they should lose the advantage of doing hurt), yet secretly and subtly, and under pretence of the contrary, as one well observeth.

Ver. 7. And bringeth forth herbs] So the fruitful Christian (that, watered with the word and Spirit, bringeth forth a harvest of holiness) shall receive the blessing of increase, #Joh 15:2. Such trees as brought forth fruit fit for meat were not to be destroyed, #De 20:19; but trees that were not for fruit were for the fire, #Mt 3:10.

The earth thankfully returns her burden to the painful tiller. Let earth teach earth: terram quam terimus, terram quam gerimus, the earth we tear, the earth we bear.

Ver. 8. Is rejected, and is nigh to cursing] The sin against the Holy Ghost is therefore unpardonable, because God (not suffering himself to be derided, or his Spirit of truth to be found a liar) smiteth these sinners against their own souls, with blindness and reprobacy of mind. Whence follows, 1. An impossibility of repentance, sith it is the work of that Spirit whom they have despited, and will not suffer any saving operation of his to fasten on their souls. 2. Such a desperate fury invadeth them, that they resist and repudiate the matter of remission, the blood of Christ, whereby if they might have mercy, yet they would not; but continue raving and raging against both the physic and the physician, to their endless ruth and ruin.

Ver. 9. But, beloved, we are persuaded] He would not be mistaken. Zuinglius, when he had inveighed against vice, would usually close up his discourse with Probe vir, haec nihil ad te. All this is nothing to thee, thou honest man. (Scult. Annul.) We can hardly beat the dogs out of doors but the children will cry.

Things that accompany salvation] Gr. εχομενα, i.e. κατεχομενα, that have salvation, that comprehend it, are contiguous to it, and touch upon it. Grace and glory differ not but in degree.

Ver. 10. For God is not unrighteous] That is, unfaithful, #1Jo 1:9. There is a justice of fidelity as well as of equity.

To forget your work.] The butler may forget Joseph, and Joseph forget his father's house; but forgetfulness befalls not God, to whom all things are present, and before whom there is written a book of remembrance for them that fear the Lord, and think upon his name, #Mal 3:16,17.

Ver. 11. Do show the same diligence] A man may as truly say the sea burns, or fire cools, as that certainty of salvation breeds security and looseness.

To the full assurance] All duties tend to assurance, or spring from it. Strive we must to the riches of full assurance, #Col 2:2. But in case our assurance be not so fair, yield not to temptations and carnal reasonings. Coins that have little of the stamp left, yet are current.

Ver. 12. That ye be not slothful] A ready heart makes riddance of God's work. Shake off sloth. Spontaneae lassitudines morbos loquuntur; saith Hippocrates. Sure I am that dulness and luskishness argue a diseased soul.

But followers of them] It was a good law that the Ephesians made, that men should propound to themselves the best patterns, and ever bear in mind some eminent man, αιεν υπομμησκειοθαι τινος των τη αρετη χρωμενων..

Ver. 13. For when God made promise] Of those many that by faith and patience had inherited the promises, the apostle instanceth in Abraham, famous both for his faith in God's promise, #Heb 6:13, and for his patience, #Heb 6:15.

Ver. 14. Blessing I will bless thee] Now he whom God blesseth shall be blessed, as Isaac said of Jacob, #Ge 27:33.

Ver. 15. After he had patiently endured] Waited many years for an Isaac, and yet longer for eternal life. "I have waited for thy salvation, O Lord," saith dying Jacob, #Ge 49:18.

Ver. 16. Swear by the greater] So do not they that swear by sundry creatures and qualities, God can hardly spare such, #Jer 5:7. That passage, "As thy soul liveth," is not an oath, but an asseveration, or obtestation only, conjoined with the oath.

An end of all strife] The end of an oath is to help the truth in necessity, and to clear men's innocency, #Ex 22:11.

Ver. 17. God willing more abundantly] His word is sufficient, yet tendering our infirmity he hath bound it with an oath, and set to his seal. His word cannot be made more true, but yet more credible. Now two things make a thing more credible: 1. The quality of the person speaking; 2. The manner of the speech. If God do not simply speak, but solemnly swear, and seal to us remission of sins, and adoption of sons by the broad seal of the sacraments, and by the privy seal of his Spirit, should we not rest assured?

Ver. 18. We might have strong] Such as swalloweth up all worldly griefs, as Moses' serpent did the sorcerers' serpents, or as the fire doth the fuel. The sacraments are God's visible oaths unto us; he taketh, as it were, the body and blood of his Son into his hand, and solemnly sweareth to bestow upon us all the purchase of Christ's passion. Should not therefore the joy of the Lord be our strength?

#Ne 8:10. The comforts of philosophy are λεςχαι και φλυαοαι (as Plato hath it, as Socrates found it when he was to die), that is, toys and trifles. Nescio quomodo imbecillior est medicina quam morbus, saith Cicero, the disease is too hard for the medicine. But the consolations of God are strong in themselves, and should not be small with us, #Job 15:11.

To lay hold upon the hope, &c.] Gr. κοατησαι, to lay hold by main force, and so to hold as not to lose our hold, when the devil would pull it from us. It is our faith that he fights against, our hope that he would shred us off. Look to it.

Ver. 19. Both sure and stedfast] Spes in terrents, incerti nomen boni: Spes in divinis, nomen est certissimi.

And which entereth into that] This anchor is cast upward, and fastened not in the depth of the sea, but in the height of heaven, whereof it gets firm hold and sure possession. Now that ship (saith one) may be tossed, not shipwrecked, whereof Christ is the pilot, the Scripture the compass, the promises the tacklings, hope the anchor, faith the cable, the Holy Ghost the winds, and holy affection the sails, which are filled with the graces of the Spirit.

Ver. 20. Whither the forerunner] Like as the high priest once a year entered into the holy of holies to pray for the people.

Chapter 7

Ver. 1. For this Melchisedec] Some make him the same with Shem; others say it was the Holy Ghost; others say it was Christ himself under the guise of a king and priest. It is most probable that he was a mortal man, and a Canaanite, but yet a most righteous man, and a priest of the most high God by special dispensation; and that Chedorlaomer and the other kings that over ran the country, and spoiled it, forbare, out of reverence to the man and his office, to meddle with Melchisedec's territories.

Ver. 2. Gave a tenth part of all] So to set forth his thankfulness to God for the victory. The Lord is the man of war, #Ex 15:3; the Lord and victor of wars, as the Chaldee there expresseth it. Conquerors should send to him, as Joab to David, to take the honour of the day, #2Sa 12:28. The very heathens, after a victory, would consecrate something to their gods. The Romans had a custom, when they had received any great victory, the conqueror in his triumphant chariot rode to the Capitol, where in all humility he did present a palm to Jupiter, and offer in sacrifice a white bullock; so acknowledging it was his power whereby the conquest was achieved. {a}

{a} ... laurumque superbam in gremio Iovis abscissis deponere Poenis. Et taurum album Iovi mactabant. Livy.

Ver. 3. Without father] viz. That we find mentioned in the Holy Scripture. Hence the Melchisedechian heretics held that he was the Holy Ghost; or at least some created angel. See Cunaeus de Rep. #Heb 3:3. Without father and mother he was not in respect of generation, but in respect of commemoration; his parents are not mentioned: no more are Job's, or the three children's.

Like unto the Son of God] As having neither fellow nor successor. And being a lively type of Christ, who is the true Trismegist, in regard of his three offices. The heathens called their Mercury (haply the same with Melchisedec) Trismegist, or thrice great; because he was the greatest philosopher, the greatest priest, and the greatest king. (Marcil. Ficin. in arg. ad Tris. Pimandr.)

Ver. 4. How great this man was] It is goodness that renders a man great, and the grace of God that ennobleth, #Isa 43:4 Heb 11:2. Keep close to God, and then ye shall be some of God's Rabbis, as Daniel calls them, #Da 9:27. See #Job 32:9. Great men indeed, not with a belline (war-like), but with a genuine, greatness.

The tenth of the spoils] Gr. ακροθινια, the top of the heap.

Ver. 5. To take tithes of the people] If tithes be Jewish, saith M. Harris, and yet ministers must have a maintenance, how will men satisfy their consciences in the particular quantity they must bestow upon them? the Scripture speaks only of the tenth part. Can any show us where the old apportion is reversed, and which is that quota pars now that conscience must rest in?

Ver. 6. Received tithes of Abraham] Gr. δεδεκατωκε, tithed or tenthed Abraham, by the same divine right whereby he blessed him. Melchisedec did not take only that which Abraham was pleased to give him, but he tithed him, saith the text, he took the tenths as his due.

Ver. 7. The less is blessed, &c.] The pastor therefore blessing his people according to his office, is greater than his people in that respect.

Ver. 8. That he liveth] Tithes then are due to the ministers of Christ that liveth, because due to Melchisedec, to whom Abraham paid them as a priest and tithe-taker, and type of Christ. Who therefore should receive them for him, but those that are in his stead? #2Co 5:20.

Ver. 9. Levi also paid tithes] If any shall object, so did Christ also, sith he was in the loins of Abraham too; it may be answered, that though Christ was of Abraham, yet he was not by Abraham. But Levi was both.

Ver. 10. In the loins of his father] So we were all in the loins of Adam when he fell (as all the country is in a parliament man), and fell with him.

Ver. 11. If therefore perfection] i.e. Justification, sanctification, salvation.

Ver. 12. A change also of the law] "For we are not under the law, but under grace." The gospel is post naufragium tabula, a plank after shipwreck, and hath its remuneration, #Heb 11:6, viz. of grace and mercy. By law here some understood only the law of priesthood.

Ver. 13. Pertaineth to another tribe] That of Judah, #Heb 7:14, which therefore is first reckoned, #Re 7:5, among those that were sealed; as of those that came by Rachel, Nephthalim hath the first place; because in that tribe Christ dwelt, viz. at Capernaum; Ut utroque supereminet Christi proerogativa.

Ver. 14. Nothing concerning priesthood] For when Reuben, by defiling Bilhah, lost his birthright, the birthright was given to Joseph, the kingdom to Judah, and the priesthood to Levi. But God translated the priesthood, and settled it upon his Son Christ, who sprang out of Judah, in a time when it was commonly bought and sold to the vilest of men, and all was out of order.

Ver. 15. After the similitude of Melchisedec] i.e. After an order distinct and different from that of Aaron.

Ver. 16. Of a carnal command] i.e. External and ceremonial.

But after the power] Both of God the Father, who made him a priest, and of God the Son, who is the Father of eternity, #Isa 9:6, and a Priest for ever; which word "for ever" the apostle expoundeth and improveth in the last clause of this verse, "the power of an endless life."

Ver. 17. For he testifieth] Thus the author still argueth out of Scripture, as knowing that quicquid non habet auctoritatem ex Scripturis, eadem facilitate contemnitur qua approbatur, whatsoever is not grounded upon Scripture authority is as easily rejected as received. (Jerome.)

Ver. 18. For there is verily a disannulling] Gr. υθετησις, an outing, cassating, expunging.

Of the commandment] {See Trapp on "Heb 7:12"} {See Trapp on "Heb 7:16"}

For the weakness and unprofitableness] sc. To justify, sanctify, save, #Ro 8:2; though as a schoolmaster to Christ, and a rule of life, it is of singular use still.

Ver. 19. But the bringing in] The law is a superintroduction to Christ our hope, who is the end of the law to every believer, #Ro 10:4.

We draw nigh to God] Having boldness and access with confidence, #Eph 3:11, by the faith of Christ our High Priest; who leads us by the hand, and presents us to his Heavenly Father, as Joseph did his two sons to Jacob, that he might bless them.

Ver. 20. Not without an oath] A singular confirmation: what a monstrous sin then is unbelief!

Ver. 21. And will not repent] Will not change his mind upon pretence that second thoughts are better. Those that can play with oaths, and can slip them as easily as monkeys do their collars, have nothing of God in them.

Ver. 22. Jesus was made a surety] As he was our surety to God for the discharge of our debt (the surety and debtor in law are reputed as one person), so he is God's surety to us, for the performance of his promises. Christ was the surety of the first covenant (saith one), to pay the debt; of the second covenant, to perform the duty.

Ver. 23. By reason of death] Neither their holiness nor learning could privilege them from death's impartial stroke. Non te tua plurima Pantheu, labentem texit pietas. All our learning also is soon refuted with one black theta, which understanding us not, snappeth us unrespectively without distinction, and putteth at once a period to our reading and to our being.

Ver. 24. He continueth ever] What need then is there of a vicar, as the pope will needs be styled?

An unchangeable] Gr. απαράβατον, impassable. He needeth no successor.

Ver. 25. To the uttermost] Perpetually and perfectly, so as none shall need to come after him to finish what he hath begun. He is a thorough Saviour, a Saviour in solidum, and doth not his work to the halves. How blasphemous then is that direction of the Papists to dying men, Coniunge, Domine, obsequium meum cum omnibus quae Christus passus est pro me: Join, Lord, mine obedience with all those things that Christ hath suffered for me.

Ver. 26. Who is holy] As the high priest of old, #Le 21:18 Ex 28:36-43.

Harmless] Without any birth mark.

Undeiled] Free from actual pollution, without original blemish or actual blot, #1Pe 1:19.

Higher than the heavens] That is, than the angels, those heavenly courtiers, #Da 10:13.

Ver. 27. Who needeth not daily] καθ ημεραν. Or, on a certain day of the year, so. at the feast of the expiations, #Le 16:29; see #Heb 10:1.

First for his own sins] Else how could he stand before God for others? the priests therefore had their laver wherein to wash, before they offered any man's sacrifice. The brazen altar stood without, the incense altar of gold within the sanctuary; to signify that our own lusts must be sacrificed ere we take upon us to pray for ourselves or others. David observeth this method, #Ps 35 Ps 51. He first gets pardon for himself, and then makes request for Sion.

Ver. 28. For the law maketh] As if the apostle should say, Shall I sum up and shut up all in a word? the law maketh men high priests which have infirmity, &c. Dull scholars must have it over and over. Nunquam satis dicitur, quod nunquam satis dicitur. (Seneca.)

Chapter 8

Ver. 1. Who is set on the right hand] And is therefore a King, as well as a Priest, as was Melchisedec.

Ver. 2. A minister of the sanctuary] λειτουργος. Or, a public officer, an agent for the saints, about holy things.

Which the Lord pitched] Christ's body was conceived in the virgin's womb, not by human generation, but by divine operation. See #Heb 9:11 Joh 1:14. He was the stone cut out of the mountain without hands, #Da 2:34; the rose of Sharon that grows without man's care, #So 2:1.

Ver. 3. Somewhat also to offer] To wit, his own body, "an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savour," #Eph 5:2. By Mount Olivet stood the garden of Gethsemane, where Christ was taken and led into the city through the sheep gate to be offered up like an innocent sheep, on the altar of his cross, for the sins of his people.

Ver. 4. He should not be a priest] Because not of the tribe of Levi, whose priesthood lasted so long as Christ lived on earth, and was done away by his death.

Ver. 5. Of heavenly things] So he calleth the mystery of Christ, showed hereby to Moses in the mount, and shadowed out to the people by the services of the tabernacle. All which were Christ in figure; the ceremonial law was their gospel; indeed then all was in riddles, Moses was veiled, and that saying was verified, Et latet et lucet.

Ver. 6. Of a better covenant] Or rather testament (διαθηκη and not συνθηκη), heaven being conveyed to the elect by legacy. It is part of God's testament to write his laws in our hearts, &c. All that he requires of us, is to take hold of his covenant, to receive his gift of righteousness, to take all Christ, &c., and this also he hath promised to cause us to do, #Heb 8:10 Isa 56:6 Ro 5:17.

Ver. 7. Had been faultless] Such as had not been weak and unprofitable, #Heb 7:18; see the note there. If the people could have performed it, and have been perfected by it. If it could have conveyed grace, as #Heb 8:10. The law may chain up the wolf, the gospel only changeth him; the one stops the stream, the other heals the fountain; the one restrains the practice, the other renews the principles. God therefore gave the law after the promise, #Ga 3:19, to advance the promise.

Ver. 8. For finding fault with them] Or, finding fault with it, that is, with the covenant; he saith to them, "Behold, the days," &c. So Junlus readeth and senseth it.

Ver. 9. The covenant that I made] He meaneth not here the covenant of grace made with Abraham, but circumcision, the legal ceremonies and services, that burden which neither they nor their fathers could bear.

When I took them by the hand] Teaching them to go, taking them by the arms, #Ho 11:3, keeping their feet, #1Sa 2:9, and leading them through the deep, as a horse in the wilderness, that they should not stumble, #Isa 63:13.

And I regarded them not] Heb. Although I was a husband unto them, q.d. Yet nevertheless they forsook the guide of their youth, and forgot the covenant of their God, #Jer 31:32 Pr 2:17. Therefore God regarded them not, or cared not for them, as the Greek hath it, ημελησα. "If you forsake him, he will forsake you," #2Ch 15:2.

Ver. 10. I will put my laws, &c.] God's covenant is to write his laws and promises "in his people's minds," so that they shall have the knowledge of them; "and in their hearts," so that they shall have the comfort, feeling, and fruition of them.

Ver. 11. And they shall not teach] The full performance of this promise is reserved to the life to come; when we shall need no ordinances, but shall be all taught of God.

For all shall know me] Not apprehensively only, but effectively, and with a knowledge of acquaintance, as the Church thought she should know him amidst all his austerities, #Isa 63:16. "Art not thou our father?"

Ver. 12. I will be merciful] I will be propitious through Christ, the propitiation for our sins, #1Jo 2:2.

To their unrighteousness, and their sins and iniquities] All kinds and degrees of sins, #Ex 34:6,7 Mic 7:17. All sins and blasphemies shall be forgiven to the sons of men #Mt 12:31. I was a blasphemer, saith Paul (that was a grievous sin against the first table), I was a persecutor (that was a great sin against the second table), yet I obtained mercy; why then should any one despair

Will I remember no more] Nihil oblivisci solet praeter iniurias, saith Cicero of Caesar. He was wont to forget nothing but shrewd turns. And of our Henry VI it is storied that he was of that happy memory that he never forgat anything but injury. (Daniel Contin. by Trussel.) Let us but remember our sins with grief, and God will forget them. Let us see them to confession, and we shall never see them to our confusion. He is a forgiving God, #Ne 9:31. None like him for that, #Mic 7:18. He doth it naturally, #Ex 20:6; abundantly, #Isa 55:7; constantly, #Ps 130:4 Joh 1:27 Mal 3:6.

Ver. 13. He hath made the first old] He hath antiquated and abolished it. This the apostle often inculcates, because the Jews went about to establish their own righteousness, and it is a piece of Popery natural to us all, to think to go to heaven by our good meanings and good doings.

Is ready to vanish away] So is the old man in God's people; that is their comfort.

Chapter 9

Ver. 1. Then verily the first covenant] Here the apostle proveth what he had propounded, #Heb 8:5, that this assertion might be sound, such as cannot be condemned, #Tit 2:8.

Ordinances] Gr. δικαιωματα justifications, viz. ceremonial, ritual, typical.

A worldly sanctuary] i.e. earthly and shadowy, opposed to true and heavenly.

Ver. 2. The first wherein was, &c.] He speaks nothing of the outer court, as not pertinent to his present purpose. But there was both in the tabernacle and temple, the holy of holies, the sanctuary, and the court of the people: answerable whereunto are in man, "The spirit, soul, and body," #1Th 5:23. And as the cloud, #1Ki 8:10,11, filled first the most holy place, and then the holy, and then the outer court, so doth the Holy Ghost renew the spirit of our minds, and then our wills and affections, and then the outward man.

Ver. 3. And after the second veil] This was not of any hard debarring matter, but easily penetrable then, and now also rent by Christ, to show our easy access to God with confidence "by the faith of him," #Eph 3:12.

Ver. 4. The golden censer] Or the altar of incense, which though it belonged to the most holy place, yet was placed without the veil, #Ex 30:6, &c., that it might be of daily use, the sweet incense offered thereon easily piercing through the veil, and filling the most holy with its savour.

Wherein was the golden pot, &c.] In or near to the ark of the covenant was this golden pot of manna, and Aaron's rod, and the tables of the Testament, and the propitiatory or covering, and a crown of gold around it. To insinuate thus much, saith one, that we must be like the ark of the covenant, being builded and reared up still toward the mark; not only when the Lord feedeth us with the sweet manna of his mercy, but also when he afflicteth us with the sharp rod of his correction, and always keep the tables of the Testament, which are the commandments, that by faith in Christ, who is the propitiation for our sins, we may obtain the golden crown of eternal life.

And the table of the covenant] It may here be objected, that, #1Ki 8:9 2Ch 5:10, it is said there was nothing in the ark save the two tables of stone. For answer, εν η, "in which," relates not to ark, but tabernacle; so Junius observeth and reconeileth. Calvin and Pareus give other answers. Videsis, their conceit is not to be misliked, that say the ark is the Church, the tables the word, the manna the sacraments, and the rod the discipline.

Ver. 5. And over it the cherubims] The ark covering the law within it, the mercy seat upon it, and over them two cherubims covering one another; all these set forth Christ covering the curses of the law, in whom is the ground of all mercy, which things the angels desire to pry into, as into the pattern of God's unsearchable wisdom and goodness.

Ver. 6. Were thus ordained] Gr. κατασκευασμενα, prepared, fitted, finished by the hand of the artificer, and therefore called worldly in a good sense, #Heb 9:1.

Ver. 7. For the errors] Gr. αγνοηματα, The not knowings of the people; those errors that they could not help, and yet must else have answered for. Ignorat sane improbus omnis, saith Aristotle. Ignorance is the source of all sin, the very well spring from which all wickedness doth ooze and issue. What will not an ignorant man do, who knows not but he may do anything? "The dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty," #Ps 74:20. Christ therefore expiated the ignorances of his people.

Ver. 8. The way into the holiest] That is, into heaven, typified thereby.

Was not yet made manifest] In regard of performance, and that evidence of faith and doctrine that is held forth under the gospel. The mystery of Christ was manifested piece meal and parcel wise, #Heb 1:1.

Ver. 9. Which was a figure] Gr. παραβολη, a parable, that is, such a form of service as intimated some greater matter than to the sense appeared; and called upon the people to look through the type to the truth of things, through the history to the mystery.

Ver. 10. And carnal ordinances] Such as carnal men might easily perform, and as were very suitable to the disposition of a carnal heart. Hence, #Eze 20:25, they are called "commandments that were not good," because they commanded neither virtue nor vices in themselves; and ill people rested in the outward acts.

Till the time of reformation] Gr. Of direction or correction, that is, evangelical and spiritual worship, that shall take place in the Church, till the times of the restitution of all things shall come at the last day, #Ac 3:21.

Ver. 11. Of good things to come] i.e. Of spirituals that were expected as things to come, when Christ came with a cornucopia, a horn of salvation in his band. The Latins call prosperous things Res secundas, things to come.

A more perfect tabernacle] i.e. His human nature, not made with hands, nor of this building, that is, not by the power of nature, by the ordinary course of generation.

Ver. 12. Neither by the blood of calves] As the Levitical high priest did, #Heb 9:7.

Having obtained] Gr. εὑρομενος, having found. See #Ro 4:1. The Latins also use invenire or acquirere, to find, for to obtain. See also #Mt 16:25. Christ overcame by suffering, and by his own blood purchased his Church, as an Aceldama, or field of blood.

Ver. 13. The ashes of a heifer] Gr. Ashes and cinders mixt together, as a monument of Christ's most base and utmost afflictions, and of our justification and sanctification through faith in his name. σποδος. Sordidus cinis, et cum carbones extincti permisti sunt.

Sprinkling the unclean] With a hyssop bunch, to note that none can have comfort either by the merit or Spirit of Christ, without true mortification.

Ver. 14. By the eternal Spirit] That is, by his Deity, called the Spirit of holiness, #Ro 1:4, and the Spirit, #1Ti 3:16, that gave both value and virtue to his death, both to satisfy and to sanctify.

Purge your conscience] This is that eternal redemption, #Heb 9:12.

From dead works] The most specious performances of unregenerate persons are but dead works, because they proceed not from a principle of life, and have death for their wages, #Ro 6:23. A will written with a dead man's hand can hold no law. God will be served like himself.

Ver. 15. For the redemption] Here he showeth the reasons why it was needful that Christ should enter by his own blood, #Heb 9:2, sc. to expiate our sins, and to possess us of heaven.

Ver. 16. For where a testament is] {See Trapp "Heb 8:6"} Here the testator is Christ, heirs the saints, legacies the gifts of the Spirit, executor the Holy Ghost, witnesses apostles, martyrs, &c.

Ver. 17. While the testator liveth] For it is in his power to alter it at his pleasure, as reason requireth. Our Henry II first crowned, and then cast off his eldest son Henry, not suffering him to be what himself had made him.

Ver. 18. Was dedicated] Or initiated to holy use, #Le 16:15,16, εγκεκαινισται.

Ver. 19. He took the blood] See #Ex 24:8.

And sprinkled both the book] Which, as it seemeth, was laid on the altar to be sanctified thereby. The very book of God is sprinkled with the blood of Christ, that it may be opened and of use to the faithful.

Ver. 20. Saying, This is the blood, &c.] A tropical and sacramental expression, whereunto our Saviour seemeth to allude in those words of his, "This cup is the new testament in my blood," &c. The sacraments of the Old Testament had a resemblance unto the New; but that was for works of the law, this is for remission of sins.

Ver. 21. He sprinkled with blood] This sprinkling had a foreshadowing of the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ, #1Pe 1:2 Isa 52:15; by his finger, that is, by his Spirit, #Lu 11:20 Mt 12:28.

Ver. 22. Purged with blood] Which yet of itself impureth and fouleth.

Ver. 23. But the heavenly things] Those spiritual good things set forth by the types of the law; or the Church under the gospel, called Jerusalem that is above, &c.

Ver. 24. To appear in the presence] As a lawyer appears for his client, opens the cause, pleads the cause, and it is carried, εμφανισθῆναι.

Ver. 25. Not that he would offer] As Popish mass-mongers will have it. Eamus ad communem errorem (said Domitius Calderinus to his friends, when they persuaded him to go to mass, A.D. 1442), Let us go to the common error.

Ver. 26. To put away sin] To abrogate it, #Heb 1:3, to bind it in a bundle, seal it up in a bag, #Da 9:24, cast it behind him as cancelled obligations, #Mic 7:18-20, blot out the black handwriting with the red lines of his blood drawn over it.

Ver. 27. It is appointed] Gr. ἀποκειται, it lieth as a man's lot. Stat sua cuique dies. Our last day stands, the rest run. The Jews at this day pray (such is their blindness) for the dead, that that bodily death may serve as an expiation of all his sins. (Leo Modern Rites of Jews.)

But after this the judgment] Every man's death's day is his doomsday. Many of the Fathers held that men's souls were not judged till the last day. Which opinion is as contrary to purgatory (for which Bellarmine allegeth it) as the truth.

Ver. 28. The second time without sin] Imputed to him, as #Isa 53:6
2Co 5:21. {See Trapp on "Isa 53:6"} {See Trapp on "2Co 5:21"}

Chapter 10

Ver. 1. A Shadow of good things, &c.] That is, of Christ, saith one. When the sun is behind, the shadow is before; when the sun is before, the shadow is behind. So was it in Christ to them of old. This Sun was behind, and therefore the law or shadow was before; to us under grace the Sun is before, and so now the ceremonies of the law, these shadows, are behind, yea, vanished away.

Ver. 2. No more conscience of sin] Christ, though he took not away death, yet he did the sting of death; so though he took not away sin, yet he did the guilt of sin.

Ver. 3. Made of sins every year] A solemn confession of them, and what great need they had of a Saviour to expiate them, laying their hands on the head of the sacrifice, in token that they had in like sort deserved to be destroyed.

Ver. 4. Should take away sins] And so pacify conscience; for sin is to the conscience as a mote to the eye, as a dagger to the heart, #2Sa 24:10, as an adder's sting to the flesh, #Pr 23:32.

Ver. 5. But a body hast thou prepared] A metaphor from mechanics, who do artificially fit one part of their work to another, and so finish the whole, κατηρτισω. God fitted his Son's body to be joined with the Deity, and to be an expiatory sacrifice for sin.

Ver. 6. Thou hast had no pleasure] viz. As in the principal service and satisfaction for sin.

Ver. 7. Lo, I come] As an obedient servant bored through the ear, #Ex 21:6 Ps 40:6,7, wise and willing to be obsequious. Servus est nomen officii, a servant is the master's instrument, and ολως εκεινου, saith Aristotle, wholly at his beck and obedience.

It is written of me] Christ is author, object, matter, and mark of Old and New Testament. Therefore if we will profit thereby, we must have the eyes of our minds turned toward Christ, as the faces of the cherubims were toward the mercy seat.

Ver. 8. Which are offered by the law] To the great cost and charge of the offerers. This we are freed from, and are required no more than to cover God's altar with the calves of our lips.

Ver. 9. Lo, I come] True obedience is prompt and present, ready and speedy, without shucking and hucking, without delays and consults, #Ps 119:60.

He taketh away the first] Clear consequences drawn from Scripture, are sound doctrine, #Mt 22:32. {See Trapp on "Mt 22:32"}

Ver. 10. By the which will] That is, by the execution of which will, by the obedience of Christ to his heavenly Father.

Ver. 11. Take away sin] Separando auferre, sunder it from the soul, strike a parting blow betwixt them, περιελειν, Undique tollere.

Ver. 12. But this man] Opposed to the plurality of Levitical priests. One sacrifice, and once for ever, not many and often, as they. And he sat down, when as they stood daily offering oftentimes. Note the antithesis, and Christ's precellency.

On the right hand of God] Which he could not have done if he had not expiated our sins. #Joh 16:10, "Of righteousness, because I go to my Father." He could not have gone to his Father if he had not first fulfilled all righteousness, and fully acquitted us of all our iniquities.

Ver. 13. Expecting till his enemies] Admire and imitate his patience. The God of peace shall tread Satan and the rest under our feet shortly, #Ro 16:20.

Ver. 14. He hath perfected] tie would not off the cross till all was finished.

Ver. 15. The Holy Ghost also witnesseth] viz. By inspiring the pemnen, #2Ti 3:16, acting and carrying them into all truth, #2Ti 2:25, as it were by a holy violence, φερομενοι.

Ver. 16. I will put my laws] {See Trapp on "Heb 8:10"}

Ver. 17. Will I remember no more] Therefore there needs not any repetition of a sacrifice for sin in the New Testament.

Ver. 18. Where remission of sin is] viz. An impletory remission, as now in the New Testament, not a promissory, as under the Old.

Ver. 19. To enter into the holiest] viz. By our prayers, which pierce heaven and prevail with God.

Ver. 20. By a new] Fresh, and as effectual at all times as if Christ were but newly sacrificed for us. Tam recens mihi nunc Christus est, ac si hac hora fudisset sanguinem, saith Luther. Christ is even now as fresh to me as if this very hour he had shed his precious blood. προσφατον, Recens mactatus.

Which he hath consecrated, or new made for us] Paradise had a way out, but none that ever we could find in again. Heaven hath now a way in (sc. this new and living, or life giving, way, a milky way to us, a bloody way to Christ), but no way out again.

Through the veil, that is; his flesh] Whereby we come to God, dwelling bodily therein. Like as where I see the body of a man, there I know his soul is also, because they are not severed; so is it here. The veil or curtain in the sanctuary did hide the glory of the holy of holies; and withal ministered an entrance into it for the high priest.

Ver. 21. Over the house of God] As Jehoiadah was over the temple, presided and commanded there, #2Ki 2:5. All power is given to Christ both in heaven and earth, for our behoof and benefit.

Ver. 22. Let us draw near] Come, for the Master calleth, #Mr 10:49.

With a true heart] That is, with a heart truly and entirely given up to God, uprightly propounding God's service in prayer, and that out of a filial affection, delighting to do his will, and therefore well content to wait, or, if God see good, to want what it wisheth, desirous rather that God's will be done than our own, and that he may be glorified though we be not gratified; acknowledging the kingdom, power, and glory to be his alone. This is a true heart.

In full assurance of faith] πληροφορια. Not with a quarter or half wind, but with full assurance, such a gale of faith as fills the sails of the soul, and makes it set up its top-gallant, as it were.

Having our hearts sprinkled, &c.] Faith ever purgeth from sin, and worketh repentance from dead works.

Ver. 23. Without wavering] Gr. ακλινη, without tilting or tossing to one side or other. This amounts to more than that conjectural confidence of the Popish dubitanei, and that common faith that holds men in suspense, and hangs between heaven and earth as a meteor.

Ver. 24. And let us consider] Christians must study one another's cases, the causes and cure of their spiritual distempers, solicitous of their welfare.

To provoke unto love] To whet on, as #De 6:7, to sharpen and extimulate, as #Pr 27:17, to rouse and raise up their dull spirits, as #2Pe 2:13, to set an edge on one another, as boars whet their tusks one against another, saith Nazianzen, ως υων οδοντες αλληλους θηξαντες.~

Ver. 25. Not forsaking] Schism is the very cutting asunder of the very veins and arteries of the mystical body of Christ. We may not separate, but in case of intolerable persecution, heresy, idolatry, and Antichristianism.

The assembling of ourselves together] επισυναγωγη, in Church assemblies and Christian meetings, as ever we look for comfort at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and our gathering together (the same word as here) unto him, #2Th 2:1; the day whereof approacheth, as in this text. Christ will come shortly to see what work we make in this kind.

As the manner of some is] It was then, it was afterwards, and is still in these siding and separating times. The Donatists made a horrible schism for the life of Caecilian. So did various others for the pride and profaneness of Paulus Samosatenus. But never was there any schism so causeless and senseless as that of our modern sectaries.

Ver. 26. For if we sin wilfully] Against the grace of the gospel, despising and despiting it, as those that fall into the unpardonable sin. Some good souls by mistakes of this text have been much afflicted, as Master John Glover. Other odious apostates have utterly despaired. Others of the ancients have unworthily cashiered this Epistle out of the canon, because of this passage.

There remaineth no more sacrifice] For sins against the law, though against knowledge there was an atonement, #Le 6:1, though it were for perjury; but for this sin against the gospel, that repudiates the remedy, there is no sacrifice; abused mercy turns into fury.

Ver. 27. Fearful looking for] Though judgment be not speedily executed, yet it is certainly to be expected. Winter never rots in the air, or dies in the dam's belly, as they say. Could but men foresee what an evil and a bitter thing sin is, they durst not but be innocent.

Ver. 28. He that despised] i.e. He that with a high hand violated it, or fell into any capital crime, and it came to light, died without mercy. As for those heinous offences, that not being discovered, and sufficiently proved, came not under the Judge's cognizance, the Lord, for the easing of men's consciences, and for the saving of their lives, appointed the yearly feast of expiations, #Le 16:29.

Ver. 29. Who hath trodden under foot] Respecting him no more than the vilest and filthiest dirt in the street, or the most abject thing in the world, as Ambrose expounds it; he disdains to receive benefit by Christ's propitiatory and expiatory sacrifice, he would not if he might, he is so Satanized. King Henry VI, going against Richard Duke of York (that ambitious rebel), offered them a general pardon. (Speed, 898.) This was rejected by them, and called "A staff of reed," or "glass-buckler." In Ket's conspiracy, when King Edward VI's pardon was offered to the rebels by a herald, a lewd boy turned toward him his naked posteriors, and used words suitable to that gesture. (Sir John Hayward.) Desperate apostates deal as coarsely with Christ; they hold him for a scorn, as an offender that is carted, #Heb 6:6.

The blood of the covenant] That is, the blood of Christ, whereby the covenant is sealed, the Church purchased, the atonement procured, and heaven opened for our more happy entrance.

Wherewith he was sanctified] By external profession, and by participation of the sacraments.

An unholy thing] Gr. A common profane thing, as if it were the blood of a common thief, or unhallowed person, yea, or of a dead dog. In the Passover they sprinkled the door and lintel with blood, but not the threshold, to teach them that they must not tread upon the blood of Jesus, as they do in a high degree that sin against the Holy Ghost.

And hath done despite, &c.] Spitting at him their hellish venom, persecuting and blaspheming his immediate effect, work, and office; and this out of desperate malice and desire of revenge, without any colour of cause or measure of dislike. One that had committed this sin, wished that his wife and children and all the world might be damned together with him.

Ver. 30. I will recompense] And if God will avenge his elect, #Lu 18:7, how much more his Son and his Spirit!

Ver. 31. It is a fearful thing] For who knoweth the power of his anger? even according to thy fear is thy wrath, #Ps 90:11. A melancholy man can fancy vast and terrible fears, fire, sword, racks, strappadoes, scalding lead, boiling pitch, running bell metal, and this to all eternity; yet all these are nothing to that wrath of God which none can either avoid or abide.

Ver. 32. But call to remembrance] q.d. You cannot utterly fall away, as those above mentioned; forasmuch as you have given good proof already of the reality of your graces.

After ye were illuminated] Till they had a sight of heaven they could not suffer; but no sooner out of the water of baptism, but they were presently in the fire of persecution.

Ver. 33. Made a gazing-stock] Gr. θεατριζομενοι, set upon a theatre; take it either properly, or metaphorically, both befell Christians. See #1Co 4:9.

Ye became companions of them] Sympathy hath a strange force; as we see in the strings of an instrument; which being played upon (as they say), the strings of another instrument are also moved with it. (Dr Sibbs.) After love hath once kindled love, then the heart being melted is fit to receive any impression. Two spirits warmed with the same heat, will easily solder together.

Ver. 34. For ye had compassion] Gr. Ye sympathized. {See Trapp on "Heb 10:33"}

And took joyfully] The joy of the Lord was their strength, as it was theirs, #Ac 5:41, who took it for a grace to be disgraced for Christ.

The spoiling of their goods] If a heathen could say when he saw a sudden shipwreck of all his wealth, Well, Fortune, I see thou wouldest not have me to be a philosopher; should not we, when called to give up our treasures, say, Well, I see that God would have me to lay up treasure in heaven, that is subject neither to vanity nor violence

Knowing in yourselves] Not in others, in books, &c., but in your own experience and apprehension, in the workings of your own hearts.

That ye have in heaven] When we lose anything for God, he seals us a bill of exchange of better things, or a double return. He will recompense our losses, as the king of Poland did his noble servant Zelislaus; having lost his hand in his wars, he sent him a golden hand. These Hebrews had lost their goods, but not their God. Here is the dry rod blossoming.

Ver. 35. Cast not away your confidence] Since it is your shield and buckler, #Eph 6:16; but if battered with temptations, beat it out again. Demosthenes was branded with the name of Πιψασπις, one that had lost his buckler.

Ver. 36. For ye have need of patience] Whereas they might object, But where is this recompense you tell us of? Oh, saith he, you have need of patience to wait God's time of recompense. Good men find it oft more easy to bear evil than to wait till the promised good be enjoyed. The spoiling of their goods required patience, but this more than ordinary.

That after ye have done the will of God] viz. By suffering it, and longsuffering, till he reward it.

Ver. 37. For yet a little while] Tantillum, tantillum, adhuc pusillum. A little, little, little while, ετι γαο μικρον οσον, οσον. God's help seems long, because we are short. Were we but ripe, he is full ready. Hence this ingemination, "he that shall come, will come," &c., q.d. he will, he will, his mind is always upon it, he is still a coming to deliver. With this sweet promise Rev. Mr Whatley comforted himself a little before his death. And Bishop Jewel, persuading many to patience, oft said, haec non durabunt aetatem, this is but for awhile. (Mr Leigh's Annotat.)

Ver. 38. Now the just shall live by faith] In the want of feeling; he shall rest upon God in the fail of outward comforts, as the believing Jews were to do in the Babylonish captivity, #Hab 2:4, quoted here by the apostle, though with some variation of words.

But if any man draw back] Gr. υτοστειληται. Steal from his colours, run from his captain, revolt from Christ, turn renegade, relinquishing his religion, as did Julian, Lucian, and other odious apostates.

My soul shall have no pleasure] Christ hath no delights in dastards, turn-coats, run-a-ways, he will not employ them so far as to break a pitcher, or bear a torch, #Jud 7:7. Baldwin the French lawyer, that had religionem ephemeram, as Beza said of him, for every day a new religion, being constant to none, became Deo hominibusque quos toties fefellerat invisus, hated of God and men, whom he had so oft mocked. Theodoric, an Arian king, did exceedingly affect a certain deacon, although an orthodox. This deacon thinking to ingratiate, and get preferment, became an Arian. Which when the king understood, he changed his love into hatred, and caused the head to be struck from him, affirming that if he kept not his faith to God, what duty could any one expect from him? (Melch. Adam.)

Ver. 39. Who draw back unto] Apostates have martial law, they run away but into hell's mouth. A worse condition they cannot likely choose onto themselves; for they are miserable by their own election, #Jon 2:8, and are wholly destined to utter destruction. Transfugas arboribus suspendunt, saith Tacitus of the old Germans; they hang up run-a-ways. And transfugas, ubicunque inventi fuerint, quasi testes interficere licet, saith the civil law. Run-a-ways are to be received as enemies, and to be killed wherever they be found.

To the saving of the soul] Gr. εις πειοποιησιν ψυχης, to the giving of the soul. A metaphor from merchants, who either get more or lose what they have; or else haply from gamesters, who keep a stake in store, however the world go with them.

Chapter 11

Ver. 1. Now faith is the substance] Having mentioned the life of faith, #Heb 10:38, and the end of faith (or the reward of it, #1Pe 1:9), the salvation of the soul, #Heb 10:39, he now descends to the description of this glorious grace, #Jas 2:1, and saith that it is the substance or subsistence or basis and foundation of things hoped for.

It is the same that our author had called confidence, #Heb 10:35. Polybius, speaking of Horatius' keeping the field against the enemy's forces, saith, that the enemies more feared his υποστασις (the word here used), his confidence binding upon the victory, than his strength. Faith is the vital artery of the soul (saith one), #Hab 2:4, and by the eye of it, through the perspective glass of the promises, a Christian may see into heaven. Faith doth antedate glory; it doth substantiate things not seen. Faith altereth the tenses, and putteth the future into the present tense, #Ps 60:6. It is reported of the crystal that the very touching of it quickeneth other stones and puts a lustre and beauty upon them. (Gul. Parisiens.) This is true of faith; it makes evil things present, far off; and good things far off, present.

The evidence of things, &c.] The index, ελεγχος, or the clear conviction by disputation, or by making syllogisms from the word. Indeed it is the word (to speak properly) that is the convincing evidence of things not seen; but because the word profiteth not further than it is mingled with faith in the heart, therefore that which is due to the word is here ascribed to faith.

Ver. 2. The elders obtained, &c.] Gr. εμαρτυρηθησαν, were attested unto; and are here eternalized in this notable chapter, this little book of martyrs, as one fitly calleth it. Faith honoureth God, and gives him a testimonial, #Joh 3:33, such as is that #De 32:4. God therefore honoureth faith, according to #1Sa 2:30, and gives it his testimonial, as here in this truly named golden legend.

Ver. 3. Through faith we understand] It is the nature of faith to believe God upon his bare word, and that against sense in things invisible, and against reason in things incredible. Sense corrects imagination, reason corrects sense, but faith corrects both. Aufer argumenta ubi fides quaeritur. Verba philosophorum excludit simplex veritas Piscatorum, saith Ambrose. I believe, and that is enough, though I cannot prove principles and fundamentals of faith.

That the worlds were framed] Gr. κατηπισθαι, affabre facta, "were neatly made up."

By the word of God] By that one word of his, Fiat, Let it be so and so. By the way, take notice, that faith here described is taken in a large sense as it hath not the promises only, but the whole word of God for its object. Look how the Israelites with the same eyes and visual faculty wherewith they beheld the sands and mountains, did look upon the brazen serpent also, but were cured by fastening upon that alone; so by the same faith whereby we are justified, we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, and believe all other truths revealed; and yet faith as it justifieth looks upon Christ alone, not knowing anything here but Christ and him crucified, as is well observed by a learned divine.

Were not made of things, &c.] Of any pre-existent matter, as Plato held. {See Trapp on "Ge 1:1"}

Ver. 4. A more excellent sacrifice] Good actions and good aims make a man good in the sight of God. Cain may offer as well as Abel. Doeg may set his foot as far within the sanctuary as David, the Pharisee as the publican, but with different success.

God testifying of his gifts] By fire from heaven, or some other visible expression of his gracious acceptance, whereby Abel's faith was confirmed touching life and salvation in Christ. Paulus Phagius tells us out of the Rabbins, that a face of a lion was seen in the heavenly fire inflaming the sacrifice. (Armor. in Chal. Paraphr.) Which (if it be true) did probably shadow out the "Lion of the tribe of Judah," of whom all the sacrifices were types.

Being dead yet speaketh] λαλειται, or, is yet spoken of, being registered for the first martyr in the Old Testament, as Stephen was in the New, and as Mr Rogers was here in the Marian persecution.

Ver. 5. By faith Enoch was translated] μετετεθη, or carried from one place to another. He changed his place, but not his company, for he still walked with God, as in earth, so in heaven.

That he should not see death] The Arabic version addeth, he was translated into paradise, where a plentiful amends was made him for that which he wanted of the days of the years of the lives of his fathers, in the days of their pilgrimage, #Ge 47:9.

And was not found] And yet the Lord killed him not, as the Chaldee hath, #Ge 5:24, but took him up in a whirlwind, say the Hebrew doctors, as Elijah was. He was changed as those shall be that are found alive at Christ's second coming, #1Co 15:51, the soul and body being separated, and in a moment reunited. Subitus erit transitus a natura corruptibili in beatam immortalitatem, saith Calvin there.

That. he pleased God] εὐηροεστηκεναι, he walked with God in all well pleasing, being fruitful in every good work, #Col 1:10. Hence that testimony given him by his own conscience that he gave God good content.

Ver. 6. But without faith] That is, without Christ, in whom the Father is well pleased, #Joh 14:6.

For he that cometh to God] sc. Forma pauperis, that cometh a begging to him in the sense of his own utter indigence, as Jacob's sons came to Joseph, and as the Egyptians hard bestead came to him, saying, "We will not hide it from my lord, how that our money is spent," &c., #Ge 47:18

Must believe that he is] Zaleucus, lawgiver of the Locrians, speaketh thus in the poem to his laws, Hoc inculcatum sit, esse Deos, let this he well settled in men's minds that there is a Deity, and that this Deity will reward the devout. But what an odd conceit was that of the Cretians, to paint their Jupiter without either eyes or ears! And what an uncertainty was she at that prayed, O Deus quisquis es vel in coelo, vel in terra, O God, whoever thou art, for whether thou art, and who thou art, I know not. (Medea.) This uncertainty attending idolatry caused the heathens to close up their petitions with that general Diique Deaque omnes, Hear, all ye gods and goddesses. (Servius in Geor. lib. 1.) And those mariners, #Jon 1:5, every man to call upon his god; and lest they might all mistake the true God, they awaken Jonah to call upon his God. Christian petitioners must settle this, that their God is Optimus, Maximus, such in himself, and such toward them, as he stands described in his holy word.

Ver. 7. Moved with fear] Opposed to the security of the old world, who would know nothing till the very day that the flood came, #Mt 24:39 Noah trembled at God's judgments, whilst they hanged in the threatenings; and was no less affected than if himself had been endangered. See the like in Habakkuk, after that he threatened the Chaldeans, #Hab 3:16, and in Daniel, #Da 4:19. Noah took things foretold him by God by the right handle, as the word εὐλαβηθεῖς properly signifieth.

By the which he condemned the world] Of deep and desperate security, that dead lethargy where into sin and Satan had cast them. Their heathen posterity in scorn termed him Prometheus; and feigned him to be chained to Caucasus with a vulture feeding upon his entrails, in regard of his foretelling the flood, and providing an ark to escape it, near the mountain Caucasus.

And became heir] Heir apparent; he was hereby evidently declared to be such.

Ver. 8. When he was called] A man may follow God dryshod through the Red Sea. He is to be obeyed without sciscitation, with a blind obedience. Abraham winked, as it were, and put his hand into God's to be led whithersoever he pleased. Magnus est animus, qui se Dee tradidit; pusillus et degener qui obluatur. (Seneca.) That is a brave man indeed that can wholly resign himself up to God— Quo fata trahunt, retrahuntque, sequamur. (Virgil.)

Ver. 9. He sojourned in the land] There he had his commoration, but in heaven his conversation, content to dwell in tents till he should fix his station above.

With Isaac and Jacob] Perhaps together, as near neighbours. When Abraham parted with Lot, he would part with him no further than the right hand is from the left, #Ge 13:9. There is singular comfort in the society of saints.

Ver. 10. Which hath foundations] Heaven hath a foundation, earth hath none; but is hanged upon nothing, as Job speaketh. Hence things are said to be on earth, but in heaven.

Whose builder and maker] Gr. Whose cunning artificer and public workman. God hath bestowed a great deal of skill and workmanship upon the third heaven.

Ver. 11. Because she judged him, &c.] At first she laughed, through unbelief, at the unlikelihood; but afterward she bethought herself, and believed. This latter is recorded, the former pardoned. So #Ge

18:12, "Sarah laughed within herself, saying, After I have waxen old shall I have pleasure, my lord being old also?" Here was never a good word but one, viz. that she called her husband lord, and this is recorded to her eternal commendation, #1Pe 3:6. Isaac then was not a child of nature, but of the mere promise; so are all our graces. We bring forth good things, as Sarah's dead womb brought forth a child.

Ver. 12. As the stars, &c.] The seed of Abraham (saith one) are of two sorts. Some are visible members of a Church, yet have earthly hearts, dry and barren as the sand. Others as the stars of heaven, of spiritual hearts, minding things above.

Ver. 13. And embraced them] Gr. Saluted them, kissing Christ in the promises, and interchangeably kissed of him, #So 1:1, being drawn together (as the word signifies) by mutual dear affection, απασαμενοι ab a simul et παω, traho.

Ver. 14. That they seek a country] Fugiendure est ad clarissimam patriam; ibi pater; ibi omnia. Away, home to our country, saith one, there is our Father, there is our all, saith Plotin. (ap. Aug. de Civ. De:). To die, is, in Bernard's language, no more than redoatriasse, to go home again.

Ver. 15. If they had been mindful] But to that they had no mind at all, because there idolatry too much prevailed, #Jos 24:2 Ge 31:19, yet not so much as among the Canaanites, #De 12:31.

Ver. 16. God is not ashamed] But honoureth them as his confederates, because for his cause they renounced the world. No man ever did or suffered anything for God that complained of a hard bargain.

Ver. 17. Abraham when he was tried] Of ten trials wlfich Abraham passed, this last was the sorest. No son of Abraham can look to escape temptations, when he seeth that bosom in which he desireth to rest so assaulted with difficulties.

Offered up his son Isaac] Ready he was so to have done, and therefore it is reputed and reckoned as done indeed, #2Co 8:12. {See Trapp on "2Co 8:12"}

Ver. 18. Of whom it was said] This was one of those many promises that Abraham might think were all lost in the loss of his Isaac. Never was gold tried in so hot a fire.

Ver. 19. That God was able] He founded his faith upon God's fidelity and omnipotency. These are the Jachin and the Boaz, the two main pillars whereupon faith resteth.

Ver. 20. By faith Isaac blessed] Patriarchal benedictions were prophetic; the blessing of godly parents is still very available for the good of their children; and justifying faith is not beneath miraculous in the sphere of its own activity and where it hath warrant of God's word.

Ver. 21. When he was a dying] The Spirit's motions are then many times quickest when natural motions are slowest; most sensible when the body begins to be senseless; most lively when the saints lie dying. The sun shines most amiably toward the descent. The rivers, the nearer they run to the sea, the sooner they are met by the tide. So here.

Ver. 22. Gave commandment concerning] He died upon the promise, and held possession by his bones, to testify his firm hold of heaven.

Ver. 23. Hid three months of his parents] That they hid him no longer argued weakness of their faith, which yet is both commended and rewarded.

He was a proper child] αστειον, fair to God, #Ac 7:20, having a divine beauty and comeliness. Special endowments are a foretoken of special employment. The very heathen in choosing their kings had a special eye to bodily beauty. See #1Sa 10:23 16:19 17:42.

Not afraid of the king's commandment] Because unjust and impious. {See Trapp on "Ac 4:19"}

Ver. 24. When he was come to years] Gr. μεγας γενομενος, grown a great one, and so knew what he did, understood himself sufficiently.

Refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's] And so to succeed in the kingdom (for we read not of any son that Pharaoh had), yea, in the kingdom of Ethiopia too; for being sent on his fosterfather's quarrel against the king of Ethiopia, histories tell us that he afterwards married that king's daughter; for the which he was checked of his brother and sister, #Nu 12:1. But he could have told them, that for denying the title of son of Pharaoh's daughter, he was soon after called Pharaoh's god, #Ex 7:1; and what he lost in Ethiopia, was sufficiently made up to him when he became king in Jeshurun. Howsoever, gratius ei fuit nomen pietatis quam potestatis, as Tertullian saith of Augustus, he more prized piety than power.

Ver. 25. Choosing rather to suffer] The happiest choice that ever the good man made. It was a heavy charge that Elihu laid upon Job, that he had chosen iniquity rather than affliction, #Job 36:21. The Church is said to come from the wilderness (of troubles and miseries), leaning on her beloved, #So 8:5. The good soul will not break the hedge of any commandment to avoid any piece of foul way. Quas non oportet mortes praeeligere? saith Zuinglius. What deaths had we not better choose, what punishment undergo, yea, what hell not suffer, rather than go against our consciences rightly informed by the good word of God?

The pleasures of sin for a season] Job fitly calleth sparks the sons of fire, being engendered by it upon fuel, as pleasures are by our lusts upon the object. But they are not long lived, they are but as sparks, they die as soon as begotten, they perish with the use, #Col 2:22. Good God, saith Lysimachus, for how short pleasure how great a kingdom have I lost! May not the voluptuous epicure say so much better? Oh, what madmen are they that bereave themselves of a room in that city of pearl for a few carnal pleasures in this land of Cabul, or of dirt, as Hiram called the cities that Solomon had given him, #1Ki 9:13.

Ver. 26. Esteeming the reproach, &c.] Reproach is here reckoned as the heaviest part of Christ's cross. And if we can bear reproach for him, it is an argument we mean to stick to him, as the servant in the law that was content to be bored in the ear would stick to his master.

Than the treasures in Egypt] Egypt for its power and pride is called Rahab, #Ps 87:4: famous it was for its learning, #1Ki 4:30 Ac 7:23; and is still for its fruitfulness; so that where the Nile overfloweth, they do but throw in the seed, and have four rich harvests in less than four months. Thence Solomon had his chief horses, #2Ch 9:28, and the harlot her fine linen, #Pr 7:16, and yet Moses upon mature deliberation esteemed the reproach of Christ, &c. So did Origen choose rather to be a poor catechist in Alexandria than, denying the faith, to be with his fellow pupil Plotinus in great authority and favour. To profess the truth while we may live upon it, this argues no truth; but to profess it when it must live upon us, upon our honours, profits, pleasures, this is praise worthy, and argues not only truth, but strength of grace, #1Sa 14:26. It argued there was much power in that oath when none dared to touch one drop of that honey; so, to resist strong temptations, argues strong grace.

For he had respect, &c.] We may safely make any of God's arguments our encouragements; look through the cross, and see the crown beyond it, and take heart, Quis non patiat, ut potiatur? Moses cast an eye (when he was on his journey) to cheer him in his way, απεβλεπε, he stole a look from glory; he goes to his cordial, and renews his strength, gets fresh encouragement. Columbus, when his men were weary, and resolved to come back, besought them to go on but three days longer. They did so, and discovered America. Heaven is but a little before us. Hold out, faith and patience.

Ver. 27. As seeing him who is invisible] An elegant kind of contradiction. Let us study Moses' optics, get a patriarch's eye, see God, and set him at our right hand, #Ps 16:8. This will, support our courage, as it did Micaiah's, who, having seen God, feared not to see two great kings in their majesty.

Ver. 28. Through faith he kept the passover] It is the work of faith rightly to celebrate a sacrament. Speak therefore to thy faith at the Lord's supper, as Deborah did to herself, "Awake, awake, Deborah, awake, awake, utter a song."

Ver. 29. They passed through the Red Sea] Which threatened to swallow them, but yet preserved them. Faith will eat its way through the Alps of seemingly insuperable difficulties, and find unexpected exits.

As by dry land] "Israel saw no way to escape here, unless they could have gone up to heaven, which because they could not, saith one, heaven comes down to them, and paves them away through the Red Sea.

Assaying to do were drowned] Here that holy proverb was exemplified, "The righteous is delivered out of trouble, and the wicked cometh in his stead," #Pr 11:8. See #Isa 43:3. God usually infatuateth those whom he intendeth to destroy, as these.

Ver. 30. By faith the walls of Jericho] So do daily the strongholds of hell, #2Co 10:4. {See Trapp on "2Co 10:4"} Wherein, albeit the Lord requite our continual endeavours for the subduing of our corruptions during the six days of this life, yet we shall never find it perfectly effected till the very evening of our last day.

Ver. 31. With them that believed not] To wit, that gave not credit to those common reports of God and his great works, but despised them as light news, and refused to be at the pains of further inquiry.

When she had received the spies] Whom to secure she told a lie, which was ill done. The apostle commends her faith in God, but not her deceit toward her neighbour, as Hugo well observeth.

Ver. 32. Of Gideon, of Barak, &c.] Here the names only of various worthies of old time per praeteritionem conglobantur, are artificially wound up together for brevity's sake. All these were not alike eminent, and some of them such as, but that we find them here enrolled, we should scarce have taken them for honest men; yet by faith, &c. Christ carries all his, of what size or sort soever, to the haven of heaven, upon his own bottom, as a ship doth all the passengers that are therein to the desired shore.

Ver. 33. Wrought righteousness] Civil and military, spiritualized by faith and heightened to its full worth. The Scripture maketh it a great matter, that Abraham should have a child when he was a hundred years old, whereas Torah his father was 130 when he begat Abraham. But because Abraham had his child by faith, therefore it was a great matter. And so in all things whatsoever that we have, do, or suffer, if they be by faith, they are great things indeed.

Obtained promises] Faith winds itself into the promises, and makes benefit thereof. A bee can suck honey out of a flower, so cannot a fly do. Faith will extract abundance of comfort in most desperate distresses out of the precious promises, and gather one contrary out of another, honey out of the rock, &c., #De 32:37.

Ver. 34. Escaped the edge of the sword] As David by the force of his faith escaped Saul's sword, Elijah Ahab's, Elisha the Syrians', #2Ki 6:8-23, and various of God's hidden ones at this day have escaped by a strange providence, when studiously sought after as sheep to the slaughter. See the Prefatory Epistle to Mr Shaw's Sermon.

Out of weakness were made strong] And here their strength was to sit still, as theirs was, #Isa 30:7. They thought their strength had been in the help of Egypt; but the prophet tells them, whatsoever strength they expect from Egypt they shall have it here. Your Egypt "is to sit still" (so the words may be read); by sitting still you shall have an Egypt; whatsoever help you might think to have that way, you shall have it this way.

Ver. 35. Women received] As the Sareptan Shunammite, widow of Nain, &c. No such midwife as faith; it hath delivered even graves of their dead.

Others were tortured] Gr. ετομπανισθησαν, they were tympanized, distended, stretched upon the rack, as a sheep's pelt is upon a drum head. Others render it, "They were bastonaded or beaten with bars or cudgels to death," as if it were with drum sticks.

Not accepting deliverance] On base terms; they scorned to flee away for the enjoyment of any rest, except it were with the wings of a dove, covered with silver innocency. As willing were many of the martyrs to die as to dine. The tormentors were tired in torturing Blandina. And, We are ashamed, O emperor! The Christians laugh at your cruelty, and grow the more resolute, said one of Julian's nobles. Illud humiliter sublime et sublimiter humile, nisi in Christi Martyribus non videmus, saith Cyprian. This the heathens counted obstinacy (Tertul. in Apelog.); but they knew not the power of the Spirit, nor the private armour of proof that the saints have about their hearts.

That they might obtain a better resurrection] The resurrection they knew would recruit and rectify them. This held life and soul together. So #Da 12:3. These miserable captives, saith Lucian (the atheist of the Christians of this time), have vainly persuaded themselves of a glorious resurrection, and hence their fool hardy forwardness to die. Other of the heathens jeered the Christians, and told them they needed not to care for their lives, since they should rise again. Will you, said they, rediturae parcere vitae, spare your carcasses that shall rise.

Ver. 36. Of cruel mockings] As Jeremiah, Amos, Elisha, "Go up, bald head, go up," so. "To heaven, as they say" (but who will believe it?) "that your master Elijah did." So they mewed at David, mocked at Isaiah, #Isa 28:10 (the sound of the words, as they are in the original, carries a taunt), jeered our Saviour, #Lu 16:14. See these Hebrews upon the stage, as mocking stocks, #Heb 10:33.

Ver. 37. Were tempted] πειρασθησαν, or (as others read the words) They were burned. One saith that it was almost as great a miracle that Joseph did not burn when his mistress tempted him, as it was for the three children not to burn in the Babylonish fire. Luther was oft tempted to be quiet, with great sums of money and highest preferments. Julian by this means drew many from the faith.

In sheep skins and goat skins] That might have rustled in silks and velvets, if they would have yielded. Saepe sub attrita latitat sapientia vesta .

Afflicted, tormented] None out of hell were ever more afflicted than the saints, to the wonder and astonishment of the beholders.

Ver. 38. Of whom the world] They were fitter to be set as stars in heaven, and be before the Lord in his glory. The world was not worthy of their presence, and yet they were not thought worthy to live in the world.

Ver. 39. Received not the promise] viz. Of Christ's incarnation.

Ver. 40. Some better thing] i. e. Christ, that great mystery, as #1Ti 3:16; that chief of ten thousand, &c.; that gift, #Joh 4:10; that benefit, #1Ti 6:2.

Chapter 12

Ver. 1. With so great a cloud] Or, cluster of witnesses, whose depositions we should hearken to, and rest in. Justin Martyr confesseth of himself, that seeing the pious lives and patient sufferings of the saints, he concluded that this was the truth they professed, and sealed with their blood. These, in things imitable, are as the cloud that led Israel; but in things unwarrantable (for in many things we fail all) as the black of the cloud, which whoso followeth with the Egyptians, is like to be drowned as they.

Let us lay aside every weight] ογκος, or burden, or swelth. He that runs in a race will not have a burden upon his back, or shut up himself in a straight jacket.

The sin which doth so easily beset us] ευπεισιστατος, or that sticks so close to us, or that troubles and puzzles us, or that curbs and girds us in, that we cannot run at liberty. Inordinate passions (saith one) come like foul weather, before we send for them; they often prevent all action of the will; but good affections are so overlaid with sin (which compasseth us about), that if we gather not wind under their wing (so ponderous the flesh is) they cannot mount up to purpose.

Let us run with patience] This seems to be a contradiction (as one observeth), for running is active, patience passive; but he that here runs without patience never gets to the end of the race; for in the race of God's commandments, men have foul play; one rails, another stops him, &c.

The race] Gr. αγωνα, the strife race, for we must run and fight as we run, strive also to outstrip our fellow racers.

Ver. 2. Looking unto Jesus] Gr. απορωντες, looking off those things that may either divert or discourage, and looking unto Jesus with loving and longing looks. A Persian lady being at the marriage of Cyrus, and asked how she liked the bridegroom? How? said she; I know not. I saw nobody but mine own husband. Saints have a single eye, an eye of adamant, which will turn only to one point, to Christ alone.

The author and finisher] The Alpha and Omega, the beginner and ender. In all other things and arts, non est eiusdem invenire et perficere, the same man cannot begin and finish. But Christ doth both, #Php 1:5.

Endured the cross] Ran with courage, though he ran with the cross upon his back all the way.

Despising the shame] Whereof man's nature is most impatient. Christ shamed shame (saith an interpreter), as unworthy to be taken notice of in comparison of his design. So, according to his measure, did that nobleman, who when he came into jeering company of great ones, would begin and own himself for one of those they called Puritans. This was much better than that scholar in Queen's college, mentioned by Mr Burroughs, who professed he had rather suffer the torments of hell than endure the contempt and scorn of the Puritans.

Ver. 3. For consider him] Gr. αναλογισασθε, comparationem instituite. Make the comparison betwixt Christ and yourselves, betwixt his sufferings and yours, and then you will see a difference. Our troubles are but as the slivers and chips of his cross. I am heartily angry (saith Luther) with those that speak of my sufferings, which if compared with that which Christ suffered for me, are not once to be mentioned in the same day.

Lest ye be wearied and faint] Gr. εκλυομενοι, loosened, as the nerves are in a swoon or palsy; or, let go, as water spilt upon the ground. This to prevent keep your eye upon your Captain and that cloud before mentioned. There were in Greece certain fields called Palaestrae, where young men exercised themselves in wrestling, running, &c. In these were set up statues of various valiant champions, that the young men that ran or wrestled, might fix their eye upon them. and be encouraged. When Jerome had read the life and death of Hilarion, he folded up the book, and said, Well, Hilarion shall he the champion that I will follow.

Ver. 4. Ye have not yet resisted] q.d. You may do, and must look to do. And if you cannot endure words for Christ, how will you endure wounds? If you have run with the footmen, and they have tired you, how can ye contend with horses? #Jer 12:5.

Striving against sin] That is, against sinners that persecute you, or the sin that doth so easily beset you, and solicit you to spare yourself, and rather to yield a little than to suffer so much. The tabernacle was covered over with red (and the purple fathers tell us they take that colour clothes for the same intent), to note that we must defend the truth even to the effusion of blood. If we cannot endure martyrdom (if called thereunto) and sweat a bloody sweat for Christ's sake, we cannot be comfortably assured that we are of his body. Christo submittemus (said that Dutch martyr) sexcenta si nobis essent colla: We will submit to Christ, though we should suffer never so many deaths for his sake. John Leaf, a young man burnt with Mr Bradford, hearing his own confession, taken before the bishop, read unto him, instead of a pen took a pin, and so pricking his hand, sprinkled the blood upon the said bill of his confession, willing the messenger to show the bishop that he had sealed the same bill with his blood already. See the story of William Pikes, Acts and Men., p. 1853.

Ver. 5. And ye have forgot the exhortation] Or, have ye forgot the consolation? <sup>{a}</sup> Are the consolations of God small unto you? #Job 15:11. Do ye, instead of wrestling with God, wrangle with him, refusing to be comforted (as Rachel), out of the pettishness of your spirits, as he, #Ps 77:2? Will ye not, as children, eat your milk, because you have it not in the golden dish? Will ye be like the hedgehog, of which Pliny reporteth, that being laden with nuts and fruits, if the least filbert fall off, will fling down all the rest in a pettish humour, and beat the ground with her bristles.

Despise not thou the chastening] See my Love Tokens, p. 37. Count it not a light matter, a common occurrence, such as must be borne by head and shoulders, and when things are at worst, they will mend again. This is not patience but pertinacy, strength but stupidity, "the strength of stone, and flesh of brass," #Job 6:12. When Gallienus the emperor had lost the kingdom of Egypt, What? said he, Sine lino Egyptio esse non possumus? cannot we be without the hemp of Egypt? but shortly after he was slain with the sword. When the Turks had taken two castles in Chersonesus, and so first got footing in Europe, the proud Greeks said that there was but a hog's sty lost, alluding to the name of the castle. But that foolish laughter was turned within a while into most bitter tears. When Calais was lost under Queen Mary, those of the faction strove to allay the Queen's grief, saying that it was only a refuge for runaway heretics, and that no Roman Catholic ought to deplore, but rather rejoice, at the damage:

*At regina gravi iamdudum saucia cura,
Vulnus alit venis—*

Nor faint when thou art rebuked] If we faint in the day of adversity, our strength is small, saith Solomon, #Pr 24:10; and it is, Non quia dura, sed quia molles patimur, saith Seneca; not for that we suffer hard things, but because we are too soft that suffer them. As is the man, so is his strength, said they to Gideon, #Jud 8:21. Joseph's bow abode in strength, even when the iron entered into his soul, #Ge 49:24; and Job's stroke was heavier than his groaning, #Job 23:2. Invalidum omne natura querelum, saith Seneca: It is a weakness to be ever whining. See my Love Tokens.

{a} Legenda haec sunt cum interrogatione. Pisc.

Ver. 6. For whom the Lord loves] Whom he entirely loveth and cockereth above the rest of his children. That son in whom he is well pleased, saith Mercer on #Pr 3:12, whom he makes his white boy, saith Theophylact here. See my Love Tokens.

And scourgeth every son] Lays upon them hard and heavy strokes. When Ignatius came to the wild beasts, Now, saith he, I begin to be a Christian. Omnis Christianus crucianus, saith Luther. And he hath not yet learned his A B C in Christianity, saith Bradford, that hath not learned the lesson of the cross. When Munster lay sick, and his friends asked him how he did, and how he felt himself, he pointed to his sores and ulcers (whereof he was full), and said, Hae sunt gemmae et pretiosa ornamenta Dei, &c., These are God's gems and jewels wherewith he decketh his best friends, and to me they are more precious than all the gold and silver in the world. (Joh. Manl. loc. com.)

Ver. 7. God dealeth with you, &c.] Corrections are pledges of our adoption and badges of our sonship. One Son God hath without sin, but none without sorrow. As God corrects none but his own, so all that are his shall be sure to have it; and they shall take it for a favour too, #1Co 11:32.

Ver. 8. Then are ye bastards] Qui excipitur a numero flagellatorum, excipitur a numero filiorum, saith one. He that escapes affliction may well suspect his adoption. I have no stronger argument against the pope's kingdom, saith Luther, than this, quod sine cruce regnat, that he reigns without the cross. They have no changes, surely they fear not God.

Ver. 9. And we gave them reverence] Pater est, si pater non esses, &c., It is my father, &c. This cooled the boiling rage of the young man in Terence. Nicolas of Jenvile, a young French martyr, when he was condemned and set in the cart, his father coming with a staff would have beaten him; but the officers, not suffering it, would have struck the old man. The son crying to the officers, desired them to let his father alone, saying he had power over him to do what he would.

And live] For corrections of instruction (and God never chastiseth but withal he teacheth, #Ps 94:12) are the way of life, #Pr 6:23 15:31. See my Love Tokens.

Ver. 10. After their own pleasure] To ease their stomachs, vent their choler, discharge themselves of that displeasure they have (and perhaps without cause) conceived against us. Not so the Lord; "Fury is not in me," saith he, #Isa 27:4. Though God may do with his own as he pleaseth, yet he doth never over do. For it goes as much against the heart with him, as against the hair with us; it is even a pain to him to be punishing, #La 3:33.

That we might be partakers] Thus bitter pills bring sweet health, and sharp winter kills worms and weeds, and mellows the earth for better bearing of fruits and flowers. The lily is sowed in its own tears, and God's vines bear the better for bleeding. The walnut tree is most fruitful when most beaten, and camomile the more you tread it, the more you spread it. Aloes kill worms, and stained clothes are whitened by bleaching.

Ver. 11. The peaceable fruit of righteousness] That crown of righteousness wrought out unto us by afflictions, #2Co 4:17, These are the preludes of our triumph, yea, a part of our salvation. Look therefore through the anger of God's corrections, saith one, to the sweetness of his love therein, as by a rainbow we see the beautiful image of the sun's light in the midst of the dark and waterish cloud. And look upon these afflictions as on so many wayward and touchy guests, which while they stay, watch every officer, but when they depart, they pay freely.

Unto them which are exercised thereby] Gr. exercised naked in the fencing school, as invincible champions. By suffering they are made more able to suffer, as well beaten soldiers, or porters to the cross. Thus David was better able to bear with Shimei, because he was under that great affliction of Absalom's rebellion.

Ver. 12. Lift up the hands] Pluck up your good hearts, and buckle close to your business; how else will you run the race that is set before you? #Heb 12:1. Gird up the loins of your minds; a drooping spirit makes no riddance of the way. Set all to rights, as the word ἀνορθώσατε signifieth.

Ver. 13. Make straight paths] Seek not byways (those highways to hell), leap not over the hedge of any commandment, so to escape any piece of foul way; but as those kine of the Philistines held straight on their way to Bethshemesh, #1Sa 6:12, though they had calves at home; so let us to heaven, though we have various things to divert us. "Let thine eyes look right on; and let thine eyelids look straight before thee," #Pr 4:25.

Ver. 14. Follow peace] Gr. pursue it, though it flee from you. I am for peace (saith David), but when I speak of it, they are for war, #Ps 120:7.

And holiness] Or chastity, #1Th 4:4; such a holiness as is opposed to fornication and profaneness, #Heb 12:16.

Without which] The article may be neuter; and then the sense is, without which following peace and holiness, or a holy peaceableness, none shall see God to their comfort.

Ver. 15. Lest any man fail] Or, fall short, as #Heb 4:1; see the note there. Short shooting loseth many a game. He that in a race lieth down ere he come to the goal, gets not the garland. Perseverance crowns all our virtues. But it is an easy thing to fall a napping with the foolish virgins (yea, the wise also slumbered), which will prove to our cost when God shall send forth summons for sleepers.

Lest any root of bitterness] Any scandalous sin, to the corrupting of others and the corroding of our own consciences, and out of which we recover not without much ado, till we have felt what an evil and bitter thing sin is, as David did, #Ps 51.

Ver. 16. Fornicator or profane] He instanceth in some roots of bitterness. Esau's profaneness appeared in these particulars: 1. In that he was no sooner asked for the birthright but he yielded. 2. That he parted with it for a trifle, a little red, red, as he called it in his haste and hunger. 3. That he did this, being, as he thought, at point of death. 4. That he went his way when he had done, as if he had done no such thing, he showed no sign of remorse or regret. Hence he is four or five several times branded with, "This is Edom." This is he that had a low esteem of spiritual privileges, that judged a jewel of greatest price worth forty pence.

Who for one morsel, &c.] Many such Edomites now-a-days that prefer earth before heaven; a swine sty before a sanctuary, as the Gadarenes; their part in Paris before their part in Paradise, as that carnal cardinal. Vale lumen amicum, said Theotimus; Farewell, eyes, if I may not drink and do worse, ye are no eyes for me. (Ambrose.) He would rather lose his sight than his sin; so will many rather part with heaven than with their lusts. Oh, what madmen are these that bereave themselves of a room in that city of pearl for a few carnal pleasures, &c. Pope Sixtus V sold his soul to the devil to enjoy the popedom for seven years.

Ver. 17. For ye know how that afterward] Sero inquit Nero,

(Sueton. Ner. c. 49. Ovid. Epis. Hel.) Esau came too short because too late. Think of the uncertainty of the gales of grace, and be nimble.

He was rejected] ἀπεδοκίμασθη, or, repulsed. For Isaac, when he saw that he had done unwilling justice in blessing Jacob, he durst not reverse the blessing, for he feared an exceeding great fear, #Ge 27:33. Neither natural affection nor Esau's importunity could make him repent and repeal what he had done.

Though he sought it carefully with tears] Tears they were of discontent, for he cries and at same time threatens his brother Jacob. Some weep for sin, some for misery, some for joy, some for compassion, some for revenge and in hypocrisy, as Esau here, who rued his deed, but repented not his sin.

Ver. 18. For ye are not come, &c.] q.d. You are not under the law, but under grace, beware therefore of profaneness and licentiousness. For think you that God hath hired you to be wicked? are you delivered to do all these abominations #Jer 7:10. Ought you not to walk gospel high? #Php 1:27. Will not the angel (Christ) that goeth along with you, destroy you after that he hath done you good, if ye turn not and repent according to the rules of the law, the gospel? #Ex 33:2-4.

Ver. 19. And the sound of a trumpet] Showing the nature of God's law, to manifest God's will, men's sins, and to warn them of the wrath deserved; likewise to summon them to appear before the Judge.

The voice of words] That is, the delivery of the decalogue, called the words of the covenant, #Ex 31:18, the ten words.

Ver. 20. For they could not endure] This shows the nature and use of the law, contrary to that of the gospel. It is a killing letter, written in blood, holding forth justice only, and no mercy.

Ver. 21. Moses said, I exceedingly] This Paul might have by tradition, or rather by revelation, unless he gathered it from #Ex 19:19, compared with #Da 10:8,16,17,19.

Ver. 22. But ye are come to Mount] And the blessings that come out of Sion (grace and peace that come by Jesus Christ) are better than all other blessings of heaven and earth, #Ps 134:3.

The heavenly Jerusalem] As Jerusalem was distinguished into two cities, the superior and the inferior; so is the Church into triumphant and militant; yet both make up but one city of the living God.

To an innumerable company] Gr. To myriads, or many ten thousands of angels. Some have said that they are 99 to one, in comparison of the saints; grounding their conceit upon the parable of the lost sheep, #Lu 15:4-7.

Ver. 23. To the general assembly] Or public meeting of a whole country, as at a great assize, or some solemn celebrity. The Roman emperors raised up ample amphitheatres in a circular form, that the people sitting all around, might have a commodious sight of such pleasant spectacles as were set before them. That which Pompey erected was of such extent, that it was able to receive 40,000 men, as Pliny witnesseth. But, oh, what a glorious amphitheatre is that of heaven! What a stately congregation house! O praeclarum diem cum ad illud animorum concilium caetumque proficiscar, et cure ex hac turba et colluvione discedam! (Cie. de Sencetute.) Surely, if Cicero or some other heathen could say so, how much more may we exult and say, Oh, that dear day when we shall go out of this wretched world, and wicked company, to that general assembly of holy and happy souls! And how should we in the mean while turn every solemnity into a school of divinity; as when Fulgentius saw the nobility of Rome sit mounted in their bravery, it mounted his meditation to the heavenly Jerusalem. And another, when he sat and heard a sweet concert of music, seemed upon this occasion carried up for the time beforehand to the place of his rest, saying very passionately, What music may we think there is in heaven! (Mr Esty, Art of Meditat., by Dr Hall.)

Which are written in heaven] In Jerusalem records were kept of the names of all the citizens, #Ps 48:3; so in heaven. And as the citizens of Rome might not accept of freedom in any other city; so neither should we seek things on earth, as those whose names are written in the earth, #Jer 17:13.

Ver. 24. That speaketh better things] Every drop whereof had a tongue to cry for vengeance; whence it is called bloods, in the plural, #Ge 4:10. But the blood of sprinkling (so Christ's blood is here called, either in allusion to the blood of the paschal lamb sprinkled on the door posts, #Ex 12:7, or else to the sprinkling of that blood, of the covenant described #Ex 24:8, with #Heb 9:18) speaketh reconciliation, peace, and eternal life.

Ver. 25. See that ye refuse not, &c.] Gr. παραιτησησθε, that ye shift him not off by frivolous pretences and excuses, as those recusant guests did, #Mt 22:1-14 It is as much as your souls are worth. Look to it therefore.

That speaketh from heaven] By his blood, word, sacraments, motions of his Spirit, mercies, &c. If we turn our backs upon such bleeding embracements, and so kick against his naked bowels, what will become of us? And mark, that he speaketh of himself, as one.

Ver. 26. Whose voice then shook, &c.] viz. When he gave the law; what shall he do when he comes to judgment?

Not the earth only, &c.] Not men only, but angels, who stand amazed at the mystery of Christ. As for men, they will never truly desire Christ till they are shaken, #Hag 2:7. God's shaking ends in settling; it is not to ruin, but to refine us.

Ver. 27. And this word, yet once more] The apostle commenteth upon the prophet whom he citeth, and from that word of his, Yet once, concludeth the dissolution of the present frame of the world by the last fire, and the establishing of that new heaven and new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness, #2Pe 3:12,13. The force of Scripture words is then well to be weighed by those that will draw therehence right consequences. And they have done singular good service to God and his Church that have employed their time and their talents for the finding out the sense of the text, by fishing out the full import and signification of the original words. In which kind learned Mr Leigh, by his Critica Sacra upon both Testaments, hath merited much commendation. And now much more on his late elaborate Annotations upon the New Testament, whereby I confess I have received much help in this review.

Ver. 28. A kingdom which cannot be moved] As the mighty monarchies of the world could; for those had their times and their turns, their ruin as well as their rise, so that now they live but by fame only. Not so the kingdom of heaven. You may write upon it the Venetian motto, Nec fluctu, nec flatu movetur; Neither winds nor waves can stir it. We must so endeavour after grace, as if it were to be gotten by labour, and not bestowed by favour; yet must we acknowledge it to be free, as if we had not laboured at all.

With reverence] Gr. With bashfulness, as in God's holy presence. See #De 23:14.

Ver. 29. A consuming fire] viz. To profligate professors, ungirt Christians, #Isa 33:14. And whereas the apostle saith Our God, he means the God of Christians also (as well as of Jews) is a consuming fire, see #Ex 23:20, with the note. As he is Pater miserationum, a Father of mercies to the penitent, so he is Deus ultionum, a God of vengeance to the rebellious. And as there is a legal and evangelical repentance, so also faith, to be exercised of all his people. There is an evangelical faith, which is in applying of Christ in the promises. There is also a legal faith, which consists in believing the threatenings and the terrors of the Lord. And if any would dwell safely with this devouring fire, let him read and practise that in #Isa 33:14,15. Hypocrites shall be afraid, and as women's paint falls off when they come near the fire, so shall theirs.

Chapter 13

Ver. 1. Let brotherly love continue] It shall continue in heaven; pity therefore but it should on earth. No such heaven upon earth, next unto communion with God, as the communion of saints.

Ver. 2. Have entertained angels] As Abraham and Lot, who pursued hospitality, as the apostle speaketh, #Ro 12:13, and had such guests as they hoped not for. The Galatians received St Paul as an angel; so did Cornelius entertain Peter. Every child of God is an earthly angel; and by entertaining them, angels also (which are their guardians) are entertained. The philosopher told his friends when they came into his little low cottage, εντευθεν ουκ απεισι Θεοι, the gods are here with me. God and his angels are the place where the saints are.

Ver. 3. Remember them that, &c.] Learn hence, saith one, that it is no new thing for the world to put bonds on them, who seek to bring them out of bondage. It is very probable that Micaiah was that disguised prophet, who brought to Ahab the fearful message of displeasure and death for dismissing Benhadad, for which he ever after hated him, and held him in prison.

As being yourselves also in the body] Not the body of Christ, or the Church, as Calvin senseth it, but in the body of flesh and frailty, subject to like afflictions; so Erasmus, Beza, Pareus, and others. Now such as these must be remembered, so #Heb 13:7,16. Hence this chapter is called by a divine, the Chapter of Remembrances, or the Remembrancer's Chapter.

Ver. 4. Marriage is honourable] And yet say the Rhemists, upon #1Co 7:9, marriage of priests is the worst sort of incontinency. Is not this to play the Antichrist

And the bed undefiled] Admonemus in ipso etiam matrimonio quandam esse scortationis speciem, siquis pure Dei done pure et sanete non utatur; ad eum finem cuius causa est institutum, saith Beza. The marriage bed, though lawful, may be defiled by excess, &c., and a man may be an adulterer of his own wife.

God will judge] The Anabaptists of Germany inferred from hence that therefore men ought not to punish adulterers; for God reserved them to his own judgment. (Joh. Manl. loc. com.) Two of them,

Monetarius and Hetserus, were notorious whoremongers; being a pair of such preachers, as Zedekiah and Ahab were, whom the king of Babylon roasted in the fire, because they committed adultery with their neighbours' wives and spake lies in God's name, &c., #Jer 29:22,23. But what a bold man was Latimer, bishop of Worcester, who presented to Henry VIII, for a new year's gift, a New Testament with a napkin, having this posie about it, "Whoremongers and adulterers God will judge."

Ver. 5. Let your conversation] Gr. προπος, your turnings and windings in the world for a livelihood. Do your business not out of a desire to get silver, αφιλαργυρος, but to humble yourselves by just labour.

Be content with such things] Not to be content is to be covetous. If men cannot bring their means to their mind, let them bring their mind to their means. (Clem. Alex.) A little will serve to bear our charges till we come home to heaven. Bonus paucis indiget. {See Trapp on "1Ti 6:6"} {See Trapp on "1Ti 6:7"} {See Trapp on "1Ti 6:8"} The contented man sits and sings,

*Hoc alii cupiant: liceat mihi, paupere cultu
Securo, chara coniuge posse frui.*

For he hath said] Five times in Scripture is this precious promise renewed; that we may press and oppress it, till we have expressed the sweetness out of it, #Isa 66:11.

I will not forsake thee] Gr. ουδε ου μη, I will not not not forsake thee. Leave us God may to our thinking, but forsake us he will not. Only we must put this and other promises in suit, by praying them over. God loves to be bound by his own words, to be sued by his own bond. Now all this is nothing to the wicked, who are strangers to the promises. These God will bring into the briers, and there leave them, #Eze 22:20 29:5. His own he will never leave nor forsake; or if he does, as sometimes he seems, yet he will not forsake them utterly, #Ps 119:8; no, that he will not. The Greek here hath five negatives, and may thus be rendered, "I will not not leave thee; neither will I not not forsake thee." God may desert his people, but not disinherit them; forsake them in regard of vision, not of union; change his dispensation, not his disposition.

Ver. 6. So that we may boldly say] Having such a promise to build and found our faith upon, we may well proceed to this holy gloriation against all opposition.

Ver. 7. Them which have the rule] Gr. ηγουμενοι, your captains, your guides (so ministers are called), your chieftains and champions, that bear the brunt of the battle, the heat of the day, and upon whom, as upon his white horses, the Lord Christ rideth about conquering and to conquer, #Re 6:2.

Considering the end] Gr. αναθεωρουντες, reconsidering, perusing it over and over, and passing into the likeness of so holy a pattern.

Ver. 8. Jesus Christ, the same] This was the sum of their sermons, and is the substance of their and your faith; which therefore you must stick to, standing fast in the street which is called Straight, #Ac 9:11, and not whirred about with various and strange doctrines.

Ver. 9. Be not carried about] περιφερομενοι. Error is a precipice, a vortex, or whirlpool, which first turns men round, and then sucks them in. Islebius Agricola, that first Antinomian, did many times promise amendment; and yet afterwards not only fell to his error again, but turned Papist, fell into the other extreme. So hard a thing it is to get poison out when once swallowed down. {See Trapp on "Eph 4:14"}

With divers and strange doctrines] That agree neither with themselves nor with the truth.

That the heart be established] Ballasted as a ship, balanced as the bee with a little stone taken up by her, when she hath far to fly in a high wind, Ne leve alarum remigium praecipitent flabra ventorum, as Ambrose observeth, lest the bigger blast should dash her to the ground.

Not with meats] As if they were holy, or helpful to salvation. By meats understand all the legal ceremonies, opposed here to the gospel, that doctrine of grace.

Ver. 10. We have an altar] That is, a sacrifice, even Christ our passover, whose flesh is meat indeed, #Joh 6:35,53, but to believers only, not to those that pertinaciously plead for ceremonies and services of the law, #Ga 5:4. Hic edere, est credere.

Ver. 11. Are burnt without the camp] And so the priests had no part of the sin offering; to show that they have no part in Christ that adhere to the Levitical services. See #Le 16:27.

Ver. 12. Without the gate] See how punctually the Old Testament is fulfilled in the New. Hardly could those before Christ divine what this meant, till he had suffered it, and the apostle had opened it. Event is the best key to types and prophecies.

Ver. 13. Bearing his reproach] The reproach of saints is the reproach of Christ, and their sufferings his, #Col 1:24 Ne 4:3-5. God is more provoked than Nehemiah. He that saith, "Vengeance is mine, I will repay," repays oftentimes, when we have forgiven, when we have forgotten; and calls to reckoning after our discharges.

Ver. 14. For here we have none] Improve this argument for the working our hearts off from the things of this world; the beauty of all which is but as a fair picture drawn upon the ice, that melts away with it.

But we seek one to come] And here we must all turn seekers. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God," &c., #Mt 6:33. {See Trapp on "Mt 6:33"}

Ver. 15. The fruit of our lips] Covering God's altar with the calves of our lips, #Ho 14:2. This shall please, the Lord better than an ox or bullock, that hath horns and hoofs, #Ps 69:31. This also is the seeker's sacrifice, #Ps 69:32.

Ver. 16. Forget not] We very easily forget what we care not to remember. The richer, the harder usually.

For with such sacrifices] How improvident are we that will not offer a sacrifice of alms when God sets up an altar before us.

Ver. 17. That have the rule over you] Gr. That are your leaders or captains. But now, as once in Alcibiades' army, most will be leaders, few learners. {See Trapp on "Heb 13:7"}

And submit yourselves] Obey their doctrine, submit to their discipline.

As they that must give an account] These are fulmina, non verba, as Erasmus saith of a like place, #Eze 3:18; not words, but thunderbolts. Chrysostom (though he usually preached every day, and so excellently that it grew to a proverb, Better the sun shine not than that Chrysostom preach not, yet he) was exceedingly affected and affrighted with this dreadful passage: being ready to say with Job, "What shall I do, when God riseth up? and when he calleth to reckoning, what shall I answer?" #Job 31:14.

Ver. 18. Willing to live honestly] Tantum velis, et Deus tibi praeoccurret. David could wish well to the keeping of God's commandments, #Ps 119:4,5, and affect that which yet he could not effect.

Ver. 19. That I may be restored] Prayer reigns over all impediments. See this excellently set forth by Mr Harris in his Peter's Enlargement.

Ver. 20. Now the God of peace] He that would reap prayers must sow them. What could the Hebrews do less than pray for him that prayed so heartily for them?

Our Lord Jesus] Here is his kingly office. God hath made him both Lord and Christ, #Ac 2:36.

That great Shepherd] That feedeth his people daily and daintily with divine doctrine. Here is his prophetic office.

Through the blood] Here is his priestly office. And here we must begin, if we will reckon them right.

Ver. 21. In every good work, &c.] Works materially good may never prove so formally and eventually; as when they are but external, partial, coactive, inconstant, &c.

Ver. 22. Suffer the word] Sharp though it be, and to the flesh tiresome, yet suffer it. Better it is that the vine should bleed than die. But many are like the nettle, touch it never so gently, it will sting you. Tange montes et fumigabunt. Offer to wake men out of their sleep, and they will brawl in that case with their best friends; yea, though it be with them here, as once it was with those that had the sweating sickness, if they slept they died. Few are now-a-days of Vespasian's mind, of whom Quintilian reporteth that he was patientissimus veri, very patient of truth, though never so tart. Or of Gerson's temper, who delighted in nothing more than a friendly reproof. This is now become as stronger physic, not fit for every complexion and state, &c.

Ver. 23. Know ye that our brother] Good news should be spread abroad, and are a fit matter for Christian epistles, as one well observeth from these words.

Ver. 24. Salute all them] This Epistle then was first read to the people, who are required to deliver the apostle's comments to their ministers. The Papists debar the people, not of the Scriptures only, but of all books of the reformed religion; and for a terror not to retain such books prohibited, I have seen (saith Sir Edwin Sands) in their printed instructions for confession, the hearing or reading of books forbidden set in rank among the sins against the first commandment.

They of Italy salute you] Few saints there now; the Italians hold integrity for little better than silliness; they blaspheme oftener than swear, they murder more than revile or slander. And yet even in Italy there are fully four thousand professed Protestants. But their paucity and obscurity (saith mine author) shall enclose them in a cipher.

Ver. 25. Grace be with you] {See Trapp on "Phm 1:25"}

James

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. To the twelve tribes] Once very devout, #Ac 26:7; still the most nimble and mercurial wits in the world, but light, aerial, and fanatical, apt to work themselves into the fool's paradise of a sublime dotage.

Which are scattered abroad] Banished from Rome by the Emperor Claudius, #Ac 18:2 (Sueton. xxv.), and called by St Peter, "strangers of the dispersion," #1Pe 1:1. The Jews at this day are a disjected and despised people, according to #De 28:64, having neither country nor resting place; even in Jerusalem there be not to be found at this day a hundred households of them. (Breerwood's Inq.)

Ver. 2. Count it all joy] The world wondereth (saith Mr Philpot the martyr) how we can be so merry in such extreme misery. But our God is omnipotent, who turneth misery into felicity. Believe me, there is no such joy in the world as the people of Christ have under the cross; I speak it by experience, &c. He counted it so upon mature deliberation, as the apostle here adviseth.

All joy] That is, full joy (by a Hebraism), complete and perfect; such as is the joy of merchants when they see their ships come laden in.

When ye fall into] Not go in step by step, but are precipitated, plunged. Or when ye fall among, as he that went down towards Jericho fell among thieves, #Lu 10:30. When ye are so surrounded that there is no escaping them, being distressed, as David was, #Ps 116:3.

Into divers temptations] Crosses seldom come single ( Catenata piorum crux), as neither do mercies, but trooping and treading one upon the heels of another. {a} After rain cometh clouds, #Ec 12:2. As in April, no sooner is one shower unburdened, but another is brewed. And when the apostle calleth them temptations, he meaneth such afflictions as will put us hard to it, and show what metal we are made of; pressing and piercing crosses.

{a} Aliud ex alio malum. Teren.

Ver. 3. The trial of your faith] Yea, such a well knit patience, as maketh a man suffer after he hath suffered, as David did from Shimei, but first from Absalom. Tile stones till baked are not useful; but well burnt and hardened they withstand all storms and ill-weather. See my Love Tokens, p. 170.

Knowing this] And therefore rejoicing, if not in the sense, yet in the use of your afflictions. {See Trapp on "Heb 12:10"} {See Trapp on "Heb 12:11"}

Ver. 4. Let patience have her perfect work] Patience must not be an inch shorter than the affliction. If the bridge reach but half-way over the brook, we shall have but ill-favoured passage. It is the devil's desire to set us on a hurry; he knows his temptations will then work best.

Ver. 5. If any of you lack wisdom] That is, patience to bear afflictions as he ought, cheerfully, thankfully, fruitfully, so as to be able to say, "Well for the present, and it will be better hereafter," which is the patient man's motto, Qui placide sortem ferre scit, ille sapit. I thank thee, O Lord, for all my pain (said Francis of Assisi, in all his extremity), and I beseech thee, if thou think good, to add to it a hundred-fold more. Feri Domino, feri, said Luther; a peccatis enim absolutus sum: Smite, Lord, smite on, my sins are pardoned; all shall be for the best. Mr William Perkins, when he lay in his last and killing torment of the stone, hearing the bystanders pray for a mitigation of his pain, willed them not to pray for an ease of his complaint, but for an increase of his patience. (Dr Hall, Rein. of Profaneness.)

Let him ask it of God] It hath been questioned by some whether a man can have patience, sine auxilio gratie, without the help of God's grace. (Aquinas.) But Christians know they cannot. It is not patience but pertinacy in godless men, that call not upon God; it is stupidity of sense, not a solidity of faith; a reckless desperation, not a confident resolution: such was that patience put forth by Mithridates of old, and by Baltasar Gerardus the Burgundian, that slew the Prince of Orange, 1584, and for the same endured very grievous torments. True patience is the fruit of prayer; this wisdom from above is one of those perfect gifts that cometh down from the "Father of lights," who is therefore called the "God of patience and consolation." God, as he is skilful in dirigendo, pitiful in corrigendo, so will he be bountiful in porrigendo.

That giveth to all men liberally] Not scantily, sparingly, or with an ill will. He is no penny father (as they say), but rich in mercy to all that call upon him. Αξιωματικωτατος μεν εστιν ο βασιλευς ημων, saith Basil. (Consil. Mon. i.) Our king gives like himself, and according to his state; he is angry with those that ask him small matters. He doth not shift off his suitors as Antigonus did the philosopher; who first asked him a groat; he answered, that was too little for a king to give; he requested the king then to give him a talent; who replied, that that was too much for a beggar to crave. {a} God solicits suitors, #Joh 4:23, and complains (as the Emperor Severus once did of his courtiers), "Hitherto ye have asked me nothing." He gives also according to his excellent greatness; as Alexander the Great gave a poor man a city; and when he modestly refused it as too great for him, Alexander answered, Non quaero quid te accipere deceat, sed quid me dare, The business is not what thou art fit to receive, but what it becometh me to give. (Sen. de Benef. ii. 16.)

And upbraideth not] Neither with present failings, nor former infirmities. Qui exprobrat, reposit. (Tacit.) So doth not God; unless in case of unthankfulness. For then he will take his own, and be gone, #Ho 2:8,9.

{a} ου βασιλικον το δομα. ου κυνικον το λημμα.

Ver. 6. But let him ask in faith] {See Trapp on "Heb 11:6"}

Nothing wavering] We are too ready in temptation to doubt, yea, to hold it a duty to doubt. This (saith one) is to light a candle before the devil, as we use to speak.

Ver. 7. That he shall receive] Unless he strive against his doubting, and wade out of it, as the moon doth out of the cloud. Qui timide rogat, negare docet; He that prayeth doubtingly, shuts heaven's gates against his own prayers.

Ver. 8. Unstable in all his ways] As he is that stands on one leg, or as a bowl on a smooth table. Contrariwise, a believer is as a square stone set into the building, #1Pe 2:7; shaken he may be, but he is rooted as a tree; wag he may up and down as a ship at anchor, but yet he removes not.

Ver. 9. Rejoice in that he is exalted] Gr. εν τω υψει αυτου, in his sublimity, in that high honour of his, #Joh 1:12. This should make him hold up his head, but not too high; be cheerful, but not withal scornful. Laeti simus, sed non securi, gaudentes in Domino, sed caventes a recidivo. (Bern.)

Ver. 10. In that he is made low] Drawn from that high esteem of outward excellencies. He is now made a greater man, because he seems too big for them; or low, that is, lowly.

Ver. 11. Shall the rich man fade] Perish eternally, if he trust in uncertain riches, and not in the living God. See #Jas 5:1. Thus that sapless fellow Nabal faded, when his heart died within him, nor could his riches any more relieve him than they did that rich and wretched cardinal, Henry Beaufort, Chancellor of England in the reign of Henry VI, who murmured at death, that his riches could not relieve him till a further time. Fie (quoth he), will not death be hired? Will money do nothing? No; money here bears no mastery. (Acts and Mon.)

Ver. 12. Blessed is the man] Provided that God teach him, as well as chastise him, #Ps 94:12, instruct him as well as correct him. See my Love Tokens, par. 2.

He shall receive the crown] A man can be content to have his head broken with a bag of gold, so he may have it, when it is done. Eternal life is called "a crown": 1. For the perpetuity of it; for a crown hath neither beginning nor ending. 2. For the plenty; because as the crown compasseth on every side, so there is nothing wanting in this life. 3. The dignity; eternal life is a coronation day. (Bishop Lake.) Tertullian wrote his book De corona militis Concerning the crown of a soldier, upon occasion of a certain Christian soldier's refusing to be crowned, and saying, Non decet Christianum in hac vita coronari; A Christian is to be crowned when he cometh to heaven.

Ver. 13. I am tempted of God] The inclination of man's heart to good, is of itself and properly of God, as light is of the sun. His inclination to evil is by accident only of God, like as darkness is of the sunset by accident, being properly not of the sun, but of the earth.

Ver. 14. Drawn away of his lust] Δελεαζομενος, Satan hath only a persuading sleight, not an enforcing might. Our own concupiscence carries the greatest stroke.

And enticed] As the silly fish is by the bait covering the hook, being first drawn aside into the clear water. {a} Or as the unwary younker, drawn to folly by some subtle she-sinner; who thereupon conceiveth, and bringeth forth a bastardly brood.

{a} Δελεαρ, quasi δολεαρ, α δολος.

Ver. 15. When lust hath conceived] As the plot of all diseases lies in the humours of the body; so of all sin, in the lust of the soul. There is in it a πανσπερμια, a tacit consent, a seed plot of all sin. {a} The Papists say (but falsely) that it is the smallest of all sins, not deserving any more of God's wrath than only a want of his beatific presence, and that too without any pain or sorrow of mind from the apprehension of so great a loss. There are also of ours that say, That it is not forbidden by the law; but sure we are, it is cursed and condemned (and therefore forbidden) by the law.

{a} Empedoclis vocabulum apud Aristot.

Ver. 16. Do not err] Wander not, as wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever, #Jude 13, by seeking to father your faults upon God, as Adam did, #Ge 3:12.

Ver. 17. Every good gift, &c.] A hexameter verse in the Greek; as little intended perhaps by the apostle as the first line in Tacitus, which yet may be scanned a long verse.

And perfect giving] Not temporals only (which are good gifts), but spirituals also, those perfect givings. The greatest excellencies in us do as much depend upon God as the effigies in the glass doth upon the face that causeth it; or as the light doth upon the sun, that father of all the light in the lower world.

With whom is no variableness] παραλλαγη, no parallax, as there is with the sun, when he declines and leaves us darkling. This word notes the sun's motion from east to west, as the following word τροπη, turning, notes his motion every year from north to south. That which the apostle would here assert is, that God tempts no man to evil, because he is unchangeably good, and can be no other.

Ver. 18. Of his own will begat he us] Gr. ἀτεκνησε, brought he us forth, as a special instance of his free grace and fatherly goodness, #Eph 1:4,5. The word properly signifies, He did the office of a mother to us, the bringing us into the light of life. The Hebrew word יָלַד also signifieth genuit, peperit, parturiit; et est proprium feminarum: quamvis eleganter de viro etiam et aliis rebus dicatur; to bring forth. (Mareus in Arca Noae.)

Ver. 19. Swift to hear] Reaching after that word of truth, the gospel, #Jas 1:18, and drinking it in as the dry earth doth the dew of heaven. Life doth now enter into the soul at the ear, as at first death did, #Ge 3:19

Slow to speak] We read often, "He that hath an ear to hear, let him hear"; but never, he that hath a tongue to speak, let him speak; for this we can do fast enough, without bidding. But hath not Nature taught us the same that the apostle here doth, by giving us two ears, and those open; and but one tongue, and that hedged in with teeth and lips? It is also tied and bound fast by the root, and hath for guides and counsellors the brain above and the heart beneath it. Hence your wisest men are most silent; for they know that as some gravel and mud passeth away with much water, so in many words there lacketh not sin.

Slow to wrath] Slow to snuff at those that reprove you. {See Trapp on "Heb 13:22"} Rage not when touched, though to the quick.

Ver. 20. For the wrath of man] Unless it be as Moses' and Christ's anger was, pure and free from guile and gall, prompting us to pity and pray for the party, #Ex 32:32 Mr 3:5.

Ver. 21. All filthiness] Gr. ρυπαριαν, the stinking filth of a pestilent ulcer. Sin is the devil's vomit, the soul's excrement, the superfluity or garbage of naughtiness, περισσειαν, as it is here called by an allusion to the garbage of the sacrifices cast into the brook Kedron, that is, into the town ditch. Retentio excrementorum est parens morborum. Out with it, therefore. Some say that the word rendered filthiness, properly signifies "the filth under the nails and armholes"; but translated to the mind, it signifies covetousness, as sordes in Latin; but here any kind of sin, especially inward, as superfluity may note outward evils, that do superfluere, float at top.

Receive with meekness] It is ill sowing in a storm: so a stormy spirit will not suffer the word to take place.

The engrafted word] εμφυτος, engrafted upon the heart, as the scion upon the stock, or sowed in the soul, and mingled with faith, that it may bring forth fruit to God.

Ver. 22. And not hearers only] The Panotii in Scythia are said to have such large ears, as that therewith they cover their whole bodies. (Isidore.) Such are our hearers only.

Deceiving your own souls] Either as by false reckoning or false reasoning; Gr. παραλογιζομενοι, putting paralogisms and fallacies upon yourselves. For hypocrites may easily deceive not others only, but themselves too; as a drunken stage player, that in his drunkenness acting a king's part, thinks himself a king indeed.

Ver. 23. His natural face] Gr. the face of his nativity, that wherewith he was born into the world. Pythagoras wished his scholars often to view themselves in a glass, that if they were well-favoured, they might likewise be well-conditioned; as if otherwise, they might make it up in virtue.

“ Si mihi difficilis formam natura negavit, Ingenio formae damna rependo meae.”
Ovid. Epist.

The law is a crystal glass, wherein a man may soon see his spiritual deformities, and be advertised of his duty. {See Trapp on "Jas 1:25"}

Ver. 24. Straightway forgetteth] Naturalists make mention of a certain creature called cervarius, that though he be feeding never so hard and hungerly, if he cast but back his head, he forgets immediately the meat he was eating, and runs to look after new: the lynx is very sharp sighted, but also very forgetful; out of sight, out of mind straight.

Ver. 25. Whoso looketh into, &c.] παρακυψας, as into a glass, wishly and intently with the body bowed down. Get thee God's law as a glass to toot in, saith Mr Bradford (Ser. of Repent.); so shalt thou see thy face foul arrayed, and so shamefully saucy, mangy, pocky, and scabbed, that thou canst not but be sorry at the contemplation thereof. It is said of the basilisk, that if he look into a glass, he presently dieth: sin doth. Physicians in some kind of unseemly convulsions wish the patient to view himself in a glass, which will help him to strive the more when he shall see his own deformity; so reflect, &c.

The perfect law of liberty] The moral law, in opposition to the ceremonial, or so called because never is a man free indeed till out of a principle of love he keep God's law.

Not a forgetful hearer] Some are as hourglasses, no sooner turned up but running out immediately. Their souls are like filthy ponds, wherein fish die soon and frogs live long; profane jests are remembered, pious passages forgotten.

Ver. 26. Seem to be religious] There is a great deal of this seemingness now abroad: Aliud in titulo, aliud in pyxide. Verba tua Dei plane sunt, facta veto Diaboli, as one told Pope Innocent III: You speak like a God, but do like a devil; a fair professor, but a foul sinner. The form of religion is honos; the power onus. Many do but act it, play it: they do no more than assume it, as the angels did the dead bodies without a soul to animate them, or as Jeroboam's wife put on her demure apparel when she was to go to the prophet. The mere seemer is a fraud, #Job 13:16, imposturam facit et patitur: fumum vendidit, fumo peribit. He is like the painted grapes that deceived the living birds, saith one, or the golden apples with this motto, "No further than colour"; touch them and they vanish.

But deceiveth] The heart first deceiveth us with colours, and when we are once doting after sin, then we join and deceive our hearts by fallacious reasonings.

Ver. 27. And widows] A vine whose root is uncovered thrives not; a widow whose covering of eyes is taken away, joys not.

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. The Lord of glory] Or, "Have not the glorious faith of our Lord Jesus Christ," &c. Faith is a glorious grace indeed.

With respect of persons] i.e. Of their outward quality or conditions, as rich or poor, of this side or that, &c. Zanchy relates about a certain Frenchman, a friend of his, and a constant hearer of Calvin at Geneva, that being solicited by him to hear Viret, an excellent preacher, who preached at the same time that Calvin did, he answered, If St Paul himself should preach here at the same hour with Calvin, Ego, relicto Paulo, audirem Calvinum, I would not leave Calvin to hear Paul. This is not only partiality, but anthropolatry {a} or man worship, saith he. Grynaeus reports a speech of George, duke of Saxony: Although I am not ignorant, saith he, that there are various errors and abuses crept into the Church, Nolo tamen amplecti Evangelium quod Lutherus annunciat, yet I will none of that gospel reformation that Luther preacheth. (Lect. in Hag.) Compertum est, it is for certain, saith Erasmus, that many things are condemned as heretical in Luther's writings, that in Austin's and Bernard's books are approved for sound and pious passages. (Erasm. Epist. ad Card. Mogunt.)

{a} Man worship; the giving of divine honours to a human being. (ED)

Ver. 2. For if there come, &c.] It is probable, saith an interpreter here, that the primitive Christians, the better to ingratiate with the richer pagans, gave them very great respect, contrary to that, #Ps 15:4. But I rather think the apostle speaketh in this text of wealthier Christians, unworthily preferred before better but poorer persons.

Ver. 3. That weareth the gay cloth] As Hospinian tells us of the dogs that kept Vulcan's temple, and as others say of the Bohemian curs, that they will fawn upon a good suit, but fly upon one that is in ragged apparel. So is it with many; Vestis virum.

Ver. 4. Are ye not then partial] ου διακριθητε, or, "Are ye not for so doing condemned in your own consciences?" Or, "Neither have ye so much as once doubted or questioned the matter within yourselves, whether in so doing you have not done amiss?"

Ver. 5. Chosen the poor] This the world wonders and stumbles at. The heathen Romans would not receive Christ (though they heard of his miracles and mighty works) into the number of their gods, because he preached poverty and made use of poor persons. Aigoland, king of Saragossa in Arragon, refused to be baptized because he saw many lazars {a} and poor people expecting alms from Charlemagne's table; and asking what they were, was answered, that they were the messengers and servants of God. And can he keep his servants no better? said he. I will be none of his servants. (Turpine.) But what saith Christ? "I know thy poverty; but (that is nothing) thou art rich," #Re 2:9. And the poor are gospellized, not only receive it, but are changed by it, #Mt 11:5. We usually call a poor man a poor soul: a poor soul may be a rich Christian, and a rich man may have a poor soul; as he in the Gospel that had animam triticeam, a wheaten soul, #Lu 12:16-21, and as those other rich fools in David's days, whose hearts were as fat as grease; they delighted not in God's law, #Ps 119:70.

Heirs of the kingdom] Heads destined to the diadem, saith Tertullian.

{a} A poor and diseased person, usually one afflicted with a loathsome disease; esp. a leper. (ED)

Ver. 6. Ye have despised the poor] Pauper ubique iacet. #Zep 3:12, afflicted and poor are joined together; because poverty is an affliction, and makes a man trodden upon. Men go over the hedge where it is lowest. Therefore St Paul joins them together, "I have learned to want, and to be abased"; they that want shall be abased; #Lu 15:30 "This thy son." He saith not, This my brother, because in poverty; which is therefore to be deprecated and prayed against, as #Pr 30:8 1. Propter inediam, on account of starvation, as #Ge 37:25 2. Propter iniuriam, On account of wrongs, #Ps 10:9 3. Propter infamiam, On account of disgrace, as here. Our Saviour calls that good beggar Lazarus, that is, God help me, #Lu 16:29; as proper a name for a beggar as could be given.

Oppress you] καταδυναστευουσιν, subjugate you, and bring your heads under their belts; trample upon you with the feet of pride and cruelty; yea, devour you, as the greater fish do the lesser. Ferae parcunt, aves pascunt, homines saeviunt, saith Cyprian. The wild beasts spare Daniel, the ravenous ravens feed Elias; only men rage and ravage, they tyrannically oppress God's poor people (as the word here imports), acting therein the devil's part. See #Ac 10:38 (where the same word is used); there is neither equity nor mercy to be had at their hands. Hence they are called men eaters, cannibals, #Ps 14:4, and charged with beating God's people to pieces, and grinding the faces of the poor, #Isa 3:15; with eating their very flesh and flaying their skins from off them, and breaking off their bones, and chopping them in pieces as for the pot, and as flesh within the caldron, #Mic 3:3. This is a sin against race, grace, and place.

Draw you before the judgment seats] Vex you with lawsuits, and by might rob you of your right. Cedit viribus aequum.

Ver. 7. Do not they blaspheme] That is, cause to be blasphemed, as #Ro 2:24 1Ti 1:20. Marcellinus, a heathen historian, taxeth the Christians of his times for their dissensions, biting and devouring one another, till they were even consumed one of another. {Am. Mar. ii. 2.} A sad thing that a heathen should see such hellish miscarriages among Christ's followers.

Ver. 8. If ye fulfil the royal law] Acknowledging God's sovereignty, and sending a lamb to the ruler of the earth, #Isa 16:1, seeking the help of that free or noble spirit of his, #Ps 51:13, that royal, ruling spirit, as the Greek version there hath it.

Ver. 9. Ye commit sin] That is flat; though ye have thought otherwise. {See Trapp on "Jas 2:4"}

And are convinced of the law as transgressors] This they held either no sin or a small one, a peccadillo. The Civilian indeed saith, De minutis non curat lex, the law makes no matter of small matters. But God's law condemneth small faults: as the sunshine showeth us atoms, moths.

Ver. 10. He is guilty of all] The whole law is but one copulative, #Ex 16:18 Eze 18:10-13. He that breaketh one commandment habitually breaketh all; not so actually. The godly keep those commandments that actually they break; but a dispensatory conscience keeps not any commandment. Deus non vult cum exceptione coli, God will not be served with an exception, saith a learned interpreter here. He that repents with a contradiction (saith Tertullian) God will pardon him with contradiction. A man must not be funambulus virtutum (saith the same author), going in a narrow track of obedience; but must do everything as well as anything, or all is lost; his obedience must be universal, extending to the compass of the whole law.

Ver. 11. For he that said] "God spake all those words, and said"; there is the same divine authority for one commandment as another, #Ex 20:1. The Pharisees had their minutula legis, insignificant laws, but Christ cries them down, #Mt 5:20. The Jews to this day senselessly argue, "Cursed is he that abides not in all things," therefore he is not cursed that abides in some things only.

Thou art become a transgressor of the law] Now every transgression and disobedience receiveth a just recompence of reward, #Heb 2:2.

Ver. 12. As they that shall be judged] Or, as they that should judge by the law of liberty; which is so called, because it doth freely and fully discover unto every man, without respect of persons, the errors and evils of his life. And we should walk as patterns of the rule. {See Trapp on "Mt 11:19"} It is also called a law of liberty, because it is freely and willingly kept of the regenerate, to whom it is no burden or bondage.

Ver. 13. For he shall have mercy] {See Trapp on "Mt 5:7"}

And mercy rejoiceth against judgment] κατακαυχαι, {a} that is, the merciful man glorieth, as one that hath received mercy, and shall not come into condemnation; for God's mercy rejoiceth against such a man's sins, as against an adversary which he hath subdued and trampled on.

{a} from αυχην, cervus: treadeth on the neck of judgment.

Ver. 14. Though a man say he hath faith] Saying serves not the turn. Livy telleth us of the Athenians (Dec. iv.) that they waged a word war against Philip, king of Macedon; Quibus solis valebant, and that was all they could do. Men may word it with God and yet miscarry, #Isa 58:2,3; he is too wise to be put off with words; he turns up our leaves, and looks what fruit; whereof if he miss, he lays down his basket, and takes up his axe, #Lu 13:7. Christianity is not a talking, but a walking with God; and at the last day it shall be required of men, non quid legerint, sed quid egerint, non quid dixerint, sed quomodo vixerint, not what they have said, but how they have acted.

Can faith save him?] That is, an ineffectual faith, that worketh not by love, such as is the faith of the Solifidian, a faith in profession only; if a man say he hath faith, and no more, as good he might say nothing. Quid verba quaero, &c.? That faith is easily wrought, which teacheth men to believe well of themselves, though their lives be evil.

Ver. 15. If a brother or a sister] As it may befall the best to be, and they are not of the chameleon kind, to live (with Ephraim) upon wind, #Ho 12:1, to be fed with fair words, or to be clothed with a suit of compliments. Sion should be taken by the hand, #Isa 51:18. And Tyre converted, leaves hoarding and heaping up wealth, and falls to feeding and clothing God's poor people, #Isa 23:18.

Ver. 16. And one of you say] This age aboundeth with mouth mercy, which is good cheap. But a little handful were better than a great many such mouthfuls.

Be ye warmed] But with what? with a fire of words. Be filled; but with what? with a mess of words. Away with those airy courtesies. How many have we today that will be but as friends at a sneeze! the most you can get of these benefactors is, "God bless you, Christ help you."

Ver. 17. Is dead, being alone] That is, being workless; for life discovers itself by action; so doth true faith by trust in God and love to men. A tree that is not for fruit, is for the fire.

Ver. 18. My faith by my works] It appeared by the fruits it was a good land, #Nu 13:23. It appeared that Dorcas was a true believer by the coats she had made: so here.

Ver. 19. Believe and tremble] Gr. φρῖσσουσι, roar as the sea, and shriek horribly, #Ac 19:29 Mr 6:49. Their hearts ache and quake within them; and shall any man mock at God's menaces? Shall not the devils keep holiday in hell, in respect of such atheists?

Ver. 20. But wilt thou know] Interrogatio docturientis, saith Piscator. A question made by one that is desirous to teach.

Thou vain man] Gr. Thou empty man; for works without faith are nothing else but a nutshell without a kernel, grapes without juice, chaff without grain, saith Mercer in #Jon 3:8.

Ver. 21. Justified by works] sc. Declarative et in fore humano, but not before God, #Ro 3:2. It is faith that justifieth the man; but they are works that justify faith to be right and real, saving and justifying.

Ver. 22. Wrought with his works] Or, was a help to his works, and was her own midwife to bring them forth of herself into the open light, #Heb 11:17.

Was faith made perfect] That is, declared to be operative and effectual.

Ver. 23. And it was imputed] {See Trapp on "Ge 15:6"} {See Trapp on "Ro 4:3"} {See Trapp on "Ga 3:6"}

The friend of God] A very high style. If Eusebius held it such an honour to be the friend of Pamphilus, and Sir Fulk Greville, Lord Brook, to be friend to Sir Philip Sidney, causing it to be so engraven upon his tomb; what is it to be the friend of God? And yet such honour have all the saints.

Ver. 24. By works a man is justified] Declaratively, as by faith apprehensively, by God effectively.

Ver. 25. The messengers] Gr. The angels, so #Lu 7:24 Ac 12:15. {See Trapp on "Ac 12:15"}

Ver. 26. As the body, &c.] Yet is not charity the soul of faith, but the vital spirit only.

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. Be not many masters] Masters of opinions, that boldly obtrude upon others their own placits, and will not have them disputed or debated. Such are the Sorbonists, who rejoice to be called Magistri nostri Parisienses, our Masters of Paris. Bacon, the Carmelite, was called Doctor resolutissimus, because he would endure no guessing or maybes. (Praefat. in 1 Sent.) The pope's parasites persuade the people, that what interpretation soever he gives of Scripture, be it right or wrong, it is without further trial to be received as the very word of God. Est ipsissimum Dei verbum. (Hosius.)

Knowing that we shall receive the greater condemnation] sc. If either we become heresiarchs and sect masters, #Re 19:20, or supercilious censurers of others, #Mt 7:1 Ro 2:1.

{a} A leader or founder of a heresy. (ED)

Ver. 2. For in many things, &c.] This is triste mortalitatis privilegium, the sad privilege of mankind, as one phraseth it, to have leave to offend sometimes. Every pomegranate hath at least one rotten grain within it, saith Crates. And it is the honour of God alone to be perfect, saith Plato (Euphormio). Jerome pronounceth a curse upon him that shall say that the fulfilling of the whole law is impossible to any. But patres legendi cum venia; Jerome was out in this, and too to blame, μονου Θεου γερας εστι ειναι τετραγωνον. St James, a far better man than Jerome (for he was worthily called James the Just), affirmeth here of himself and other sanctified persons, We offend or stumble all, πταιομεν, impingimus omnes.

A perfect man] That is, a prudent man, #Ps 37:30,31.

Ver. 3. That they may obey us] Horses, asses, camels, elephants, God in great wisdom, for the use of man, hath made without galls, that they might with the more ease be made tame and serviceable.

Ver. 4. Whithersoever the governor] Peterent caelum Belgae si navibus peti posset, Ley them ask for the skys of Belge if it would be possible to reach them by ship, saith one (Johnston, de Nat. Constant.)

Ver. 5. Boasteth great things] Gr. μεγαλαυχει. It doth magnifically lift up itself, as an untamed horse doth his head. It exalts itself and exults of great things. It walketh through the earth, and faceth the very heavens, #Ps 73:9. It can run all the world over, and bite at everybody; being as a sharp razor, that doth deceit, that instead of shaving the hair cutteth the throat, #Ps 52:2. It is made in the shape of a sword; and David felt it as a sword in his bones, #Ps 42:10. It is thin, broad, and long, as an instrument most fit to empty both the speaker's and the hearer's heart. It is of a flame colour, as apt to set on fire the whole wheel of nature, #Jas 3:6.

Behold how great a matter] Or wood. Camerarius tells a story of two brethren walking out in a star light night. Saith one of the brethren, Would I had a pasture as large as this element; and said the other, Would I had as many oxen as there be stars. Saith the other again, Where would you feed those oxen? In your pasture, replied he. What? whether I would or no? Yea, said he, whether you will or no. What, in spite of me? Yes, said he. And thus it went on from words, till at length each sheathed his sword in the other's bowels.

Ver. 6. A world of iniquity] A newly found world. Not a city or country only, but "a world of iniquity," a sink, a sea of sin, wherein there is not only that Leviathan, but creeping things innumerable, #Ps 104:26.

So is the tongue among our members] For better purpose it was there set, sc. in the midst between the brain and the heart, that it might take the advice of both; and that we might verba prius ad limam revocare, quam ad linguam.

That it defileth the whole body] Leaving a stain upon the speaker, and setting a stain upon the hearer; even the guilt and filth of sin.

The course of nature] Gr. The wheel of our nativity. Their breath, as fire, devoureth, #Isa 33:10 "The poison of asps is under their lips," #Ro 3:13. The venomous heat of which deadly poison, like a fire in the flesh, killeth the wounded with torments, the likeliest hell of any other. In the holy tongue dabber signifieth a word, debher a pest; to show (saith one) that an evil tongue hath the pestilence in it.

And is set on fire of hell] That is, of the devil (called elsewhere the gates of hell), as the Holy Ghost (on the other side) set on fire the apostles' tongues with zeal, that flame of God, #So 8:6 Ac 2:3. Evil speech is the devil's drivel; a slanderer carries the devil's pack. He hath his name in Hebrew from footing it, trotting and tracing up and down to sow strife: Ragal, to defame or slander; regel, a foot. In Greek the same word signifieth a devil and a slanderer. The talebearer carrieth the devil in his tongue (saith one), the talehearer in his ear.

Ver. 7. For every kind of beasts, &c.] {See Trapp on "Heb 2:7"} Some creatures indeed may be taken, but not tamed, as the tiger, panther, monoceros, of which last it is testified, quod interimi potest, capi non potest; slain he may be, but not taken. Such unruly talkers and deceivers the Church is pestered with, #Tit 1:10 1Th 5:14; sons of Belial, untamable, untractable, untouchable, unteachable, #2Sa 23:6,7 1Sa 25:17.

Ver. 8. But the tongue, &c.] Where then are our justiciaries with their pretended perfection? David's heart deceived him #Ps 39:1 "I said, I will look to my ways, I will bridle my tongue." But presently after, he shows how soon he brake his word. "My heart was hot," &c., and "I spake with my tongue." Pambus, in the ecclesiastical history, could never take out that one lesson read him out of #Ps 39:1. There is one Bensus celebrated in the same ecclesiastical history for this (but I can hardly believe it), that he was never seen of any man to be angry, never beard to swear, or lie, or utter a vain word. (Sozomen, vi. 28.)

An unruly evil] There be but five virtues of the tongue reckoned by philosophers. But there are 24 different sins of the tongue, as Peraldus recounteth them. The Arabians have a proverb, Cave ne feriat lingua tua collum tuum; Take heed thy tongue cut not thy throat. An open mouth is often a purgatory to the master. {See Trapp on "Jas 3:6"}

Full of deadly poison] Such as poisoneth itself, and poisoneth at a distance, which no other poison doth. Some poisons are not poisonous to some creatures; storks feed upon serpents, ducks upon toads, &c. But the tongue is a universal poison, &c.

Ver. 9. Therewith bless we God] And so make our tongues our glory.

Therewith curse we men] Yea, the best of men; as Korah and his accomplices fear not to object to Moses the meek, with one breath, pride, ambition, and usurpation of authority. So Shimei cursed David, the pope curseth the Reformed Churches. But cursing men are cursed men; those detestable God-damn-mes especially, with their fearful self-damning imprecations, and innominate soul-damning oaths, God justly may, and doubtlessly doth, take many of them at their words, as he did those who wished they might die in the wilderness, #Nu 14:28,29.

Ver. 10. Out of the same mouth] As it did once out of the mouth of Pope Julius II, who in the battle of Ravenna on Easter Day, between him and the French, as he sat by the fire reading his prayers, and having news of the defeat, he flung away his book, saying, Sit ergo Gallus in nomine diabolorum, Let Gaul be in the name of the demons. The devil take the French. (Annal. Gallic.) Is not this that mouth that speaketh great things and blasphemies? #Re 13:5. A loaf of the same bran was that foul mouthed cardinal, who entering the city of Paris, and being met by the people who begged his blessing, blessed them at first; but when they came thicker upon him, and hindered his passage, he cursed them as fast; using these words, Quandoquidem hic populus vult decipi, decipiatur in nomine diaboli, i.e. Since this people will needs be deceived, let them be deceived in the devil's name. Os sceleratum et profanum! The mouth is wicked and imious! (Dr Prideaux, Lect.) Plutarch in Dion tells of a land about Athens, that brings forth the best honey and worst poison. In Polypidis capite bonum inest et malum. Lo, such is the tongue.

Ver. 11. Doth a fountain send forth] The fountain, or rather the botch, of sensual and sinful pleasures doth. Sin is a bitter sweet, γλυκυπικρον, the poison of asps, which first tickleth, and then killeth. All creature comforts are dulcis acerbitas, saith one. Amarissima volulptas, saith another, (Tertul.)

“ Principium dulce est, at finis amoris amarus;
Laeta venire Venus, tristis abire solet. ”

Ver. 12. Both yield salt water and fresh] That is strange that is reported of the rivers of Peru, that after they have run into the main sea, yea, some write 20 or 30 miles, they keep themselves unmixed with the salt water; so that a very great way within the sea men may take up as fresh water as if they were near the land. (Abbot's Geog.) But that is as sure as strange, that an eyewitness reporteth of the Danube and Sara (two great rivers in Hungary), that their waters meeting mingle no more than water and oil; so that near the middle of the river I have gone in a boat (saith mine author) and tasted of the Danube, as clear and pure as a well; then putting my hand not an inch farther, I have taken of the Sava, as troubled as a street channel, tasting the gravel in my teeth. Thus they run 60 miles together. (Blount's Voyage.)

Ver. 13. Who is a wise man] Not he that words it most; for multiloquio stultiloquium; foolish excessive talking and as any one is more wise, he is more sparing of his censures; but every fool will be meddling. Sapiens is est, cui res sapiunt prout sunt, saith Bernard (lib. iii. cap. 30). He is a wise man that judgeth aright of everything. And all the wisdom of a man is in this one thing, saith Lactantius, ut Deum cognoscat et colat, that he know and worship God.

With meekness of wisdom] As it is said of Athanasius, that he was high in worth and humble in heart; a loadstone in his sweet, gentle, drawing nature, and yet an adamant in his wise and stout deportment towards those that were evil. (Nazianzen in encom. Athan.) Jerome and Austin in their disputations, it was no matter who gained the day; they would both win by understanding their errors. What a sweet resolution was that of Calvin, Though Luther call me devil, yet I will honour him as a servant of God.

Ver. 14. Bitter envying] Properly so called; for it flows from the gall; it shows that the man is in the gall of bitterness, and of kin to the star called Wormwood, #Re 8:11. It is also an evil wherein is steeped the venom of all other vices. It is the observation of a late reverend divine, that, #Ge 38:29, Pharez was the son of Tamar, division, of a palm tree, which hath its name ab amaritudine, from bitterness, saith Pagnine. Division comes from bitterness, and envy drinks up the most part of its own venom. It infecteth also others with her venomous breath; as that maid mentioned by Avicen, who fed upon poison.

Glory not] viz. Of your wisdom.

Lie not against the truth] As if ye were true Christians, when in truth you are not so; Jesuits you may be (those great boufeans of the world), but Christians ye are none; ye have not so learned Christ.

Ver. 15. Earthly, sensual] Here is a true character of carnal wisdom; the world is a pearl in its eyes, it cannot see God. Earthly it is called, as managing the lusts of the eyes unto the ends of gain; sensual, managing the lusts of the flesh unto the ends of pleasure; and devilish, managing the pride of life unto the ends of power.

Ver. 16. For where envying and strife is, &c.] The number of two hath been therefore accounted accursed, because it was the first that departed from unity. Divisions (saith one) are like the torrid zone, nothing prospers under it. (Dr Rayner.) When the dogstar ariseth, no plants thrive as at other times. When a fire is kindled in a town, the bells ring backwards; when fires of contentions are kindled in places, all things go awry. (Mr Burr's Heart Divisions.)

Ver. 17. Easy to be entreated] Tractable, docile, not as horse and mule that must be ruled with rigour, not with reason, #Ps 32:9. Without partiality (or, without judging), without hypocrisy. These two stand fitly together; to note, that the greatest censurers are usually the greatest hypocrites; and as any one is more wise, he is more sparing of his censures.

Ver. 18. Is sown in peace] Only we must not think to sow and reap all in a day. By the fruit of righteousness may be meant the crown of righteousness, #2Ti 4:8, which Christ (the Prince of peace) shall put upon all the sons of peace, #Lu 10:6; as, in the mean time, they shall be called the sons of God, #Mt 5:9, have not only the comfort, but the credit, the name and note of such.

Chapter 4

Ver. 1. From whence come wars] That is, word wars, needless and endless strifes and contentions. The Greek word πολέμοι properly signifies quarrels that cause much bloodshed.

Among you] Being, 1. Brethren; and that one consideration should quash all quarrels; and should be like the angel that stayed Abraham's hand when the blow was coming. 2. Scattered brethren, #Jas 1:1; and should not misery breed unity? Is it not enough, that blows great store are dealt you by the common adversary, but your own must add to the violence? Surely all unkind and unchristian strifes would easily be composed, did we not forget that we are brethren and fellow sufferers.

Even of your lusts] Gr. ὀδοῶν, of your pleasures, for wicked men take pleasure in unrighteousness, it is their meat and drink, #Pr 4:17, they cannot sleep, nay, live without it, #Jas 4:16. Look how Tartarians feed upon carrion with as great delight as we do upon venison; as the Turkish galley slaves eat opium as if it were bread, and as the maid in Pliny fed on spiders, and digested them into nourishment; so do sensualists feed upon sin's murdering morsels, and swallow them down with delight.

Ver. 2. Ye lust and have not] viz. To the satisfying of your lusts; for that is an endless piece of work. Lust still cries Give, give; and is ever sick of a spiritual dropsy; the barren womb, the horseleech's daughter, the grave, is nothing to this gulf, to this curse of unsatisfiability.

Because ye ask not] He must be of a sedate spirit that prays to purpose. How shall we think God will hear us when we hardly hear ourselves? Married couples must agree, that their prayers be not hindered, #1Pe 3:7. There is no sowing in a storm; no taking medicine in a hot fit, as said before.

Ver. 3. Ye ask and receive not] Ye ask and miss, because ye ask amiss. It is the manner that makes or mars an action.

Ver. 4. Ye adulterers and adulteresses] You that have your hearts full of harlotry, that go a whoring from God after the creature, that mind only earthly things, #Php 3:19, and woo this Mundus immundus, this Propudium, this vile strumpet the world, that lays forth her two breasts of profit and pleasure, and ensnareth many; for the which she must be burnt, as a whore, by the fire of the last day.

Know ye not] Worldlings care not to know anything more than how to get, &c., their wits serve them not for better things; they cannot skill of these Scripture matters; they are brutishly ignorant of God and his will, of themselves and their duties.

Is enmity with God] That such both hate God, and, interchangeably, are hated of God.

Ver. 5. That the Scripture saith in vain] No, it doth not only say, but do; not only convince us that an evil and an envious spirit possesseth us (such a spirit as lusteth to have other men's abilities eclipsed, that so our candle might shine alone), but also it giveth more grace; it not only convinceth, but converteth the soul, #Ps 19:7. It causeth a man to rejoice heartily in the good parts of others; and this is more than to excel others in any excellence if this be wanting.

Ver. 6. But he giveth] Or, "it," that is, the Scripture "giveth," &c., transforming us into the same image, and conforming us to the heavenly pattern by the Spirit that breatheth in it.

God resisteth the proud] Gr. αντιτασσειται, "setteth himself in battle array against such," above all other sorts of sinners, as invaders of his territories, and foragers or plunderers of his chief treasures. Pray therefore to be preserved from the perilous pinnacle of self-exaltation. God defieth such as deify themselves; he knoweth them afar off, #Ps 138:6, he cannot abide the sight of them. Neither need we wonder, since (as Boetius well observeth) whereas all other vices fly from God, pride lets fly at him; yea, flies in his face, and seeks to dethrone him; as we see in that proud prince of Tyre, #Eze

28:2, who thought himself first wiser than Daniel, #Eze 28:3; then, that he exceeded the high priest in all his ornaments, #Eze 28:13; then, he thought himself to be above Adam, #Eze 28:13; then above the cherubims, #Eze 28:14; and lastly, he said he was God himself, and sat in the seat of God. So the pope, #2Th 2:4.

But giveth grace to the humble] Humility is both a grace, and a vessel to receive grace. God poureth the oil of his grace into broken vessels, contrite spirits.

Ver. 7. Submit yourselves therefore to God] Gr. υποταγητε, set yourselves under him, not above him; as the proud person doth, #Jas 4:6. Sit at his feet to receive his law, as scholars sat at the feet of their teachers, {#De 33:3} {See Trapp on "De 33:3"} obey him as your superior in all things; say to him, Iussa sequi tam velle mihi quam posse necesse est.

Resist the devil] i.e. Worldly and fleshly lusts stirred up by the devil, #Eph 4:26. Lust resisted is sin materially, not formally; for the guilt is done away, in that we do not allow it, but abhor it, as some are of the opinion. (Mr Capell on Tempt.)

And he will flee from you] He is but a coward therefore; for like the crocodile, if you follow him he fleeth, if you flee from him he followeth you. In all other fights, the first encounter is sharpest, but here, essiest; for the old serpent having his head bruised and crushed, cannot now so easily thrust in his mortal sting, unless we dally with him, and so lay ourselves open. Est Leo si fugias: si stas, quasi musca recedit.

Ver. 8. Draw nigh to God] viz. In duty, and he will draw nigh to you in mercy. Sanctify him, #Le 10:3, and he will satisfy you, #Ps 91:16. The very Turks are remorseless to those that bear up, but they receive humiliation with much sweetness.

Cleanse your hands] For there is no coming near God, #Jos 24:19. The very heathens knew this; and had therefore their coena pura before their solemn sacrifices; and the sacrificers were appointed to purify themselves some days before. (Godw. Antiq. Demosth.) We wash our hands every day; but, when to dine with some great man, we scour them with balls. God will be sanctified in all them that draw nigh to him, #Le 10:3, he will be served like himself, he will be no loser by us.

Ye double minded] Ye that have your hearts divided between two, and as it were cloven asunder. Out with the corruption that cleaveth to your hearts; and then there will be a constancy and an evenness in your mouths and manners.

Ver. 9. Be afflicted] ταλαιπωρησατε. or, Be miserable; ye are so, but see yourselves to be so. Or, afflict yourselves, viz. with voluntary sorrows for your sins. See that ye be active here.

And mourn] Savourly and soakingly, with a deep and downright sorrow, so as a man would do in the death of his dearest friend. The Greek word, πενθησατε, imports a funeral grief.

And weep] In judgment at least, and then, dry sorrow may go as far as wet, where tears will not come. But if it be possible, look not upon sin with dry eyes; point every sin with a tear.

Let your laughter be turned] Turn all the streams into this one channel, that may drive the mill, that may grind the heart. Meal was offered of old, and not whole corn.

And your joy to heaviness] κατηφεια, {a} such as makes a man hang down his head, and go heavily through grief and shame.

{a} Tristitia cum vultus demissione. Budaeus.

Ver. 10. Humble yourselves] He beats often upon this most needful but much neglected duty of humiliation, and all is little enough; there being nothing that more goes against the heart and the hair with us, than to go downward; and yet it must be done, or we are undone.

And he shall lift you up] The Lion of Judah rends not the prostrate prey. But as William the Conqueror ever held submission satisfactory for the greatest offences, and often received rebels into grace (Daniel's Chron.), so doth Christ much more. The sun in the morning gathereth clouds, but then it soon scattereth them again; so doth the Sun of righteousness cast men down, that he may raise them up again.

“ *Deiecit ut relevet, premit ut solatia praestet,
Enecat ut possit vivificare Deus.* ”

Ver. 11. Speak not evil, &c.] As Ezekiel’s hearers did of him "by the walls, and in the doors of the houses," #Eze 33:30, and as too many of ours do; for the which they will be full dearly accountable. The tale bearer hath the devil in his tongue, the tale hearer in his ear.

Speaketh evil of the law] Which flatly forbiddeth detraction. And as the strokes given upon the left side are felt upon the right, so it is here. The law is evil spoken of when a brother is evil spoken of.

And judgeth the law] As not severe enough, or as overly strait. Plato commendeth that law of the Lydians, that punisheth detractors like as they did murderers. There is a murder of the tongue also, #Eze 22:9.

Ver. 12. There is one lawgiver] What dost thou then do perking into his place, by censuring and defaming another; is not this to be a pope in thine own cause, exalting thyself above God, #2Th 2:4, or at least appealing from him to thyself?

Ver. 13. We will go into such, &c.] As if they were petty gods within themselves, and needed not to call God into counsel, or to take his leave along with them. But such confident exchange language became not the mouths of scattered exiles. And yet it is the common sin of dispersed Jews in all places to this day. And I would it were their sin only; and that this rude and rash peremptoriness were not in use among us also.

Ver. 14. Ye know not what, &c.] God delights to cross such vain boasters, and to confute their confidences, that speak and live as if their lives were riveted upon eternity. They might easily observe that many things happen between the cup and the lip, between the chin and the chalice. Ne gloriatur igitur accinctus quasi discinctus. Sell not the hide before ye have taken the beast. Who knows what a great bellied day may bring forth? #Pr 27:1. While a woman is yet with child, none can tell what kind of birth it will be, #Lu 12:16,17.

It is even a vapour] Thy breath is in thy nostrils, ever ready to puff out; at the next puff of breath thou mayest blow away thy life. Petrarch relates about a certain holy man, that being invited to a feast on the morrow, he answered, I have not had a tomorrow to dispose of this many a year; if you would have anything from me now, I am ready (lib. iii. Memor.). Mere man is but the dream of a dream, but the generation of a fancy, but a poor feeble, unable, dying flash, but the curious picture of nothing. Can a picture continue that is drawn upon the ice? What is man, saith Nazianzen, but soul and soil, breath and body (vous και χους, ex #Ge 2:7); a puff of wind the one, a pile of dust the other, no solidity in either? Surely every man in his best estate, when he is best underlaid, and settled upon his best bottom, is altogether vanity, #Ps 39:5. Two fits of an ague could shake great Tamerlane to death, in the midst of his great hopes and greatest power, when he was preparing for the utter rooting out of the Othoman family, and the conquest of the Greek empire. (Turk. Hist.) What is man's body but a bubble the soul the wind that filleth it? the bubble riseth higher and higher till at last it breaketh; so doth the body from infancy to youth, and thence to age. So that it is improper to ask when we shall die; but rather when we shall make an end of dying (said a divine); for first the infancy dieth, then the childhood, then the youth, then age, and then we make an end of dying. Should we then live and trade as if our lives were riveted upon eternity? To blame were those Agrigentines who did eat, build, &c., as though they should never die.

Ver. 15. If the Lord will, &c.] εαν Θεος εθελη. So Socrates taught Alcibiades to say, "If God will," &c. And another could say,

“ Nullius est felix conatus et utilis unquam, Consilium si non detque iuuetque Deus. ”

Ver. 16. In your boastings] Of long life and suitable success. God will shoot an arrow at such suddenly, #Ps 64:9, as he did at the rich fool, Nebuchadnezzar, Haman, Herod, Sennacherib, and other braggarts.

Ver. 17. To him that knoweth] Lest they should reply, we know all this, that except we live and God list, we can do nothing. Do ye know to do well, saith he, and do it not? this increaseth your guilt. Sin against knowledge is sin with an accent, wickedness with a witness, such as is not to be excused by any plea or colour. See #Joh 9:41. {See Trapp on "Joh 9:41"}

Chapter 5

Ver. 1. Go to now, ye rich men] Those rich wretches mentioned #Jas 2:6,7, that blasphemed God and oppressed men. Magna cognatio ut rei sic nominis, divitiis et vitiis.

Weep and howl] Better weep here, where there are wiping handkerchiefs in the hand of Christ, than to have your eyes whipped out in hell. Better howl with men than yell with devils.

That shall come upon you] Gr. επερχομεναις, that are even now stealing upon you.

Ver. 2. Your riches are corrupted] Being subject to vanity and violence, #Mt 6:19. See the note there. Provide yourselves therefore bags that wax not old; treasure that faileth not, &c., #Lu 12:33.

Ver. 3. And shall eat your flesh] i.e. With hell-fire, which shall consume your flesh, nay, your souls, with eternal torments. Some strong poison is made of the rust of metals; none worse than that of money.

For the last days] Wrath for the day of wrath; or store for old age, it being the old man's care, as Plutarch observes, οτι ουκ εξει θαφοντας και θρεφοντας, that he shall not have what to keep him while alive, and what to bury him honestly when dead.

Ver. 4. Kept back by fraud crieth] Bloodshed, #Ge 4:10, unnatural lust, #Ge 18:21, and oppression (whether by force or fraud), cry to God, and he will hear, for "he is gracious," #Ex 22:27. Oppression is a bony sin, #Am 5:12,13.

" Clamitat in caelum vex sanguinis, et Sodomorum, Vex oppressorum, et merces detenta laborum."

Lord of Sabaoth] Who hath all power in his hand, and can easily reach you.

Ver. 5. Ye have lived in pleasure] Ye have lain melting in sensual delights, which have drawn out your spirits, and dissolved them, τροφη, of θροπτω.

Upon earth] No place of pleasure to good men, but of purgatory, banishment, and bondage. A place of that nature, that (as it is reported of the Straits of Magellan) which way soever a man bend his course (if homeward) he is sure to have the wind against him. It was a heavy charge laid upon Dives, "Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime receivedst thy good things," #Lu 16:25.

And been wanton] Fulness breeds forgetfulness, #De 32:15. The word εσπαταλησατε properly signifies, Ye have petulantly skipped up and down, like young kids; ye are so wanton that ye know not whether to go on your heads or on your feet. This was the guise of these rich roiters.

As in a day of slaughter] For sacrifice; when they used to have good cheer, #Pr 7:14. And hereunto the wise man alludeth, #Pr 17:1. The apostle here seemeth to intimate that these rich sensualists lived upon the cream of sinning, and had such plenty that they picked out none but the sweetest bits to nourish their hearts also.

Ver. 6. Ye have condemned and killed] Take it either properly, or metaphorically of usurers and extortioners, that not only rob, but ravish the poor that are fallen into their nets, #Ps 10:9, that is, their bonds, debts, mortgages, as Chrysostom interpreteth it; there is neither equity nor mercy to be had at their hands; hence they are called meneaters, cannibals, &c. One saith there is more justice to be found in hell than here among men; for in hell no innocent person is oppressed.

And he doth not resist you] Meekness of spirit commonly draws on injuries and indignities from unreasonable men. A crow will stand upon a sheep's back, pulling off wool from her side, she dare not do so to a wolf or a mastiff. {a} Veterem ferendo iniuriam invitas novam. Bearing old wrongs encourages new ones.

{a} A large, powerful dog with a large head, drooping ears and pendulous lips, valuable as a watch-dog. CED
Ver. 7. Be patient therefore] q.d. You poor oppressed ones, hold out faith and patience. You shall shortly have help. As the mother's breasts ache to be sucklings so doth God's heart yearn to be helping.

Unto the coming of the Lord] sc. By particular deliverance; and not only by the general judgment. Let patience have line and rope.

Waiteth for the precious fruit] Being in novum annum semper dives, as the proverb is ever rich against the next year. Spes alit agricolas, Hope holds up the husbandman's heart.

And hath long patience] He looks not to sow and reap in a day, as the Hyperboreans are said to do, that sow shortly after the sunrising with them, and reap before the sun set; because the whole half year is one continual day with them. (Heresbach de re Rustic.)

Ver. 8. For the coming] See #Jas 5:7. And he when he comes shall set all to rights. We shall see so much reason in his proceedings, which now we comprehend not, that we shall yield him the "only wise God."

Ver. 9. Grudge not, &c.] μη στεναζετε, groan not, grumble not, grow not sour and sullen one to another.

Lest ye be condemned] As Sarah had been, if the Lord had come, as she desired him, to judge between her and her husband. The most guilty are commonly most querulous and complaining.

The judge standeth before the door] If the magistrate be present we may not offend another to defend ourselves. Ecce iudex pro foribus; therefore, Hold a blow, as we say.

Ver. 10. For an example of suffering] Examples very much affect us, as they did many of the martyrs. {See Trapp on "Mt 5:12"}

“ A bove maiori discit arare minor.”

Ver. 11. We count them happy] If they suffer as they should do, not else. Mithridates showed long patience, such as it was, forced and feigned. He was in a kind of fever called epialis, wherein men be cold without, but hot as fire within. This fever he quenched with his vital blood, shed with his own hand.

Ye have heard of the patience of Job] His impatience is not once mentioned against him; but he is crowned and chronicled here for his patience. God passeth by infirmities, where the heart is upright.

And have seen the end of the Lord] That is, how well it was with Job at the last. Or (as others will have it) what a sweet end the Lord Christ made; whereunto you were some of you eyewitnesses, and should be herein his followers.

And of tender mercy] Having for his motto that of the Emperor Rupert, Miseria res digna misericordia, Misery calleth for mercy.

Ver. 12. But above all things] Swear not in jest, lest ye go to hell in earnest. {See Trapp on "Mt 5:34"} {See Trapp on "Mt 5:35"} {See Trapp on "Mt 23:16"} {See Trapp on "Mt 23:18"} Swear not in your passion (the apostle is here exhorting them to patience) as the Jews did ordinarily, and, so it were by the creature, held it no great sin, #Mt 5:33 23:16. The swearer rends and tears God's name as a draper rasheth out a piece of cloth to the buyer. He makes his tongue a grenado to shoot out oaths and blasphemies sgainst heaven. He shall one day smart for it in his tongue as Dives did, and be worse punished than the French were in the days of Louis XI, who punished swearing by searing the lips of the swearer with a hot iron.

Ver. 13. Is any among you afflicted?] Any one may, for grace is no target against affliction.

Let him pray] Not only because prayer is suitable to a sad disposition, but because it is the conduit of comfort, and hath virtutem pacativam, a settling efficacy. Besides there is no time for hearing of prayers like the time of affliction. Then the saints may have anything of God with reason, for then his heart is turned within him, his repentings are kindled together, #Ho 11:8. See #Zec 13:9 Ps 91:15. Then it was that Lot had Zoar given him; David, the lives of his enemies; Paul, all the souls in the ship, &c. See the promise, #Ps 50:15.

Is any man merry?] Gr. εὐθυμει, is he right set, well hung on, as we say? All true mirth is from the rectitude of the mind, from a right frame of soul that sets and shows itself in a cheerful countenance.

Let him sing psalms] So that in all estates we must be doing somewhat for God. Tam Dei meminisse opus est, quam respirare. A Christian's whole life is divided into praying and praising, as David's Psalms are. If he begin with petition, he commonly concludes with thanksgiving. Thus, by a holy craft, he insinuates into God's favour, driving a trade between earth and heaven, receiving and returning, importing one commodity and transporting another.

Ver. 14. Is any man sick?] "Behold, he whom thou lovest is sick," said Martha to our Saviour, #Joh 11:3. Si amatur, quomodo infirmatur, saith Augustine. If Christ's friend, how comes he to be sick? Well enough; it is no new thing for Christ's best beloved to be much afflicted.

Let him send for the elders] This help God hath provided for such as are by sickness disabled to pray for themselves. Sick Abimelech was sent to Abraham (a prophet) for prayers.

Anointing him with oil] As an extraordinary sign of an extraordinary cure. From mistake of this text, the Church instead of pastors had ointers and painters in times of Popery, who did not only ungere, to annoint, but emungere, to wipe, anneal {inflame} men, but beguile them of their monies, and of their souls. Neither want there at this day, that hold this anointing the sick as a standing ordinance for Church members among us; and they tell of strange cures too effected thereby. I hope they aim better than Ptiugius and Sidonius, authors of that wicked piece called the Interim, did; for they defended the Popish chrism and extreme unction, ut ipsi discederent unctiores (as one saith), that they might get fat bishoprics thereby. The Popish ointment differeth much from St James's oil, used as an outward symbol and sign till miracles ceased. See #Mr 16:17 Ac 3:16. Proculus, a Christian, healed Severus the emperor on this wise, as Tertullian testifieth. (Advers. Scapulam.)

Ver. 15. And the prayer of faith] The Greek word for prayer hath its denomination from well pouring out the heart, or from well cleaving to God. {a} Afflictions (saith one) cause us to seek out God's promise, the promise to seek faith, faith to seek prayer, and prayer to find God.

They shall be forgiven him] And so he shall be cured on both sides. He shall be sure to have his prayer out, either in money or money's worth, his labour shall not be in vain in the Lord.

{a} ευχη παρα το ευ χρειν, vel or παρα το ευ εχσθαι του Θειου

Ver. 16. Confess your faults] To any such godly friend, as can both keep counsel and give counsel. Oftentimes the very opening of men's grievances easeth, the very opening of a vein cools the blood. Howbeit, it is neither wisdom nor mercy (saith a good divine) to put men upon the rack of confession, further than they can have no ease any way else. For by this means we raise a jealousy in them towards us, and often without cause; which weakeneth and tainteth that love that should unite hearts in one.

The effectual fervent prayer] Gr. ενεργουμενη, the working prayer, that sets the whole man to work to do it as it should be done, and so works wonders in heaven and earth, being after a sort omnipotent, as Luther said. The word rendered "effectual fervent," is by one rendered a thoroughly wrought prayer. An allusion he maketh it to cloth, or such like, which we use to say is thoroughly well wrought, or but slightly wrought.

Avaleth much] Jamblicus, a profane writer, hath such a commendation of prayer as might well beseem a better man. He calleth it clavem qua Dei penetralia aperiuntur, rerum divinarum ducem et lucem. (Lib. v. c. 27.) The key of God's treasury the guide to God. In the island called Taprobane; they sail not by any observation of the stars, they cannot see the north pole, but they carry birds along with them which they often let go, and so bend their course the same way, for the birds will make toward land. Let us often send up prayers to heaven, and let our hearts go along with them, and they will certainly speed. God will come, but he will have his people's prayers lead him; #Da 10:12, I came for thy word. He will help, but then we must work in prayer; and as a cart is stuck in a quagmire, if the horses feel it coming, they will pull the harder, so must we, when we find deliverance is coming, and that God is upon his way. Fervent prayer may fitly be resembled to the precious stone Pyrites, which if rubbed grows hot, and burneth the fingers; as, on the other side, dull prayers do little good, but are as the precious stone Diacletes, which having many virtues in it, loseth them all if put into a dead man's mouth, as naturalists tell us.

Ver. 17. Subject to like passions] For he fled at the threats of Jezebel, Factus seipso imbecillior, saith one; and he would have died, when under the juniper, discontented.

Ver. 18. And the earth brought forth] When the roots and fruits seemed all dried up, and the land past recovery. But prayer never comes too late, because God never doth.

Ver. 19. If any do err from, &c.] Err about fundamentals, fall into deadly heresy, damnable, Peter calleth it, #2Pe 2:1.

Ver. 20. Shall save a soul] A high honour to have any hand in such a work.

Cover a multitude] i.e. He shall be a means that God shall cover them.

1 Peter

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. To the strangers] That is, to the provincial Jews. {See Trapp on "Jas 1:1" } These strangers were (probably) those that came up to Jerusalem at Pentecost, and were converted by St Peter, #Ac 2:7-11,41, to whom therefore he here writes, as to newly born babes, #1Pe 2:2, and such as met with manifold afflictions for Christ's sake, #1Pe 3:14, &c. He exhorts them therefore to steadfastness in the faith and constancy in trial. Christ's young plants need watering.

Ver. 2. Through sanctification unto obedience] To the means as well as to the end, to sanctification as well as to salvation. Some there be (saith Mr Philpot in an epistle of his to the congregation) that for an extreme refuge in their evil doings, run to God's election, saying, If I be elected I shall be saved, whatever I do. But such be great tempters of God, and abominable blasphemers of his holy election; these cast themselves down from the pinnacle of the temple in presumption, that God may preserve them by his angels through predestination. God's election ought to be with a simple eye considered, to make us more warily walk according to his word, and not set cock in the hoop, and put all on God's back, to do wickedly at large. Thus he.

Grace unto you, and peace be multiplied] πληθυνθειη, or, enlarged to the utmost, filled up and accomplished. He prays for further measures, that they might be past the spoon and get to a well grown, fully grown age in Christ, #Eph 4:13, until they came to be fathers, gray headed, experienced Christians, such as the Psalmist speaketh of, #Ps 90:12-14.

Ver. 3. Blessed be the God] A stately proem, and such as can hardly be matched again, unless it be that of St Paul to the Ephesians, #Eph 1:3.

Unto a lively hope] Sure and solid, clearing the conscience, and cheering the spirit. Vivere spe vidi qui moriturus erat. If it were not for hope, the heart would break; as they do whose lives and hopes end together. True hope lives when the man dies. It hath for its motto, Dum expiro, spero. The righteous hath hope in his death, as St Stephen had; who

“Ibat ovans animis, et spe sua damna levabat,”

Went with good cheer to take his end. (Bembus.) And many of the holy martyrs went as willingly to die as ever they did to dine; they called it their wedding day. They knew it was but winking only, and they should be in heaven immediately; hence their invincible courage at the hour of death. The ungodly are not so; their hopes are dying hopes, they are no better than as the giving up of the ghost, #Job 11:20.

Ver. 4. Undefined, and that fadeth not] The two Greek words here used are also Latin; Amiantus is a precious stone (saith Dr Playfere out of Isidore), which though it be never so much soiled, yet it cannot be blemished. And Amaranthus is the name of a flower, which being a long time hung up in the house, yet still is fresh and green, as Clemens writeth (Paedagog. p. 8). To both these possibly the apostle might here allude: and it is as if he should say, The crown that you shall receive shall be studded with the stone Amiantus, which cannot be defiled; and it is garnished with the flower Amaranthus, which is fresh and green, &c.

Ver. 5. Who are kept] φρουρουμενοι, as with a guard, or as in a garrison, that is, well fenced with walls and works, and so is made impregnable.

By the power of God] Much seen in the saints' perseverance. "My Father is stronger than all; none therefore can take you out of my hands, since I and the Father are one," #Joh 10:29,30.

Ver. 6. Wherein ye greatly rejoice] Gr. αγαλλιασθε, ye dance for joy, ye dance a galliard, or as children do about a bonfire; ye cannot but express your inward joy in your countenance, voice, and gesture.

If need be, ye are in heaviness] When our hearts grow a grain too light, God seeth it but needful to make us heavy through manifold temptations. When our water (as it were) looks but a little too high, our heavenly Father, a physician no less cunning than loving (saith Bayn), doth discern it, and quickly fits us, whom he most tendereth, with that which will reduce all to the healthful temper of a broken spirit.

Ver. 7. That the trial of your faith] If affliction (which is the trial of our faith) be so exceeding precious, what is faith then, and the promises whereon faith lays hold? There are those who by the trial of faith understand here a well tried faith, which is called "gold tried in the fire," #Re 3:18.

Ver. 8. Whom having not seen] They had not been, belike, at the feast of the Passover (at which time our Saviour suffered), but came up to the feast of Pentecost, and were converted, #Ac 2:7-11,41.

And full of glory] Gr. δεδοξασμενη, glorified already; a piece of God's kingdom and heaven's happiness beforehand. Oh, the joy! the joy! the inexpressible joy that I find in my soul! said a dying saint.

Ver. 9. The end of your faith] The period and perfection, the reward and meed of it, in all fulness. See #Ps 19:12 Pr 22:4. Some grapes of Canaan God gave them beforehand, to sustain them, not to satisfy them.

Ver. 10. The prophets have inquired] This highly sets forth the weight and worth of it, since such men took such pains upon it. Base spirits are busied about light matters; as Domitian spent his time in catching flies, Artaxerxes in making knife hafts; not so Caleb, "who had another spirit, and followed God wholly," #Nu 14:24. So did the ancient prophets, as Isaiah: while the merry Greeks were taken up at their Olympic games in the year 1590 from the Flood, the prophet Isaiah seeth that heavenly vision of Christ sitting on his throne, and heareth that thrice happy Trisagion, #Isa 6:1-3. (Buchol. Chron.) And in this disquisition and scrutiny, the prophets with singular desire and industry exercised themselves, as the two compound Greek words, εκζητειν, εξερευναν, used in the next verse, do import.

Ver. 11. Searching what, &c.] ερευνωντες, with greatest sagacity and industry, as hunters seek for game, and as men seek for gold in the very mines of the earth.

The sufferings of Christ, &c.] Macarius was utterly out in saying that the prophets knew that Christ should be born for man's redemption, but that they knew nothing of his death and sufferings. Isaiah writes of them more like an evangelist than a prophet, and is therefore called the "evangelical prophet."

Ver. 12. Not unto themselves] In regard of the accomplishment of those oracles that they uttered; and yet to themselves, in regard of their right and interest therein.

They did minister] None must hold themselves too good to serve the saints.

The angels desire to look into] To look wishly and intently, as the cherubims of old looked into the mercy seat, #Ex 25:18,19. παρακωσαι, Prono capite et propenso cello accurate introspicere.

Ver. 13. Wherefore gird up, &c.] We are seldom comforted, but we have need to be exhorted. So apt are our hearts to security, and so apt is Satan to interrupt our joys with his base injections. How soon did Hezekiah fondly overshoot himself to the Babylonish ambassadors, after his sweet intercourse with God in holy duties! And how shamefully did Jonah forget himself and break out into a brawl with God, after his embassy faithfully discharged to the Ninevites, and the sweet comforts that came in to his soul thereupon!

Gird up the loins of your mind, &c.] Gird yourselves and serve God, #Lu 17:8. A loose, discinct, and diffluent mind is unfit for God's service. Girding implies, 1. Readiness; 2. Nimbleness, handiness, and handsomeness. The main strength of the body is in the loins. Therefore some say, the strong purposes and resolutions of the mind are here meant.

Hope to the end] Gr. τελειως, hope perfectly or entirely; q.d. do it not by halves; let there not be any odd reckonings between God and you, but work out your salvation, #Php 2:12. {See Trapp on "Php 2:12"}

For the grace] That is, for the glory.

That is to be brought unto you] It must be brought unto us (such is our dulness), we will scarcely go seek it, hardly be persuaded to live happily, reign everlastingly.

Ver. 14. Not fashioning yourselves] συσχηματιζομενοι. As a player is fashioned to the obscene speeches and carriages of him whom he is impersonating.

In your ignorance] Men may remain grossly ignorant amidst abundance of means, as these Jews did. "Who is blind but my servant? or deaf as my messenger?" &c., #Isa 42:19,20.

Ver. 15. In all manner of conversation] Our very civilities must savour of sanctity, and our common conversation relish of religion. St Paul's civil conversation, πολιτευμα, was in heaven, #Php 3:20. Holiness must be written upon our bridles when we war; upon our cups when we drink, #Zec 14:20,21. It is said of a certain Scotch divine, that he did even eat, and drink, and sleep eternal life.

Ver. 16. Be ye holy] i.e. Separate from sin, and dedicated to God, in conformity to whom stands our happiness. {See Trapp on "Mt 5:48"}

Ver. 17. Of your sojourning] παροικια inchoatns, commoratio. Having your commoration on earth, but your conversation in heaven. Fugiamus ad caelestem patriam, &c., could a heathen say.

In fear] Those that fear, of all others, are most likely to hold out, #Jer 32:40. It is a reverential, filial fear of God, as of a father, that is here required; causing us, 1. to have high and honourable conceptions of God in our hearts; "Sanctify the Lord God in your hearts, and let him be your dread, and fear ye him." 2. Making all honourable mention of him with our mouths, whether we speak to him, or of him, #Ec 5:1 De 28:58. Presume not in a sudden unmannerliness to blurt out the dreadful name of God; much less to blaspheme it, and bore it through with hideous oaths and imprecations. To speak evil of one's father was death by Plato's law as well as by God's law; and Suidas testifieth of the same Plato and other heathens, that when they would swear by their Jupiter, out of the mere dread and reverence of his name, they for bear to mention him; breaking off their oath with a Μα τον, as those that only dared to owe the rest to their thoughts. 3. Walking before him in our whole course with a holy bashful ness, being evermore in the sense of his presence and light of his countenance, in the "fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost," as those ancient Christians, #Ac 9:31.

Ver. 18. Ye were not redeemed with silver and gold] These are poor things to purchase a soul with (more likely they are to drown it in perdition and destruction, #1Ti 6:9). Our Saviour, who only ever went to the price of souls, tells us that one soul is more worth than a world, #Mt 16:26.

Received by tradition] Children are very apt to follow their parents' example, whether of good or evil. Me ex ea opinione quam a maioribus accepi de cultu Deorum, nullius unquam movebit oratio, saith Cicero, I will never forsake that way of di vine service that I have received from my fore fathers.

Ver. 19. Without blemish] Of original pollution.

And without spot] Of actual sin: or thus, without blemish, that is, sound within; and without spot, right in the outward parts. A lamb may be fair without that is rotten within. Christ was none such, but a complete sacrifice for sin.

Ver. 20. Who verily, &c.] So careful was God to make all sure concerning our redemption in Christ, saith one here.

Ver. 21. Might be in God] And so in a safer hand than our own; he hath laid help upon one that is mighty.

Ver. 22. Ye have purified] Animabus vestris castificatis. A metaphor from the legal purifications.

Ver. 23. Born again] A man shall never have occasion to curse the day of his new birth.

By the word of God] Made prolific and generative by the Spirit, #1Jo 3:9. It is the Father that regenerateth us originally, #Tit 3:5, the Son meritoriously and effectively, #Joh 14:19 Eph 5:26; the Holy Ghost consummately and applicatorily, through faith wrought and increased in us by the word and sacraments, #Jas 1:18 Ac 22:16 "Be baptized, and wash away thy sins," i.e. be renewed.

Ver. 24. All flesh is grass] To live is but to lie dying. Can a picture continue that is drawn upon the ice? Faenea quadam faelicitate temporaliter florent, saith Austin, after David, #Ps 37:2. The wicked flourish as grass, but they shall be cut down in their flourish.

Ver. 25. The Lord of the Lord, &c.] This sentence is the motto of the Dukes of Saxony. (Manlii, loc. com.) See #Ps 119:89. By the word of the Lord understand that which is written in cordibus, non in codicibus; in the heart, not in the book.

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. All malice and all guile] Out with this leaven utterly, #1Co 5:7. Howsoever we otherwise fail, let us not in these be found faulty at all. These are not the spots of God's children, #De 32:5. They are without gall, without guile, children that will not lie: they do not wallow or allow themselves in any kind of these evils; which are therefore plurally expressed.

Ver. 2. Desire the sincere] αδολον, as in children all speak and work at once, hands, feet, mouth. See David's desire, #Ps 42:1 119:20,40,131. The Greek word επιποθησατε signifieth vehemently to desire. See #Ro 1:11 2Co 5:2 Php 1:8 2:16.

The sincere] Gr. Guileless, unmixed milk, not sugared or sophisticated with strains of wit, excellency of speech, &c., #1Co 2:1.

That ye may grow thereby] After regeneration, #1Pe 1:23, augmentation. That word which breeds us, feeds us; as the same blood of which the babe is bred and fed in the womb, strikes up into the mother's breasts, and there, by a further concoction, becometh white, and nourisheth it. And as milk from the breast is more effectually taken than when it hath stood a while, and the spirits are gone out of it; so the word preached rather than read, furthereth the soul's growth. Let it be our care that we receive not the grace of God in vain; that we be not like the changeling Luther mentioneth, ever sucking, never batling; lest God repent him of his love and dry up the breasts; or send in the Assyrian to drink up our milk, #Eze 25:4; that we be not always learning, and never to know the truth, #2Ti 3:6, as ants run to and fro about a molehill, but grow not greater. A Christian should go from the word, as Moses did from the mount, as Naaman did out of Jordan, or as the woman of Samaria came to the well peccatrix, sinful, went away praedicatrix, preaching, saith Ambrose.

Ver. 3. If so be ye have tasted] As babes taste the milk they take down, #Isa 66:11. We are bidden to suck and be satisfied with the breasts of consolation, to press and oppress the promises, till we have expressed, and even wrung the sweetness out of them. This will make us even sick of love; our sleep will be pleasant unto us, and our hearts filled with gladness. The saints taste how good the Lord is, and thence they so long after him. Optima demonstratio est a sensibus, as he that feels fire hot, and that tastes honey sweet, can best say it is so.

Ver. 4. As unto a living stone] Living and all quickening, as #Ac 7:38. Lively, that is, lifegiving oracles. He that hath the Son hath life, #1Jo 5:12.

Disallowed indeed of men] For the cock on the dunghill knoweth not the price of this jewel.

And precious] Far beyond that most orient and excellent stone Pantarbe, celebrated by Philostratus (in Vita Apol.); or that precious adamant of Charles Duke of Burgundy, sold for 20,000 ducats and set in the pope's triple crown. (Alsted Chron.)

Ver. 5. Ye also as lively stones] God's house is built of growing stones, of green timber, #So 1:16,17

To offer up spiritual sacrifices] Such as are prayers, #Ps 141:2; praises, #Heb 13:15; alms, #Heb 13:16; ourselves, #Ro 12:1; our Saviour, whom we present as a propitiation for our sins, #1Jo 2:1, laying our hands on his head, seeing him bleed to death and consumed in the fire of his Father's wrath for our sins.

Ver. 6. Wherefore it is contained] The Jews were so well versed in Scripture, that in quoting of texts there was need to say no more to them than, It is written, It is contained, περιεχει, they could tell where to turn to the place presently; and this was a great furtherance to the conversion of many of them, by the preaching of the apostles. Many among us are better seen in Sir Philip than in St Peter: in Monsieur Balzack's letters than in St Paul's Epistles; like that bishop of Dunkelden in Scotland, they know little or nothing either of the Old or New Testament; and therefore one may preach riff raff, Popery, or any error unto them, and they know not how to disprove it.

Shall not be confounded] The Hebrew text hath it, "shall not make haste," #Isa 28:16. Haste makes waste, as we say, and often brings confusion. Children pull apples before they are ripe, and have worms bred of them.

Ver. 7. He is precious] Gr. τιμη, he is a price, or an honour. If you had not found all worth in him, you would never have sold all for him.

Ver. 8. And a rock of offence] Like that rock #Jud 6:21, out of which comes fire to consume the reprobate.

Which stumble at the word] An ill sign, and yet an ordinary sin. A bridge is made to give us a safe passage over a dangerous river; but he who stumbleth on the bridge is in danger to fall into the river. The word is given as a means to carry us over hell into heaven; but he who stumbles and quarrels at this means, shall fall in thither, from whence otherwise he had been delivered by it. Few sins are more dangerous than that of picking quarrels at God's word, and taking up the bucklers against it, snuffing at it, #Mal 1:13; chatting against it, #Ro 9:19,20; enviously swelling against it, #Ac 13:45; casting reproaches upon it, #Jer 20:8,9; gathering odious consequences from it. Surely of such a man may say, as one doth of a hypocrite; I read not in Scripture, saith he, of a hypocrite's conversion; and what wonder? for whereas after sin, conversion is left as a means to cure all other sinners; what means to recover him who hath converted conversion itself into sin? so here; what hope that he shall be saved who stumbleth at the only ordinary means of his salvation?

Ver. 9. But ye are a chosen generation] A picked people, the dearly beloved of God's soul; such as he first chose for his love, and then loves for his choice.

A royal priesthood] Or as Moses hath it, #Ex 19:6, a kingdom of priests. Priests God's people are in respect of God, kings in respect of men. The righteous are kings: "many righteous men have desired," &c., saith Matthew, #Mt 13:17 "many kings," saith Luke, #Lu 10:24. Indeed they are somewhat obscure kings here, as was Melchizedek in the land of Canaan; but princes they are in all lands, #Ps 45:16, and more excellent than their neighbours, let them dwell where they will, #Pr 12:26.

A peculiar people] Gr. λαος εις περιποιησιν, a people of purchase: such as comprehend, as it were, all God's gettings, his whole stock that he makes any great reckoning of.

Show forth the praises] Gr. εξαγγελητε, preach forth the virtues by our suitable practice. The picture of a dear friend should be hung up in a conspicuous place of the house; so should God's holy image and grace in our hearts.

“ Vile latens virtus; quid enim submersa tenebris Proderit?” (Claud.)

Jerome said that he did diligere Christum habitantem in Augustino, love Christ dwelling in Austin. So ought we to walk, that others may see and love Christ dwelling in us. He is totus desiderabilis, saith the spouse in the Canticles, #So 5:16, all over desirable; and there is in him that which may well attract all hearts unto him.

Ver. 10. Which in time past were not] If Plato thought it such a mercy to him that he was a man and not a woman, a Grecian and not a barbarian, a scholar to Socrates and not to any other philosopher, what exceeding great cause have we to praise God that we are born Christians, not Pagans, Protestants, not Papists, in these blessed days of reformation, &c.

Ver. 11. As pilgrims and strangers] Excellently doth Justin Martyr describe the Christians of his time: they inhabit their own countries, saith he, but as strangers; they partake of all as citizens, and yet suffer all as foreigners; every strange land is a country to them, and every country a strange land. (Epist. ad Diog.)

And strangers abstain] Thoughts of death will be a death to our lusts, #La 1:9. Her filthiness is in her skirts, and all because she remembereth not her last end. As the stroking of a dead hand on the belly cureth a tympany, and as the ashes of a viper applied to the part that is stung draws the venom out of it; so the thought of death is a death to sin.

From fleshly lusts] Those parts in our bodies that are the chiefest and nearest both subjects and objects of lust and concupiscence, are like unto the dung gate, #1Ch 26:16 Ne 3:13, whereby all the filth was cast out of the temple. God hath placed them in our bodies, like snakes creeping out of the bottom of a dunghill, and abased them in our eyes, that we might make a base account and estimation of the desires thereof, as one well observeth.

Which war against the soul] Only man is in love with his own bane (beasts are not so), and fights for those lusts that fight against the soul. And whereas some might say that other lusts fight against the soul, as well as fleshly lusts, it is answered that other lusts fight against the graces, but these more against the peace of the soul. (Capell on Temptation.) Take we up therefore that motto of Otho II, Pacem cum hominibus, cum vitiis bellum; Let us quarrel with our faults and not with our friends.

Ver. 12. Having your conversation honest] Leading convincing lives, the best arguments against an atheist adversary.

They speak evil of you] {See Trapp on "Mt 5:11"}

Which they shall behold] Whiles they pry and spy into your courses (as the Greek word επιπτευοντες imports) to see what evil they can find out and fasten on.

In the day of visitation] When God shall effectually call and convert them. {See Trapp on "Mt 5:16"}

Ver. 13. Submit to every ordinance] That is, although the ordinance or government in the manner of its constitution be from man, yet because of the necessity of its institution it is from God; submit to it, though of man, for the Lord's sake. (Fuller's Answer to Dr Fern.) For although it is called here man's creature or ordinance, either in respect of man the subject, by whom it is exercised, or man the object, about whom it is conversant, or of man the end, to whose emolument it tendeth; yet it is still the gift and institution of God, the primary author and provident ordaiuer. A Deo sane est sive iubente, sive sinente, Of God it is surely, either so commanding or so suffering it to be, saith Augustine (contra Faust. Man xxii. 7.).

Ver. 14. Or unto governors] In the kingdom of Christ, this is wonderful, saith Zanchy, that he wills and commands all princes and potentates to be subject to his kingdom, and yet he wills and commands likewise that his kingdom be subject to the kingdoms of the world.

Ver. 15. Ye may put to silence] Gr. φμουv, muzzle, or halter up, button up their mouths, as we say. {See Trapp on "Mt 22:34"}

It is an old fetch of the devil to persuade the world that faithful people are antimagistratical; these must be powerfully confuted by our contrary practice.

Ver. 16. As free] {See Trapp on "Ga 5:13"}

As free, and not using, &c.] Free in respect of our consciences, exempted from human powers, and yet, as servants of God, bound in conscience to obey him in obeying them, so far forth as he doth command us to obey them. (Downname.)

For a cloak] Or cover. This were to put light not under a bushel, but under a dunghill. Beza thinks the apostle here alludes to that old custom at Rome, that those that were manumitted or set free should go with their heads covered, who before used to go bareheaded. Religion is an ill cloak of maliciousness; and will surely serve hypocritical libertines as the disguise Ahab put on and perished.

Ver. 17. Honour all men] As made in the image of God, as capable of heaven, and as having some special talent to trade with.

Honour the king] i.e. the Roman emperor, who disclaimed the name of a king to avoid the hatred of the people, and yet sought the full right of kings, and so to destroy the liberty of the people. But kings that will be honoured must be just, "ruling in the fear of God," #2Sa 23:3.

Ver. 18. To the froward] Cross, crooked, trample, foolish. Tortuosus, curvis. The Greek word σκολιος comes of a Hebrew word סכל that signifies a fool.

Ver. 19. This is thankworthy] τουτο γαρ χαρις εστι. God accounts himself hereby gratified, as it were, and even beholden to such sufferers, this being the lowest subjection and the highest honour men can yield unto their Maker. God will thank such, which is condescensio stupenda, a wonderful condescension.

Ver. 20. For what glory is it] In peace offerings there might be oil mixed, not so in sin offerings. In our sufferings for Christ there is joy; not so when we suffer for our faults.

Ver. 21. Leaving us an example] Gr. υπογραμμον, a copy or pattern. Christ's actions were either moral, or mediatory. In both we must imitate him. In the former, by doing as he did. In the latter, by similitude, translating that to our spiritual life, which he did as mediator; as to die to sin, to rise to righteousness, &c., and this not only by example (as Petrus Abelardus held of old, and the Socinians at this day), but by virtue of Christ's death and resurrection working effectually in all his people i not as an exemplary cause only, or as a moral cause by way of meditation, but as having force obtained by it, and issuing out of it, even the Spirit that kills sin, and quickens the soul to all holy practice. There is a story of an earl called Eleazar, a passionate prince, that was cured of that disordered affection by studying of Christ and his patience. Crux pendentis cathedra docentis, Christ upon the cross is a doctor in his chair, where he reads unto us all a lecture of patience. The eunuch, #Ac 8:32, was converted by this praise in Christ. It is said of Jerome, that having read the godly life and Christian death of Hilarion, he folded up the book, and said, Well, Hilarion shall be the champion whom I will follow. (In Vita eius apud Surium.) Should we not much more say so of Christ?

Ver. 22. Who did no sin] St Paul saith, "He knew no sin," #2Co 5:21, to wit, with a practical knowledge (we know no more than we practise); with an intellectual he did, for else he could not have reprov'd it.

Neither was guile found in his mouth] Which imports that they sought it. The wicked seek occasion against the godly.

Ver. 23. But committed himself] Or, the whole matter. We also shall do ourselves no disservice, by making God our chancellor, when no law else will relieve us. And indeed the less a man strives for himself, the more is God his champion. He that said, I seek not mine own glory, adds, But there is one that seeketh it, and judgeth. God takes his part ever that fights not for himself.

Yet. 24. Who his own self] Without any to help or uphold him, #Isa 63:5; he had not so much as the benefit of the sunlight, when in that three hours' darkness he was set upon by all the powers of darkness.

Bare our sins] Gr. ἀνηνεγκεν, bare them aloft, viz. when he climbed up his cross, and nailed them thereunto. "Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows," #Isa 53:4. He "taketh away the sins of the world," #Joh 1:29.

That we being dead to sins] απογενομενοι, or, separated from sin, or uumade to it, cut off from it, the old frame being utterly dissolved.

By whose stripes] Or, welts. This he mentioneth to comfort poor servants, whipped and abused by their froward masters. Sanguis medici factus est medicina phrenetici . The physician's blood became the sick man's salve. We can hardly believe the power of sword salve. But here is a mystery that only Christian religion cau assure us of, that the wounding of one should be the cure of another. Ver. 25. As sheep] Than the which no creature is more apt to stray, less apt and able to return. The ox knoweth his owner, &c.

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. Be in subjection to your husbands] Yet with a limitation: subject the wife must be to her husband's lawful commands and restraints. It is too much that Plutarch lays as a law of wedlock on the wife, to acknowledge and worship the same gods, and none else but those whom her husband doth. Serena the empress suffered martyrdom under her cruel husband Diocletian; and Elizabeth, wife of Joachimus, the Prince Elector of Brandenburg, was forced to flee to the court of Saxony, A. D 1527, from the perpetual imprisonment provided for her by her Popish husband (for receiving the sacrament of the Lord's supper in both kinds), and died in banishment. (Luther in Epistol.)

Be won by the conversation] κερδηθησονται, i.e. Be prepared for conversion, as Austin's father and himself were, by the piety of his mother Monica. The Greek word for won signifieth gained, εποπτευοντες; and seems to allude to those good servants, #Mt 25:20-23, who traded their talents, and doubled them with their good husbandry.

Ver. 2. Whiles they behold] Curiously pry into. Carnal men watch the carriages of professors, and spend many thoughts about them.

Your chaste conversation] When Livia the empress was asked how had she got such a power over her husband that she could do anything with him? She answered, Multa modestia, By my much modesty. (Dio in Aug.) A prudent wife commands her husband by obeying.

Coupled with fear] Not slavish fear of blows, but reverent fear: 1. Of offending God, by using unlawful means to get their husband's love, as by plaiting of the hair, &c. 2. Of offending their husbands by immodesty or frowardness.

Ver. 3. Whose adorning] Mundus muliebris. A woman's world. See #Isa 3:18. Where the prophet as punctually inveighs against this noble vanity, as if he had viewed the ladies' wardrobes in Jerusalem.

Let it not be that outward] Vestium curiositas, deformitatis mentium et morum indicium est, saith Bernard. Excessive neatness is a sign of inward nastiness. It was a true saying of wise Cato, Cultus magna cura, magna est virtutis iniuria, They are never good that strive to be overly fine. Superfluous apparel, saith Cyprian, is worse than whoredom. Lysander would not suffer his daughters to wear gorgeous attire; saying it would not make them so comely as common.

Ver. 4. But let it be the hidden] Vestite vos serico pietatis, byssino sanctitatis, purpura pudicitiae. Taliter pigmentatae Deum habebitis amatorem. It is Tertullian's counsel to young women, Clothe yourselves, saith he, with the silk of piety, with the satin of sanctity, with the purple of modesty; so shall you have God himself to be your suitor. (Lib. de Cult. Fem.) Plutarch speaks of a Spartan woman, that when her neighbours were showing their apparel and jewels, she brought out her children, virtuous and well taught, and said, These are my ornaments and jewels. {#Tit 2:4} In that which is not corruptible] Or, In the incorruption of a meek and quiet spirit, &c., a garment that will never be the worse for wearing, but the better. Some wives may seem to have been molten out of that salt pillar into which Lot's wife was transformed; these, as they please not God, so they are contrary to all men.

Of great price] God makes great reckoning of a quiet mind, because it is like himself. He promiseth earth to the meek, and heaven to the incorrupt or sincere, and pure in heart.

Ver. 5. Who trusted in God] And therefore would not by unlawful means seek to get or keep their husband's love and favour; but trusted God for that. So Hezekiah trusted in God, and pulled down the brazen serpent, #2Ki 18:4,5, opposing his presence to all peril.

Ver. 6. Calling him lord] See here, how in a great heap of sin, God can find out his own, and accept of it. There was no good word in all the whole sentence, but this, that she called her husband lord. God is pleased to single out this, and set it as a precious diamond in a gold ring to Sarah's eternal commendation. So, #Heb 11:31, mention is made of Rahab's entertaining the spies, and not of the lie she told: God lays the finger of mercy on the scars of our sins, as that limner {a} in the story.

And are not afraid, &c.] Fear they must, #1Pe 3:2, and yet they must not. Fear God, but not their husband's undeserved checks or threats for obeying God. One fear must expel another, as one fire drives out another.

{a} A painter, esp. a portrait painter. ÆD

Ver. 7. Likewise ye] Officium ascendit, amor descendit.

According to knowledge] Where should wisdom be but in the head? This must be showed Uxoris vitium aut tollendo, aut tolerando, said Varro, either by curing or at least covering his wife's weaknesses.

As unto the weaker vessel] Glasses are to be tenderly handled; a small knock soon breaks them. So here. Vipera virus ob venerationem nuptiarum evomit, saith Basil, The viper, for the honour of coupling with his mate, casts up his poison; et tu duritiam animi, tu feritatem, tu crudelitatem ob unionis reverentiam non deponis? and wilt not thou for the honour of marriage cast away thy harshness, roughness, cruelty to a consort?

As being heirs] Souls have no sexes, #Ga 3:28.

That your prayers be not hindered] Isaac prayed in the presence of his wife. This course of praying together, apart from others, being taken up by married couples, will much increase and spiritualize their affection one to another. But jarring will make them leave praying, or praying leave jarring.

Ver. 8. Be courteous] Gr. φιλοφρονες, friendly minded, ready to any good office. Christianity is no enemy to courtesy, but includes it. See the practice of it in Abraham and the Hittites, Boaz and his reapers, the angels' and apostles' salutations, the primitive Christians' holy kiss, in use in Irenaeus's time, and Tertullian's, till taken away from the abuse it grew rote; as likewise their love feasts.

Ver. 9. Railing for railing] Convitium convitio regerere, quid aliud est quam lutum luto purgare? saith one. To render railing for railing, is to think to wash off dirt with dirt.

That ye should inherit a blessing] Blessings by words, properly, ευλογιαν. They that will speak good words to men, shall hear good words from God; they shall have his good word for them in all places, and in the hearts of their greatest enemies, as Jacob and Job had.

Ver. 10. Love life] Man is ζων φιλοζων, a creature that loves life, saith Aristotle. Who is the man that willeth life? saith David, #Ps 34:12. And hereunto every man will be ready to answer, Ego, I do, as Austin observeth. But when the condition shall be added, Cohibe linguam, &c., Refrain thy tongue, &c., then, saith he, scarce any will appear or accept the motion.

And see good days] That is, prosperous and peaceable days; for all the days of the afflicted are evil, #Pr 15:15, a joyless life is no life. Rebecca was weary of her life, and so was Elijah when he sat under the juniper. Multi etiam magni viri sub Eliae iunipero sedent. For many great men have sat under Elijah's juniper tree. It is many a good man's case.

Ver. 11. Seek peace and ensue it] A contentious man never lacks woe. Ut habeas quietum tempus, perde aliquid, was a proverb at Carthage, as Austin relates it; Et concedamus de iure ut careamus lite. For a quiet life let a man part with his right sometimes.

Ver. 12. For the eyes of the Lord] Should not God see as well as hear, his children should want many things. We apprehend not all our own wants, and so cannot pray for relief of all. He, of his own accord, without any monitor, is wont to aid us.

His ears are open unto, &c.] Gr. His ears are unto their prayers; q.d. though their prayers are so faint that they cannot come up to God, God will come down to them. He can feel breath, when no voice can be heard, #La 3:56. Fletu saepe agitur non affatu.

Ver. 13. And who is he that will, &c.] Natural conscience cannot but do homage to the image of God stamped upon the natures and works of the godly; as we see in the carriage of Nebuchadnezzar and Darius toward Daniel. I have known some (saith Mr Bolton) the first occasion of whose conversion was the observation of their stoutness under wrongs and oppressions, whom they have purposely persecuted with extremest hate and malice.

Ver. 14. But and if ye suffer] q.d. Say you meet with such unreasonable men, made up of mere incongruities and absurdities, that will harm you for well doing, yet you shall be no losers, #2Th 3:3.

Ver. 15. Sanctify the Lord God] Consider and conceive of him, as he stands described in the Scriptures, and as related to his people, resting upon his power and love, for safety here, and salvation hereafter.

Ready always to give an answer] Gr. To make apology, a bold and wise profession of the truth, with due observation of just circumstances. To dissemble is ever a fault; but not to profess is then only a fault, when a man is silent, Intempestive et loco minime idoneo, at an unfit time and place. Let me be counted and called proud, or anything, Mode impii silentii non arguar, said Luther, so I be not guilty of a sinful silence.

To every man that asketh] Christians should in this case stay till they are asked. Cyprian reproveth the rashness of those in his time, that would go of their own accord to the heathen magistrates, professing themselves Christians; whereby they were put to death. This made one of the persecutors cry out, O miseri, si libet perire num vobis rupes aut restes desunt? O wretches, can ye find no way else to despatch yourselves, but that I must be thus troubled with you Christ, saith Cyprian, would have us rather confess than profess our religion, Now, he confesseth, that doth it being asked; as he professeth, that doth it of his own free accord.

A reason of the hope] Not every trifling question or malicious cavil. Christ answered the governor not a word to some things, and yet he witnessed a good confession before Pontius Pilate, #1Ti 6:13.

With meekness and fear] Lest you should dishonour a good cause by an ill carriage. Austin professeth this was that which heartened him, and made him to triumph in his former Manichism, that he met with feeble opponents, and such as his nimble wit was easily able to overturn. Carolostadius also had the right on his side, but was not able to make it out and maintain it against Luther.

Ver. 16. Having a good conscience] Which you cannot have if you deny or but dissemble the truth. George Marsh, martyr, being examined before the Earl of Derby, kept himself close in the point of the sacrament. But after his departure, thus he writes: I departed much more troubled in my spirit than before, because I had not with more boldness confessed Christ, but in such sort as mine adversaries thereby thought they should prevail against me; whereat I was much grieved, for hitherto I went about, as much as in me lay, to rid myself out of their hands, if by any means, without openly denying Christ and his word, that could be done. (Acts and Mon.)

As of evildoers] Malefactors, not martyrs.

They may be ashamed that falsely accuse] This is an excellent way of stopping an open mouth. Oh, these real apologies are very powerful. Thus did the primitive Christians plead for themselves, Non aliunde noscibiles quam de emendatione vitiorum pristinorura, saith Tertullian (ad Scapulam), known from all others by their reformed lives. Thus did those old Protestants the Waldenses; In moribus sunt compositi et modesti, &c., said that Popish inquisitor their professed adversary. Their doctrine, said he, is naught, but their lives are unblameable. The man's life (saith Erasmus concerning Luther) is approved of all men; his worst adversaries cannot accuse him of anything in point of practice. Louis king of France, having received certain complaints against the Protestants of Merindol and Chabriers, sent certain to inquire into the business, and hearing what they related to him, he swore a great oath that they were better men than either himself was, or any other of his subjects. (A.D. 1513.)

That falsely accuse your good conversation] We should so carry ourselves, saith Jerome, ut nemo de nobis male loqui absque mendacio possit, that no man might speak evil of us without a manifest lie. Nec hostes reperiant quod calumnientur.

Ver. 17. That ye suffer for well doing] The cause, and not the pain, makes the martyr. Together with the Lord Cromwell was beheaded (in Henry VIII's time) the Lord Hungerford, neither so Christianly suffering, nor so quietly dying for his offence committed against nature. (Speed's Chron.) What a sad thing was that related by Eusebius, that the cruel persecution under Diocletian was occasioned chiefly by the petulance, pride, and contentions of the pastors and bishops! which gave occasion to the tyrant to think that Christian religion was no better than a wretched device of wicked men. Lactantius to the like purpose crieth out, Nunc male audiunt castiganturque vulgo Christiani, quod aliter quam sapientibus convenit vivant, et vitia sub obtentu nominis celent: Christians are hardly spoken of, and deeply censured by the common people, because they live not as becometh wise men; but cover their vices under pretence of their religion. (De Opific. Dei, Proaem.)

Ver. 18. That he might bring us] To reconcile and bring men again to God was the main end of Christ's coming and suffering. This is the wonderment of angels, torment of devils, &c.

The just for the unjust] Oh, the vile dulness of our hearts, that cannot be duly affected herewith! Behold, here was piety scourged for the impious man's sake, wisdom derided for the fool's sake, truth denied for the liar's sake, justice condemned for the unjust man's sake, mercy afflicted for the cruel man's sake; life dies for the dead man's sake. What a suffering was that, when the Just suffered for the unjust, with the unjust, upon unjust causes, under unjust judges, and by unjust punishments, &c. Euripides saith it is but righteous that they that do things not good should suffer things not pleasant; but what had that innocent "Lamb of God" done?

Ver. 19. He went and preached] Righteousness, i.e. repentance, #2Pe 2:5, and the faith of the gospel, #1Pe 4:6, whereby some of those many that perished in the waters arrived at heaven, Nunquam sero, si serio. Christ went to them as an ambassador sent by his Father, and spake to their hearts.

Ver. 20. Which sometimes were disobedient] Gr. unpersuadable, uncounsellable. They jeered where they should have feared, and thought Noah no wiser than the prior of St Bartholomew's in London, who upon a vain prediction of an idle astrologer, went and built him a house at Harrow on the Hill, to secure himself from a supposed flood, foretold by that astrologer. (Holinshed.)

Ver. 21. Baptism doth also now save] It is of permanent use, and effectual to seal up salvation whensoever a man believes and repents. Hence we are once baptized for all. See #Eph 5:26 Tit 3:5. The pope's decree says, that confirmation is of more value than baptism, and gives the Holy Ghost more plentifully and effectually. How fitly might the gloss have set upon this decree Palea, or Hoc non credo, as they use to do, when anything in the decrees pleaseth them not!

Not the putting away] That none bear himself bold upon his Christendom. Unregenerate Israel is to God as Ethiopia, #Am 9:7. A man may go to hell with baptismal water on his face.

But the answer] επερωτημα, the stipulation, or confident interrogation, such as is that of the apostle, #Ro 8:33-35, and of Jeremiah pleading with God, #Jer 12:1, and reasoning the case with him. David from his circumcision promised himself victory over that uncircumcised Philistine; so may we from our baptism, against all spiritual wickednesses; bring but this confident answer of a good conscience, and the devil will never be able to abide by it. Luther maketh mention of a certain holy virgin, who usually quenched the devil's fiery darts with the water of baptism. For whensoever he tempted her to evil, she confidently answered Christiana sum, I am a Christian, I have been baptized, and therein promised to renounce the devil and all his works. {a} For to that custom of asking the party to be baptized, and taking his answer (Credis? credo; abrenuncias? abrenuncio), the apostle seemeth here to allude; or, as others are of the opinion, to the manner of John's baptism, wherein people confessed (renounced) their sins, and asked him what they should do, #Lu 3:10.

{a} Intellexit hostis statim virtutem baptismi, &c., et fugit ab ea. Luther.

Ver. 22. Angels and authorities] #Ps 68:17. The word rendered angels signifieth seconds, as being second to Christ, or next to him. See #Da 10:13.

Chapter 4

Ver. 1. Christ hath suffered] As #1Pe 3:18.

In the flesh] In human nature; so must we suffer in sinful nature, subduing it to God, and ceasing from sin, hailing it and nailing it to the cross of Christ. First have sin to the cross of Christ; force it before the tree on which he suffered: it is such a sight as sin cannot abide. It will begin to die within us upon the first sight of Christ upon the cross. For the cross of Christ accuseth sin, shameth it, and by a secret virtue feedeth upon the very heart of it. 2. Use sin as Christ was used when he was made sin for us; lift it up, and make it naked by confession to God. And then pierce, 1. The hands of it, in respect of operation, that it may work no more. 2. The feet of it, in respect of progression, that it go no further. 3. The heart, in respect of affection, that it may be loved no longer.

Ver. 2. That he no longer, &c.] To spend the span of his transitory life after the ways of one's own heart is to perish for ever.

Ver. 3. For the time past of our life may suffice us] We may every one say with Austin, Nimis sero te amavi Domine. It should be a burden to our souls that we begin no sooner to love God.

In lasciviousness, lusts, &c.] The true picture of a pagan conversation, which yet is too common among those that call themselves Christians. The world is now grown perfectly profane, and can play on the Lord's day without book; making it as Bacchus' orgies, rather than God's holy day, with piping, dancing, drinking, drabbing, &c. We may say as once Alsted of his Germans, that if the Sabbath Day should be named according to their observing of it, Daemoniacus potius quam Dominicus diceretur, it should be called not God's day, but the devil's.

Excess of wine] οἰνοφλυγίας, or, red and rich faces, as they call them.

Revellings] κωμοις, stinks, saith the Syriac; drunkards are stinkards; as Luther called the Swenckfeldians, stink-feldians, from the ill savour of their opinions. Tacitus tells us that among the old Germans, it was no disgrace counted to continue drinking and spewing night and day, Diem noctemque continuare potando.

Banquetings] Gr. ποτοις, compotations, or good fellow meetings; some render it bibbings, sippings, tipplings, sitting long at it, though not to an alienation of the mind. How much more when they leave not till they have drank the three "outs" first; viz. Wit out of the head, money out of the purse, and ale out of the pot!

And abominable idolatries] Some idolatries then, say the Papists, are not abominable. A sweet inference. That all Papists are idolaters, Dr Reynolds hath plainly and plentifully proved in his learned work De idololatria Romana, never yet answered. Weston writeth that his head ached in reading it. But what a poor shift is that of Vasquez, expressly to maintain that the second commandment belonged to the Jews only; as holding it impossible to answer our arguments against their image worship? Other Popish writers utterly disannul the second commandment, making it a member of the first; and so, retaining the words, they destroy the sense and interpretation.

Ver. 4. They think it strange] Gr. ξενιζονται. That they think it a new world, marvelling what is come to you of late. It is I, said the harlot; but it is not I, said the convert, At ego non sum.

Into the same excess] Gr. αναχυσιν, bubbling or boiling, as the raging sea foaming out its own filth.

Ver. 5. Who shall give account] Of their ungodly deeds and hard speeches, #Jude 15. Angels did their first execution in the world upon luxurious Sodomites; they will be very active doubtless against such at the last day. See #2Pe 2:10, and mark that word, chiefly.

Ver. 6. For for this cause] {See Trapp on "1Pe 3:19"}

That they might be judged] Either by God chastising them, #1Co 11:32, or by themselves, #1Co 11:31. The gospel melts the hearts of God's elect with voluntary grief for sin, it makes them condemn themselves in the flesh.

But live according to God] The Father of spirits, with whom the spirits of just men departed are made perfect, #Heb 12:23. Eusebius and Austin make mention of certain Arabians, who said that the soul dies with the body, and revives not again till the resurrection of the body. This old heresy is now, among many others, dug out of the grave, and held by certain sectarians among us.

Ver. 7. Be ye therefore sober, &c.] To be sober in prayer (saith one) is to pray with due respect to God's majesty, without trifling or vain babbling; to let our words be few, #Ec 5:3. Also it is to keep God's counsel, not to be proud or boast of success, or speak of the secret sweetness, of God's love without calling; it is to conceal the familiarity of God in secret. Or, it is to submit our will to the will of God; being well pleased that He is in any way glorified, though we be not every way gratified.

And watch unto prayer] Against dulness of body, drowsiness of spirit, Satanical suggestions, distractive motions, which else will muster and swarm in the heart like the flies of Egypt.

Ver. 8. Charity shall cover] This is meant of mutual love, whereby we forgive offences one to another, and not that which should justify us before God in a Popish sense, as appears by the precedent words, and by #Pr 10:12.

Ver. 9. Without grudgings] Without shucking and hucking. #2Co 8:12 {See Trapp on "2Co 8:12"}

Ver. 10. Even so minister] Clouds when full, pour down, and the spouts run, and the eaves shed, and the presses overflow, and the aromatical trees sweat out their precious and sovereign oils; and every learned scribe brings out his rich treasure, &c. "The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal," #1Co 12:7. There are some that make it their chief work proficere potius quam prodesse, to inform themselves, rather than to instruct others; to know, than to teach. Synesius inveighs against a sort of such in his times, as, having a treasure of rare abilities in them, would as soon part with their hearts as with their conceptions, the canker of whose great skill shall be a swift witness against them. Cardan speaketh of one that had a receipt that would suddenly and certainly dissolve the stone in the bladder; and concludes of him that he was undoubtedly damned, because he never revealed it before he died, to any one. {a} Let men be ready to communicate the good they have, as the moon doth her borrowed light, as the stars are still in motion for the good of others; as the heart receiving spirits from the liver, ministereth them to the brain, and the brain to the other parts of the body.

{a} Non dubito quin iste sit apud inferos.

Ver. 11. If any man speak] i.e. Preach. Every sound is not music, so neither is every pulpit discourse preaching.

As the oracles of God] Those lively and life giving oracles, the Holy Scriptures. These he must expound with all gravity and sincerity, not seeking himself, nor setting forth his own wit and eloquence, so putting the sword of the Spirit into a velvet scabbard, that it cannot prick and pierce the heart. Loquamur verba Scripturae (saith Ramus) utamur sermone Spiritus sancti; denique divinam sapientiam et linguam nostra infantia et sophistica ne corrigamus: i.e. Let us speak the very words of the Scripture, let us use the speech of the Holy Spirit; and not think to correct the divine wisdom and eloquence with our babbling and sophistry. It is not for us to witwanton it with God; his holy things must be handled sancte magis quam scite (as he once told the wanton vestal), that is, with fear and reverence rather than with wit and dalliance.

Which God giveth] Χορηγεῖ, liberally and magnificently.

Ver. 12. Think it not strange] Ne tanquam hospites percellamini. Stand not wondering, and as if struck into a maze. Fain would this flesh make strange that which the spirit doth embrace, saith Mr Saunders, martyr, in a letter to his wife. O Lord, how loth is this loitering sluggard to pass forth in God's path. It fantasieth forsooth much fear of fray-bugs. {a} And were it not for the force of faith which pulleth it forward by the rein of God's most sweet promise, and of hope which pricks on behind, great adventures there were of fainting by the way. But blessed and everlastingly blessed be our heavenly Father, &c.

Concerning the fiery trial] John Brown of Ashford, through the cruel handling of Archbishop Warham, and Fisher, bishop of Rochester, was so piteously intreated (saith Mr Fox) that his bare feet were set upon the hot burning coals, to make him deny his faith; which notwithstanding he would not do, but patiently abiding the pain, continued in the Lord's quarrel unremovable. See the like of Rose Allen, Acts and Mon. 1820.

As though some strange thing] Forecast afflictions, which being foreseen come no whit the sooner, but far the easier, it is a labour well lost, if they come not, well spent if they do; whereas coming upon the sudden, they find weak minds secure, make them miserable, leave them desperate. Bishop Latimer ever affirmed, that the preaching of the gospel would cost him his life, to the which he no less cheerfully prepared himself, than certainly was persuaded that Winchester was kept in the Tower for the same purpose; and the event did too truly prove the same. Being sent for to London by a pursuivant, and coming through Smithfield, he merrily said, "That Smithfield had long groaned for him." To the lieutenant of the Tower he said, "You look, I think, that I should burn; but except you let me have some fire, I am like to deceive your expectation; for I am like here to starve for cold."

{a} An object of fear; a boggy, spectre. (ED)

Ver. 13. But rejoice] As the apostles did, #Ac 5:41. {See Trapp on "Ac 5:41"}

inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings] So they are called: 1. Because they are for his sake. 2. Because he suffereth with us; though not with a sense of pain, yet with a sense of pity; for in all our afflictions he is afflicted. 3. We fill up that which is behind of the sufferings of Christ, &c., #Col 1:24. {See Trapp on "Col 1:24"}

With exceeding joy] Gr. αγαλλιωμενοι, dancing a galliard, leaping levaltos, lifting up your heads, because your redemption draweth nigh. Vincentius, laughing at his tormentors, said that death and tortures were to Christians iocularia et ludicra, matters of sport and pastime; and walking upon hot burning coals, he boasted that he walked upon roses. Other martyrs said that they felt no more pain in the fire than if they lay upon a bed of down. Constantine embraced Paphnutius, and kissed his lost eye; so will Christ deal at the last day by his suffering servants.

Ver. 14. Happy are ye] μακαριοι. {See Trapp on "Mt 5:11"} {See Trapp on "Mt 5:12"} The word signifies, ye are out of harm's way; out of the reach of danger.

Resteth upon you] αναπεπαιται, with great delight and content. How strangely were the holy martyrs spiritualized and elevated, carried out of themselves and beyond themselves, as were easy to instance. We read of some godly men so overwhelmed with joy, that they have cried out, Hold, Lord; stay thine hand, I can bear no more! like weak eyes that cannot bear too great a light. "The Spirit of glory and of God" is by the Syriac interpreter rendered "the glorious Spirit of God."

Resteth upon you] sc. by divine abode or dwelling, which the Hebrews call Shechinah. The heart of a believer reproached for the name of Christ is no private place; but a place where God taketh pleasure. It is the house of God; and opposite it is the gate of heaven. He seems here to allude to #Isa 4:5.

Ver. 15. As a busybody] Gr. A bishop in another man's diocese, a pragmatic person that meddled with other men's matters without call or commendation.

Ver. 16. Suffer as a Christian] Under the Emperor Antoninus the philosopher, there happened a very bitter storm of persecution in France, which swallowed up sundry martyrs, as Maturus, Pothenus, Attalus, and Blandina; which good woman, in the midst of all her sufferings, often cried out, Christiana sum, I am a Christian. By which word she gathered new strength, and became more than a conqueress. (Bucholcer.) So Sabina, another glorious Roman martyr, crying out when she was in prison, and being asked by the jailor how she would endure the fire next day, that made now so much ado in her travail? "Very well," said she, "I doubt not: for now I suffer as a sinner, but then I shall suffer as Christian." (John Manl.) They were wont to say of cowards in Rome, that there was nothing Roman in them. I would we had not cause to say of many Christians, that there is nothing Christian in them. He and he only is a right Christian, and can quit himself accordingly both in doing and dying for Christ (if called thereunto), whose person is united to Christ by the ligament of a lively faith, and whose nature is elevated by the Spirit of regeneration; and whose principles, practices, and aims are divine and supernatural.

Let him not be ashamed] He need not; Christ is not a Master that a man need be ashamed of. He was not ashamed of us, when we had never a rag to our backs, nay, when we were "in our blood, in our blood, in our blood," and no eye pitied us, #Eze 16:5,6.

Let him glorify God] viz. for his great preferment, #Php 1:28. {See Trapp on "Php 1:28")

Ver. 17. Judgment must begin] The mortality at Corinth began at the believers, #1Co 11:30. Infidels escaped scotfree. God's cup is first sent to Jerusalem. There was bread in Moab, when there was none in Israel, #Ru 1:1. The stormy shower lighteth first on the high hills, and having washed them, settleth with all the filth in the valleys.

Ver. 18. Scarcely be saved] Hard and scarce; not at all from outward miseries (whereof he is sure to have his back's burden), and not without somewhat ado from hell's torments. The wise virgins had no oil to spare; the twelve tribes served God instantly and constantly day and night, and all little enough, #Ac 26:7.

Where shall the ungodly, &c.] Surely nowhere: not before saints and angels, for holiness is their trade. Not before God, for he is of "more pure eyes," &c. Not before Christ, for he shall come in flaming fire rendering vengeance. Not in heaven, for it is an undefiled inheritance, &c.

Ver. 19. Commit the keeping] As a precious depositum. So did our Saviour both in his lifetime, #1Pe 2:23, and at his death, #Lu 23:46. So did Stephen and all the holy martyrs after him. Archbishop Cranmer often repeated these words in the flame, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." A certain Spanish monk that stood by and heard him, ran to a nobleman there present, and cried out that Cranmer died in great desperation, ratus desperationis fuisse voces, as conceiving those to be words of despair.

As unto a faithful] Who will rather unmake all than we shall miscarry. And doth still manage all occurrences to the glory of his name and the good of those that trust in him, #Ps 124:8.

Chapter 5

Ver. 1. Who am also an elder] Gr. A fellow elder, not a commander, a lord paramount, a compeer and consort to the blessed Trinity, as Pope Leo I <sup>{a}</sup> and Nicolas III blasphemously said he was.

Ver. 2. Feed the flock] Being both learned and loving. The Greek word for a shepherd (ποιμην, as if οιμην, from οις, sheep and μαω) signifieth one that earnestly desireth after his sheep.

Feed the flock] That is, rule them, say the pope's janizaries. True it is the word signifieth sometimes to govern; usually to feed; but they catch at government, led go feeding.

Not by constraint, but willingly] It is with the pastors of Germany for the most part, saith Melancthon, as with him in Plautus, that said, Ego non servio libenter: herus meus me, non habet, libenter tamen utitur me ut lippis oculis. I serve of no good will, my master also hath as little good will to use my service; and yet he makes such use of me as he doth of some eyes, which we must have or none.

Not for filthy lucre] As your church choppers and money changers, that take up the ministry only as a trade to pick a living out of it. We preach the gospel among us, saith a Popish writer, tantum ut nos pascat et vestiatur, merely for food and raiment. Christ's faithful undershepherds, though as men they have natural necessities and relations, and as labourers in the word and doctrine they have need of "communicating with others by way of giving and receiving" of this world's good, yet they have higher aims, which of ready mind they duly prosecute, &c. There is a worm called clerus, that destroyeth honeycombs; so doth the Popish clergy the Lord's inheritance. But Clerus Angliae was wont to be stupor mundi, the world's wonder for height of holiness and depth of learning.

Ver. 3. Neither as being lords] About the year 1620 the clergy and laity of England set themselves against the pope's exactions; and when the envoy alleged that all churches were the pope's, Magister Leonardus made answer, Tuitione non fruitione, defensione non dissipatione. Protect not fleese, defend not scatter. (Jac. Revius in Vit. Pontiff)

Ver. 4. Ye shall receive a crown] A crown imports perpetuity, plenty, dignity, the height of human ambition. Quarta perennis erit It will be the fourth part of eternity, was Sir Thomas Bodly's posy. Manet ultima caelo It remains by the greatest heaven, was Henry III's of France, who was first crowned king of Poland. {See Trapp on "Jas 1:12"}

Ver. 5. Yea, all of you be subject] In regard of love and modesty, not of change and confusion of offices.

Be clothed with humility] The Greek word εγκομβωσασθε imports that humility is the riband or string that ties together all those precious pearls, the rest of the graces; if this string break, they are all scattered. Humility, as charity, is the band of perfection; yea, the word κομβος here used signifies not only alligare, to bind, but innodare, say some; to tie knots as delicate and curious women used to do of ribbons to adorn their heads or bodies, as if humility were the knot of every virtue and the grace of every grace. Contrariwise, how ugly and unseemly is pride on the back of honour and head of learning, face of beauty, &c. Chrysostom calleth humility the root, mother, nurse, foundation, and band of all virtues. Basil, the storehouse, treasury of all good, θησαυροφυλακιον.

God resisteth] {See Trapp on "Jas 4:6"} As pride resisteth God in a special manner, so God in a special manner resisteth it.

And giveth grace] i.e. Honour and respect; as appears by the opposition, and by #Pr 3:34,35.

Ver. 6. Under the mighty hand of God] If God can blow us to destruction, #Job 4:9, nod us to destruction, #Ps 18:16, what is the weight of that mighty hand of his that spans the heavens and holds the earth in the hollow of them?

That he may exalt you] The lower the ebb, the higher is the tide. A deluge of sorrows may assault us, but they shall exalt us. And the lower the foundation of virtue is laid, the higher shall the roof of glory be overlaid.

In due time] In the opportunity of time, in a fit season. The very Turks, though remorseless to those that bear up, yet receive humiliation with much sweetness.

Ver. 7. Casting all your care] Your carking care, your care of diffidence. I will now with you sing away care, said John Careless, martyr, in a letter to Mr Philpot, for now my soul is turned to her old rest again, and hath taken a sweet nap in Christ's lap. I have cast my care upon the Lord which careth for me, and will be careless, according to my name. It is our work, saith another, to cast care; it is God's work to take care. Let us not, by our soul dividing thoughts, take his work out of his hand.

Ver. 8. Your adversary the devil] Satan envies our condition that we should enjoy that paradise that he left, the comforts he once had. Hence he disturbs us, and is restless out of his infinite hatred of God and goodness; as the scorpion still puts forth his sting, and as the leopard bears such a natural hatred against men, that if he see but a man's picture, he flies upon it, and tears it. Hannibal, whether he conquered, or was conquered, never rested. Satan is over overcome, and yet he walks up and down seeking to devour: he commits the sin against the Holy Ghost every day, and shall lie lowest in hell; every soul that he drew thither by his temptation shall lie upon him, and press him down as a millstone under the insupportable wrath of God. The word αντιδικος, here rendered an adversary, properly signifies an adversary at law. Against whom we have an advocate, Jesus Christ, the just one, #1Jo 2:2, who appears for us, #Heb 9:24, to non-suit all accusations, and to plead our cause. The devil, the accuser, often makes that to be treason in the saints that is but petty larceny. In prosperity he makes us lay our hearts too near it; in adversity, to lay it too near our hearts. He is ever assaulting us, and is therefore called οοπειραζων, the tempter, in the present tense; not lazy at his business, but ever in motion for some mischief to us. Si per anticam eiecias, per posticam denuo solet irrepere, If you throw him out at the street door, he will creep in again at the backdoor. Watch him therefore. Non enim unquam dormitat vigil ille Synagogae suae Episcopus, as Amama calleth him. Ut teipsum serves non experglscere? (Horat.)

Whom he may devour] Gr. καταπιη, whom he may drink up at one draught.

Ver. 9. Stedfast in the faith] Gr. στερεοι, stiff, solid, settled.

That the same afflictions] Art not thou glad to fare as Phocion? said he to one that was to die with him. (Plutarch.) Ignatius, going to suffer, triumphed in this, that his blood should be found among the mighty worthies, and that when the Lord maketh inquisition for blood, he will recount from the blood of righteous Abel not only to the blood of Zacharias, son of Barachias, but also to the blood of mean Ignatius.

Ver. 10. But the God of all grace] Thus the apostle divides his time between preaching and prayer, according to his own advice, #Ac 6:4, and the practice of those ancient ministers, #De 33:10.

Ver. 11. To him be glory, &c.] Non loquendum de Deo sine lumine, said the heathen; we may not mention God but with praise to his name, say we.

Ver. 12. I have written briefly] Gr. In few. The Holy Scripture hath fulness of matter in fewness of words, the whole counsel of God shut up in a narrow compass. The Lord knows that much reading is a weariness of the flesh, #Ec 12:12, and hath therefore provided for our infirmity.

Ver. 13. The Church that is at Babylon] At Rome, say the Papists, that they may prove Peter to have been bishop of Rome. But though this be far fetched, yet here they grant us that mystical Babylon mentioned in the Revelation. It is probable that St Peter meant no other Babylon than the metropolis of Chaldaea, where he, being the apostle of the circumcision, preached to those dispersed Jews, and other Gentiles that he had converted.

Ver. 14. With a kiss of charity] So called, because their love to one another was by this symbol or ceremony both evidenced and increased.

2 Peter

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. A servant] The pope, who will needs title himself, A servant of servants, is herein the successor not of Peter, but of cursed Ham. He stamps in his coin, that nation and country that will not serve thee shall be rooted out, and so exposes his putid hypocrisy.

Like precious faith] Precious as gold tried in the fire; that maketh rich, #Re 3:18. And like precious (though of different degrees) in regard of, 1. The Author, God. 2. The object, Christ. 3. The means of working it, the Spirit and Word. 4. The end of it, salvation. 5. The essential property of it, of handfasting us to Christ. A child may hold a ring in his hand, as well though not as fast as a man. Let it be our care to be faithful in weakness, though weak in faith: let that faith we have be right, be of price, though not of so great price, though not like precious to such and such eminent believers. Suppose a simple man should get a stone and strike fire with it, and thence conclude it a precious stone; why, every flint or ordinary stone will do that. So to think one hath precious faith because he can be sober, just, chaste, liberal, &c.; why, ordinary heathens can do this: a man may be undone by buying a false commodity at an unreasonable rate.

Through the righteousness of God] i.e. of Christ; and it is so called, not because it is the righteousness of the Godhead, but of him that is God.

Ver. 2. Through the knowledge] There is not a new notion, or a further enlargement of saving knowledge, but it brings some grace and peace with it. All the grace that a man hath, it passeth through the understanding; and the difference of stature in Christianity grows from different degrees of knowledge. "Grace and truth came by Jesus Christ," #Joh 1:17.

Ver. 3. To glory and virtue] To glory as the end, to virtue as the means. The very heathens made their passage to the temple of honour through the temple of virtue. Do worthily, and be famous, #Ru 4:11.

Ver. 4. Exceeding great and precious] Every precious stone hath an egregious virtue in it; so hath every promise. The promises, saith Cardan, are a precious book, every leaf drops myrrh and mercy. The weak Christian cannot open, read, apply it; Christ can, and will for him.

That by these ye might be partakers] As the sun when it applies its beams to a filthy disposed matter, and stays upon it, begins to beget life and motion, and makes a living creature; so do the promises applied to the heart make a new creature. See #2Co 3:6.

Of the divine nature] That is, of those divine qualities, called elsewhere "the image of God, the life of God," &c., whereby we resemble God, not only as a picture doth a man in outward lineaments, but as the child doth his father in countenance and conditions. It was no absurd speech of him that said, That the high parts that are seen in heroic persons, do plainly show that here is a God. Neither can I here but insert the saying of another, Well may grace be called the divine nature; for as God brings light out of darkness, comfort out of sorrow, riches out of poverty, and glory out of shame; so doth grace turn the dirt of disgrace into gold. As Moses' hand, it turns a serpent into a rod. In fine, to be made partaker of the divine nature, noteth two things, saith a reverend man: 1. A fellowship with God in his holiness; the purity which is eminently and infinitely in God's most holy nature, is formally secundum modum creaturae, fashioned in us. 2. A fellowship with God in his blessedness, viz. in the beatific vision and brightness of glory. (Dr Reynolds.)

Ver. 5. And besides this] q.d. As God hath given you all things pertaining to life and godliness, and hath granted you exceeding great and precious promises, so must you reciprocate, by giving all diligence, or making all haste, that ye be not taken with your task undone. Acti agamus.

Add to your faith] Faith is the foundation of the following graces; indeed they are all in faith radically. Every grace is but faith exercised. To faith must be added virtue, i.e. holy conversation; lest we be counted and called Solifidians. It was the counsel of Francis Spira to those about him, Learn all of me, to take heed of severing faith and obedience. I taught justification by faith, but neglected obedience; therefore is this befallen me.

And to virtue, knowledge] For the regulating of our obedience, that we go not blindling to work, that we may perform a reasonable or intelligible service. "For without knowledge the mind is not good; and he that (not understanding his way) hasteth with his feet, sinneth," #Pr 19:2; the faster he runs, the further he is out. The Samaritans' service was rejected, because they worshipped they knew not what. The Romans were full of goodness, because full of knowledge, #Ro 15:14.

Add] Gr. επεχορηγησατε, Link them hand in hand, as virgins in a dance. Or, provide yourselves of this rich furniture; one grace strengtheneth another, as stones do in an arch.

Ver. 6. And to knowledge, temperance] That ye be wise to sobriety, not curiously searching into those things whereof ye can neither have proof nor profit. Some are as wise as Galileo, who used telescope to discover mountains on the moon; and lest they should not be reputed to know something unknown to others, they profess skill beyond the periphery of possible knowledge.

And to temperance, patience] Those that will be temperate, as said before, and not pass the bounds of sobriety in searching after curiosities, shall be looked upon by the wits of the world as dull fellows (Mr Perkins was esteemed by Mr Bolton before his conversion, a dry preacher, &c.), and therefore they have need of patience. Only they must add to their

Patience, godliness] In the power of it; not suffering themselves to be mocked out of their religion. Moderation in this case is but mopishness. And though in our own cause we must show all longsufferance, yet when God's glory is concerned, it is our duty to be blessedly blown up with zeal for his name, as Moses was at the sight of the golden calf; and as Zuingllus told Servetus, taxing him for his sharp invectives against him: In other things, saith he, I can bear as much as another; but in case of God's dishonour, I have no patience.

Ver. 7. And to godliness, brotherly kindness] Zeal for God should eat us up, but not eat up our love to God's people. Fire purgeth gold, but burneth it not; the fire of zeal may be warming, comforting, not scalding or scorching. Moses was angry with the people, but prayed for them. Christ was angry with the Pharisees, but grieved also for the hardness of their hearts, #Mr 3:5.

And to brotherly kindness, &c.] Love we must all men, but especially the family of faith; as our Saviour loved the young man, but not so as he did Lazarus, #Mr 10:21 Joh 11:3.

Ver. 8. If these things be in you] What God doth for us, he doth by grace in us. And it is the growing Christian that is the assured Christian. While we are yet adding to every heap, we shall be both aetiosi et fructuosi; and so get more abundant entrance, and farther into the kingdom of Christ.

Ver. 9. But he that lacketh these] Those that add not to their stock of grace, shall have no comfort either from the time past, for they shall forget they were purged from their sins, or from thoughts of the time to come, for they shall not be able to see things far off, to sharpen their interests to the kingdom of heaven.

Cannot see far off] μωπαζοντες, Being purblind, blinking. Lusciosi, qui siquando oculorum aciem intendunt ut certius aliquid cernant, minus vident quam ante, saith Vives. If weak sighted men look wistly upon a thing, they see it no whit the better, but much the worse.

And hath forgotten] As if he had been dipped in the lake of Lethe, and not in the laver of baptism. Various of the Spanish converts in America forget not only their vow, but their very names that they received when they were baptized.

Ver. 10. Give diligence] Say not here as Antipater king of Macedon did, when one presented him a book treating of happiness, ου σχολαζω, I am not at leisure. But do this one thing necessary, with all expedition. Do it also with all thy might, with utmost intention of affection and contention of action; so to show thy seriousness in a point of so great importance. Thy bed is very soft, or thy heart very hard, if thou canst sleep soundly in an uncertain condition; I mean till thy salvation be secured and settled to thee: till that "entrance be ministered unto thee abundantly into Christ's everlasting kingdom," #2Pe 1:11, that thou mayest go to heaven alacri animo, ac plena fiducia (as Luther speaketh), with a cheerful mind and full assurance; not of hope only (as the Papists ignorantly distinguish) but of faith too; of hope unfailable, and of faith unfeigned; the highest degree whereof is pleroloharia, or full assurance.

Your calling and election] We must not go (saith one) to the university of election, before we have been at the grammar school of vocation; first, we are to begin below at our sanctification, before we can climb to the top of God's counsel, to know our election. This must be calculated by that.

Sure] Some copies have it, sure by good works; and indeed these settle the soul, #1Co 15:58; as a stake, the more it is stuck into the ground, the faster it sticks.

Ye shall never fall] Stumble ye may; but he that stumbles and falls not, gets ground.

Ver. 11. Ministered unto you abundantly] Ye shall go gallantly into heaven, not get thither as many do, with hard shift and much ado. A ship may make a shift to get into the harbour, but with anchors lost, cables rent, sails torn, mast broken; another comes in with sails and flags up, with trumpets sounding, and comes bravely into the haven: so do fruitful and active Christians into Christ's kingdom.

Into the everlasting kingdom] Not so into this world, which is like a candlestick, where ye may see orchards and gardens curiously drawn, but ye cannot enter into them.

Ver. 12. I will not be negligent] Ministers must carefully watch and catch at all opportunities of benefiting the people. Dr Taylor, the martyr, preached at Hadleigh his charge on any day, as often as he could get the people together; and once a fortnight at least went to the almshouse, and there exercised his charity both spiritual and corporal.

Ver. 13. To stir you up] Gr. διεγείρειν, to rouse you and raise you, ex veterno torporis, teporis et oblivionis. Grace in the best is like a dull seacoal fire; which, if not stirred up, though it want no fuel, will yet easily go out of itself.

Ver. 14. I must put off] {See Trapp on "2Co 5:1"} What is this life, but a spot of time between two eternities? Our tents shall be taken down.

Ver. 15. After my decease] Gr. ἐξόδον, my exodus, or passage to heaven. The apostle in this expression hath respect doubtless to that, #Lu 9:31 Da 6:15, refers to #Ps 2:1.

To have these things always, &c.] Dilexi virum (said Theodosius concerning Ambrose), I could not but love the man exceedingly for this, that when he died he was more solicitous of the Churches than of his own dangers. And I am in no less care (saith Cicero) what the commonwealth will do when I am dead, than while I am yet alive. Luther in many places of his books tells us, he was much afraid that the true doctrine of justification by faith alone would be, after his death, much defaced if not utterly lost out of the Church. And it happened out accordingly in part, by the pestilent opinions and endeavours of Flacius, Osiander, and other busy broachers of errors, about that fundamental point. While Luther lived, they forbore to vent themselves. But when his head was laid, Osiander was heard to boast Leonem mortuum esse; vulpes a se flocci pendi: that the lion was dead; and for the foxes (meaning Melancthon and the rest), he cared not for them. (Melch. in Vit. Osiand.)

Ver. 16. Cunningly devised fables] σεσοφισμενοις. Artificially composed and compiled, not without a show of wisdom and truth, to deceive silly people. The Jesuits confess that the legend of miracles of their saints is for the most part false; but it was made, say they, for good intention, that the common people (the females especially) might be drawn with greater zeal to serve God and his saints. And what shaft we think of their Dominic's holy hypocrisy which he commended to his novices; and for the which he is so highly commended by Vincentius Episcopus Beluacensis in his life?

Ver. 17. This is my beloved Son.] {See Trapp on "Mt 3:17"} {See Trapp on "Mt 17:5"}

Ver. 18. When we were with him] Witnesses of his glory, and the same were shortly after witnesses of his agony. Envy not the gifts or honours of others, since they have them upon no other terms than to undergo the sorer trials.

In the holy mount] Holy for the while, as are our churches, during the public assemblies, viz. with a relative, not an inherent holiness.

Ver. 19. A more sure word] The authority of the Scriptures is greater than an angel's voice, of equal command to God's audible and immediate voice, and of greater perspicuity and certainty to us; for besides inspiration, it is both written and sealed.

As unto a light] As the governor of a ship hath his hand on the stern, his eye on the pole star; so should we on Christ the day star, #Re 2:28 22:12.

Until the day dawn] Till there be a more full gospel light.

And the day star] Christ the star of Jacob, the bright morning star, #Re 22:16, the Sun of righteousness, #Mal 4:2

Ver. 20. Of any private interpretation] That is, of human interpretation: private is not here opposed to public, but to divine, or to the Holy Ghost. The old prophet may bring a man into the lion's mouth, by telling him of an angel that spake to him. How many have we in these days that dream their Midianitish dreams, and then tell it for gospel to their neighhours!

Ver. 21. As they were moved] φερομενοι. Forcibly moved, acted, carried out of themselves to say and do what God would have them.

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. Who privily shall bring in] παρεισαξουσιν, or, fraudulently foist in false doctrines under the title of truth, and pretext of piety. Some truths shall teach, the better to persuade to their falsehoods. Together with the gold, silver, and ivory, orthodox tenets, they have store of apes and peacocks, as Solomon's ships had. Sunt mala mista bonis, sunt bona mista malis.

Denying the Lord that bought them] Or, freed them, viz. from their former idolatries and enormities, ut verbum αγοραζειν frequentius significat, saith one. Or that bought them, as they conceited, and others charitably imagined; but it proved otherwise, as appeared by their apostasy. Christ is said to buy reprobates, in the same sense wherein it is said that the gods of Damascus smote or plagued Ahaz, #2Ch 28:23, that is, in his opinion they did so: for an idol is nothing in the world, and can do neither good nor evil, #Jer 10:5 1Co 8:4. Or, that bought them, viz. in laying down a sufficient price for all sinners, in taking upon him the common nature of all men, and in preaching to them in the gospel that he died for sinners indefinitely, offering salvation, and beseeching them to receive it.

Ver. 2. The way of truth shall be, &c.] The ancient Christians were generally hated and hooted at by the heathens for the heretics' sake, who were also a kind of Christians, as Augustine complaineth (De Cir. Dei). And Epiphanius addeth that many Pagans refused to come near the Christians to join with them in any good exercise, Improbis scelestorum illorum factis consternati, as being offended at the unclean conversation of various heretics, the Priscillianists especially, whose doctrine was,

“Iura, periura, secretum prodere noli.”

Ver. 3. With feigned words] Covetousness is never without a cloak and flattering words (#1Th 2:5) for a colour; as, what wool is so coarse, but will take some or other colour? Seducers pretend the glory of God and good of souls to their worldly and wicked practices, #Php 3:18,19. And hereunto they want not fine set words, forms of speech, whereby they first carry captive silly souls, and then make price or merchandise of them; driving a trade with hell, and being factors for the devil, who will thank them well one day for their diligence; like as in the days of Hildebrand letters of thanks were said to be sent from hell to the Popish clergy for those great numbers of souls every day sent thither by their means. (Mat. Paris, 4. D. 1072.)

Ver. 4. If God spared not the angels] Though but for one sin only, and that in thought only. It sprang from the admiration of their own gifts, it was confirmed by pride and ambition, it was perfected by envy, stirred by the decree of exalting man's nature above angels in and by Christ. Some say it was a transgression of some commandment in particular (not expressed), as Adam was.

Ver. 5. Bringing in the flood] And so burying them all in one universal grave of waters. In this universal deluge God swept away all: as if he had blotted that out of his title, #Ex 34:6, and now took up that emperor's motto, Fiat iustitia et pereat mundus, Let justice be done, though the whole world be undone.

Ver. 6. And turning the cities] Burying them likewise in the Dead Sea, after that he had rained down hell from heaven upon them. {See Trapp on "Ge 19:24"} {See Trapp on "Ge 19:25"}

Making them an ensample] Hanging them up in gibbets, as it were, that others might hear and fear.

Ver. 7. Vexed] Gr. καταπονουμενοι, labouring under it, as under a heavy burden, and as much tortured as if he had been set upon a rack, as it is #2Pe 2:8.

Ver. 8. In seeing and hearing] Every sinful Sodomite was a Hazael to his eyes, a Hadadrimmon to his heart.

Vexed his righteous soul] Guilt or grief is all that the good soul gets by conversing with the wicked.

Ver. 9. The Lord knoweth how] He hath ways of his own, and commonly goeth a way by himself, such as we think not of; helping them that are forsaken of their hopes. Peter (if any man) might well say, "The Lord knoweth how to deliver his"; for he had been strangely delivered, #Ac 12:4-11.

Ver. 10. But chiefly] {See Trapp on "Heb 13:4"}

That walk after the flesh] That is, the harlot; as filthy dogs follow after a salt bitch: so the harlot is called, #De 23:18. The Helvetians had an old custom in their towns and villages, that when they received any new priest into their churches, they used to premonish him before, to take his concubine, lest he should attempt any misuse of their wives and daughters.

To speak evil of dignities] Here we have a lively picture of the Popish clergy. Aretius, by a longer custom of libellous and contumelious speaking against princes, had got such a habit, that at last he came to diminish and disesteem God himself. How boldly and basely doth Baronius bellow against the king of Spain his sovereign! and he defends himself against another cardinal, reprehending his fierceness, thus, An imperious (impetuous he should have said) zeal hath no power to spare God himself.

Ver. 11. Which are greater in power] viz. Than the mightiest monarch, #Da 10:20, and are therefore called principalities and powers, #1Pe 3:22. Mighty ones, #Isa 10:34. See #2Th 1:7 Ex

12:23-27 2Sa 24:15 2Ki 19:35. This is all for our comfort, they being our guardians. See my Common Place of Angels.

Ver. 12. As natural brute beasts] Some men put off all manhood, fall beneath the stirrup of reason, and are bestialized, yea, satanized. Such a one was that man mentioned by Luther, who was so possessed with an unclean spirit, a vehement impetus, a spirit of whoredom (as the prophet calleth it), that he was not ashamed to spew out of his foulest mouth these filthiest words, If I might be sure that this life would always last with me, I would wish no other heaven but to be carried from one brothel-house to another, from one harlot to another, Voe dementioe, et impietati. (Horndorf. Theatr.)

Speak evil of the things] Dare to reprehend what they do not comprehend, dispraise sound doctrine; yea, the Holy Scriptures, blaspheming them and their priests, as Sanctius doth the prophet Ezekiel; calling the description of the temple made by him, #Eze 48:21-23, &c., insulsam descriptionem, a senseless description. See his argument upon Eze. xl.

Ver. 13. To riot in the day time] {See Trapp on "1Th 5:7"} The word here rendered riot, comes of a root that signifies to break, for there is nothing that doth so break and emasculate the minds of men as rioting and revelling; luxury draws out a man's spirits, and dissolves him. (τρυφη, a θρυπτω, frango.) Hence Venus is called λυσιμελης by the ancients, and harlots are called cruces, crosses, by the young man in Terence. Solomon's prodigal found them no better, #Pr 5:11, after he had paid for his learning.

Spots they are] σπιλοι, blots of goodness, botches of Christian society. Such are the Jesuits, who tell us they can daily be with the fairest women and yet not lust after them. Such was that profligate priest, who persuaded many maids and matrons to lie with him under a pretence of religion; asserens impietatis et hypocriseos plenam esse fiduciam, qua castitate et pudicitia sua potius quam Christi gratia niterentur, telling them that that faith of theirs was naught and counterfeit, whereby they were drawn to rest more upon their chastity and modesty than upon Christ's grace and merits. (Theatr. Histor. Horndorf.) I much doubt we have many such merchants, such marcidi bibauldi, rascal ribalds <sup>{a}</sup> (as Math. Paris calls them), now abroad among us, in these last and loosest times.

<sup>{a}</sup> One of an irregular class of retainers who performed the lowest offices in royal or baronial households, especially in France during the 14th and 15th centuries, and were employed in warfare as irregular troops; hence, a menial or dependent of low birth. Obs. CED

Ver. 14. Having eyes full of adultery] Gr. Of the adulteress, as if she were seen sitting in the eyes of the adulterer. The wanton Greek was said to have in his eyes οὐ κοραὶς ἀλλὰ πορναις, non virgines sed meretrices, not maids but minions. <sup>{a}</sup> Archilaus the philosopher told a young wanton, Nihil interest quibus membris cinaedi sitis, posterioribus an prioribus. The leper was to shave his eyebrows, to teach us to take away the lust of the eyes, #Le 14:9. These, like Jacob's sheep, too firmly fixed on beautiful objects, make the affections bring forth spotted fruit. And it is as easy to quench the fire of Etna as the thought fixed by lust.

And that cannot cease to sin] Though they have made many covenants with God, promises to men. So #Pr 19:19. They break all, as easily as Samson did the new ropes.

Exercised with covetous practices] Which they constantly follow, as the artificer doth his trade.

Ver. 15. The wages of unrighteousness] The mammon of unrighteousness, wages of wickedness.

“*Lucra iniusta putes iustis aequalia damnis.
Dum peritura paras, per male parta peris.*”

Ver. 16. The dumb ass speaking] The angel (some think) spake in the ass, as the devil had done in the serpent. Who now can complain of his own inability and rudeness to reply in a good cause, when the dumb ass is enabled by God to convince his master? There is no mouth into which God cannot put words; and how often doth he choose the weak and unwise to confound the learned and mighty! (Dr Hall's Contempl.) Benedictus the Sorbonist affirmeth, that the ass in Balaam's history signifieth their Church, An quia Pontifex Balaam est qui ei insidet? saith Dr Reynolds. Meaneth the man that the pope is that Balaam that rideth on the ass?

Ver. 17. These are wells, &c.] Not fitted nor filled with wholesome doctrine, but as the brooks of Tema, #Job 6:17, in a moisture they swell, in a drought they fail. The river Novanus in Lombardy at every midsummer solstice swelleth, and runneth over the banks; but in midwinter is clean dry. So these.

Ver. 18. Great swelling words] Gr. υπερογκα, bubbles of words, full of wind, big swollen fancies, sesquipedalia verba. Swenckfeldius the heretic bewitched many with those big words (ever in his mouth) of illumination, revelation, deification, the inward and spiritual man, &c. Faith, he said, was nothing else but God himself indwelling in us. And have we not those now that tell their disciples they shall be Christed, Godded, &c.?

Through much wantonness] As Hetserus and Monetarius the Anabaptists, who corrupted many matrons whom they had drawn to their side. (Joh. Manl. loc. com.) David George, a ringleader among them, was so far from accounting adulteries, fornications, incest, &c., to be sins, that he did recommend them to his most perfect scholars, as acts of grace and mortification. This man (or monster rather) was confident that the whole world would in time submit to him, and be of his mind. And are not our Ranters (as they call themselves) come up to him, and gone beyond him in their most prodigious opinions and practices?

Ver. 19. Promise them liberty] As Mahometism, and Popery, which is an alluring, tempting, bewitching religion. Sir Walter Raleigh knew what he said, that were he to choose a religion for licentious liberty and lasciviousness, he would choose the Popish religion. No sin past, but the pope can pardon; no sin to come, but he can dispense for it. No matter how long men have lived in any sin (though it be the sin against the Holy Ghost), extreme unction at last will salve all.

Ver. 20. Again entangled] As a bird in a gin, as a beast in a snare. Saepe familiaritas implicavit, saepe occasio peccandi voluntatem fecit. (Isidor. solil, ii.)

The latter end is worse] They fall ab equis ad asinos, from high hopes of heaven into hell's mouth, where they shall have a deeper damnation, because they disgrace God's housekeeping, as if they did not find what they looked for in religion.

Ver. 21. It had been better] Nocuit sane Iudae fuisse apostolum, et Iuliano Christianum. To begin well and not to proceed is but to aspire to a higher pitch, that the fall may be the more desperate. Non quaeruntur in Christianis initia, sed finis, The beginning of a Christian is not to be sought but the end, saith Jerome. Bp Bonner seemed at first to be a good man, and a favourer of Luther's doctrines. Harding was once a powerful preacher against Popery, afterwards a cruel persecutor of the truth. Dr Shaxton, bishop of Salisbury, said to William Wolsey, martyr, and to others brought before him, Good brethren, remember yourselves and become new men. For I myself was in this fond opinion that you are now in, but I am now become a new man. Ah, said Wolsey, are you become a new man? woe be to thee, thou wicked new man! for God shall justly judge thee for an apostate. {a} Islebius Agricola, that first Antinomian, condemned his error, publicly recanted it, and printed his revocation. Yet, when Luther was dead, he relapsed into that error.

{a} Queen Ann Boleyn procured Latimer and Shaxton to be made bishops, for the good opinion she had of them both. Acts and Mon. 1558.

Ver. 22. The dog is turned] Proverbia haec sunt Canonica, quae Christiano nauseam commoverent. God will spew out apostates for ever, teaching them how they should have spewed out their sin.

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. This second epistle] So must ministers with one sermon peg in another, and never cease beating and repeating the same point, saith St Augustine (de Doct. Christian.), till they perceive by the gesture and countenance of the hearers, that they understand it and are affected with it.

I stir up] Gr. διεγείρω, I rouse you, who perhaps are nodding with the wise virgins, #Mt 25:5.

Your pure minds] Gr. Pure as the sun. Chrysostom saith of some in his time that they were ipso caelo puriores, more pure than the visible heavens; and that they were more like angels than mortals. Hom. lv. in Matt.

Ver. 2. Mindful of the words] {See Trapp on "1Co 15:2"} Run to this armoury of the Scriptures for weapons against seducers and epicures.

Ver. 3. Scoffers] Those worst kind of sinners, #Ps 1:1; those abjects of the people, #Ps 35:15; those pests (λοιμος), as the Septuagint render them, #LXXE Ps 1:1; those atheists that jeer when they should fear, and put far away the evil day, that make no more matter of God's direful and dreadful menaces than Leviathan doth of a sword; he laugheth at the shaking of a spear, #Job 41:29. They make children's play of them, as the word here used importeth, εμπαικται.

Ver. 4. Where is the promise, &c.] The sleeping of vengeance causeth the overflow of sin (the sinner thinks himself hail-fellow {a} with God, #Ps 50:21), and the overflow of sin causeth the awakening of vengeance.

{a} On such terms, or using such freedom with another, as to accost him with 'hail, fellow!'; on a most intimate footing; over familiar or unduly intimate. (ED)

Ver. 5. Willingly ignorant of] A carnal heart is not willing to know what it should do, lest it should do what it would not, #Ac 28:27. Ut liberius peccent, libenter ignorant, saith Bernard of such: That they may sin the more freely, they are willingly ignorant. They wink wilfully that they may not see, when some unsavoury potion is ministered to them, as Justin Martyr expresseth it.

That by the word of God] And that by the same word again they may as soon be dissolved, yea, reduced to their first original, nothing. A learned man propoundeth this question, How did the Lord employ himself before the world? And his answer is this: A thousand years to him are but as one day, and one day as a thousand years. Again, Who knoweth (saith he) what the Lord hath done? Indeed, he made but one world to our knowledge; but who knoweth what he did before, and what he will do after? Thus he. (Dr Preston of God's Attrib.)

And the earth standing, &c.] God hath founded the earth upon the seas, and established it upon the floods, #Ps 24:2. This Aristotle reckons among the wonders in nature, and well he may. (Lib. de Mirab.) God hath set the solid earth upon the liquid waters for our convenience, #Ps 104:6,7. This, if wicked atheists would well weigh, it would make them tremble, #Jer 5:22. But they have either so much to do, or so little to do, that they think not at all on these standing miracles. Or, if they do, yet for want of grace all their thoughts of this nature soon vanish; they are but like prints made on the water; as soon as the finger is off, all is out.

Ver. 6. Being overflowed with water] Therefore that is not altogether true, that all things continue as they were at first, as the scoffers affirmed, #2Pe 3:4.

Ver. 7. Reserved unto fire] The old world was destroyed with water, propter ardorem libidinis, for the heat of their lust, saith Ludolphus; the world that is now shall be destroyed with fire, propter teporem charitatis, for their lack of love. This latter age of the world is so filthy (saith another) that it cannot be washed with water, and shall therefore be wasted with fire.

Ver. 8. One day is with the Lord, &c.] Nullum tempus occurrit regi; how much less to the Ancient of days! In God there is no motion or flux; therefore a thousand years to him are but as one day.

Ver. 9. Not willing that any one should perish] {See Trapp on "1Ti 2:4"} Not willing that any of his should perish.

But that all should come to repentance] Gr. χωρησαι, withdraw, go aside, retire into some private place for the purpose of repentance. It is a great work and requires privacy. He that will make verses or do anything serious that requires study, will get alone, sequester himself from company. He that would commune with his own heart, pour forth his soul, and make his peace with God, must get into a corner. "He sitteth alone, and keepeth silence," #La 3:28; he summons the sobriety of his senses before his own judgment, and thinking seriously on his evil ways, "he turneth his feet to God's testimonies," #Ps 119:59.

Ver. 10. The heavens shall pass, &c.] The very visible heavens are defiled with men's sins, #Re 18:5, and must therefore be purged by fire; as the vessel that held the sin offering was in the time of the law.

With a great noise] ροιζηδον, such a noise as the sea makes in a great storm, or like the hissing of parchment shrivelled up with heat, as others make the comparison.

Shall be burnt up] This the very heathens knew in part, as appears by the writings of Lucretius, Cicero do Natura Deorum, Ovid's Metam. lib. i.

Ver. 11. What manner of men] ποταπους, even to admiration, quales et quanti, as the word signifies, #Mr 13:1. How accurate, and how elevated above the ordinary strain!

In all holy conversation and godliness] Gr. εν αγιας αναστροφαις και ευσεβειαις, in holy conversations and godlinesses, in the plural; to show that godliness should run through our whole conversation, as the warp runs through the woof.

Ver. 12. Looking for] As Sisera's mother looked out at a window, and expecting the return of her son, said, "Why are his chariots so long in coming?" so should we look up and long for Christ coming in the clouds, those chariots that carried him up, and shall bring him back again.

And hastening unto] Votis accelerantes, speeding and accelerating. True it is that God hath set the day wherein he will judge the world in righteousness, #Ac 17:31, and we cannot alter it; yet we may be said to hasten it by our preparations and prayers. O mora! Christe, veni, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

The heavens being on fire, &c.] A far greater fire than that at Constantinople, where 7000 houses are said to have been on fire at once, A. D. 1633. (Blount's Voyage.)

And the elements shall melt] And fall like scalding lead or burning bell metal on the heads of the wicked, who shall give a terrible account with the world all on fire about their ears. Whether this shall happen in the year 1657 (as some conjecture, because in the year of the world 1657 the old world was drowned, and because the numeral letters in MU-n-DI Conf-L-agrat-I-o, MDCLVII make up the same number), I have nothing to affirm. (Alsted Chron.) Sure it is, the saints shall take no hurt at all by this last fire, but a great deal of benefit. Methodius writeth that Pyragrus (a certain plant so called) grows green and flourishes in the midst of the flames of burning Olympus, as much as if it grew by the banks of a pleasant river. And of this he saith that himself was an eyewitness. Praeclarum sane novissimi diei indicium et documentum.

Ver. 13. According to his promise] Which is good sure hold. For he pays not his promises with fair words, as Sertorius did, but with real performances.

Ver. 14. That ye may be found of him] Watching, working, well doing. {See Trapp on "Mt 24:42"} {See Trapp on "Mt 24:44"}

Ver. 15. That the longsuffering, &c.] #Ro 2:4, which sentence Peter picks out of Paul's Epistles, as one of the choicest, and urgeth it here.

Even as our beloved brother, &c.] *Ingenium est profiteri per quos profeceris, saith Pliny. St Peter makes honourable mention of St Paul; so Ezekiel of his contemporary Daniel.

Ver. 16. Hard to be understood] See my True Treasure. In things necessary the Scripture is plain and easy; and the very entrance thereinto giveth light, saith David, #Ps 119:30; yea, subtilty and sagacity, saith Solomon, #Pr 1:4. And for the more dark and difficult places, Legum obscuritates non assignemus culpae scribentium, sed inscitiae non assequentium, saith he in Gellius, the fault is not to be laid upon the Scriptures, but upon our uuskilfulness and inability to understand them.

Which they that are unlearned and unstable] That for want of sacred learning are unsettled, ill-bottomed; and do therefore, like Peter on the water, walk one step and sink another. Our forefathers (saith Speed out of Walsingham) did not without great reason distinguish the people into learned and lewd; because such are commonly lewd who are not learned. Sure we are out of this text, that they are unstable that are unlearned; and that men therefore err because they know not the Scriptures in the right sense of them, #Mt 2:2; they err in heart because they know not God's ways, and become a prey to seducers, because "ever learning, but never come to the knowledge of the truth," #2Ti 3:7 "The simple believeth every word," saith Solomon, #Pr 14:1. The blind man swalloweth many a fly, saith our English proverb. The god of this world blinds the minds of his vassals, keeps them ignorant, and then doth what he will with them, as the Philistines did with Samson when they had digged out his eyes. He useth the same method ordinarily to carry on his designs, that he took in the Parlamentum iudoctum, the lack learning Parliament, held here A. D. 1404, in the reign of Henry IV (Speed, 775); or as in the Council of Ariminum. The Arians have procured the exile of the orthodox learned bishops, and perceiving the company that was left, though they were very unlearned, yet they would not be persuaded directly to disannul anything that had been before concluded in the Council of Nice, did abuse their ignorance in proposing the matter, and drawing them to their side. For they demanded of them whether they would worship ομοουσιον, or Christ? These not understanding the Greek word, rejected it with execration, being, as they thought, opposed unto Christ, (Ruffin. Eccles. Hist. lib. x.)

Wrest, as they do, &c.] When we strive to give unto the Scriptures, and not to receive from it the sense, when we factiously contend to fasten our conceits on God, like the harlot, take our dead and putrefied fancies, and lay them in the bosom of the Scriptures, as of a mother, when we compel them to go two miles which of themselves would go but one, when we put words into the mouths of these oracles by mis-inferences or mis-applications, then are we guilty of this sin of wresting the Scriptures. Tertullian speaketh of some that murder the Scriptures to serve their own purposes. And the same author fitly calleth Marcion, the heretic, Murem Ponticum, the rat of Pontus, because of his gnawing and tawing the Scripture to make it serviceable to his errors ( Caedem Scripturarum faciunt); this is a very dangerous sin, when men shall writhe the Scripture, and set it on the tenters to fit it to their fancies, as Scyron and Procrustes are said to have fitted their guests to the bed of brass which they had framed to their own size.

Ver. 17. Beware lest] Cavebis autem si pavebis. Let him that stands take heed lest he fall. Be not high minded, but fear. Fear a snake under every flower, a snare under every new truth. Try the spirits whether they be of God or not, because many false prophets are abroad, who deceive the hearts of the simple, and make them fall from their own stedfastness. Try therefore before ye trust; look before ye leap. Alioqui saliens antequam videas, casuals es antequam debeas, i.e. If ye look not before ye leap, ye will fall before ye would. (Bernard.) Therefore walk circumspectly, tread gingerly, step warily, lift not up one foot till ye have found sure footing for the other, as those, #Ps 35:6. Take the apostle's counsel here: never more needed than today, quando facta est fided Evangeliorum fides temporum. Nam aut scrb buntur tides ut volumus; aut, ut volumus intelliguntur, as Hilary complains of those better times, <sup>{a}</sup> It is grown a witty thing now among such variety of opinions to hold the truth, and to be a sound believer, as Erasmus once said. Beware therefore (every man for himself) lest ye also, swimming down the stream of the times, "and led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own stedfastness." And (for a sovereign preservative) "grow in grace, and in the knowledge," &c.: grow downward howsoever; grow in humility, and God will both teach and "save the humble person," #Ps 25 Job 22:2.

Ver. 18. But grow] In firmness at least, as an apple doth in mellowness; as oaks grow more slowly than willows and bulrushes, yet more solidly, and in the end to a greater bulk and size.

1 John

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. That which was from the beginning] Christ, the eternal God. {See Trapp on "Joh 1:2"}

Which we have heard, &c.] The man Christ Jesus, the arch-prophet.

Which we have seen] And what so sure as sight? See #Lu 1:2. αυτοπτης, this was denied to many kings and prophets, #Lu 10:24. To have seen Christ in the flesh was one of the three things that Austin wished, which yet St Paul set no such high price upon, in comparison to a spiritual sight of him, #2Co 5:16. {See Trapp on "2Co 5:16"}

Which we have looked upon] εθεασαμεθα, diligently and with delight. How sweet shall be the sight of him in heaven! With what inconceivable attention and admiration shall we contemplate his glorified body outshining the brightest cherub!

And our hands have handled] i.e. With whom we have most familiarly conversed, sitting with him at the same table, and eating some bushels of salt with him, as the Greek word, #Ac 1:4, seems to import, συναλιζομ. from αλς, salt. Christ's faithful ministers that have the honour to handle his law (as the phrase is, #Jer 2:8) come nearest to the apostles in this glorious privilege.

Ver. 2. For the life was manifested] Christ, who is "life essential," swallowed up death in victory, and "brought life and immortality to light by the gospel," #2Ti 1:10.

Ver. 3. Declare we unto you] That (Theophilus-like) ye may be at a certainty, fully persuaded, #Lu 1:1, having a plerophory or "full assurance of understanding, to the acknowledgment of the mystery of Christ," #Col 2:2. {See Trapp on "Col 2:2"}

And truly our fellowship] If any should object, Is that such a preferment to have fellowship with you? What are you? &c. He answereth, As mean as we are, we have "fellowship with the Father and Son." Union being the ground of communion, all that is theirs is ours. This made Moses cry out, "Happy art thou, O Israel!" or, "Oh the happiness of thee, O Israel!" the heaped up happiness. "Who is like unto these" #De 33:29. The saints, how mean soever, are (in true account) the world's paragons, the only earthly angels, because in "fellowship with the Father and the Son," that is, with the Father by the Son.

Ver. 4. And these things write we] Out of the Scriptures, those wells of salvation, draw we waters with joy, #Isa 12:4, suck these breasts of consolation, and be satisfied, #Isa 66:11. Nusquam inveni requiem nisi in libro et claustro, saith one. Chrysostom brings in a man laden with inward troubles, coming into the church; where, when he heard this passage read, "Why art thou cast down, my soul, &c., hope in God," &c., he presently recovered comfort. (Hom. in Genes.) There is a singular efficacy in the promises to comfort those that are cast down, #Ro 15:4. {See Trapp on "Ro 15:4"}

Ver. 5. That God is light] He is  $\alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\varphi\omega\varsigma$ , light essential, and they that walk with him must be as so many crystal glasses with a light in the midst; for can two walk together, and they not be agreed? #Am 3:3. That was a devilish sarcasm of the Manichees, that God (till he had created light) dwelt in darkness, as if God were not eternal light, and dwelt in light unapproachable, #1Ti 6:16. But what madmen were the Carpocratian heretics, who taught (even in St John's days, as Epiphanius testifieth) that men must sin, and do the will of the devils; otherwise they could not enter into heaven! These might well be some of those Antichrists he complaineth of #1Jo 4:3,6, and of those libertines and liars he here argueth against.

Ver. 6. If we say that, &c.] As they do that profess to know God, but in works do deny him, #Tit 1:16. {See Trapp on "Tit 1:16"}

And walk in darkness] There is a child of light that walks in darkness, #Isa 50:10, but that is in another sense. The wicked also that are here said to walk in darkness have their sparkles of light that they have kindled, #Isa 50:10, but it is as a light smitten out of a flint, which neither warms nor guides them, but dazzleth their eyes, and goes out, so that they lie down in sorrow.

Ver. 7. We have fellowship one, &c.] That is, God and we; inasmuch as we are made partakers of the divine nature, and are pure as God is pure, #1Jo 3:3, in quality though not in an equality. We have fellowship with God: 1. In his holiness. 2. In his happiness.

And the blood of Jesus] That whereas God's pure eye can soon find many a foul flaw in the best of us (our righteousness being mixed, as light and darkness, dimness at least, in a painted glass, dyed with some obscure and dim colour, it is transparent and giveth good, but not clear and pure light), lo, here is a ready remedy, a sweet support, "the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." And God beholding us in the face of his Son, seeth nothing amiss in us; no more than David did in lame Mephibosheth, when he beheld in him the features of his friend Jonathan.

Ver. 8. If we say that we have] If any should be so saucy, or rather silly, as to say with Donatus, Non habeo, Domine, quod ignoscas, I have no sin for Christ to cleanse me from, he is a loud liar, and may very well have the whetstone. St James for his innocent conversation was surnamed Justus; and yet, putting himself into the number, he saith, "For in many things we offend all," #Jas 3:2.

Ver. 9. If we confess] Homo agnoscit, Deus ignoscit. Man acknowledges, God forgives. And Confessio peccati est vomitus sordium animae. Confession of sin is the vomit of the filthy soul. (Aug.) Judah (his name signifies confession) got the kingdom from Reuben. No man was ever kept out of God's kingdom for his confessed badness; many are for their supposed goodness; as those justitiaries in the former verse, whose hearts are big swollen with high conceit of themselves; and whose lips are held close by the devil; who knows well there is no way to purge the sick soul but upwards.

He is faithful] And yet Bellarmine saith that he cannot find in all the book of God any promise made to confession of sin to God. (De Justific. i. 21.) He might have seen (besides other places not a few) #Pr 28:13 Ps 32:5, &c., that this very text is a most heavenly promise of mercy to those that confess heartily, and not hollowly. The word faithful also refers to God's promises, as just doth to the blood of Christ (the ransom received) whereby the saints are cleansed, and it stands not with God's justice to demand the same debt twice, viz. of the surety and of the debtor.

From all unrighteousness] All without exception; why then should we put in conditions, and as it were interline God's covenant? He is a sin pardoning God, #Ne 9:31; no God like him for that in heaven and earth, #Mic 7:18; he multiplieth pardon, as we multiply sin, #Isa 55:7; he doth it freely, for his own sake, naturally, #Ex 34:6; constantly, #Ps 130:4, and here. The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth (not, he hath cleansed or will cleanse, but he doth it) daily and duly, constantly and continually. This should be as a perpetual picture in our hearts.

Ver. 10. We make him a liar] For the Scripture hath concluded all under sin, #Ro 11:32. {See Trapp on "Ro 11:32"}

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. That ye sin not] Presuming upon an easy and speedy pardon. The worst sort of Papists will say, When we have sinned, we must confess; and when we have confessed, we must sin again, that we may confess again; so making account of confessing, as drunkards do of vomiting. But we have not so learned Christ. If his word dwell richly in us, it will teach us to deny ungodliness, &c.; to forsake as well as confess sin, and not after confession, to turn again to folly, or (as those that are dog sick) to their former vomit. With confession of sin must be joined confusion of sin, #Pr 28:13. We may not do as those Philistines, that confessed their error and yet sent away the ark of God, #1Sa 6:3. Nor as Saul, "I have sinned, yet honour me before the people," #1Sa 15:30. Nor yet as those perverse Israelites, "We have sinned, we will go up"; though God had flatly forbidden them at that time to go up against the Amorites; and for their presumptuous attempt brought them back by weeping cross, #De 1:41-43, &c. Sin confessed must be, 1. Disallowed in our judgments. 2. Disavowed and declined in our wills and affections. 3. Cast out of our practice; Ephraim shall say, "What have I to do any more with idols?" #Ho 14:8. He shall pollute the images that he had once perfumed: he shall angrily say unto them, Get you hence, #Isa 30:22.

And if any man sin] Being taken before he is aware, #Ga 6:1. {See Trapp on "Ga 6:1"}

We have an advocate] Who appears for us in heaven, and pleads our cause effectually. See #Heb 9:24.

Jesus Christ the righteous] Or else he could not go to the Father for us. {See Trapp on "Joh 16:10"}

Ver. 2. He is the propitiation] Heb. Copher; he coffers up, as it were, and covers our sins, #Ps 78:38. {See Trapp on "Ro 3:25"} The Hebrew word כִּפֶּה used for covering and propitiating of sin, is {#Ge 6:14} used of the pitch or plaster whereby the wood of the ark was so fastened that no water could get in.

But also for the sins of the whole world] That is, of all the faithful, both of Jews and Gentiles, that mundus ex mundo, that world of whom the world is not worthy, #Heb 11:38.

Ver. 3. We know that we know him] By a reflex act of the soul; hence the assurance of faith, the fruit of fruitfulness, #1Co 15:58.

That we know him] With a knowledge not apprehensive only, but affective too.

If we keep his commandments] Si facimus praecepta, etiamsi non perficiamus; If we think upon his commandments to do them, #Ps 103:18, aim at them, as at a mark, #Ps 119:6.

“ Non semper feriet quodcunque minabitur arcus.”

Wish well to an exact obedience which yet we cannot attain to, #Ps 119:4,5; be doing at it as we can, following after righteousness, #Pr 15:9, as a poor apprentice follows his trade, though he be nothing less than his craftmaster; and lastly, be humbled for our daily aberrations, resolving and striving to do better: this is that evangelical keeping of God's commandments, which God (measuring the deed by the desire, and the desire by the sincerity thereof) will accept and crown, through Christ our propitiation.

Ver. 4. He that saith, I know him] Here he disputeth against Verbalists and Solifidians. See #Jas 2:14. {See Trapp on "Jas 2:14"}

Is a liar] i.e. A hypocrite; his spot is not the spot of God's children, #De 32:5, for they are children that will not lie, #Isa 63:8. They all deserve that title of honour that was given of old to Arrianus the historian, viz. φιλαληθης, A lover of truth. They know that the God whom they serve, desireth "truth in the inward parts," #Ps 51:6, and that dicta factis deficientibus erubescant (as Tertullian hath it), words without deeds will not bear a man out in the end. It is a question whether the desire of being, or dislike of seeming, sincere, be greater in the good heart. Not so every loose and ungirt Christian, every profligate professor, that denieth that in deed what he affirmeth in word.

Ver. 5. In him verily is the love of God perfected] St John was a mere compound of sweetest love. As iron put into the fire, seemeth to be nothing but fire, so he (the beloved disciple) was turned into a lump of love. Hence he so presseth love, perfect love, to God and his people. And Jerome tells us, that living to a very great age at Ephesus, he would get up into the pulpit; and when through weakness of body he could say no more, he would say, "Little children, love one another"; Si hoc solum fiat, sufficit, If this be well done, all is done. (Jerome in cap. vi. ad Gal.)

That we are in him] In communion with him, and in conformity to him.

Ver. 6. To walk even as he walked] This is the same with that #Col 2:6, to walk in Christ; and with that, #1Pe 2:21, to follow his steps.

{See Trapp on "1Pe 2:21"}

Ver. 7. I write no new commandment] The apostle studiously declineth the suspicion of novelty. We should ever set a jealous eye upon that which is new, and stand in the old way, #Jer 6:16, in the ancient paths, #Jer 18:15. God's people are called the ancient people, #Isa 44:7. And idolaters are said to sacrifice to new gods, that came newly up, #De 32:17. Truth, as wine, is better with age, #Lu 5:39. And of witnesses, Aristotle well saith, the older they are, the more credible, because less corrupted, πιστοτατοι οι παλαιοι, αδιαφοροι γαρ (Rhet. i.). As we prefer the newest philosophy, so the ancientest divinity; and we may justly suspect them of falsehood and delusions, who arrogate to themselves to utter oracles, to bring to light new truths, &c.

Ver. 8. A new commandment] {See Trapp on "Joh 13:34"} "A new commandment" it is called, saith a late learned interpreter, 1. Because it was renewed by the Lord after it had been as it were antiquated, and almost extinguished. 2. Because it was commanded to such men as were new or renewed. 3. Because it was an excellent commandment.

Ver. 9. And hateth, his brother] As Paul presseth faith, and Peter hope, so John love, those three cardinal virtues, #1Co 13:13. {See Trapp on "1Jo 2:5"}

Is in darkness] Yea, in the prince of darkness, who acteth and agiteth him, as he did Cain. Holy Greenham often prayed, that he might keep up his young zeal with his old discretion.

Ver. 10. None occasion, &c.] Gr. σκανδαλον, No scandal, i.e. no occasion of spiritual falling, whereby a man is made any manner of way worse, and backwarder in goodness. Quod fieri potest vel dicto, vel facto, sive exemplo in moribus, saith learned Lyserus, which may be done by word, deed, or evil example.

Ver. 11. He that hateth, &c.] There is a passion of hatred (saith a famous divine). This is a kind of averseness and rising of the heart against a man, when one sees him so that he cannot away with him, nor speak to nor look courteously or peaceably upon him, &c. 2. A habit of hatred, when the heart is so settled in this alienation and estrangement, that it grows to wish and seek his hurt. This is manslaughter, #1Jo 3:5.

Ver. 12. I write unto you, little children] A Christian hath his degrees of growth; childhood, #1Co 3:1,2; youth or well grown age, when he is past the spoon, as here; old age, #Ac 21:16.

Because your sins are forgiven you] Though perhaps you as yet know it not, through weakness of faith and strength of corruption.

Ver. 13. Him that is from the beginning] The Ancient of days. Old men love to speak of ancient things. These are ancient things, #1Ch 4:22. You know him with a knowledge of acquaintance; you have had much familiarity and intercourse with him, you are not far from knowing even as also you are known, #1Co 13:12. To this pitch of perfection all God's people must aspire, as all men do follow after old age.

Because ye have overcome the wicked one] "The glory of young men is their strength," #Pr 20:29. The Hebrew word there rendered young men, signifieth choice men, sc. for military employments; neither can they better show their valour than by resisting the devil, that he may flee from them. Weak grace may evidence pardon of sin; but it is strong grace that can overcome the temptations of Satan.

Because ye have known the Father] We say, He is a wise child that knows his father (and the Greeks have a proverb to the same purpose, Hom. Od.); but God hath no child so young that more or less knoweth him not. The bastardly brood of Rome are all for their mother.

Ver. 14. Because ye have known him] The same again as #1Jo 2:13, which to a carnal heart may seem superfluous. Et certe si humano ingenio conscripti essent libri illi, quos pro sacris (ira ut verissime sunt) agnoscimus et veneramur; bonum alicubi dormitasse Homerum disceremus, said one. But far be it from us to reprehend what we cannot comprehend.

Ver. 15. Love not the world] You fathers, and you young and strong men, let me caution you (before I speak again to the little children, #1Jo 2:18), to beware of worldliness. A man may be very mortified, and yet very apt to dote on the world.

If any man love the world] Have it he may, and use it too, as the traveller useth his staff (which either he keeps or casts away, as it furthers or hinders his journey), but love it he must not, unless he will renounce the love of God. {See Trapp on "Mt 6:24"} {See Trapp on "Col 3:2"} Aristotle in his Politics teacheth, by the example of Thales, that philosophers may be rich; but he excellently addeth αλλα ου τουτο εστι περι ου σπουδαζουσι, howbeit this is not their chief study; it is but a by-business with them. (Polit. i., cap. ult.)

The love of the Father is not in him] The sunbeams extinguish the fire; so doth the love of the world the love of God. But some not so much as roving at God, make the world their standing mark.

Ver. 16. The lust of the flesh, the lust of, &c.] That is, pleasure, profit, preferment; the worldling's trinity, as one saith. Compare herewith Christ's threefold temptation, #Lu 4:3-9, and St James's character of worldly wisdom, #Jas 3:15. {See Trapp on "Jas 3:15"} It is his pleasure, his profit, and his honour (saith a divine) that is the natural man's trinity, and his carnal self that is these in unity. And to the same purpose the Christian poet, “ *Ambitiosus honos, et opes, et foeda voluptas,

Haec tria pro trino numine mundus habet.* ”

But is of the world] Base and bootless. Nec verum, nec vestrum. To know the vanity of the world (as of a mist) you must go a little from it.

Ver. 17. And the world passeth away] As the stream of a swift river passeth by the side of a city. Animantis cuiusque vita in fuga est, Life itself wears out in the wearing, as a garment; all things below are mutable and momentary. Wilt thou set thy heart upon what is not? saith Solomon.

And the lust thereof] So that although thou wert sure to hold all these things of the world, yet they may be suddenly lost to thee, because thou canst not make thine heart delight in the same things still. Not the world only, but the lust thereof, passeth away; there is a curse of unsatisfiability lies upon the creature, απαντων η πλησμονη, saith the orator; There is a satiety of all things. The world's comforts are sweeter in the ambition than in the fruition; for after a little while we loathe what we lusted after, as Amnon did Tamar. Men first itch, and then scratch, and then smart. Dolor est etiam ipsa voluptas. Even sorrow itself is enjoyable. Crueiger used often to say,

“ Omnia praetereunt, praeter amare Deum. ”

They pass by all things except to love God.

Ver. 18. Little children] Children may easily be deceived, and made to take a sheep counter for an angel, because broader and brighter; so young Christians are soon seduced; hence they are cautioned. {See Trapp on "1Jo 1:5"}

Ver. 19. But they were not of us] No more were our Anti-trinitarians, Arians, Anti-scripturists, ever of our Church, otherwise than as wens and botches, whatever our adversaries aver and cavil. So of old, because the Waldenses and Manichees lived in the same places, and were both held heretics, the Papists maliciously gave out that the Waldenses (those ancient Protestants) were defiled with the errors of the Manichees and Catharists, which yet they ever abhorred.

Ver. 20. But ye have an unction] That oil of gladness, the Holy Ghost. In derision thereof, Domitian, the tyrant, cast St John into a caldron of boiling oil, but he by a miracle came forth unhurt.

Ye know all things] Not all things knowable, but all things needful to be known.

Ver. 21. Because ye know not, &c.] Because ye are utterly ignorant; for God hath no blind children, but they all know him from the least to the greatest. Howbeit, the angels know not so much, but they would know more, #Eph 3:10. Should not we?

Ver. 22. That denieth that Jesus] Papists deny him as a King, in setting up the pope; as a Priest, in setting up the mass; as a Prophet, in piecing their human traditions to the Holy Scriptures.

Ver. 23. The same hath not the Father] {See Trapp on "Joh 5:23"} Mahomet speaks very honourably of Christ, but denies his Divinity, and that he was crucified. He acknowledged that he was the word and power of God, and that all that believe in him shall be saved, &c.

Ver. 24. Let that therefore abide] Persevere and hold fast the faith of the gospel without wavering in it, #Eph 4:14, or starting from it, #2Pe 2:20. Be as the centre, or as Mount Sion, stedfast and unmovable. Stand fast; for ye are sure to be shaken: the tree must be shaken, that rotten fruit may fall off.

Ver. 25. Even eternal life] Hold therefore the doctrine of faith sound and entire by the hand of faith, that ye may receive the end of your faith, the salvation of your souls.

Ver. 26. That seduce you] That carry you into byways, highways to hell.

Ver. 27. But the anointing] See #1Jo 2:20. It was an aggravation of the fall of Saul, #2Sa 1:21, as "though he had not been anointed"; so for the saints to fall from their own stedfastness.

Ver. 28. Little children, abide in him] q.d. Your enemies are many and crafty; therefore keep home, keep home; this shall be no grief unto you, nor offence of heart, as she said, #1Sa 25:31.

Ver. 29. Is born of him] And exactly resembles him, as a child doth his father. See #1Pe 1:17. {See Trapp on "Mt 5:9"}

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. Behold what manner] Qualem et quantum, as #2Pe 3:11. {See Trapp on "Joh 1:12"} If Jacob was at such pains and patience to become son-in-law to Laban, if David held it a great matter to be son-in-law to the king, what is it then to be sons and daughters to the Lord Almighty? #2Co 6:18.

The world knoweth us not] Princes unknown are unrespected; unkennt, unkist, as the Northern proverb hath it. After the sentence was pronounced upon Mr Bainham, the martyr, he was counselled by Mr Nicholas Wilson to conform himself to the Church; to whom he answered, I trust I am the very child of God, which ye, blind asses, said he, do not perceive. The "king's daughter is all glorious within," her beauty is inward, #Ps 45:13; she is black, but comely as the tents of Kedar, #So 1:5; rough, but rich; as the tabernacle in the wilderness, covered with goat's hair, but within costly and curious; as Brutus's staff in the story, cuius intus solidum aurum corneo velabatur cortice. (Plut.) All righteous men are kings, as may appear by comparing #Mt 13:17 cf. Lu 10:24; they are kings in righteousness as Melchisedec, but somewhat obscure ones as he; they must be content to pass to heaven as Christ their head did, as concealed men. Their glorious faith, #Jas 2:1, now not notified or regarded, shall one day be "found to praise, honour, and glory," #1Pe 1:7.

Ver. 2. What we shall be] Great things we have in hand, but greater in hope; much in possession, but more in reversion. Let this comfort us against the contempts cast upon us by the world, blind and besides itself in point of salvation.

For we shall see him as he is] Now we see as in a glass obscurely, #1Co 13:12, as an old man through spectacles, as a weak eye looks upon the sun; but in heaven we shall see him as he is, so far as a creature is capable of that blissful vision.

Ver. 3. Purifieth himself] That is true hope that runs out into holiness. Faith and hope purge, and work a suitableness in the soul to the things believed and hoped for.

Even as he is pure] In quality, though not in an equality. There shall be comparatio, though not aequiparatio.

Ver. 4. Sin is the transgression] As there is the same roundness in a little ball as in a bigger, so the same disobedience in a small sin as in a great. Papists tell us that concupiscence is not truly and properly a sin (Concil. Trident.); but St Paul saith otherwise, #Ro 7:8. There are among us that say that original sin is not forbidden by the law; but sure we are it is cursed and condemned by the law, as that which hath in it a tacit consent to all sin. Peccatum est dictum, factum, concupitum contra aeternam legem, saith Austin (contra Faust. xxii. 27). Any lack of conformity to the eternal law is sin.

Ver. 5. To take away our sins] Shall sin live that killed Christ? Shall I drink the blood of these men? said David of those that but ventured their lives for him. Oh that each Christian would turn Jew to himself, and kill the red cow, &c.; present himself a whole burnt sacrifice to God; not going about to frustrate the end of Christ's incarnation and passion, by retaining that sin that he came to take away, lest that doleful sentence be passed upon him, that was once upon the stubborn Jews, "Ye shall die in your sins," #Joh 8:21,24.

Ver. 6. Sinneth not] Sin may rebel, it cannot reign in a saint. He sinneth not sinningly; there is no way of wickedness in him, #Ps 139:23,24, he loves not sin, he lies not in it, but riseth again by repentance, and is restless till that be done, and done to purpose.

Ver. 7. Let no man deceive you] As if you might pass e coeno in coelum; fly to heaven with dragon's wings; dance with the devil all day, and sup with Christ at night; live all your lives long in Delilah's lap, and then go to Abraham's bosom when you die. These are the devil's dirt daubers that teach such doctrine, his upholsterers that sew such pillows, #Eze 13:18.

He that doth righteousness is righteous] Provided that he do it from a right principle. For otherwise men may naturally perform the outward act of righteousness, and yet not be righteous persons; as Ahab humbled himself. Alexander the Great, when he had killed Clitus, was troubled in conscience, and sent to all kinds of philosophers (as it were to so many ministers) to know what he might do to appease his conscience and satisfy for that sin. Uriah, that brought in the altar of Damascus, is called "a faithful witness," #Isa 8:2, true to his word; yet no man looketh upon him as righteous. It is not, saith a reverend man, in divinity as in moral philosophy, where iusta et iuste agendo simus iusti, by doing righteous things and righteously we are made righteous; but we have esse to be first, and then the operari, &c., the work, the habit, and then the act.

Ver. 8. He that committeth sin] ποιων, that makes a trade of it, and can art it (as the word properly signifieth), not act it only.

Is of the devil] Bears his image, wears his livery; is as like him as if spit out of his mouth.

For the devil sinneth] Or is a sinning; he never ceaseth to sin, he commits the sin against the Holy Ghost every moment.

That he might destroy the works] The devil then hath his works in the very hearts of the elect, for whose cause Christ came into the world, that he might unravel the devil's work, break his head, #Ge 3:15. The Son of the woman, our Saviour (not the Virgin Mary, as Papists blasphemously affirm, illa conteret tibi caput) breaks the serpent's head, that first of the devil's works against mankind: trampled upon him and triumphed over him on the cross, and will tread him under our feet also shortly. But what a bold conceit is that of Josephus, that God, when he said "He shall bruise thy head," meant no more but this, Every son of Eve, whensoever he meeteth with a serpent, shall strike it upon the head, which containeth in it somewhat hurtful to mankind. (Antiq. Judaic, i. 2.)

Ver. 9. For his seed] The new nature, which causeth that sin cannot carry it away without some counter buffs. The Spirit quickens the word: as there is a spirit in the natural seed that maketh it prolific; so here.

He cannot sin] i.e. Sinningly, so as to be transformed into sin's image: cannot do wickedly with both hands earnestly, #Mic 7:7-9. He sinneth not totally and finally, he cannot so fall as apostates; for the seed of God ever abideth in him. Bellarmine is forced to confess that this is the hardest place in all the Bible, urged for proof of perseverance in grace.

Ver. 10. In this the children of God] As David's daughters were known by their garments of various colours, #2Sa 13:18; so are God's children by their piety and charity.

Ver. 11. That we should love, &c.] This beloved disciple was all for love. {See Trapp on "1Jo 2:9"} {See Trapp on "1Jo 2:5"}

Ver. 12. Who was of that wicked one] Tertullian calleth Cain the devil's patriarch. Cain is dead, saith another, but I could wish that he did not still live in his heirs and executors, Qui clavam eius sanguine Abelis rubentem, ut rem sacram circumferunt, adorant et venerantur; who bear about and make use of Cain's club, to knock on the head God's righteous Abels. (Bucholcer.)

And slew his brother] Gr. εσφαξε cut his throat. Acerbissima sunt odia (ut ita nominem) Theologica, saith one. These divinity hatreds are most deadly. Such fratricides were Alphonsus Diazius, and Charles, king of France, stirred up by Pope Urban to kill his brother Manford, king of Sicily.

Because his own works, &c.] The old enmity, #Ge 3:15. So #Nu 22:3,4. Moab was irked because of Israel, or did fret and vex at them, as #Ex 1:12, yet they were allied, and passed by them in peace, and, by the slaughter of the Amorites, freed them from evil neighbours which had taken away part of their land, and might do more, as one hath well observed.

Ver. 13. Marvel not, my brethren] Since it was so from the beginning, and the very first man that died, died for religion; so early came martyrdom into the world.

Ver. 14. We know that we have passed] Not we think, we hope, &c. If we would not have with the merchant an estate hanging upon ropes, fortunam rudentibus aptam, and depending upon uncertain winds, let us make sure work for our souls. This is a jewel that the cock on the dunghill meddles not with. Sensum electionis ad gloriam in hac vita nullum agnosco, saith Greevinchovius the Arminian, I know no such thing as assurance of heaven in this life. Papists allow us nothing beyond a conjectural confidence, unless by special revelation. Miserable comforters! They tell us that to taste though but with the tip of a rod (Jonathan-like) of this honey will hinder us in the chase of our lusts; but believe them not; for the joy of the Lord is our strength, #Ne 8:10.

Because we love the brethren] This is to be seen in the natives of New England. The first appearance of grace in them is, their love and respect to those that are truly gracious.

Ver. 15. Whosoever hateth his brother] Not to love then is to hate, as not to save a man is to kill him, #Mr 3:4.

Is a murderer] Because he wisheth him out of the world, as Caracalla did his brother Geta, of whom he said, Divus sit, modo non sit vivus, I would he were in heaven or anywhere, so that I were rid of him. By like reason we may say that sin is God-murder; forasmuch as sinners are God haters, #Ro 1:30, and could wish there were no God, that they might never come to judgment. The godly man, on the contrary, cries out with David, Vivat Deus, "Let the Lord live, and blessed be the God of my salvation," &c., #Ps 18:46.

Ver. 16. Because he laid down] {See Trapp on "Joh 15:13"} {See Trapp on "Ro 5:8"}

We ought also to lay down our lives] If Pylades can offer to die for Orestes merely for a name, or out of carnal affection at the best; should not Christians lay down their own necks one for another, as Aquila and Priscilla did for Paul? #Ro 16:4.

Ver. 17. This world's goods] Gr. τον βιον, livelihood, which is all that the world looks after.

And shutteth up his bowels, &c.] Not drawing out unto him both his sheaf and his soul, #Isa 58:9. But locking up as with a key (so the Greek κλειση here signifies) both his barn and his bowels; not considering his brother's necessity and his own ability.

Ver. 18. Let us not love in word] Words are light and cheap; and there is a great deal of mouth mercy abroad. Julian the Apostate is not presently a friend to Basil, though he write unto him, φιλος φιλω, και αδελφος αδελφω, Thou art my friend and beloved brother. The Roman legions loved Otho the emperor, saith Dio the historian, and gave him all respect, ουκ απο της γλωττης, αλλα και απο της ψυχης, not from the teeth outward but from the heart root. {See Trapp on "Jas 2:14"} {See Trapp on "Jas 2:15"} {See Trapp on "Jas 2:16"}

Ver. 19. And shall assure our hearts] This, saith father Latimer, is the desert of the feast of a good conscience. There are other dainty dishes in this feast, but this is the banquet.

Ver. 20. If our keart condemn us] Conscience is God's spy and man's overseer, Domesticus index, iudex, carnifex; God's deputy judge, holding court in the whole soul, bearing witness of all a man's doings and desires, and accordingly excusing or accusing, absolving or condemning, comforting or tormenting. Quid tibi prodest non habere conscium, habenti conscientiam? saith one; and another, Turpe quid acturus, te sine teste time. Inprimis reverere te ipsum. Look to conscience.

“ Conscia mens ut cuique sua est, ita concipit intra, Pectora pro facto spemque metumque suo.” (Ovid.)

Ver. 21. Then have we confidence] Sincerity is the mother of serenity, Sine qua, tranquillitas omnis tempestas est, without which saith serenity is all a storm. Isidore. Uprightness hath boldness. It is not a peace, but a truce, that the wicked have; such a storm will befall them as shall never be blown over. Israel is the heir of peace, #Ga 6:16 Isa 32:17.

Ver. 22. And whatsoever we ask] sc. According to his will. Fiat voluntas mea, quia tua, said Luther. I can have what I will of God, said one; for my will shall be concentric with his will.

Because we keep] The obedience of faith emboldens us; yet may no man say as the prodigal, "Give me the portion that belongeth to me." It was a proud speech of that emperor (Antonin. Philo.) that said, Non sic Deum coluimus, aut sic viximus, ut ille nos vinceret, We have not so served God, that the enemy should overcome us. It was much worse in that arrogant Papist that said, God forbid that we should enjoy heaven as of alms to us; no, we have it by purchase or conquest.

Ver. 23. And this is his commandment] This is the sum and substance of the gospel, that we believe and love; and the more we believe God's love to us, the more love shall we bear one to another; for our love is but a reflex of his.

And love one another, as he gave us commandment] Lo, love is a commandment; we should therefore not only submit, but embrace it joyfully as a gift.

Ver. 24. By the Spirit] Christ hath satisfied the wrath of the Father; and now the Father and Christ both, as reconciled, send the Spirit, as the fruit of both their loves, to inherit our hearts. And truly, next unto the love of Christ indwelling in our nature, we may well wonder at the love of the Holy Ghost that will dwell in our defiled souls.

Chapter 4

Ver. 1. But try the spirits] As lapidaries do their stones, as goldsmiths do their metals. A Bristol stone may look as well as an Indian diamond; and many things glitter besides gold. Try therefore before you trust that which is doctrinally delivered unto you; being neither overly credulous,—the fool believeth everything; nor rashly censorious, as those were that said of our Saviour, "This man blasphemeth." {See Trapp on "1Th 5:21"}

Because many false prophets] Both the old Church, #De 13:1, and the new, #Ac 20:30, were ever pestered with them.

Ver. 2. Hereby know ye the spirit] Bring it to this test. Gold may be rubbed or melted, it remains orient; so doth truth. Whereas error, as glass (bright, but brittle), cannot endure the hammer of fire.

That confesseth] That preacheth Christ crucified.

Ver. 3. Is not of God] And yet he is not called an Atheist, or an Antitheist, but Antichrist, that is, an opposite to Christ; as if his opposing should not be so much to Christ's nature or person, as to his unction and function.

Ver. 4. And have overcome] viz. In your Head, Christ, and by the help of his Holy Spirit, your sweet inhabitant, whereby ye are more than conquerors, because sure to overcome and triumph.

Ver. 5. They are of the world] i.e. The seducers; fit lettuce for such lips; Dignum patella operculum. Vos infernates estis. "Ye are from beneath, I am from above," saith Christ, #Joh 8:23.

Therefore speak they of the world] The water riseth not (unless forced) above its source. Out of the warehouse, the shop is furnished. Carnal teachers gratify their hearers with pleasing positions. The Papists in their petition to King James for a toleration, plead this as an argument, That their religion is agreeable to men's nature: and indeed it is an alluring, tempting, bewitching religion, giving way to all licentiousness and lasciviousness. So Mahomet in his Koran tells his followers concerning venery, That God did not give men such appetites to have them frustrated, but enjoyed, as made for the gust {a} of man, not for his torment; and a great deal more of such paltry stuff.

{a} Keen relish, appreciation, or enjoyment, esp. as displayed in speech or action. (ED)

Ver. 6. Heareth us] Christ's sheep are rational; they can discern his voice from that of a stranger, and will hear it not with that gristle only that grows upon their heads, but with the ear of their soul, which trieth doctrines as the mouth doth meat, #Job 34:3, and knoweth the spirit of truth and the spirit of error.

Ver. 7. Beloved, let us love one another] This beloved disciple breathes nothing but love; as if he had been born with love in his mouth, as they say.

Ver. 8. Knoweth not God] If moral virtue could be seen with mortal eyes, saith Plato, it would draw all hearts unto it. If God were well known, he could not but be best beloved, and all that are his, for his sake.

For God is love] Not formally, but causally, say schoolmen; he is the fountain of love, and draws all hearts that have any knowledge of him. See #1Jo 4:16 So 1:3. {See Trapp on "1Jo 4:16"} {See Trapp on "So 1:3"}

Ver. 9. In this was manifested] The very naked bowels of his tenderest compassions are herein laid open unto us, as in an anatomy. God so loved his Son that he gave him the world for his possession, #Ps 2:7; but he so loved the world that he gave Son and all for its redemption.

Ver. 10. Not that we loved, &c.] Deus prior nos amavit, tantus, tantum, et gratis, tantillos et tales. God, though so great, loved us first and freely, though such and so worthless. "He loved us, because he loved us," saith Moses, #De 7:7,8, the ground of his love being wholly in himself. He works for his own name's sake, #Eze 20:9,14,22,44, four different times, notwithstanding his word and oath, #Eze 20:13,15,23.

Ver. 11. If God so loved us] His one example easily answereth all our objections, taketh off all our excuses; as that our brother is our inferior, our adversary, of whom we have better deserved, &c.

Ver. 12. No man hath seen God] If we read that any hath seen him, we must understand it, that indeed they did see Mercavah, velo harocheb, the chariot in which God rode, but not the rider in it, as that Rabbi speaketh. (Rab. Maim. More Nevochim, iii. 7.)

His love is perfected in us] i.e. Either actively; our love is demonstrated in the excellency of it. Or else passively; the love that God beareth to us is abundantly declared perfect, in that he worketh such a gracious inclination in us. And in this latter sense understand the apostle, #1Jo 4:17, touching love made perfect.

Ver. 13. He hath given us of his Spirit] That is, of the fruits of his Spirit, his holy motions and graces. For through the two golden pipes the two olive branches empty out of themselves the golden oils of all precious graces, into the candlestick, the Church.

Ver. 14. And we have seen] sc. By special privilege (that which natural eye never saw, #1Jo 4:12), the backparts of Jehovah, his wisdom, justice, mercy, &c.; we can see no more and live, we need see no more that we may live.

Ver. 15. Whosoever shall confess] {See Trapp on "1Co 12:3"}

Ver. 16. And we have known and believed] That is, we know by believing. {See Trapp on "Joh 6:69"}

God is love] Pellican tells of some in his time that used to read this piece of Scripture to their friends at their feasts. A pious practice surely, and well beseeeming those that feast before the Lord. The primitive Christians had at such times their kiss of love, #1Pe 5:14. And St Austin had these two verses written on his table,

“ Quisquis amat dictis absentum rodere famam, Hanc mensam vetitam noverit esse sibi.”

Ver. 17. In the day of judgment] Those that bear his image shall hear his euge; well done, he will own them and honour them, and their faith that worketh by love, "shall be found unto praise, honour, and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ," #1Pe 1:7. He that was so willingly judged for them, shall give no hard sentence against them.

Ver. 18. There is no fear in love] But complacency and acquiescence in the person beloved.

Perfect love casteth out fear] Timorem scilicet servilem illum, non amicalem. (Beda in #Pr 1)

Because fear hath torment] Quem metuunt, oderunt, Whomsoever men fear, they hate, saith the proverb. And odium timorem spirat, saith Tertullian. Hatred hath fear, which sets the soul on a rack, as it were, and renders it restless.

Ver. 19. Because he first loved us] {See Trapp on "1Jo 4:10"} Mary answers not Rabboni till Christ first said unto her, Mary. Our love is but the reflex of his. And as the reflected beams of the sun are weaker than the direct, so are our affections weaker than God's. That is a memorable saying of a modern writer, As a great brightness of the air at midnight argueth the shining of the moon, and that presumeth an illumination of the sun, because these depend one upon another; so the diffusing of our charity on our neighbours proveth our love to God; and our love to God presumeth his love to us first, for the inseparable dependence they have on each other.

Ver. 20. If a man say, I love God] If he did so, he would hardly say so in a vaunting way howsoever. "Charity vaunteth not itself; is not puffed up," #1Co 13:4. Christ loves secret service, #So 2:14. They that bear him greatest love make least show thereof before others. Master Bartlet Green, when he had been beaten and scourged with rods by Bishop Bonner, and he greatly rejoiced in the same (saith Master Fox), yet his shamefaced modesty was such that he would never express any mention thereof (lest he should seem to glory too much in himself), save that only he opened the same to one Mr Cotton of the Temple (a friend of his) a little before he suffered martyrdom. (Acts and Mon. 1684.) Vasa quae magis continent, minus sonant. (Seneca.) But empty casks sound loudest: and baser metals ring shrillest.

Whom he hath seen] Sight usually maketh love. Juvenal greatly wondereth at one, Qui nunquam visae flagrabat amore puellae, who loved a party whom he had never seen.

How can he love God] That is, saith Dr Rainolds, He that cannot endure to look on that little glimpse and ray of holiness which is in his brother, in one of the same infirmities and corruptions with himself, will much less be able to abide the light of the Sun of righteousness, and the most orient, spotless, and vast holiness that is in him.

Ver. 21. And this commandment we have from him] Lo, here a singular evidence of God's great love to us, that he commandeth us also the love of our neighbour as well as of himself: quasi non tam de se amando fuerit sollicitus, quam de proximo nostro diligendo, saith Aretius. Our Saviour therefore, summing up the law, joineth those two precepts, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all," &c., and "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." Yea, God prefers mercy before sacrifice; and is content that his own immediate service should be intermitted, rather than offices of love to our brother omitted. "Leave there thy gift, and go thy way; first be reconciled," #Mt 5:24.

Love his brother also] If he be a good man, love him in God; if bad, for God.

Chapter 5

Ver. 1. Whosoever believeth] viz. Firmly and fiducially, with assent of mind and consent of will. {See Trapp on "1Co 12:3"} {See Trapp on "Joh 1:12"}

Loveth him also that is begotten] His love, as Aaron's ointment, floweth down from the head to the meanest member. God's image, wheresoever it appeareth, is very lovely.

Ver. 2. That we love the children of God] Really, aright, and not for self or sinister respects. Godliness begins in the right knowledge of ourselves, and ends in the right knowledge of God. A Christian begins with loving God for himself, but he ends in loving himself and others in and for Christ.

Ver. 3. For this is, &c.] {See Trapp on "Joh 14:15"}

His commandments are not] {See Trapp on "Mt 11:30"}

Ver. 4. Even our faith] Which shows a man a better project, puts his head into heaven beforehand, gives him to taste of the hidden manna. Now his mouth will not water after homely provisions, that hath lately tasted of delicate sustenance. Are we afraid of men? saith one. Faith sets hell before us. Are we allured by the world? Faith sets heaven before us. It was by the force of his faith that Luther brake out into those words, Contemptus est a me Romanus et favor et furor; I care neither for Rome's fawnings nor frownings.

Ver. 5. But he that believeth] A believer walketh about the world as a conqueror. He saith of these things here below, as Socrates did when he came into a fair, and saw there sundry commodities to be sold, Quam multis ego non egeo? Nec habeo, nec careo, nec curo, as another said, I neither have these things, nor need them, nor care for them. He hath his feet where other men's heads are, #Pr 15:24 Re 12:1. He sets not his desire upon the asses, since he is assured of the kingdom. He looks upon the world as Hiram did on the cities Solomon had given him, which he called Cabul, that is, the land of dirt. His eye is upon Uranople, the new Jerusalem, the crowns and palms of that golden country. Children admire gawds <sup>{a}</sup> and gewgaws; <sup>{b}</sup> but let a nobleman (that hath been used to the pomp and bravery of the court) pass by a whole stall of such toys and trifles, he never casts his eye towards them.

<sup>{b}</sup> A gaudy trifle, plaything, or ornament, a pretty thing of little value, a toy or bauble. (ED)

Ver. 6. That came by water and blood] So to fulfil and answer the legal washings and sacrifices; so to signify that he justifieth none by his merit but whom he sanctifieth by his Spirit; and so to set forth the two sacraments of the New Testament. {See Trapp on "Joh 19:34"}

Ver. 7. Three that bear record] viz. That Jesus Christ is the Son of God. These three heavenly witnesses have given testimony hereof in earth. {See Trapp on "Joh 5:32"} {See Trapp on "Joh 8:18"}

These three are one] In essence and will. As if three lamps were lighted in one chamber, albeit the lamps be different, yet the lights cannot be severed; so in the Godhead, as there is a distinction of persons, so a simplicity of nature.

Ver. 8. The Spirit and the water] The Spirit of sanctification testified by saving graces and new divine gifts, the water of repentance, and the blood of Christ applied by faith. These be the three witnesses of a man's happiness here. When the waters of sanctification are troubled and muddy, let us run to the witness of blood.

Ver. 9. If we receive, &c.] If two or three witnesses establish a truth with men, shall we deny that honour to God's testimony?

Ver. 10. Hath the witness in himself] Carries in his heart the counterpane of all the promises.

Hath made him a liar] As one may deny God in deed as well as in word, so he may give him the lie too in like manner, sc. by going away, and not heeding all the grace that he offereth by Christ; for such a one saith in effect, Tush, there is no such thing as Christ; or at least no such benefit to be reaped by his passion as they would persuade us, &c.

Ver. 11. That God hath given to us, &c.] How plain is the Holy Scripture in things needful to salvation! These God hath written for us, as it were, with the beam of the sun, that none may plead difficulty. But we are, most of us, of the Athenian strain, of whom Cicero says the proverb went, Athenienses scire quae recta sunt, sed facere nolle, that they knew what was right, but had no mind to make use of it. (Cic. de Senect.)

Ver. 12. Hath life] For he is the prince and principle of life; and all out of him are dead while they live. Non ille diu vixit, sed diu fuit, saith Seneca of one; non multum navigavit, sed multum iactatus est, of another at sea; he was long, but lived little; he was much tossed, but not much furthered; he moved much, but removed not at all, as a horse in a mill, as a dog in a wheel, &c. {See Trapp on "Joh 1:4"}

And he that hath not the Son hath not life] Negatio contrarii auget vim affirmationis. #1Ki 20:1 De 33:6 Pr 30:11 1Sa 1:11. {See Trapp on "Joh 1:20"}

Ver. 13. That ye may know that ye have eternal life] sc. In the pledges and firstfruits of it, in the true graces of the Spirit, whereof there are many marks and evidences laid down in this Epistle, that we might be at a certainty; not a certainty of hope only (as Papists foolishly distinguish), but of faith too; even a full assurance.

That ye may believe] That ye may be confirmed, continued, and increased in it.

Ver. 14. According unto his will] One said he could have what he would of God; and, Fiat voluntas mea, saith Luther in a certain prayer, but then he finely falls off with mea voluntas, Domine, quia tua; let my will be done, Lord, but so far forth as it is thy will. This was the time when he prayed for the life of Miconius (who was fallen into a deep consumption) and prevailed with God for it.

Ver. 15. We know that we have] Iste vir potuit quod voluit, That man could do what he would with God, said one concerning Luther. {See Trapp on "Joh 15:16"}

We have the petitions that we desired of him] If we can perceive and discern that God listeneth, the thing is done. Now the former we may find, first, by a cast of God's countenance, by a smile of his face, #Ps 22:24 34:15, for a godly man is admitted to see as well as speak; like a good angel, he is ever looking on the face of God; and can gather by that how he shall speed in his suit. The upright shall dwell in his presence, #Ps 140:13, when the hypocrite shall not come before him, #Job 13:16. Secondly, By the answer of a man's own conscience, #1Jo 3:20. God answers us by this, as he did the high priest by Urim and Thummim, and as he answered Elijah by fire from heaven that consumed his sacrifice. This faithful petitioners seldom fail of, #Ps 35:13 6:8,9 Php 4:6,7.

Ver. 16. A sin which is not unto death] When John Frith and Andrew Hewer were at the stake, Dr Cook openly admonished all the people that they should in no wise pray for them, no more than they would do for a dog at which words Frith, smiling, desired the Lord to forgive him. (Acts and Mon. fol. 946.) In its own nature all sin is mortal; but in a saint being tempered with faith and repentance, it is as quicksilver tempered with ointment and killed.

There is a sin unto death] That unpardonable sin of doing despite to the Spirit of grace. Rockwood, a chief persecutor at Calais in the days of Henry VIII, to his last breath, staring and raging, cried, He was utterly damned; and being willed to ask God mercy, he brayed and cried out, "All too late! for I have sought maliciously the deaths of a number of the most honest men in the town, whom I knew to be so; all too late, therefore, all too late." Another that had committed this sin to death, wished that his wife and children and all the world might be damned together with him. (Mr Burroughs' Mos. Choice.)

Ver. 17. There is a sin not unto death] All sins and blasphemies shall be forgiven unto men, but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, &c. {See Trapp on "Mt 12:31"} {See Trapp on "Mt 12:32"} Every sin (in the desert considered) hales hell at the heels of it. Flagitium et flagellum ut acus et filum. There is no venial sin in itself. But the unpardonable sin is here distinguished from all other sins; 1. By the nature of it; it is not any one sin against the law, nor yet is it the direct breach of the whole law, #Heb 10:28; but it is a sin against the gospel, a wilful and malicious refusing of pardon upon such terms as the gospel offereth it, scorning to be beholden to God for any such free favour. 2. By the effect, it is a sin unto death, it is infallibly damning, there is no expiation, but a certain fearful expectation of fiery indignation to devour these adversaries, #Heb 10:27. God not suffering himself to be derided, nor his Spirit to be despited, smites them with an incurable blindness and reprobacy of mind; whereupon follows, 1. An impossibility of repentance, #Heb 6:6 2. A desperate fury whereby they continue raving and raging both against the physic and the physician, to their own endless ruth and ruin.

Ver. 18. Sinneth not] sc. That sin to death, #1Jo 5:16, nor other sins, as other men do. {See Trapp on "1Jo 3:9"}

And that wicked one toucheth him not] viz. Tactu qualitativo, as Cajetan expoundeth it, with a deadly touch; he thrusts not in his sting so far as to infuse the venom of that sin that is properly his sin, #Joh 8:44, and with which he toucheth their spirits that become the serpent's seed. He toucheth them not so as the needle is touched by the loadstone; so as to partake of his devilish spirit, and to be wholly carried after him.

Ver. 19. Lieth in wickedness] As a lubber in a lake, as a carcase in its slime. In fermento tota iacet uxor; My wife lies down entirely drunk, saith he in Plautus. "This people is wholly set upon wickedness," said Aaron, #Ex 32:22, is under the power and vassalage of the devil; Nil mundum in mundo. Nihil aliud est totus mundus ante conversionem, nisi aut hara porcorum, aut colluvies rabidorum canum, saith Austin. The whole world, before conversion, is not better than a filthy hog sty, or a kennel of mad dogs.

Ver. 20. And we know] This he brings in here for a corollary and conclusion of all.

Ver. 21. Keep yourselves from idols] Negatively at least (as those 7000 in Israel, that had not bowed their knees to Baal), if not positively, by open declaration of your utter dislike, as did Daniel and his associates. Irenaeus reproveth the heretics called Gnostici, for that they carried about the image of Christ in Pilate's time, after his own proportion; using also for declaration of their affection towards it, to set garlands upon the head of it; so soon crept this cursed sin into the primitive Church. Soon after the Council of Nice, arose a sharp contention between Irene the empress and her son Constantine VI, who destroyed images; for the which she unnaturally put out his eyes. About which time, as Eutropius writeth, the sun was darkened most terribly for 17 days together; God showing by that, how much he disliked those proceedings. Letters were sent by Queen Mary and her council, to examine Mr Flower why he wore about his neck written, Deum time, idolum fuge; Fear God and flee idolatry, to stir up Bishop Bonner to proceed against all that did the like. Arguments and authorities alleged by Bishop Ridley against images in churches may be read, Acts and Mon. fol. 1928, &c. Martin was much grieved that this sentence of St John was set in our churches, in the place where the rood loft {a} formerly stood.

{a} The cross upon which Christ suffered; the cross as the symbol of the Christian faith. Now only arch. ŒD

2 John

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. The elder to the elect lady] Salmeron the Jesuit saith (but very absurdly) that Seneca's letters to St Paul, and St Paul's to Seneca (as they are called), are for matter not much unlike this of St John to the Elect Lady, and to Gaius, and that of St Paul to Philemon. Iudicium sit penes lectorem. Methinks they are not more like than harp and harrow. See the note on Philemon, #Phm 19. That censure passed on him by Erasmus is very right; Si legas, &c.: If thou read Seneca as a pagan, he wrote Christianly; but if as a Christian, he wrote paganishly.

Ver. 2. For the truth's sake] This is the love that will hold again, and is a sure sign of love unfeigned, when it is thus well founded. Sinisterity is opposite to sincerity. Some love the saints as Isaac loved Esau, for the venison that he brought him, &c.

Ver. 3. Grace be with you, &c.] This blessing belongs not only to the lady and her children, but to all that rightly read and hear the words of this Epistle, #Re 1:13.

Ver. 4. I rejoiced greatly] This cheered up his good old heart more than any outward respects or courtesies whatsoever. See #1Th 3:8.

I found] εὗρηκα, I found by long and diligent observation, that which was worth finding; εὗρημα.

Of thy children] Not all, but some of them. It is seldom seen that all a whole family are right for religion. Noah had a Ham, Abraham an Ishmael, Isaac an Esau, &c.

As we have received a commandment] The gospel also commands obedience and holy conversation. Of unruly Christians, profligate professors, we may say, There's nothing Christian in them; as of cowards they were wont to say at Rome, There was nothing Roman in them. Truly, either this is not gospel (said learned Linaker, when he had read our Saviour's sermon in the mount) or we are not gospellers. A young man told the senators of Rome that he came for to see Rome, and found it not; for, said he, either ye be not Romans of Rome, or else this is not Rome of the Romans. We may even marvel as much as Constantius the emperor did, and say with him, I wonder how it comes to pass that many of my people are worse now than before they became Christians.

Walking in the truth] Not taking a step or two, not breaking or leaping over the hedge to avoid a piece of foul way, but persisting in a Christian course, &c., not starting aside to the right hand or the left.

Ver. 5. Not as though I wrote a new commandment] A new commandment our Saviour calleth it, #Joh 13:34. Quia exuto veteri induit nos novum hominem, as Austin gives the reason; because the old man being put off, it puts on us the new man. Or, as others, because when the scribes and Pharisees by false glosses and corrupt interpretations had put it out of date, Christ restored it by a true interpretation, #Mt 5:43-45, &c., and revived and illustrated it by his own practice and example, as Paul also observeth, #Eph 5:2 Php 1:9.

That we love, &c.] God lays no other commands upon us than what we may perform by love, that lighteneth and sweeteneth all. His subjects and soldiers are all volunteers, #Ps 110:3.

Ver. 6. As ye have heard] He studiously declines the suspicion of novelty. Τα καινα κενα. {See Trapp on "1Jo 2:7"}

Ver. 7. For many deceivers] Gr. πλανοι, cheaters, cozeners, (deceivers) such as can cog {a} a die to deceive the unskilful, #Eph 4:14, cast a mist to delude even the quick sighted.

Are entered into the world] Where the Church also sojourneth, as the unclean beasts were together with the clean in Noah's ark; or as Esau was in the same womb and afterwards in the same family with Jacob; or as thieves lodge in the same inn with true men, who should therefore be sober and watch. Mundus Medaea est Iasonis, hoc est Satanae sponsa. (Aretius.) The world is the spouse of Satan, and yet the godly must lie as it were in the lap of this Delilah. Let Samson look to his locks.

{a} The act of cogging or cheating at dice; a particular method or way of doing this. In quot. 1598, taken by some to mean 'false dice for cogging'; but it is coupled with 'devices' and 'shifts'. Obs. ŒD

Ver. 8. That we lose not, &c.] The godly, when they fall into foul courses, or grow remiss and leave their first love, may lose what they have wrought, 1. In respect of the praise of men; 2. In respect of their own former feelings of God's favour; 3. In respect of the fulness of their reward in heaven. The Nazarite that broke his vow was to begin all anew, #Nu 6:2-12.

Ver. 9. Hath not God] And so consequently hath nothing. Habet omnia qui habet habentem omnia, He hath all that hath the haver of all. (Aug.) But sine Deo omnis copia est egestas, Plenty without God becomes penury. (Bern.) The wicked, for want of God, in the fulness of his sufficiency is in straits, #Job 20:22; as he that hath God for his portion, in the fulness of his straits is in a sufficiency.

Ver. 10. And bring not this doctrine] If he hold not the foundation, but be found heterodox and heretical.

Receive him not, &c.] Illam domum in qua fuerit inventus haereticus diruendam decernimus, Down with that house that harbours a heretic, said the Council of Tholouse in their constitution against the Albigenes, whom they mistook for heretics.

Neither bid him God speed] Show not love where you owe nothing but hatred. "I hate every false way," saith David. And I shall look upon Auxentius as upon a devil, as long as he is an Arian, said Hilarius. St John sprang out of the bath wherein Cerinthus the heretic was washing, and said, Let us be gone, lest the house fall on our heads.

Ver. 11. Is partaker of his evil] 1. By his sinful silence and dissimulation. 2. Next, by confirming the sinner in his evil way. 3. Lastly, by offence given to others.

Ver. 12. That our joy may be full] See, saith one, an apostle furthered and quickened by the graces of a woman. When such grandees in grace have benefit by communion of saints, how much more they whose measures are less!

Ver. 13. The children of thine elect] Who probably sojourned with St John for education's sake. The lady might say to the apostle, as he in Virgil did to Aeneas,

“- *sub te tolerare magistro
Militiam—tua cernere facta*

Assuescant, primis et te mirentur ab annis.”

3 John

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. Unto the wellbeloved Gaius] A rich Corinthian, rich in this world and rich in good works; a rare bird, at Corinth especially, where St Paul found them the richer the harder, and far behind the poor Macedonians in works of charity, #Ro 16:23 1Co 1:14.

Ver. 2. That thou mayest prosper] Gr. ευοδοουσθαι, that thou mayest make a good voyage of it, and come safe and sound to thy journey's end.

Even as thy soul prospereth] By the blessing of him that dwelt in the bush, #De 33:16. Now the soul prospereth when it hath close communion with God, and enjoys the light of his loving countenance, preferring his favour before the world's warm sun.

Ver. 3. Testified of the truth] This was their ingenuity, thus, at least, to requite their host by giving testimony of his liberality, and this his liberality proved the truth of his faith, and his good estate to Godward, as did Dorcas's garments made for the poor. Lipsius conqueritur desiisse homines non modo laudanda facere, sed laudare. (l. ii. Epis. 70.)

Ver. 4. I have no greater joy] {See Trapp on "2Jo 4"}

Walk in truth] Not walk to the alehouse, walk about with tales to shed blood, walk after the flesh, as too many of our hearers do, to our singular heartbreak.

Ver. 5. Thou dost faithfully] That is, out of faith, and as beseemeth a faithful Christian. They that give alms, &c., and not out of faith, they do worse than lose their labour, for they commit sin.

And to strangers] Though they be not yet converted to the faith, and made brethren, thy liberality may work upon them, and win them, as Alban.

Ver. 6. After a godly sort] Gr. αξιωσ του Θεου, worthy of God, as seeing God in them, and as beseemeth his servants, who are princes in all lands, #Ps 45:16.

Ver. 7. They went forth] To preach and gain souls to God. And this they did gratis, as Paul, because the false apostles did so at Corinth, seeking occasion against the true teachers, #2Co 11:12.

Ver. 8. That we might be fellowhelpers] And so receive a prophet's reward. {See Trapp on "Mt 10:41"}

Ver. 9. I wrote unto the church] sc. Of Corinth, where Paul baptized Gaius, and where Diotrephes seems to have been a great sect-master, and chief of those deceitful workers that there so much disparaged Paul.

Diotrephes, who loveth, &c.] Ambition is like the crocodile, which groweth as long as it liveth. What stirs made proud Paulus Samosatenus in the primitive Church! What continual quarrelings were there between the bishops of Constantinople and of Rome for the primacy, and between the archbishops of Canterbury and of York for precedence! What a deal suffered learned Zanchy at Argentina from his ambitious colleagues; and various of our English divines and others, from the lordly prelates! Pareus was wont to say that the chief cause of all the Church's troubles was the Churchmen's affectation of dominion. This trouble town if we could cast out of the Church, said he, great hopes there were that we should all εις το θειον κηρυγμα ομοφρονως και ορθοδοξως συνδραμειν, concur and consent in one and the same truth. (Isidor. Pelus. iv. ep. 54.)

Ver. 10. Prating against us] One would wonder what he could prate against St John, and yet he did, and that maliciously. True it is, he did but trifle and play the fool (as the Greek word φλυαρων signifies) in that he prated; but he showed his malice nevertheless. So do the Jesuits, as in many other their practices, so in this, that in their writings against us they confirm that with glorious words and arguments which we stick not at; to make the world believe that we deny all that which they so busily and so bravely prove, and so to make us odious; whereas they leave the main matter in controversy utterly unproven, thinking to carry it away with outfacing and great words. The word signifieth pompose sed nugaciter loqui, to talk big bubbles of words, saith Aretius; who also telleth us that it is a metaphor taken from over-seething pots, that send forth a foam; or (as others will have it) from overcharged stomachs, that must needs belch.

Forbiddeth them that would] Such as Gaius was; that himself only might have the prick and the praise. This is the property of envy, as we see in Saul, in the Pharisees, in Tiberius Caesar, who, tiger-like, laid hold with his teeth on all the excellent spirits of his times. Nero etiam omnium erat aemulus, &c. He forbid Lucan the poet to make verses, only because he could do it very excellently.

Ver. 11. Follow not] Make not such a man as Diotrefes your pattern for imitation; though he ruffle it among you, and will needs be the only man.

Hath not seen God] sc. With the eyes of his mind, whatever he may boast of visions or revelations; believe him not.

Ver. 12. Of all men] Of all good men; for God reckons of men according to their goodness. As a good name only is a name, #Ec 7:1, and a good wife only a wife, #Pr 8:22.

And of the truth itself] That is enough. Doth the truth report well of a man? then he needs not care what the world can say.

And ye know that our record is true] This is one of John the Evangelist's praises, #Joh 21:24, and may confirm that he was the author of this and the two former Epistles. For this truth, we may better say of him than Sophronius doth of John Chrysostom, Nunquam eum mentitum fuisse, that he never told lie; and that he was eximium orbis terrarum luminare, as Theodoret styles him.

Yea, and we also] Which we do not use to do without special caution. It is a fault to be too forward to testify of any.

Ver. 13. I will not with ink] In vain is the word written in books, unless it be also written in our hearts, #Jer 31:33.

With paper] Which was of old made of a certain plant of Nile called Papyrus, but now it is made of rags, miro ingenio, et utili rebus mortalium, to the great benefit of mankind. (Aretius.)

Ver. 14. But I trust] He could promise nothing peremptorily, but submits to God. {See Trapp on "Jas 4:15"}

Face to face] As iron whets iron, so doth the face of a man his friend.

Jude

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. Jude the servant] To distinguish him from Judas the traitor, lest he should suffer by mistake, as Nicholas the deacon is thought to do, as if he were the author of the sect of the Nicolaitans, which Christ hated. This Jude or Judas, was also surnamed Lebbaeus, that is, hearty; as Hooper the martyr was called hearty Hooper. He was indeed a hearty friend to the truth, earnestly contending for the faith once delivered unto the saints; and ( haereticorum malleus ) a hammer against heretics, whom he describeth here to the life, and opposeth them to his utmost.

To them that are sanctified] Or to them that are beloved, as other copies have it.

Preserved] "Kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation," #1Pe 1:5.

Ver. 2. Mercy unto you, &c.] Mercy from the Father, peace from the Son, and love from the Holy Ghost.

Ver. 3. Of the common salvation] That wherein all saints have a share.

For the faith] That faith of the gospel, #Php 1:27, the doctrine of faith.

Once delivered] Once for all, not only as but one only rule, but as but once sent to a nation. So that if lost, or any way corrupted, it will not be given again; another edition of it is not to be expected. Contend earnestly for it, therefore, conflict one after another, as the word επαγωνιζεσθαι signifies. Hold fast the faithful word, as with both hands, #Tit 1:9. {See Trapp on "Tit 1:9"} Resolve either to live with the gospel, or to die for it. Be zealous in the defence of it, and strive your utmost. When Carolostadius opposed Luther's consubstantiation, but weakly, faintly, and insufficiently, Zuinglius said he was sorry that so good a cause wanted shoulder. Non satis humerorum haberet. In the conference at Possiacum in France, Beza

(speaker for the Protestants), entering into the matter of the Eucharist, spake with such heat, that he gave but ill satisfaction to those of his own party (saith the author of the History of the Council of Trent), so that he was commanded to conclude. How true this is I know not; sure it is, that in falling forward is nothing so much danger as in falling backward; so he that contendeth earnestly for the truth, though he may carry some things indiscreetly, yet he is far better than a faint chapman or a feeble champion. Austin was much heartened and hardened in his Manichism, because he met with weak opponents, such as his nimble wit could easily overturn.

Ver. 4. For there are certain men] Not worthy to be named, as that rich glutton, #Lu 16:19.

Crept in unawares] παρεισεδυσαν, stealing their passage, and making as if they minded nothing less. Thus Socrates (the writer of the Ecclesiastical History) was a close Novatian, as the learned Jacobus Billius observeth; he favoureth that heresy all along his history, sed ita oblique, ut minus perspicaci Lectori non tam dolori suo atque irae obsequi quam veritatis rationem habere videatur, but he doth it so cunningly, that a man would think he did it out of pure regard to the truth. (Observat. Sacrar. i. 26.) So Spondanus, the epitomizer of Baronius, drinks to his readers the pernicious poison of Hildebrand's heresies, quasi aliud agens, as if he intended no such matter.

Ordained to this] Gr. προγεγραμμενοι, written down, enrolled, set down in the black bill.

Turning the grace of our God] Gr. μετατιθεμενοι, translating it from its proper end, perverting it, by arguing from mercy to liberty, which is the devil's logic. Corruptio optimi est pessima. The corruption of the best is the worst. Learned men have conceived, saith Plutarch, that as of oxen, being dead and rotten, there breed bees, of horses wasps, of asses beetles; so men's bodies, when the marrow melteth and gathereth together, do bring forth serpents. The grace of God, if turned into wantonness, becometh the "savour of death unto death."

Ver. 5. Afterward destroyed] Their preservation was but a reservation, as was Sennacherib's, Pharaoh's, and theirs whom God threatened to destroy, after that he had done them good, #Jos 24:20.

Ver. 6. Kept not their first estate] Their original integrity or principality. Of this sin of the angels, the cause was the will of the angels, good in itself (but mutable and free), not by working either, but by not working, saith a divine.

But left their own habitation] Being driven thence and hurried into hell.

He hath reserved in everlasting chains, &c.] There are two sorts of chains, saith Mr Leigh. First, those which torment the devil, God's wrath, and his own conscience. Secondly, those which restrain him, his own finiteness, and God's providence.

Ver. 7. Giving themselves over] In scortationem effusae, wearying and wearing themselves out with that beastly sin, εκπορνευσασαι εκ επιτασιν habet; as did Proculus, Messalina, and Lais, who died in the act of uncleanness. (απεθανε βινουμενη, Athen. xiii.) The word here used signifies, saith Aretius, Scortationi immori, et contabescere illius desiderio, To waste and consume with that cursed concupiscence. Such a one was that filthy lecher mentioned by Luther, who desired no other heaven than to live always here, and be carried from one stews to another. He died between a couple of notorious strumpets.

And going after strange flesh] {See Trapp on "Ge 19:5"}

Are set forth] Gr. προκεινται, are thrown forth.

For an example] Herodotus saith the like of the destruction of Troy, that the ruins and rubbish thereof are set forth for an example of this rule, των μεγαλων αδικηματων μεγαλαι εισι και αι τιμωρια παρα του Θεου, that God greatly punisheth great offences.

Ver. 8. Likewise also] Or, yet nevertheless; albeit these dreadful executions are set before them for an example.

These filthy dreamers] Or, these sound sleepers, these whom the devil hath cast into a dead lethargy of damned security. (Sopiti.

Beza.) Or, these Nehelamites, that pretend dreams and divine inspirations. See #Jer 29:24,31.

Defile the flesh] By nocturnal pollutions, which we must pray against. The devil can fasten that filth upon the soul when we sleep, that he cannot do at another time.

Despise dominion] Gr. αθετουσι, set it at nought. {See Trapp on "2Pe 2:10"} Under pretence of Christian liberty, they "set it aside," they "put it from its place" with scorn and contempt.

And speak evil of dignities] Gr. blaspheme glories: so the Papists do familiarly those princes they count heretics, as Henry IV of France, whom they called Huguenot Dog, &c. Our Edward VI, bastard. Of Queen Elizabeth they reported in print some years after her death, that she died without sense or feeling of God's mercies. Sanders calleth her the English wolf; Rhiston, the English lioness, far surpassing in cruelty all the Athaliahs, Maacahs, Jezebels, Herodias, that ever were. Os durum! Harsh mouth. (Rivetti Jesuita vapulans, 263.)

Ver. 9. About the body of Moses] As desirous thereby to set up himself in the hearts of the living. There is a strange strife still, not of earthly, but of spiritual powers, about the possession of man's heart. If Satan can get that, he is safe. And so Satan's vicar. It was a watchword in Gregory XIII's time in Queen Elizabeth's days, "My son, give me thy heart." Be in heart a Papist, and go where you will, and do what you will.

Durst not bring against him a railing accusation, but said, The Lord rebuke thee] Let us also answer the devil in like sort: or as Grynæus (out of Chrysostom) when he sent back Pistorius's railing letters, not so much as opening the seal, Inhonestum est honestam matronam cum meretrice litigare, It is not seemly for an honest matron to scold with a base harlot.

Ver. 10. Of those things which they] So do the Papists in railing against imputed righteousness, assurance of salvation, the testimony of God's Spirit witnessing with our spirits, &c.

In those things they corrupt themselves] As in eating, drinking, carnal copulation, &c., holding neither mean nor measure, as he in Aristophanes (in Ranis), οστις γε πινειν ουδε και βινειν μονον, who was good for nothing else but to epicurize.

Ver. 11. In the way of Cain] The devil's patriarch, the first apostate; this was fulfilled literally in Alphonsus Diazus, who slew his brother John, because he was a Protestant; and mystically, in all that are guilty of spiritual parricide.

And ran greedily] Gr. εξεχυθησαν, were poured out, as water out of a bottle; they ran headlong after the wages of wickedness, not caring which way they came by it, so they had it. Instar aquae diffluentis proiecta est eorum intemperies, saith Calvin, their limitless lust-like water, ran all abroad, &c.

Ver. 12. These are spots] Or rocks, or muddy holes, that harpy-like {a} not only devour, but defile all that they touch, σπιλαδες, παρα το σπαν την ελην, a trahendo lutum.

In your feasts of charity] See these described by Tertullian (Advers. Genres, c. 39).

When they feast with you] Thrusting themselves into your company, whether invited or not; sin having wended an impudence in their faces.

Feeding themselves] As fatted cattle fitted for the slaughter.

Without fear] Of being ensnared by the creatures, #Pr 23:2.

Clouds they are] Light, and constant only in their inconstancy. The philosopher saith, Insalubre admodum caelum est quod pluviam promittit non, demittit, That is an unwholesome air that promiseth rain, but performs it not. It is ill conversing with these waterless clouds.

Twice dead] Killed with death, #Re 2:23. Such as for whom hell gapeth.

Plucked up by the root] Trees that are not for fruit are for the fire.

{a} Gr. and Lat. Myth. A fabulous monster, rapacious and filthy, having a woman's face and body and a bird's wings and claws, and supposed to act as a minister of divine vengeance. (ED)

Ver. 13. Raging waves of the sea] Unsettled, turbulent, and arrogant spirits; boldly belching out their abominable opinions and detestable doctrines.

Wandering stars] That were never better than meteors. Sir Francis Drake in his Travels reporteth that in a certain island to the southward of Celebes, among the trees night by night did show themselves an infinite swarm of fiery-like worms flying in the air, whose bodies, no bigger than an ordinary fly, did make a show, and give such light as if every twig on every tree had been a lighted candle, or as if that place had been the starry sphere. Lo, such were these impostors.

Ver. 14. And Enoch also] Enoch foretold the day of judgment before Noah the deluge. That day is longer before it comes, but shall be more terrible when it is come.

Behold] One calleth this word a starry note; another compares it to a hand in the margin of a book pointing to some notable thing; another compares it to the sounding of a trumpet before some proclamation, to procure attention; and it is no more than need, so heedless we are of our soul's health. Hence the heathen's hoc agite, Well this. in their sacred services. And the deacons in Chrysostom's time were appointed to call often upon the people in these words, Oremus, attendamus, Let us pray, let us pay attention. I am afraid, saith a divine, most of us do believe the predictions of Scripture but as we believe the predictions of an almanac, which tells you that such a day will be rain, and such a day will be wind; you think it may come to pass, and it may not. So here; such a threatening may be fulfilled, and it may not; let us venture it; it may be "the Lord will deal" with us not according to his present menaces, but "according to all his wondrous works," as those rebellious Jews suggested to Jeremiah, #Jude 21:2.

The Lord cometh] Syr. Maranatha. Hence the Jews say that the great excommunication Maranatha was instituted by Enoch.

With ten thousand of his saints] Or, with his holy myriads; sc. of saints and angels; he shall not leave one of them behind him in heaven, #Mt 25:31. And whereas it is said, The Lord cometh, it shows that he is already on his way, and will be with us shortly. Where St Jude had this prophecy of Enoch it much matters not. The Jews have yet to this day some relics of it in their writings. And Tertullian tells us (de Habitu Mulierum), (but who told him I know not), that the book of Enoch's prophecies were preserved by Noah in the ark, and that they continued and were read until the times of the apostles. But because they contained many famous testimonies concerning Jesus Christ, the Jews out of malice suppressed and abolished the whole book.

Ver. 15. To convince all] To set them down, to leave them excuseless, speechless, self-condemned, ελεγξαι.

Of all their hard speeches] Their rude, crude, crooked, cross speeches, uttered with perverse lips; so Solomon calls them, #Pr 4:24, as if the upper lip stood where the nether lip should.

Ver. 16. These are murmurers] Ut porci saginati, saith Aretius, as boars in a frank, they grunt against God's ways and worshippers, like so many Caii Grunnii Corocottae.

Complainers] Invalidum omne natura querulum, saith Seneca. Weak ones are never without their ailments.

After their own lusts] So many lusts, so many lords.

Great swelling words] Bubbles of words. See the note on #2Pe 2:18. The Syriac renders it, stupendous stuff. They amaze their hearers with sesquipedalian <sup>{a}</sup> words, and sublime businesses, big swollen fancies, &c.; they tell them they shall hear that which they never heard before, and therefore call upon them to mark; whereas the thing is either false, or if true, no more than ordinarily is taught by others: with as much confidence as ignorance they counsel the simple by portentous words and phrases abhorrent from Christian religion, truth, and sobriety; and which wise men lament while fools applaud and admire.

Having men's persons] Licking up their spittle, as it were, and loading the mouse with the elephant's praises. Ungunt pariter et emungunt.

{a} Of words and expressions (after Horace's sesquipedalia verba 'words a foot and a half long', A.P. 97):

Of many syllables. Ten dollar words! (ED)

Ver. 17. Of the apostles] Paul and Peter, from whom St Jude borroweth much from his Epistle. See my Preface to God's Love Tokens.

Ver. 18. Mockers] Who fleer {a} when they should fear. {See Trapp on "2Pe 3:3"}

Who should walk after their ungodly lusts] Gr. the lusts of ungodliness, whereby the heart is turned away from God and godliness.

{a} To laugh mockingly or scornfully; to smile or grin contemptuously; hence, to gibe, jeer, sneer. (ED)

Ver. 19. Who separate] From Church assemblies, upon pretence of newer lights, greater holiness. The Arabic renders it, intermitters, sc. of Church worship. Such as upon pretence of a more than ordinary holiness, and I know not what imaginary perfection, thought they might give over hearing of the word, as having immediate teaching; and separated from holy duties, as the words following show.

Sensual] Gr. ψυχικοί, animal; such as have no more than a reasonable soul, and are yet in their pure naturals, #1Co 2:14, and by their profane practices animas etiam incarnaverunt, have turned their very spirits into a lump of flesh.

Having not the Spirit] Unless it be the spirit of delusion, as Muncer the Anabaptist had, who wrote a book against Luther, dedicated it "To the most illustrious Prince Christ" (as his words are), uphraideth Luther with want of the Spirit, and calleth him a carnal man, a silly soul. (Scultet. Annal. 338.)

Ver. 20. Building up] By holy conference, a singular help, a most needful but too much neglected duty.

Praying in the Holy Ghost] Whose creature fervent prayer is.

Ver. 21. Keep yourselves] Remit nothing of your former fervour. But keep afoot and alive that twofold love of God: 1. That of desire, and earnest delight and intense longing after him, as our chiefest good. 2. Of delight and complacency, whereby we hug and embrace him, solacing ourselves in the fruition of him.

Ver. 22. And of some] Or (according to other copies), "Retell their false reasonings," and dispute them out of their errors, ελεειτε, alias ελεγετε.

Ver. 23. Out of the fire] viz. of hell; as the angel pulled Lot out of Sodom, as ye would save a drowning man, though ye pulled off some of his hair to save him. {a} Hic est depingendus Satan et Tartarus, et career atrocissimus et luctuoaous, in quo vere sit strider dentium et fletus, saith Aretins. Those that are obstinate, and receive not reproofs, are to be terrified and told of the horror of hell, those seas of vengeance, that worm that never dieth, torments without end and past imagination.

Even the garment spotted] As Nero's was, when he rode in the same horse litter with his own mother. (Sueton.) The phrase is thought to be taken either from legal impurities of leprous garments, by touching of which men were defiled, #Le 14:54-57; or else from the profuse drunkenness and filthiness of the Gnostics, which sometimes defiled their garments.

{a} Haec est sancta violentia, optabilis rapina. Jerome.

Ver. 24. That is able] q.d. I can only counsel you, it is God must keep you.

Ver. 25. {See Trapp on "1Ti 1:17"}

Revelation

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. The Revelation] Or manifestation of many divine mysteries by the Mediator (who came out of his Father's bosom) to John, who had the mind of Christ, and that purposely for the behoove and benefit of the family of faith, who are all of his cabinet council, #Joh 1:18 1Co 2:16 Ga 6:10 Ps 25:14.

Things which must shortly] That is, sooner or later in their proper season. God's time seems long, because we are short. Nullum tempus occurrit regi, saith the lawyer. The Ancient of days is not to be limited.

Ver. 2. Who bare record of the word] This John the divine, then, was John the Evangelist, whatever Dennis of Alexandria dispute to the contrary. It was Moses's honour (saith one), who was God's peculiar favourite, to be penman of the first book of the Old Testament; and it was John's honour, Christ's peculiar favourite, to be the penman of the last book of the New Testament.

Ver. 3. Blessed is he that readeth] sc. With attention, affection, application, and practice; as knowing that this book hath tot sacramenta, quot verba, so many words, so many mysteries (Jerome epist, ad Paulin.); and that these words are vivenda non legenda, not more to be read than to be lived, as one said once of the 119th Psalm. (Aegid. Abbas Norimberg.) Neither must we only live up to the words of this prophecy, but die for it also, and be content to be burned with it, if called thereto; as that holy martyr, who when he saw the Revelation cast into the fire with him, cried out, O beata Apocalypsis, quam bene mecum agitur qui tecum comburam! O blessed Revelation, how happy am I to be burned in thy company!

Ver. 4. From him which is] An august description of the Father by a manifest allusion to #Ex 3:14. Some critic reading the words  $\alpha\pi\omicron\ \omicron\ \omega\upsilon\ \kappa\alpha\iota\ \omicron\ \eta\upsilon$  as they lie in the original, would be apt to complain of an incongruity, and to say, Nove et duriter dictum. But God, methinks, should have leave given him by these Logodaedali, to pronounce his own name undeclined, and by an outrule, who himself is undeclined, and comes not under any rule. Non debent verba caelestis oraculi subesse regulis Donati. (Greg.)

And from the seven spirits] So the Holy Ghost is here called, for his manifold gifts and operations in the hearts of those seven, and all other Churches. In like sort he is called the seven golden pipes through which the two olive branches do empty out of themselves the golden oils of all precious graces into the golden candlestick the Church, #Zec 4:2,3. So some interpret those seven eyes upon one stone, #Zec 3:9, concerning the Spirit in his several operations upon Christ, according to #Isa 11:2. There is a prophetic perfection of this number of seven, with which the Spirit of God is much delighted in this prophecy; seven Churches, seven stars, seven candlesticks, seven lamps, seven seals, &c.

Ver. 5. And from Jesus Christ] Who is here set last of the three persons, because more is to be said of him; both as touching his threefold office, and a threefold benefit therehence redounding unto us.

That hath loved us] See #Eze 16:6-9. Christ, that heavenly pelican, revived his dead young ones with his own heart-blood. (Pierii Hieroglyph.) He saw the wrath of God burning about them, and cast himself into the midst thereof, that he might quench it. Judah offered to be bound that Benjamin might go free. Jonathan risked his life and quitted his kingdom for love of David. Arsinoe interposed her own body between the murderer's weapons and her children. But what was all this to this incomparable love of the Lord Jesus? When the Jews saw him weeping for Lazarus, "Behold," they say, "how he loved him." When we see him weeping, bleeding, dying for us, shall not we much more say so?

Ver. 6. And hath made us kings] To rule in righteousness, to lord it over our lusts, to triumph over and trample on all our spiritual adversaries, being more than conquerors through him that loved us, and laid down his life for us, that we might reign in life by one Jesus Christ, #Ro 5:17. And surely if (as Peter Martyr once wrote to Queen Elizabeth) kings are doubly bound to serve God, both as men and kings; what are we, for this spiritual kingdom

And priests unto God] To offer up to him the personal sacrifice of ourselves, #Ro 12:1, the verbal of praise, and real of alms, #Heb 13:15,16. {See Trapp on "1Pe 2:9"}

Ver. 7. Behold, he cometh] He is already upon the way, and will be with us shortly. Let us hasten his coming, and say, as Sisera's mother, Why are his chariots (his clouds) so long in coming? Why tarry the wheels of his chariots? #Jud 5:28.

Shall wail] Gr. κοπονται, shall smite their breasts or thighs; the elect as repenting, the reprobate as despairing. Iisdem quibus videmus, oculis, flemus; so here, οπονται και κοπονται, they shall look and lament.

Ver. 8. Which is, and which was] The Father is called "He that is," #Ex 3:14. The Son "He that was," #Joh 1:1. The Holy Ghost, "He that cometh," #Joh 16:8-13, as Aretius observeth. Or, by this periphrasis may be understood the indeterminable eternity of the Son of God. Much like whereunto both in sound and sense is that which the heathens ascribed to their Jupiter in that solemn hymn of theirs. (Pausan.)

Ζευς ην, Ζευς εστι, Ζευς εσσεται, ω μεγαλε Ζευ.

"God was, and God is, God shall be for ever a great God."

Ver. 9. In the kingdom and patience] Christ hath a twofold kingdom; 1. Of power; 2. Of patience. Nec nisi per angusta ad augusta, &c. I have no stronger argument against the pope's kingdom, saith Luther, quam quod sine cruce regnat, than this, that he reigns without the cross. The glory of Christ's Church (said George Marsh, martyr) stands not in outward shows, in the harmonious sound of bells and organs, nor yet in the glistening of mitres and copes, &c., but in continual labours and daily afflictions for his name's sake. (Acts and Mon. fol. 1423.)

Was in the isle Patmos] He tells us not how he came thither, he boasteth not of his banishment. Virtus proprio contenta theatro, Virtue is no braggart. Eusebius telleth us that he was banished thither by Domitian; and that there he wrote his Revelation. In allusion whereunto, Luther called the place Patmos where he lay hidden by the elector of Saxony, when the emperor had proscribed him, and promised a great reward to any one that should bring him alive or dead to the court. Here it was that Luther translated the New Testament into Dutch, and wrote divers useful treatises, viz. at Wartburg, his Patmos. (Scultet. Annul.)

Ver. 10. I was in the Spirit] Acted by him, and carried out of himself, as the demoniac is said to be in the unclean spirit, as being acted and agitated by him. {See Trapp on "2Pe 1:21"}

On the Lord's day] The first day of the week, the Christian sabbath, #Mt 24:20, called the Lord's day, from Christ the author of it; as is likewise the Lord's supper, and the Lord's Church, kirk, κυριακη, the very word here used. To sanctify this sabbath was in the primitives a badge of a Christian. For when the question was asked, Servasti Dominicum? Keepest thou the sabbath? The answer was returned, Christianus sum, intermittere non possum, I am a Christian, I must keep the Lord's day. This day was also called anciently dies lucis, the day of light (as Junius observeth), partly because baptism (which the ancients called φωτισμον), was administered on that day; but principally, because by the duties of this day rightly performed, the minds of men are illuminated, and they translated out of darkness into Christ's marvellous light.

And heard behind me] Not before me; implying that the Spirit calleth upon us, being secure, passing by, and not regarding those things it calls for.

As of a trumpet] To teach us that the things here delivered to the Church must be ever sounding in our ears and hearts, indwelling richly in us, #Col 3:16. I confess the matter is very mysterious and obscure. Hence Cajetan's exponat cui Deus concesserit, Let him expound it that can; I can say little to it. Hence Calvin (as Bodine reports him, Method. Hist. vii.) being asked his opinion about the Revelation, ingenuously confessed, se penitus ignorare quid velit tam obscurus scriptor; &c., That he, for his part, knew not what to make of it. Hence also Graserus, Mihi inquit, tota Apocalypsis valde obscura videtur; et talis cuius explicatio citra periculum vix queat tentari; Methinks, saith he, the whole book of the Revelation is wondrous dark, and indeed such as without danger of doing amiss, a man can hardly take in hand to interpret. I confess that I have hitherto profited less by the reading of no part of the Bible than by this so very dark a prophecy: thus he. Howbeit difficulty doth but whet on heroic spirits; and obscurity should not weaken but waken our diligence. God would have us to inquire into these things, though they be far above us; what else meaneth this trumpet, and that blessing so solemnly proclaimed with the sound of a trumpet, to him that readeth, and those that hear the words of this prophecy? #Re 1:3. All cannot read, but all must hear. And let him that readeth or heareth, understand, #Mt 24:15. What if there be a veil laid over this Revelation, will it not be ratified by reading, and by degrees wholly worn away? Especially, if when we open the book we pray with David, "Lord, open mine eyes, that I may see the wondrous things of thy word": and not pray only, but weep, as St John did, till this sealed book were opened.

Ver. 11. Send it to the seven] As all Holy Scripture, so this piece especially, may well be called, The Epistle of Almighty God to his creature. (Greg. Mag.) It is directed to these seven Churches, because then the most famous and flourishing. There also this evangelist had long time taught; and, as some say, was president over them.

Which are in Asia] sc. in Asia the Less, which therefore haply bears the name of the whole, because it was the Asia of Asia, like as Athena was called the Greece of Greece.

Ver. 12. And being turned I saw] It is well observed here by a learned interpreter (Mr Brightman), that every godly endeavour doth receive some fruit greater than a man can hope for; John turned himself to behold the man, and behold (over and besides) seven candlesticks, which he had not the least suspicion of.

Seven golden candlesticks] Candlesticks the Churches are called, for the light they have and give; golden, for their worth and price; as much above other men as gold is above other metals. As God is the gold of his people ("the Almighty shall be thy gold," saith Eliphaz, #Job 22:25), so they are his; yea, his peculiar treasure: they comprehend all his gettings, #Tit 2:14, they are the people of his acquisition, #1Pe 2:9.

Ver. 13. And in the midst] Christ is in the holy assemblies, in the beauties of holiness; he walketh in his garden, #So 6:1, he comes in to see his guests, #Mt 22:11. The face of God is seen in Sion, #Ps 84:7.

A garment down to the feet] As a counsellor, #Isa 9:6.

And girt] It implies readiness, nimbleness, handiness, and handsomeness. We also must gird ourselves, and serve the Lord Christ, #Lu 17:8.

About the paps] This implies his entire love, seated in the heart.
Ver. 14. White like wool] Noting his antiquity, or rather his eternity and unspeakable purity. Thales, one of the heathen sages, called God πρεσβυτατον των οντων, the most ancient of beings. (Diog. Laert.)

As a flame of fire] Sharp and terrible, such as pierce into the inward parts, #Heb 4:13. {See Trapp on "Heb 4:13"} The school of nature teacheth, that the fiery eye needeth not outward light; that seeth extra mittendo, by sending out a ray, &c.

Ver. 15. And his feet] He stood firm then when he was cast into the fire of his Father's wrath. He trod the winepress alone, and set his feet on the necks of all his and our enemies. He lost no ground, when he grappled with the devil on his own dunghill, #Mt 4:1-11 "He will also bruise Satan under our feet shortly," #Ro 16:20.

As the sound of many waters] Audible, terrible, forcible. Some Catadupes are deafened by the fall of this Nile. (Som. Scip.) But the spouse cries out, "O thou that dwellest in the gardens, the companions hearken to thy voice; cause me to hear it," #So 8:13.

Ver. 16. And he had in his right hand] See here the dignity and safety of a faithful minister. While a child hath his father by the hand, though he walk in the dark, he fears nothing. Godly ministers not only have Christ by the hand (who as he will not cast away a perfect man, so neither will he take the ungodly by the hand, saith Bildad, #Job 8:20), but are held fast in Christ's right hand, "that teacheth him terrible things," #Ps 45:4, against such as seek to pull them thence. It is well observed by a worthy writer, that about the time of the silencing of ministers, many churches in England were torn at once (within our remembrance) with terrible lightning; and almost no place else but churches were touched, especially in the lower parts of Devonshire, where many were scorched, maimed, and many had their brains struck out, as they sat in churches; as at the church of Anthony in Cornwall, near Plymouth, on Whit Sunday, 1640. (See the account in print.)

A sharp two-edged sword] The word, like a sacrificing sword, slits open, and, as it were, unridgeth the conscience.

Ver. 17. I fell at his feet as dead] The nearer any one comes to Christ, the more rottenness entereth into his bones.

And he laid his right hand] The same right hand wherein he held the seven stars, #Re 1:16. Christus sic omnibus attentus, ut nulli detentus; sic curat universos quasi singulos, sic singulos, quasi solos. Every godly minister is Christ's particular care.

Fear not] Till ridden of fear we are not fit to hear.

Ver. 18. That liveth and was dead] So can every regenerate man say, #Lu 16:31 Eph 2:1. {See Trapp on "Eph 2:1"} All saints are "heirs of the grace of life," #1Pe 3:7.

And have the keys] The pope, therefore, is not key keeper, as he falsely boasteth, telling us, that God hath put under his feet the beasts of the field, the fowls of the air, and the fish of the sea; that is (as he interprets it), all the souls in earth, heaven, and purgatory. Christ, as a conqueror, hath the keys of hell and death delivered unto him.

Ver. 19. Write the things which thou hast seen] That is, the gospel, the history of Christ (as some think), which he wrote at Ephesus after his return from Patmos, over forty years after our Saviour's death.

Ver. 20. The mystery] In this whole book there are so many words, so many mysteries, which made Cajetan forbear to comment upon it; {a} though many monks (far less able than he) thought it a goodly thing to be meddling in these mysteries, which they as little understood as he that derived Apocalypsis of Apo, re, et clipsor, quod est velo, quoth Faber the Augustinian monk.

Are the angels] Ministers are fitly called stars, which affect these inferior things by motion, light, and influence.

Are the seven churches] Lighted by Christ the High Priest morning and evening continually; and thereby as much differenced from the rest of the world, as Goshen was from Egypt in that palpable darkness. But now (alas) they have sinned away the light, and are fearfully darkened. Let us take heed how we put our light, not under a bushel but under a dunghill, as do our libertines, so that we may well cry out with Polycarp, Deus, ad quae nos tempora reservasti? Lord, what times are these?

{a} Apocalypsim fateor me nescire exponere iuxta sensum literalem: exponat cui Deus concesserit.

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. Unto the angel] This was Timothy, as some think; who not stirring up the gift of God that was in him, had remitted somewhat of his former fervour. By the style here given him ("angel") he is monished not more of his dignity than of his duty. That angel at Bochim, #Jud 2:1, is thought to have been Phineas. And some interpret that of Solomon, "Neither say thou before the angel, that it was an error of the priest," #Ec 5:6. It is good counsel to ministers that one gives, Angelorum induistis nomen, induite et naturam, ne sit (ut digit nonnemo) nomen inane, crimen immane: Ye have put on the name, put on also the nature of angels; lest an empty name fill up the measure of your sins.

Of the church of Ephesus] εφεσις or εφεσι. Languishing Ephesus hath not her name for nought; for she was so named of remissness or slackening her hold, wherewith she is here upbraided, Conveniunt rebus nomina saepe suis.

Ver. 2. I know thy works and thy labour] Not thy works only, but thy labour in doing them, and what ends thou puttest upon them. How accurately did our Saviour cast up and count how long the multitude had been with him, how little they had to eat, how ill it would fare with them if sent away fasting, &c., #Mt 15:32.

And how thou canst not bear] Moved with a zeal of God, and having a stomach for him. Mihi sane Auxentius nunquam aliud quam diabolus erit, quia Arianus, saith Hilary: I shall look upon Auxentius as upon a devil, so long as he is an Arian.

Ver. 3. And hast borne] Bear the false apostles thou couldst not; but hast borne much from them. Morientium nempe ferarum violentiores sunt morsus. Beasts bite hardest when to bite their last.

Ver. 4. Thou hast left thy first love] Those first ripe fruits that Christ's soul desireth, #Mic 7:1, that kindness of youth, that spousal love, that God so well remembereth, #Jer 2:2. This Ephesus had left, and so became Aphesis, remiss and reckless, possessed with a spirit of sloth and indevotion. And surely he is a rare and happy man that can say in a spiritual sense (as it was said of Moses), that after long profession of zeal, his sight is not waxed dim, his holy heat not abated, that runs not retrograde, as did Solomon, Asa, others, with whom the end was worse than the beginning.

Ver. 5. From whence thou art fallen] viz. From thy former feelings and present fitness for God's kingdom, #Lu 9:62.

And repent] See the practice of this second repentance in the relapsed spouse returning to her old husband, #So 5:6. {See Trapp on "2Co 7:11"} See an excellent letter of the Lady Jane to that apostate Harding, sometime her chaplain, Acts and Mon. fol. 1292, and what sweet counsel Bradford afterwards gave the same Harding, lb. fol. 1564, besides the example of Mr Bartlet Green, martyr, fol. 1680.

And do the first works] Begin the world again (as the Nazarite was to do that had broken his vow, #Nu 6), and, to set thee up afresh, make a gathering of prayers, and see that thy works be better at last than at first.

And remove thy candlestick] Sins are the snuffs that dim our candlestick and threaten the removal of it. And surely if we repent not, a removal thereof may be as certainly foreseen and foretold as if visions and letters were sent us from heaven, as to these seven Churches. There is a prophecy in Thelesphorus, reported, that Antichrist shall never overcome Venice, nor Paris, nor London; but we have a more sure word of prophecy here. This nation is sick of a spiritual pleurisy; we begin to surfeit on the bread of life. When God sees his mercies lying under table, it is just with him to call to the enemy to take away.

Except thou repent] Minatur Deus ut non puniat. God therefore menaceth, that men may be warned. As a bee stings not till provoked; so neither doth God punish till there be no remedy, #2Ch 36:16. Currat ergo poenitentia, ne procurrat sententia, saith one; mittamus preces et lacrymas cordis legatos, saith another. Haste, haste, haste, to meet the Lord with entreaties of peace; lest we be laid waste as Sodom and desolate as the people of Gomorrah, #Isa 1:9.

Ver. 6. But this thou hast] That they might not say, when called upon to repent, Nay, but there is no hope, #Jer 2:25 18:12. Christ picks out that which is praiseworthy in them, and commends it. Despair carries men to hell, as the devils did the swine into the sea; cast not away therefore your confidence, &c.

The works of the Nicolaitans] Who taught a community of wives, and that it was but a thing indifferent to commit adultery. (Irenaeus, Theod.)

Ver. 7. Let him hear] Not with that gristle only that grows upon his head, but with the ear of his heart. Let him draw up the ear of his heart to the ear on his head, that one sound may pierce both. Or, Let him hear what, &c., that is, Let him hear for himself, hear and know that (each member for his own good) that was delivered to the whole Church.

To eat of the tree of life] This tree is Christ. The devil also (as he loves to be God's ape) hath prompted Mahomet to promise to such as die in war for the Mahometan faith, delicious fare in Paradise, pleasant walks, and other sensual delights eternally to be enjoyed, notwithstanding any former sins.

Ver. 8. Of the church in Smyrna] Sweet smelling Smyrna, the poorest but purest of the seven.

Ver. 9. I know thy works and tribulations] Mark (saith one) the conjunction, "works and tribulations." Active stirring Christians are like to suffer much. Of Sardis and Laodicea only, we read not of any troubles they had.

And poverty, but thou art rich.] Poverty discommends not any to Christ; money bears no mastery in his kingdom. Thou art poor, saith he here; but that is neither here nor there; it is a matter of nothing, that, stumble not therefore at the Church's poverty. She is ever rich: 1. In reversion, and hath heaven and happiness; she is ever rich in bills and bonds. 2. In an apparent pledge that is worth all the world besides; that is, in Christ. If he have given us his Son, &c. All is yours who are Christ's, &c.

That say they are Jews] That is, right worshippers, as the Turks at this day style themselves Mussulmans, that is, the only true believers; Papists, the only Catholics. Faciunt et vespae favos, et simiae imitantur homines. Cyprian.

Ver. 10. Fear none of those things] Quit thy heart of that cowardly passion, and die rather than deny the truth. Put on that resolution, Necesse esse ut eam, non ut vivam, Duty must be done, though I die for it.

Behold, the devil] viz. By his imps and instruments whom he acts and agitates, #Eph 2:2. But he and his are overruled and limited; for he shall cast some of you, not all of you, into prison, not into hell, that ye may be tried, not destroyed; and this for ten days only, not for any long continuance.

Be thou faithful unto death] Say as one martyr did, "The heavens shall sooner fall than I will deny my dear Lord"; and as another martyr, "Though you may pluck my heart out of my bowels, yet shall you never pluck the truth out of my heart."

A crown of life] A crown without cares, corivals, envy, end. Kings' crowns are so weighty with cares, that often they make their heads ache. Not so this crown; the joys whereof are without measure or mixture.

Ver. 11. Shall not be hurt of the second death] Shall not be killed with death, as #Re 2:23. Death shall not be to him (as it is to the wicked) a trap door to hell, but ianua vitae, porta caeli, door of life and the gate of heaven, an inlet into life eternal. (Bern.)

Ver. 12. And to the angel] {See Trapp on "Re 2:1"} {See Trapp on "Re 1:16"}

Ver. 13. Even where Satan's seat is] There was the court of King Attalus ( discedat ab aula Qui velit esse pius; " flee thee away, O thou seer, for this is the king's court," #Am 7:13), and there was afterwards the seat of the Roman persecuting proconsuls, Qui ab

ascensore suo Satana perurgebantur, as Bernard hath it. Such a seat of Satan is both old and new Rome. At Constantinople (which was called new Rome) Arius, that arch-heretic, sedens in latrina effudit intestina, voided his entrails at the stool, and left Mahometism there behind him as his excrement. Yet, as at Pergamos also God had a Church, so hath he still even at Constantinople; the patriarch whereof, Cyril, hath lately set forth a confession of the faith of those Eastern Churches, agreeable in all points almost to the Protestant religion, but diametrically opposite to Popery.

Thou holdest fast] κρατεις, as with tooth and nail, or by main strength.

Who was slain] An honour not granted to the angels of heaven, as Latimer was wont to say.

Ver. 14. I have a few things] More he might have had, but the Lord is not extreme to mark what is amiss in his weak but willing people. The high places were not removed; nevertheless (though that was his fault) the heart of Asa was perfect all his days, #2Ch 15:17.

And to commit fornication] Nothing hath so enriched hell (saith one) as fair faces. These were those Balaam's stumblingblocks that Israel so stumbled at.

Ver. 15. The doctrine of the Nicolaitans] {See Trapp on "Re 2:6"} In the year 1067, the popish synod of Milan made laws against simony {a} and the heresy of the Nicolaitans; by which latter they meant priest's marriage. Brutum fulmen, novum crimen. Heavy blow, new sins.

{a} The act or practice of buying or selling ecclesiastical preferments, benefices, or emoluments; traffic in sacred things. (ED)

Ver. 16. Or else I will come unto thee] He was in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks before. But when he comes to correct, he comes out of his place, #Isa 26:21, and it is a motion that he hath no such mind to, #La 3:33, it is to do his work, his strange work, #Isa 28:21.

With the sword of my mouth] With fearful threatenings, terrible executions, having vengeance in readiness for the disobedient, #1Co

10:6. Elisha had his sword as well as Jehu and Hazael theirs, #1Ki 19:17. See #Ho 6:5 Jer 1:10 Isa 11:4.

Ver. 17. Of the hidden manna] That is, of Christ, whom none of the princes of this world knew; but God hath revealed him to his hidden ones by the Spirit, #1Co 2:8,10 cf. Ps 83:3, and given them to taste of that heavenly gift.

A white stone] In token of absolution. With this white stone may the saints comfort themselves against all the black coals wherewith the world seeks to besmear them. If Libanius could say, βασιλειου με επαινεσαντος κατα παντων εχω τα νικητηρια (In epist, ad Basil.), Let Basil praise me, and I shall sing away all care, whoever reproacheth me; may not we much more say so of Christ? "It is he that justifieth us; who shall condemn us?" #Ro 8:34.

A new name] Better than that of sons and daughters, #Isa 56:5. The assurance whereof is (saith Father Latimer) the deserts of the feast of a good conscience, which is inconceivable and full of glory.

Ver. 18. Who hath his eyes, &c.] {See Trapp on "Re 1:14"} {See Trapp on "Re 1:15"}

Ver. 19. The last to be more] This is not every man's happiness. {See Trapp on "Re 2:4"} It is a disputable question (saith one) whether any Christian (except he die soon after his conversion) do go on from strength without some sensible decay of the inward power of that grace wherewith he is endued.

Ver. 20. Thou sufferest that woman Jezebel] It is a fault, then, not only to be active in evil, but to be passive of evil. Non faciendo malus, sed patiendo fuit, said the poet concerning the Emperor Claudius. The kings of the earth are taxed, #Re 18:9., for not rooting out the Romish religion and setting up the truth.

Ver. 21. And I gave her space to repent] "In space comes grace" proves not always a true proverb. They that defer the work, and say that men may repent hereafter, say truly, but not safely. The branch that bears not timely fruit is cut off. #Joh 15:2. The ground that yields not a seasonable and suitable return is nigh unto cursing, #Heb 6:8. The chick that comes not at the clucking of the hen becomes a prey to the kite, &c.

Ver. 22. Behold, I will cast her into a bed] A bed of affliction for that bed of security upon which she had stretched herself, #Am 6:4.

God hath his season, his harvest for judgment, #Mt 13:30. Men may expect a time of healing when they shall find nothing else but a time of trouble, #Jer 14:19. One may defer a sore till it be incurable. See #Eze 24:13.

Ver. 23. And I will kill her children with death,] All men die (saith a divine, descanting upon this text), but all are not killed with death. As a godly man said, that he did aegrotare vitaliter; to be sick so as to endow with life, so godly men do mori vitaliter. die so as to endow with life. He that can so die, is fit to die; and the contrary. Oh, it is a woeful thing to be killed with death.

Ver. 24. But unto you I say] Here Christ comes with his fan, shedding and shoaling out his own from others, that they might not be disheartened, when worse men were menaced,

The depths of Satan] That science falsely so called, #1Ti 6:20. Those profound points, which the impostors professed and pretended to: as the Gnostics, who would needs be held the only knowing men; the Illuminates, and other seducers, who had taken up a trick to qualify their devilish doctrines with the name of depths or profundities. Depths they are granted to be, but depths of the devil; the whisperings and hissing of that old serpent, not the inspirations of God's Spirit.

Ver. 25. Hold fast] κρατησατε, hold by strong hand, tug for it, with those that would take it from you.

Ver. 26. And keepeth my works] In opposition to Jezebel's works, q.d. that keepeth himself unspotted from the world, that foul lust that lieth in that wicked one, #1Jo 5:19.

Ver. 27. And he shall rule them] q.d. I will communicate myself wholly to him. See #Ps 139:6-9 Mt 19:28 1Co 6:2,3.

Ver. 28. I will give him the morning star] i.e. I will clear his wronged innocence, #Ps 37:6, and grant him a glorious resurrection, #Da 12:3.

Ver. 29. He that hath an ear] {See Trapp on "Re 2:7"}

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. I know thy work] Sapiens nummularius Deus est; nummum fictum non recipiet. (Bernard.) Though men may be deceived, God is not mocked. He knows that many cry, "The temple of the Lord," that yet nothing care for the Lord of the temple. Deifica professio et diabolica actio. (Ambrose.) God likes not such creaking and cracking.

And that thou hast a name] Many content themselves with a name of Christians; as if many a ship hath not been called Safe-guard or Good-speed which yet hath fallen into the hands of pirates.

And art dead] All thy specious works therefore are but dead works; thou canst not serve the living God.

Ver. 2. Be watchful] Rouse up thyself, and wrestle with God, shake thee out of sin's lethargy, as Samson went out and shook him when the Philistines were upon him.

That are ready to die] Because tainted with the infection of hypocrisy, that pernicious mangood.

Perfect before God] Gr. full, without halting or halving. Omnis Sarmatarum virtus extra ipsos. (Tacitus.) All the hypocrite's goodness runs outward; it is shored up by popularity, or other base respects.

Ver. 3. And thou shalt not know] Calamity the more sudden, the more terrible; for, 1. It amates and exanimates a man, as an unexpected storm doth a mariner, and as Satan intended Job's messengers should do him. 2. It can as little be prevented as Eglon could prevent Ehud's deadly thrust.

Ver. 4. Thou hast a few names] Though no thanks to the pastor, who was a mercenary eye-servant. Here the people's praise is the pastor's shame. These good souls were but few, their names (as one said of the good emperors) might have been written within the compass of a ring. Rari quippe boni (Juvenal, Sat. 13); Diaconos paucitas honorabiles feicit, saith Jerome. Christ's flock is little. Few received him in the flesh, #Joh 1:12; he wondered at one good Nathanael. At his coming shall he find faith upon the earth? Yes, sure, saith one; now he may find many faiths; such as they be; so many men, so many faiths, but few that hold faith and a good conscience together, #1Ti 1:19, whereby they have put on Christ, #Ga 3:27 Eph 4:24 Re 16:15.

They shall walk with me in white] That is, they shall be glorified with perfect righteousness, purity, charity, dignity, and festivity.

For they are worthy] In Christ's account and acceptance. Like as those were not worthy that came not when called to the participation of his benefits, #Mt 22:8.

They are worthy] Non dignitate sua, sed dignatione divina. Or, They are worthy, not absolutely, but in comparison of those before mentioned.

Ver. 5. Clothed in white] {See Trapp on "Re 3:4"}

The book of life] Wherein the just that live by faith are written.

But I will confess his name] His well-trying faith shall be found to praise, honour, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ, #1Pe 1:7.

{See Trapp on "1Pe 1:7"}

Ver. 6. {See Trapp on "Re 2:7"}

Ver. 7. That is holy] And therefore to be "sanctified in righteousness," #Isa 5:16.

True] And therefore to be trusted.

That hath the key of David] And is therefore to be sought unto for a door both of utterance and of entrance, #Col 4:13 2Co 2:12 Ac 16:14.

Ver. 8. An open door] A fair opportunity of doing thyself good; which those that go about to deprive thee of shall be sure to lose oleum et operam, their toil and tallow.

A little strength] A little grace well improved may do great matters, and set heaven open to a soul. The vine is the weakest of trees, but the most fruitful. Philadelphia with her little strength is discommended for nothing, she made all best use of it.

Ver. 9. I will make them] The conversion of the Jews shall be the wonder of the Gentiles.

Which say they are Jews, and are not] The perverse Jews at this day pretend (but maliciously) that those few Jews that turn

Christians are not of them, but poor Christians hired from other places to personate their part. (Blount's Voyage, p. 112.)

That I have loved thee] The Church is την ψυχην την ηγαπημενην, the "dearly beloved of God's soul," #Jer 12:7, or (as the Septuagint render it) his beloved soul.

Ver. 10. The word of my patience] So called,

1. Because we must suffer for the truth of it.
2. Because, hid in the heart, it worketh patience.

I will keep thee] From the hurt, if not from the smart of it; from the common distraction, if not from the common destruction.

Which shall come upon all the world] So the Romans in their pride called their empire.

To try them that dwell] sc. By that sharp and sore persecution under Trajan the emperor.

Ver. 11. That no man take thy crown] Not that crown of eternal life (for that is unlosable), but that honour that God hath put upon thee, #Re 3:9. A Christian may, by falling into reproachful courses, "lose what he hath wrought," #2Jo 8 1. In respect of the praise of men. 2. In respect of inward comfort. 3. In respect of the degrees of glory in heaven; he may miss being a pillar in the temple of God, as #Re 3:1.

Ver. 12. Will I make a pillar] Pillars are both the firmament and ornament of temples. Understand it of that fulness and constancy both of grace and of glory in heaven.

Which is new Jerusalem] It was a pride in Montanus to overween his Peruza and Tymium (two pelting parishes in Phrygia) and to call them Jerusalem, as if they had been the only churches. (Euseb. v. 15.) And surely, it is nothing else but pride in the Brownists to avow that their churches are nothing less than the new Jerusalem coming down from heaven: that the very crown, sceptre, and throne of Christ's kingdom consists in them. (See Mr Bailey's Dissuasive, p. 17.)

My new name] viz. That which he received from his Father in his exaltation, #Eph 1:20 Php 2:9.

Ver. 14:. And unto the angel] Archippus, it may be; for he was a pastor here, and began to cool long before this, #Col 4:17.

These things saith the Amen] The God of Amen, as Isaiah calleth him, faithful in performing his promises to the remnant that he reserved in this lukewarm Church, among so careless a multitude. To these Christ became a beginning of the creation of God; so the new birth is here called, as being of no less fame and wonder than the making of the world.

Ver. 15. That thou art neither cold] Such are our civil justiciaries, political professors, neuterpassive Christians; a fair day mends them not, and a foul day pairs them not; peremptory never to be more precise; resolved to keep on the warm side of the hedge, to sleep in a whole skin, suffer nothing, do nothing, that may interfere with their hopes or prejudice their preferments.

I would thou wert] Better be a zealous Papist than a lukewarm Protestant. A zealous Papist (saith one) dare tell us to our heads that our religion is error, ourselves heretics, our end destruction; that one heaven cannot hold us hereafter, one church now; that our damnation is so clearly set down in our own Bibles, that there needs no more to assure us thereof than to open our eyes and read it; that if we be not damned, he will be damned for us, &c. This is better than forlorn recklessness in right religion, and that detestable indifference above specified. (Campian, Rat. 10; Bristow, Mot. 36; Coster ad Osiand.)

Ver. 16. I will spue thee out] I will please myself in thy just punishment. Ah (saith God, as one ridding his stomach), "I will ease me of mine adversaries, I will avenge me of mine enemies," #Isa 1:24. Now the basest places are good enough to cast up our gorge in. The hypocrite's punishment must needs be heavy. Laodicea is commonly looked upon as a type of England. And surely that facies hypocrítica hypocritical look of our nation is facies hippocratica, a mortal complexion, a sad prognostic.

Ver. 17. Because thou sayest] Si dixisti, satis est, periisti, saith Augustine. He that thinks he knows anything, knows nothing yet as he ought to know, #1Co 8:2.

And knowest not] Whatever thou deemest and dreamest of thyself, as setting up thy counter for 1000 pounds, and working thyself into the fool's paradise of a sublime dotage.

That thou art wretched and miserable, &c.] Semper inops, misera, infelix, rerum omnium egena as Favolius saith of Athens, and her inhabitants at this day under the Turk.

Ver. 18. I counsel thee] Having first convinced thee, #Re 3:17, who before wert uncounselable; the Gibeonites sent not for Joshua till besieged; the Gileadites sought not after Jephthah till distressed; nor will men hearken after Christ till driven out of themselves.

To buy of me] "Buy the truth and sell it not." Make a thorough sale of sin and all (with the wise merchant) to purchase Christ the pearl of price, for whom St Paul (that great trader both by sea and land, #2Co 11:23,25,26) counted all but dung and dog's meat, #Php 3:7,8. Diogenes taxed the folly of the men of his times (may not we the men of ours?) quod res pretiosas minimo emerent, venderentque vilissimas plurimo, that they undervalued the best things, but overvalued the worst.

Gold tried in the fire] Precious faith, #1Pe 1:7.

White raiment] The righteousneses of the saints, that of justification, and the other of sanctification.

And that the shame of thy nakedness] But be covered as the priest's nakedness was by his linen breeches. Nature teacheth us to cover our nakedness; therefore when a man hath committed a sin, he blusheth; the blood as it were would cover the sin. Aaron by making the golden calf had made the people naked unto their shame among their enemies, #Ex 32:25. Maximilian the emperor, when he yielded up the ghost, gave charge that none should see his dead body naked. Erat enim omnium mortalium verecundissimus, saith mine author. Buy we this white raiment of Christ; so shall our sins never shame us.

Eyesalve] That unction, #1Jo 2:20. Light and sight, the saving, knowledge of heavenly mysteries.

Ver. 19. As many as I love] q.d. Think not that I hate you, because I thus chide you. He that escapes reprehension may suspect his adoption. God had one Son without corruption, but none without correction. We must look through the anger of his correction to the sweetness of his loving countenance; as by a rainbow we see the beautiful image of the sun's light in the midst of a dark and waterish cloud. See more in my Treatise upon this verse, the second edition.

And repent] So they did in likeness; for Eusebius commends this Church as greatly flourishing in his time. Oh, the divine rhetoric and omnipotent efficacy of repentance, saith a divine. This is the rainbow, which if God seeth shining in our hearts, he will never drown our souls.

Ver. 20. Behold, I stand] Christ stands, he doth not sit; now while a man is standing he is going. Christ is but a while with men in the opportunities of grace; he will not always wait their leisure. The Church sought him (when once gone) with many a heavy heart, Cant. iii.

And knock] By the hammer of my word and hand of my Spirit.

And open the door, &c.] sc. By teachableness and obedience. This is not spoken of the first act of conversion ( quae gratuita est et inopinata ), but of the consequences of it; in which man, who being dead hath been made alive, ought to co-operate with God's grace.

Ver. 21. To sit with me in my throne] The thrones of those eastern kings were large and capacious, after the manner of a couch, set on high and covered with tapestry, so that besides the king's own room, others whom the king would honour might sit by him in the same throne. (Lud. de Dieu. in loc.) And hereunto our Saviour seemeth here to allude. This honour he promiseth to him that overcometh, as Alexander the Great by his last will left his dominions τῷ κρατιστῷ, to the worthiest of his princes, to him that should best deserve it.

And he with me] Christ is no niggardly or beggarly guest. His reward is with him, he brings better commodities than Abraham's servant did, or the Queen of Sheba, gold, raiment, eyesalve, &c.

Even as I also] That is, because I also overcame, by virtue of my victory, ως for οτι. See the like #Joh 17:2 Lu 4:36. It is by Christ that we do exceedingly overcome, #Ro 8:37.

Chapter 4

Ver. 1. A door was opened in heaven] That is, preparation was made for the manifestation of more heavenly mysteries.

Was as it were of a trumpet] To reuse and raise up his attention. For it might fare with him as with a drowsy person, who though awaked, and set to work, is ready to sleep at it. Compare #Zec 4:1.

Come up hither] Not by local motion, but by mental illumination.

I will show thee] That thou mayest show the Church, that they have a most glorious and almighty deliverer.

Ver. 2. I was in the spirit] See #Re 1:10. That is, I was ravished into a spiritual ecstasy.

And behold a throne] So Isaiah was prepared for his prophecy by such a sight, #Re 6:1. And Ezekiel (besides that stupendous vision, #Eze 1:4-28) heard behind him a voice of great rushing, saying, "Blessed be the glory of the Lord from his place," #Eze 3:12.

Sat on the throne] As judge of heaven and earth, #Ge 18:25.

Ver. 3. Like a jasper and a sardine] God is here resembled (saith Mr Cotton) by three precious stones, holding forth the three persons in Trinity. A jasper having (as they say) a white circle round about it, representing the eternity of the Father. A sardine stone of a fleshy colour representing Jesus Christ, who took our flesh upon him. An emerald, being of a green colour, refreshing the eyes of them that look upon it, representing the Spirit, who is (as the rainbow) a token of fair weather, and is a comfortable refresher, wheresoever he cometh.

And there was a rainbow] Which is signum gratiae et foederis, a sign of grace and of the covenant of mercy, which is always fresh and green about Christ's throne of grace.

Ver. 4. And round about] The saints are round about God, #Ps 76:11, a people near unto him, #Ps 148:14.

Four and twenty elders] A full senate, a stately amphitheatre of the firstborn, whose names are written in heaven, clothed as priests, crowned as kings and conquerors.

Ver. 5. Lightnings and thunderings] Is not destruction to the wicked? and a strange punishment to persecutors? #Job 31:3. Who ever hardened himself against God's Church and prospered? #Job 9:4. Have these workers of iniquity no knowledge, who eat up God's people as they eat bread? #Ps 14:4. Surely, if they had but so much wit for themselves as Pilate's wife had in a dream, they would take heed of having anything to do with just men. If any man will hurt God's witnesses, fire proceedeth out of their mouth and devoureth their enemies, #Re 11:5. It was therefore no ill counsel that a martyr gave his persecutors, If thou wilt not spare us, yet spare thyself. It is a fearful thing to fall into the punishing hands of the living God.

The seven spirits] See #Re 1:4.

Ver. 6. A sea of glass] The word, say some; the world, others. The word is to us a crystal glass, giving us a clear sight of God and of ourselves, #2Co 3:18 Jas 1:23. The world is to God a sea of glass, corpus diaphanum, a clear transparent body, he sees through it.

Four beasts] ζωα, or living wights; <sub>{a}</sub> not angels, but ministers, those earthly angels, who are set forth, 1. Full of eyes for their perspicacity and vigilancy. 2. Furnished with six wings apiece for their pernecity and promptitude to scour about for the people's benefit. 3. Qualified with all necessary endowments, for the discharge of their duties, being bold as lions, painful as oxen, prudent as men, delighted in high flying, as eagles.

<sub>{a}</sub> A living being in general; a creature. Obs. OED

Ver. 8. Full of eyes within] To look to themselves also as well as to the flock, #Ac 20:28, lest while they preach to others, &c., #1Co 9:27.

They rest not] Gr. They have no rest, and yet they have no unrest either, the sweet content they take in their continual employment is fitter to be believed than possible to be discoursed.

Holy, holy] This they double, treble, and warble upon, nine times over.

Ver. 9. And when those beasts] When the preachers are performing their office, as heralds of God's praises.

Ver. 10. The four and twenty elders] The people yield their assent, and say, Amen; the want whereof St Paul accounts no small loss, #1Co 14:16.

And cast their crowns] Canute, king of England, set his crown upon the crucifix, and proclaimed, saying, Let all the inhabitants of the world know that there is no mortal man worthy the name of a king, but he to whose beck, heaven, earth, and sea, by his laws eternal are obedient. (Hen. Huntington.) When the Great Turk cometh into his temple, he lays by all his state, and hath none to attend him all the while. Solomon's mother set the crown upon his head (so doth the Church upon Christ's head) in the day of his espousals, #So 3:11.

Ver. 11. Thou art worthy] If we would have our souls set as a pearl in that fair ring of heavenly courtiers that compass the Lamb's throne, let us praise God as they do.

For thou hast created] Our service must not be rash but reasonable, #Ro 12:1, such as whereof we can render a reason. God hates a blind sacrifice, a Samaritan's service, when men worship they know not what nor why, #Joh 4:22.

And were created] God's power put forth in the creation and administration of the world is twice here mentioned; as that which can never be sufficiently admired and adored. {See Trapp on "Ge 1:1"}

Chapter 5

Ver. 1. In the right hand] Gr. On, or at the right hand. There it lay ready, but none could make aught of it, till the Lamb took it, not only at, but out of the Father's right hand, and opened it, #Re 5:7.

A book written] This book of the Revelation, which till the Son of man had received his heavenly Father to show unto his servants, neither they nor he (as Son of man) knew (so much at least) of that day and hour of his second coming.

And on the back side] As lacking room within. Like that of the poet, “ Scriptus et in tergo, necdum finitus Orestes.”

(Juven. Sat. 1.)

Sealed with seven seals] To note the great secrecy and gradual discovery of the divine counsels.

Ver. 2. And I saw a strong angel] Angels are very desirous to know the mystery of Christ, #1Pe 1:12, and to profit daily in that knowledge, #Eph 3:10.

Ver. 3. Nor under the earth] That is, in the sea, as #Ex 20:4.

Neither to look thereon] Or, therein, because sealed up.

Ver. 4. And I wept] Out of a deep desire of knowing the contents of this book. And as our Saviour, going toward his cross, turned again to the weeping women, and comforted them, so he soon satisfied the desire of this his dejected disciple. Tears are effectual orators. Luther got much of his insight into God’s matters by this means. So did Melancthon when he wept on those words, Quos fugiamus habemus (pontificios) quos sequatour non intelligimus. It is said of Sir Philip Sidney, that when he met with anything that he well understood not, he would break out into tears,— faciles motus mens generosa capit. The spouse, seeking him whom her soul loved, had eyes like the pools of Heshbon glazed with tears, #So 7:4. And Daniel had greatest revelations after three weeks of heaviness, #Re 10:3.

Ver. 5. And one of the elders] A common Christian points the divine to the arch-prophet, whom for the present he thought not on. An eloquent Apollos may be better informed by a tentmaker, and a great apostle be comforted by an ordinary Roman, #Ac 8:26 Ro 1:12. This elder in the text seems to be the patriarch Jacob (saith one), because from his prophecy the name of lion is given to Christ, #Ge 49:9.

Behold, the Lion of the tribe of Judah] So Moses sets forth our Saviour. And fitly, 1. For the excellency of his strength. 2. For his heroical spirit. 3. For his principality; the lion is the king of beasts. 4. For his vigilancy; the lion sleepeth with open eyes. (Gerhard.)

The Root of David] So the prophets. "They have Moses and the prophets," saith Abraham, #Lu 16:29 "To the law and to the testimony," #Isa 8:20. If any speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them, nor to be gotten from them.

Hath prevailed] Gr. ἐνίκησεν, hath overcome, or surpassed, sc. all creatures in worth, to do this great work.

Ver. 6. In the midst of the throne] As a fit mediator between God and men, even the man Christ Jesus, who gave a ransom, #1Ti 2:5,6.

A Lamb as it had been slain] This form of speech is put (saith an interpreter) to show the continual recent virtue of Christ's death eternally effectual before God, as whereby once for all he hath purchased eternal redemption. Some think that he still retains in heaven the prints and scars of those wounds that he received on earth in his hands, feet, and side. His glorified body (saith one) is that golden censer, which through the wounds that are in it, as through chinks or holes, fumeth forth always a pleasant and sweet savour in the nostrils of his Father. It is also the note of a learned interpreter here, that the benefit of knowing the prophecies concerning the Church, Christ, before he was slain, had it not so as he had after his death. It was the purchase of the blood of Christ to have those things opened.

Having seven horns] Plenty of power. Antichrist hath but two horns, #Re 13:11.

And seven eyes] No want of wisdom, no need of a visible head to the Church or any other vicar general to Christ, than the Holy Ghost, called here "the seven spirits of God sent forth into all the earth."

Ver. 7. And he came and took] As Mediator he took it, as God he gave it. All things are delivered unto him of the Father; and no man knoweth the Father but the Son, and he to whom the Son revealeth him, #Mt 11:27. {See Trapp on "Mt 11:27"}

Ver. 8. Fell down before the Lamb] As they had done before the throne, #Re 4:10,11 cf. #Joh 5:23. Divine adoration is an honour due to the manhood of Christ also, as it is taken into union with the Godhead.

Golden vials, &c.] Vessels narrow beneath and wide upwards: so is the heart of a believer, narrow below, almost sharpened to a point, that it might touch the earth no more than needs must; and wide above, to receive the influence of heaven. Gold is pure and precious; so are the prayers of a pure heart.

Full of odours] Therefore sweet to God, because Christ pours into them of his odours, #Re 8:3.

Which are the prayers of saints] That is, their own prayers and praises, recorded #Re 5:9. And this is added as an exposition to let us know what is meant by odours. See the like, #Joh 2:21 7:39 Re 1:20.

Ver. 9. And they sung] A general joy in heaven and earth. Surely, it is a pleasant thing to see the light; how much more to see the light of the knowledge of God in the face of Jesus Christ! #2Co 4:6. What a deal of triumph and exaltation is here all the Church over upon the opening of this book upon the receipt of this revelation! Should not this excite and kindle in our hearts a more earnest desire of understanding these mysteries? "Oh, I could find in my heart to fall afresh upon the study of the Revelation, had I strength to do it," said my reverend old master unto me, a little before his death; Mr John Ballam, I mean, minister of the word for many years at Evesham, where I heard him (in my childhood) preaching many a sweet sermon upon the second and third chapters of this book.

A new song] For the new work of redemption, besides that old song, #Re 4:11, for that of creation.

Out of every kindred] Let this be noted against the doctrine of universal redemption that is now again so violently cried up among us.

Ver. 10. And we shall reign on the earth] Reign over our lusts; reign with and in Christ over all our enemies by a spiritual, not secular sceptre; and at last judge the world, #1Co 6:2.

Ver. 11. Round about the throne and the beasts] That is, round about the beasts and the elders. Angels encamp about the saints, as ministering spirits, and are glad of the office, that their God manifested in the flesh may be seen of them, #1Ti 3:16, and the multifarious wisdom of God in man's redemption be displayed unto them, #Eph 3:10.

Ver. 12. With a loud voice] Betokening their earnest affection; which also is here notably expressed by the many particulars they ascribe to Christ, as if they could never give enough to him. Now if angels, who have nothing so much benefit by him, do thus magnify him, how much more should we! Our hearts should be enlarged, our mouths opened, and we not a little vexed at our own vile dulness in being no more affected with these indelible ravishments.

Ver. 13. And every creature] The whole creation groaneth under vanity, and rejoiceth as it were in the forethought of that liberty of the sons of God at the last day, whereof it shall partake, #Ro 8:21.

{See Trapp on "Ro 8:21"}

Ver. 14. And the four beasts] The saints were the precentors in this blessed choir, and now they are the succentors also, #Re 14:3. They began the song, and so conclude it, as having far greater benefit by Christ than all other creatures, and God expects a proportion, that our returns be somewhat answerable to our receipts. (Sarson.) The saints upon earth sing a new (that is, an excellent) song in the honour of Christ, #Re 5:9,10. Heaven answers as by an echo, the music upon earth in the mean time continuing, #Re 5:11,12 (where note that this song of angels putteth Christ in the third person; he took not upon him the nature of angels, he is nearer to us); all creatures come in as the chorus, #Re 5:13, and as man began, so he ends the anthem, #Re 5:14.

Chapter 6

Ver. 1. One of the seals] That is, the first of the seals, as #Ge 1:4 Mr 16:2. Under these seven seals falls Rome pagan (saith Mr Cotton), as under the seven trumpets Rome Christian, under the seven vials Rome antichristian. So all the judgments in the Revelation are still upon Rome. Hence Mr Dent calls his exposition upon the Revelation, The Ruin of Rome.

The noise of thunder] This beast was like a lion, #Re 4:7, whose roaring is as thunder.

Ver. 2. And behold a white horse] The apostles and apostolic preachers of the primitive times, white for their purity of doctrine, discipline, and conversation; horses for their nimble and swift spreading the gospel, which ran αθροως οια τις ηλιου βολη, through the world like a sunbeam (as Eusebius hath it), and was carried as on eagles' or on angels' wings. A horse hath his name in Hebrew from devouring the ground by his swiftness, and was therefore by the heathens dedicated to the sun, whose "going forth is from the end of the heaven, and his circuit unto the ends of it," #Ps 19:6. Cranzius tells us that the Saxon princes, before they became Christians, gave a black horse for their arms; but being once baptized, a white horse; with reference haply to this text.

He that sat on him] Christ, #Re 19:11 Ps 65:5. The conquerors entered into Rome carried on a white horse.

Had a bow] The doctrine of the gospel, whereby the people fall under him, #Ps 45:4.

Conquering, and to conquer] Britannorum inaccessa Romanis loca, Christo tamen patuerunt, saith Tertullian. {Advers. #Jud 7} Christ came and conquered this kingdom, which the Romans with all their power could not do. A Christo vinci, summa victoria est; vinciri, summa libertas, saith another. There is no such conquest as to be conquered by Christ; no such liberty as to be bound by him.

Ver. 3. Come and see] John's better attention is called for. How dull and drowsy are the best in perceiving and receiving heavenly mysteries! A sea coal fire, if not stirred up, will die of itself, so will our spark and spunk of light. Christ calls upon those that had come far to hear him, saying, "Let him that hath an ear hear," #Mt 13:9 cf. Zec 4:1.

Ver. 4. That was red] Portending troubles and tragedies, bloody wars and terrible persecutions. Those ten first were so cruel, that St

Jerome writes in one of his epistles that for every day in the year were murdered 5000, except the first day of January.

To him that sat thereon] Christ, #Mt 10:34 Zec 1:8. He stands over his Church as the Agonothetes. {a} So he did at St Stephen's martyrdom, #Ac 7:55. He moderates and overrules the enemy's cruelty.

And that they should kill one another] viz. The persecutors should rise up and destroy one another, as the Romans did the Jews, and the Jews the Romans in various provinces. And as the emperors, who got nothing (most of them) by their adoption or designation to the empire, nisi ut citius interficerentur; but to be cut off the sooner. (Tacit.) All or most of the persecuting Caesars died unnatural deaths.

A great sword] That of the gospel, #Eph 6:17, which takes away peace, by accident, #Mt 24:6. Christ threateneth the contempt of the gospel with wars and rumours of wars. Our late Edgehill battle was fought in the vale of Red Horse; as if God had meant to say, "I have now sent you the red horse, to avenge the quarrel of the white."

{a} A superintendent or director of the great public games of Greece. (ED)

Ver. 5. A black horse] Famine discolours and denigrates, #La 4:7,8. It accompanies war for the most part, and in sieges is very extreme, as at Samaria, where an ass's head was worth four pounds; at Rome, where this proclamation was made in the market, Pone pretium humanae carni; Place a reward on the flesh of a man, at Scodra, where horses were dainty meat, yea, they were glad to eat dogs, cats, rats, &c. At Antioch in Syria, where many Christians (in the holy war, as they called it) were glad to eat the dead bodies of their late slain enemies. (Turk. Hist.)

Had a pair of balances] Gr. ζυγόν, the beam of scales. To show that bread should be delivered out by measure, as is threatened, #Eze 4:16 De 28:59-68, and men should be stinted and pittanced.

Ver. 6. In the midst] The voice of the Lamb, #Re 5:6, who appoints and orders all; he cuts us out our several conditions, cautioning for the wine and oil, when other food faileth.

A measure of wheat] χοινίξ, a quart, say some, a pottle others, an allowance for a day. Among the Greeks, saith Suidas, Choenix dietim dabatur. And that the Israelites in the wilderness (according to Rabanus) had each of them three choenices of manna by the day, that was to be ascribed to the divine bounty, as Junius noteth.

Ver. 7. {See Trapp on "Re 6:3"}

Ver. 8. A pale horse] Fit for pestilence and pale death to ride on.

And hell followed] sc. To them that were killed with death, #Re 2:23 {See Trapp on "Re 2:23"} that died in their sins, which is far worse than to die in a ditch.

Over the fourth part of the earth] That is, of the Roman empire. This happened in the days of Decius; Oresius bearing witness that the pestilence which then raged did extend no further quam ad profligandas ecelesias edicta Decii cucurrerunt, that is, than the proclamations of Decius came for the overthrow of the Churches.

And with death.] i.e. The pestilence, that harbinger and purveyor of death: this is somewhere called "God's evil angel"; and by ecclesiastical writers mortality. Hippocrates calleth it το θειον, the divine stroke, because God hath a special hand in it.

Ver. 9. Under the altar] i.e. Under Christ, #Heb 13:10, under his custody and safeguard; or, under the altar, that is, lying at the bottom of the altar, as beasts newly slain for sacrifice. See #Php 2:17 2Ti 4:6. The ten persecutions and (after them) the invasions of the Goths, Vandals, Huns, and Herula, heaped on massacres of martyrs.

Which they had] Gr. εἶχον, which they had, and would not be drawn by any terrors or tortures to part with. They may take away my life, said one, but not my faith; my head, but not my crown.

Ver. 10. And they cried] When God intends deliverance to his people, he poureth out upon them "the spirit of grace and supplication," #Zec 12:9,10.

How long, O Lord] Calvin had this speech always in his mouth, breathing out his holy desires in the behalf of the afflicted Churches, with whose sufferings he was more affected than with anything that befell himself. (Beza in Vita.)

Dost thou not judge and avenge] The glorified souls cannot be properly said to desire revenge; but the cry which they make must be understood to be the provocation of God to vengeance which their sufferings produce in the same sort as Abel's blood is said to cry. (Thorndike.)

That dwell on the earth] In opposition to the inhabitants of heaven. As names written in heaven stand opposed to those that are written in the earth, #Lu 10:20 Jer 17:13.

Ver. 11. And white robes] Their innocence was cleared, and their persecutors convinced. God would speak for them in the hearts of their greatest enemies.

Until their fellowservants also] We doubt not, saith a learned interpreter here (Mr Forbes), but that the crowned saints do in general know the afflicted condition of the Church militant, and do wish them deliverance; but our special necessities and occurrences of particular persons they cannot know. Brother Bradford, said Bishop Ridley, a little before he was offered up, so long as I shall understand that thou art in thy journey, by God's grace I shall call upon our heavenly Father to set thee safely home; and then, good brother, speak you for the remnant that are to suffer for Christ's sake, according to that thou then shalt know more clearly. (Acts and Mon.) But this is to be taken with a grain of salt.

That should be killed] Under Licinius, Julian the Apostate, and the Arian emperors.

Ver. 12. There was a great earthquake] Understand hereby those horrible commotions and confusions that occurred in the Roman empire upon those ten bloody persecutions, and the earnest supplications of the saints which can work wonders in heaven and earth. The death and destruction of the persecutors was (as it was said of the death of Arius) precationis opus non morbi, the effect of faithful prayers calling for full and final vengeance. (Socrates i. 15.)

The sun became black] It is ordinary in Scripture to set forth horrible commotions of commonwealths by such figurative expressions as these, #Jer 4:23-31 Joe 2:10,11 Isa 13:10.

Ver. 13. And the stars] Rome's dunghill deities, together with their chemarims or chimney chaplains, the priests. Confer #Isa 34:4 Da 8:10 Ex 12:12 Nu 33:4.

Ver. 14. And every mountain] {See Trapp on "Re 6:12"} Cinis quidam noxius e Visuvio emissus, Romam venit (inquit Dio) ita ut incolae putare coeperunt omnia sursum deorsum ferri, solemque in terram cadere, ac terrain in caelum conscendere. I myself saw, saith Bellarmine, a huge hill removed by an earthquake, and brought down to a town, which was wholly covered by it, and as it were buried under it. Perhaps he meant Pleurs in Rhetia, which was overcovered suddenly with a mountain, so that 1500 persons were buried there alive.

Ver. 15. And the kings of the earth] Who came in to help their gods against the mighty, against Constantine, Theodosius, &c., that threw out their priests, and pulled down their temples. These kings and grandees were Maximianus, Maximinus, Maxentius, Galerius, Licinius, Jullanus, &c., and their complices, who were routed, ruined, and driven into holes and corners by the Christian emperors, and afterwards so pursued by divine justice, that they came to shameful ends. Diocletian poisoned himself, Maximinian hanged himself; Maximinus likewise and Maxentius became their own executioners; Galerius died of a loathsome disease; Julian had his death wound from heaven, and died raving and blaspheming. (Euseb. Hist., Item de Vita Const.)

Ver. 16. And said to the mountains] Which yet was but a poor shelter; for mountains melted and rocks rent at his presence. So that if wicked men cry to the hills, Help us, they will give an echo, Help us. For God's wrath is upon the creature for man's sin.

Ver. 17. Who shall be able to stand] They could not stand before their own misgiving hearts and soul condemning consciences; how much less before God that was greater than their hearts! God sent his hornet, which drove out these Canaanites, #Ex 23:28. Facti sunt a corde suo fugitivi, They were made by their heart a fugitive, as Tertullian hath it.

Chapter 7

Ver. 1. And after these things] This whole chapter is purposely interlaced between the opening of the sixth and seventh seal, for the support of the poor suffering saints, that they sink not under their many pressures.

Four angels] Ministers of indignation, whether good or evil angels the doctors are divided.

Holding the four winds] Those besoms of the air, as Rupertus calls them, and Scripture emblems of spiritual influence, #Joh 3:8 So 4:16 Eze 37:9. The holding of the winds may peradventure intimate here that peace and ease in which God suffereth worldly men to live, and be overtaken, even upon the point of his great judgments, #1Th 5:3. He made fair weather before Pharaoh till he had him in the heart of the Red Sea.

Nor on any tree] The philosopher compares men (the Scripture good men often) to trees, which by benign winds are filled with fruits.

Ver. 2. Another angel] Whether Christ, or Constantine acted by Christ, it much matters not.

Having the seal] Whereof Christ is the great Lord keeper.

With a loud voice] Out of his great care of his elect. As Croesus' dumb son burst out into loud speech to save his father, ανθρωπε, μη κτεινε τον Κροισον. (Herod.)

To the four angels] Who are at Christ's beck and check.

Ver. 3. Hurt not] Reprobates often fare the better for those few righteous that are among them; they are therefore singularly foolish for seeking to rid them, and root them out, as the heathen emperors did. These resemble the stag in the emblem, that fed upon the leaves which hid him from the hunter and Samson-like, by pulling down the pillars, they bring the house upon their own heads.

In their foreheads] Not in their hands only, as the vassals of Antichrist, {#Re 13:16} who have free liberty to dissemble, deny their religion, do anything, so the Catholic cause be thereby advanced. My son, give me thy heart, said Gregory XIII to our English Papists, let who will have thy tongue and outward man.

Ver. 4. A hundred forty and four thousand] A competent company. Not so many as the locusts, #Re 9:3, and yet more than most thought they had been.

Ver. 5. Twelve thousand] Out of each tribe so many. God inclines towards all the elect with an equal good will; neither shall any one complain justly that others have been more regarded than he, as one well observeth here.

Ver. 6. Of the tribe of Natphthali] Who is first reckoned among those by Rachel's side, because at Capernaum in this tribe Christ inhabited. Any relation to him ennobleth. Bethlehem, though it be the least, is yet not the least among the princes of Judah, for that out of her came the governor of Israel, #Mt 2:6 cf. Mic 5:2.

Ver. 7. Of the tribe of Levi] Levi is taken in, Dan cut out of the roll for his shameful recidivation and revolt from the true religion, #Jud 18:30,31. This, Jacob foresaw and bewailed in that holy ejaculation on his death bed, #Ge 49:17,18. There is no reckoning made or account given of this tribe (as there is of the rest), #1Ch 7:1,6,13,20,30. The fable of Antichrist to come from Dan, is so thin a device, that Bellarmine could not but see through it, and disclaim it (Lib. iii. de Pont. Rom. cap. xii.).

Ver. 8. Of Joseph] That is, of Ephraim, who, though Joseph's younger son, yet had the first birthright. Ephraim is not named (though tacitly intended here) because joined to idols; let him alone therefore, saith God, #Ho 4:17.

Ver. 9. A great multitude] All the faithful from the apostles to the end of the world. In all ages there were some that sought righteousness; neither was it ever so hard with the Church as the host at Nola (in the story) made it; who when he was commanded by the Roman censor to go and call the good men of the city to appear before him, went to the church yards, and there called at the graves of the dead, O ye good men of Nola, come away, for the Roman censor calls for your appearance; for he knew not where to call for a good man alive. In the very midst of Popery there were many faithful witnesses, and more of such as (like those two hundred that went out of Jerusalem after Absalom) went on in the simplicity of their hearts, and knew not anything, #2Sa 15:11. (Anton. di Guevara.)

Clothed with white robes] {See Trapp on "Re 3:4"}

And palms in their hands] In token of victory over all spiritual enemies. This was hinted at by those palms engraved in Solomon's and Ezekiel's temple.

Ver. 10. Salvation to our God] Not to this or that Popish saint or mediator; of all whom these triumphers might say, as that heathen once, Contemno minutos istos deos, modo Iovem (Iesum) propitium habeam, I care not for all those small gods, so I may have Jesus on my side.

Ver. 11. And all the angels] {See Trapp on "Re 5:11"}

Ver. 12. Amen; Blessing and glory, &c.] The angels assent to what the saints had said, and add much more, according to their greater measure of knowledge and love to God: write we after this fairer copy.

Ver. 13. And one of the elders] {See Trapp on "Re 5:5"}

Ver. 14. Which came out of great tribulation] It is but a delicacy that men dream of to divide Christ and his cross. The bishop of London, when he had degraded Richard Bayfield, martyr, kneeling upon the highest step of the altar, he smote him so hard on the breast with his crosier staff, that he threw him down backward, and brake his head so that he swooned; and when he came to himself again, he thanked God that he was delivered from the malignant Church of Antichrist, and that he was come into the true Church of Christ militant, and I hope shall be anon with him in the Church triumphant. (Acts and Mon.)

And made them white] Other blood stains what is washed in it; this blood of the spotless Lamb whitens and purifies.

Ver. 15. Therefore are they] Not for the whiteness of their robes, but because they are washed in the meritorious blood of the Lamb.

Before the throne of God] A good man is like a good angel, always standing before the face of God.

Shall dwell among them] Gr. σκηνώσει, shall pitch his tent, or shall keep the feast, of tabernacles among them, or shall hover and cover over them, as the cloud did over Israel in the wilderness; so that under his shadow they shall safely and sweetly repose themselves.

Ver. 16. They shall hunger no more] They shall be as it were in heaven beforehand, having Malorum ademptionem, bonorum ademptionem, freedom from evil, and fruition of good, here in part, hereafter in all fulness.

Ver. 17. Shall feed them and lead them] An allusion to #Ps 23:2, where David seems to resemble powerful and flourishing doctrine to green pastures, and the secret and sweet comforts of the sacraments to the still waters.

And God shall wipe away] A metaphor from a nurse, which not only suckleth her dear child crying for hunger, but also wipes off the tears.

Chapter 8

Ver. 1. The seventh seal] The business or parts whereof are the seven trumpets, that sound a dreadful alarm against the Roman empire, ready now to be ruined for the innocent blood, and upon the instant suit of the martyrs, #Re 6:10.

There was silence in heaven] That is, in the Church on earth, often called the kingdom of heaven. This half an hour's silence was either for horror and admiration, or for ardent expectation, or (as some will have it) for religious awe and devotion. Christ the high priest, being now about to offer incense (those prayers of the martyrs, #Re 6:10), there was in the Church (as used to be in the temple at such times, #Lu 1:10) a deep silence. So among the Romans, the people in time of worship were enjoined favere linguis, to spare their tongues. And in the Greek Church one stood up and cried, Σιγα, λαος, αφεις, λαος, Peace, people, leave off your discourse. Among the heathen Athenians in the time of divine rites, the priests craved silence of the people in these words, Ευφημειτε, σιγα, πας εστολεως, Be whist, all ye people, good words or nothing. Male ominatis parcite verbis. (Archaeol. Attic. 55. Horat.)

Ver. 2. Which stood before God] In a waiting posture, ready pressed to do his pleasure.

Seven trumpets] To be sounded several times, to show that God suffereth not his whole wrath to arise at once against his creatures, but piecemeal and by degrees; proving if peradventure they will repent and recover out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will.

Ver. 3. And another angel] An angel after another manner; not by nature, but by office. Christ, the Angel of the covenant. For I cannot be of his mind (Mr Brightman) who makes this angel to be Constantine; the odours given him, to be the power of calling the council; the golden altar, Christ in the midst of this holy assembly; the thick cloud of odours, the whole matter brought most happily to effect; which yet is a pious interpretation.

Much incense] The merit of his own precious passion, #Heb 9:24 13:5.

Upon the golden altar] viz. Himself, as #Re 6:9.

Ver. 4. The smoke of the incense] The saints' prayers perfumed with Christ's odours ascended, that is, were highly accepted in heaven, #Ac 10:4 Ex 3:9, as well appeared by the answer they had here in the next verse. The Church is said to ascend out of the wilderness of this world with pillars of smoke, #So 3:6. Elationibus fumi, with raised affections, and with strong supplications, wherein how many sweet spices are burned together by the fire of faith, as humility, love, &c. All which would stink worse in God's nostrils than the onions and garlic of Egypt, did not Christ perfume and present them.

Ver. 5. And filled it with the fire of the altar] Fire, in token of fierce indignation, and from the altar; for Christ came to send fire on the earth, #Lu 12:49; fire and sword, #Mt 12:34; through men's singular corruption and obstinacy in not stooping to the sceptre of this kingdom. Hence fire and brimstone, storm and tempest, a fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries, #Heb 10:27. From the same altar, Christ, prayers go up, vengeance comes down.

Ver. 6. Prepared themselves] Having got sign, as it were, by that which Christ did in the former verse, they set to in order to sound their trumpets.

Ver. 7. Hail and fire mingled with blood] Instead of the fire of love (saith Mr Forbes) mixed with the sweet rain of wholesome doctrine and spirit of Christian lenity, the fire of contention and frosty hailstones of destruction ruled all. Yea, so far herein were the bishops carried one against another, as it is monstrous what malice, falsehood, and cruelty they practised, especially in the time of Constans, Constantius, and Valens, the Arian emperors.

And the third part of trees] Men of mark.

And all green grass] Meaner men.

Were burnt up] Were tainted with errors and heresies, whereof this age was so fertile and full that (as Jerome speaketh) it was a witty thing to be a right believer.

Ver. 8. A great mountain] Some notable heresiarch, possibly Pelagius, a monk of Bangor, Morgan by name, that is, in the Welsh tongue, a seaman. This Morgan travelling beyond sea to spread his heresy, called himself Pelagius, by a Greek word of the same signification; because it sounded better in the ears of foreign nations. Hence Augustine, Quid eo pelago (saith he) vult mergi Pelagius, unde per petram liberatus est Petras? (Lib. i. de Grat. Christ. advers. Pelag.)

Ver. 9. And the third part] Heresy as a gangrene spreads and kills; as the leprosy in the head, it renders a man utterly unclean, #Le 13:44. So cunning are some seducers, and so close in the conveyance of their collusion, that if possible the very elect may be deceived.

And the third part of the ships were destroyed] That is, of the Churches, even those that were planted by the apostles themselves, those principal pilots. Howbeit not all the Churches, but a third part only: when the Church was in the wilderness, when Antichrist most reigned and raged, God did preserve some ships, some fundamental doctrines, and the essence of baptism, and the essence of a true ministry dispensing them; and they, that is, her pastors, fed her there, #Re 12:6-14.

*“ Niteris incassum Christi submergere navem;
Fluctuat, at nunquam mergitur illa ratis.”*

Ver. 10. There fell a great star] Falling stars were never but meteors. That grand apostate of Rome may well he meant by this blazing, burning comet. He was in falling by degrees from the time of Constantine till Phocas, who sat upon the chair of pestilence.

Burning as it were a lamp] He seems to allude to that kind of comet that is called Lampadias. (Mede.)

The third part of the rivers] i.e. Corrupted true doctrine, and perverted the Scriptures with his false glosses.

Ver. 11. Was called Wormwood] Because himself was in the gall of bitterness, and did embitter others. See #Jer 23:15 De 29:18, with Junius's note there.

Ver. 12. And the third part of the sun] The prelates and patriarchs.

And the third part of the moon] The inferior church officers.

And the third part of the stars] The community of Christians. All began to be spread over with gross ignorance, not only of heavenly truths, but of human sciences, which are here called the night in comparison of gospel light. Gregory the Great (thought to be that angel mentioned in the next verse), though better than any who succeeded him in the Popedom, calling himself the servant of God's servants, and carrying himself modestly in the days of Mauritius the emperor, yet when Mauritius was slain by the traitor Phocas, how basely did he claw the traitor, and colloque with him; commending to his care the Church of Rome and often minding him of Peter's primacy, and of that speech of our Saviour, "Thou art Peter," &c. for no other end but that he might enlarge his jurisdiction over all Churches, by the favour of that parricide?

And the day shone not] It was a gloomy and dismal day with the purer Church of Christ.

Ver. 13. And I beheld and heard an angel] αγγελου αετου, or, an eagle, as some copies read it. {See Trapp on "Re 8:12"} Gregory the Great seems to be pointed at, who is said to be the worst of all the popes that went before him, and the best of those that came after him. Hence he is brought in flying between heaven and earth. And that he cried with a loud voice; pointing at and painting out that to be Antichrist that should challenge to himself the title of universal bishop, and had a host of priests ready to follow him. Hic prope est, et in foribus, said he, and he said right; for his immediate successor, Boniface III, fulfilled the same that he had foretold.

Chapter 9

Ver. 1. A star fall from heaven] Gr. πεπτωκοτα, that had fallen from heaven, viz. when the third angel sounded, #Re 8:10, then the bishop of Rome began to fall; but here, in Boniface III and his successors, "He is fallen, he is fallen" from his primitive integrity into the deepest gulf of impiety, The Jesuits (to blind the matter) tell us that by this star is meant Luther, whom Satan sent out to disturb the Church, and God sent them to withstand him. (Scultet. Annal.) Bugenbagius also, a Dutch divine, when he first read Luther's book of the Babylonish Captivity, rashly pronounced him the most pestilent heretic that ever the Church was pestered with. But a few days after, having thoroughly read and weighed the contents of that book, he recanted, and affirmed that all the world was deceived, and Luther only was in right; and so not only himself became a Lutheran, but many others also persuaded by him.

The key of the bottomless pit] Whereinto he lets souls innumerable; so that in the days of Hildebrand letters were set forth as sent from hell, wherein the devil and his angels give the Popish clergy many thanks for sending them in so many souls as they never had in any age before. (Mat. Paris, A. D. 1072.) This key of the bottomless pit is (saith Whitaker) facultas expromendi et docendi dlabolicas doctrinae, his faculty of broaching and teaching doctrines of devils.

Ver. 2. And there arose a smoke] Of heretical opinions and flagitious practices. All the old heretics fled and hid themselves in the Popish clergy. Those dark corners also of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty. Take heed (said the Lord Audely, chancellor of England) how you deal with Popish priests; for (you may believe me) some of them be knaves all. (Acts and Mon., fol. 1117.) Petrus de Aliaco long since wrote, Ad hunc stature venit Romana Ecclesia, ut non esset digna regi nisi per reprobos, The Church of Rome hath for a long season been ruled by a rabble of reprobates. (De Reform. Eccl.)

The sun and the air were darkened] That is, saith Carthusian, the prelates and the people.

Ver. 3. Locusts upon the earth] So the monks, friars, Jesuits, &c., are fitly called for their numerosity and voracity. The Jesuits have sometimes maintained 200,000 scholars. The duke of Bavaria's house is so pestered with them (saith one), that notwithstanding his great revenues, he is very poor, as spending all his estate upon those Popish flesh flies. Think the same of other princes and places where they are received.

As the scorpions of the earth] They are the sorest soul sting (saith an interpreter) that ever the world had. Pliny testifieth of the scorpion, that there is not one minute wherein it doth not put forth a most venomous sting to do mischief. It creeps on crookedly, and so it strikes the more at unawares. Its sting is not so much felt at first, but soon proves incurable. It is of a very angry nature (saith one interpreter), and there is a word in the Greek tongue taken from a scorpion, signifying to exasperate and to provoke like a scorpion.

Ver. 4. And as it was commanded] As David charged his captains to handle the young man Absalom gently, so and much more solicitous is the Lord of his servants' safety.

The grass of the earth, nor any green thing] I say that under the Papacy was true Christianity, saith Luther (Contra Anabap.), yea, the very kernel of Christianity.

Which have not the seal of God, &c.] Profession, that outward mark of a Christian; and of such there were in the worst of times, even in the darkest midnight of damned Popery, a considerable company. As in this day there are said to be even in Italy 4000 professed Protestants: as in Seville itself, a chief city of Spain, there are thought to be no fewer than 20,000 Protestants. (Spec. Europ.)

Ver. 5. And to them it was given] This is often repeated in this book, to show that though Antichrist and his actuaries bandy and bend all their forces to destroy souls, yet they are bounded by God, and can do no more than is given them from above.

Five months] Locusts used to live no longer. See Pliny, lib. xi. cap. 29. There are those who interpret these five months of those 500 years, wherein the pope stood in his full pride and power. For, ab eo tempore quo per vos Papa Antichristus esse coepit (saith Bellarmine) non modo non crevit eius imperium, sed semper magis ac magis decrevit, Since you first began to call the pope Antichrist he hath lost a great part of his command and commodity. (De Pap. Rom., lib. iii. cap. 21.)

As the torment of a scorpion] Pliny testifieth that of all creeping things that are poisonous, the sting of a scorpion is most cruel and grievous.

Ver. 6. Shall men seek death] Being brought through anguish of conscience, and fear of wrath, to that pitiful plight that Roger Bishop of Salisbury was, in King Stephen's time, through long and strait imprisonment. He was so hardly bestead (saith the historian) ut vivere noluerit, mori nescierit, that live he would not, die he could not Popish pardons, pilgrimages, dirges, &c., would not quiet or cure distempered consciences, or shake out the envenomed arrows of the Almighty, that stuck fast in them, haeret lateri lethalis arundo. A broken leg is not eased by a silken stocking. Nescio quomodo imbecillior est medicina quam morbus, said Cicero of his philosophical consolations; so may these well say of their Popish paltry applications, The medicine is too weak for the malady. The Papists say, that the reformed religion is a doctrine of desperation. This we are sure is true of theirs, as were easy to instance in Stephen Gardiner, Dr Pendleton, Francis Spira, Guarlaeus, Bomelins, Latomus, Crescentius.

Ver. 7. Like unto horses] Fed and fierce, to run and rush into the battle, as being driven by the devil. Si videris persecutorem tuum nimis saevientem, scito quia ab ascensore suo daemone perurgetur. (Bernard.)

Were as it were crowns] Triple crowns, mitres, head tires, shaven crowns; which last is a ceremony so bald, that some priests in France are now ashamed of the mark, and few of them have it that can handsomely avoid it. (Spec. Europ.)

As the faces of men] "But beware of men," #Mt 10:17. See the note there. Yea, beware of those that are looked upon as good men, who yet may act for Satan and not discern it, #Mt 16:23. The temptation lies in this, when angels from heaven, men of singular parts and piety, preach other doctrines, #Ga 1:6 2Co 11:15.

Ver. 8. As the hair of women] Insinulative, and inductive to sin.

As the teeth of lions] #Joe 1:6. Catching and carrying to their dens all they can come by, as Tecelius did out of Germany, as Otto sent by Gregory IX did out of England, where he left not so much money as he either carried with him or sent to Rome before him.

Ver. 9. And they had breastplates] Their pretended donations, privileges and exemptions from the secular power; shaking their tippets at kings, whom they have trampled on, and forced to go barefoot on the hard stones, till they bled again. Thus dealt they by our Henry II; yea, they lashed him with rods upon the bare, and said, Domine, noli minari; nos enim nullas minas timemus, qui de tali curia sumus quae consuevit imperare regibus et imperatoribus: Sir, never threaten us; for we care not for your threats, as being of that court that commands kings and emperors. (Jac. Revius de VII. Pontiff p. 149.)

And the sound of their wings] They are loud and bold spoken, make a great noise, raise a great dust, and thereby think to carry it. Herein they are like the heretic Nestorius, who is said to have been homo indoctus, superbus, contemptor Patrum, sed audax et magnae loquentiae, a proud ass, but bold above measure, and of a loud language, whereby he so far prevailed for a time, that he seduced good Theodosius, and procured a writ for the banishment of Cyril, that godly orthodox divine. (Zanch. Miscel., Epist. Dedic.)

Ver. 10. And they had tails] This may be well meant of their surrogates, officials, chancellors, registrars, apparitors, the fag end of their execrable train. See #Isa 9:15.

Ver. 11. And they had a king over them] Being herein wiser than those other locusts, #Pr 30:27.

The angel of the bottomless pit] That apostate star, #Re 9:1, the devil's lieutenant, general, the Western Antichrist the pope, not excluding the Turk, that Antichrist of the East, that comes next to be spoken of. And indeed they may well go together; for they both set up another law than that of Christ, they kill the contrary part, they give liberty to the flesh, they will not have their religions to be disputed, &c.

Is Abaddon] A destroyer. I know not (saith learned Junins) whether the Holy Ghost in this name hath not some respect to the etymology or notation of Hildebrand, which signifies Fidei incendium, the firebrand of the faith.

Ver. 12. Two woes more hereafter] In respect of order; for in respect of time, the woes of the fifth and sixth trumpet are together, and do run parallel.

Ver. 13. From the four horns] To show, saith one, Christ's sufficiency of power to raise up instruments of his justice, according as by the sins of men he is provoked. To show, saith another, that the prayers of the saints from the four corners of the earth sound, and do great things in the world, make it ring.

Ver. 14. Loose the four angels] That is, those four potent peoples, the Arabians, the Saracens, the Tartars, and the Turks, that they may march out against Christendom, to murder and massacre the third part of men. These are called angels, because sent of God to revenge the quarrel of his covenant.

Ver. 15. And the four angels were loosed] As fierce and fell creatures out of a cave, now set upon spoil and rapine. They have a proverb in the eastern parts, Where the Great Turk once setteth his foot, there never grows grass again; he blasts and desolates all.

For an hour and a day] At any time whensoever God shall command them out, and bid them fall on; they are at an hour's warning, in arms at an instant. Mr Brightman gathereth from this text, that the Turkish empire shall determine about the year 1696.

The third part of men] Mahomet I was in his time the death of 800,000 men. Selymus II, in revenge of his loss received at the battle of Lepanto, would have put to death all the Christians in his dominions, who were in number infinite. (Turk. Hist.)

Ver. 16. Two hundred thousand thousand] Not so many at any one time, but in several ages and battles. Howbeit the Turk goes usually into the field 200,000 strong; many times he hath more, as in that famous battle fought by Bajazet against Tamerlane, where he had well-nigh a million. Of his common soldiers called Asapi (which for the most part are miserable Christians), he makes no great reckoning or other use than to blunt the swords of his enemies, or to abate their first fury, thereby to give the easier victory to his janizaries {a} and better soldiers, which are all cavalry for most part.

{a} One of a former body of Turkish infantry, constituting the Sultan's guard and the main part of the standing army. The body was first organized in the 14th century, and was composed mainly of tributary children of Christians; after a large number of them had been massacred in 1826, the organization was finally abolished. (ED)

Ver. 17. Breastplates of fire, &c.] Muskets, arquebuses, pistols, and other spitfires; but especially those great guns and murdering pieces, so much used by the Turks, those mighty ordnance they brought before Constantinople, Rhodes, and other places, nothing inferior to those two that were cast by Alphonsus Duke of Ferrara, the one whereof he called the earthquake, the other Grandiabolo, or the great devil. (Chalcondylas. Peacham's Valley of Vanity.)

{a} The early type of portable gun, varying in size from a small cannon to a musket, which on account of its weight was, when used in the field, supported upon a tripod, trestle, or other 'carriage', and afterwards upon a forked 'rest'. The name in German and Flemish meant literally 'hook-gun', from the hook cast along with the piece, by which it was fastened to the 'carriage'; but the name became generic for portable fire-arms generally in the 16th century, so that the type with the hook was subsequently distinguished as arquebuse à croc: (ED)

Ver. 18. The third part of men killed] Not only of Christians, but also of their own; most of their poor being forced with victuals and other necessaries to follow their great armies in their long expeditions, of whom scarcely one of ten do ever return home again, but there perish by the way; if not by the enemy's sword, yet by the wants, intemperateness of the air, or immoderate painstaking.

By the brimstone] By the gunpowder, or by their sulphured bow strings, which they discharge as out of their mouths, whereunto they draw or lay them.

Ver. 19. In their mouth, and in their tails] Like the serpent Amphisbaena, {a} that hath a head (to do hurt) at both ends. (Plin.) Perhaps the Turks' perfidy is here pointed at; they keep leagues no longer than standeth with their own profit. (Turk. Hist.)

{a} A fabled serpent of the ancients, with a head at each end, and able to move in either direction (ED)

Ver. 20. That they should not worship devils] As all idolaters do, #1Co 10:20. The devil is εἰδωλοχαρής, saith Synesius, glad to be worshipped in an idol, as he was by Israel in a calf. And as he is still by the Papists, in their mawmets (idols) and monuments of idolatry. And whereas they say they worship not the image (much less the devil) but God; they are like Clodia the strumpet, who, to excuse her incest, said she did company with Metellus as a husband, but with Clodius as with a brother.

Ver. 21. Neither repented] Being stupefied, as those asses in Etruria that feed upon hemlock. (Matthiol. in Dioscoria.) They that make them are like unto them. See #Isa 44:17.

Chapter 10

Ver. 1. Come down from heaven] Not from the bottomless pit, as Antichrist, that opposite to Christ's unction and function. Christ cometh down from heaven, 1. By the assumption of our nature. 2. By the preaching of his word. 3. By punishing his enemies. 4. By relieving and delivering his people; and in this last sense chiefly it is here to be understood.

Clothed with a cloud] Not yet so clearly to be seen and enjoyed by his as when he shall come in the clouds.

A rainbow upon his head] The effect of the sun shining against a cloud, and is Nuncius foederis et serenitatis, the angel of God's covenant, and of fair weather.

His feet as pillars of fire] His meanest members stand out the hottest persecutions. Or, he will burn up his enemies as chaff and stubble.

Ver. 2. A little book open] The Bible translated and explained. It is called a great roll, written with the pen of a man, that is, clearly, that the simplest of men may conceive it, #Isa 8:1 De 30:11. But it is little in comparison to the volumes of school doctors and popish decretals, <sup>{a}</sup> wherewith the world was pestered, when the Bible lay locked up and obscured. We may well say of it as St Bartholomew (quoted by Dionysius) said of divinity, και πολλην και ελαχιστην, that in sundry respects it is both a little and a great book. This book Christ held open to his; though Antichrist hid it and shut it up in an unknown tongue for a long while. He was to them as a little sanctuary, #Eze 11:16.

He set his right foot upon the sea] As Lord of sea and land, defy all heretics and Antichrists that sought to throw him out of possession. Neither the beast that ariseth out of the sea nor the other that ariseth out of the earth shall be able to do it.

{a} A papal decree or decretal epistle; a document issued by a Pope, containing a decree or authoritative decision on some point of doctrine or ecclesiastical law. (ED)

Ver. 3. As when a lion roareth] Gr. μυκαται, loweth like an ox, mugit for rugit. See here an ox in a lion, mildness mixed with fierceness. Satis est prostrasse Leoni. This Lion preys not upon the prostrate. Non mihi placet vindicta sed victoria, It is not appropriate for me to seek vengeance but victory, said Caesar. So may Christ, I seek not revenge but victory.

Seven thunders uttered their voices] As the echo of Christ's loud voice. No sooner had he spoken, but great was the company of preachers, #Ps 68:11, sons of thunder, who should speak powerfully, prophesy and cry down superstitious worships and heretical doctrines before peoples, nations, tongues, and kings, #Re 10:11 of this chapter. This was fulfilled in Wycliffe, Huss, Luther, Lambert, and other heroic reformers. Confer #Am 3:7,8.

Ver. 4. Had uttered their voices] Not audible only, but articulate; so as what John heard and was much affected. Nescio quid divinum in auscultatione eat: there is no small efficacy in a lively voice to work upon the heart. (Diestius.) In Demosthene aliquid deest Demosthenis, quando legitur non auditur. (Val. Max.)

Seal up these things] viz. Till the time appointed. See #Da 8:26 12:9. Or, for that the things were the secrets of God's kingdom, #Mt 13:10-17, not fit or possible to be revealed, #2Co 12:4.

Ver. 5. Lifted up his hand] And so swore solemnly, #Ge 14:22 Nu 14:30 Eze 20:5. Because it seemed improbable (if not impossible) that ever Babylon should down, Rome be ruined. But all the judgments in the Revelation (those of the seven seals, seven trumpets, and seven vials) are still upon Rome pagan, Christian, and Antichristian. We may therefore conclude with that emperor of Germany, Frederic II,

“ Roma diu titubans, variis erroribus acta

Gorruet, et mundi desinet esse caput.”

*“Rome tottering long, shall once be shattered,
And of the world shall cease to be the head.”*

Ver. 6. That there should be time no longer] i.e. The beast’s time shall be no longer, but till the days of the seventh trumpet, which were shortly then approaching. Or there shall be now no longer delay or protraction of time.

Ver. 7. The mystery of God] The conversion of the Jews, called a mystery, #Ro 11:25, the bringing in of the Gentiles’ fulness, #Eph 3:3,4,6, the kingdom of the saints of the most high, #Da 7:18, then when all the kingdoms of the world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord Jesus Christ, #Re 11:15.

Ver. 8. In the hand of the angel which standeth] This description of Christ is here purposely repeated, that we may learn to trust in his power and fly to his wisdom, as Agur did, #Pr 30:1,2, for the understanding of divine mysteries.

Ver. 9. Give me the little book] Let preachers ply the throne of grace, if ever they will preach to purpose. Bene orasse, est bene studuisse, said Luther. Three things make a preacher, reading, prayer, and temptation. He that will understand God’s riddles must plough with this heifer, the Spirit, which is not given but to them that ask it.

And eat it up] By reading and meditation; ministers must so devour and digest the Holy Scriptures, that as good scribes they may draw out new and old for the use of the Church upon all occasions. Jacobus de Voragine was so called, quod esset veluti vorago bibliorum, because he as it were devoured the Bible. (Alsted. Chron.) So Petrus Comestor for the same reason. Joannes Gadius, a Sicilian, was so well versed in the Scriptures, and so great a divine, that he once said, Si libri sacri perirent, se per Dei gratiam restitutum, That if the Bible were lost out of the world, he could restore it: Some think that Ezra did so after the Babylonish captivity, but I cannot think so. (Vide Pareum in Gen. Proleg.)

Ver. 10. Sweet as honey] The word is so to the spiritual palate; whereas to the carnal it relisheth no better than the white of an egg or a dry chip. Luther said he would not live in paradise without the word; at cum verbo etiam in inferno facile eat vivere, but with the word he could live even in hell itself. See #Ps 19:10 119:103 Jer 15:16.

My belly was bitter] By reason of the trials and tribulations that usually follow upon the faithful preaching of the word. Opposition is Evangelii genius, saith Calvin. And, Praedicare est nihil aliud quam derivare in se furorem mundi, saith Luther; To preach is to get the ill-will of the world.

Ver. 11. Thou must prophesy] For all the sorrow, thou and thy successors must set close to the Lord's work, for the regaining of those peoples, nations, &c., whom Antichrist hath enslaved. Or thus: Thou must prophesy, that is, before the time of fulfilling of all things, this book of the Revelation shall be made as clear as if John were come to prophesy again before men, and to give us a revelation of his Revelation, according to #Isa 30:26. (Mr Burr, on Hosea.)

Chapter 11

Ver. 1. A reed] That is, the word of God, that little book that he had newly eaten. This is the only rule of faith and discipline whereby all in the Church must be made and meted.

Like unto a rod] Or, sceptre. The word is that rod of Christ's strength, whereby he rules in the midst of his enemies, #Ps 110:2. It is that right sceptre, #Ps 45:6, which he sways and whereby he sovereigns. The Proverbs of Solomon are called in Hebrew Mishle, or mastersentences, #Pr 1:1 (from Mashal, dominari to be mastered). And the Scriptures bear the title of Chieftains, #Pr 8:6, and of lords of collections, as some render it, #Ec 12:11.

Measure the temple of God] The Church, that had been so woefully wasted and oppressed by Antichrist, that it stood in need of new measuring and repairing.

That worship therein] In the temple, as being all spiritual priests; and in the altar, as placing all their confidence in Christ's death alone.

Ver. 2. But the court] The antichristian rout, cast out as reprobate silver, as refuse stuff, not worth the measuring.

Given unto the Gentiles] Antichrist and his adherents. Pa-pagans are no better than Pagans. "Are ye not the children of the Ethiopians unto me, O children of Israel? saith the Lord," #Am 9:7.

The holy city] The true Church. See #Da 7:21 Eph 2:19.

Forty and two months] This number is one and the same with 1260 days. The allusion is unto #Da 7:25.

Ver. 3. And I will give unto my two, &c.] sc. Power to purge the Church, and to stand for the truth, all the while it was trodden under foot. Videsis Catalogum Testium veritatis ab Illyrico editum. Zuinglius recordeth that Luther and he (both at one time, the one not knowing nor hearing of the other) began to write against the pope's indulgences. And of Luther and Melancthon one writes thus,

" Divisae his operae, sed mens fuit unica; pavit Ore Lutherus oves, flore Melanethon apes."

"This separate works, but the intent was the same, by the mouth Luther feeds the sheep, by the flowers Melanethon feeds the bees."

Unto my two witnesses] The whole succession of faithful preachers, under the tyranny and rage of Antichrist. These are said to be two, that is, few; or two, that is, enough, #De 17:6; or two, in reference to those noble twos, Moses and Aaron, Elijah and Elisha, Zerubbabel and Joshua, in allusion to whom these witnesses are here described.

Clothed in sackcloth] As calling men to repentance; or as bewailing their blindness; or as lacking better clothing.

Ver. 4. These are the two olive trees] See #Zec 4:3,11,14. in this book of the Revelation the Holy Ghost borrows all the elegancies and flowers in the story of the Old Testament, thereby to set out the story of the New in succeeding ages.

Ver. 5. Fire proceedeth out of their mouths] So that a man were better anger all the witches in the world than God's faithful witnesses; for they have ever vengeance in a readiness for the disobedient, #2Co 10:6. God inflicting what they either denounce or desire of him against their adversaries.

Ver. 6. That it rain not] That the influence of divine grace be withheld from those that despise the gospel; so that they become as those mountains of Gilboa, #2Sa 1:21, or that accursed earth, #Heb 6:8.

Ver. 7. And when they shall have finished] Like as Christ, that faithful and true witness (as he is called, #Re 3:14), when he had preached much about the same time as here, was slain by a Roman governor, raised with an earthquake, and received up into heaven in a cloud; so these. And, ουκ αγαπας μετα φοκιωνος αποθανουμενος. (Plut.) Art thou not glad to fare as Phocion? said he to one that was to suffer with him. These two witnesses could not be killed while they were doing, but when they had done their work. No malice of man can antedate my end a minute (saith one hereupon) while my Master hath work for me to do.

Shall overcome them] By arms, not by arguments.

And kill them] This killing, whether it be already past, or yet to come, it is hard to say. But if to come, some think it shall be but a civil death, that is, of them as witnesses only, not a natural death as men; and so the same persons shall rise again, and enjoy the fruits of their former labours and ascend into a greater glory. (Mr Thos. Goodwin.)

Ver. 8. And their dead bodies] This shows it cannot be meant as a natural death; for how should their bodies lie dead (in that sense) for three years and a half, or (say as it were) for a shorter time?

Of the great city] Rome, of whose greatness Lipsius and Stapleton have written. See #Re 17:18 18:2-6. Hence she is called the great whore, and great Babylon, not without reference unto the old Babylon; which was so great a city, that when it was taken by Cyrus, some part of it knew not what condition they were in till three days after. (Herodot. Arist. Pol.)

Where also our Lord was crucified] For he was put to death by a Roman judge, by a Roman authority, by a kind of death proper to the Romans, &c. He is also crucified in Rome in his members, word, spirit, and worship.

Ver. 9. Three days and a half] i.e. For a short time, till out of their ashes others should arise to stickle for Christ. The pope never rested, but had one or other faithful witness to oppose him; either to his face (as Joannes Sarisburiensis, Qui praesens praesentem Pontificem redarguit; and Mancinellus, who reproved Alexander VI in a sermon at Rome, and had therefore his hands cut off, and his tongue cut out, whereof he died), or else in some more remote part of his dominion, as Savonarola (whom Guicciardin and Mirandula highly commend), Petrarch, who writeth thus, Babylon altera, nempe propinquior, atque recentior, adhuc stat, cito itidem casura, si essetis viri; Babylon would soon down, would you but play the men; besides a cloud of other witnesses, that might here be called in. (Jac. Rev.)

Not suffer their dead bodies] So fulfilling that, #Ps 79:2. Some they would not suffer to be buried; others they dug up again after burial, as (besides many of our martyrs) they unburied and burned the bones of Hermannus Ferrariensis after they had sainted him, because he was said to have followed the doctrine of the Waldenses, those ancient Protestants. (Jac. Rev.) Cardinal Pole had a purpose, if he had lived, to have taken up King Henry VIII's body, and to have burned it. It was generally observed, that as Winchester and Bonner did always thirst after the blood of the living, so was Cardinal Pole's lightning (for the most part) kindled against the dead; and he reserved this charge only to himself.

Ver. 10. Shall rejoice over them] As they did at the Council of Constance, when they had burnt John Huss and Jerome of Prague. So upon the news of the bishops burnt at Oxford, Gardiner came out rejoicing to the Duke of Norfolk; Now, said he, let us be merry and go to dinner. But it was the last he did eat, and he went to hell to digest it too. {a} So upon the news of the French massacre, a jubilee was proclaimed at Rome; the Cardinal of Lorraine gave a thousand crowns to the messenger; the pope caused the massacre to be painted in his palace. Those of Ireland he will surely portray in his chapel or oratory. (Thuanus.)

These two prophets tormented them] As Elias did Ahab, Jeremiah and Amos their flagitious countrymen, and as the martyrs here did their persecutors. Dr Fuller came to William Woolsey his prisoner, and said, Thou dost much trouble my conscience; wherefore I pray thee depart and rule thy tongue, so that I hear no more complaint of thee, and come to church when thou wilt, &c. The end of carnal joy is sorrow (saith Mr Bradford, martyr, in a certain letter). Now let the whoremonger joy with the drunkard, swearer, covetous, malicious, blind buzzard, St John. For the mass will not bite them, nor make them to blush as preaching will. Now may they do what they will; come devils to the church, and go devils home; for no man must find fault; and they are glad of this. Now have they their heart's desire, as the Sodomites had when Lot was gone, &c.

{a} In terris manducant quod apud inferos degerunt.

Ver. 11. And they stood upon their feet] That is, they set themselves stoutly and vigorously to fight against Antichrist. As William Ockam, who being excommunicated by the pope for writing some things against him, fled to Ludovicus the emperor, who was likewise excommunicated, and said unto him, Tu me gladio defende a Papae iniuriis, et ego te verbis ae scriptis defendam, Defend thou me with arms, and I will defend thee with arguments. The bishops also of those times that sided with the emperor, though they were none of the best, yet they resolved and avowed never to yield to the pope, Sed si excommunicaturus veniret, excommunicaturus abiret, cum aliter se habeat antiquorum canonum autoritas

Ver. 12. To heaven in a cloud] As Christ did. {See Trapp on "Re 11:7"}

And their enemies beheld] Not without rage and regret to see how they were crossed, and the truth more and more propagated. Trucidabantur et multiplicabantur, saith one. The Church as the lily is increased by its own juice; Totum mundum sanguine et oratione convertit, saith Luther; She converts all the world by her sufferings and supplications.

Ver. 13. A great earthquake] Since the Reformation, what stirs and broils have there been all over Christendom! God's sword hath ridden circuit, #Eze 14:17, and is not yet sheathed, nor can it, #Jer 47:6,7, as being still in commission.

And the tenth part, &c.] Ruit alto a culmine Roma. Louis XII, king of France, threatened that he would destroy Rome, and coined money with an inscription to that purpose, Se perditurum Babylonem cui cum hac inscriptione monetae, minatus est. George Fransperg (a general under Charles Bourbon) that sacked the city of Rome, caused a halter to be carried near his colours, saying that with that he would hang the pope; encouraging his soldiers (who were most of them Lutherans) with the great opportunity they had to get spoils. (Hist. of the Council of Trent.) But the sins of that city are not yet full.

Gave glory to the God of heaven] Confessed their sins, as Achan, and changed their minds, as those #Mal 3:18. It is said of the Burgundians, that being afflicted and oppressed by the Huns, they applied themselves to Christ the God of the Christians, whom, after a long debate, they concluded to be the Almighty God. (Alsted. Chron.)

Ver. 14. The second woe is past] Visionally past, not eventually.

The third woe] Woe to the wicked, but joy to the saints. At once the sun rises upon Zoar, and the fire falls down upon Sodom. Abraham stands upon the hill, and sees the cities burning.

Ver. 15. Great voices in heaven] i.e. Great joy and triumph in the Church militant.

Are become the kingdoms] They have renounced Popery, given up their names to the gospel, and received the Reformation.

For ever and ever] Not for a thousand years only, as the millenaries hold.

Ver. 16. And the four and twenty elders] {See Trapp on "Re 4:9"}

Ver. 17. Because thou hast taken] Thou hast slain and subdued those thine enemies, that sent messengers after thee, saying, "We will not have this man to rule over us."

Ver. 18. Were angry] Sed vanae sine viribus irae; the wrath of these men turned to the glory of God.

That they should be judged] According to their prayer, and thy promise, #Re 6:10,11.

And shouldest destroy them] God usually retaliates and proportions jealousy to jealousy, provocation to provocation, #De 32:21; frowardness to frowardness, #Ps 18:26; contrariety to contrariety, #Le 26:18,21; destruction to destruction, as here. He pays them home in their own coin.

Ver. 19. And the temple of God] Abundance of light shall be diffused in the Church, and heavenly mysteries more clearly revealed and more commonly understood.

The ark of his testament] That is, the secret mysteries of God. The ark was in a secret place; and seen by none but the high priest once a year.

And there were lightnings] Utter destruction to the wicked, as there was to Jericho, at the sound of the seventh trumpet, #Jos 6:16.

Chapter 12

Ver. 1. And there appeared] This and the two next following chapters are an exposition of the former vision.

A great wonder] As shadowing out and showing great wonders.

In heaven] That is, in the Church, or (according to some) in the visible heaven, where sun, moon, and stars are.

A woman] Alma mater Ecclesia. The Church is called a woman, for her, 1. Weakness; 2. Fruitfulness; 3. Lovingness, #2Sa 1:26.

Clothed with the sun] With Christ's own comeliness, #Eze 16:14. She is also conspicuous, #Mt 5:14, and scorched with persecution, #So 1:6. All which notwithstanding she is comely. Uxor fulget radiis mariti, saith the Civilian.

And the moon under her feet] She treads upon the world's trash, bears patiently all changes and chances; and though the curs of the world bark at her, she shines still:

“ En peragit cursus surda Diana suas.”

A crown of twelve stars] A crown in token of victory.

Twelve stars] Those white horses, #Re 6:2, the twelve apostles and their successors, in and by whom mystical Christ goeth forth conquering and to conquer.

Ver. 2. And she being with child] And so soon smelt out by the bears of the world. Ursa praegnantem mulierem non solum uteri gravitate notam, sed eam etiam quae pridie conceperit, solam ex omni turba consecatur. (Bodin. Theatr. Nat.)

Cried travailling] Being hard beset with cruel persecutors, she longs to be delivered of a Christian emperor, that might put her out of her pain and misery.

She cried] viz. In her prayers to God and apologies to men.

Ver. 3. Another wonder in heaven] That is, in the Church, which is called heaven; for, 1. Its original is from heaven, #Joh 1:13 2. Its tendency to heaven, #Heb 11:14 3. Its conversation in heaven, #Php 3:20 4. Its dependence upon heaven, #Jas 1:17.

A great red dragon] A dragon the devil is called for his sharp-sightedness (the dragon hath a very quick eye, and is said to sleep with open eyes, Mr Arrowsmith), as also for his mischievousness to mankind; and lastly for his serpentine subtilty, #Ge 3:1. <sup>{a}</sup> The comfort is, that as the devil is a lion, so is Christ; there is courage for courage. And as the devil is a serpent, so Christ compares himself to the brazen serpent; there is wisdom for wisdom. A great dragon the devil is, as being god of the world; and red all over with the blood of souls, which he hath swallowed down, as St Peter hath it, #1Pe 5:8. It noteth him also to be a fiery dragon, fiery red, full of wrath and rancour.

Seven heads] To plot, and ten horns to push men into the pit of hell.

Seven crowns upon his head] Pretended authority for what he did against the Church. It passed in France in manner of a proverb, that the modern Council (of Trent) had more authority than that of the apostles, because their own pleasure was a sufficient ground for the decrees, without admitting the Holy Ghost. That Popish council was carried with such infinite guile and craft, that the Papists themselves will even smile in the triumphs of their own wits (when they hear it but mentioned) as at a master stratagem. By these seven crowns some understand the supremacy of the Roman empire, prevailing against the Church.

{α} δρακων παρα το δερκειν. παρα το δραν αχος. Scalig.

Ver. 4. And his tail drew] A monstrous tail for length and strength. One interprets it as his dog-like flattering tail, whence the proverb grew, Cauda blandiri, to be flattered by a tail, κερκω σαινειν. Julian the Apostate drew many from the faith by flatteries and fair promises. Luther was offered a cardinalship to be quiet. (Bp Carlton's Thankf. Remem.) The pope offered Queen Elizabeth to confirm the English Liturgy by his authority, granting also the use of the sacraments under both kinds, so that she would join herself to the Roman Church. And how the pope clawed our king when he was in Spain, A. D. 1623, is better known than that I need here to relate. (Jac. Revius, vit. Pontif.)

And the dragon stood before the woman] This implieth, 1. His readiness and nearness; 2. His instance and diligence.

For to devour her child] As that dragon Pharaoh (so he is called, #Isa 51:9) sought to make away the newly born babes of Israel, #Ex 1:22. Thus the dragon Maximinus devoured Alexander the son of Mammaea; and thus Decius devoured the two Philips, because they seemed somewhat to favour the Christians. Thus Philip, king of Spain, suffered his eldest son Charles to be murdered by the cruel Inquisition, because he was any whit inclinable to the reformed religion. Constantine the Great had like to have lost his life for the like cause, but that God strangely preserved him for a better purpose.

Ver. 5. And she brought forth a man child] Constantine, the Christian Church's first and chief champion.

Who was to rule all nations] The whole Roman empire, but especially to overrule and subdue the Church's many and mighty enemies, as Constantine did most notably.

Caught up to God and to his throne] To rule in the Church next under God himself. And to this height of honour he was caught when the empire was cast upon him, not once thinking of it. Bonus Deus Constantinum magnum tantis terrenis implevit muneribus, quanta optare nullus auderet, saith Augustine. (De Civ. Dei, v. 25.) Ver. 6. And the woman fled] viz. After the battle mentioned in the next verse was fought and finished. See #Re 12:13,14.

Into the wilderness] This notes her afflicted and desolate condition, forced now to live in poverty and exile.

Where she hath a place] To wit, that temple that was so exactly measured, #Re 11:12, called here a wilderness, as was that of Judea, #Mt 3:1, because but thinly inhabited. The elect are but a handful to a houseful of Atheists and Papists. Or else in allusion to the wilderness of Arabia, through which the Israelites fled from that dragon Pharaoh.

That they should feed her there] Those two prophets, #Re 11:3, were appointed to feed these hidden ones, #Ps 83:3, with the hidden manna, #Re 2:17. Their time and hers agree. Ver. 7. And there was war] viz. While the woman was bringing forth; and after that her son was advanced to the empire.

Michael and his angels] Constantine and his armies.

Against the dragon] Maximinus, Maxentius, Licinius, and other tyrants, acted and agitated by the devil.

Ver. 8. And prevailed not] They were so totally routed and ruined, that they could never rally or rage any more. Iucundum Christiano homini spectaculum est, quasi coram cernere certantem Christum cum Antichristo, saith one, concerning Luther's reformation. (Scultet. Annal.) It was a pleasant sight to see Christ and Antichrist striving for the better. For whatsoever the pope with his bulls, or the emperor with his lightbolts, did to hinder it, still the gospel ran and was glorified; and as then, so ever since, maugre (defy) the malice of Rome and of hell. Their late utmost endeavours, and some successes for a season, were but as the last spruntings or bitter bites of dying beasts.

Ver. 9. Was cast out] Full sore against his will. If the enemies had but as much power as malice, the Church should never rest. But they shall be utterly routed and outed, as at this day they are here to our great comfort.

That old serpent] When he was young he outwitted our first parents, #2Co 11:3, then when their reason was not depraved. Now that he is old, and we but children, #Eph 4:14, had we not need look to him, and not be ignorant of his wiles?

Which deceiveth the whole world] Having for that purpose his set and composed machinations, #2Co 2:11, his methods artificially moulded, #Eph 6:11, his depths, sleights, coggings of dice, &c. And herein he is incessantly exercised, as the participle of the present tense noteth, ο πλανων.

Ver. 10. And I heard a loud voice] Great joy was throughout the Churches of Christ, as great cause there was, when Constantine came to the empire. That was very remarkable, that Constantine being now a conqueror, should cause a table to be hanged up on high before the doors of his palace, wherein was painted a dragon that lay thrust through with a dart under his own and his subjects' feet. (Euseb. in Vita Constan.)

For the accuser of our brethren] So the devil is called, saith one, in direct and full opposition to that special name and office of the Holy Ghost, the Comforter, or pleader for us, παρακλητος. The Russians are so malicious one towards another, that you shall have a man hide some of his own goods in the house of him whom he hateth, and then accuse him for the stealth of them; just so deals the devil many times by God's dearest servants. The word κατηγορος, here rendered the accuser, signifieth not any kind of accuser, saith a learned divine, but such a one as accuseth before a king.

Which accuseth them] And upon some such articles too as he is able to prove against them. Hence he is said to stand at Joshua's right hand, at the upper hand, because his accusation was as true as vehement, #Zec 3:3. But here is the comfort, Christ appears in heaven for his (as a lawyer appears for his client), to nonsuit all the devil's accusations, #Heb 9:24. The Spirit also (as an advocate, παρακλητος) makes request in our hearts to God for us, and helpeth us to make apologies for ourselves, #2Co 7:11. But may not the saints say to Satan (first drawing them to sin, and then accusing them) as he did to Joab? #2Sa 18:12,13.

Ver. 11. By the blood of the Lamb] By his merit and spirit, Christ's blood (as Pliny saith of Polium) is a preservative against serpents.

And they loved not their lives] When one said to a certain martyr, Take heed, it is a hard matter to burn; Indeed, said he, it is for him that hath his soul linked to his body, as a thief's foot is in a pair of fetters. (Acts and Mon.) In the days of that bloody persecutor Diocletian, Certatim gloriosa in certamina ruebatur, saith Sulpitius, multoque avidius tum martyria gloriosis mortibus quaerebantur, quam nunc Episcopatus pravis ambitionibus appetuntur. Those ancient Christians showed as glorious power in the faith of martyrdom, as in the faith of miracles; the valour of the patients and the savageness of the persecutors striving together, till both, exceeding nature and belief, bred wonder and astonishment in beholders and readers. {a} One martyr said, Can I die but once for Christ? Another, Had I as many lives as I have hairs upon mine head, they should all go. Hanc animam in flammis offero, Christe, tibi, saith Jerome of Prague.

{a} Non maiori unquam triumpho vicimus quam cum decem annorum stragibus vinci non potuimus. Sulp.

Ver. 12. Rejoice, ye heavens] Ye that have your conversation in heaven, and shall shortly remove your tents thither.

Woe to the inhabitants of the earth] Earthworms that load themselves with thick clay, and strive, with the toads, who shall die with most earth in their mouths.

And of the sea] Seamen are, for the most part, very profane and godless. See #Jude 13 Isa 57:20. Mr Brightman by these inhabitants of the sea understandeth the clergymen, as they call them, who set abroad gross, troubled, brackish, and sourish doctrine, which doth rather bring barrenness of godliness to their hearers, and doth gnaw their entrails, than quench their thirst, or yield any other good fruit.

For the devil is come down] Indeed he was cast down; but that the devil dissembles, and makes as if he came for his pleasure's sake, and so makes the best of an ill matter.

Having great wrath] Indignation, commotion of mind, perturbation of spirit, inflammation or heaving of the blood, by apprehension of an injury, θυμῶν. Satan's malevolence was a motive to his diligence. Natural motion is more swift and violent toward the end of it.

Because he knoweth] By the signs of the last judgment, which cannot be far off, and by conjectures, wherein he hath a singular sagacity.

That he hath but a short time] He therefore makes all haste he can to outwork the children of light, in a quick despatch of deeds of darkness. Certain hawks in colder countries are most eager and earnest to take their prey when the daylight there is of least continuance.

Ver. 13. He persecuted the woman] As the matter of his calamity. The devil infinitely hates Christ, and sins that sin against the Holy Ghost every moment. His instruments, also, carried with hellish malice, cease not to malign and molest the Church, to their own utter ruin: for Christ must reign when all is done.

Ver. 14. Two wings of a great eagle] That is, sufficient means of safety and protection from peril, #Ex 19:4. By this great eagle, some mighty personage seems to be designed, #Eze 17:3-7. And this may very well be Constantine, whose peculiar surname was Great: but yet so (saith Mr Forbes) as that the great honour and riches, wherewith, as with wings, he upon good intention endowed the Church, is an occasion to make her flee to the wilderness, all true and sincere religion by degrees decaying in the visible Church.

Where she is nourished for a time] {See Trapp on "Re 8:9"}

A time, times, and a half time] That is, a year, two years, and half a year, even three years and a half, as #Re 11:9.

Ver. 15. Cast out of his, mouth water] Those barbarous nations, Goths, Huns, Vandals, Lombards, others, stirred up by the devil to overrun the empire, and afflict the Church. Or else it may mean those pestilent and poisonous heresies, Arianism, and the rest, wherewith the Church was infested, according to that of Solomon, "The mouth of the wicked belcheth out evil things," #Pr 15:2.

Ver. 16. And the earth helped the woman] That is, the multitude of Christians meeting in the general councils, those four first especially, held at Nice against Arius, at Constantinople against Macedonius and Eunomius, at Ephesus against Nestorius, and at Chalcedon against Eutyches. These helped the Church exceedingly against inundations of heresies; and were therefore by Gregory the Great received and embraced as the four Gospels.

And the earth opened her mouth] An allusion to #Nu 16:32. Look how the earth swallowed up those malcontents, so did God root out pernicious heresies with their authors and abettors, by the power of the Scripture and the zeal of the orthodox doctors, so that they suddenly vanished out of sight, after a marvellous manner.

Ver. 17. Was wroth with the woman] Who yet had done him no wrong; but he and his are mad with malice (when their designs miscarry especially), and are ready to sue the Church, as he in Cicero did another, quod totum telum corpore non recepiasset, because he had not taken into his body the whole dagger wherewith he had stabbed him. (Orat. pro C. Rab. Posth.)

To make war] That war which is mentioned #Re 13:7.

With the remnant of her seed] As a little seed grain is reserved out of a great heap for store, which is nothing to the whole crop; so is the small number of true believers reserved by grace, nothing to the whole field and crop of the world.

Which keep the commandments] A just description of a godly Christian. Boni catholici sunt qui et fidem integram sequuntur et bonos mores. To be sound in faith and holy in life, this is the kernel of Christianity. (Aug.)

Chapter 13

Ver. 1. And I stood] Where I might best see the beast that came out of the sea.

I saw a beast] The Church, flying into the wilderness from the dragon, falls upon this beast, which is nothing better than the dragon under a better shape. Sic aliud ex alio malum. This beast is that Antichrist of Rome.

Rise up] Not all at once, but by degrees.

Out of the sea] Out of the bottomless pit, #Re 11:7 2Th 2:9.

Having seven heads] To plot.

And ten horns] To push. Craft and cruelty go always together in the Church's enemies. The asp never wanders alone; and those birds of prey go not without their mates, #Isa 34:16.

And upon his horns] The kings that are the pope's vassals. See #Re 17:11. These are the props of his power.

The name of blasphemy] This is his true name; his pretended name is mystery.

Ver. 2. Like unto a leopard] Which is the female among the panthers, the property whereof is, as Pliny telleth us, with her sweet smell to allure the beasts unto her, hiding her terrible head, till she hath them within her reach, and then teareth them in pieces. Just so dealeth Rome with her unhappy proselytes. The Papacy is an alluring, tempting, bewitching religion. No sin past, but the pope can pardon it; none to come, but he can dispense with it, Etiamsi per impossibile, matrem Dei quis vitiasset, said Tecelius.

As the feet of a bear] Which stands firm on her hinder feet, and fights with her fore feet; so doth the Papacy with its canons, decrees, traditions, &c.

As the mouth of a lion] Wide, ravenous, roaring, and insatiable.

And the dragon gave him his power] This bargain was offered to Christ, #Mt 4:8-10, but he would none of it. The bramble in Jotham's parable thought it a goodly thing to reign; so did not the vine and fig tree.

Ver. 3. One of his heads as it were wounded] Either by the invasion of the Goths; or by that fatal schism in the Church of Rome, A.D. 1378, when there sat three popes at once for 40 years together: or by the falling away of the Protestants from the Popedom, from the days of Wycliffe, John Huss, the Waldenses, Luther, to this present. Bellarmine bewails the business, that ever since we began to count and call the pope Antichrist, his kingdom hath greatly decreased. (Lib. iii. de Papa Rom. cap. 21.) And Cotton the Jesuit confesses, that the authority of the pope is incomparably less than it was; and that now the Christian Church is but adminutive.

And his deadly wound was healed] By that false prophet, #Re 13:11, that is, by the Sorbonists, Jesuits, Trent fathers, and other Popish surgeons. The Jesuits give out that the devil sent out Luther, and God raised up them to resist him; but great is the truth, and will prevail, when all falsehood shall fall to the ground. It is but a palliate cure we here read of.

And all the world] sc. Of Roman Catholics.

Wondered] Or had wondered till the beast was wounded.

Ver. 4. And they worshipped] Admiration bred adoration. Idolatrous Papists are worshippers of the devil; whom though in word they defy, yet in deed they deify.

Who is like unto the beast?] Papa potest omnia, quae Christus potest, saith Hostiensis; The pope can do whatsoever Christ can do; yea, and more too, it should seem by these wise wonderers: for who is like unto the beast? say they. Papa est plus quam Deus, saith Francis Zabarel; The pope is more than a God. And why? for of wrong he can make right, of vice, virtue, of nothing, something, saith Bellarmine. (De Pap. Rom. lib. iv.) Mosconius cannot be content to derive papa from papae, the interjection of admiring, because he is stupor mundi, the world's wonderment (that ye may know him to be the beast here mentioned), but he must style him the King of kings and Lord of lords, having ruledom over all rational creatures, Dulia adorandus. (De Majestat. Militant. #Ec 1:1)

Ver. 5. And there was given unto him] As once was to Antiochus, that little antichrist, #Da 7:25. What cracks the pope makes of his unlimited power and prerogatives; who knows not? what blasphemies he belcheth out of the fable of Christ, of eating his pork, Al despito di Die, in despite of God; of suffering himself to be styled "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world," as Pope Martin IV did; of drinking a health to the devil, as another of them did, who hath not heard? Baronius, in the year 964, reckoning up certain of the popes, calleth them monsters, an abomination of desolation in God's temple, &c. Cardinal Benno saith of Pope Hildebrand, that he was a blasphemer, a murderer, a whore master, a necromancer, a heretic, and all that is naught. The Church of Rome (saith another of their own writers) had deserved now for a long time no better of God than to be ruled by reprobates. Marcellus II, pope of Rome, said, that he could not see how any pope could be saved. (Jac. Revius, p. 275.)

Forty and two months] Here Mr Brightman calculates and pitches the ruin of Antichrist upon the year 1686, or thereabouts.

Ver. 6. In blasphemy against God] As when Pope Leo I and (after him) Nicholas III affirmed, that Peter their predecessor was taken into fellowship with the blessed Trinity, as one with them. See #Re 13:5.

And his tabernacle] Christ's humanity, {#Joh 1:14 2:19} this he blasphemeth, by transubstantiating a crust into Christ. Or, the Church of Christ, which he counteth and calleth the synagogue of Satan.

And them that dwelt in heaven] The glorified saints, whom either he despiteth with obtruded honours, such as they acknowledge not; or else barks and rails at incessantly as arch-devils, detestable heretics, common pests, &c., as Luther, Melancthon, Calvin, whose very name he hath commanded to be razed out of all books, wheresoever any man meets with it, Ubicunque invenitur nomen Calvini, deleatur. (Ind. Expur.)

Ver. 7. To make war with the saints] As he did with the Albigenses, publishing his Crusades against them, as if they had been Saracens, and destroying ten hundred thousand of them in France only, if Perionias may be believed. Not to speak of the many thousands since slain in battle by the pope's champions in Germany, France, Ireland, and now also in England; besides those many more that have died for religion by the bloody Inquisition, by the hands of the hangman, 3600 in the Low Countries by the command of the Duke of Alva, 800 here in Queen Mary's days, &c. The beast hath even made himself drunk with the blood of the saints.

And to overcome them] So it seemed, but so it was not. See #Re 12:11. The saints never more prevail and triumph than when it seems otherwise. Of them the enemies may say, as the Persians did once of the Athenians at the field of Marathon (Stobaeus), Βαλλομεν, ου πιπτουσι, τιτρωσκομεν, ου φοβεονται.

We fell them, yet they fall not; thrust them through,
They feel no mischief, but are well enough.

Over all kindreds and tongues] Here the Holy Ghost points to the Popish Catholicism. The Jesuits will still needsly have the Roman Church to be the Catholic Church, though so many kindreds, tongues, and nations have utterly disclaimed it. Herein they are like that mad fellow Thrasilaus in Horace, who laid claim to all the ships that came into the harbour at Athens, though he had no right to the least boat there.

Ver. 8. Whose names are not written] He then that lives and dies a Papist cannot be saved.

Slain from the foundation] sc. 1. In God's purpose; 2. In his promise; 3. In the faith of his people; 4. In the sacrifices; 5. In the martyrs; the first that ever died, died for religion. Christ undertook to pay our debt in the fulness of time; and hence we were enlarged. A man may let a prisoner loose, upon a promise to pay the debt a year after.

Ver. 9. If any man have an ear] q.d. Let all that have souls to save, beware of this beast; for is it nothing to lose an immortal soul? to purchase an everliving death? Purus putus Papista non potest servari. Confer #Re 19:21. It is confessed by all, that a learned English apostate Papist cannot be saved.

Ver. 10. He that leadeth into captivity] q.d. Be of good cheer; Antichrist shall one day meet with his match, drink as he brewed, be paid in his own coin, filled with his own ways, have blood again to drink, for he is worthy. See #Isa 33:1 2Th 1:6.

Here is the patience] q.d. Here is matter for the trial exercise and increase of the saints' graces. Hard weather tries what health. The walnut tree is most fruitful when most beaten. Or, here is support for the saints, and that which may well make them to hold out faith and patience.

Ver. 11. And I beheld another beast] Another in shape, but the same in substance with the former. For here Antichrist appears not as an emperor, but as an impostor. That these two are both one, see #Re 17:11 19:20.

Coming up out of the earth] Set up by earthly men and earthly means, of base beginning, Gigas quasi νηγενης. Ego supernas, vos infernates estis, saith our Saviour to the Jews, "I am from above, ye are from beneath"; ye are earth sprung, as so many mushrooms, #Joh 8:23.

And he had two horns] Two horns in his mitre, two keys in his hand, two swords borne before him, a twofold pretended power, secular and sacred, as king and priest, in the Lamb's stead, whose ape he is.

Spake as a dragon] That is, saith Diodatus, he used an absolute command over consciences, raised himself through devilish pride and execrable boasting, #Re 18:7. Or thus; though he hath two horns like the Lamb, that is, professeth the meekness and innocence of Christ, yet he speaks like the dragon, which is to be understood partly of his blasphemies, partly of his diabolical doctrines, partly of hellish courses thundered out against true professors, and partly of his great promises to those that adore him. (Downh. of Antich.)

Ver. 12. And he exerciseth] The power of speaking blasphemies, of waging wars, of ruling over kindreds, tongues, and nations, &c., notwithstanding his wounded head, which is after a sort cured by the sedulity and subtilty of the Jesuits, and other the pope's emissaries. The first beast, saith Forbes, is the kingdom of Rome under the Pontificality; the second beast is the Pontificality wonderfully quickening the wounded beast to that estate; both are one and the same, except in consideration, as I have said.

Ver. 13. And he doth great wonders] By his art of magic; for true miracles he can do none, nor his master the dragon to help him. Hence they are called lying wonders, #2Th 2:9,10, sorceries, #Re 18:23, and impostures here, #Re 13:14.

So that he maketh fire] As another Elias. This the pope doth daily by his excommunications, casting firebrands, as it were, from on high at those that slight him; and moreover he telleth us of some, that for withstanding his edicts were thunderstruck to death. (Aventin. Annal.)

Ver. 14. That they should make an image] An emperor, saith Aretius, an image of him at least, chosen indeed by the seven electors of Germany, but confirmed by the pope; who therefore is said to give life to the image of the beast, whereby he both speaketh and acteth, #Re 13:15. For if the pope confirm not the new elect, he is no emperor.

Ver. 15. Should be killed] What slaughters Charles V made at Magdeburg and elsewhere by the pope's appointment, and what bloody work hath been done in Germany now for this twenty-eight years, or thereabouts, by the now emperor and his father, against the Protestant party, I need not here to relate.

Ver. 16. All both small and great] Emperor and else. The pope having by his nephew persuaded the king of Bohemia, Maximilian (afterwards emperor), to be a good Catholic, with many promises of honours and profits, intimating the succession of the empire, which else he should hardly obtain, was answered by the king, that he thanked his Holiness, but that his soul's health was more dear to him than all the things in the world. Which answer they said in Rome was a Lutheran form of speech, and signified an alienation from that See; and they began to discourse what would happen after the old emperor's death. (Hist. of the Coun. Trent, p. 418.)

To receive a mark] The Popish clergy say, that in their ordination they receive an indelible character. They may choose whether they will have it in their foreheads (where it cannot be hid) or in their right hands, where they may either hide it or show it as they think good. {See Trapp on "Re 7:3"} The mark common to all the Popish rabble is, St Peter's keys branching out itself in every antichristian doctrine and idolatrous practice. I can never sufficiently admire (saith Mr Heyrick) the speech of blessed Luther, who though he was very earnest to have the communion administered in both kinds contrary to the doctrine and custom of Rome, yet he professeth, If the pope, as pope, commanded him to receive in both kinds, he would but receive in one kind. It is a general rule among the best, that what the pope commands, as pope, though it be good or indifferent, as to pray, read, lift up an eye, hand, to wear black or white, &c., it is a receiving of the mark of the beast, &c. (Mr Heyrick's Serm., p. 108.) Ver. 17. Might buy or sell] As at Rome, oaths, laws, vows, are soluble, and all things else are saleable. Romoe omnia venalia.

"Vendit Alexander cruces, altaria, Christum: Vendere iure potest: emerat illis prius."

"The pope sells crosses, altars, Christ, and all: Well he may sell, for he bought them at the stall."

Also it is well known that the pope flatly forbids trade and traffic with all whom he hath excommunicated, as he did with the Albigenses in the Lateran Council, and as he did with one Tooly in Queen Mary's days, who being hanged for felony, and defying the pope, was (after his death) suspended and excommunicated, that no man should eat or drink, buy or sell with him, bid him good morrow. (Acts and Mon.)

Or the name of the beast] To be called a Roman Catholic, which is better esteemed among Papists than the name of a Christian. It is notoriously known, saith Dr Fulke, that the most honourable name of Christian is in Italy and at Rome a name of reproach, and usually abused to signify a fool or a dolt. (Armor. in Acts xi. sec. 4.)

Or the number of his name] That keep somewhat more aloof, and yet privily comply with Papists, and drive the same design with them, though more slyly and covertly, and to themselves perhaps unperceivedly. What is the reason the pope will not dispense in Spain or Italy, if a Papist marry a Protestant, yet here he will; but because such Protestants receive the number of his name, and will soon be drawn to him?

Ver. 18. Here is wisdom] That is, work for wisdom, as #Re 13:10. Here is "the patience and faith of saints."

It is the number of a man] Such as a man, by search, may find out, if he have his wits about him, as we say. Others sense it thus, the whole number of the beast, whatsoever is numbered to belong unto him, is but the number of a man; human inventions and will-wisdom. Men will have it so, and this is the sum of all Popish religion. Or it is called the "number of a man," because men do number. (Mr Cotton.) The philosopher affirms that man is therefore the wisest of creatures because he alone can number, Bruta non numerant. This is an essential difference.

Six hundred threescore and six] Among the many conjectures, that of λατεινος seems to me most probable, as most ancient and authentic. The year of Rome's ruin is by some held to be 1666. It is plain, saith one, Satan shall be tied up 1000 years; 666 is the number of the beast; Antichrist shall so long reign; these two together make the just number. {a} Luther observeth, that about the year 666, the pope assumed to be αντρευθυνος, uncontrollable. Others observe, that Phocas (that adulterous assassin), Boniface the purchaser of supremacy, and Mahomet the grand impostor, brake forth together about the same time, to the great devastation and hazarding of all Christendom.

{a} Bernardus asseverat Antichristum futurum meridianum daemonem quia a meridie erit, et ibi sedebit. In Cant. ser. 33.

Chapter 14

Ver. 1. A lamb] In opposition to that counterfeit lamb, #Re 13:12. A lion he can show himself at pleasure.

Stood] Ready pressed for action, as at the stoning of Stephen, or he stood sentinel for such as he here reserved to himself under the reign and rage of Antichrist.

A hundred forty and four thousand] The same that were sealed, #Re 7:4, all the holy martyrs, confessors, believers.

Having his Father's name] His Father and their Father, his God and their God; this was written. on their foreheads, as "holiness to the Lord" was upon the high priest's, #Ex 28:36. For the constancy of their confession; they were not "ashamed of the gospel of Christ" #Ro 1:16, nor "afraid with any amazement," #1Pe 3:6.

Ver. 2. As the voice of many waters] The word of God (called here a voice from heaven) hath, saith Mr Forbes, three degrees of operation in the hearts of men. 1. It works wondering (as the sound of many waters) and acknowledging of a strange force and more than human power, #Mr 12:22 Lu 4:32 Joh 7:46 2. It works not only wonder but fear, as thunder doth; thus it wrought in Felix, and may do in any reprobate. 3. It works in the elect peace and joy; it makes music in the soul, far sweeter than that of harpers, #1Pe 1:8.

Ver. 3. A new song] {See Trapp on "Re 5:9"}

But the hundred, &c.] To whom alone it was given to understand the mysteries of God's kingdom. Others could not skill of it.

From the earth] i.e. From the Antichristian rout and rabble. These dunghill cocks meddle not with that jewel, the joy of faith, but speak evil of what they know not.

Ver. 4. Which were not defiled with women] Which have not moiled themselves with fornication corporal or spiritual, as those Israelites, #Nu 25:1-9, by Balaam's counsel, and as Papists at this day, seduced by those effeminate locusts, #Re 9:8. As for their shavelings that plead this text to prove marriage defilement, let them hear the apostle, #Heb 13:4, and another almost as ancient: Si quis coinquinationem vocet commixtionem legitimam, habet inhabitatorem dracohere apostatam; If any call lawful marriage a defilement, that man hath a devil dwelling in him. (Ignatius.)

These are they which follow the Lamb] As the seaman's needle doth the north pole; or as the hop, in its growing, winding about the pole, follows the course of the sun from east to west, and can by no means be drawn to the contrary, choosing rather to break than yield.

These were redeemed] For royal use. See #Re 14:3.

Being the firstfruits] Separated and sanctified unto him from the rest of the world.

Ver. 5. And in their mouth] Children they are that will not lie, #Isa 63:8, neither is a deceitful tongue found in their mouth, #Zep 3:13. They will rather die than lie. The officers of Merindol answered the bishop that moved them to abjure, that they marvelled much that he would go about to persuade them to lie to God and the world; affirming that they punished their children very sharply when they took them with a lie, even as if they had committed a robbery, for the devil is a liar. (Acts and Mon. fol. 866.)

For they are without fault] 1. By imputation; 2. By inchoation.

Ver. 6. And I saw another angel] This is held to be John Wycliffe, who wrote more than two hundred volumes against the pope, and was a means of much good to many. The Lady Ann, wife to King Richard II, sister to Wenceslaus, king of Bohemia, by living here was made acquainted with the gospel; whence also many Bohemians coming hither, conveyed Wycliffe's books into Bohemia, whereby a good foundation was laid for the following reformation.

In the midst of heaven] Not in fastigio caeli, in the height of heaven, as some render it; but allow rather, and as it were in the mid-heaven, because of the imperfection of his doctrine when it was first divulged.

Having the everlasting gospel] The ancient truth, no new doctrine. A gentleman being asked by a Papist, Where was your religion before Luther? answered, In the Bible, where yours never was. It is called the eternal gospel (saith Brightman), as if the Holy Ghost would on purpose meet with the offence of those times, when the truth (that was restored) should commonly be condemned of novelty.

Ver. 7. Fear God] Let one fear drive out another (as one fire doth another); the fear of God, the fear of your fellow-creatures, who draw you to idolatry. For this it is that the second commandment is the first with punishment.

Give glory to him] By confessing your sins and amending your ways. See #Jos 7:19 Jer 13:16.

For the hour of his judgment is come] The judgment that he will exercise upon idolaters and their mawmets, as once in Egypt. See #Joh 12:31 Ac 17:30,31 Ac 14:15.

And the fountains of waters] Quantum miraculi sit in admiranda illa fluminum perennitate, nemo, credo, philosophorum satis explicare haetenus potuit, saith Bucholcer.

Ver. 8. And there followed another angel] Martin Luther with his book De Captivitate Babylonia, which when Bugenhagenius first read, he rashly censured for the most pestilent book that ever was written; but upon better deliberation he retracted his former sentence, and became a means to convert many others.

Of the wine of the wrath] Of the intoxicating, enraging wine, that sets men a madding after her:

“Nam Venus in vinis, ignis in igne furit.”

There is a story of Walter Mapes, sometime Archdeacon of Oxford, who relating the pope's gross simony, {a} concludes his narration thus, Sit tamen Domina materque nostra Roma baculus in aqua fractus: et absit credere quae vidimus. Rome had ravished this man out of his wits.

{a} The act or practice of buying or selling ecclesiastical preferments, benefices, or emoluments; traffic in sacred things. ŒD

Ver. 9. And the third angel] Understand by this third angel, all the reformers and preachers of the gospel after Luther, to the end of the world.

If any man worship] See Mr Perkins's Treatise. A Papist cannot go beyond a reprobate.

And receive his mark] He saith not this of those that have the name or the number of the beast. For we doubt not but many were carried away by him, as those 200 were by Absalom in the simplicity of their hearts, #2Sa 15:11, knowing nothing of his treason.

Ver. 10. Of the wine of the wrath of God] Wine for wine. God delights to retaliate and proportion; as he that said, Fumos vendidit, fumo pereat, He sold smoke, and by smoke let him perish. Imposturam faciunt et patientur; as the emperor said of them that sold glass for pearls: They deceived others, themselves shall be deceived much more.

Without mixture] viz. Of mercy, with which God usually moderateth the cup of believers' afflictions. See #Jas 2:13. They only sip off the top of God's cup, Illud tantum quod suavius est et limpidius: That which is so sweet and so clear. Reprobates drink the dregs. They shall have an evil, an only evil without mixture of mercy, #Eze 7:5. Judgment without mercy, darkness without light. Philosophers say that in this world non dantur purae tenebrae, there is no mere darkness; but reprobates, that here preferred darkness before light, shall be cast into utter darkness without the least glimpse of light. Non surget hic afflictio. God will make an utter end; "Affliction shall not rise up the second time," #Na 1:9. The wicked shall be totally and finally consumed at once.

In the presence of the holy angels] Who shall be not spectators only, but executioners also, as once at Sodom.

In the presence of the Lamb] Notwithstanding their Agnus Dei, Lamb of God and other superstitious trumperies.

Ver. 11. And the smoke of their torment] Utinam de gehenna ubique dissemeretur; saith Chrysostom. Would to God men would everywhere think and talk more of hell, and of that eternity of extremity that they shall never else be able to avoid or to abide. Surely one good means to escape hell is to take a turn or two in hell by our daily meditations.

Ver. 12. Here is the patience] See #Re 13:10. The beast, being thus declared and declaimed against, will rage above measure; hold out therefore, faith and patience.

Ver. 13. A voice from heaven] That voice of Christ, #Joh 5:24 8:51.

Write, Blessed are the dead] Though by the pope accursed and pronounced damned heretics.

Which die in the Lord] Especially if for the Lord; which is (saith Father Latimer) the greatest promotion in the world, such as is not granted to any angel in heaven.

From henceforth] As well as heretofore in those primitive persecutions. Or, from henceforth, that is, presently from the very time of their death, απαρτι, e vestigio, a mode, ab ipso mortis tempore. This puts out the very fire of purgatory; for if all believers die in Christ, and are blessed, and that presently, then none are to be purged.

Rest from their labours] The sleep of these labourers, oh, how sweet is it! Quale sopor fessis in gramine -they get the goal, they enter the haven:

“Italiam socii laeto clamors salutant.”

A Christian here is like quicksilver (which hath in itself a principle of motion, but not of rest), never quiet; but as the ball upon the racket, ship upon the waves, &c. Death brings him to his rest, #Isa 57:2.

And their works follow them] They die not with them, as Hortensius's Orations did. Mors privare potest opibus, non operibus, Death may deprive a man of his wealth, but not of his works.

Ver. 14. A sharp sickle] An instrument to cut down grain, #De 16:9, and the bunches and branches of the grapes, #Isa 18:5. It betokens sharp and sudden vengeance. What more beautiful to behold than the field before harvest, than the vineyard before the vintage, &c.? This is spoken for the consolation of the persecuted people of God.

Ver. 15. Thrust in thy sickle] This is not a command, but a request of the faithful, which is soon fulfilled. It is like that of the Church, #Ps 102:3 "Arise, O Lord, and have mercy upon Zion; for the time to favour her, yea, the set time, is come."

Ver. 16. And he that sat on the cloud] That is, Christ, who soon condescendeth to the suits of his servants. Iste vir potuit quod voluit, said one concerning Luther. The death of Arius was precationis opus, non morbi, the fruit of prayer, rather than the effect of his disease, saith another. He was brought to confusion by the prayers of Alexander, the good bishop of Constantinople.

Ver. 17. And another angel] The community of faithful Christians that combine against Antichrist, to pull him out of his throne and cut his comb.

Ver. 18. And another angel] A type of true pastors, saith Mr Forbes; by whose plain and powerful preaching the other are informed and stirred up to consecrate their hands to the Lord. Such an angel was Zuinglius, who died in battle; such was Beza in that battle that was fought in campis Druidensibus; such were the Angrognian ministers, and such were sundry of our late army preachers, Mr Marshal, Mr Ash, my dear brother Mr Thomas Jackson, now of Gloucester, &c.

Which had power over fire] Not Christum et Evangelium flammeum praedicans, as a popish varlet <sup>{a}</sup> slandered Beza at the afore mentioned sight, but as the pacifying the fire of contention among brethren, and setting them all together against the common enemy.

Thrust in thy sharp sickle] Fall on, quit you like men, be valiant for the Lord of hosts; "Cursed is he that doth the Lord's work negligently. Cursed is he that withholdeth his sword from blood." Thus the faithful ministers strengthened the hands and hearts of the soldiers to battle, and made them stick close to their colours and commanders.

Are fully ripe] Ripe for vengeance, as the Amorites were, when they had filled the land from one end to another with their uncleanness, #Ezr 9:11. About the year of grace 1414, Theodoricus Urias, an Augustinian in Germany, complained, that the Church of Rome was then become, ex aurea argenteam, ex argentea ferream, ex ferrea terream, superesse ut in sterco abiret; of gold silver, of silver iron, of iron earth, which would shortly turn to muck. (Jac. Revius.)

{a} A man or lad acting as an attendant or servant; a menial, a groom. Now arch. OED

Ver. 19. And the angel thrust in] Down go the Antichristians immediately, by the power and prowess of the Christian armies, thus edged and enegared by their preachers. This we have seen fulfilled in our late wars to our great comfort, at Edgehill and Nazeby fight especially.

In the great winepress] Lacus iste locus coedis. Such a lake, the place of devastation, This winepress is called Armageddon, #Re 16:16.

Ver. 20. And the winepress was trodden] viz. By Christ the King, with his heavenly horsemen, #Re 19:13,14.

Without the city] i.e. Without the Church, haply in Judea, whither the pope being driven from Rome, shall fly and sit, till Christ shall unroost him with the brightness of his coming, #2Th 2:8.

Even unto the horse bridles] To confute the pride and cruelty of those bloody Papists that threatened to ride their horses up to the saddleskirts in the blood of the Lutherans. (Flac. Illyr.) So Famesius, Minerius, Felix of Wurtemberg, Sir Charles Ellerker, Charles IX of France, that cruel Queen, who when she saw some of her Protestant subjects lying dead, and stripped upon the earth, cried out, The goodliest tapestry that ever she beheld. These and the like shall be one day glutted with blood, which they have so barbarously thirsted after. Satia te sanguine, quem sitiisti, &c., Satisfy with your blood which you were so thirsty for, as she said of Cyrus. (Justin, lib. i.)

Chapter 15

Ver. 1. And I saw another sign] Distinct from the former, and describing the utter overthrow of Antichrist in this and the following chapters.

Great and marvellous] A just wonder it was indeed, the miracle that we in these last times are to look for, that the kingdom of Antichrist should be so easily and suddenly overturned by the preaching of the gospel, as once the walls of Jericho were by the blowing of rams' horns.

Seven angels] i.e. Certain chieftains of the reformed Churches.

Having the seven last plagues] Being the several parts of the seventh trumpet, and said to be the last that shall in this life be inflicted; though far worse follow in hell, whereof all these are but typical. Here the leaves only (as it were) fall upon reprobates, but hereafter the whole trees. Here they pay but the interest only, but there the whole principal.

Ver. 2. As it were a sea of glass] The word of God mingled with the virtue of the Holy Ghost, say some. The world full of affliction, say others.

Having the harps of God] Hearts full of heaven.

Ver. 3. And they sing] There cannot but be music in the temple of the Holy Ghost.

The song of Moses] As being delivered out of spiritual Egypt.

And the song of the Lamb] That mentioned #Re 14:3, and the same in effect with that of St Paul, #1Ti 1:15,17.

Ver. 4. Who shall not fear thee] q.d. How mad are the enemies, how sottish is the world that fear not thee who art the proper object of fear! #Ps 76:11. The Greeks call him Θεος, just as Δεος, fear; the Chaldee Dechilah for the same reason; and Jacob styled him "The fear of his father Isaac."

For thou only art holy] Before it had been said of his Holiness, Who is like unto the beast Now, Who shall not fear thee, O Lord? for thou only art holy.

For all nations shall come] As being deeply affected with thy heaviest plagues upon Antichrist; they shall better bethink themselves, "They shall return, and discern between the righteous and the wicked," #Mal 3:18.

Are made manifest] i.e. Are begun to be, and more and more shall be, if our sins hinder not.

Ver. 5. The temple of the tabernacle] These words are all one with those #Re 11:19, to the consideration whereof we are here recalled, after so long an interruption.

Ver. 6. Clothed in pure] Habited as holy priests.

With golden girdles] Here an interpreter gives this note, that they which are lewd and vicious, though never so wise, political, rich, and valiant, shall not be God's instruments to plague Antichrist and his kingdom. (Mr Bernard.) This their priestly apparel showeth also how that these angels come forth in the Church's cause, and for her sake, without any by and sinister respect. They are all of them sincere professors of the truth of Christ, their breasts girded with the golden girdles of truth.

Ver. 7. And one of the four beasts] The faithful pastors, by their divine discourses of the pure worship of God, the intolerable tyranny of Antichrist, &c., stir up the spirits of God's servants to set themselves against that man of sin, and to execute upon him the judgment written. "This honour have all his saints," #Ps 149:9.

Seven golden vials] Vessels of large content, but narrow mouths; they pour out slowly, but drench deeply, and distil effectually the wrath of God, which may be let out in minims, and yet do great matters; as there may be much poison in little drops. These vials are said to be golden, to show that this anger is holy.

Full of the wrath of God] Filled out of the cup of his wrath, mentioned in the former chapter.

Ver. 8. And the temple was filled] This shows that God graciously approves and miraculously protects the reformed Churches. See #Ex 40:34,35 1Ki 8:10. So he did the Hussites in Bohemia. All Germany was up in arms against them. Actum iam de Hussitis videbatur. Verum Germani, nondum viso hoste, Panico terrore percussi, diffugerunt, saith the historian. And when things seemed to be in a desperate condition, the Germans, smitten with a panic terror, fled all away before they had looked the enemy in the face. How wonderfully is Geneva preserved in the midst of many mighty enemies! What should I speak of Rochelle relieved, and Leyden rescued, both from heaven! We of this nation have lately seen as much of God's glory and power in our temple as ever did any.

Till the seven plagues] No Antichristian could understand the end of the seven plagues, till beaten into a better mind. Vexatio dat intellectum.

Chapter 16

Ver. 1. Go your ways] A proof of the divine calling of the ministers of the gospel. This commission came out of the temple, as obtained by the prayers of the saints.

Pour out the vials] {See Trapp on "Re 15:7"}

Upon the earth] Upon Antichrist and his adherents, Roma facta est ex aurea ferrea, ex ferrea terrea, Rome was made from golden to iron and from iron to dirt, said one of her own favourites. It is said, #Re 12:16, that the earth helped the woman; and yet here that the vials of God's wrath were poured out upon the earth; to teach us, saith one, that men may be useful for the public, and yet not freed from God's wrath. But that by-the-by only.

Ver. 2. And the first went] They went not all at once. Note the patience of God, waiting men's return unto him.

Upon the earth] Antichrist's footstool, his branded slaves.

A noisome and grievous sore] The French disease, say some; the devil's disease, say others, viz. spite and envy at the Reformation wrought in Bohemia, Germany, England, &c., upon the discovery of the Papists' hypocrisy and filthiness.

Ver. 3. Upon the sea] The popish council (called a sea, from the concourse thereunto from all parts), that of Trent especially, with their deadly decrees, making the traditions of the Church the rule of faith, &c. And these deadly decrees were written with the blood of heretics.

Died in the sea] As the fishes of Jordan do as soon as they fall into the Mare mortuum, Sea of Death and as the fishes in the River Nile did, when the waters thereof were turned into blood.

Ver. 4. Upon the rivers, &c.] The persecutors and impostors, the Jesuits especially, who have lately added twelve new articles (by the authority of Pope Pius IV) raised out of the Council of Trent, and added to the Nicene Creed, to be received with others as the true catholic faith, to be believed by as many as shall be saved. And those that receive them not, are not suffered to live among them. This is worse than the six articles in Henry VIII's time, that whip with six cords, as they called it. See these twelve articles in the Epist. prefixed to Bishop Jewel's works.

Ver. 5. The angel of the waters] The same that poured forth his vial upon the waters, #Re 16:4.

Thou art righteous] God's judgments are sometimes secret, always just, and so to be acknowledged. We shall one day see the reason of all, and say as Jehu did, #2Ki 9:36.

Ver. 6. For they have shed] As Minerius that monster, the cruel Duke of Alva, bloody Bonner, the Guises, and other of the pope's champions. Duke d'Alva, boasted of it, that he had put 36,000 Protestants to death; but they were rescued by the goodness of God and by the prowess of Queen Elizabeth, and now they are got from under the altar, as #Re 16:7. (Acts and Mon.; Camden.) {a}

Thou hast given them blood to drink] As Tomyris dealt by Cyrus, the Parthians by Crassus, the Romans by those Jews that cried out, "His blood be upon us," &c., as our laws do by the priests and Jesuits, and those that receive them, proceeding against such as traitors to the state. The putting out of the French king's eyes, who promised before with his eyes to see one of God's true servants burned; the death of Charles IX of France, author of the Parisian massacre, by exceeding bleeding at sundry parts of his body; who seeth not to be the just hand of God upon them? This Charles beholding the bloody bodies of the butchered Protestants, in that execrable massacre, and feeding his eye upon that woeful spectacle, breathed out this bloody speech, Quam bonus est odor hostis mortui! How sweet is the smell of a slain enemy! and shortly after breathed out his accursed soul, Inter horribilium blasphemiarum diras, saith a historian, tantam sanguinis vim proieciens, &c., after that Beza had forewarned him (but in vain) by that verse,

“ Tu veto Herodes sanguinolente time.”

So Julian, Attila, Felix of Wurtemberg, Henry III of France, stabbed in the same chamber wherein he, then being Duke of Anjou, had contrived the French massacre. So let thine enemies perish, O Lord.

“ Talia quisque luat, qualia quisque facit!”

“Let everyone be paid according to his deeds.”

{a} See the Mirror or Looking Glass both for Saints and Sinners, set forth by my most loving and highly honoured friend, Mr Sam. Clarke, pastor and preacher of the word at Bennett Fink, London; unto whom not only I give thanks for his help in this publication, but also all the Churches that shall get good thereby.

Ver. 7. And I heard another] That in the mouth of two witnesses this truth might be established. Let God be justified, and every mouth stopped.

Out of the altar] Under which lie the souls of those that were slain for the testimony of Jesus, #Re 6:9. {See Trapp on "Re 16:6"}

Ver. 8. Upon the sun] The pope's supremacy, say some, the Scriptures, say others, by the light whereof they are laid open to the world (dancing naked in a net, and yet not seeing their own nakedness, as Mr Philpot, martyr, told Chadsey), and by the dint whereof, "God smites the earth"; #Isa 11:4, that is, the consciences of those popelings, glued to the earth. He even "hews them by his prophets, and slays them by the words of his mouth," #Ho 6:5. But this interpretation touching the Scriptures some hold to be dangerous; because upon what subject soever these vials fell, the wrath of God fell together with them upon the same, #Re 16:1; they understand therefore by sun the house of Austria, or the highest authority that holds on Rome.

Ver. 9. And men were scorched] Or parched, scalded, roasted, εκαυματισθησαν. This is by accident in regard of the Scriptures; for the Lord speaketh peace to his people; and his word is good to those that are good, #Mic 2:7. But as Origen saith of devils, so may we say of Papists; there is no greater torment to them than the word of God. In hoc eorum omnis flamma est, in hoc uruntur incendio. Hence they burn up Bibles, tanquam doctrinam peregrinam, as strange doctrine. (Spec. Europ.) Hence they censure St Paul as savouring of heresy, and could find in their hearts to purge his Epistles. Eckius is not afraid to say, that Christ did never command his disciples to write, but to preach only. (Enchirid. loc. com. cap. Eccles.) Bellarmine saith, the Bible is no more than commonitorium, a kind of storehouse for advice. Hosius saith that the pope's interpretation, though it seem never so repugnant to the Scripture, is nevertheless ipsissimum Dei verbum, the very word of God. The Council of Basil answered the Hussites (requiring Scripture proofs for such doctrines as were thrust upon them), that the Scriptures were not of the being of the Church, but of the well being only; that traditions were the touchstone of doctrine and foundation of faith.

And blasphemed the name of God] The truth of God contained in the Scriptures. What a devil made thee to meddle with the Scripture said Stephen Gardiner to Marbeck. They tell us of several that have been possessed by that means; and assure us that our condemnation is so expressly set down in our own Bibles, and is so clear to all the world, that nothing more needs hereto than that we know to read, and to have our eyes in our heads at the opening thereof. (Alex. Cook.)

Ver. 10. Upon the seat of the beast] This city of Rome, which was never yet besieged (since it became the seat of Antichrist) but it was taken, and shall be again shortly to purpose. Rather, say some, by seat is meant his kingdom, the pope's singular sole authority and monarchical frame of church government.

And his kingdom was full of darkness] εσκοτωμενη. It appeared to be so (as motes appear in the sunshine) by the clear light of truth shining upon it. A Scottish mist is here already fallen upon a piece of his kingdom, and what further service God hath for their and our armies to do against the pope in Ireland, or elsewhere, we expect and pray God grant us good agreement among ourselves, and then much may be done abroad.

And they gnawed their tongues] Being as mad with malice as Boniface VIII was of discontent, who being suddenly taken prisoner at his father's house by Sara Columns his mortal enemy, and brought to Rome, laid up in the castle of St Angelo, within thirty-five days after most miserably died in his madness, rending himself with his teeth, and devouring his own fingers. (Turk. Hist. i. 26.)

Ver. 11. And blasphemed the God of heaven] As they did in 1588, when the Spaniards gave out that Christ was turned Lutheran; and as Faux the gunpowder traitor did, when he told those that took him, that not God, but the devil, had brought to light and to nought that desperate design. (Lonicer. Theatr. Histor.) Thus they set their mouths against heaven, and their tongue walketh through the earth; as if Augustus Caesar were dealing with some god Neptune; or the three sons, trying their archery at their father's heart, to see who can shoot nearest. What an execrable blasphemy is that of John Hunt, a Roman Catholic, in his humble appeal to King James in the 6th chapter of that Pamphlet: "The God of the Protestants is the most uncivil and evil mannered God of all those who have borne the names of gods upon the earth, yea, worse than Pan, god of the clowns, which can endure no ceremonies nor good manners at all." See Dr Sheldon's Mark of the Beast.

And rspented not] This leopard <sup>{#Re 13:2}</sup> can never change his spots, because they are not in the skin, but in the flesh and bones, in the sinews and most inward parts. Tigers rage and tear themselves at the sound of a drum, and at the smell of sweet spices; so do these savage Papists, when called to repent.

Ver. 12. Upon the great river Euphrates] i.e. Upon whatsoever yet hindereth the destruction of spiritual Babylon and the coming in of the Jews, as the Turkish empire.

That the way of the kings] Christians, say some, who are kings in righteousness, and come from the East, or from Christ, "That dayspring from on high," #Lu 1:78. Others understand this text of the Jews, who are most of them in the East, dispersed through Turkey, Tartary (the ten tribes especially), and China. <sup>{a}</sup> Junius saith, that which is called the "land of Sinim," #Isa 49:12, may probably be meant of China; which if it be the meaning, there may be many of the Jews, whose conversion we daily expect and pray for. See #Isa 11:15,16 Zec 10:10,11.

Ver. 13. Three unclean spirits] Spiritual fathers, as the Papists call their Jesuits, who seek to subject all to the pope, and the pope to themselves, being ultimus diaboli crepitus, as one speaketh, the last attempt of a daring devil. These are the pope's janizaries, <sup>{a}</sup> bloodhounds, vultures, whose nest (as Aristotle saith) cannot be found, yet they will leave all game to follow an army, because they delight to feed on carrion.

Like frogs] For their filthiness, impudency, loquacity, with their continual brekekekex <sup>{b}</sup> coax <sup>{c}</sup> coax. (Aristoph.)

Come out of the mouth] That is, by the counsel and command, by virtue of that vow of mission, whereby the Jesuits are bound to the pope, to go whither he shall send them, about whatsoever attempt he shall enjoin them. Yea, if their governors command them a voyage to China or Peru, without dispute or delay they presently set forward. Hence haply they are called spirits.

<sup>{a}</sup> One of a former body of Turkish infantry, constituting the Sultan's guard and the main part of the standing army. The body was first organized in the 14th century, and was composed mainly of tributary children of Christians; after a large number of them had been massacred in 1826, the organization was finally abolished. (ED)

<sup>{c}</sup> To make a pet of; to pet, fondle, caress; to treat endearingly or with blandishment. Obs. OED

Ver. 14. The spirits of devils] Or breathing devils.

Working miracles] Lying wonders, #2Th 2:9.

Unto the kings of the earth] The pope's nuncios, legates a latere, and other emissaries, stir up the spirits of princes to embroil the world with wars, for the upholding of his tottering greatness; but all in vain. The greatest impostors have ever been the greatest courtiers. The Arians in their age, and from them the Jesuits learned it. As Pharaoh's frogs, they get into kings' bedchambers.

And of the whole world] Papists shall call in the help of foreign princes out of Asia, Africa, America, to suppress the heretics, as they call them. But with poor success; for they shall associate themselves only to be broken in pieces, #Isa 8:9. Exorientur, sed exurentur; It will spring up but it will be destroyed. #Re 19:18. The mountain of the Lord shall be lifted up above all mountains. These auxiliaries shall speed no better than those subsidiary Syrians, #2Sa 10:18,19.

Ver. 15. I come as a thief] Who gives no warning. {See Trapp on "Mt 24:44"} I come suddenly, secretly, yea, and also violently and terribly. See #Re 3:3 Lu 12:34 1Th 5:2.

Blessed is he that watcheth] The prophecy is here interrupted {as #Ge 49:18} to forewarn and forearm the saints; #Lu 12:37,38,43, they are three times said to be blessed that watch.

And keepeth his garments] Keepeth himself unspotted of the world, undefiled in the way.

Lest he walk naked, &c.] See #Re 3:18.

Ver. 16. And he gathered] God hath an overruling hand in that which the frogs of Rome do at the courts of kings, and ordereth the disorders of the world to his own glory.

Called in the Hebrew Armageddon] That is, they shall receive such a famous foil, such as Sisera did at the waters of Megiddo, #Jud 5:19.

Ver. 17. Into the air] The popish air, the kingdom of Satan, #Eph 2:2.

Saying, It is done] What is done? The mystery of iniquity is abolished, and the mystery of God is fulfilled. So Cicero when he had slain those of Catiline's conspiracy, he came to the people, and said, vixerunt, they were alive, but now the world is well rid of them.

Ver. 18. And there were voices] A description of the last judgment, when heaven and earth shall conspire together for the punishment of the wicked. See #Mt 24:36-41,50,51 2Pe 3:10-12 2Th 1:8.

Ver. 19. And the great city] The whole Antichristian state.

Divided into three parts] By the earthquake disjunct and dissipated. Or, divided into three parts, that is, into three factions, 1. Stiff Papists; 2. Converts; 3. Neuters.

And the cities of the nations] That came to aid Antichrist.

And great Babylon] Augustine and other ancients do call Rome the Western Babylon; and do so compare them, as that Abraham was born in the flourish of the first Babylon, Christ of the second. The Jesuits here, though they grant Rome to be Babylon, yet they would have it to be Rome heathen under the emperors, and not Rome Christian under the popes. But it must be Rome Christian, as it appears by a double departure: 1. Of Babylon from the Church, #Re 17:3. Babylon is called a whore. 2. Of the Church from Babylon, #Re 18:3. The temple of God is the seat of Antichrist, saith Paul, #2Th 2:3,4.

The cup of wine] That wherein God delights, as a man would do to drink a cup of generous wine.

Ver. 20. Fled away] Either swallowed up by the water or consumed by the fire.

Ver. 21. A great hail] Bigger than that which brained the kings of Canaan, #Jos 10:11; perhaps this shall be fulfilled according to the letter. Howsoever, the elements shall melt like scalding lead upon Antichristians and other atheists; and they shall answer for all with flames about their ears.

Chapter 17

Ver. 1. And there came] This and the following chapters are set for the explanation of the dark and difficult passages in the former, in the three last vials especially.

One of the seven] Probably the seventh.

And talked with me] ἐλάλησε λαλία, familiarly as the Samaritess with her countrymen, #Joh 4:42, or as the master with his scholar.

I will show unto thee] Thou shalt not only be an ear but an eye witness.

*“ Segnius irritant animos demissa per aures, Quam quae sunt oculis commissa fidelibus.”
Horat.*

The judgment] The damnation of her; the destruction is reserved to the next chapter.

Of the great whore] The whore of Babylon, more infamous and notorious than any Thais, Lais, Phryne, Messalina, Orestilla ( cuius praeter formam nihil unquam bonus laudavit, Sallust), or Pope Joan, of whom Funccius the chronologer speaketh thus; Ego Funccius non dubito quin divinitus ita sit permissum ut femina fieret Pontifex eadem meretrix, &c.; I doubt not but that God therefore permitted a notorious harlot to be advanced to the popedom (and this about the very time when the popes were most busy in subjecting the kings of the earth, and making them their vassals), that he might point out to men this whore here mentioned, with whom the kings of the earth committed fornication.

Ver. 2. With whom the kings] As submitting their sceptres to his keys; and becoming his feudatories.

And the inhabitants of the earth] So that she is not a noble whore only, but a common strumpet, prostituting herself to the meanest for their money, as in the pardon office.

Have been made drunk] Hence it is so difficult to convert idolaters: there is no dealing with a man that is drunk. "Whoredom and wine take away the heart," #Ho 4:11.

Of her fornication] Both spiritual and corporal. Sixtus Quintus lupanar utriusque Veneris Romae condidit (saith Agrippa) et decessit tabidus voluptate.

Ver. 3. Into the wilderness] Whither the true Church fled, Re. xii., of which they must be (saith one) that can learn to know the Romish Church to be a whore, condemned of God.

I saw a woman] {See Trapp on "Re 17:1"}

Sit upon] Not going afoot, as Christ and the apostles did, but magnificently mounted, as the pope is ever, either upon a stately palfrey (emperors holding his stirrup) or upon men's shoulders. England was once called the pope's ass, for bearing his intolerable exactions. This ass he held by the ears instead of a bridle.

Upon a scarlet coloured beast] The proper colour of the court of Rome; and it well serves to set forth their pomp and their hypocrisy. Innocent IV gave a red hat to his cardinals, to show them (as he said) that they should be ready to shed their blood for the truth. But that painter was nearer the point, who being blamed by a cardinal for colouring the visages of Peter and Paul too red, tartly replied, that he painted them so as blushing at the stateliness and sinfulness of his successors.

Full of names of blasphemy] His head only before was busked with the blasphemy, #Re 13:1, now his whole body. Thus evil men and seducers grow worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived, #2Ti 3:13.

Ver. 4. In purple and scarlet] Clothing for kings and nobles, over whom this whore domineers much more than the concubines did over the kings of Persia.

And decked with gold] Gr. κεχρυσωμενη, gilded with gold, to note her hypocrisy and outsideness, gold without, copper within. The pope styles himself the servant of God's servants, but yet stamps in his coin, "The nation and country that will not serve thee shall be rooted out." At the absolution of King John of England, 8000 marks of silver were presently delivered to Pandoffus the pope's envoy, who trampled it under his feet as condemning that base matter, but yet received it and sent it away to Rome. (Daniel's Hist.)

And precious stones and pearls] Besides the rich stones that are in the pope's triple crown of inestimable price and value, he carries in his pantofle {a} (which he holds out to be kissed) the picture of the cross, set in pearls and precious stones, Ut plenis faucibus crucem Christi derideat, saith Hiedfeld. Pope Sixtus quintus five was wont to give to Tiresa, his harlot, pantofles covered with pearls. He spent two hundred and threescore thousand crowns upon a conduit, which he built for his pleasure; and yet he brought in fifty hundred thousand crowns into the new treasury built by himself in the castle of St Angelo. At the coronation of Pope Leo X, a million crowns are said to have been spent in one day. Pope Paul II was wont to sleep all day, and spend whole nights in weighing monies and beholding jewels and precious pictures, uno eo die 1,000,000 aureorum expendit. (Jac. Rev. 261.)

A golden cup full of abominations] Gold, if it be right, they say discovers and expels poison. Put poison into a cup of gold, and it will hiss and send up certain circles like rainbows. Hereby is signified (saith an author) that God threateneth judgment and fire to those that pour poison into divine doctrine, as the pope doth with his mad mixtures. He that argued from the letters of Papa, P. Poculum, A. Aureum, P. Plenum, A. Abominationum, argued no less wittily than that other, who of Roma made Radix omnium malorum, the base of all evils.

{a} A slipper; formerly applied very variously, app., at one time or another, to every sort of in-door slippers or loose shoes; esp. to the high-heeled cork-soled chopins; also to out-door overshoes or goloshes; and to all manner of Oriental and non-European slippers, sandals, and the like. (In Scottish use from 15th c.; in common Eng. use from c 1570 to c 165060; after that chiefly an alien or historical word.) (ED)

Ver. 5. Mystery] This word mystery is in the pope's mitre, saith Brocard the Venetian, and many more who have been at Rome, and profess to have seen it. (Dr James of the Corr. of Script. Preface.) The whole antichristian state is a mystery of iniquity, #2Th 2:7, and is much conversant about mysteries, sacraments, ceremonies, pompous rites, &c.: murders, treasons, thefts, &c., they easily dispense with, but none of their ceremonies. Let God, say they, see to the breach of his own law; we will look to ours. Rome was raised in a mystery: she grew to her greatness insensibly and cunningly. Her bishop is both an Aemulus and an opposite to Christ; one that would seem like him, a vice-Christ, αντιχριστος, and yet is his chiefest adversary; this is the mystery of iniquity. See #2Th 2:7, {See Trapp on "2Th 2:7"}

Babylon the great] Rome, resembling the Assyrian Babylon in pride, idolatry, filthiness, but especially in cruelty toward the Church. See the Babylonian cruelty graphically described, #Jer 51:34, and make the comparison.

The mother of harlots] The Church of Rome to this day delights to be styled Holy Mother Church. Holy she is in the sense that the Hebrews call harlots. And such a mother, as bastards have for their mother, by whose name they are called; the father is seldom mentioned by them.

Ver. 6. Drunken with the blood, &c.] Bishop Bonner delivered Richard Woodman, with four more, requiring of them to be but honest men, members of the Church Catholic, and to speak good of him. And no doubt (saith Woodman) he was worthy to be praised, because he had been so faithful an aid in the devil his master's business, for he had burned good Mr Philpot the same morning. In whose blood his heart was so drunk as I suppose he could not tell what he did, as it appeared to us both before and after. For but two days before, he promised us we should be condemned that same day that we were delivered; yea, and the morrow after he sought for some of us again, yea, and that earnestly. He waxed dry after his great drunkenness; wherefore he is like to have blood to drink in hell, as he is worthy, if he repent not, &c. It is wisdom (said a certain unknown good woman in a letter to Bonner), it is wisdom for me and all other simple sheep of the Lord, to keep us out of your butcherly stall as long as we can; especially seeing you have such store already, that you are not able to drink all their blood, lest you should break your belly, and therefore let them lie still and die for hunger, &c. Thus I kept the bandogs <sup>{a}</sup> at staves' end (said Shetterden the martyr), not as thinking to escape them, but that I would see the foxes leap above the ground for my blood, if they can reach it.

I wondered with great admiration] All things are portentous in the popedom; what monsters were Pope John XII, and Hildebrand, as Luitprandus (Lib. 6, de Reb. Gest. in Europ. in Vita Hildeb.) describes the one, and Cardinal Benno the other, both of their own side. Tertia classis continet Papas vel potius πωπους, saith Alstedius. After the thousandth year of Christ, there was nowhere less piety than in those that dwelt nearest to Rome, as Machiavel observeth.

{a} A dog tied or chained up, either to guard a house, or on account of its ferocity; hence gen. a mastiff, bloodhound. (ED)

Ver. 7. Wherefore didst thou marvel?] Nil admirari prope res est una, Numici. We wonder at things out of ignorance of the causes of them. Hinc admiratio peperit philosophiam.

Ver. 8. Was and is not] Was before the time of this revelation in the Roman government, which was afterwards usurped by the pope. A thing that the first bishops of Rome dreamed not of. And yet Tertullian (Lib. de Pudicitia) taxes the rising ambition of the popes in his time, thus: I hear, saith he, that there is an edict set forth, and that very peremptory, in these terms, Pontifex, scilicet maximus, Episcopus Episcoporum dicit, Thus saith the high priest, the bishop of bishops. (Baron. Annul. tom. 4.) Odi fastum illius Ecclesiae, I hate the pride of the Church of Rome, saith Basil.

Go into perdition] Go, not run; by degrees, not all at once. He now takes long strides toward the bottomless pit; which is but a little before him, and even gapes for him. There stands a cold sweat on all his limbs already.

Shall wonder] Admiration bred superstition; and illumination draws men off it. Julius Palmer, martyr, was a most obstinate Papist all King Edward's days; and yet afterwards, in Queen Mary's time, suffered most cruel death at the Papists' hands at Newbury, for the most ready and zealous profession of the truth. His words to one Bullingham, walking in Paul's after his conversion, were these; Oh that God had revealed these matters unto me in time past! I would have bequeathed this Romish religion, or rather irreligion, to the devil of hell, from whence it came. Believe them not, Bullingham, I will rather have these knees pared off than I will kneel to yonder jackanapes {a} (meaning the rood). {a}

And yet is] In regard of that imperial power then extant, which the pope should afterwards take to himself.

{a} Applied contemptuously to a crucifix. Obs. (ED)

{b} The cross upon which Christ suffered; the cross as the symbol of the Christian faith. Now only arch. (ED)

Ver. 9. Here is the mind] q.d. Here is work for wise men to busy their brains about. Sapientia est vel codicibus vel cordibus. Wisdom is either from books or from the hearts.

Seven mountains] The Jesuits cannot deny but that Rome is here pointed at, as being set upon seven hills, επταλοφος. So the ancient Rome was, whereof the present Rome is but a carcase, retaining nothing of the old but her ruins, and the cause of them her sins.

Ver. 10. And there are seven kings] That is, kinds of government.

Five are fallen] Kings, consuls, dictators, decemvirs, tribunes.

One is] i.e. The heathen emperor.

And the other is not yet come] sc. The Christian emperors.

A short space] sc. At Rome; for Constantine soon translated the seat of the empire to Byzantium, calling it Constantinople, and left Rome to be the pope's nest. (Zonaras.) The Emperor Constans, nephew to Heraclius, and after him, Otho, had some thoughts to set up again at Rome, but could not; that so the kingdom of the Church foretold by Daniel might there be seated, saith Genebrard: if he had said the kingdom of Antichrist foretold by John the divine, he had hit it.

Ver. 11. He is the eighth] viz. The Pontiffality.

And is of the seven] i.e. Shall exercise that monarchical power that was before in the seven heads.

Ver. 12. Are ten kings] Of ten different kingdoms, Naples, Spain, Portugal, France, Polony, Bohemia, Hungary, Denmark, Sweden, and this of England, which as it was the first of the ten that submitted to the pope's yoke, so was it the first that shook it off again in Henry VIII's time.

Ver. 13. These have one mind] This is the unity or rather conspiracy of the Church of Rome. The Spouse only is but one, #So 6:9. Other societies are but as the clay in the toes of Nebuchadnezzar's image, they may cleave together but not incorporate one into another. There is a great deal of seeming unity under Antichrist. The Turks also have as little dissension in their religion as any. But well may that garment have no seam that hath no shape. Bellarmine notes a providence, that in the ninth age there sprang up no new heresy. But how could there, when little religion was afoot besides superstition and heresies?

Ver. 14. The Lamb shall overcome them] 1. With a spiritual victory, by a sweet: subjection, at least by a conviction of their consciences. 2. With an external victory, as the Imperialists in Germany, the Papists here.

Ver. 15. Are peoples] Fitly called waters for their instability and impetuosity.

Ver. 16. These shall hate] As base fellows use to hate their harlots when they find them false.

And shall make her desolate] Shall deny to defend her.

And naked] By denying her maintenance, and laying her open to the world by their remonstrances. King Henry VIII and the French king, some half a year before their death, were at a point to have utterly rooted the bishop of Rome out of their realms, and to exhort the emperor to do the same, or else to break off from him. The realm of France was ready (upon the pope's refusal to rebless King Henry IV upon conversion to them) to withdraw utterly from the obedience of his See, and to erect a new patriarch over all the French Church. The then archbishop of Burges was ready to accept it; and but that the pope, in fear thereof, did hasten his benediction, it had been effected, to his utter disgrace and decay. (Spec. Europ.)

And shall eat her flesh] Be so bitterly bent against her, that they could find in their hearts to tear her with their teeth. See #Job 19:22. We read of two notable thieves in the kingdom of Naples (the one called himself Pater noster, and the other Ave Maria) that had slain 116 men at different times and in different places. These two were at length taken and tormented to death by the command of the magistrate, with hot burning pincers, &c., and made to die piecemeal. It were but reason that Christian princes should use like zeal and severity against that grand soul-murderer the pope.

And burn her with fire] For an old bawd. <sup>{a}</sup> It is reported that in Meroe, the priests of Jupiter had so bewitched the people with their superstition, that they would sometimes send to the king of Ethiopia for his head; which was never denied them, till it came to King Erganes, who upon so insolent a demand slew them all, and took away their priesthood. Why is not the same now done to the bridge maker of Rome?

{a} fig. He who or that which panders to any evil design or vicious practice. ⒸED

Ver. 17. For God hath put] As he sent Nebuchadnezzar against Tyre, Alexander against Asia, and Attila against Rome, who surnamed himself the World's Scourge; so he will one day send these kings against Rome. It had been burnt when Charles V took it, but that the soldiers were kept in by a kind of violence. God's time was not yet come for that purpose.

Ver. 18. Is that great city] Rome, that radix omnium malorum, the base of all evil. This is confessed by Bellarmine, Ribera, Alcasar, and other Jesuits. The Rhemists are so straited, that they know not which way to turn them, or how to deny so clear a truth, which yet they are not willing to acknowledge. The wit of heretics will better serve them to devise a thousand shifts to elude the truth, than their pride will suffer them once to yield and acknowledge it.

Chapter 18

Ver. 1. I saw another angel] Some excellent and worthy man (saith Mr Brightman), such a one as should come suddenly before he be looked for, as those things do that slip down from heaven.

Having great power] ἐξουσίαν, or authority; as having in hand a great business, viz. the denouncing of Rome's utter ruin.

And the earth was lighted] He delivered himself clearly and expressly, so as that all men may well understand his meaning. Ribera the Jesuit gives this note upon this text, that the judgment of Rome's desolation shall be (not kept secret, but) made manifest to all men.

Ver. 2. And he cried mightily] So to awaken Babylon, that slept no less securely than that old Babylon, whose king Shesach was feasting and carousing in the bowls of the sanctuary, when the city was taken the same night. The people also did so little fear it, that it was three days after the city was taken by Cyrus ere some of them heard what was befallen them. (Herodot. Arist. Pol.)

Is fallen, is fallen] Certo, cito, penitus, or, with a double fall. They have fallen culpably, and shall fall penally. This was also long since foretold by Sibylla in the eighth book of her oracles:

“Και συ θριαμβος εση κοσμω, και αιδος απαντων.”

“ Tota eris in cineres quasi nunquam Roma fuisses.”

Rome (during the Roman felicity) was never taken but by the Gauls; but since it became pontifical, it hath been made a prey to all barbarous nations, and never besieged by any that took it not. There yet stands, near at hand, a second Babylon (saith Petrarch), cito itidem casura, si essetis viri. This would soon be down, if you would but stand up as men.

The habitation of devils] Which, by a sweet providence of God, for the good of mankind, are banished (as likewise fierce and wild beasts are) to deserts and unpopulated places. See #Mt 12:43. (It is an allusion to #Isa 13:20 14:23 Jer 50:39) Yet not so, but that, by Divine permission, they haunt and pester the greatest throngs of people, yea, the holiest assemblies. Some take the words in another sense, thus, it is become a habitation of devils, that is, of idols; and this hath wrought her ruin. In the year 610, Boniface IV instituted the feast of All Saints, after that he had begged of the emperor the Pantheon of Rome, which he consecrated to the honour of All Saints, and set up the Virgin Mary in the place of Cybele, the mother of the gods. (Alsted. Chron.)

Ver. 3. For all nations] All Roman Catholics.

The merchants of the earth] καπηλευειν. The Popish emissaries that huckster the word and make merchandise of men’s souls, #2Pe 2:3, after they have taken them prisoners, and made prizes of them, #2Ti 3:6, αιχμαλωτιζοντες.

Through the abundance of her delicacies] στερηνους, or, of her insolencies. Proh pudor! haec res est tote notissima caelo, sang Petrarch 200 years since, speaking of the luxury and insolency of the court of Rome.

Ver. 4. Another voice] This was Christ’s voice, whether mediate or immediate it appears not. See #Jer 51:45.

My people] A people Christ had, and still hath, where Antichrist most prevaieth. There are thought to be no less than 20,000

Protestants in Seville itself, a chief city of Spain. Even in Italy there are full 4000 professed Protestants; but their paucity and obscurity (saith Sir Edw. Sands) shall enclose them in a cipher.

Partakers of her sins] Esto procul Roma qui cupis esse pius. Roma, vale, vidi, satis est vidisse, &c. John Knox refused the bishopric offered him by King Edward VI, as having aliquid commune cum Antichristo, something in common with the Antichrist. Adam Damlip, martyr, had been a great Papist, and chaplain to Fisher, bishop of Rochester; after whose death he travelled to Rome, where he thought to have found all godliness and sincere religion. In the end he found there, as he said, such blaspheming of God, contempt of true religion, looseness of life, and abundance of all abominations, that he abhorred any longer there to abide; although he was greatly requested by Cardinal Pole there to continue, and to read three lectures a week in his house; for the which he offered him great entertainment. (Acts and Mon.) The like is recorded of Mr Rough, martyr, that being before Bonner, he affirmed that he had been twice at Rome, and there had seen plainly with his eyes that the pope was the very Antichrist; for there he saw him carried on men's shoulders, and the falsely named sacrament borne before him; yet was there more reverence given to him than to that which they counted their God. Mr Ascham (schoolmaster to Queen Elizabeth) was wont to thank God that he was but nine days in Italy, wherein he saw in that one city of Venice more liberty to sin, than in London he ever heard of in nine years. (Mr Fuller's Holy State, f. 159.)

And that ye receive not of her plagues] Muscult ruinis imminentibus proemigrant, et aranei cum telis primi cadunt, saith Pliny: Mice will haste out of a house that is ready to drop on their heads, and spiders with their webs will fall before the house falleth. Cerinthus the heretic coming into the bath where St John was washing, the apostle ἐξήλατο του βαλανειου, sprang or leapt out of the bath, saith Eusebius (lib. iv. 14); as fearing, lest being found in his company he should partake of his plagues. It is dangerous conversing with wicked men, 1. For infection of sin; 2. For infliction of punishment. Ambrose, closing up the story of Ahab and Jezebel's fearful end, fitly saith thus: Fuge ergo, dives, huiusmodi exitum, sed

fugies huiusmodi exitum, si fugeris huiusmodi flagitium: Flee therefore, O rich man, such an end as Ahab had, by shunning such evils as Ahab did. (Amb. de Nab. Jezreel, c. xi.)

Ver. 5. For her sins have reached] Gr. ηκολουθησαν, have followed thick or been thwacked one upon another, thick and threefold, as they say: there hath been a concatenation, or a continued series of them, εκολληθησαν. Others read, Her sins are glued and soldered together; or they cleave and are glued to heaven. Matthew Paris speaking of the court of Rome, saith, Huius foetor usque ad nubes fumum teterrimum exhalabat: Her filthiness hath sent up a most noisome stench to the very clouds of heaven, as Sodom's did; therefore shall Babel (the glory of kingdoms) be as the destruction of God in Sodom and Gomorrhah, #Isa 13:19.

Ver. 6. Double unto her double] This is spoken to the good kings that shall sack Rome, that they do the Lord's work thoroughly, not sparing Agag, as Saul did to the loss of his kingdom, nor dismissing Benhadad, as Ahab did to the loss of his own life.

Ver. 7. She hath glorified herself] As mother of Churches, queen of nations. Steuchus (one of her parasites) saith, That kings have but the use and administration of their kingdoms; the right and property belongs to her. Pope Boniface wrote thus to Philip the Fair, king of France: Volumus te scire te in temporalis et spiritualis nobis subiacere, &c. Contra sentientes pro insanis habemus: We would ye should know, that ye are to be subject unto us both in temporals and spirituals; and that none that are in their right minds can be otherwise minded. The king thus answered him again, Sciat tua maxima fatuitas, &c., I would your singular foolishness should know that I acknowledge no such subjection, &c. (Alsted. Chron.) It was tartly and trimly replied by one Leonard to Rustandus the pope's envoy, claiming all the churches here in England to be the pope's, Omnes Ecclesias Papae esse, tuitione non fruitione, defensione non dissipatione; That if the pope had such right to all the churches, it was to defend them, not to devour them. (Jac. Rev. de Vit. Pontif., p. 178.)

So much torment, &c.] Thus the sinner's cup of honey endeth in the dregs of gall; as Herodotus writeth of the river Hypanis, that the first day's journey from the fountain and head of it the water is sweet and wholesome; but after that, exceeding bitter. Pleasure and pain are tied together with chains of adamant. Oh, how short is the wicked man's Hilary term! {a}

{a} humorous. to keep Hilary term: to maintain hilarity, be cheerful or merry. Obs. ŒD

Ver. 8. Therefore shall her plagues] Security ushereth in destruction, God shall shoot at such with an arrow suddenly, and fetch them off, as he did the rich fool, #Lu 12:16-21

Come in one day] To confute their fond conceit of an eternal empire. See the like, #Isa 48:9. When the war began in Germany, A. D. 1619, it was reported, that a great brass image of the Apostle Peter (that had Tu es Petrus, &c., Thou art Peter, and upon this rock will I build my Church, engraven about it) standing in St Peter's church at Rome, there was a great and massive stone fell down upon it, and so shattered it to pieces, that not a letter of that sentence was left legible, save these words, Aedificabo Ecclesiam meam, I will build my Church. This was ominous to that tottering title of Rome, and might have taught the popelings, that God is about to build his Church upon the ruins of their worm eaten title. The Lord thereby seemed to say the same unto them, that once he did to Israel by Ezekiel, "An end is come, the end is come, it watcheth for this, behold it is come," #Eze 7:6. Sed surdis fabulam. This hath been long and loud rung in their ears, but they will not be warned.

Death] That is, war, that deadly evil, called an evil, κατ'αντονομασίαν, #Isa 45:7 "I make peace, and create evil," that is, war: a woeful evil that hews its way through a wood of men, in a minute of time, from the mouth of a murderingpiece, and causeth thousands to exhale their breath without so much as "Lord, have mercy upon us." Hence the poet:

“ Omega nostrorum mors est, Mars Alpha malorum.”

And mourning] πενθος. For the loss of dead friends.

And famine] The usual concomitant of war, in sieges especially. {See Trapp on "Re 6:5"}

For strong is the Lord] Full able to effect it, seem it to Babel's brats never so improbable or impossible.

Ver. 9. Shall bewail her and lament] κοψουσι, As with the "voice of doves, tabering upon their breasts," #Na 2:7. The chief of these mourners shall be the Spaniard likely; who yet hath no such great cause, if he look well about him; for he is yearly excommunicated by the pope, for detaining him from the kingdom of Sicily, as Baronius witnesseth. (In Respon. Apol. ad Card. Colum.) It were to be wished that he would imitate his predecessor Charles V, who upon a displeasure conceived against Pope Clement VIII, abolished the pope's authority throughout all Spain, Exemplo ab Hispanis ipsis posteritati relicto, posse Ecclesiasticam disciplinam citra nominis Pontificii auctoritatem conservari, saith mine author, i.e. The Spaniards themselves setting forth to the world that the Church may be governed without the pope's authority. (Scultet. Annul. Decad. ii. p. 2.) But this Charles did in a passion only, and not from a settled resolution. For after this, when Pope Clement and his cardinals were imprisoned by the duke of Bourbon's men in St Angelo, Caesar in Spain forbade all interludes to be played; and pageants prepared for the joy of the birth of his son Prince Philip to be pulled down. In France, by the court of Parliament, the duke of Bourbon was condemned of treason, his name and memorial accursed, his arms pulled down, his lands and goods confiscated. Neither would King Henry of England answer the emperor's letters, whereby he excused himself from having any hand in the action. (Speed, 1012.)

Ver. 10. Standing afar off] As fearing their own safety, they will not venture themselves for an old withered harlot, that is now (Lais-like) ready to be extinct in the last act of her uncleanness, Λαις τελευτωσ' απεθανε βινουμενη. (Athenaeus, xiii.)

For in one hour] God will make short work of it when once he begins, #Ro 9:28. This should be an encouragement to Christian princes and states, to set upon the service. The pirates' war was incredibili celeritate et temporis brevitae confectum, saith Austin, soon despatched; so shall this. Papists vaunt now of their temporal felicity, as a note of their Church, and make catalogues of the strange victories that the Catholics have had. Bellarmine brags, that vix unquam fuerunt haeretici superiores quando iusto proelio dimicatum est (tom. ii. lib. 4, cap. 14), the heretics scarcely ever had the day when it came to be tried in a just battle. But if all this had been true (as it is not), yet at last, in one hour shall their judgment come. See #Re 18:19,22. {See Trapp on "Re 18:19"} {See Trapp on "Re 18:22"}

Ver. 11. And the merchants of the earth] The pope's indulgencers, and other officers of his exchequer. What huge sums of money did Tecelius and his companions rake together out of Germany. The pope had yearly out of England above nine tons of gold; Polydore Virgil was his collector of the Peter's pence here. Otto (one of the pope's muscipulatores, mice catchers, as the story calls him) departing hence, left not so much money in the whole kingdom as he either carried with him or sent to Rome before him. (Job. Manl., loc. com., p. 492.) It was truly and trimly said by Pope Innocent IV, Vere enim hortus deliciarum Papis fuit tum Anglia, et puteus inexhaustus, England was then a gallant garden to the pope, and a wellspring of wealth that could not be drawn dry. (Speed, 1027.) Cardinal Wolsey emptied the land of two hundred and forty thousand pounds, to relieve and ransom Pope Clement VII, imprisoned by the Duke of Bourbon. And being himself sent ambassador beyond sea for the pope's release, and coming through Canterbury toward Dover, he was seen to weep tenderly at mass for the pope's calamity.

For no man buyeth their merchandise] Men shall see further into their fopperies and knaveries than to endure to be any longer gulled and cheated. William of Malmesbury began to groan long since under the grievance. Romani hodie (saith he) auro trutinant iustitiam, pretio venditant canonum regulam: The Romans today sell justice, sacraments, masses, dispensations, benefices, all. Mantuan comes after, and cries out,

——“ venalia nobis

Templa, sacerdotes, altaria, sacra, coronae,

Ignis, thura, preces, caelum est venale, Deusque.” “Temples, priests, altars, rites (I tell no tale),

Crowns, sacrifices, heaven, and God, are set to sale.”

The leaguers here for the liberty of the kingdom in the days of King John, drove Martin, the pope's publican, out of the land; the king also cursed him grievously at parting, with Diabolus te ad inferos ducat et perducatur. (Jac. Revius, lib. iii., de Pont. Rom., cap. xxi.) But now much more than ever these merchants want chapmen, <sup>{a}</sup> as Bellarmine sadly complains; their markets are well fallen, their Euphrates much dried up.

<sup>{a}</sup> A man whose business is buying and selling; a merchant, trader, dealer. Obs. or arch. OED

Ver. 12. The merchandise of gold] All this is taken out of #Eze 27:22. All countries have catered and purveyed for the pope, who hath had it either in money or other commodity; but money answered all things.

Thyine wood] A wild kind of cedar, very sweet and sound; for it will not easily rot.

Ver. 13. And cinnamon] Galen writes that in his time cinnamon was very rare, and hard to be found, except in the storehouses of great princes. And Pliny reports, that a pound of cinnamon was worth 1000 denarii, that is, 150 crowns of our money.

And chariots] Or sedans, <sup>{a}</sup> as we call them.

And slaves] Gr. σωματα, bodies, so slaves are called, because their master's commands reach only to their bodies, and not to their souls.

And the souls of men] Tecelius, the pope's pardon monger, persuaded the people in Germany, that whosoever would give ten shillings should at his pleasure deliver one soul out of the pains of purgatory; and as soon as the money rang in the basin, that soul was set at liberty. But if it were one jot less than ten shillings, it would profit them nothing. This gainful gullery Luther decried with all his might, and so marred the market. This gave occasion to that saying of Erasmus, whom when the Elector of Saxony asked, why Luther was so generally hated? He answered, For two faults especially; he hath been too busy with the pope's crown and the monks' paunches. (Scultet. Annal. dec. i.)

{a} A closed vehicle to seat one person, borne on two poles by two bearers, one in front and one behind. In fashionable use during the 17th, 18th, and early 19th cent. (ED)

Ver. 14. And the fruits] Those first ripe fruits, #Mic 7:1, greedily desired and bought up at any rate by the richer and daintier sort of people.

Which were dainty and goodly] Gr. λιπαρα και λαμπρα, fat and fair-liking, pleasant to the eye as well as to the taste, confections, suckers, deserts, second and third services.

Ver. 15. Which were made rich by her] By their fat benefices, commendams, {a} golden prebendaries, {b} some one yielding ten or twenty thousand by the year. The archbishopric of Toledo is worth a hundred thousand pounds a year; which is a greater revenue than some kings have had. (Spec. Europ.) What a vast estate had Wolsey gotten. So that rich and wretched Cardinal Henry Beaufort, bishop of Winchester, and Chancellor of England in the reign of Henry VI, who asked, Why should I die being so rich? (Acts and Mon.)

{a} The custody of an ecclesiastical benefice in the absence of a regular incumbent; the tenure or enjoyment of the revenues of a benefice held as above. (ED)

{b} The holder of a prebend; a canon of a cathedral or collegiate church who holds a prebend. Originally, each canon had a praebenda or share in the funds of the church to which the clergy house was attached; in later times when the custom grew up of assigning a particular estate for the support of a particular canon, the latter received also the designation of prebendary from the estate so assigned, e.g. 'Canon of St. Paul's and Prebendary of Finsbury'. (ED)

Ver. 16. With gold and precious stones] All these avail not in the day of wrath. Neither need we envy wicked men their plenty; it is their portion, all they are like to have. The whole Turkish empire is nothing else, saith Luther, nisi panis mica, quam dives paterfamilias proiecit canibus, a crust cast to the dogs, by God the great householder. I have no stronger argument (said the same Luther) against the pope's kingdom, quam quod sine cruce regnat, than this, that he suffered nothing. Surely there is the more behind, there will be bitterness in the end, no doubt.

Ver. 17. So great riches come to nought] Gr. ηρημωθη, is desolated, or become a wilderness. Petrarch writeth, that in the treasury of Pope John XXII were found by his heirs two hundred and fifty tons of gold. And of Boniface VIII it is recorded that he was able to show more money than all the kings in Christendom.

And every ship master] i.e. Cardinal, patriarch, archbishop, though but titular and imaginary, without jurisdiction, as are the patriarchs of Constantinople, Antioch, Jerusalem, and Alexandria, which the pope successively consecrates, ever since the Holy Land and the provinces about it were in the hands of Christian princes, A.D. 1100, so loth is the pope to lose the remembrance of any superiority or title that he hath once compassed. (Spec. Europ.)

And all the company] The cardinals and archbishops' train and retinue, those in office especially. What a pompous family kept Wolsey, consisting of one earl, nine barons, very many knights and esquires, and others, to the number of four hundred. (Rex Platen., p. 26.)

And sailors] Bishops, abbots, priors, &c. In a parliament holden here at Leicester, A.D. 1413, in the reign of Henry V, a complaint was exhibited against the Popish clergy's excess. This bill (saith E. Hall the chronicler) made the fat abbots to sweat, the proud priors to frown, the poor friars to curse, the silly nuns to weep, and all her merchants to fear that Babel would then down. But God's time was not yet.

And as many as trade by the sea] All the clergy, the Jesuits especially, without whose lusty help (saith Mr Brightman) St Peter's fishing boat had stuck in the sand, and had rushed against the rocks long since.

Ver. 18. What city is like unto this] q.d. Who would have ever thought we should ever have seen this dismal day of Rome's destruction? It was wont to be said, Roma cladibus animosior, Rome is unconquerable. The pope wrote once to the Turk that threatened him, “ *Niteris incassum Petri submergere navem;

Fluctuat, at nunquam mergitur illis ratis.* ”

Ver. 19. And they cast dust] As men willing to be as far underground as now they were above ground. Having lost their livelihood, they had little joy of their lives.

All that had ships in the sea] All churchmen, i.e. all, for the most part; some of them have little enough. Sanders was starved. Stapleton was made a professor of a petty university, scarcely as good as one of our free schools. On Harding his Holiness bestowed a prebend <sup>{a}</sup> of Gaunt, or (to speak more properly) a Gaunt prebend. Allin was commonly called the starveling cardinal.

<sup>{a}</sup> The portion of the revenues of a cathedral or collegiate church granted to a canon or member of the chapter as his stipend. (ED)

Ver. 20. Thou heaven] i.e. The Church on earth.

And ye holy apostles, &c.] i.e. Ye pastors and teachers, who as ye have been most shot at by her, so now you are especially called to triumph over her, #Ps 58:11.

Ver. 21. And a mighty angel] For further assurance a sign is added, and an allusion made to #Jer 51:63. And here it is easy to observe a notable gradation, an angel, a strong angel, taketh a stone, and a great stone, even a millstone, which he letteth not barely fall, but casteth, and with impetuous force thrusteth into the bottom of the sea, whence it cannot be buoyed up. Thus is set forth to the eye also the irreparable ruin of Rome.

Ver. 22. And the voice of harpers, &c.] Thine organs and sackbuts, thy chanting and churchmusic, shall cease.

And the sound of a millstone] Anciently they used handmills, which did make a great noise in the cities, as Diodate here noteth.

Ver. 23. And the light of a candle] The candle of the wicked shall be put out, they that here love darkness better than light shall hereafter be thrust into σκοτος εξωτερων, outer darkness, where they shall never see the light again till they see all the world on a light fire.

For thy merchants were the great men] The pope creates his cardinals by these words, Estote fratres nostri et principes mundi, Be ye brethren to us, and princes of the world. They hold themselves the king's companions.

Chapter 19

Ver. 1. I heard a great voice] In obedience to that exhortation, #Re 18:20, Rejoice over her, thou heaven, &c.

Saying, Alleluia] i.e. Praise the Lord. Was not he a wise man that gave this derivation of the word Al altissimus, le levatus est, lu lugebant apostoli, ia iam surrexit? Acutum sane decompositum. This word is in the Old Testament first used, #Ps 104:35, where consuming of sinners is mentioned, as in the New Testament here, where the destruction of Antichrist is foretold. Praise is therefore here given to God in the Hebrew tongue, saith Mr Bulkly, because the Hebrews or Jews shall acknowledge the Lord Jesus with us.

Unto the Lord] Gr. Is the Lord's, as #Ps 3:8. He is the true proprietary.

Ver. 2. Which did corrupt the earth] I read of one, who journeying to Rome, as soon as he came within the city shut his eyes, and so kept them; as resolving to see nothing in that city (which he knew to be very corrupt, and a cotrupter of others) but only the Church of St Peter. (Sphinx Philos. p. 753.) {See Trapp on "Re 18:4"}

Ver. 3. And again they said, Alleluia] As unsatisfiable in performing so divine a duty. Some think that the Hebrew word is retained to import that after Rome is ruined, the Churches of the Gentiles shall by their incessant praises provoke the Jews to join with them, and concelebrate the mercy; like as the Spouse, by praising her Beloved, stirred up those dull daughters of Jerusalem to seek him with her, #So 5:9,10 cf. Re 6:1.

And her smoke rose up] Like that of Sodom. Yet wretched Romanists will not be warned, whose judgment therefore is here revealed after that of the sitting of Rome.

Ver. 4. And the four and twenty elders] The former Alleluiah was more private; every good heart being lifted up with joy and thankfulness, when first they hear the good news of Antichrist's overthrow. Now is this the joint Alleluiah of the public congregation, praising and magnifying God. This may be a further means to move the Jews to come in.

Ver. 5. And a voice came out] This is the Lamb's voice, his all quickening voice, which shall rouse and raise the dead and dedolent

Jews; powerfully pulling the veil from their hard hearts, which yet were somewhat moved and mollified by the former Alleluiahs, so that now all the servants of God, small and great, Jew and Gentile, shall praise him with one consent.

Ver. 6. And I heard as it were the voice] See how morigerous the saints are, and ready-hearted to obey God. No sooner are they bidden to praise God, but they are at it, dicto citius. See the like #Ps 27:8.

Saying, Alleluia] This was the Hosanna Rabba, as the Jews call it; the victoria Halleluatica, as the old Britons called their victory over the Saxons. The story is this. Under the conduct of Germanus (here in Britain), who came over from France to subdue the Pelagian heresy (which then prevailed among us), against a mighty army of Saxons and Picts, the Britons prevailed only by the three times pronouncing the word Hallelujah; which voice echoing and redoubling from the acclamation of his followers among the mountains, near to which the enemy had encamped, frightened them and won the conquest, upon which it was called victoria Halleluatica. (Dr Ussier, de Brit. Eccles. Primord. p. 332.)

Reigneth] i.e. He now maketh it appear that he reigneth, which Averroes and some other of the world's wizards doubted, yea, denied; because they saw bad men prosper, good men suffer.

Ver. 7. Hath made herself ready] Being first made ready by the grace of Christ. Certain est nos facere quod facimus; sed ille facit ut faciamus. (Aug.) The bowls of the candlestick had no oil but that which dropped from the olive branches, #Zec 4:12.

Ver. 8. And to her was granted] It is here clear (saith Bernard) that there shall be as great difference between the state of God's Church now, and that which is to come after Rome's ruin, as between the time of honourable persons only betrothed, and the high, joyful, and glorious day of their public marrying; as between the time of a king coming on to his kingdom, and his actual and powerful reigning as king indeed.

That she should be arrayed] This also is given her, as well as her rich raiment; which she can no more put on by herself than she can purchase it.

Clean and white] Or, pure and bright. Pure, saith one, because imputed righteousness is pure indeed, and hath no spot in it; but not bright; you can see no great matter in it; it maketh no great show before men (as inherent righteousness doth, #Mt 5:16), but before God. A man may be very much defiled and subject to many scandals, and yet be clothed with the garment of imputed righteousness.

The righteousness of saints] Gr. righteousnesses, that twofold righteousness, imputed and imparted.

Ver. 9. Write] To wit, this ensuing sentence, for the use of posterity, worthy to be written in letters of gold.

Blessed are they that are called] So they have hearts to come at Christ's call, and not show themselves unworthy to taste of his supper by framing excuses, as those recusant guests did, #Lu 14:15-24.

These are the true sayings of God] q.d. This foregoing sentence is "a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation," #1Ti 1:15.

Ver. 10. And I fell at his feet] So taken he was with the joyful tidings of his countrymen's (the Jews') conversion, that he fell down as Abraham did upon the good news of Isaac's birth, #Ge 17:17. And it may be he took this angel for Christ, the Angel of the covenant; but that was his error. Triste mortalitatis privilegium est, licere aliquando peccare. (Euphor.)

See thou do it not] οραμη, an elliptic and concise kind of speech in the Greek, betokening haste and displeasure at what was done. Papists will needs disdain the angels with seeming courtesies and respects; and whereas the Council of Laodicea (cap. 35) saith, it behoveth Christians, αγγελους μη ονομαζειν, not to pray to angels, Surius and Caranza make the words to be, Non oportet Christianos ad angulos congregationes facere; It is not proper for Christians to associate with angels, and the title they make De iis qui angulos colunt, in a clean contrary sense to the Council's intention.

Ver. 11. And I saw heaven opened] i.e. He saw things done before his eyes, as it were; so do not we, but are left to conjectures. Here is showed, saith one, the foil of the beast, bearer up of the whore, and no question but now highly chafed with her fall. This is the last and noblest act of Christ's riding, for the dragon and his vicars' utter destruction. Thus he. Here is showed, saith another interpreter, in what state the Church shall be in, upon the ruin of Rome, even as people standing in arms under their General Christ Jesus for a time, till the last battle be fought, and the enemies destroyed.

Behold, a white horse] Christ riding as an Emperor triumphing, and as a righteous Judge, #Ps 9:8 96:10,13.

Ver. 12. His eyes were as a flame of fire] A quick sighted Judge, an intelligent warrior. "Counsel and strength are for the war," #2Ki 18:20.

And on his head were many crowns] Let the triple crowned pope look to himself; Christ outcrowns him by far.

And he had a name written] His holy and reverend name Jehovah, importing his Godhead; for he is "Jehovah, our righteousness," #Jer 23:6. And as thus, no man knows the Son but the Father, #Mt 11:27; for as God he is incomprehensible, #Jud 13:18 "What is his name, or what is his Son's name, if thou canst tell?" #Pr 30:4 "Who shall declare his generation?" #Isa 53:8. Or by this unknown name may be meant his dignity of being Head of his Church; which is incommunicable to any other, #Php 2:9.

Ver. 13. Dipped in blood] In the blood of his enemies, as a victor returning from a huge slaughter. Caesar is said to have taken prisoner one million of men, and to have slain as many; Mahomet I (emperor of the Turks), to have been the death of 800,000 men; Seanderbeg, to have slain 800 Turks with his own hand. But our Conqueror shall outdo all these; when he shall tread them in his anger, and trample them in his fury; and their blood shall be sprinkled upon his garments, and he will stain all his raiment, #Isa 63:3.

The word of God] #Joh 1:1,7. Hereby it appears that this was John the Evangelist that wrote this book. Idiotismus Ioannis. (Pareus.)

Ver. 14. And the armies which were in heaven] The heavenly minded heroes that fight his battles, are all in his livery, horsed and habited as he, in whom they are more than conquerors, because they are sure to conquer before they fight.

Ver. 15. A sharp sword] The word, #Eph 6:17; the rod wherewith he smiteth the earth, #Isa 11:4; the breath of his mouth, whereby Antichrist shall be overthrown, as by force of arms, so also of arguments.

The nations] The paganish pa-pagans. See the book entitled Paganopapismus; wherein is proved that papism is flat paganism, and that the Papists do resemble the very pagans in above seven score individual things.

And he treadeth the winepress] At Armageddon, #Re 16:16.

Ver. 16. And on his thigh] Where his sword hangs, #Ps 45:3, to show that he will keep what he hath gained ( Vincere scis Hannibal, victoria uti nescis, said one), <sup>{a}</sup> or "on his thigh," qui filiabitur nomine eius, #Ps 72:17, the name of Christ shall endure for ever; it shall be begotten, as one generation is begotten of another; there shall be a succession of Christ's name; "he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hands," #Isa 53:10. Confer #Ge 46:26. Or, "on his thigh," that is, on his lower parts, his people. Christ "will make the place of his feet glorious," #Isa 60:13, that is, the Church in their lowest condition.

Lord of lords] This title the pope usurps; but what said Miconius in a letter to Calvin upon the view of the Church's enemies? Gaudeo quod Christus Dominus est; alioqui totus desperassem, I am glad that Christ is Lord of lords, for else I should have been utterly out of hope.

Ver. 17. Standing in the sun] Where he might best be heard, as a herald. And he well types out such, as by clear light of truth shall make known the certain destruction of the enemies, before the battle be fought.

Unto the supper of the great God] They that would not come to the supper of the Lamb shall be made a supper to the fowls of heaven.

Ver. 18. That ye may eat] He alludes to #Eze 39:4,17. Gog and Magog were a type of Antichrist: "Behold, I am against thee, O Gog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal, saith the Lord," #Eze 38:3; where, if Gog is the Great Turk, and Meshech Cappadocia, where he first settled himself, why should he be called "prince of Tubal," also, that is, of Spain, France, and Italy, as Jerome and Josephus interpret it (neither do Bellarmine and Gretser dissent)? Is it not to show that, after the fall of Babylon, the Antichristians shall call in the Turk and other pagan princes to invade and distress the Church, that they may all perish together, and feed the fowls with their dead carcasses?

Ver. 19. And I saw the beast] The Church's enemies are even ambitious of destruction. Judgments need not go to find them out; they run to meet their bane.

Ver. 20. And the beast was taken] Taken suddenly, or as he was fleeing, and so thinking to escape. {a} Dio maketh mention of a notable thief that did much mischief in Italy (afterwards the pope's seat) in the days of Severus. This emperor used all the means he could to catch him, but could not do it, Quippe qui visus non videbatur, non inveniebatur inventus, deprehensus non capiebatur, saith the historian. But this subtle beast meeteth with his match and more; for he is caught and cast into the lake, &c. Christ is a conqueror so soon as ever he comes into the field, Venit, vidit, vicit. He came, he saw, he conquered. When the enemies are tumultuating, he comes upon them as out of an engine, and hurls them headlong into hell.

And with him the false prophet] This is the same with the beast; only the pope is called the beast in respect of his civil power, and the false prophet in respect of his spiritual. {See Trapp on "Re 13:12"} I remember, saith Aretius here, that many learned men in the year 1546 interpreted these words of the war that then was, and were confident that the emperor was the beast here mentioned, that should be overcome, and taken in battle by the Protestants; and together with him some false prophet of his (perhaps the pope), but it proved much otherwise, and the event showed that this application of the text was false.

“ Fallitur augurio spes bona saepe suo.”

These both were cast alive] Death shall not end their misery, but they shall suffer most exquisite torments. Potentes potenter torquebuntur.

{a} επιασθη, proprie dicitur de iis quos fugientes arripimus. Beza.

Ver. 21. Slain with the sword] Not so deeply damned, and yet so slain as to be made a prey to the infernal vultures; and then the fattest carcase shall be the finest prey, the greatest sinners the sorest sufferers.

Chapter 20

Ver. 1. And I saw an angd] Constantine the Great, the Church’s male child, #Re 12:5.

Having the key] Not that key, #Re 9:1, but another.

A great chain] The succession of Christian emperors.

Ver. 2. And he laid hold on the dragon] #Re 12:7,9. He took him in a field fight, and since then till now we have heard little of him, more than that he substituted the beast, Re. xiii., whose destruction being declared, the prophecy returns to show the judgment of the dragon.

And bound him] From the open slaughtering of the saints, as he had done by the heathen emperors; or, from molesting and mischieving of God’s people, otherwise he is not bound one hour, #Job 1:6-12 1Pe 5:8. And how his vicegerent the beast hath bestirred him during the thousand years, who knows not?

A thousand years] Hos explicare fateor trepide me aggredi, saith Pareus. He begins the thousand at the destruction of the temple, A.D. 73, and so it ends in Pope Hildebrand, who stepped into that chair of pestilence, A. D. 1073. Others begin it at the birth of Christ, and end in Sylvester II. Others at Christ’s passion, and end in Benedict IX. But they do best, in my opinion, that begin at Constantine and end in Boniface VIII, who is of his own said to have entered like a fox, reigned as a lion, and died as a dog. He excommunicated the French king, and published this decree, that the Bishop of Rome ought to be judged of none, although he should carry innumerable souls with him to hell.

Ver. 3. And cast him into the bottomless pit] That is, into the earth, #Re 12:9,12 13:11; the earth is the bottomless pit, out of which the beast was raised by the dragon.

Deceive the nations] The Gentiles, by defending Gentilism, and hindering the course of the gospel among them.

And after that he must be loosed] He must, because God hath so decreed it, for the glory of his own name in the defence of his people, but destruction of his enemies. As also that the devil may show his malice, which God can restrain at his pleasure. Roger Holland, martyr, said to Bonner, This I dare be bold in God to speak, which by his Spirit I am moved to say: that God will shorten your hand of cruelty, that for a time you shall not molest his Church. And after this day in this place shall there not any be by him put to the fire and fagot. And it proved so; for none after that suffered in Smithfield for the testimony of the gospel. (Acts and Mon. fol. 1852.)

Ver. 4. And they sat upon them] Resting from former persecutions, and reigning in righteousness even here upon earth.

And judgment was given unto them] That is, say some, the spirit of discerning between Christianity and Antichristianism, or the clearing of their innocence, and doing them right, say others. Or, they had their chairs, seats, and consistories, wherein they did both preach the word and execute the Church censures, as some sense it.

And I saw the souls] This makes against the millenaries. Souls reign not but in heaven, there are "the spirits of just men made perfect," #Heb 12:23. True it is, as Mr Cotton well observeth, that there are many devices in the minds of some, to think that Jesus Christ shall come from heaven again, and reign here with his saints upon earth a thousand years. But they are, saith he, but the mistakes of some high expressions in Scripture, which describe the judgments poured out upon God's enemies in making way to the Jews' conversion, by the pattern of the last judgment. Thus he. The souls here mentioned are the same, I conceive, that were seen under the altar, #Re 6:9, and do cry, "How long, Lord?" These are not capable of a bodily resurrection, nor of an earthly reign.

And they lived and reigned with Christ] They, that is, those that sat on the thrones (not they that were beheaded), "lived and reigned," as spiritual kings (after the same manner as they are priests, #Re 20:6), for else there should be more kings than subjects.

With Christ] It is not said "with Christ upon earth"; this is an addition to the text; or if the words did import a reigning upon earth, yet this would not infer an earthly reign for a thousand years, in great worldly delights, begetting, many children, eating and drinking, and enjoying all lawful pleasures, as some dream today. The conceit, I confess, is as ancient as Cerinthus, the heretic, and Papias (scholar to St John), a man much revered for opinion of his holiness, but yet homo ingenii pertenuis, saith Eusebius, not oppressed with wit. Jerome and Augustine explode it as a Jewish fable, and declare it to be a great error, if not a heresy; so do all the ορθογνώμονες at this day. The patrons of Christ's personal reign upon the earth are Mr Archer, and Mr Burroughes (Moses' Choice), who tells us that if the opinion of some concerning Christ's coming to reign here in the world before the day of judgment be not a truth, he cannot make anything of many places of Scripture, as this place for one. But if he cannot, yet others can. See an answer to his and Mr Archer's chief arguments in Mr Bayly's Dissuasive from the Errors of the Times, chap. xxi. p. 238.

Ver. 5. But the rest of the dead] Dead in Baal worship, as Ephraim, #Ho 13:1; dead in sins, as Sardis, #Re 3:1.

Lived not again] By repentance from dead works, or they recovered not the life and immortality that is brought to light by the gospel.

Until the thousand years] Until, being taught better by God's faithful witnesses, they abjured Popery.

This is the first resurrection] From Romish superstitions. Mr Fox tells us that by the reading of Chaucer's books, some were brought to the knowledge of the truth. (Acts and Mon.) But here it must be remembered that a Papist must have two resurrections or conversions ere he can come to heaven. First, of a Papist he must become in judgment a true Protestant. 2. Of a Protestant at large, he must become a zealous practitioner of the truth he professeth. Like as corn must be first thrashed out of the straw, and then winnowed out of the chaff.

Ver. 6. Blessed and happy is he] The holy only have part in this resurrection, and are therefore happy, or out of harm's way, as the word μακαριοι signifies.

The second death hath no power] For they are brought from the jaws of death to the joys of eternal life, where is mirth without mourning, riches without rust, &c.

But they shall be priests] {See Trapp on "Re 1:6"}

They shall reign] The righteous are kings, #Mt 13:17 cf. Lu 10:24 "Many righteous" is the same with "many kings." {See Trapp on "Re 20:4"}

A thousand years] These thousand years begin (saith Mr Brightman) where the former ended, that is, in the year 1300, whereby continuance thereof is promised for a thousand years forward, among some of the Gentiles; and how long it shall reign afterwards among the Jews, He only knows that knows all. The most interpreters by a thousand years here understand not any definite time, as #Re 20:2 of this chapter, but an indefinite time, that is, for ever, as #Ps 84:10. This thousand years they take for eternity, and a further degree of glory for such as are called forth to suffer. See #Eze 37:1-14 Isa 26:19.

Ver. 7. Satan shall be loosed] i.e. Suffered to rise up in open rage against the open professors of the truth, and to make havoc of them, as he did of the Waldenses, Hussites, Huguenots, professors in Germany, Netherlands, Ireland, England, &c. He hath laid about him lately to purpose; besides those seas of Christian blood shed by the Turk, since the thousand years expired.

Ver. 8. Gog and Magog] That is, pope and Turk, saith Aretius; the pope a covert enemy to Christ; the Turk an overt or open enemy; as Gog and Magog signify, #Eze 38:1-39:29. These are set forth by Ezekiel as the last enemies of God's people before Shiloh come; and presently after their utter overthrow, the state of the city and temple is notably described. So, after the pope and Turk in that last great battle at Armageddon routed and foiled, the New Jerusalem is in the following chapters excellently portrayed and depainted; that being a special type of this.

Ver. 9. And they went up] As a flood, #Eze 8:9,16.

And compassed] As resolved that none should escape them, #Ps 118:11,12 2Ki 6:14,15 25:1.

The camp of the saints] The Church militant.

And the beloved city] The New Jerusalem, #Re 21:2 "The dearly beloved of God's soul," #Jer 12:7; or, "God's dearly beloved soul," την ψυχην την ηγαπημενην, as the Septuagint render it. (Spec. Europ.) For present the Turk is the bridle that holds in the pope with all his followers from any universal proceeding against the Protestants; who herein are greatly advantaged above them, in that their opposites lie between them and the Turk; or in that their countries, coasting so much as they do toward the north (as Denmark, Switzerland, &c.), are out of his way, and no part of his present aim. Italy is the mark he shoots at. And when once he shall rise against the true Church, fire from heaven shall devour him.

Ver. 10. And the devil] This Mr Brightman interprets of the Turk, called here the devil, because instigated and set awork by the devil. Albeit another learned expositor is of opinion, that by the fall of the beast and conversion of the Jews, the Turks and other states of the East shall be brought to embrace the gospel, being first taught thereto by some notable foil. What to think of this I know not; but cannot but like well of Diodate's note upon #Re 20:4; that in all this prophecy it is better and more sure to expect and stay for the explication by the event than to give it without any certain ground.

And shall be tormented] Gr. βασανισθησονται, racked. The devil and the damned have punishment without pity, misery without mercy, sorrow without succour, crying without comfort, mischief without measure, torments without end and past imagination.

For ever and ever] This is as another hell in the midst of hell, and forceth them to cry, ουαι, ουαι, "woe, woe," as if they should say, ουκ αι, ουκ αι, "not ever, not ever, Lord." Whereto conscience answereth as an echo, αι, αι, "ever, ever." Hence that doleful ουαι, "woe and alas" for evermore.

Ver. 11. And I saw a great white throne] A lively description of the last judgment, to show that henceforth, since the last great battle, the New Jerusalem should have no disturbance till Christ comes to judgment. His throne is said to be white, for like reason as he is said to sit upon a white cloud and a white horse, #Re 14:14 19:11. He shall give most just and uncorrupt judgment.

From whose face the earth, &c.] To show either his terribleness or their renovation, #2Pe 3:12 Ro 8:21.

Ver. 12. Small and great] It is the common opinion that men shall rise again in that tall and goodly stature of body wherein Adam was created; or at least in that vigour of age that a perfect man is at about 33 years old, each in their proper sex. And hereunto some think, the apostle alludeth, #Eph 4:13. But Mr Brightman holds, that in the resurrection every one shall appear in that stature in which he departed out of this life, and that the contrary opinion doth manifestly contradict this Scripture.

And the books were opened] The books of conscience, saith Origen; of the Scriptures, saith Augustine; of both, say I; for according to law written shall the Judge pass sentence, the conscience either accusing or excusing.

Another book] That is, that of God's decree of free grace; the book that hath our names in it, and our pardon.

The book of life] That God's elect may be seen and known. God neither needeth nor useth books to judge by; but this is spoken after the manner of men. Mordecai's name was registered in the Chronicles of Persia. Tamerlane had always by him a catalogue of his best servants, and their good works, which he daily perused.

Ver. 13. And the sea] Those that perish in the waters, and those whose ashes were scattered upon the waters, as John Huss's; whom after they had burnt, they beat his heart with their staves, and cast his ashes into the river. But there is a substance of the saints' bodies preserved, by a secret influence from Christ their Head; and their dust is precious.

Ver. 14. And death and hell] There shall be an utter end of all evils and enemies, nothing left to disquiet the Church. She shall see them afar off, as Lazarus did the rich man, and be able to say of them, as she did of her accusers, #Joh 8:10,11 "they are all gone."

Ver. 15. And whosoever] As those priests were cashiered that could not prove their pedigree, #Ezr 2:62,63.

Chapter 21

Ver. 1. And I saw a new heaven] New for form and state, but the same as before for matter and substance; as an old garment translated is called a new one; and as whoso is in Christ is a new creature.

Passed away] i.e. Were purged from their vanity and defilements.

And there was no more sea] i.e. Trouble and tumult. The sea is of itself restless, and often tossed with storms and tempests, #Isa 57:20. As for the element of water, it shall remain, probably, as earth, air, and fire do. Andreas thinks there shall be no more sea.

Ver. 2. The holy city] The Church in glory, saith Diodate. The Church wayfaring and warfaring, saith Brightman, whose interpretation of this text, Nitur coniectura optabili magis quam opinabili, saith Pareus, is more to be wished than imagined. The glory of Christ's bride is fitter to be believed than possible to be discoursed, saith Prosper. The Italians have this proverb among them, He that hath not seen Venice, believes not the bravery of it; and he that hath not lived somewhile there, understandeth it not. This is much more true of Uranople, the New Jerusalem. St John's New Jerusalem, and Ezekiel's city and temple, from #Eze 40 to the end, are contemporary (say some), and signify one and the same thing. (Haffen refferus.)

As a bride adorned, &c.] Bishop Ridley, the night before he suffered, invited his hostess and the rest at table to his marriage; for, said he, tomorrow I must be married. Some other martyrs went as merrily to die as ever they did to dine.

Ver. 3. And I heard a great voice] To confirm the vision, lest it should be thought a delusion.

Behold, the tabernacle] His special presence both of grace and glory is with his elect. See #Eze 37:7,28.

He will dwell with them] He will indwell in them, #2Co 6:16. {See Trapp on "2Co 6:16"}; The enjoyment of God is heaven itself, therefore God is called heaven; "I have sinned against heaven."

Ver. 4. And God shall wipe away] As mothers do their children's tears. "Sorrow and sighing shall flee away." Baca shall be turned into Berachah, sighing into singing, misery into majesty; as Queen Elizabeth was exalted from a prisoner to a princess; and as our Henry IV was crowned the very same day that, the year before, he had been banished the realm. (Daniel.)

No more death] For mortality shall be swallowed up of life.

Neither sorrow] πένθος. Properly for loss of friends; for we shall inseparably and everlastingly enjoy them. We shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, have communion with them; not only as godly men, but as such and such godly men. And if with them, why not with others whom we have known and loved in the body?

Nor crying] κλαυγή. Qualis est in tragoediis, saith Aretius.

Nor any more pain] πόνος. Or, hard labour for a livelihood, to be gotten with the sweat either of brow or brain.

For the former things, &c.] The Latins call prosperous things Res secundas, because they are to be had hereafter; they are not the first things.

Ver. 5. Write; for these words are faithful] Though few men will believe them; for if they did, what would they not do or forego to get heaven? Cleombrotus reading Plato's book of the immortality of the soul, was so ravished with the conceit thereof, that he cast himself headlong into the sea. But how many reading this better book of heaven's happiness, are no whit wrought upon thereby, or in the least measure moved to affect those things above, that run parallel with the life of God and line of eternity!

Ver. 6. It is done] As the punishment of the wicked, #Re 16:17 {See Trapp on "Re 16:17"} so the reward of the righteous is performed and accomplished.

I will give unto him] Whereas some good soul might say, I would it were once done. Have patience (saith God), I will shortly give unto him that is athirst to drink of that torrent of pleasure, that runs at my right hand, without any either let or loathing.

*"Clitorio quicumque sitim de fonte levarit,
Vina fugit, gaudetque meris abstemius undis."
Ovid. Metam.*

Of the water of life, freely] But merit mongers will not have it freely; therefore they shall go without it. Caelum gratis non accipiam, I will not accept heaven for nothing, saith Vega.

Ver. 7. He that overcometh] Gr. "He that is overcoming," or not yielding, though he hath not yet overcome; if he be but doing at it, and do not yield up the bucklers, ο νικων, quasi μη εικων.

Shall inherit all things] Tanquam haeres ex asse. All God's servants are sons, and every son an heir.

Ver. 8. But the fearful] Cowardly recreants, white livered milk sops, that pull in their horns for every pile of grass that toucheth them, that are afraid of every new step, saying as Caesar at Rubicon, "Yet we may go back"; that follow Christ afar off, as Peter; that tremble after him, as the people did after Saul, #1Sa 13:7, and the next news is, "They were scattered from him," #1Sa 13:11. These lead the ring dance of this rout of reprobates; and are so hated of Christ, that he will not employ them so far as to break a pitcher, or to bear a torch, #Jud 7:3-7.

And unbelieving] Therefore fearful, because unbelieving, for faith fears no fray bugs; {a} but why do ye fear, ye little faiths? saith our Saviour.

{a} An object of fear; a boggy, spectre. (ED)

Ver. 9. One of the seven angels] The same, likely, that, #Re 17:1, had showed him the damnation of the whore. So studious and officious are the angels to serve the saints, #Heb 1:14.

The bride, the Lamb's wife] Uxor fulget radiis mariti, saith the civilian; so is it here.

Ver. 10. To a great and high mountain] As Moses was carried up into Mount Nebo that from thence he might view the promised land. He that would contemplate heaven must soar aloft, fly a high pitch, &c. Take a turn with Christ in Mount Tabor, and be transfigured.

Ver. 11. Having the glory, of God] Who putteth upon her his own comeliness, #Eze 16:9-13, as Rachel was decked with Isaac's jewels.

Even like a jasper] And so, like God himself, who is set out by a jasper, #Re 4:3.

Clear as crystal] There is no such jasper in nature as is thus clear; but such a one must here be imagined. Nec Christus, nec caelum patitur hyberbolen. In speaking of Christ or heaven it is hard to hyperbolize. Christ's blood (the true Pactolus) ρει τον πλουτον, floweth with riches. Uranople (the New Jerusalem) hath its foundation garnished with all manner of precious stones, to signify as well the durableness as the excellency of it. See #Re 21:19,20.

Ver. 12. And had a wall] Far better than that of Babylon. Indeed this celestial China needs no wall to divide it from the Tartars; this is Arabia Felix, the people whereof live in security, and fear no enemy. They are in a far happier condition than the people of Tombutum in Africa, which are said to spend their whole time in singing and dancing.

And had twelve gates] Thebes had a hundred gates, and was therefore called εκατομυλος, but nothing so well set and so commodious for passengers as this city with twelve gates.

Twelve angels] As porters to let in, not as swordsmen to keep out, as the angel that stood sentinel at the porch of Paradise, #Ge 3:24.

Ver. 13. On the east three gates] The Church is collected and heaven filled from all quarters of the earth. Hence it is by one compared to the Samaritan's inn (πανδοχειον), because it receiveth and lodgeth all strangers that come. In the synagogue there was not lodging for all; the Ammonites and the Moabites were excluded the congregation of Israel. But Christ was born in an inn, to signify that in his kingdom all may be entertained. He is called the second Adam; the Greek letters of which name (as Cyprian noteth) do severally signify all the quarters of the earth. {a} His garments were divided into four parts, because out of what coast or part soever we come (saith a divine) Christ hath garments to clothe us, and room to receive us. There are those who have observed that the name of God in all the chief languages consisteth of four letters (as יהוה Θεος, Deus, Dieu, Gott, &c.), to intimate that he hath his people in all the four quarters of the earth, out of all countries, nations, and languages.

{a} Α ανατολη, Δ δυσις, Α αρκτος, Μ μεσημβρια.

Ver. 14. And the wall] A wall the Church hath about it, and a well within it, #Re 21:6 "A garden enclosed is my sister, my spouse a spring shut up, a fountain sealed," #So 4:12. This wall of the Church hath twelve foundations, that is, Christ the only foundation, #1Co 3:11, laid by the twelve apostles; in whose names also the sum of Christian faith is made up in those twelve articles of the creed. Discessuri ab invicem Apostoli normam praedicationis in commune constituunt, saith Cyprian. (De Symbol. Apostol.) The apostles being to be severed into various countries to preach the gospel, agreed upon this as the sum and substance of their sermons. It was called Symbolum, a sign or badge, to distinguish Christians from unbelievers.

Had twelve foundations] Foundation is taken either for Christ, #1Co 3:11 Mt 16:16, or for the doctrine of the apostles teaching salvation only by Jesus Christ, as #Eph 2:20, and here. The Papists have lately added twelve new articles raised out of the Council of Trent, to be believed by as many as shall be saved; as above hath been noted.

Ver. 15. Had a golden reed] Not those twelve Trent articles, or any human invention, but the word, as #Re 11:1, wherewith is measured not the temple only, as there, but the city, gates, and wall, as #Eze 40.

Ver. 16. And the city lieth four square] So was Babylon of old (as Herodotus describeth it), which yet was taken by Cyrus, Alexander, and various other enemies. Heaven also is taken, but by another kind of violence than by force of arms. The solid square whereby it is here set forth commends it to us: 1. For stable and unshaken, #Heb 12:28. Immota manet, as it is said of Venice, which yet stands in the sea, and hath but one street that is not daily overflowed (the Venetian motto is, Nec fluctu nec flatu movetur). 2. For such as looketh every way to the four corners of the earth, as Constantinople did; which is therefore said to be a city fatally founded to command.

Twelve thousand furlongs] About 300 Dutch miles. Nineveh was nothing to this city for its large size; no more is Alcair, Scanderoon or Cambalu, which yet is said to be 28 miles in circuit, being the imperial seat of the great Cham of Tartary. Quinsay, in the same kingdom, is said to be of all cities in the world the greatest; in circuit a hundred miles about, as Paulus Venetus writeth, who himself dwelt therein about the year 1260. But our New Jerusalem is far larger; 12,000 furlongs (according to some) make 1500 miles; and yet he that shall imagine heaven to be no larger than so, shall be more worthy to be blamed than the workmen were that built Westminster Hall; which King William II, the founder, found great fault with, for being too little; saying it was fitter for a chamber than for a hall of a king of England; and therefore took a plot for one far more spacious to be added unto it. (Dan. Chron.)

Ver. 17. An hundred and twenty four cubits] A cubit is six handfuls.

That is, of the angel] That appeared as a man, but bigger and higher than ordinary; now because this holy city is thus measured, and that with the measure of a man, some think it to be of the Church militant. But some other passages in this and the following chapters cannot be otherwise taken according to the letter, than of the state of full perfection. They do best, in my opinion, that take in both.

Ver. 18. Was of jasper] A stone of great worth and glory, the beauty whereof, saith one, it is easier to admire than to declare. It hath a variety of sweetness in it; such as none of the most cunning wits and sharpest eyes are able to distinguish. Heaven (we are sure) is such as eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard, &c. Sermo non valet exprimere, experimento opus est. Words are too weak to utter its happiness; get to it once, and you will say so. (Chrysost.)

Pure gold] A metal that shineth in the fire wasteth not in the use, rusteth not with long lying, rotteth not though cast into brine or vinegar (as Pliny noteth), to show that this city is incorruptible, invincible.

Like unto clear glass] Glittering gold, such as this world affords not. No, not those two islands in India called Chryse and Arger, for the abundance of gold and silver there found, as Soline telleth us.

Ver. 19. And the foundations] The apostles and their faithful successors, who were puriore caelo, saith Chrysostom, clearer than the sky, the very stars of the world and flowers of the Churches, as Basil calleth them. The twelve patriarchs have, #Ex 28:15-21, each of them his precious stone inscribed with his name in the breastplate of judgment: a symbol of the Church under the law. Levi hath the chalcedony, Judah the smaragd. But here in the foundation of the New Jerusalem, the Church under the gospel, Levi hath the smaragd, and Judah the chalcedony (the tribes have their stones in Aaron's breastplate, according to their birth). Our Saviour's chalcedony in Levi's place tells us (saith Mr Sarson) that he hath put an end to legal sacrifices, and that he is both king and priest of his Churches.

Ver. 20. The fifth, sardonyx] Search is here made through all the bowels of the earth for something of worth to shadow out the saints' happiness; which if it could be fully known (as it cannot) it would be no strange thing or thankworthy for the most horrible Belialist to become presently the holiest saint, or the world's greatest minion the most mortified man. He that desires to know the natures and virtues of these precious stones, may read Epiphanius, Philo, Franciseus, Rurus, and others, De gemmis; Josephus also in the third book of his Jewish Antiquities. That was an odd conceit, and scarce worth relating, held by Anaxagoras, Caelum ex lapidibus constare, et aliquando collapsurum, that heaven was made up of stones, and would one day fall upon men's heads. That other saying of his is much more memorable, when being asked, Wherefore he was born?

He answered, Ut caelum contemplar, that I might busy my thoughts about heaven.

Ver. 21. And the twelve gates] i.e. Gatekeepers, preachers of the righteousness that is by faith.

Were twelve pearls] All which do receive their lustre and worth from Christ, that pearl of price, #Mt 13:45,46, like as the pearl by being often beaten upon by the sunbeams, becometh radiant as the sun.

Was pure gold] Which no dirty dog may ever trample upon.

Ver. 22. No temple] No need of external worships and ordinances; for they are all taught of God; they see his face and hear his voice. Now we see but in part, because we prophesy but in part, #1Co 13:9. They that understand it of the Church on earth, say, there is no temple in opposition to the Jewish temple, but a gospel temple. But, #Re 21:25 "There shall be no night there," as here no temple. Now we shall not be above ordinances till above sin; which will not be in this world.

Ver. 23. And the city had no need] He saith not there shall be no sun or moon, but there shall be no such need of them as is now; for the Lamb shall outshine them, shine they never so gloriously, as they shall in that new heaven, #Isa 30:26.

Ver. 24. And the nations] See #Isa 9:3; and that he speaketh of the life to come, see #Re 21:11,18,19,21.

Do bring their glory] Despise and cast away all for heaven. Canutus set his crown upon the crucifix; which, according to the course of those times, was held greatest devotion. King Edward VI assured the Popish rebels of Devonshire, that he would rather lose his crown than not maintain the cause of God he had taken in hand to defend. Nazianzen rejoiced that he had something of value (viz. his Athenian learning) to part with for Christ, &c.

Ver. 25. For there shall be no night there] And so no need to fear a sudden surprise by the enemy watching his opportunity. Their day above is ανεσπερος ημερα, a nightless day, as a Father calls it.

Ver. 26. And they] i.e. The kings, as #Re 21:24.

Ver. 27. And there shall in no wise] Though the serpent could wind himself into paradise, yet no unclean person can come into this holy city. Tertullian called Pompey's theatre (which was the greatest ornament of old Rome) arcem omnium turpitudinum, the sty of all uncleanness. Heaven is none such.

Chapter 22

Ver. 1. A pure river] Not muddy as Nile, but clear as Calirrho. The allusion seems to be to that earthly paradise so well watered, #Ge 2:8-14, or else to #Eze 47:1-12. This river is Christ, #Joh 4:14, and so is that tree of life, #Re 22:2. The second Adam is a quickening spirit. Apollonius telleth us (lib. 3, Argonaut.) that in the court of Aeta, king of Colchis, were three fountains, which flowed, one with milk, another with wine, and a third with honey. In heaven there is all this and more.

Ver. 2. In the midst of the street of it] In medio foro eius, where all may easily come by it; not kept with a strong guard, as the apples of Alcinous, Hesperides, &c.

Twelve manner of fruits] Heaven's happinesses are so many that they cannot be numbered, so great that they cannot be measured, so copious that they cannot be defined, so precious that they cannot be valued.

Every month] Like the lemon tree, which ever and anon sendeth forth new lemons as soon as the former are fallen down with ripeness.

And the leaves] No want of anything either for food or medicine. Ita balbutit nobiscum Deus. So God speaks obscurely with us.

Ver. 3. And there shall be no more curse] No casting out by excommunication; no cause of any such thing.

Of God and of the Lamb] He and the Father are one, #Joh 10:30.

{See Trapp on "Joh 10:30"}

Ver. 4. And they shall see his face] How we shall see God, whether with our minds only, or with bodily eyes we shall behold his invisible Majesty in the glorious face of Jesus Christ, there can be nothing determined.

And his name shall be] As servants of old had their master's name branded in their foreheads.

Ver. 5. And there shall be no night] See the note on #Re 21:25.

For the Lord God] He that is  $\text{Αυτοφως}$ , light essential.

And they shall reign] Reign together with Christ, a part of whose joy it is that we shall be where he is, #Joh 17:20: he will not be long without us.

Ver. 6. And he said unto me] This is the conclusion of the whole prophecy; and it is very august and majestic.

These sayings are faithful and true] Thus (among other evidences of its divinity) the Scripture testifies of itself; and we know that its testimony is true. Vapiscus saith of the ancient historians that there is none of them that hath not told many lies. Tertullian saith of Tacitus, that he was mendaciorum loquacissimus, a very loud and lewd liar. Baronius doth not compose annals, but coin them, saith one. But none of all this can be said of God's word of truth, void of all insincerity or falsehood.

The Lord God of the holy prophets] Some copies have it, The Lord God of the spirits of the prophets. He is the God of the spirits of all flesh, but of the spirits of prophets in a special manner; for those holy men spake no otherwise than as they were acted or imbreathed by the Holy Ghost, #2Pe 1:21. {See Trapp on "2Pe 1:21"}

Sent his angel] As #Re 1:1. The authority therefore of this book is unquestionable, whatever some have surmised from #Re 20:4, that it was the work of Cerinthus or some other millenary.

Ver. 7. Blessed is he that keepeth] In memory and manners, #Re 1:3. Those were pronounced happy that read and hear, but so as they retain in mind and practise the contents of this book.

Ver. 8. Saw these things and heard them] So that there is no colour of cause why any one should doubt or distrust such a witness.

I fell down to worship] This is the second time. It is hard to say how often a saint may fall into the same sin; howbeit they sin of incogitancy; put them in mind, and they mend all. They sin of passion, and passions last not long. There is no way of wickedness in them, they make not a trade of it, #Ps 139:24.

Ver. 9. See thou do it not] {See Trapp on "Re 19:10"} This was a flat prohibition, not a merry repulse; as Lorinus and Veigas the Jesuits would have it.

For I am thy fellowservant] Wycliffe disallowed the invocation of saints and angels, when he called servants, not gods. For the wore knave, which he used, signified in those days servant, not as it doth in our days a wicked varlet, as his enemies maliciously interpret it; Bellarmine for one, a man utterly ignorant of the English tongue.

Ver. 10. Seal not] Keep them not up for thine own proper use (as he did that wrote upon his writings, τα εις εμαυτον, things for myself), but freely impart them, and in such sort as that others may conceive and improve them.

Ver. 11. He that is unjust, &c.] q.d. Let things be foretold never so plainly, and fall out never so accordingly, yet wicked men will be uncounsellable, incorrigible, #Isa 26:10 "But if any man be ignorant, let him be ignorant," #1Co 14:38. He falls with open eyes, let him fall at his own peril: who so blind as he that will not see? "Ephraim is joined to idols, let him alone," #Ho 4:17. He hath made a match with mischief, he shall have his belly full of it.

And he that is filthy, let him be filthy still] This is the last judgment we read of (befalling in this life) in all the New Testament. As that judgment of pining away in their iniquity (as if nothing could awaken them) is the last that God mentioneth, #Le 26:39, after those dismal ones there threatened to befall the people. It is contiguous, and as it were bordering upon hell itself.

Let him be righteous still] Let him persevere and proceed.

For the time is at hand] And every day's events shall explain the prophecy.

Ver. 12. Behold, I come quickly] Therefore quicken your pace, bestir yourselves lustily; your time is short, your task is long, your wages inconceivable.

Ver. 13. I am Alpha and Omega] And am therefore worthy to be believed in my predictions of future events, which I can easily bring about and effect, since to me all things are present.

Ver. 14. That they may have right] That they may be assured of their interest in Christ and his kingdom. Plutarch tells of Eudoxas, that he would be willing to be burnt up by the sun presently, so he might be admitted to come so near it as to learn the nature of it. What then should not we be content to do or suffer for the enjoyment of Christ and heaven?

Ver. 15. For without are dogs] In outer darkness. The Irish air will sooner brook a toad or snake to live therein, than heaven will brook a sinner. It was not permitted to a dog to enter into the Acropolis or tower at Athens, δια του ακολαστου και δυσωδους for his heat in venery and ill savour, saith Plutarch. Goats, likewise, saith Varro, come not there (unless for necessary sacrifice once a year) lest they should hurt the olive. No filthy dogs or nasty goats get into heaven's tower, &c. The panther smells well among beasts (whom thereby she draweth about her), not so among men. God and the saints loathe what the wicked love and delight in, as the panther doth in man's excrements.

And whosoever loveth] Though he maketh it not. Some will not coin a false tale, that yet will spread it; these are equally guilty, and excluded God's kingdom, #Ps 52:3.

Ver. 16. Have sent mine angel] With weariness of flight, as #Da 9:21.

I am the root] That bear up David by my Deity; but am born of him in regard of my humanity.

Ver. 17. And the Spirit and the Bride] i.e. The Bride sanctified and set to work by the Spirit, #Ro 8:26.

And let him that heareth say, Come] Abrupt sentences, full of holy affection; q.d. Let him pray daily, Thy kingdom come.

“ Heu pietas ubi prisca! profana o tempera! mundi Faex! vesper! prope nox! o mora! Christe veni.”

Mr Burroughs's last words were, I come, I come, I come! and so he gave up the ghost.

And let him that is athirst, come] q.d. If you think me long in coming, come to me in mine ordinances; there "I will stay you with apples, comfort you with flagons," #So 2:5.

The water of life freely] {See Trapp on "Re 21:6"}

Ver. 18. If any man shall add unto these things] Either to this or to any of the foregoing books of Scripture, #De 4:2 Pr 30:6 Ga 3:15 2Ti 3:16,17. All which notwithstanding, the Jews have added their Deuterozeis, the Turks their Alfurta, the Papists their unwritten verities, which they equalize (at least) to the Scriptures.

Ver. 19. And if any man shall take away] Since every word of God is pure, precious, and profitable, #Pr 30:5 2Ti 3:16.

Ver. 20. Even so; Come, Lord Jesus] This is the common and constant vote of all good people; and is therefore pinned as a badge upon their sleeve, #1Th 1:10. {See Trapp on "1Th 1:10"}

Ver. 21. The grace of our Lord] An epistolary conclusion. The Revelation is rather to be counted an epistle than a book. Read it as sent us from heaven, and ruminare what ye read.

Deo soli Gloria.
